TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

appropriate memorandum to the file, and, where necessary, a report to the judge or court clerk. Care should be taken in relying on any exclusion encompassing more than the 10 days "one-way" transportation time, since the presumption of unreasonableness contained in 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(1)(H) may be applied to the transportation component of other exclusions.

9-17.149 Consideration of Proposed Plea Agreements

18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(1)(I) is a new subsection added in the 1979 amendments, and excludes the period of time during which the trial court is considering a proposed plea agreement between the government and the defendant. The exclusion does not apply to negotiations for an agreement to plead guilty but commences only when the agreement is submitted for court approval. The preliminary negotiations may warrant a continuance granted under 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(8), and 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(8) may allow the defendant or government further preparation time should negotiations fail or the court reject the plea agreement. But see, United States v. Carini, 562 F.2d 144, 149 (2d Cir. 1977); United States v. Roberts, 515 F.2d 642, 645, 647 (2d Cir. 1975).

9-17.150 Withdrawn Pleas

18 U.S.C. §3161(i) provides that when a guilty or nolo contendere plea is withdrawn and a new plea of not guilty entered, the defendant is "deemed indicted" on the day withdrawal is "final and trial must be commenced within 70 days thereafter. See United States v. Davis, 679 F.2d 845, 849-850 (11th Cir. 1982) (withdrawal of a tentative plea). Even when the guilty plea that is withdrawn only involved some of the counts in the indictment, all counts will have the benefit of the new time limits. See United States v. Gilliss, 645 F.2d 1269, 1275-76 (8th Cir. 1981). 18 U.S.C. §3161(e), rather than (i), applies where a plea and resulting conviction is vacated on collateral attack. See United States v. Mack, 669 F.2d 28, 30-34 (1st Cir. 1982).

Where a plea agreement involves dismissal of an entire indictment in exchange for a guilty plea to charges contained in another indictment, 18 U.S.C. §3161(i) may not automatically provide for a new time period. In such a situation, the Judicial Conference Guidelines, at 61, recommend use of 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(8):

To prevent a miscarriage of justice in the event of withdrawal of the guilty plea, the court should at the time of accepting the guilty plea on the second indictment, grant a continuance under Section 3161(h)(8) with respect to the first indictment if necessary to keep that indictment alive up to the day of sentencing. If the plea should be withdrawn, additional continuances can be granted as appropriate to permit orderly resumption of the prosecution.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-17.151 Proceedings Under Advisement

The time during which proceedings or pre-trial motions are under advisement is covered under 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(1)(J). This time period is limited to a maximum of 30 days. Extra time would, under certain circumstances, be available under 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(8). See United States v. Molt, 631 F.2d 1258 (3d Cir. 1980). The Judicial Conference Guidelines recommend that the starting date be the latter of the last date on which the court has received everything it expects to receive or the hearing date. The ending date would be the earliest of (1) the date the judge's decision is filed, or (2) the date the judge renders his/her decision orally in open court, or (3) the expiration of the 30-day period. See Judicial Conference Guidelines, at 41. Accord, United States v. Mers, 701 F.2d 1321, 1336 (11th Cir. 1983); United States v. Bufalino 683 F.2d 639, 643-644 (2d Cir. 1982).

9-17.152 Deferred Prosecution (Pre-Trial Diversion)

18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(2) covers situations where prosecution is deferred pursuant to a written agreement between the U.S. Attorney and the defendant. This exclusion would apply in cases where the defendant has been arrested or indicted and is subsequently placed on pre-trial diversion. The court must approve the agreement in order to qualify for excludable time. The starting date is the date of court approval, and the ending date is the date of dismissal of the case pursuant to the agreement, or the date the court receives a copy of the U.S. Attorney's notice to the defendant of an intention to resume prosecution. See Judicial Conference Guidelines, at 43; Second Circuit Guidelines, at 18. The time spent considering a defendant's request for pre-trial diversion can be grounds for 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(8) continuance; the time from submission of an agreement to the court until the date of its approval or disapproval should be excludable under 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(1)(J).

It should be noted that as a matter of policy the Department opposes pre-trial diversion subject to court approval. Wherever possible, diversion should be accomplished pursuant to the provisions of USAM 9-1.200 and USAM 9-2.022.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

9-17.153 Absence or Unavailability of Parties and Witnesses

Any period of delay resulting from the absence or unavailability of the defendant or an essential witness is excludable. See 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(3)(A). A defendant or witness is considered absent when his/her whereabouts are unknown to the prosecution and, in addition, he/she is attempting to avoid apprehension or prosecution or his/her whereabouts cannot be determined by due diligence. See United States v. Fielding, 645 F.2d 719 (9th Cir. 1981). See also, United States v. Garrett, 720 F.2d 705, 707-708 (D.C. Cir. 1983) (a defendant is not unavailable merely because he/she has violated a condition of his/her bail). See 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(3)(B). Both the Judicial Conference Guidelines, at 45, and the Second Circuit Guidelines (section II, I) state that when a defendant or essential witness is absent, the excludable time starts on the earlier of the date he/she was required to make an appearance, or the date the court received notice that the whereabouts of the defendant or witness are unknown. The ending date is the date the prosecutor receives notice of the defendant's or witness' whereabouts.

A witness or defendant is unavailable when his/her whereabouts are known, but he/she is either resisting appearing or his/her presence cannot be obtained by due diligence. See 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(3)(B). See also, United States v. Tedesco, 726 F.2d 1216, 1222 (7th Cir. 1984). Again, both the Judicial Conference Guidelines, at 46-47, and the Second Circuit Guidelines (section II, I) state that the starting date for excludable time in an unavailability situation is the date when the defendant or witness was scheduled to appear. The ending date is the date on which the defendant or witness could have been produced in court by the government. This interpretation of the exclusion will be unduly narrow in many situations, as where the anticipated unavailability of a witness on a particular date causes the trial to be postponed, and an 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(8) continuance should be sought in such instances. See United States v. Tedesco, supra.

It should be noted that for this exclusion to apply a witness must be "essential." Moreover, either the defendant's or witness' whereabouts must be unknown, despite due diligence, or presence at trial must be unobtainable despite due diligence. See United States v. Marrero, 705 F.2d 652, 656-658 (2d Cir. 1983) (accomplices were essential witnesses who were unavailable because they refused to testify). Appropriate records should be kept to support such findings. In addition, since the government has the burden of proof on this exclusion if a motion to dismiss is made by the defendant, 18 U.S.C. §§3161(a)(2)), 3161(h)(8), rather than this exclusion, should be used where defense witnesses are absent or unavailable. See Judicial Conference Guidelines, at 44-45.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-17.154 Physical or Mental Incompetency

Any period of delay resulting from the fact that the defendant is mentally incompetent or physically unable to stand trial is excluded under 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(4). The starting date for excludable time under this section is the day that the court determines that the defendant is mentally incompetent or physically unable to stand trial. The ending date is the date the court determines that the defendant is fit to stand trial. See Judicial Conference Guidelines, at 47-48; Second Circuit Guidelines, section II. (The Division disagrees with the Judicial Conference Guidelines statement that the exclusion would end earlier upon notice to the court that the defendant is competent to stand trial.)

9-17.155 Commitment Under NARA

18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(5), like paragraph (h)(1)(C), allows the prosecution to be delayed while the defendant is rehabilitated through civil commitment for narcotics addiction under the Narcotics Addict Rehabilitation Act, 28 U.S.C. §2902. The starting date is the date the court determines that the defendant is an addict and likely to be rehabilitated through treatment. See 28 U.S.C. §2902(c). Preliminary proceedings are excludable under 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(1)(B). The ending date is the date the court receives from the Surgeon General either a certificate that the defendant has successfully completed the treatment program, or advice that the defendant cannot be treated further. See 28 U.S.C. §2902(c); USAM 9-17.143, supra.

9-17.156 Recharging after Government Dismissal of Indictment or Information

Under 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(6) the running of the "trial clock" is suspended from the date the information or indictment is dismissed upon motion of the attorney for the government until a charge is filed against the defendant for the same offense, or any offense required to be joined with the offense charged in the original indictment or information. See United States v. Hicks, 693 F.2d 32, 35 (9th Cir. 1982); United States v. Dennis, 625 F.2d 782 (8th Cir. 1980). The operation of this section is well explained in the original Senate Report on the Speedy Trial Act which states:

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Subparagraph 3161(h)(6) provides for the case where the Government decides for one reason or another to dismiss charges on its own motion and to then recommence prosecution. Under this provision only the period of time during which the prosecution has actually been halted is excluded from the 60-day time limits. Therefore, under 3161(h)(6) when the Government dismisses charges only the time between when the Government dismisses charges to when it reindicts is excluded from the 60-day time limits. For example, if the Government decides 50 days after indictment to dismiss charges against the defendant then waits six months and reindicts the defendant for the same offense the Government only has 10 days in which to be ready for trial.

S. Rep. No. 1021, 93d Cong., 2d Sess. 38 (1974).

The excludable period starts the day the original indictment or information is dismissed; the date of entry of the order, rather than the date of filing of the motion would appear to control. The time from the filing of the motion to dismiss to the entry of the order is arguably excludable under 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(1)(F) and (J). The 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(6) exclusion ends the day the subsequent complaint, information, or indictment is filed. Since the exclusion begins only with the dismissal of the original charges, once a superseding indictment is intended, it is important to obtain dismissal of the original charge as soon as possible in order to stop the clock, unless there is some reason for keeping the original indictment alive. If the original indictment is not dismissed before the superseding indictment is returned, the clock continues to run. See United States v. Novak, 715 F.2d 810, 817 (3d Cir. 1983); United States v. McCown, 711 F.2d 1441, 1446 (9th Cir. 1983).

This section applies only when the government obtains dismissal of charges contained in an indictment or information. If the defendant successfully moves to dismiss the indictment or information (or a complaint is involved), 18 U.S.C. §3161(d) applies and all time limits on the new charges are figured without regard to the existence of the original charge. See United States v. Horton, 676 F.2d 1165, 1170 (7th Cir. 1982). See the discussion of 18 U.S.C. §3161(d) at USAM 9-17.134, supra.

Note also that even where the government obtained dismissal of the original indictment, time limits on new offenses charged in the superseding indictment--i.e. those which are not the "same offense" or "offenses which are required to be joined with" the offense charged in the original indictment--would be computed without reference to the time limits on the original charge. Consequently, where the government dismisses an indictment and returns superseding charges, different time limits for trial will frequently apply to charges within the same indictment, particularly if the superseding indictment adds new defendants. 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(7) can be used to equalize the trial date for multiple defendants charged in the same indictment. Where multiple charges with different time limits are contained in an indictment against a single defendant, an 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(8) continuance might be appropriate, to avoid the need for either multiple trials or trial of all charges by the earliest date.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-17.157 Meaning of "Same Offense or Any Offense Required to be Joined with that Offense"

In the absence of any requirement for compulsory joinder imposed by statute or rule, the phrase "or any offense required to be joined with that offense" may be restricted to constitutional limitations imposed by the Double Jeopardy Clause, including concepts of collateral estoppel. See United States v. Pollock, 726 F.2d 1456, 1462-1463 (9th Cir. 1984); United States v. Novak, supra; Ashe v. Swenson, 397 U.S. 436 (1970); see also, United States v. Peters, 434 F. Supp. 357, 360-362 (D.D.C. 1977), aff'd, 587 F.2d 1267, 1270-1275 (D.C. Cir. 1978), (where both courts interpret the phrase in a local rule as synonymous with the phrase "offense based on the same conduct or arising from the same criminal episode" appearing in 18 U.S.C. §3161(d)); ABA Standards for Criminal Justice Relating to Speedy Trial §2.2(a); and the concurring opinion of Brennan, J., in Ashe v. Swenson, supra, at 453-454.

9-17.158 Effect of Joinder and Severance

A reasonable period of delay is excludable under 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(7) when the defendant is joined for trial with a codefendant as to whom the time for trial has not run and no motion for severance has been granted. A primary application of this exclusion would be in situations where co-defendants have had different periods excluded under other provisions of the Speedy Trial Act. See United States v. Edwards, 627 F.2d 460 (D.C. Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 872 (1980); United States v. McGrath, 613 F.2d 361 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 446 U.S. 967 (1980). According to the Judicial Conference Guidelines, at 50-51, the starting date for this excludable period is the day following the last day for commencement of trial for that defendant for whom the time for trial would otherwise have run. The ending day is the latest permissible date for commencement of trial of any co-defendant, subject to the "reasonableness" limitation. The courts, however, have generally held that there is only one speedy trial clock for all defendants and an exclusion for one defendant is an exclusion for all. See United States v. Tedesco, supra; United States v. Yunis, 723 F.2d 795, 797 (11th Cir. 1984). Note that this provision does not apply pre-indictment. United States v. Garrett, 720 F.2d 705, 708 (D.C. Cir. 1984).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-17.159 Ends of Justice

18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(8) permits a judge, on his/her own motion or at the request of the defendant, his/her counsel, or the attorney for the government, to grant a continuance on the basis of his/her findings that the ends of justice served by taking such action outweigh the best interest of the public and the defendant to a speedy trial. The court must set forth, in the record of the case, either orally or in writing, its reasons for such finding. See United States v. Molt, 631 F.2d 258 (3d Cir. 1980) (where there are multiple indictments, reasons need only be noted on one docket sheet); United States v. Bryant, 726 F.2d 510 (9th Cir. 1984) and United States v. Edwards, supra (reasons may be noted later). But see, United States v. Janik, 723 F.2d 537, 545 (7th Cir. 1983) (the continuance may not be granted retroactively).

The provision is a basic "safety valve" within the Speedy Trial Act, and permits the court to grant an excludable continuance where, on balance, the interest of justice warrants a later indictment or trial date than would otherwise be permitted by the statutory limits as extended by specific exclusions. The possibility of obtaining an 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(8) continuance should be considered whenever circumstances not covered by the specific exclusions of the Speedy Trial Act would make indictment or trial within the statutory limits impossible or unreasonable.

18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(8)(B) lists a number of factors which, "among others," are to be considered by the court in determining whether to grant a continuance in the proceeding. Those factors are:

A. Whether the failure to grant such a continuance would be likely to make a continuation of such proceeding impossible, or result in a miscarriage of justice. See United States v. Furlow, 644 F.2d 764 (9th Cir. 1981) (Mt. St. Helens eruption continuance); United States v. Edwards, supra; United States v. Dennis, supra (continuance to allow the government to decide whether to appeal an adverse pre-trial ruling); subsection (h)(8)(B)(i) of 18 U.S.C. §3161.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

B. Whether the case is so unusual or so complex, due to the number of defendants, the nature of the prosecution, or the existence of novel questions of fact or law, that it is unreasonable to expect adequate preparation for pre-trial proceedings or for the trial itself within the time limits established by this section. See 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(8)(B)(ii); United States v. Ruggiero, 726 F.2d 913, 925 (2d Cir. 1984). This subsection was amended in 1979 to include the reference to "novel questions of fact or law" and to permit a continuance to be granted for pre-trial motions presenting novel questions of law or complex facts. The time for preparation of routine motions is not excludable. See S. Rep. No. 212, 96th Cong., 1st Sess. 33-34 (1979); USAM 9-17.146, supra.

C. Whether, in a case in which arrest precedes indictment, delay in the filing of the indictment is caused because the arrest occurs at a time such that it is unreasonable to expect return and filing of the indictment within the period specified in 18 U.S.C. §3161(b), or because the facts upon which the grand jury must base its determination are unusual or complex. See 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(8)(B)(iii). See United States v. Mitchell, 723 F.2d 1040, 1042-1044 (1st Cir. 1983); United States v. McGrath, supra. This subsection was also amended in 1979, and is specifically directed at delay in the arrest to indictment interval. The section by section analysis of the Senate Committee Report states that the reference to delay caused by an arrest occurring "at such a time that is unreasonable to expect return and filing of the indictment within the period specified in section 3162(b)" was intended to cover instances where an arrest is made shortly before a grand jury, not continuously in session, is due to expire. See S. Rep. No. 212, 96th Cong., 1st Sess. 34-35 (1979). However, earlier in the Report the Committee indicated that the amendment was more broadly intended to clarify that an "ends of justice" continuance may be granted to "cover reasonable periods of delay during which reports from investigative agencies and evidentiary analyses from laboratories are completed..." Id. at 23.

Accordingly, the Division believes that an 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(8) continuance can and should be sought where it is not possible to indict within 30 days after arrest either because (1) the grand jury expired shortly after the arrest and will not again be in session during the 30-day interval, or (2) the investigation cannot be completed and reports obtained before expiration of the 30-day period. Of course, an 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(8) continuance would also be appropriate where the grand jury begins but cannot complete its deliberations within the 18 U.S.C. §3161(b) limits, due to the complexity of the case. See USAM 9-17.122, supra.

D. Whether the failure to grant a continuance in a case not meeting the criteria of 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(8)(B)(ii) would deny the defendant reasonable time to obtain counsel, would unreasonably deny the defendant or the government continuity of counsel, or would deny counsel for the defendant or the attorney for the government the reasonable time necessary for effective preparation, taking into account the exercise of due diligence, 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(8)(B)(iv). See United States v. Phillips, 630 F.2d 1138 (6th Cir. 1980); United States v. Wilks, 629 F.2d 669, 672-73 (10th Cir. 1980); United States v. Aviles, 623 F.2d 1192 (7th Cir. 1980) (in each case the defendant's motion for a continuance was properly denied).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

This subsection is a 1979 addition, allowing additional time for the defendant to obtain counsel and where the government or defense attorneys trying the case have scheduling conflicts or other problems, including illness and long planned vacations. This section also provides for excludable time when there simply is not enough time to prepare for trial, even though the case is neither unusual or complex. A continuance might be appropriate where, for example, additional time is needed to complete transcription of wiretap evidence. In this connection, the Senate Committee Report states:

Third, and most important, the Committee amendment provides the court a basis for a continuance when, after due diligence on the part of counsel for either party, there is simply not enough time to effectively prepare for trial of a case which is neither unusual nor complex, within the meaning of new clause (ii), supra. The Committee intends that the Government would bear a heavy burden under this provision, in cases started by indictment, when it has been preparing a case for a substantial period of time prior to seeking and obtaining return of the indictment. In cases initiated by arrest, however, granting a motion for continuance under this provision should be easier. The original legislative history also stated that a defendant will be entitled to additional time when his attorney has not been diligent in preparing for trial.

S. Rep. No. 212, 96th Cong., 1st Session 35 (1979).

As noted in the Senate Report, the legislative history to the 1974 Act indicated that an "ends of justice" continuance might be appropriate to permit the defense additional time to prepare for trial even where defense counsel has not exercised "due diligence." See H.R. Rep. No. 1508, 93rd Cong., 2d Sess. 33-34 (1974); reprinted in 1974 U.S. Code Cong. & Ad. News 7401, 7426.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

It should be noted that the factors listed in subsections (b)(1)-(iv) of 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(8) are not the only factors that the court may consider in determining whether to grant an excludable continuance. But see, United States v. Fielding, 645 F.2d 719, 721 (9th Cir. 1981). The Second Circuit Guidelines, section III contain an extensive discussion of the circumstances that might warrant an 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(8) continuance including: emergencies (i.e., natural disasters, transportation strikes, etc.); a defendant's cooperation (see also, USAM 9-17.149, supra); consideration by the government of a defendant's request for pre-trial diversion; absence or unavailability of defense witnesses (see also, USAM 9-17.153, supra); pending court of appeals or Supreme Court decision that would be dispositive of the case. An 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(8) continuance will also be appropriate in many instances following the termination of a specific automatic exclusion under 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(1)-(h)(7). See Judicial Conference Guidelines, at 52-59. The only factors that may not be considered as grounds for an 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(8) continuance are listed in 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(8)(C) which explicitly forbids the granting of a continuance under paragraph (8)(A) of 18 U.S.C. §3161(h) because of general congestion of the court's calendar (United States v. New Buffalo Amusement Corp., 600 F.2d 368 (2d Cir. 1979)), or lack of diligent preparation or failure to obtain available witnesses on the part of the attorney for the government.

The Judicial Conference Guidelines, at 58, suggest that an 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(8) continuance may not be granted until the final day of the 70-day period and that trial must commence as soon as the continuance expires. The Second Circuit Guidelines, at 43-45, disagree and state that an ends-of-justice continuance may fall in the middle of the 70-day period. Thus, if only 40 non-excludable days have been used prior to the expiration of the continuance, the case need not be tried for another 30 days. The legislative history favors the Second Circuit's interpretation. See, e.g., S. Rep. No. 212, 96th Cong., 1st Sess. 17-20, 34-35 (1979); H.R. Rep. No. 390, 96th Cong., 1st Sess. 12 (1979); H.R. Rep. No. 1508, 93d Cong., 2d Sess. 22 (1974); S. Rep. No. 1021, 93d Cong., 2d Sess. 39-40 (1974).

9-17.160 Defendants Incarcerated Elsewhere

18 U.S.C. §3161(j) provides that it is the duty of the attorney for the government when he/she knows that a person charged with an offense is serving a term of imprisonment in any penal institution, to promptly: (1) undertake to obtain the presence of the prisoner for trial; or (2) cause a detainer to be filed with the person having custody of the prisoner and request him/her to so advise the prisoner of his/her right to demand trial.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

See United States v. Roper, 716 F.2d 611, 614 (4th Cir. 1983); United States v. Bryant, 612 F.2d 806 (4th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 446 U.S. 920 (1980) (demand is a prerequisite to a speedy trial). See also, USAM 9-17.102, supra. The government does not bear the burden of proving that it lacked knowledge of a defendant's incarceration. See United States v. Hendricks, 661 F.2d 38,40 (5th Cir. 1981).

Upon receipt of notice that the defendant demands trial the attorney for the government shall promptly seek to obtain the presence of the prisoner for trial.

Under 18 U.S.C. §3161(b) the applicable time limitation does not begin to run until the defendant is in federal custody.

Note that under 18 U.S.C. §3161(j) the Speedy Trial Act is not called into play until a federal charge has been filed, United States v. Burkhalter, 583 F.2d 389 (8th Cir. 1978), and that the accused must be "serving a term of imprisonment." For cases construing identical language in the Interstate Agreement on Detainers Act, 18 U.S.C. app., see United States v. Roberts, 548 F.2d 665, 670, 671 (6th Cir. 1977); United States v. Harris, 566 F.2d 610 (8th Cir. 1977); United States v. Evans, 423 F. Supp. 528, 531 (S.D.N.Y. 1976), aff'd, 556 F.2d 561 (2d Cir. 1977). Where both the Speedy Trial Act and the Interstate Agreement on Detainers Act apply, effort should be made to comply with the time and other limitations of both. See United States v. Mauro, 436 U.S. 340, 356-357 n.24 (1978).

In view of the "constitutional duty" to make a good faith effort to bring a prisoner to trial imposed on the prosecutor (see Barker v. Wingo, 407 U.S. 514, 527 (1971); Smith v. Hooey, 393 U.S. 374, 383 (1969)), reliance upon filing of a detainer under 18 U.S.C. §3161(j)(1)(B) may be ill-advised. See USAM 9-2.145.

9-17.170 Sanctions

18 U.S.C. §3162(a)(1) provides that if an indictment or information is not timely filed the complaint shall be dismissed or "otherwise dropped." Where the defendant has been arrested but never charged in a complaint the dismissal sanction does not apply. See United States v. Janik, 723 F.2d 537, 542 (7th Cir. 1983); United States v. Sanchez, 722 F.2d 1501, 1509 (11th Cir. 1984). In determining whether to dismiss the case with or without prejudice, the court shall consider, among others, each of the following factors: the seriousness of the offense, the facts and circumstances of the case which led to the dismissal, and the impact of a re-prosecution on the administration of justice. See United States v.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Bittle, 699 F.2d 1207, 1208 (D.C. Cir. 1983); United States v. Carreon, 626 F.2d 528 (7th Cir. 1980). There is no presumption in favor of a dismissal with prejudice. See United States v. Caparella, 716 F.2d 976, 978-980 (2d Cir. 1983).

Unlike 18 U.S.C. §3162(a)(2), 18 U.S.C. §3161(a)(1) does not explicitly require a motion by the defendant, allocate the burden of proof, or require timeliness. Nevertheless, the legislative history clearly contemplates the same conditions. See H.R. Rep. No. 1508, 93rd Cong., 2d Sess. 23 (1974), reprinted in 1974 U.S. Code Cong. & Ad. News 7401, 7416. A motion to dismiss that alleges a violation of the 30-day arrest to indictment period is timely if made after indictment. See United States v. Pollock, 726 F.2d 1456 (9th Cir. 1984). See also, 1974 U.S. Code Cong. & Ad. News at 7419 and S. Rep. No. 212, 96th Cong., 1st Sess. 9 (1979); and Rule 12(f), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, which provides that defenses and objections based on defects in the institution of prosecution must be raised prior to trial or are waived.

18 U.S.C. §3162(a)(2) provides that if trial is not timely commenced upon an indictment or information it must be dismissed. The defendant has the burden of proof of supporting such motion but the government has the burden of going forward with the evidence in connection with any exclusion of time under 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(3). See United States v. Fielding, 645 F.2d 719, 723 (9th Cir. 1981).

The denial of a motion to dismiss that alleges a Speedy Trial Act violation is not appealable prior to trial. See United States v. Mehrmanesh, 652 F.2d 766 (9th Cir. 1981); cf. United States v. MacDonald, 435 U.S. 850 (1978). If a motion to dismiss is granted, however, the case should be reported at once to the Appellate Section of the Criminal Division so that the Solicitor General may determine if the sanction applied is appropriate.

9-17.171 Waiver

18 U.S.C. §3162(a)(2) provides that failure of the defendant to move for dismissal prior to trial or entry of a plea of guilty or nolo contendere shall constitute a waiver of the right to dismissal under this section. See United States v. Tercero, 640 F.2d 190, 195 (9th Cir. 1980) (dismissal motions based solely on the Sixth Amendment do not preserve for appeal a claim under the Act); Smith v. United States, 635 F.2d 693, 697 (8th Cir. 1980); United States v. Runge, 593 F.2d 66, 71 (8th Cir. 1979), cf., Fed. R. Crim. P. 12(b), (f). Moreover, a defendant waives a speedy trial claim by pleading guilty unless the plea is conditioned on his/her right to raise the issue on appeal. See United States v. Yunis, 723 F.2d 795, 796 (11th Cir. 1984).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Whether a defendant may execute a valid express waiver of his/her right to move for dismissal is unclear. The Third Circuit has held that a defendant does not waive his/her right to a speedy trial by requesting a postponement. See United States v. Carrasquillo, 667 F.2d 382, 388-390 (3rd Cir. 1981). This decision is predicated on the Senate Committee Report, which states: "in the strongest possible terms that any construction which holds that any of the provisions of the Speedy Trial Act is waivable by the defendant, other than his/her statutory conferred right to move for dismissal as cited above, is contrary to legislative intent and subversive of its primary objective: protection of the societal interest in speedy disposition of criminal cases by preventing undue delay in bringing such cases to trial." See S. Rep. No. 212, 96th Cong., 1st Sess. 29 (1979). This view is in accord with an earlier district court decision. See United States v. Beberfeld, 408 F. Supp. 1119, 1122-23 (S.D.N.Y. 1976); but see, Platt, The Speedy Trial Act of 1974: A Critical Commentary, 44 Brooklyn L. Rev. 757 (1978). The basic argument underlying this position is that the rights conferred by the Speedy Trial Act include a right conferred upon the public which the defendant is incompetent to waive.

The Criminal Division does not believe that either the Senate Committee Report or the arguments it advances are necessarily conclusive of the issue. Despite the public interest in holding trials within the time limits of the Speedy Trial Act, it might be argued that the right to move for dismissal if those limits are exceeded is primarily a right of the defendant which he/she should be competent to waive expressly as well as by procedural default, as in the case of statutes of limitations. See United States v. Wild, 551 F.2d 418 (D.C. Cir. 1977), cert. denied, 431 U.S. 916 (1977).

Nonetheless, there is a substantial risk that attempted defense waivers of the Speedy Trial Act will be held invalid. Moreover, there is little apparent reason why the liberalized automatic exclusions of 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(1)-(h)(7) and the discretionary "ends of justice" provision of 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(8) should be insufficient to allow all parties ample time to prepare for trial without resort to mechanisms of questionable validity. Accordingly, it is strongly recommended that government attorneys not initiate or affirmatively seek such waivers, and that they attempt to discourage their courts from exacting them by bringing to the court's attention the Committee statement quoted above.

9-17.172 Sanctions Apply to Retrials

The sanctions of 18 U.S.C. §3162 apply to new trials and retrials under 18 U.S.C. §3161(d) and (e).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

9-17.173 Sanctions Against Attorneys

18 U.S.C. §3162(b) provides for sanctions that may be applied against government or defense attorneys for: allowing the case to be set for trial without disclosing the unavailability of a necessary witness; filing a frivolous motion solely for purposes of delay, making a false material statement for the purpose of obtaining a continuance, or otherwise willfully failing to proceed to trial without justification. See United States v. Carlone, 666 F.2d 1112, 1116 (7th Cir. 1981).

The court may punish appointed defense counsel by withholding up to 25% of the payments under the Criminal Justice Act 18 U.S.C. §3162(b)(A), or by fining retained counsel up to 25% of his/her fee, 18 U.S.C. §3162(b)(B). Government counsel can be fined up to $250, 18 U.S.C. §3162(b)(C). Both defense and government counsel may be barred from appearing before the court for up to 90 days, 18 U.S.C. §3162(b)(D), and reports to appropriate disciplinary committees may be made, 18 U.S.C. §3162(b)(E). In addition, other sanctions such as contempt are unimpaired.

9-17.174 Deferred Effective Date of Sanctions

The 1979 amendments to the Speedy Trial Act delayed imposition of the full dismissal sanctions and sanctions upon attorneys from July 1, 1979, to July 1, 1980. See 18 U.S.C. §3163(c). See United States v. Litton Systems, Inc., 722 F.2d 264, 265 (4th Cir. 1984); United States v. Horton, 646 F.2d 181, 188 (5th Cir. 1981); United States v. Gilliss, 645 F.2d 1769, 1774-1775 (8th Cir. 1981); United States v. Watson, 623 F.2d 1198 (7th Cir. 1980). Prior to the effective date of the mandatory sanctions provision, dismissal was discretionary in some circuits. See, e.g., United States v. Greer, 620 F.2d 1383 (10th Cir. 1980); United States v. Dichne, 612 F.2d 632 (2d Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 445 U.S. 928 (1980).

9-17.180 Detainees and "High Risk" Designees

18 U.S.C. §3164(a), as amended in 1979, requires priority of trial for "persons...being held in detention solely because they are awaiting trial," 18 U.S.C. §3164(a)(1); United States v. Furlow, 644 F.2d 764 (9th Cir. 1981)(the 90-day rule does not apply to persons detained on other charges), and persons released pending trial "who have been designated by the attorney for the Government as being of high risk" (18 U.S.C. §3164(a)(2)).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Trial of such persons must be commenced within 90 days of the beginning of continuous detention or risk designation. The 90-day period is subject to the exclusions of 18 U.S.C. §3161(h). See 18 U.S.C. §3164(b).

Failure to timely commence trial of a detainee, without his/her "fault" or that of his/her counsel, and failure to timely commence trial of a designee, without fault of the prosecutor, requires automatic review by the court of the conditions of release. The sanction for failing to meet the limit in the case of a detainee is his/her release (but not dismissal of the case). See Lambert v. United States, 600 F.2d 476 (5th Cir. 1976). In the case of a designee, the nonfinancial release conditions may be modified to assure his/her appearance if the court finds he/she has intentionally delayed his/her trial. See 18 U.S.C. §3164(c).

The term "high risk" is not defined in the Speedy Trial Act. The Senate Report does not explain the term but refers to prototype rules which suggest that the test is danger to self, witnesses or the community. See S. Rep. No. 1021, 93rd Cong., 2d Sess. 44, 45 (1974). The House Report, supported by the text of 18 U.S.C. §3164(c), defines the term exclusively in terms of fugitivity. See H.R. Rep. No. 1508, 93rd Cong., 2d Sess. 39 (1974). The Judicial Conference Guidelines refer only to danger to self, witnesses or the community.

The Speedy Trial Act specifies that the high risk designation is to be made by the U.S. Attorney, but it does not prescribe where, when or how the designation is to be made, or whether it is subject to dispute by the designee, or review and rejection by the court, or revocation by the U.S. Attorney.

9-17.190 Constitutional Aspects

18 U.S.C. §3173 provides that the Speedy Trial Act is not to be construed to bar any claim of denial of the right to a speedy trial guaranteed by the Sixth Amendment. The leading case on the constitutional aspects of speedy trial is Barker v. Wingo, 407 U.S. 514 (1971). See also, Strunk v. United States, 412 U.S. 434 (1973) (mandating dismissal with prejudice when Sixth Amendment rights are violated); Dillingham v. United States, 423 U.S. 64 (1975); United States v. MacDonald, 456 U.S. 1 (1982), (on the triggering of the Sixth Amendment); United States v. Marion, 404 U.S. 307 (1971); United States v. Lovasco, 431 U.S. 783 (1977) (on the Fifth Amendment aspects of pre-charge delay). The interplay of the Speedy Trial Act with Rule 48(b) and Rule 50(b), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, is unclear, as nebulous concepts of inherent power are involved. See, e.g., United States v. Novelli, 544 F.2d 800 (5th Cir. 1977).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-17.200 TITLE I - SPEEDY TRIAL (CON'T.)

9-17.210 The Planning Group

9-17.211 Duties and Functions

18 U.S.C. §3165(a) obligates each district court to study its administration of justice and, with the aid of the Federal Judicial Center and the planning group mandated by 18 U.S.C. §3165(e) to formulate plans for the disposition of criminal cases in accordance with the Speedy Trial Act. The planning group is to advise the court on the formulation of 18 U.S.C. §3165 reports and to consider major reforms (e.g., grand jury system; collateral attacks; pre-trial diversion; excessive federal jurisdiction). See 18 U.S.C. §3168(a), (b). As amended in 1979, a plan must be filed before June 30, 1980, to govern procedures after July 1, 1980. A copy of all plans submitted to meet the 1980 requirement are in file in the Main Library of the Department of Justice.

9-17.212 Judicial Emergency

18 U.S.C. §3174 outlines a procedure to cope with the contingency that a district will be unable to meet the time limitations because of calendar congestion. It requires consultation by the chief judge with the planning group and then application to the judicial council of the circuit, 18 U.S.C. §3174(a). If the council has no other solution, it is authorized to suspend, prospectively only, for no more than one year, and only in cases where the defendant is not in custody awaiting trial, the limitations of 18 U.S.C. §3161(c)(indictment to trial). See, e.g., United States v. Rodriguez-Restrepo, 680 F.2d 920, 921 n.1 (2d Cir. 1982). Accord, United States v. Brainer, 691 F.2d 691, 698 (4th Cir. 1982); United States v. Koger, 646 F.2d 1194 (7th Cir. 1981). In no event may it allow the period from indictment to trial to exceed 180 days. The suspension may not extend the 18 U.S.C. §3161(b) limits (arrest to indictment), nor may it suspend the sanctions of 18 U.S.C. §3162.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-17.300 TITLE II - PRE-TRIAL SERVICE AGENCIES

9-17.310 Pilot Districts

18 U.S.C. §3152 requires the Administrative Office of the United States Courts to establish a pilot pre-trial service agency in ten "representative" districts, other than the District of Columbia, designated by the Chief Justice after consultation with the Attorney General.

9-17.320 Duties and Functions

The agency is supposed to collect, verify, and report relevant release information to the appropriate judicial officer, to make recommendations with respect to release and conditions of release (18 U.S.C. §3154(1)), and to review the release conditions in pending cases (18 U.S.C. §3154(2)). The information is to have limited confidentiality, and be generally inadmissible in legal proceedings (18 U.S.C. §3154(1)). The agency is responsible for supervision of releases (18 U.S.C. §3154(3)), and may be authorized to operate or contract for "appropriate facilities" for care and custody (e.g., half-way houses; narcotic and alcohol treatment centers; counseling)(18 U.S.C. §3154(4)), and must inform the court of violations of conditions and recommend modifications of the conditions of release (18 U.S.C. §3154(5)). It is also supposed to coordinate eligible custodial agencies and inform the court of their capabilities (18 U.S.C. §3154(6)).

The agency is further obligated to assist releases in obtaining "employment, medical, legal, and social services" (18 U.S.C. §3154(7)), to cooperate with the United States Marshal and U.S. Attorney in preparing pre-trial detention reports (18 U.S.C. §3154(8)), and to perform other functions assigned by the court (18 U.S.C. §3154(9)).

9-17.330 Administration

The powers of five of the ten agencies, and the policy making function are vested in the Division of Probation of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts (18 U.S.C. §3153(c)); but, in the remaining five, it is vested in a Board of Trustees, "appointed" by the Chief Judge, consisting of:

- A. A district judge;
- B. The U.S. Attorney;

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

C. Two defense counsel, one of whom must be the public defender, if there is one;

D. The chief probation officer; and

E. Two representatives of community organizations (18 U.S.C. §3153 (b)).

The non-official members serve for three years (18 U.S.C. §3153(c)).

9-17.340 Pre-Trial Service Officer

The agency is to be directed and supervised by a "Pre-trial Service Officer," who is empowered to appoint and fix compensation of his/her subordinates, experts and consultants (see 18 U.S.C. §3153(3)). The Pre-trial Service Officer, in the five districts supervised by the Division of Probation will be a probation officer appointed by the Chief of the Division (see 18 U.S.C. §3153(d)(1); in the remaining five he/she will be appointed by the Board of Trustees, upon the judges' recommendation (see 18 U.S.C. §3153(d)(2)).

9-17.350 Annual Reports

18 U.S.C. §3155(a) obligates the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts to report to Congress annually, and, in his/her fourth report, comprehensively, on the operation and effectiveness of the pilot agencies, with recommendations for future programs. 18 U.S.C. §3155(b) requires a similar comprehensive report with respect to the effect of the Speedy Trial Act as a whole to be filed on or before June 30, 1979.

9-17.360 Definitions

18 U.S.C. §3156 contains differing definitions of "judicial officer" and "offense" for different sections of title 18. See also, 18 U.S.C. §3172(a); USAM 9-17.101, supra.

9-17.400 SPEEDY TRIAL ACT TIMETABLE

August 2, 1979	Effective date of 30/70 time limits. ( See 18 U.S.C. §3161.) Mandatory dismissal sanction suspended until July 1, 1980.

9-18.000 DEFENSES

9-18.100 ALIBI DEFENSES

9-18.110 Discovery of Alibi Witnesses (Fed. R. Crim. P. 12.1)

Rule 12.1 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure permits pre-trial discovery by the United States of the alibi and alibi witnesses of a criminal defendant. However, where the United States avails itself of such discovery, it must reciprocate by disclosing the names and addresses of its witnesses placing the defendants at the scene of the offense and rebutting defendants' alibi witnesses. Because the rule provides for mutuality of discovery, it should satisfy the constitutional requirements of the Fifth Amendment. See Williams v. Florida, 399 U.S. 78 (1970); Wardius v. Oregon, 412 U.S. 470 (1973). It should be recognized, however, that the constitutionality of excluding the testimony of an important defense witness for a failure to comply with discovery rules has not yet been firmly established. See Taliaferro v. Maryland, ___ U.S. ___, 103 S. Ct. 2114 (1983) (White, J., dissenting from denial of certiorari); Wardius v. Oregon, supra, at 472 n.4; Fendle v. Goldsmith, 717 F.2d 1552 (9th Cir. 1983); United States v. Fitts, 576 F.2d 837 (10th Cir. 1978).

In a case in which it is desired to discover the potential alibi defense of a defendant, the prosecutor must make a written demand on the defense for such disclosure. The demand must state the time, date and place at which the crime was committed. The defendant has 10 days to reply unless the court directs a different time. The reply must include the specific place or places at which the defendant claims to have been, and the names and addresses of the witnesses, other than himself/herself, on whom he/she proposes to rely in establishing his/her alibi. Great care should be exercised in preparing the demand since the specifications contained therein may be treated as a bill of particulars, thereby restricting the government in its proof.

After receipt of the reply, the prosecutor has 10 days to serve on the defendant written notice of the names and addresses of the witnesses on whom the government will rely to establish the defendant's presence at the scene of the crime, and those on whom the government will rely to rebut the testimony of the defense alibi witnesses. Such notice must be served on the defendant at least ten days before trial.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Should additional witnesses be discovered after the service of the notices required by the rule, who, if known, would have been included in the initial disclosure, the party relying on said witnesses is required promptly to notify the other side of the identity of such witnesses.

The court is authorized, in its discretion, to exclude the testimony of a proffered witness where a party fails to observe the requirements of the rule. But see USAM 9-18.110, supra. The court may grant an exception to the rule for good cause shown. However, the rule does not limit the right of the defendant to testify in his/her own behalf.

Evidence of an intention to rely upon an alibi or of statements made in connection with such intention is inadmissible against the defendant in any civil or criminal proceeding in the event the alibi defense is withdrawn. Therefore, it is suggested that caution be exercised prior to employing the rule. If the government makes a demand and the defendant gives notice of an alibi defense, and then the government responds with a list of witnesses, the defendant may still withdraw the alibi defense, having obtained discovery of certain government witnesses.

9-18.121 Unsolicited Disclosure by the Defendant

Discovery under Rule 12.1 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure is designed to be a prosecution-initiated device for the primary benefit of the government. A defendant's unsolicited disclosure of an alibi or alibi witnesses should not, without government consent, trigger the government's reciprocal discovery obligations. See United States v. Bouye, 688 F.2d 471 (7th Cir. 1982); United States v. Ortega-Chavez, 682 F.2d 1086 (5th Cir. 1982).

9-18.130 Suggested Form of Demand

A. Demand for Disclosure of Alibi Defense

To: [Defendant]

Pursuant to Rule 12.1, Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, you are hereby informed that at ___ o'clock am/pm on ___ (day) of _____ (month), 198___, at _____ (street address or other particular description) in the _____ District of _____, there was committed the crime of _____ with which you are charged by (indictment or information).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Demand is hereby made upon you to furnish the U.S. Attorney with a written notice of your intention to offer a defense of alibi within 10 days of receipt of this demand.

In the event you intend to offer a defense of alibi, demand is made upon you further to disclose the specific place or places at which you claim to have been at the time of the offense and the names and addresses of the witnesses upon whom you intend to rely to establish such an alibi.

B. Note:

Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 12.1 may also be used in cases in which the prosecution seeks notice-of-alibi only with respect to a specific period or incident during the course of a continuing offense. See United States v. Vella, 673 F.2d 86 (5th Cir. 1982). In order to prevent limitation of the government's proof at trial, the Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 12.1 demand should either include the entire duration of the offense or specify that the period described in the demand does not include the entire time period of the offense.

9-18.200 INSANITY DEFENSE

9-18.201 Introduction

The Insanity Defense Reform Act of 1984, signed into law on October 12, 1984, is the first comprehensive federal legislation governing the insanity defense and the disposition of individuals suffering from a mental disease or defect who are involved in the criminal justice system. The most significant provisions (1) significantly modify the standard for insanity previously applied in the federal courts; (2) place the burden of proof on the defendant to establish the defense by clear and convincing evidence; (3) limit the scope of expert testimony on ultimate legal issues; (4) eliminate the defense of diminished capacity; (5) create a special verdict of "not guilty only by reason of insanity" which triggers a commitment proceeding; and (6) provide for federal commitment of persons who became insane after having been found guilty or while serving a federal prison sentence.

9-18.202 Mental Competency of an Accused

Mental competency of an accused is discussed at USAM 9-9.000. The pertinent statutory provisions under the 1984 Act are 18 U.S.C. §§4241,

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

4246 and 4247. The Supreme Court decisions on competency to stand trial, Pate v. Robinson, 383 U.S. 375 (1966) and Drope v. Missouri, 420 U.S. 162 (1975), have little to do with the insanity defense, since the standards are quite different. See Dusky v. United States, 362 U.S. 402 (1960).

9-18.210 Historical Development of the Insanity Defense

9-18.211 M'Naghten's Case: Right-Wrong Test

The foundation of the defense, or excuse, of insanity is laid to the decision in M'Naghten's Case, 10 Cl. & F.200, 8 Eng. Re. 718 (House of Lords, 1843), which held that:

[T]o establish a defense on the grounds of insanity it must be clearly proved that, at the time of the committing of the act, the party accused was labouring under such a defect of reason, from disease of the mind, as not to know the nature and quality of the act he was doing; or, if he did know it, that he did not know he was doing what was wrong.

Id. at 210, 722.

The use of the term "disease of the mind" was significant since it firmly established the relevance of medical testimony. The jury now has a larger role--to evaluate medical testimony in light of the right-wrong criterion.

9-18.212 Modified M'Naghten Test--Added Volitional or "Irresistible Impulse" Test

The next stage after M'Naghten's Case was the widespread adoption of an additional volition test, exculpating a defendant who knew what he/she was doing and that it was wrong but whose actions were deemed, because of mental disease, to be beyond his/her control. This new test was stated by the Supreme Court in Davis v. United States, 165 U.S. 373 (1897), where the Court approved of an insanity charge to a jury which was as follows:

The term "insanity," as used in this defense, means a perverted and deranged condition of the mental and moral faculties as to render a person incapable of distinguishing between right and wrong, or unconscious at the time of the nature of the act he is committing, or where, though conscious of it and able to distinguish between right and wrong, and know that the act is wrong, yet his will--by which I mean the governing power of his mind--has been otherwise than voluntarily so completely destroyed that his actions are not subject to it, but are beyond his control.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

In view of the fact that the above formulation does not require that the abnormality be characterized by sudden impulse as opposed to brooding and reflection, it is more appropriate to term this modified M'Naghten's Case test a "control" or "volitional" test rather than an "irresistible impulse" test.

9-18.213 Durham Test--Product of Mental Disease or Defect

The third stage in the development of the defense of insanity was the repudiation of both M'Naghten's Case and its volitional supplement as contained in Davis, supra, by the decision of Durham v. United States, 214 F.2d 862 (D.C. Cir. 1954) (Bazelon, Ch. J). Durham enunciated the following formulation: "[A]n accused is not criminally responsible if his unlawful act was the product of mental disease or mental defect." Id. at 864. The primary reason for this new test was that the old formulations had come under attack as permitting too narrow an inquiry into the accused's mental condition, as it precludes doctors from presenting important medical data. The avowed purpose of the new test was to enable the jury "to consider all information advanced by relevant scientific disciplines." Id. at 872.

However, after adoption by the D.C. Circuit, the Durham test was not perceived to be achieving its full function, largely because many people thought that Durham was only an attempt to identify a clearly defined category, and the classifications it has developed for purposes of treatment, commitment, etc., may be inappropriate for assessing responsibility in criminal cases. Upon this premise, in McDonald v. United States, 312 F.2d 847 (D.C. Cir. 1962) (en banc), the D.C. Circuit modified the Durham test and decided to give mental illness a legal definition independent of its medical meaning. In McDonald it held that mental illness "includes any abnormal condition of the mind which substantially affects mental or emotional processes and which substantially impairs behavior control." Id. at 851.

After numerous appellate opinions which refined, clarified, expanded, and limited Durham over a period of eighteen years, the D.C. Circuit overruled Durham in United States v. Brawner, 471 F.2d 969 (D.C. Cir.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

1972) (en banc), and followed other federal courts in using the A.L.I. test for the standard of deciding how to judge the defense of insanity. For a history and analysis of the Durham decision, see Symposium on United States v. Brawner, 1973 Wash. U.L.Q. 17-154.

9-18.214 A.L.I. Test

While Durham, supra, and its progeny were evolving in the D.C. Circuit, most federal courts (with the exception of the First Circuit), with some modifications and hesitations, had moved from M'Naghten's Case and its volitional modification to the proposal of the American Law Institute's Model Penal Code, which provides that:

- (1) [A] person is not responsible for criminal conduct if at the time of such conduct as a result of mental disease or defect he lacks substantial capacity to appreciate the criminality [wrongfulness] of his conduct or to conform to the requirements of the law.
- (2) ...[T]he terms "mental disease or defect" do not include an abnormality manifested only by repeated criminal or otherwise anti-social conduct.

Model Penal Code, §4.01 (P.O.D. 1962).

See United States v. Freeman, 357 F.2d 606 (2d Cir. 1966); United States v. Currens, 290 F.2d 751 (3d Cir. 1961); United States v. Chandler, 393 F.2d 920 (4th Cir. 1968) (en banc); Blake v. United States, 407 F.2d 908 (5th Cir. 1969); United States v. Smith, 404 F.2d 908 (5th Cir. 1969); United States v. Shapiro, 383 F.2d 680 (7th Cir. 1967); Pope v. United States, 372 F.2d 710 (9th Cir. 1967); Wade v. United States 426 F.2d 64 (9th Cir. 1970) (en banc); Wion v. United States, 325 F.2d 420 (10th Cir. 1963); United States v. Brawner, 471 F.2d 969 (D.C. Cir. 1972) (en banc).

9-18.215 Lyons Test

In April of 1984, the Fifth Circuit reconsidered the issue and concluded that the volitional prong of the insanity defense--lack of capacity to conform one's conduct to the requirements of the law--no longer comported with current medical and scientific knowledge. United States v. Lyons, 731 F.2d 243, 248 (5th Cir. 1984). Consequently, they adopted a new standard, holding that "a person is not responsible for criminal conduct on grounds of insanity only if at the time of that conduct, as a result of a mental disease or defect, he is unable to appreciate the wrongfulness of that conduct."

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-18.220 The Present Statutory Test: 18 U.S.C. §20(a)

The Insanity Defense Reform Act of 1984, signed into law on October 12, 1984, adopted for the first time a uniform federal statutory standard for the insanity defense. This standard, codified at 18 U.S.C. §20(a), provides as follows:

(a) AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE - It is an affirmative defense under any Federal statute that, at the time of the commission of the acts constituting the offense, the defendant, as a result of a severe mental disease or defect, was unable to appreciate the nature and quality of the wrongfulness of his acts. Mental disease or defect does not otherwise constitute a defense.

The standard eliminates entirely the volitional prong of the cognitive volitional test of the ALI Model Penal Code, the capacity to conform conduct to the requirements of the law. It also requires that the mental disease or defect be "severe." This concept was added as a committee amendment "to emphasize that non-psychotic behavior disorders or neurosis such as an 'inadequate personality,' 'immature personality,' or a pattern of 'antisocial tendencies' do not constitute the defense." S. Rep. No. 225, Pub. L. No. 98-473, 98th Cong. 1st Sess., p. 229. The explicit provision that mental disease or defect does not otherwise constitute a defense is intended to insure that the requirements of the standard are not circumvented in the guise of showing some other affirmative defense such as "diminished capacity." Id. The standard is intended to incorporate the conclusion of existing case law that voluntary use of alcohol and drugs, even if they render the defendant unable to appreciate the nature and quality of the act, does not constitute insanity or any other legally valid affirmative defense. Id.

9-18.230 Burden of Proving Insanity: 18 U.S.C. §20(b)

Under 18 U.S.C. §20(b), the burden has been shifted to the defendant to prove the defense of insanity by clear and convincing evidence. This is a change from the previous federal standard set forth in Davis v. United States, 160 U.S. 469 (1895), which required the government, once some evidence of insanity had been introduced by the defendant, to prove the defendant's sanity beyond a reasonable doubt. See Davis v. United States, 160 U.S. 469, 486-93 (1895).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

The Davis standard was set forth in the exercise of the Supreme Court's supervisory powers over the federal courts and was not of constitutional magnitude. Leland v. Oregon, 343 U.S. 790, 797 (1952). A defendant may constitutionally be required to prove his insanity by a standard as high as beyond a reasonable doubt. Id., at 799. It therefore follows that placing the burden on the defendant to prove the defense of insanity by clear and convincing evidence is constitutional.

9-18.240 Scope of Expert Testimony

Section 406 of the Act amends Federal Rule of Evidence 704 to read as follows:

Rule 704. Opinion on ultimate issue

(a) Except as provided in subdivision (b), testimony in the form of an opinion or inference otherwise admissible is not objectionable because it embraces an ultimate issue to be decided by the trier of fact.

(b) No expert witness testifying with respect to the mental state or condition of a defendant in a criminal case may state an opinion or inference as to whether the defendant did or did not have the mental state or condition constituting an element of the crime charged or a defense thereto. Such ultimate issues are matters for the trier of fact alone.

In the past, psychiatrists and other mental health experts were permitted to state opinions as to whether the defendant met the relevant legal test for insanity. This amendment was intended "to eliminate the confusing spectacle of competing expert witnesses testifying to directly contradictory conclusions as to the ultimate legal issue to be found by the trier of fact." S. Rep. No. 225, 98th Cong., 1st Sess., p. 230. It is intended that expert testimony be limited to presenting and explaining their diagnoses, such as whether the defendant had a severe mental disease or defect, and characteristics of such a disease or defect, if any. Id. While the psychiatrist must be permitted to testify fully, in both clinical and commonsense terms, about the defendant's diagnosis, mental state and motivation at the time of the alleged act, the determination of whether the relevant legal test for insanity has been met is a matter for the legal factfinder. Id. at p. 231. The restriction in Rule 704 on ultimate opinion psychiatric testimony extends to any ultimate mental state of the defendant relevant to ultimate legal conclusions to be proved, such as premeditation in a homicide case, or lack of predisposition in entrapment. Id.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-18.250 Special Verdict, "Not Guilty Only By Reason of Insanity," and Related Commitment Procedures (18 U.S.C. §4243)

If the issue of insanity is raised by notice as provided in Rule 12.2 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, on motion of either party or the court, the trier of fact shall be instructed to find the defendant (1) guilty, (2) not guilty, or (3) not guilty only by reason of insanity. 18 U.S.C. §4242(b).

Section 4243 of Title 18 sets forth a procedure for commitment of persons found not guilty only by reason of insanity to a facility suitable to provide care and treatment given the nature of the offense and the characteristics of the defendant. Persons found not guilty only by reason of insanity are automatically committed pending hearing, which must be held within 40 days, on his/her present mental state and dangerousness. A psychiatric or psychological examination and report are required prior to the hearing. At the hearing the burden of proof is on the committed person to prove that his/her release would not create a substantial risk to others of bodily injury to, or serious damages to the property of, another person. If the offense for which the defendant was tried involved bodily injury, serious property damage, or a substantial risk thereof, he/she must sustain his/her burden of proof by clear and convincing evidence. With respect to any other offense, the defendant has the burden of proof by the preponderance of the evidence.

The Supreme Court has reviewed a similar District of Columbia statute, and upheld the constitutionality of both mandatory commitment pending a release hearing and placing the burden of proof at the release hearing on a defendant who had the burden of proof on the insanity issue at trial to establish his/her suitability for release by the same standard used at trial. See Jones v. United States, 463 U.S. 354 (1983). Both the mandatory commitment procedures and the release hearing provisions of Section 4243 pass constitutional muster under Jones.

9-18.260 Other Commitment Procedures

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-18.261 Hospitalization of a Convicted Person Suffering from a Mental Disease or Defect: 18 U.S.C. §4244

This section established a new sentencing option for convicted defendants who need care or treatment at a "suitable facility" for mental disease or defect. After a hearing, a convicted defendant found to be in need of treatment is to be committed to the custody of the Attorney General for treatment. This commitment constitutes a provisional sentence for the maximum term authorized for the offense. If the defendant recovers before the expiration of this term, the court is to proceed to final sentencing and may modify the provisional sentence.

9-18.262 Hospitalization of an Imprisoned Person Suffering from a Mental Disease or Defect: 18 U.S.C. §4245

This section provides a new right to a judicial hearing for an imprisoned federal defendant who objects to transfer to a mental treatment facility. The objecting prisoner may not be transferred unless a court finds by a preponderance of the evidence that he/she is presently suffering from a mental disease or defect for which he/she is in need of care or treatment at a "suitable facility"--a term that is meant to include a psychiatric section of a prison.

9-18.263 Hospitalization of a Person Due for Release But Suffering from a Mental Disease or Defect: 18 U.S.C. §4246

This section establishes a federal commitment procedure for mentally ill persons who are due to be released but whose release would create a substantial risk of serious bodily injury or serious property damage to others. It is applicable to any person otherwise due for release because of the expiration of a sentence, because of the expiration of the period of commitment to determine competency to stand trial, or because all criminal charges have been dropped solely for reasons related to the mental condition of the person. It is intended that this provision be used only as a last resort when there are no state authorities willing to accept him/her for commitment. See S. Rep. No. 225, 98th Cong., 1st Sess., at 250.

9-18.280 Policy Concerning Application of Insanity Defense Reform Act of 1984 to Offenses Committed Before Date of Enactment

Due to ex post facto considerations, the Department has determined that prosecutors should not seek to apply the new statutory standard for the insanity defense and the burden of proof set forth in 18 U.S.C. §20(a) to offenses committed before the date of enactment, October 12, 1984. See Dobbert v. Florida, 432 U.S. 282, 292 (1970), citing Beazell v. Ohio, 269 U.S. 167, 169-70 (1925); United States v. Williams, 475 F.2d 355 (D.C. Cir. 1973) (D.C. statute shifting burden of proof on issue of insanity to defendant cannot be applied retroactively). However, in cases in which the defendant presents clear danger of serious violence, and in which there exists a likelihood of acquittal under the prior judicially-developed standard in the circuit but a likelihood of conviction under the standard recently adopted in the Fifth Circuit, prosecutors should consider arguing that a judicial acceptance of the Fifth Circuit standard is appropriate. See United States v. Lyons, 731 F.2d 243 (5th Cir. 1984). Before making such an argument, however, authorization must be obtained from the Assistant Attorney General for the Criminal Division. Attorneys for the government should telephone the Criminal contacts listed below regarding requests for authorization.

The Department has also concluded that the automatic commitment procedures of new 18 U.S.C. §4243 (and the use of the special verdict of new 18 U.S.C. §4242) should not be applied to persons whose charged conduct occurred before October 12, 1984. This policy is based on the conclusion that the quantum of evidence necessary to produce an insanity acquittal under the prior burden of proof--a reasonable doubt that the defendant was sane--is probably not sufficient under the due process clause to support involuntary commitment. See Jones v. United States, 463 U.S. 354 (1983).

All other provisions of the Insanity Defense Reform Act of 1984, including the amendment to Rule 704 of the Federal Rules of Evidence concerning expert opinion testimony, are immediately applicable to pending cases. 1/

1/ It is the position of the Department of Justice that the release provisions of the new Act are applicable to persons previously committed to St. Elizabeth's Hospital pursuant to D.C. Code §24-301(d) following an insanity acquittal in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia.

9-18.300 THE DEFENSE OF ENTRAPMENT

9-18.310 Introduction

The defense of entrapment is frequently raised by defendants in criminal proceedings. Entrapment can basically be defined as the act of officers or agents of the government in inducing a person to commit a crime not contemplated by him/her, for the purpose of instituting a criminal prosecution against him/her. However, the mere act of an officer in furnishing the accused an opportunity to commit a crime, where the criminal intent was already present in the accused's mind, is not ordinarily entrapment.

9-18.320 Recent Cases

The two most recent Supreme Court cases regarding entrapment are Hampton v. United States, 425 U.S. 484 (1976) and United States v. Russell, 411 U.S. 423 (1973). In Russell, the Court simply reaffirmed the principle of Sorrells v. United States, 287 U.S. 435 (1932), and Sherman v. United States, 356 U.S. 369 (1958), that the entrapment defense focuses on the intent or predisposition of the defendant to commit the crime rather than upon the conduct of the government's agents. In Russell, where it was conceded that a government agent supplied a necessary ingredient in the manufacture of an illicit drug, the court stated, "it is only when the Government's deception actually implants the criminal design in the mind of the defendant that the defense of entrapment comes into play." See Russell, supra, at 436. In Hampton, the defendant was charged with selling to government agents heroin supplied by a government informant who had also arranged the meeting between the agents and the defendant in which the sale occurred. In both Hampton and Russell, government agents were acting in concert with the defendant, i.e., the agents played a significant role in enabling the defendant to consummate a criminal act. However, in each case either the jury found or the defendant conceded that he was predisposed to commit the crime for which he was convicted. Thus, because the defense of entrapment turns on the question of predisposition and because the result of governmental activity did not implant in the mind of an innocent person the disposition to commit the alleged offense and induce its commission, entrapment did not occur in either Hampton or Russell.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

As stated in Sherman, supra, "to determine whether entrapment has been established, a line must be drawn between the trap for the unwary innocent and the trap for the unwary criminal." See Sherman, supra, at 372. Furthermore, Sorrells and Sherman both recognized, "that the fact that officers or employees of the government merely afforded opportunities or facilities for the commission of the offense does not defeat the prosecution." See Sorrells, supra, at 441; Sherman, supra, at 372. It is only when the government's deception actually implants the criminal design in the mind of the defendant that the defense of entrapment comes into play. A finding of predisposition is fatal to a claim of entrapment.

It has been suggested that supervisory powers or due process possibly could bar conviction of a defendant based on outrageous police conduct even though the defendant may have been predisposed to commit the offense. See Hampton v. United States, supra, at 493-95 (Powell, J., concurring). The federal courts have uniformly applied the predisposition test, however, and have declined to reverse convictions where predisposition has been shown. See, e.g., United States v. Ramirez, 710 F.2d 535, 539-41 (9th Cir. 1983); United States v. Williams, 705 F.2d 603, 619-21 (2d Cir. 1983).

9-18.330 Proof of Predisposition to Commit the Crime

Finally, as stated in Sorrells, supra, "if the defendant seeks acquittal by reason of entrapment he cannot complain of an appropriate and searching inquiry into his own conduct and predisposition as being upon that issue." See Sorrells, supra, at 451. Predisposition to commit the crime charged may be proven through evidence of other crimes, (i.e., the defendant's admission in Russell, supra, that he had been manufacturing an illegal drug for several months prior to meeting the agent). Evidence of subsequent crimes may also be utilized to rebut an entrapment defendant such as in United States v. Warren, 453 F.2d 738 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 406 U.S. 944 (1972), where evidence was obtained in a search conducted after the filing of the indictment tending to show acts similar to those charged.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-18.400 STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS DEFENSES

9-18.401 Introduction

Although not known at common law and dependent on legislative enactment for their existence, statutes of limitations are today a part of the criminal law of virtually every state as well as the federal government. See United States v. Cadarr, 197 U.S. 475, 478 (1905); United States v. Marion, 404 U.S. 307, 317-18 (1971).

The primary reasons for restrictions of time revolve around accepted notions that prompt investigation and prosecution insures that conviction or acquittal is a reliable result and not the product of faded memory or unavailable evidence; that time limitations may serve to encourage law enforcement authorities to expedite their investigation and discovery of crimes; that with certain exceptions involving particularly heinous offenses or offenses which are secretive in nature and thus difficult to discover, ancient wrongs should not be resurrected; and that community security and economy in the allocation of enforcement resources require that most effort be concentrated on recent crimes. See Toussie v. United States, 397 U.S. 112, 114-15 (1970).

9-18.402 Relationship to Constitutional Rights

Statutes of limitations are a defendant's primary safeguard against prejudice from preaccusation delay. United States v. Lovasco, 431 U.S. 783, 789 (1977). Protection under a statute of limitations should not be confused with fundamental constitutional rights such as speedy trial or due process. A period of limitation is an arbitrary cutoff point; constitutional rights (or for that matter the right to a prompt indictment under Rule 48(b) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure), may or may not be abridged within the prescribed period. Unlike the bar of the limitation period, due process restrictions involve analysis of actual prejudice to the defendant and reasons for the delay. See United States v. Lovasco, supra.

9-18.403 Effect of Legislative Action

Since the statute of limitations, on expiration of the prescribed period, becomes a vested right, a prosecution once barred cannot be maintained after an amendment to the statute enlarging the period. However, an enlargement of the applicable period prior to the expiration of the shorter period will apply to an offense committed before the enlargement. See Dennis v. United States, 302 F.2d 5, 14 (10th Cir. 1962); Flater v. United States, 23 F.2d 420, 425-26 (2d Cir. 1928).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-18.404 Period of Limitations

Current federal law contains a single statute prescribing a general period of limitations and a myriad of statutes of specific application.

18 U.S.C. §3282 is the statute of general application. Enacted in 1954, it states that, "[e]xcept as otherwise expressly provided by law," a prosecution for a non-capital offense shall be instituted within five years after the offense was committed. The generally applicable period of limitations was originally two years and was later increased to three years before being expanded to its present term.

18 U.S.C. §3281 deals with capital offenses and provides that an indictment for an offense "punishable by death" may be filed at any time. Despite the invalidity of most current federal statutory death penalty provisions, it is arguable that the unlimited time period remains applicable to those statutes which formerly carried that penalty. See United States v. Helmich, 521 F. Supp. 1246 (M.D. Fla. 1981), aff'd, 704 F.2d 547 (11th Cir. 1983); see also Coon v. United States, 411 F.2d 422, 425 (8th Cir. 1969) (noting but failing to resolve the issue); United States v. Provenzano, 423 F. Supp. 662 (S.D.N.Y. 1976), aff'd, 556 F.2d 562 (2d Cir. 1977) (table). See USAM 9-10.100.

18 U.S.C. §3283 provides a five-year time period for the bringing of prosecutions for violation of the "customs" or "slave trade" laws. Since the period prescribed is the same as that under 18 U.S.C. §3283, the statute is superfluous.

18 U.S.C. §3285 provides that a contempt proceeding under 18 U.S.C. §402 must be instituted within one year of the act complained of. It also provides that such a proceeding is not a bar to further prosecution for the same act. Moreover, court rulings have held that the Double Jeopardy Clause of the Fifth Amendment does not prohibit prosecution for contempt and another substantive offense arising out of the same conduct. See Jurney v. MacCracken, 294 U.S. 125, 151-52 (1935); United States v. Rollerson, 449 F.2d 1000 (D.C. Cir. 1971).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

18 U.S.C. §3286 is similarly directed to a single offense, and provides that a prosecution under 18 U.S.C. §2198 for seduction of a female passenger on board a United States vessel by an employee of the vessel shall be commenced within one year after the vessel arrives at its port of destination.

18 U.S.C. §3291 provides that prosecutions for violations of nationality, citizenship, and passport laws, or a conspiracy to violate such laws, shall be commenced within ten years after the commission of the offense. Section 19 of the Internal Security Act of 1950, 64 Stat. 1005, provides a ten-year limitations period for prosecutions under the espionage statutes, 18 U.S.C. §§792-794.

17 U.S.C. §507(a) provides that no criminal proceeding shall be maintained under Title 17 (relating to copyrights) unless commenced within three years after the cause of action arose.

26 U.S.C. §6531 provides that prosecutions for violation of the internal revenue laws shall be commenced within three years after commission of the offense, except for eight enumerated categories of offenses as to which a six-year limitations period is made applicable. See USAM 9-18.414, infra.

50 U.S.C. §783(e) provides that a prosecution for an offense under that section, part of the Subversive Activities Control Act, shall be instituted within ten years after the commission of the offense.

42 U.S.C. §2278 provides a similar ten-year period for prosecution of restricted data offenses under the atomic energy laws, 42 U.S.C. §§2274-2276.

9-18.405 Fugitivity

Beginning with the first statute of limitations a "person fleeing from justice" was to receive no benefit from the passage of time. Thus, statutes of limitations are tolled during periods of fugitivity. See 18 U.S.C. §3290. Physical absence from the jurisdiction is not required to trigger this tolling provision, but there is a division of authority in the federal courts on whether an intent to avoid justice must be established in order to defeat a plea of statute of limitations. See United States v. Singleton, 702 F.2d 1159 (D.C. Cir. 1983); Jhirad v. Ferrandina, 486 F.2d 442, 444 (2d Cir. 1973).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

9-18.406 Continuing Offenses

Normally, a statute of limitations begins to run when the offense is completed. This is so even when the acts committed are charged as an offense having characteristics of finality (contempt in the presence of the court) but could have been charged as a continuing offense (obstruction of justice). See United States v. Irvine, 98 U.S. 450 (1878). It is the offense charged in the indictment, not the general nature of the act involved, that governs. A continuing offense involves, as its name implies, attributes of nonfinality. Hence, falsification by scheme, even though the falsifying act was committed beyond the period of limitation, is deemed a continuing offense if the act continued to produce fruits within that period. See Bramblett v. United States, 231 F.2d 489 (D.C. Cir. 1956), cert. denied, 350 U.S. 1015 (1956). Possession-of-contraband offenses are continuing offenses. See Von Eichelberger v. United States, 252 F.2d 184 (9th Cir. 1958). Of course, conspiracy during its life is a continuing offense. A conspirator must terminate his/her association by going to the authorities or communicating to his/her co-conspirators actual disassociation in the venture before the period will begin to run for him/her. See United States v. Borelli, 336 F.2d 376, 388 (2d Cir. 1964), cert. denied, 379 U.S. 960 (1965); United States v. Schwensha, 383 F.2d 395 (2d Cir. 1967), cert. denied, 390 U.S. 904 (1968).

9-18.407 Conspiracy

Where conspiracy charges are involved, the statute of limitations begins to run from the date of the last overt act. See Fiswick v. United States, 329 U.S. 211 (1946); United States v. Johnson, 165 F.2d 42 (3d Cir. 1947), cert. denied, 332 U.S. 852 (1948); United States v. Boyle, 338 F. Supp. 1028, 1036-37 (D.D.C. 1972); United States v. Stein, 456 F.2d 844, 850 (2d Cir. 1972), cert. denied, 408 U.S. 922 (1972); United States v. Andreas, 458 F.2d 491 (8th Cir. 1972), cert. denied, 409 U.S. 848 (1972); United States v. Gross, 416 F.2d 1205 (8th Cir. 1969), cert. denied, 397 U.S. 1013 (1970). With regard to conspiracies not requiring proof of an overt act, such as RICO, see USAM 9-18.409, infra.

9-18.408 Assimilative Crimes Act

The Assimilative Crimes Act of 1948 (18 U.S.C. §13) makes punishable in federal courts criminal acts or omissions not made punishable by enactments of Congress if committed within the special maritime and territorial jurisdiction of the United States (18 U.S.C. §7), if the act is a crime under the applicable state law. Only the substantive offenses of a state are assimilated into federal law. Thus, although case authority in this area is slight, a different state period of limitation will not control prosecution under the Act. See Garcia-Guillern v. United States, 450 F.2d 1189, 1192 n.1 (5th Cir. 1972), cert. denied, 405 U.S. 981 (1972); United States v. Andem, 158 F. 996 (D.N.J. 1908) (cited by Smayda v. United States, 352 F.2d 251 (9th Cir. 1965), cert. denied, 382 U.S. 981 (1966). Cf. United States v. Licavoli, 725 F.2d 1040, 1046-47 (6th Cir. 1984).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-18.409 RICO

The Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations ("RICO") Statute, 18 U.S.C. §1961 et seq., requires that state crimes used as predicate offenses be "chargeable under state law." The federal courts have uniformly held that, regardless of the running of the state statute of limitations, a defendant is still "chargeable" with the state offense within the meaning of 18 U.S.C. §1961(1)(A). See cases cited in United States v. Licavoli, supra. The reference to state law in the statute is simply to define the conduct, and is not meant to incorporate state procedural law.

With respect to conspiracy statutes such as RICO that do not require proof of an overt act, the indictment satisfies the limitation statute if the conspiracy is alleged to have continued into the limitations period. The conspiracy may be deemed to continue as long as its purposes have neither been abandoned nor accomplished. See United States v. Coia, 719 F.2d 1120, 1124 (11th Cir. 1983).

9-18.411 Not Appealable Prior to Trial

Denial of a statute of limitations defense is not appealable by the defendant prior to trial. See United States v. Levine, 658 F.2d 113 (3d Cir. 1981).

9-18.412 Defective Indictments

If an indictment is dismissed because of legal defect or grand jury irregularity, the government may return a new indictment within six months of the date of dismissal or within the original limitation period (whichever is later). After the original limitation period has expired, a superseding indictment may not broaden the charges made in the first. See 18 U.S.C. §§3288, 3289; see United States v. Grady, 544 F.2d 598 (2d Cir. 1976).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-18.413 Waiver

A knowing and intelligent waiver of the statute of limitations is valid, see United States v. Levine, 658 F.2d 113, 120 n.8 (3d Cir. 1981); United States v. Wild, 551 F.2d 418 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 431 U.S. 916 (1977); a plea of guilty (without expressly reserving the statute of limitations) has been held to waive later assertion of the defense, see United States v. Doyle, 348 F.2d 715 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 382 U.S. 843 (1965); United States v. Guerro, 694 F.2d 898 (2d Cir. 1982).

9-18.414 Lesser Included Offenses

Rule 31(c) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure permits a finding of guilty of an offense necessarily included in the offense charged in appropriate evidentiary circumstances. Out of this rule arises the problem whether a conviction for a lesser included offense may be sustained where the lesser offense is barred by the statute of limitations even though the charged parent offense is not. The law in most state jurisdictions, as well as the District of Columbia, is that a conviction under the lesser included offense in these circumstances will not stand. See Chaifetz v. United States, 288 F.2d 133 (D.C. Cir. 1960), rev'd in part but cert. denied on this issue, 366 U.S. 209 (1961); Askins v. United States, 251 F.2d 909 (D.C. Cir. 1958). Although the doctrine may work an injustice in some situations, the underlying rationale seems to be that to permit the opposite result would enable prosecutors to revive barred offenses merely by obtaining an indictment for a greater offense.

9-18.415 Tax Offenses

A special statute of limitations applicable to tax offenses is found in 26 U.S.C. §6531. It provides in part that, if a "complaint is instituted" within the limitations period prescribed (i.e., either three years or six years, depending on the type of internal revenue offense), then "the time shall be extended until the date which is nine months after the date of the making of the complaint." The courts have ruled that, in order to toll the statute of limitations, the complaint must be valid,

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

i.e., it must establish probable cause to believe the accused committed an offense. See Jaber v. United States, 381 U.S. 214 (1965); United States v. Bland, 458 F.2d 1, 3-6, (5th Cir. 1972), cert. denied, 409 U.S. 843 (1972); United States v. Miller, 491 F.2d 638, 644-45 (5th Cir. 1974), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 970 (1974).

Aside from continuing offenses and the application of special provisions suspending the running of the statute of limitations (e.g., when a person is a fugitive), statutes of limitations normally begin to run when the offense is complete. In the internal revenue statute, however, Congress has provided that, in the case when a tax return is filed or a tax is paid before the statutory deadline, the limitations period begins to run on the date when the return or payment was due (without regard to any extension of time obtained by the taxpayer). See 26 U.S.C. §6531 and §6513. These statutes are based on the desirability, for purposes of administrative convenience in criminal tax investigations, of a uniform expiration date for most taxpayers despite variations in the dates of actual filing. But see United States v. Habig, 390 U.S. 222, 225, 226 (1968). Habig held that, where an extension of time is secured but the return is filed after the original statutory due date, the period of limitations starts to run when the return is filed rather than on the date (but for the extension) when it was due. Otherwise, the limitation period would begin before the offense was even committed.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-20.000 MARITIME, TERRITORIAL AND INDIAN JURISDICTION

9-20.001 In General

Jurisdiction over most personal and property crimes within our federal system is vested in the states. The federal government enacts criminal laws primarily for the protection of its own functions (e.g., 18 U.S.C. §1001); personnel (e.g., 18 U.S.C. §1114); and property (e.g., 18 U.S.C. §641). It intrudes into the area generally left to the states only where special circumstances warrant its providing auxiliary law enforcement assistance to the states unable to act beyond their borders (e.g., 18 U.S.C. §§659, 2113, 2314). The underlying conduct is based upon or linked to some "nexus," such as use of the mails, 18 U.S.C. §2314, or federal insurance, 18 U.S.C. §2113.

There are, in addition, certain instances in which the special relationship the United States Government bears to the site of the offense provides the rationale and basis for the exercise of plenary criminal jurisdiction. It is with this latter class of offenses that this chapter is concerned.

9-20.100 SPECIAL MARITIME AND TERRITORIAL JURISDICTION

A number of Title 18 sections specifically declare certain conduct to be a federal crime if committed "within the special maritime and territorial jurisdiction of the United States." At present these are: arson, 18 U.S.C. §81; assault, 18 U.S.C. §113; maiming, 18 U.S.C. §114; larceny, 18 U.S.C. §661; receiving stolen property, 18 U.S.C. §662; murder, 18 U.S.C. §1111; manslaughter, 18 U.S.C. §1112; attempted murder or manslaughter, 18 U.S.C. §1113; kidnapping, 18 U.S.C. §1201(a)(2); malicious mischief, 18 U.S.C. §1363; rape, 18 U.S.C. §2031; carnal knowledge, 18 U.S.C. §2032; and robbery 18 U.S.C. §2111. In some instances, the Assimilative Crimes Act, 18 U.S.C. §13, is also applicable. See also 15 U.S.C. §1175; 15 U.S.C. §1243; 16 U.S.C. §3372; 18 U.S.C. §1205.

The term "special maritime and territorial jurisdiction of the United States" is defined in six subsections of 18 U.S.C. §7. They relate to maritime jurisdiction, 18 U.S.C. §§7(1), 7(2); lands and buildings, 18 U.S.C. §7(3); Guano Islands, 18 U.S.C. §7(4); aircraft, 18 U.S.C. §7(5); spacecraft, 18 U.S.C. §7(6); and places outside the jurisdiction of any nation, 18 U.S.C. §7(7). Only subsections (1), (2), (3) and (5) of 18 U.S.C. §7 will be discussed, and Guano Islands are of only historical significance and places outside the jurisdiction of any nation are unlikely to generate concrete issues in the near future.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-20.110 Territorial Jurisdiction

Of the several categories listed in 18 U.S.C. §7, §7(3) is the most significant. 18 U.S.C. §7(3) provides:

The term "special maritime and territorial jurisdiction of the United States," as used in this title, includes:

(3) Any lands reserved or acquired for the use of the United States, and under the exclusive or concurrent jurisdiction thereof, or any place purchased or otherwise acquired by the United States by consent of the legislature of the State in which the same shall be, for the erection of a fort, magazine, arsenal, dockyard, or other needful building.

As is readily apparent, this subsection, and particularly its second clause, bears a striking resemblance to the 17th Clause of Article 1, §8 of the Constitution. This clause provides:

The Congress shall have power . . . To exercise exclusive Legislation in all Cases whatsoever, over such District (not exceeding ten Miles square) as may, be Cession of particular States, and the acceptance of Congress, become the Seat of the Government of the United States, and to exercise like Authority over all Places purchased by the Consent of the Legislature of the State in which the Same shall be, for the Erection of Forts, Magazines, Arsenals, dock-yards, and other needful Buildings. [emphasis supplied]

The constitutional phrase "exclusive legislation" is the equivalent of the statutory expression "exclusive jurisdiction." See James v. Dravo Contracting Co., 302 U.S. 134, 141 (1937), citing, Surplus Trading Co. v. Cook, 281 U.S. 647, 652 (1930).

Until the decision in Dravo, it had been generally accepted that when the United States acquired property with the consent of the state for any of the enumerated purposes, it acquired exclusive jurisdiction by operation of law, and any reservation of authority by the state, other than the right to serve civil and criminal process, was inoperable. See

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Surplus Trading Co. v. Cook, supra, at 652-56. When Dravo held that a state might reserve legislative authority so long as that did not interfere with the United States' governmental functions, e.g., the right to levy certain taxes, amendment to 18 U.S.C. §7(3), by addition of the words "or concurrent," was required to restore criminal jurisdiction over those places previously believed to be under exclusive federal legislative jurisdiction. See H. Rep. No. 1623, 76th Cong. 3d Sess. 1 (1940); S. Rep. No. 1788, 76th Cong. 3d Sess. 1 (1940).

Dravo also settled that the phrase "other needful building" was not to be strictly construed to include only military and naval structures, but was to be construed as "embracing whatever structures are found to be necessary in the performance of the functions of the Federal Government." See James v. Dravo Contracting Co., supra, at 142-43. It therefore properly embraces courthouses, customs houses, post offices and locks and dams for navigation purposes.

The "structures" limitation does not, however, prevent the United States from holding or acquiring and having jurisdiction over land acquired for other valid purposes, such as parks and irrigation projects. This is because Clause 17 is not the exclusive method of obtaining jurisdiction. Jurisdiction may also be obtained by the United States reserving it when sovereign title is transferred to the state upon its entry into the Union or by cession of jurisdiction after the United States has otherwise acquired the property. See Fort Leavenworth R.R. Co. v. Lowe, 114 U.S. 525, 526-27, 538, 539 (1885); James v. Dravo Contracting Co., supra, at 142; Collins v. Yosemite Park Co., 304 U.S. 518, 529-30 (1938); Surplus Trading Co. v. Cook, supra, at 650-52.

The United States may hold or acquire property within the borders of a state without acquiring jurisdiction. It may acquire title to land necessary for the performance of its functions by purchase or eminent domain without the state's consent. See Kohl v. United States, 91 U.S. 367, 371, 372 (1976). But it does not thereby acquire legislative jurisdiction by virtue of its proprietorship. The acquisition of jurisdiction is dependent on the consent of or cession by the state. See Mason Co. v. Tax Commission, 302 U.S. 186, 197 (1937); James v. Dravo Contracting Co., supra, at 141-42.

Such consent may be evidenced by a specific enactment or by general constitutional or statutory provision. Cession of jurisdiction by the state also requires acceptance by the United States. See Adams v. United States, 319 U.S. 312 (1943); Surplus Trading Co. v. Cook, supra, at 651-52. Whether or not the United States has jurisdiction is a federal question. See Mason Co. v. Tax Commission, supra, at 197.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Prior to February 1, 1940, it was presumed that the United States accepted jurisdiction whenever the state offered it because the donation was deemed a benefit. See Fort Leavenworth R.R. Co. v. Lowe, supra, at 528. This presumption was reserved by enactment of the Act of February 1, 1940, codified at 40 U.S.C. §255. This statute requires the head or authorized officer of the agency acquiring or holding property to file with the state a formal acceptance of such "jurisdiction, exclusive or partial . . . as he may deem desirable," and further provides that in the absence of such filing "it shall be conclusively presumed that no such jurisdiction has been acquired. See Adams v. United States, supra (district court is without jurisdiction to prosecute soldiers for rape committed on an army base prior to filing of acceptance prescribed by statute). Enactment of 40 U.S.C. §255 did not retroactively affect jurisdiction previously acquired. See Markham v. United States, 215 F.2d 56 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 348 U.S. 939 (1954); United States v. Heard, 270 F. Supp. 198, 200 (W.D. Mo. 1967).

A. Summary

The United States may exercise plenary criminal jurisdiction over lands within state borders:

1. Where it reserved such jurisdiction upon entry of the state into the union;
2. Where, prior to February 1, 1940, it acquired property for a purpose enumerated in the Constitution with the consent of the state;
3. Where it acquired property whether by purchase, gift or eminent domain, and thereafter, but prior to February 1, 1940, received a cession of jurisdiction from the state; and
4. Where it acquired the property, and/or received the state's consent or cession of jurisdiction after February 1, 1940, and has filed the requisite acceptance.

9-20.111 Determining Federal Jurisdiction

When instances are reported to the U.S. Attorney of offenses committed on land or building occupied by agencies of the federal government, unless the crime reported is a federal offense regardless of where committed, such as assault on a federal officer or possession of narcotics, the United States has jurisdiction only if the land or building is within the special territorial jurisdiction of the United States. A convenient method of determining the jurisdictional status is to contact an appropriate attorney with the agency having custody of the land. If the land is other than a military base, the regional counsel's office of the General Services Administration usually has the complete roster of all federal lands and buildings in its region and can frequently provide a definitive answer to jurisdiction. If the land in question is part of a military base, contact with the post Staff Judge Advocate may be helpful. If the military personnel in the field or the field attorneys of the agency having responsibility for the land are unable to render assistance, the General Litigation and Legal Advice Section of the Criminal Division should be called.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-20.112 Proof of Territorial Jurisdiction

There has been a recent trend to treat certain "jurisdictional facts" that do not bear on guilt (mens rea or actus reus) as non-elements of the offense, and therefore as issues for the court rather than the jury, and, in any event requiring proof by only a preponderance that the offense was committed in the territorial jurisdiction of the court to establish that venue has been properly laid. See United States v. Bowers, 660 F.2d 527, 531 (5th Cir. 1981); Government of Canal Zone v. Burjan, 596 F.2d 690, 694 (5th Cir. 1979); United States v. Black Cloud, 590 F.2d 270 (8th Cir. 1979) (jury question); United States v. Powell, 498 F.2d 890, 891 (9th Cir. 1974). The court in Government of Canal Zone v. Burjan, supra, applied the preponderance test to determinations of whether or not the offenses took place within the Canal Zone which established not merely proper venue but subject matter jurisdiction as well. Id. at 694-95. Other cases, however, hold that the issue of whether the United States has jurisdiction over the site of a crime is a judicial question, see United States v. Jones, 480 F.2d 1135, 1138 (2d Cir. 1973), but that the issue of whether the act was committed within the borders of the federal enclave is for the jury and must be established beyond a reasonable doubt. See United States v. Jones, supra; United States v. Parker, 622 F.2d 298 (8th Cir. 1980). The law of your circuit must be consulted. The decision in Burjan should be viewed with caution. The analogy between territorial jurisdiction for venue has much to recommend it. Nevertheless, it is important to recognize that the two are not of equal importance. As the Burjan court noted, citing Rule 12 Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, subject matter jurisdiction is so important that it cannot be waived and may be noticed at any stage of the proceeding, see Government of the Canal Zone v. Borjan, supra, at 693, and the Ninth Circuit in Powell rested its ruling that venue need be proved by only a preponderance on the relative unimportance of venue as evidenced by its waivability. There is clear distinction between the question of which court of a sovereign may try an accused for a violation of its laws and whether the sovereign's law has been violated at all.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

Proof of territorial jurisdiction may be by direct or circumstantial evidence, and at least at the trial level may be aided by judicial notice. See United States v. Bowers, supra, at 530-31; Government of Canal Zone v. Burjan, supra, at 694. Compare Burjan, supra with United States v. Jones, supra, concerning the role judicial notice may play on appeal.

9-20.113 Assimilative Crimes Act, 18 U.S.C. §13

The Assimilative Crimes Act, 18 U.S.C. §13, makes state law applicable to lands reserved or acquired as provided in 18 U.S.C. §7(3), when the act or omission is not made punishable by an enactment of Congress. It provides:

Whoever within or upon any of the places now existing or hereafter reserved or acquired as provided in §7 of this title, is guilty of any act or omission which, although not made punishable by any enactment of Congress, would be punishable if committed or omitted within the jurisdiction of the State, Territory, Possession, or District in which such place is situated, by the laws thereof in force at the time of such act or omission, shall be guilty of a like offense and subject to a like punishment.

Prosecutions instituted under this statute are not to enforce the laws of the state, but to enforce federal law, the details of which, instead of being recited, are adopted by reference. In addition to minor violations, the statute has been invoked to cover a number of serious criminal offenses defined by state law such as burglary and embezzlement. However, the Assimilative Crimes Act cannot be used to override other federal policies as expressed by acts of Congress or by valid administrative orders.

The prospective incorporation of state law was upheld in United States v. Sharpnack, 355 U.S. 286 (1957). State law is assimilated only when no "enactment of Congress" covers the conduct. The application of this rule is not always easy. In Williams v. United States, 327 U.S. 711, 717 (1946), prosecution of a sex offense under a state statute with a higher age of consent was held impermissible, but a conviction for a shooting with intent to kill as defined by state law was upheld, despite the similarity of provisions of 18 U.S.C. §113. Fields v. United States, 438 F.2d 205 (2d. Cir.), cert. denied, 403 U.S. 907 (1971); but see Hockenberry v. United States, 422 F.2d 171 (9th Cir. 1970). See also United States v. Smith, 574 F.2d 988 (9th Cir. 1978) (sodomy); United States v. Bowers, 660 F.2d 527 (5th Cir. 1981) (child abuse).

The Uniform Code of Military Justice (U.C.M.J.), 10 U.S.C. §801 et seq., because of its unlimited applicability, is not considered an "enactment of Congress" within the meaning of 18 U.S.C. §13. See United States v. Walker, 552 F.2d 566 (4th Cir. 1977), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 848 (1977) (drunk driving). See also Franklin v. United States 216 U.S. 559 (1910). Military personnel committing acts on an enclave subject to federal jurisdiction which are not made an offense by federal statutes other than the U.C.M.J. may therefore be prosecuted in district court for violations of state law assimilated by 18 U.S.C. §13, even though they are also subject to court martial. Dual prosecution, it should be noted, is constitutionally precluded by the Double Jeopardy Clause. See Grafton v. United States, 206 U.S. 333 (1907).

18 U.S.C. §13 does not assimilate penal provisions of state regulatory schemes. See United States v. Marcyes, 557 F.2d 1361 (9th Cir. 1977). Neither does it incorporate state administrative penalties, such as suspension of drivers licenses. See United States v. Rowe, 599 F.2d 1319 (4th Cir. 1979); United States v. Best, 573 F.2d 1095 (9th Cir. 1978).

Federal agency regulations, violations of which are made criminal by statute, have been held to preclude assimilation of state law. See United States v. Adams, 502 F. Supp. 21 (S.D. Fla. 1980) (carrying concealed weapon in federal courthouse); United States v. Woods, 450 F. Supp. 1335 (D. Md. 1978) (drunken driving on parkway).

In Adams, supra, the defendant was charged with carrying a concealed weapon in a United States Courthouse in violation of 18 U.S.C. §13 and the pertinent Florida felony firearms statute. In dismissing the indictment, the Adams court concluded that a General Services Administration (GSA) petty offense weapons regulation (41 C.F.R. §101-20.313), explicitly provided for by statute, 40 U.S.C. §318a, amounts to an enactment of Congress within the meaning of 18 U.S.C. §13 and, therefore, the defendant could not be prosecuted by the assimilation of state law which prohibits the same precise act as the regulation.

It is important to note, however, that a critical provision of the GSA regulations apparently was not considered in Adams. 41 C.F.R. §101-20.315 provides in part:

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Nothing in these rules and regulations shall be construed to abrogate any other Federal laws or regulations or any State and local laws and regulations applicable to any area in which the property is situated.

This non-abrogation provision arguably would permit the assimilation of appropriate state firearms laws or other state statutes notwithstanding the existence of the GSA regulations. It appears that this language has never been considered in any reported case. Moreover, no discussion of the meaning of this language appears in the pertinent parts of the Federal Register, 43 Fed. Reg. 29001, July 5, 1978; 41 Fed. Reg. 13378, March 30, 1976. We believe it would be reasonable to interpret this non-abrogation provision as permitting the government, in its discretion, to proceed under 18 U.S.C. §13 and appropriate state firearms laws, rather than under the GSA weapons regulation.

9-20.114 Limited Criminal Jurisdiction over Property Held Proprietorially

Although we have continually emphasized in the preceding material that the United States may not exercise criminal jurisdiction over property that it holds only in a proprietorial capacity, it would be more accurate to state that it is not wholly without the power to protect its property and control its use. State jurisdiction "does not take from Congress the power to control their occupancy and use, to protect them from trespass and injury and to prescribe the conditions upon which others may obtain rights in them, even though this may involve the exercise in some measure of what is commonly known as the police power." See Utah Power & Light Co. v. United States, 243 U.S. 389, 405 (1917) (finding constitutional authority in the Property Clause, Art. IV, §3, cl. 1).

There are a number of specific statutes that are applicable independently of 18 U.S.C. §7(3) and the acquisition of legislative jurisdiction. Among these are 18 U.S.C. §1382 (entering military, naval or Coast Guard property). See United States v. Holmes, 414 F. Supp. 831, 837 n. 9 (D. Md. 1976) and text, finding constitutional authority for 18 U.S.C. §1382 in the Property Clause and/or the military power clauses, Const., Art. I, §8, cls. 12 and 14, aided by the Necessary and Proper Clause, Art. 1, §8, cl. 18.

On occasion, courts have upheld convictions for trespass and minor police offenses in violation of regulations made criminal by statute committed on land and facilities held proprietorially, on authority of the

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Property Clause and/or the specific constitutional authority for carrying on the function. See, e.g., United States v. Seward, 687 F.2d 1207, 1277 (10th Cir.), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 103 S. Ct. 789 (1983) (conviction for trespass on NRC facility upheld on basis of Property Clause); United States v. Gliatta, 580 F.2d 156 (5th Cir. 1978) (conviction of traffic offenses on postal facility upheld on basis of Property Clause and/or postal power, Art. 1, §8 cl. 7, aided by the Necessary and Proper Clause).

9-20.115 Prosecution of Military Personnel

Many violations of federal criminal law are also violations of the Uniform Code of Military Justice (U.C.M.J.) for which military personnel are subject to court martial (e.g., drug offenses, theft of government property, etc.). The U.C.M.J. also punished a number of acts which are not otherwise specifically declared to be federal crimes, but which may become such when committed on a facility over which the United States exercises legislative jurisdiction as a result of assimilation of state law under the Assimilative Crimes Act. See USAM 9-20.113, supra.

To avoid conflict over investigative and prosecutive jurisdiction, the Attorney General and the Secretary of Defense executed a memorandum of understanding relating to the investigation and prosecution of crimes over which the Department of Justice and Department of Defense have concurrent jurisdiction. The agreement provides generally that all crimes committed on military reservations by individuals subject to the Uniform Code of Military Justice shall be investigated and prosecuted by the military department concerned, with certain exceptions. The agreement permits civil investigation and prosecution in federal district court in any case when circumstances render such action more appropriate. If questions arise concerning the operation of the agreement, the U.S. Attorney should contact the section of the Criminal Division having cognizance over the federal statute apparently violated.

Certain cases hold that military courts have no jurisdiction to punish service personnel for even serious offenses when they entered the service under void enlistment contracts. The memorandum of understanding is not to be read to preclude prosecution in district court of such cases simply because the defendant appeared to be in the military.

In O'Callahan v. Parker, 395 U.S. 258 (1969), the Supreme Court held that a member of the armed services could not be tried by a court martial for a crime that was not "service-connected." Although O'Callahan attempted no definition of "service connection," that case concerned an off-base crime committed against a civilian. For a list of factors to be considered in determining service connection, see Relford v. Commandant, 401 U.S. 355 (1971). The court there held that a member of the armed services charged with an offense committed within or at the geographical boundary of a military post and violative of the security of a person or property therein may be tried by a court martial.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The U.S. Attorneys should ensure that federal investigative agencies such as the FBI and DEA maintain sufficient liaison with military authorities so that serious crimes committed by persons ruled not subject to military jurisdiction can be considered for prosecution by their office.

9-20.120 Maritime Jurisdiction

18 U.S.C. §7 provides that the "special territorial and maritime jurisdiction of the United States" includes:

(1) The high seas, any other waters within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States and out of the jurisdiction of any particular State, and any vessel belonging in whole or in part to the United States or any citizen thereof, or to any corporation created by or under the laws of the United States or of any State, Territory, District, or possession thereof, when such vessel is within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States and out of the jurisdiction of any particular State.

Until recently the term "high seas" was always understood as intending the open and unenclosed waters of the sea beginning at low-water mark. In re Ross, 140 U.S. 453, 471 (1891); Murray v. Hildreth, 61 F.2d 483 (5th Cir. 1932); see also United States v. Rodgers, 150 U.S. 249 (1893) (Great Lakes). Although it has become common of late to use the term to describe waters beyond a marginal belt or "territorial sea" over which a nation claims special rights, see, e.g., United States v. Louisiana, (Louisiana Boundary Case), 394 U.S. 11, 22-23 (1969); United States v. Postal, 589 F.2d 862, 868 (5th Cir. 1979), the classic definition, contemporaneous with this statute's development, is the correct one.

The words of limitation "and out of the jurisdiction of any particular State," do not qualify the "high seas" jurisdiction, but only the "other waters within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States." See Murray v. Hildreth, supra; Hoopengartner v. United

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

States, 270 F.2d 465, 470 (6th Cir. 1959); see also United States v. Rodgers, supra, at 265-266. Accordingly, the fact that a state fixes its boundary beyond the low-water mark and claims jurisdiction over the marginal sea, while relevant to venue, is immaterial to federal jurisdiction. See Murray v. Hildreth, supra. Although states' rights to exercise authority over the marginal sea developed more slowly than that of the nation, see United States v. California, 332 U.S. 19, 32-35 (1946), it cannot be doubted that a state may exercise jurisdiction over the marginal portion of the ocean, provided there is no conflict with federal law or the rights of foreign nations. See Skiriotes v. Florida, 313 U.S. 69 (1941). Indeed, it may, subject to the same limitations, enforce its laws upon its citizens and registered vessels on the high seas beyond its territorial waters. Id. at 77. It is usually the policy of the Department to defer to a state where it is prepared to undertake prosecution of conduct violative of both state and federal law.

Despite the apparent universal application of the term "high seas," it was early held that, as a general rule, federal criminal jurisdiction does not attach to offenses committed by and against foreigners on foreign vessels. See United States v. Homles, 18 U.S. (5 Wheat.) 412 (1890); United States v. Palmer, 16 U.S. (3 Wheat.) 281, 288 (1818).

The limitation on federal jurisdiction when the offense takes place on a river or harbor within the admiralty or maritime jurisdiction of the United States but not "out of the jurisdiction of a particular State," applies to offenses by naval personnel on naval vessels. See United States v. Bevans, 16 U.S. (3 Wheat.) 336 (1818).

"State" in the context of 18 U.S.C. §7(1) means "State of the United States." Thus, there is federal jurisdiction under this provision for offenses committed on American vessels in the territorial waters, harbors and inland waterways of foreign nations. See United States v. Flores, 289 U.S. 137 (1933). The port nation may also have jurisdiction if the offense disturbs its peace. Id. at 157-59.

Vessels have the nationality of the country where they are registered and whose flag they have a right to fly. See United States v. Arra, 630 F.2d 836 (1st Cir. 1980). See United States v. Ross, 439 F.2d 1355 (9th Cir. 1971), cert. denied, 404 U.S. 1015 (1972), for methods of proving nationality. Note that under 18 U.S.C. §7(1) jurisdiction attached if the vessel is even partially owned by a citizen of the United States. See United States v. Keller, 451 F. Supp. 631, 636-37 (D.P.R. 1978), aff'd on other grounds, United States v. Arra, supra.

Venue for maritime offenses committed "out of the jurisdiction of a particular State" is governed by 18 U.S.C. §3238. See United States v. Ross, supra, at 1358-59. Where the offense occurred within the boundaries of a state, venue lies there. See United States v. Peterson, 64 F. 145 (E.D. Wis. 1894).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

Federal prosecution may not be undertaken following a state prosecution for the same conduct without authorization of the Assistant Attorney General as provided by USAM 9-2.142. Prosecution should not be undertaken following a foreign prosecution unless substantial federal interests were left unvindicated.

9-20.121 Great Lakes Jurisdiction

Also included within the "special territorial and maritime jurisdiction of the United States" by 18 U.S.C. §7(2) are the Great Lakes and their connecting waterways. American nationality of the vessel is a prerequisite to jurisdiction under 18 U.S.C. §7(2). See United States v. Tanner, 471 F.2d 128, 140 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 409 U.S. 949 (1972). Jurisdiction may, however, attach to foreign vessels on the Great Lakes, under 18 U.S.C. §7(1), unless they are within harbors or waterways in the body of a state. Id., at 141. Federal jurisdiction under 18 U.S.C. §7(2) over American vessels is not affected by the existence of concurrent state jurisdiction. Again, it is usually the policy of the Department to defer to the state where it will undertake prosecution. Jurisdiction follows American vessels into Canadian waters. See S. Rep. 2917, 51st Cong., 1st Sess. 1890; see also United States v. Rodgers, supra, reaching the same result under the predecessor of 18 U.S.C. §7(1) in a case involving an offense committed before enactment of the predecessor of 18 U.S.C. §7(2).

Venue for offenses on the open seas and connecting waters of the Great Lakes will be governed by 18 U.S.C. §3238 unless committed within the recognized boundaries of a state. See United States v. Peterson, supra.

9-20.122 General Maritime Offenses

There are a number of statutes defining maritime offenses that are not dependent upon 18 U.S.C. §7 and are not affected by the fact that the offense occurred within state jurisdiction. For example, death resulting from criminal negligence of a ship's officer or crew can be prosecuted under 18 U.S.C. §1115 when a manslaughter prosecution under 18 U.S.C. §1112 would be barred because the ship was within a harbor. See United States v. Allied Towing Corp., 602 F.2d 612 (4th Cir. 1979). See also United States v. Tanner, supra, affirming a conviction under 18 U.S.C. §2275 (firing a vessel) while reversing one for violation of 18 U.S.C. §1363 (malicious mischief within special maritime and territorial jurisdiction). There are other such statutes to be found in Title 18 and other titles of the United States Code.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

9-20.130 Aircraft Jurisdiction

The "enclave statutes" are made applicable by 18 U.S.C. §7(5) to American aircraft in flight over the high seas or other waters within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States and out of the jurisdiction of any particular state. This section was enacted in reaction to United States v. Cordova, 89 F. Supp. 298 (E.D.N.Y. 1950), which held that an aircraft was not a "vessel," and that "over high seas" was not the equivalent of "on the high seas," within the meaning of 18 U.S.C. §7(1). Venue is governed by 18 U.S.C. §3238.

It is important to note that most of the "enclave statutes" (18 U.S.C. §§113, 114, 661, 1111, 1112, 1113, 2031, 2032 and 2111) are made applicable to "aircraft within the special aircraft jurisdiction of the United States," by 49 U.S.C. §1472(k)(1), and that "special aircraft jurisdiction," as defined in 49 U.S.C. §1301(38), differs significantly from the jurisdiction defined in 18 U.S.C. §7(5). Venue is governed by 49 U.S.C. §1473(a). See United States v. Busic, 549 F.2d 252 (2d Cir. 1977). For a discussion of "special aircraft jurisdiction," see USAM 9-63.110.

9-20.200 INDIAN COUNTRY

Criminal jurisdiction in "Indian country," 18 U.S.C. §1151, is based on an allocation of authority among federal, state, and tribal courts. Although federal criminal law in Indian country is briefly set forth in 18 U.S.C. §§1151-1165, allocation of authority in particular cases depends in general upon three factors: subject matter, locus, and person. The chart at USAM 9-20.230, infra, is a synopsis of presently applicable law in Indian country and reflects the changes made in the Major Crimes Act, 18 U.S.C. §1153, by Act of May 29, 1976, Pub. L. No. 94-297, §2, 90 Stat. 585, and Act of October 12, 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-473, §1009, 98 Stat. 2141, as well as court decisions and current Department policy.

"Indian country" is defined in 18 U.S.C. §1151 as including (1) federal reservations, including fee land, see United States v. John, 437 U.S. 634 (1978), Seymour v. Superintendent, 368 U.S. 351 (1962); (2) dependent Indian communities, see United States v. Levesque, 681 F.2d 75 (1982), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1089 (1983); and (3) Indian allotments to which title has not been extinguished, see United States v. Ramsey, 271 U.S. 467 (1926).

Disputes frequently arise as to whether federal reservation status still attaches to lands that were opened to settlement. The resolution is very complex, see Solem v. Bartlett, _____ U.S. _____, No. 82-1253

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

(decided Feb. 22, 1984). The assistance of the Field Solicitor of the Department of Interior should be sought in the first instance.

U.S. Attorneys should attempt to familiarize themselves with the boundaries of their reservations and off-reservations allotments with the assistance of the Field Solicitor. They should also be aware of the extent to which jurisdiction over all or some of the reservations in their districts has been transferred to the state under Pub. L. No. 83-280 as amended by Pub. L. No. 90-284, codified at 18 U.S.C. §1162 and 25 U.S.C. §§1321-1326, and similar legislation, see, e.g., 18 U.S.C. §3243 and Pub. L. No. 80-846.

Under 18 U.S.C. §1152 the general laws of the United States as to the punishment of crimes committed in any place within the sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, except the District of Columbia, are extended to Indian country. This section applies to offenses committed in the Indian country by a non-Indian against the person or property of a tribal Indian, and vice versa. The Assimilative Crimes Statute, 18 U.S.C. §13, is also applicable to offenses involving Indians and non-Indians in the Indian country. See Williams v. United States, 327 U.S. 711 (1946).

There is a broad exception in paragraph two of 18 U.S.C. §1152 which provides that the statute:

shall not extend to offenses committed by one Indian against the person or property of another Indian, nor to any Indian committing any offense in the Indian country who has been punished by the local law of the tribe, or to any case where, by treaty stipulations, the exclusive jurisdiction over such offenses is or may be secured to the Indian tribes respectively.

18 U.S.C. §1153 grants exclusive jurisdiction to federal courts over Indians who commit any of the listed offenses, regardless of whether the victim is also an Indian. See United States v. John, supra. The offenses are, for the most part, defined by separate federal statutes, except for burglary, involuntary sodomy, and incest which look to the law of the state where the crime was committed for definition and punishment. In paragraph three, Congress has left the door open to apply similar "borrowing" provisions to any other listed offense "not defined and punished by federal law."

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

9-20.210 The Reach of 18 U.S.C. §§1152 and 1153

By the broadest possible reading, 18 U.S.C. §1152 would seem to apply the federal law generally applicable on other federal enclaves to Indian reservations. Thus, federal law with regard to crimes like assault, 18 U.S.C. §113, and arson, 18 U.S.C. §18, would govern, as would the provisions of the Assimilative Crimes Act, 18 U.S.C. §13. The Assimilative Crimes Act has itself been regarded as establishing federal jurisdiction over "victimless" crimes occurring within a federal enclave. See, e.g., United States v. Chapman, 321 F. Supp. 767 (E.D. Va. 1971) (possession of marijuana); United States v. Barner, 195 F. Supp. 103 (N.D. Cal. 1961) (driving under the influence of intoxicants.).

Notwithstanding its broad terms, the Supreme Court has significantly narrowed 18 U.S.C. §1152's reach. In the 1882 case of United States v. McBratney, 104 U.S. 621, the Court held that where a crime is committed on a reservation by a non-Indian against another non-Indian exclusive jurisdiction lies in the state absent treaty provisions to the contrary. Accord, Draper v. United States, 164 U.S. 240 (1896). Subsequent decisions have acknowledged the rule. See, e.g., United States v. Wheeler, 435 U.S. 313, 325 n.21 (1978); United States v. Antelope, 430 U.S. 641, 643 n.2 (1977); Williams v. United States, 327 U.S. 711, 714 (1946).

The precursor to 18 U.S.C. §1152 was section 25 of the Act of June 30, 1834, 4 Stat. 733, and it was not until 1885 that federal legislation was enacted granting federal courts jurisdiction over certain major crimes committed by an Indian against another Indian. Prior to 1885, such offenses were tried in tribal courts. See Ex parte Crow Dog, 109 U.S. 556 (1883). 18 U.S.C. §1153 is predicated on the Act of March 3, 1885, §8, 23 Stat. 385, and former sections 548 and 549, 18 U.S.C. (1940 ed.). Under 18 U.S.C. §1153, federal courts have exclusive jurisdiction of offenses named in the section when committed by a tribal Indian against the person or property of another tribal Indian or other person in Indian country. Legislative history indicates that the words "or other persons" were incorporated in the 1885 Act to make certain the Indians were to be prosecuted in federal court. 48th Cong., 2d Sess., 16 Cong. Rec. 934 (1885).

Although the scheme of felony jurisdiction which has arisen is complex in origin, it is not irrational in light of the historical settings in which the predecessor statutes of 18 U.S.C. §§1152 and 1153 were passed. Major felonies involving an Indian, whether as victim or accused, are matters for federal prosecution. Because of substantial non-Indian populations on many reservations felonies wholly between non-Indians are left to state prosecution. See USAM 9-20.215 infra. It is, moreover, significant that the historical practice has been to regard

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

McBratney, supra, as authority for the states' assertion of jurisdiction with regard to a variety of "victimless" offenses committed by non-Indians on Indian reservations. See USAM 9-20.231 infra.

In United States v. Antelope, supra, the Supreme Court in essence upheld the constitutionality of the plan contained in 18 U.S.C. §§1152 and 1153 by rejecting a challenge on equal protection grounds raised against 18 U.S.C. §1153. It was held that the Constitution was not violated by federal prosecution of an Indian for the murder of a non-Indian on the reservation under a theory of felony-murder. Defendant argued that had he been prosecuted in state court under Idaho state law for the same act the felony-murder doctrine would not have applied because Idaho does not recognize it. The Court acknowledged the disparity in treatment, but nonetheless reasoned that the Major Crimes Act, like all federal regulation of Indian affairs, is not based upon an impermissible racial classification, but "is rooted in the unique status of Indians as 'a separate people' with their own political institutions. Federal regulation of Indian tribes, therefore, is governance of once-sovereign political communities; it is not to be viewed as legislation of a 'racial' group consisting of Indians."

9-20.211 Lesser Included Offenses Under 18 U.S.C. §1153

In Keeble v. United, 412 U.S. 205 (1973), the Supreme Court held that an Indian defendant charged with a major crime violation under 18 U.S.C. §1153, was entitled to request and receive an instruction on a lesser included offense not enumerated in that section, even though the defendant could not have been charged with such an offense in the first instance. The Court felt this result was compelled by 18 U.S.C. §3242, which provides that Indians charged with violations of 18 U.S.C. §1153 shall be "tried . . . in the same manner as are all other persons committing such offense within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States." The three courts of appeals that have addressed the subject have held that, if the jury returns a verdict of guilt upon it, the court has jurisdiction to impose sentence for the lesser offense. See United States v. Bowman, 679 F.2d 978 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, U.S. , 103 S. Ct. 1204 (1983); United States v. John, 587 F.3d 683 (5th Cir. 1979); United States v. Felicia, 495 F.2d 353, 355 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 849 (1974).

9-20.212 Double Jeopardy Considerations

The second paragraph of 18 U.S.C. §1152 specifically provides that the section "does not extend" to an Indian "who has been punished by the local law of the Tribe." 18 U.S.C. §1153, however, does not contain such a limitation. The Supreme Court has held that the Double Jeopardy Clause, U.S. Const., Amend, V, does not bar successive prosecutions in federal and tribal courts for violations of 18 U.S.C. §1153 and tribal law. It reasoned that the courts are arms of separate sovereigns and prosecution is not "for the same offense." See United States v. Wheeler, 435 U.S. 313 (1978). The Court left open the question whether its "dual sovereignty" ruling would apply to "Courts of Indian Offenses," also known as "CFR Courts." Id. at 327 n.26. A federal prosecution should not, however, be undertaken following a tribal prosecution unless substantial federal interests were left unvindicated.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-20.213 Limitations on 18 U.S.C. §1152 Exemption

It should be emphasized that the phrase "general laws of the United States" means federal enclave laws. Federal enclave laws are those laws which apply only within the special maritime and territorial jurisdiction of the United States as defined in 18 U.S.C. §7. See United States v. Cowboy, 694 F.2d 1234 (10th Cir. 1982). The exception in the second paragraph of 18 U.S.C. §1152 does not exempt Indians from the criminal laws of the United States that apply to acts that are federal crimes regardless of where committed such as bank robbery, counterfeiting, sale of drugs, and assault on a federal officer. See United States v. Blue, 722 F.2d 383 (8th Cir. 1983); United States v. Smith, 562 F.2d 453 (7th Cir. 1977), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 1072 (1978). Neither does it exempt Indians from the liquor law provisions, 18 U.S.C. §§1154, 1161; United States v. Cowboy, supra.

9-20.214 Offenses Against Community Committed by Indians or Non-Indians (Victimless Crimes)

A. Indians

Some crimes committed by Indians on reservations do not really involve offenses against the person or property of non-Indians. Such offenses typically involve crimes against public order and morals. Examples are traffic violations, prostitution, or gambling. Federal prosecutions in these cases can be based on 18 U.S.C. §1152 and the Assimilative Crimes Act (18 U.S.C. §13). See, e.g., United States v. Sosseur, 181 F.2d 873 (7th Cir. 1950); United States v. Marcyes, 557 F.2d 1361 (9th Cir. 1977). U.S. Attorneys should strongly consider prosecution in such cases where prosecution by the tribe is not forthcoming or inadequate.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

B. Non-Indians

The question of jurisdiction over victimless crimes by non-Indians received considerable attention in the Department following the Supreme Court's holding in Oliphant v. Suquamish Tribe, 435 U.S. 191 (1978), that tribal courts do not have jurisdiction over non-Indians. The Office of Legal Counsel (OLC) prepared an extensive memorandum dated March 21, 1979, concluding that in most cases, the states have jurisdiction over victimless crimes by non-Indians. The OLC memorandum was reprinted in the August 1979 issue of Indian Law Reporter (6 ILR K-15ff) and copies are available from the Department. The conclusion of OLC is that in the absence of a true victim, McBratney, supra, would control, leaving the states with jurisdiction. There must be a concrete and particularized threat to the person or property of an Indian or to specific tribal interests (beyond preserving the peace of the reservation) before federal jurisdiction can be said to attach. Thus, most traffic violations, most routine cases of disorderly conduct, and most offenses against morals such as gambling, which are not designed for the protection of a particular vulnerable class, should be viewed as having no real "victim" and therefore to fall exclusively within state competence.

In certain other cases, however, a sufficiently direct threat to Indian persons or property may be stated to bring an ordinarily "victimless" crime within federal jurisdiction. One example would be crimes calculated to obstruct or corrupt the functioning of tribal government. This could include bribery of tribal officials in a situation where state law in broad terms prohibits bribery of public officials. Another example which would adversely affect the tribal community are consensual crimes committed by non-Indian offenders with Indian participants, where the participant, although willing, is within the class of persons which a particular state statute is specifically designed to protect. See Smayda v. United States, 352 F.2d 251 (9th Cir. 1965), cert. denied, 382 U.S. 981 (1966) (prosecution under Assimilative Crimes Act for felony sex offense in violation of state law committed in National Park). Thus, federal jurisdiction will be under 18 U.S.C. §2023 for the statutory rape of an Indian girl, as would a charge of contributing to the delinquency of a minor where assimilated into federal law pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §13.

A third group of offenses which may be punishable under the law of individual states and assimilated into federal law would be cases where an Indian victim is actually indentified. Examples would include reckless endangerment, criminal trespass, riot or rout, and disruption of a public meeting or a worship service conducted by the tribe. In certain other cases, conduct, which is generally prohibited because of its ill effects on society at large and not because it represents a particularized threat to specific individuals, may nevertheless so specifically threaten or endanger Indian persons or property that federal jurisdiction may be asserted. Thus, speeding in the vicinity of an Indian school, homosexual activity in the same area, an obvious attempt to scatter Indians collected at a tribal gathering, or a breach of peace that borders on an assault, may in unusual circumstances be seen as sufficiently serious to warrant federal prosecution.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-20.215 Offenses by Non-Indians; Concurrent Federal-State Jurisdiction

Although it might be assumed that whoever has jurisdiction over a particular category of crimes may assert it exclusively, the Department has given the matter additional consideration. A substantial case can be made for the proposition that the states are not ousted from jurisdiction over offenses committed by non-Indian offenders which pose a direct and substantial threat to Indian victims, but in their separate sovereign capacities may prosecute non-Indian offenders for violations of applicable state law as well.

The issue is a difficult one. Although McBratney, supra, firmly establishes that state jurisdiction is exclusive in the absence of a clear Indian victim, it is the Department's position that despite contrary Supreme Court dicta it does not necessarily follow that state jurisdiction must be ousted where an offense is stated against a non-Indian defendant under federal law.

The exclusivity of federal jurisdiction with regard to the Major Crimes Act, see 18 U.S.C. §1153, was established in United States v. John, 437 U.S. 634, 651 (1978). 18 U.S.C. §1152 has likewise been viewed as ousting state jurisdiction where Indian defendants are involved. See, e.g., United States ex rel. Lynn v. Hamilton, 233 F.2d 685 (W.D.N.Y. 1915); In re Blackbird, 109 F. 139 (W.D. Wis. 1901); Application of Denetclaw, 83 Ariz. 299, 320 P.2d 697 (1958); State v. Campbell, 53 Minn. 354, 55 N.W. 553 (1893); Arquette v. Schneckloth, 56 Wash. 2d 178, 351 P.2d 921 (1960). Supreme Court dicta, moreover, suggests that federal jurisdiction may similarly be exclusive where offenses by non-Indians within the terms of 18 U.S.C. §1152 are concerned. See Washington v. Yakima Indian Nation, 439 U.S. 463, 470 (1979); Williams v. Lee, 358 U.S. 217, 219-20 (1959); Williams v. United States, 327 U.S. 711, 714 (1946).

The Montana and North Dakota supreme courts have held that state jurisdiction is ousted where federal jurisdiction under 18 U.S.C. §1152 applied to the unlawful theft or killing of livestock owned by an Indian on a reservation where the perpetrator was non-Indian. See State v. Greenwalt, 663 P.2d 1178 (Mont. 1983) (divided court); State v. Kuntz, 66 N.W. 2d 531 (D. N.D. 1954). But three earlier cases suggest a contrary result, recognizing that, as in McBratney, supra, the states have a continuing interest in the prosecution of offenders against state law even while federal prosecution may at the same time be warranted. See State v. McAlhaney, 220 N.C. 387, 17 S.E. 2d 352 (1941); Oregon v. Coleman, 1 Ore. 191 (1855). See also United States v. Barnhart, 22 F. 285, 291 (D. Ore. 1884).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Although it would mean that 18 U.S.C. §1152 could not be uniformly applied to provide for exclusive federal jurisdiction in all cases of interracial crimes, a conclusion that both federal and state jurisdiction may lie where conduct on a reservation by a non-Indian which presents a direct and immediate threat to an Indian person or property constitutes an offense against the laws of each sovereign could not be criticized as inconsistent or anomalous. 18 U.S.C. §1153 was enacted many years after 18 U.S.C. §1152 had been introduced as part of the early Trade and Intercourse Acts; its clear purpose was to provide a federal forum for the prosecution of Indians charged with major crimes, a forum necessary precisely because no state jurisdiction over such crimes was contemplated. Consistent with this purpose, 18 U.S.C. §1152 may properly be read to preempt state attempts to prosecute Indian defendants for crimes against non-Indians as well.

In cases involving a direct and immediate threat by a non-Indian defendant against an Indian person or property, however, a different result may be required. The state interest in such cases, as recognized by McBratney, supra, is strong. 18 U.S.C. §1152 itself recognizes that where an Indian is charged with an interracial crime against a non-Indian, federal jurisdiction is to be exercised only where the offender is not prosecuted in his/her own tribal courts. But in no event would the state courts have jurisdiction in such a case absent a separate grant of jurisdiction such as that provided by Public Law No. 280, Act of Aug. 1953, 67 Stat. 588. An analogous situation is presented where a non-Indian defendant is charged with a crime against an Indian victim; the federal interest is not to preempt the state courts, but only to retain authority to prosecute to the extent that state proceedings do not serve the federal interest.

This result follows from the preemption analysis set forth in Williams v. Lee, 358 U.S. 217 (1959), where the Court recognized that, in the absence of express federal legislation, the authority of the states should be seen to be circumscribed only to the extent necessary to protect

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Indian interest in making their own laws and being ruled by them. While significant damage might be done to Indian interests if Indian defendants could be prosecuted under state law for conduct occurring on the reservation, no equivalent damage would be done if state as well as federal prosecutions of non-Indian offenders against Indian victims could be sustained.

Finally, it might be argued that such a result is consistent with principles governing the administration of other federal enclaves. It is generally recognized that a state may condition its consent to a cession of land involving government purchase or condemnation by reserving jurisdiction to the extent consistent with the federal use. See Kleppe v. New Mexico, 426 U.S. 529, 540 (1976); Paul v. United States, 371 U.S. 245, 264-65 (1963). Most Indian reservations are, however, unique because they existed prior to statehood and did not arise as a result of a cession agreement or condemnation proceedings. Nonetheless, the analogy to other federal enclaves may be helpful in building the case for concurrent jurisdiction.

States often retain concurrent jurisdiction except to the extent that it would interfere with the federal use. Accordingly, they may do so here as well by prosecuting non-Indian offenders while federal jurisdiction simultaneously remains as needed to protect Indian victims in the event that a state prosecution is not undertaken or is not prosecuted in good faith. For these reasons, therefore, the Department believes that prosecution may be commenced under state law against a non-Indian even in cases where, as a result of conduct on the reservation which represents a direct and immediate threat against an Indian person or property, federal jurisdiction may also attach.

U.S. Attorneys have a very important role to play in reacting to crimes by non-Indians against Indians. While some states may be willing and able to prosecute, this should never be assumed. The key is close liaison with state officials, either directly or through the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI), to make sure that all appropriate cases involving offenses by non-Indians against Indians are prosecuted vigorously. U.S. Attorneys shoulder a heavy responsibility in making sure that the tribal community is protected from crimes by persons over whom the tribe has no jurisdiction. In all cases where the state refuses to prosecute or does so inadequately, U.S. Attorneys should carefully consider federal prosecution, recognizing that a declination means that the offender will go unpunished. A declination in favor of "state prosecution" is not sufficient protection for the tribal community or the individual Indian victim if the state will not prosecute for some reason unrelated to the merits of the particular case.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-20.220 Investigative Jurisdiction

The FBI has investigative jurisdiction over violations of 18 U.S.C. §§1152 and 1153. Frequently by the time the FBI arrives on the reservation some investigation will have been undertaken by tribal or Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) police. It is recognized that the ability of the tribal and BIA police can vary from reservation to reservation, and U.S. Attorneys are free to ask for BIA investigation in all cases where it is felt that such is required. However, U.S. Attorneys are encouraged and authorized to accept investigative reports directly from tribal or BIA police and prepare a case for prosecution without FBI investigation in all cases where you feel a sufficient investigation can be undertaken by BIA or tribal law enforcement officers.

18 U.S.C. §1163 makes embezzlement, theft, criminal conversation and wilful misapplication of funds belonging to a tribal organization a crime. It is a felony if the amount taken exceeds $100. This statute applies to both Indians and non-Indians, and need not be committed on a reservation

The following replaces USAM 9-20.215:

9-20.215 Offenses by Non-Indians: Concurrent State-Federal Jurisdiction

As noted at USAM 9-20.210, jurisdiction over offenses committed by non-Indians against non-Indians are within the exclusive jurisdiction of the states. United States v. McBratney, 104 U.S. 621 (1882); Draper v. United States, 164 U.S. 240 (1896). Non-Indians are immune from tribal court jurisdiction. Oliphant v. Suquamish Tribe, 435 U.S. 191 (1978). Except for those exempted by McBratney, the federal government has jurisdiction over non-Indian offenders. Despite some Supreme Court dicta (and state and federal district court holdings) to the contrary, it is the Department's position that this jurisdiction is not exclusive of state jurisdiction. See Office of Legal Counsel Memorandum, dated March 2, 1979, reprinted at 6 ILR K-155ff (August 1979).

There are only two bases for denying a state jurisdiction over conduct committed in Indian country within its borders:

one is tribal sovereignty and the other is federal preemption. White Mountain Apache Tribe v. Bracker, 448 U.S. 136, 142-43 (1980); Rice v. Rehner, 463 U.S. 713, 718-19 (1983). Neither ground is sufficient to bar state jurisdiction in these cases.

In Worcester v. Georgia, 31 U.S. (6 Pet.) 515, 561 (1832), Chief Justice Marshall wrote that the Cherokee Nation "is a distinct community, occupying its own territory, with boundaries accurately described, in which . . . [state laws] can have no force. . . but. . . in conformity with treaties, and acts of Congress." But this concept of impenetrable reservation borders has not withstood the tests of time. As outlined in Rice v. Rehner, 463 U.S. at 718-20, state law has repeatedly been allowed to penetrate reservation borders. Indeed, the absolute limits of the concept were breached in the context of criminal law in the century-old McBratney case. The core interest which the doctrine is meant to protect is the Indians' right to self-government. As recently stated in Washington v. Yakima Indian Nation, 439 U.S. 463, 470 (1979):

[S]tate law reaches within the exterior boundaries of an Indian reservation only if it would not infringe "on the right of reservation Indians to make their own laws and be ruled by them." Williams v. Lee, 358 U.S. 217, 219-220 (1959).

But "notions of Indian sovereignty have been adjusted to take account of the State's legitimate interest in the affairs of non-Indians." McClanahan v. Arizona Tax Commission, 411 U.S. 164, 171 (1973). The principle of tribal self-government is surely not offended by a state prosecuting a non-Indian, who, by virtue of Oliphant, is not subject to tribal criminal jurisdiction.

The second objection that may be raised to state jurisdiction over these cases is the doctrine of federal preemption. This doctrine is similar to, but differs from, federal preemption in the state-federal context. Rice v. Rehner, 463 U.S. at 718, citing White Mountain Apache Tribe v. Bracker, 448 U.S. 136, 143 (1980). For the preemption test to preclude state jurisdiction, it is necessary to find that a balance of federal, Indian and state interests requires sacrifice of the latter. Rice v. Rehner, 463 U.S. at 720. As noted, a tribe can hardly complain of the state's assumption of jurisdiction over one who is beyond its own power. The federal (and tribal) interests in preserving peace in Indian country are likewise not encroached upon by a state undertaking prosecution. The federal government retains concurrent jurisdiction so that it may go forward if it believes its interests or those of its tribal wards have not been satisfactorily vindicated in the prior state proceedings. Cf. Abbate v. United States, 359 U.S. 187 (1959). The state's interest in maintaining law and order within its borders is obvious and compelling. While a strong case can be made for immunizing Indian defendants from state processes, see United States v. Kagama, 118 U.S. 375, 384 (1886), the same cannot be said for forbidding a state to act against non-Indians and protect its Indian citizens.

An analysis of the authorities containing dicta negating state jurisdiction over these kinds of cases show that they can be traced back to a misstatement of the decision in Donnelly v. United States, 228 U.S. 243 (1913), particularly the interpretation given it in Williams v. United States, 327 U.S. 711 (1945).

In Williams, the defendant, a non-Indian, had had sexual relations with a reservation Indian minor between the ages of 16 and 18. As the federal carnal knowledge statute (now codified at 18 U.S.C. 2032) fixes the age of consent at 16, he could not be charged with violating it. Instead, he was charged in federal court with violating the Arizona statutory rape provision, which fixed the age of consent at 18. The theory of the prosecution was that the Arizona statute was made applicable to the reservation by the Assimilative Crimes Act, 18 U.S.C. 13, and the General Crimes Act, (now codified at 18 U.S.C. 1152). The Supreme Court held that use of the Assimilative Crimes Act was improper since Congress had legislated with regard to the generic offense of sex with minors and deliberately selected the lower age of consent.

Although Williams raised no challenge to the jurisdiction of the federal court to try him, the Court delivered itself of the following dictum summarizing Indian country jurisdiction:

While the laws and courts of the State of Arizona may have jurisdiction over offenses committed on this reservation between persons who are not Indians, the laws and courts of the United States, rather than those of Arizona, have jurisdiction over offenses committed there, as in this case, by one who is not an Indian against one who is an Indian. (Footnotes omitted.) (Emphasis supplied.) 327 U.S. at 714.

In support it cited Donnelly v. United States, supra; United States v. Pelican, 232 U.S. 442 (1914); United States v. Ramsey, 271 U.S. 467 (1926); and United States v. Chavez, 290 U.S. 357 (1933). Ibid. note 10.

Each of these cases involved offenses committed by non-Indians against Indians, but none of them were state prosecutions in which state jurisdiction was challenged.

Rather, the defendants were challenging the jurisdiction of the federal court, arguing that only the state had jurisdiction. In each case the Court ruled that the situs of the crime was Indian country and that admission to statehood did not divest the federal court of jurisdiction over offenses by or against Indians. In none of them did it hold that federal jurisdiction over the non-Indian defendant was exclusive. Donnelly was the case principally relied on by the other three, and Williams itself recognized Donnelly as the seminal case. See 327 U.S. at 714 n. 10.

In Donnelly the Supreme Court rejected the contention that a non-Indian's offense against an Indian in Indian country fell "within the principle of the McBratney and Draper cases." The "principle" of McBratney and Draper was that federal jurisdiction over non-Indians under the General Crimes Act for offenses against non-Indians was divested when a territory entered the Union as a state, and that state jurisdiction over such offenses was exclusive. Instead, the Court held, the case was governed by the rationale of the Kagama case, which had held that because of the federal trust responsibility, federal jurisdiction over offenses by Indians was not divested by a territory entering into statehood. The same trust obligation required continued federal jurisdiction over non-Indian offenders against Indians. Neither Kagama nor Donnelly, however, held or stated that such jurisdiction was exclusive. The emphasis in Kagama on the need to protect Indians from state prejudice would suggest that federal jurisdiction over Indian defendants should be exclusive, and, indeed the Supreme Court so held many years later in United States v. John, 437 U.S. 634, 654 (1978), with respect to the Major Crimes Act. The federal trust responsibility does not, however, require that its obligation to safeguard the Indian community against non-Indian depredations preempt state action.

An additional argument against state jurisdiction may be based upon disclaimers of jurisdiction over Indian country contained in the state constitution or enabling act. The argument is without merit. As a general rule such a provision is properly construed as a disclaimer of proprietary rather than governmental interest, Kake Village v. Egan, 369 U.S. 60, 69 (1962), and references in such provisions to retention of "absolute jurisdiction" by the federal government are not synonymous with "exclusive jurisdiction." Id., at p. 67-68. This was explicitly held with respect to state criminal jurisdiction over crimes by non-Indians against non-Indians in Draper v. United States, supra. Ibid. See also Rice v. Rehner, 463 U.S., at 723.

Finally, it may be argued that, if states had jurisdiction over non-Indians who committed offenses against Indians, it would have been unnecessary to provide in Public Law 93-280, codified at 18 U.S.C. 1162 and 25 U.S.C. 1321, that state jurisdiction was, or could be, extended to "offenses committed by or against Indians," since "by" alone would have been effective to divest the United States of exclusive jurisdiction over offenses enumerated in the Major Crimes Act. This argument overlooks the exclusive jurisdiction tribal courts have over offenses, not enumerated in the Major Crimes Act, committed by Indians against Indians. See 18 U.S.C. 1152 ¶2; Ex Parte Crow Dog, 109 U.S. 556 (1883). Public Law 93-280 was designed not only to shift federal responsibility for major crimes to the state, but also to have the state undertake responsibility for minor offenses that the tribes were unable to deal with effectively. See Washington v. Yakima Indian Nation, 439 U.S. at 471, 488 n. 32, 489 n. 33. It was these crimes, not those by non-Indians, that required use of the word "against."

In conclusion, while the United States is obligated by its trust responsibilities to maintain jurisdiction over offenses by non-Indians against Indians in Indian country, there is no statute or Supreme Court case holding that such jurisdiction is exclusive and preemptive of the states. While historically and as a "practical matter," Washington v. Yakima Indian Nation, 439 U.S. at 470 (1979), such offenses are "generally tried in federal courts," Williams v. Lee, 358 U.S. 217, 220 n. 5, neither Indian sovereignty nor preemption forecloses state prosecution.

United States Attorneys have a very important role to play in reacting to crimes by non-Indians against Indians. While some states may be willing and able to prosecute, this should never be assumed. The key is close liaison with state officials, either directly or through the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI), to make sure that all appropriate cases involving offenses by non-Indians against Indians are prosecuted vigorously. United States Attorneys shoulder a heavy responsibility in making sure that the tribal community is protected from crimes by persons over whom the tribe has no jurisdiction. In all cases where the state refuses to prosecute or does so inadequately, United States Attorneys should carefully consider federal prosecution, recognizing that a declination means that the offender will go unpunished. A declination in favor of "state prosecution" is not sufficient protection for the tribal community or the individual Indian victim if the state will not prosecute for some reason unrelated to the merits of the particular case.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-21.000 PURPOSE AND SCOPE

9-21.010 Introduction

The purpose of this chapter is to provide information and guidance to Department of Justice attorneys with respect to the Witness Security Reform Act of 1984, which is Part F of Chapter XII of the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984 (Pub. L. No. 98-473) and repeals Title V of the Organized Crime Control Act of 1970. This chapter prescribes the procedures for establishing a person as a protected witness.

9-21.020 Scope

These procedures apply to all organizations within the Department of Justice.

The Witness Security Reform Act of 1984 continues the authority of the Attorney General to provide protection and security by means of relocation for witnesses, and their relatives and associates, in official proceedings brought against persons involved in organized criminal activity or other serious offenses if it is determined that an offense described in Chapter 73 (Obstruction of Justice) of Title 18 or a similar state or local offense involving a crime of violence directed at a witness is likely to occur.

28 U.S.C. §524 provides authority to use appropriations of the Department of Justice for the payment of . . . compensation and expenses of witnesses and informants all at the rates authorized or approved by the Assistant Attorney General for Administration. . . ."

9-21.100 ELIGIBILITY

A witness may be considered for the Witness Security Program if the person is an essential witness in a specific case of the following types:

- A. Any offense defined in Title 18 U.S.C. §1961(1) (organized crime and racketeering);
- B. Any drug trafficking offenses described in Title 21 U.S.C.;
- C. Any other serious federal felony for which a witness may provide testimony which may subject the witness to retaliation by violence or threats of violence;

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

D. Any state offense that is similar in nature to those set forth above; and

E. Certain civil and administrative proceedings in which testimony given by a witness may place the safety of that witness in jeopardy.

In order for the Office of Enforcement Operations, Criminal Division, to facilitate the processing of a request for entry of an individual into the Witness Security Program, an application form has been designed to cover the information needed to support the request. This form includes a summary of the testimony to be provided by the witness and other information evidencing the witness' cooperation.

The Witness Security Reform Act of 1984 requires that the Attorney General obtain and evaluate all available information regarding the suitability of a witness for inclusion in the Witness Security Program. This information must include any criminal history and a psychological evaluation for each candidate for the Program and each adult (18 years and older) member of the household. Additionally, the Attorney General is required to make a written assessment of the risk the witness may present to his/her new community. Factors which must be evaluated in the risk assessment include, but are not limited to, the person's criminal record, alternatives other than protection which have been considered, and the possibility of securing the testimony from other sources. If it is determined that the need for prosecution of the case is outweighed by the danger that the witness would pose to the relocation community, the Attorney General is required to exclude the witness from the Program.

To avoid the necessity of making follow up calls, please note the following:

A. In order to make certain that each application for entry of a witness into the Program is both appropriate and timely, the witness should, prior to his/her acceptance into the Program, either appear and testify before the grand jury or in some other manner have committed himself/herself to providing this testimony at trial;

B. As you are aware, the Department is obligated to provide for the safety and welfare of the witness long after he/she has testified. The protection and possible relocation of the witness and his/her family are both expensive and complicated. It is imperative, therefore, that the entry of a witness into the Program be made only after it has been determined by the sponsoring attorney that the witness' testimony is credible, significant, and certain in coming.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Witness Security Program application forms and instructions are available from the Office of Enforcement Operations, Criminal Division, P.O. Box 7600, Benjamin Franklin Station, Washington, D.C. 20044-7600.

9-21.110 Informants

Informants are the responsibility of the investigative agency that the informant has assisted. An informant is not eligible for participation in the Witness Security Program unless he/she becomes a witness as defined in 18 U.S.C. §3521 et seq.

9-21.120 Utilization of Federal Prisoners in Investigations

All requests from investigative agencies to utilize federal prisoners (non-Witness Security participants) in investigations, when consensual monitoring devices, furloughs, or extraordinary transfers are necessary must be referred to the Office of Enforcement Operations for review and coordination with the Bureau of Prisons. This also applies to inmates in local halfway houses. The following information must be provided:

- A. Name of prisoner and identifying data, including Bureau of Prisons register number, if known;
- B. Location of the prisoner;
- C. Necessity of utilizing the prisoner in the investigation;
- D. Name(s) of target(s) of the investigation;
- E. Nature of the activity requested;
- F. Security measures to be taken to ensure the prisoner's safety, if necessary;
- G. Length of time the prisoner will be needed in the investigation;
- H. Whether the prisoner will be needed as a witness;
- I. Whether the prisoner will have to be moved to another institution upon completion of the activity; and
- J. Whether the prisoner will remain in the custody of the investigative agency or will be unguarded.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

These requests must be endorsed by the appropriate investigative agency headquarters. Upon completion of the review, the Office of Enforcement Operations will make a recommendation to the Director, Bureau of Prisons. The requestor will be advised of the decision of the Bureau of Prisons by the Office of Enforcement Operations. The Bureau of Prisons will coordinate arrangements for the activity directly with the requestor.

Because of the gravity of the responsibility assumed by the Federal Bureau of Prisons when it consents to the use of its inmates by investigative agencies as informants, new guidelines for approval of such requests will be employed. Effective immediately, all requests for release of an inmate, from the custody of the Bureau of Prisons/United States Marshals Service to the custody of the investigative agency, must be requested by an Assistant Director of the agency. Similarly, all requests to use residents of halfway houses or community treatment centers, or to transfer an inmate from one institution to another to perform informant or undercover activities must also be requested by an Assistant Director. Other requests to use inmates as informants, which do not require release or movement of such inmates may be submitted from the appropriate section chief.

Requests for utilization of federal prisoners in an undercover capacity should be addressed to the personal attention of the Director or the Senior Associate Director, Office of Enforcement Operations, P.O. Box 7600, Benjamin Franklin Station, Washington, D.C. 20044-7600.

In exigent circumstances, the Office of Enforcement Operations will accept requests and pertinent information by telephone. However, confirmation of the request and appropriate supporting information must be submitted as soon thereafter as possible. The information provided will be held in the strictest confidence, and no dissemination of the information will be made without prior approval from the appropriate agency or office.

9-21.130 Prisoner-Witnesses

Prisoners in a state or federal institution are eligible for participation in the Witness Security Program providing all other criteria are met. If the prisoner is in state custody, the state must agree to the prisoner serving his/her sentence in a federal institution. Application should be made as prescribed for other witnesses.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-21.140 State and Local Witnesses

The Witness Security Reform Act of 1984 authorizes the Attorney General to provide protection to state and local witnesses if the state agrees to reimburse the United States for expenses incurred in providing protection, and enters into an agreement in which the state agrees to cooperate with the Attorney General in carrying out the provisions of the Witness Security Reform Act. The terms of the reimbursement agreements will be determined by the U.S. Marshals Service. Requests from local authorities should be directed to the U.S. Attorney or Strike Force Chief and should contain all of the information required in the Witness Security Program application. The U.S. Attorney or Strike Force Chief should review the application and furnish his/her recommendation to the Office of Enforcement Operations for consideration.

9-21.200 APPROVAL AUTHORITY

The Witness Security Reform Act provides that the Attorney General may delegate the authority to place individuals in the Witness Security Program to the Deputy Attorney General, the Associate Attorney General, the Assistant Attorneys General of the Criminal and Civil Rights Divisions, and one other person. By Order No. 1072-84, the Attorney General has specially designated those individuals named above and the Senior Associate Director of the Office of Enforcement Operations, Criminal Division, to authorize applications for witness or prospective witnesses to be admitted into the Witness Security Program. In the absence of the Senior Associate Director, Office of Enforcement Operations, the Director of the Office of Enforcement Operations is authorized to exercise this authority.

9-21.210 Approval Procedure

Approval of requests to use the Witness Security Program will be made by the Director or Senior Associate Director of the Office of Enforcement Operations. The approval will be conveyed to the Director, U.S. Marshals Service and/or the Director, Bureau of Prisons, by memorandum.

9-21.220 Emergency Authorization

Protection of a witness for whom relocation is being requested remains the responsibility of the investigative agency until such time as the Office of Enforcement Operations has reviewed the application and all other relevant information, including the results of the psychological examination, approved admission of the witness into the Program and the U.S.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Marshals Service has had the opportunity to arrange the safe removal of the witness and his/her family.

If it is determined that a witness is in immediate danger and the investigative agency is not able to provide the necessary protection, temporary protection may be provided before making the written risk assessment or entering into the memorandum of understanding. However, the assessment and memorandum of understanding must be completed as soon as possible following the authorization for emergency protection.

9-21.300 REQUEST FOR PRE-ENTRY INTERVIEWS

The U.S. Marshals Service will interview prospective witnesses prior to their entry into the Program. This initial interview will serve two purposes; first, it will ensure that the prospective witness understands what can be expected from the Program; and second, it will allow the U.S. Marshals Service to evaluate potential problems with a view toward resolving them as quickly as possible.

Interviews will be arranged when a request for entry into the Program is received. It will, therefore, be necessary that the Office of Enforcement Operations be advised of the witness' likely entry into the Program as soon as it appears that the individual will be a witness, will be endangered, and will, therefore, need to enter the Witness Security Program.

9-21.310 Representations and Promises

Investigative agents and attorneys are not authorized to make representations to witnesses regarding funding, protection, or other Program services. These matters are for decision by authorized representatives of the U.S. Marshals Service only. Representations or agreements made without authorization will not be honored by the U.S. Marshals Service.

9-21.320 Expenses

Any expenses incurred by investigative agencies or divisions for witnesses and/or their dependents prior to approval by the Office of Enforcement Operations are the responsibility of the concerned agency or division.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-21.330 Psychological Testing and Evaluation

Before authorizing any witness to enter the Program, the Office of Enforcement Operations will arrange for psychological testing and evaluation for each prospective witness and the adult (18 years and older) members of his/her household. This testing will be done by psychologists from the Federal Bureau of Prisons, and will, to the extent possible, determine if the individuals may present a danger to their relocation communities. Since the reports of the psychologists may contain information which is discoverable as Brady material in the criminal prosecution in which the witness is testifying, all materials submitted by the psychologists will be forwarded to the appropriate U.S. Attorney's Office. The consent form will be executed by each individual being evaluated. See Forms, USAM 9-21.971, infra.

9-21.340 Polygraph Examinations for Prisoner-Witness Candidates

A polygraph examination is required of all Program candidates who are incarcerated in order to maintain the security of those individuals who are now, or will be housed in a Bureau of Prisons facility. Authorization for the Witness Security Program may be rescinded if the results of the polygraph examination reflect that the candidate intends to harm or disclose other protected witnesses or information obtained from such witnesses.

The Witness Security candidate will be expected to sign the polygraph examination form acknowledging his/her voluntary submission to the examination. It will be the responsibility of the prosecutor/agent to advise the Witness Security candidate of this requirement prior to submitting the application for the Program. In addition, depending on the location and other pertinent factors the prosecutor/agent or the Bureau of Prisons will be asked to disseminate the form to the prisoner. Copies of this form are available from the Office of Enforcement Operations upon request. See Forms, USAM 9-21.972, infra.

9-21.400 PROCEDURES FOR SECURING PROTECTION

Requests for protection of witnesses must be made as soon as it appears likely the individual will be a witness and will need relocation. A witness is not to be publicly disclosed, thereby endangering his/her life or that of his/her family, without the prior authorization of the Office of Enforcement Operations. It is incumbent upon each U.S. Attorney, his/her assistants, and the investigative agencies to present to the Office of Enforcement Operations at the earliest possible time during the investigative process the request for authorization to place an individual in the Witness Security Program. This will allow time for U.S. Marshals Service preliminary interview, psychological testing, appropriate review, and the actual preparation of assistance by the U.S. Marshals Service and/or the Bureau of Prisons, minimizing the disruption both to the witness and the concerned government agencies.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

United States Attorneys and Division Attorneys should transmit requests by memorandum, telecopy, or teletype to the Office of Enforcement Operations. Communications should be addressed to the Director or Senior Associate Director, Office of Enforcement Operations, P.O. Box 7600, Benjamin Franklin Station, Washington, D.C. 20044-7600, or teletyped to the Office of Enforcement Operations, Criminal Division, (telecopy number: FTS 633-5143), (teletype code JCOEO). These requests must be signed by the U.S. Attorney or Criminal Division Field Office Chief. The request must include the following information:

A. Identification of the Witness: Name, address, date and place of birth, sex, race, citizenship, FBI or police numbers of witness. Attach copies of witness' record of arrests and convictions, if any;

B. Significance of the Case(s): Importance of the case and names, locations, and importance of prospective defendants. Describe illegal organization in which the defendants are participants and their respective roles. U.S. Attorney's case number must be included.

Defendant's arrest and conviction record must be attached. If applicable, whether case is or is not a Narcotic Task Force investigation;

C. Expected Testimony of the Witness: A summary of the testimony to be provided by the witness.

Copies of indictments, complaints, prosecutive memoranda, etc., must be attached fully describing the nature of the case. List all cases in which the witness is expected to testify. List all agencies which may make use of the witness' information;

D. Trial Dates: A realistic estimate of the trial date and trial completion (with respect to each trial in which the witness is expected to testify);

E. Other Witnesses: The names of individuals for whom witness protection has previously been approved in connection with the same case; also, the names and locations of any other individuals connected with this case likely to be placed under the Witness Security Program;

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

F. Threat: A comprehensive recitation of the danger to the witness. List all individuals known or believed by the U.S. Attorney and investigative agent to pose a threat to the witness. Include complete names and addresses and request the investigative agency to forward photographs of each if available. If not available, so indicate. Include any individuals incarcerated who may pose a threat to the witness in prison and upon their release. Additionally, the investigative agency must submit a report concerning the danger to the witness to its Washington headquarters for review. The headquarters will forward the report, along with its recommendation, to the Office of Enforcement Operations;

G. Members of Witness' Household: List by name, date and place of birth, and relationship to the witness those persons recommended for relocation;

H. Assets and Liabilities: A complete recitation of the witness' financial posture to include real and personal property value, debts, alimony, support payments, mortgages, bank accounts, pensions, securities, income and information concerning monies which the witness receives or expects to receive from other state or federal agencies.

I. Medical Problems: A complete recitation of all medical problems experienced by the witness and members of his/her household including any history of drug or alcohol abuse;

J. Parole/Probation: Indicate any parole or probation restrictions for the witness and members of his/her household. If the witness and/or any household members are on state parole or probation, supervision will be transferred to the Probation Division of the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts. In order to effect the transfer, the appropriate state authorities must provide written consent to such supervision.

For those state parolees who are released from state institutions (rather than a federal institution) the following documents must be obtained by the requestor and forwarded to the Office of Enforcement Operations before relocation can occur:

1. Pre-sentence or background report detailing the circumstances of the instant offense and prior criminal conviction history;
2. A sentence data record indicating the type and length of sentence imposed by the state court;

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

3. A signed parole or release certificate; and
4. All available institutional materials such as progress reports and classification materials.

For state probationers, the following documents must be obtained:

1. Pre-sentence or background report providing a description of the instant offense and prior criminal conviction history;
2. The Order of Probation from the state court indicating the sentence or probation imposed; and
3. Signed conditions of release and any other pertinent materials.

In addition, in order to comply with the provisions of the Witness Security Reform Act of 1984, the following information must be supplied for all witnesses:

- K. The seriousness of the investigation or case;
- L. The possible danger to other persons or property in the relocation area if the witness is placed in the Program;
- M. What alternatives to Program use were considered and why they will not work;
- N. Whether or not the prosecutor can secure similar testimony from other sources;
- O. What the relative importance is of the witness' testimony; and
- P. Whether or not the need for the witness' testimony outweighs the risk of danger to the public.

9-21.410 Illegal Aliens

Upon the submission of a Witness Security Program application for an illegal alien, the sponsoring attorney and/or investigative agency must obtain from the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) appropriate documents which authorize the prospective witness and family members to remain in the United States and facilitate relocation by the U.S. Marshals Service out of the state in which they registered. Witness Security candidates who are illegal aliens cannot be relocated by the U.S. Marshals

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Service until all INS requirements are satisfied and necessary documents have been provided to the Office of Enforcement Operations or U.S. Marshals Service. In cases where the INS procedure to legalize the alien status may require a lengthy time period, the sponsor or agent should secure from INS a letter of intent to change the witness' status as part of the requirements for relocation under the Witness Security Program.

9-21.500 RESPONSIBILITIES AND PREROGATIVES OF THE U.S. MARSHALS SERVICE

When it is determined that a witness is to enter the Program the witness and adult members of his/her family will be asked to sign a Memorandum of Understanding. The U.S. Marshals Service will be obligated to satisfy each commitment documented and will not be required to provide amenities not included in the document.

9-21.510 Witness Services

The U.S. Marshals Service will be responsible for providing the witness with one reasonable job opportunity, and will provide a second opportunity when the witness has a persuasive reason for rejecting the first. The U.S. Marshals Service will also provide assistance in finding housing, will provide identity documents for witnesses and family members whose names are changed for security purposes, and will arrange for severely troubled witnesses and family members to receive counseling and advice by psychologists, psychiatrists, or social workers when requested.

In cases in which the Witness Security Program is used to protect government witnesses, sentencing judges should be made aware of the additional cost to the government for their consideration of fines. A report of the amount spent for each witness may be obtained from the U.S. Marshals Service Witness Security Inspector in the district.

Additional information may be obtained from the Office of Enforcement Operations, Criminal Division, FTS 633-3684.

9-21.520 Subsistence Guidelines

The Director, U.S. Marshals Service, shall administer Witness Security Program funds. The Witness Security Division, U.S. Marshals Service, will supervise the administration of subsistence funds under guidelines set forth by the Director based upon Department of Labor cost of living indices.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Witnesses who are able to support themselves and their family and/or household members will not be furnished subsistence funding assistance.

The U.S. Marshals Service will make every effort to assure that protected persons pay debts for which the Department is furnishing funds and return loaned property provided by the government. If necessary, final subsistence allowances will be withheld until all such debts are cleared and loaned property recovered.

Maintenance allowance assistance will normally be provided until the protected witness has obtained employment or is self-sufficient by other means of income. Subsistence shall terminate not later than six months after the first payment, or once employment is secured, whichever is earlier. The prosecutor will be advised of the scheduled termination of a witness' funding and invited to comment.

An extension for no longer than 90 days may be authorized when circumstances beyond the control of the witness so dictate.

9-21.530 Employment of Protected Witnesses

Protected witnesses are expected to become self-sufficient as soon as possible after acceptance into the Program. The U.S. Marshals Service will endeavor to assist the witness to find employment but the witness himself/herself is expected to aggressively seek employment. Under no circumstances will witnesses be considered "entitled" to subsistence payments until they have testified. Failure to aggressively seek employment or rejection of an employment opportunity will be grounds for discontinuance of subsistence payments.

9-21.600 PRISONER-WITNESSES

A. Prosecutor's Responsibility: The prosecutor handling a case, whether an Assistant U.S. Attorney or a division attorney, will be responsible for notifying the Office of Enforcement Operations when a prisoner-witness or potential prisoner-witness is cooperating with the government, and from whom that person should be separated, whether or not the witness is formally in the Witness Security Program. The Office of Enforcement Operations will then coordinate the placement of the prisoner with the Bureau of Prisons, and in conjunction with the Bureau of Prisons, will monitor the movement of cooperating witnesses, including protected witnesses, when they are moved from one federal facility to another or back and forth from federal to state custody (on writs of habeas corpus ad testificandum or otherwise), to make sure that they are not housed even on a temporary basis in facilities where persons from whom they are to be separated are also housed.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The following information concerning prisoner-witnesses must be provided:

1. Name of offender;
2. Date of birth;
3. Race and Sex;
4. Whether state or federal prisoner (if state, reimbursable or nonreimbursable);
5. Current offense;
6. Current sentence (and Judge's name);
7. FBI rap sheet;
8. Outstanding warrants or detainers;
9. Names of all those from whom witness should be separated, FBI numbers and current locations;
10. Pre-sentence investigation and/or prison classification material;
11. Judgment and Commitment papers, and
12. Bail bond status.

From time to time, U.S. Attorneys' Offices may be requested to assist the U.S. Marshals Service in securing appropriate documents for prisoner-witnesses. The U.S. Marshals Service Witness Security Inspector will assure that Judgment and Commitment papers in the prisoner-witness' new name will be delivered to the institution with the prisoner-witness. A second set of Judgment and Commitment papers in the witness' original name will be forwarded to Bureau of Prisons Headquarters in Washington, D.C.

B. Bureau of Prisons: Special prisoner designations will be made by the Bureau of Prisons as they deem necessary. U.S. Marshals Service involvement in these instances will be limited to insuring the proper security when it is necessary for the prisoner to be transported from one institution to another or back to the danger area for interview and/or trial. When the prisoner-witness is released from incarceration, relocation services will be provided if they are deemed necessary by the Office of Enforcement Operations. The Bureau of Prisons has advised that because of the extraordinary difficulty in determining the appropriate institution for the safe housing of a prisoner-witness, it is imperative that they be furnished the following information on all persons who have been identified as posing a threat to the witnesses and who are likely to come into federal custody:

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

1. Name;
2. Alias;
3. Date of birth;
4. FBI #;
5. Race;
6. Sex;
7. Ethnic origin;
8. Offense/Charge; and
9. State of appeal, fugitive escape, non-incarcerated, etc.

Compliance in providing this information is essential and will enable the Bureau of Prisons to adequately monitor the separation needs of protected prisoner-witnesses.

The information must be provided to the Office of Enforcement Operations at the time witness protection is being requested for a prisoner-witness in accordance with USAM 9-21.000, infra.

C. Metropolitan Correctional Centers (MCC) will be used primarily to house protected prisoner-witnesses during periods of debriefing, grand jury, and trial. Ordinarily, prisoner-witnesses will not serve their sentences at an MCC. Requests to house prisoner witnesses at an MCC must be directed to the Office of Enforcement Operations for consideration.

D. Interviews of Prisoner-Witnesses must be arranged through the Office of Enforcement Operations. Requests must be submitted at least ten (10) working days in advance and must include all the information required for regular witnesses. The Office of Enforcement Operations will coordinate all requests with the U.S. Marshals Service and the Bureau of Prisons. The Bureau of Prisons will not allow prisoner-witnesses to be interviewed without prior authorization from the Office of Enforcement Operations.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-21.700 REQUEST FOR WITNESS' RETURN TO DANGER AREA FOR COURT APPEARANCES

Attorneys should make requests for the appearance of a relocated witness for trial or pre-trial conferences to the U.S. Marshals Service Witness Security Specialist in their district at least TEN (10) WORKING DAYS in advance of the requested appearance date. Requests should include purpose, date, estimated duration of the appearance, place, time, and, if applicable, name of contact person (if other than the requestor).

Investigative agents should make requests for the appearance of a protected witness through the authorized agency channels to the Office of Enforcement Operations, Criminal Division, for approval. Requests should include purpose, date, and estimated duration of the appearance, and if applicable other persons to be present in addition to the requestor. The Office of Enforcement Operations will forward approved requests to the Witness Security Division, U.S. Marshals Service or to the Inmate Monitoring Branch, Bureau of Prisons (whichever is appropriate). The Witness Security Division, U.S. Marshals Service, will determine the place for the meeting and advise the requestor.

Communications should be addressed to Director or Senior Associate Director, Office of Enforcement Operations, P.O. Box 7600, Benjamin Franklin Station, Washington, D.C. 20044-7600. In case of emergency, you may contact the office telephonically at FTS 633-3684. In order to conserve the U.S. Marshals Service's personnel resources however, emergency requests should be avoided. Prosecutors and investigators will be requested to conduct interviews in neutral sites which will substantially reduce the personnel requirements of the U.S. Marshals Service.

During the witness' appearance in the danger area, it will be the responsibility of the prosecutor and the investigative agents to ensure that maximum use is made of the witness' time. In the interests of security and limiting the expense involved, the witness must be returned to the relocation area as soon as possible.

9-21.800 USE OF RELOCATED WITNESSES AS INFORMANTS

A witness, having entered the Witness Security Program, maintains a continuing and unique relationship with the Department. Even after subsistence allowances and other material support are terminated, the residual relationship requires that investigative agencies and attorneys observe certain restraints in dealing with witnesses insofar as investigations and/or new cases are concerned.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

The consent of the Office of Enforcement Operations is required before a protected witness or anyone relocated because of a witness' cooperation may be used as an informant. The following list is representative of the type of issues the Office of Enforcement Operations deems important when evaluating requests to use relocated witnesses as informants:

- A. Significance and/or scope of criminal activity and suspects;
- B. Whether or not the witness is successfully relocated and living within Program guidelines; whether new informant activity will result in relocation, if so, whether agency will bear the expense; whether informant activity will require new Witness Security Program application and relocation;
- C. Whether witness represents a poor risk (e.g. witness has caused problems in the past with his/her sponsoring attorney or agency);
- D. Whether witness has been involved in subsequent criminal activity-making him/her less reliable;
- E. Whether the request centers on witness' new criminal involvement and witness expects relief because of his/her informant role; how witness is aware of new criminal activity;
- F. Whether informant activity will require witness to testify;
- G. Whether witness has completed testimony for which he/she was placed in the Program;
- H. Whether other agencies have used witness since relocation;
- I. Whether witness is on probation or parole; whether U.S. Probation Office and U.S. Parole Commission should be notified;
- J. Whether alternatives to informant activity were considered and why they will not work;
- K. Whether witness is incarcerated; if so, whether prosecutor and/or judge should be advised; whether court order is necessary;
- L. Whether witness will be endangered--security and protective measures to be undertaken by the agency;

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

- M. Why witness will be effective in informant role;
- N. Length of time required by agency for informant activity; and
- O. Cost of the activity and how much money U.S. has expended on witness.

After a request has been granted, the Office of Enforcement Operations requires that status reports be filed with it after the first 45 days an informant is being utilized and thereafter quarterly.

9-21.900 MISCELLANEOUS

9-21.910 Dual Payments Prohibited

The U.S. Marshals Service is authorized to provide for the maintenance and housing of protected witnesses whenever they appear for trial, pre-trial conferences or return to a danger area for other appearances approved by the Office of Enforcement Operations. The U.S. Marshals Service is authorized to pay for the costs of travel and other associated maintenance expenses. Attorneys should not prepare "Fact Witness Certificates" and Fact Witness fees and allowances should not be disbursed to protected witnesses who are under the protection and maintenance of the U.S. Marshals Service. (Witnesses who voluntarily withdraw from participation in the Witness Security Program are exempt from this restriction.)

9-21.920 Payments of Reward Monies

Payment of reward monies to Witness Security Program participants must be authorized by the Office of Enforcement Operations of the Criminal Division.

The appropriate investigative agency headquarters must take a written request to the Office of Enforcement Operations reflecting the reason(s) for the payment and the name of the contact for appropriate coordination with the U.S. Marshals Service and/or the Bureau of Prisons (whichever is applicable) for disbursement of the funds. The Office of Enforcement Operations will advise the requestor in writing (or telephonically depending on the circumstances) of the approval or denial of the request. Neutral site meetings for the sole purpose of disbursing funds to participants of the Witness Security Program are prohibited. Payments must be sent C/O Chief, Witness Security Division, U.S. Marshals Service, One Tysons Corner Center, McLean, Virginia 22102.

9-21.930 Use of Department of Defense Facilities

All requests to use Department of Defense facilities for protected witnesses must be made through the Office of Enforcement Operations.

9-21.940 Special Handling

All documents relating to a protected witness or an individual nominated for protection will be accorded special handling to ensure disclosure on a strict "need to know" basis. All documents should be marked with the security designation "Sensitive Investigative Matter."

9-21.950 Relocation Site

The area of relocation must not be known to the case attorney/agent or his/her staff since all contact with the witness should be through the Office of Enforcement Operations. The witness should be instructed to keep secret the area of his/her relocation and all associated matters.

9-21.960 Duty Officers

The U.S. Marshals Service can be reached after hours at (703) 285-1100.

The Office of Enforcement Operations duty officer may be reached at (202) 633-3684 or (202) 633-2000.

The Bureau of Prisons duty officer may be reached at (202) 724-3036 or (202) 633-2000 (after hours).

9-21.970 Other Requests

A. Requests by members of Congress or their staffs shall be forwarded to the Office of Legislative Affairs who in turn will refer the requests to the Office of Enforcement Operations for processing;

B. Requests by the news media or public should be referred to the Office of Public Affairs; and

C. Other inquiries not covered in this Order should be referred to the Office of Enforcement Operations.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

9-21.980 Training

The Marshals Service, Bureau of Prisons, and Criminal Division will coordinate special training about the Witness Security Program to be given to Deputy Marshals, Bureau of Prisons personnel, investigative agents, Assistant U.S. Attorneys, and Criminal Division attorneys.

9-21.990 Continuing Protection Responsibilities

Witnesses in the Program undertake the duty of providing testimony in criminal investigations and trials. Protection will be provided during the performance of those duties. After the testimony is completed and any relocation is accomplished, the government will have no further obligations to the witness except that if there is clear evidence that the witness is in immediate jeopardy arising out of the former cooperation, through no fault of the witness, further protective services will be provided.

9-21.1000 Arrests of Relocated Witnesses

In accordance with 18 U.S.C. §3521(b)(1)(H), the U.S. Marshals Service, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and the Office of Enforcement Operations have worked out a mechanism to, when warranted, securely disseminate protected witnesses' arrest records and information in response to legitimate law enforcement requests. It should be noted that no effort will be made to interfere with legitimate legal procedures.

9-21.1010 Results of Witnesses' Testimony

The Office of Enforcement Operations is required to submit a quarterly report to the Deputy Attorney General reflecting the results of the testimony provided by relocated witnesses. Prosecutors and agents will be asked to provide the following information on a monthly basis:

- A. Name of Witness;
- B. Name of case;
- C. Jurisdiction;
- D. Did the witness testify before grand jury? Trial? If the witness did not testify, why not?

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

- E. Status of witness in case;
  - 1. Defendant
  - 2. Unindicted co-conspirator
  - 3. Prisoner
  - 4. Victim
  - 5. Other
- F. Names of all defendants;
- G. Statutory violations charged;
- H. Date of indictment;
- I. Date of conviction;
- J. Disposition of the case as to each defendant;
- K. If convicted, details of sentence imposed on each defendant, including fines levied, etc.;
- L. Any information as to significant forfeitures or seizures accomplished because of assistance of witness; and
- M. Any information as to contributions made by this witness to the law enforcement effort, federal, state, and local, in your district and elsewhere, for example, furnishing probable cause for Title III's, search warrants, locations of fugitives, etc.

9-21.1020 Victims Compensation Fund--(18 U.S.C. §3525)

A fund has been established to compensate victims of crimes committed by participants in the Witness Security Program. In general, the fund will, up to a statutory limit, cover expenses for medical and/or funeral costs and lost wages that are not reimbursable from other sources. The fund does not apply to those crimes committed by participants who have been terminated from the Program by the U.S. Marshals Service. The Office of Enforcement Operations has been delegated the authority to administer the operations of the fund and should be contacted if information about the fund and the payment of claims is needed.

PSYCHOLOGICAL EVALUATION FORM

The Witness Security Reform Act of 1984 requires a psychological evaluation of each individual who is being considered for inclusion in the Witness Security Program.

The suitability of a witness for the Program must be determined before acceptance into the Program. One of the factors which must be considered in determining the suitability of the witness for the Program is the report of the psychological evaluation of the witness.

After a witness has been psychologically evaluated, the examining authority will prepare and submit a report to the Office of Enforcement Operations, Criminal Division, Department of Justice, so that a determination can be made as to the suitability of the witness for the Program.

I, _____, certify that I have read and understand the foregoing and that I voluntarily submit to this psychological evaluation. I also understand that my acceptance into the Witness Security Program is not solely dependent upon the results of this psychological evaluation.

I also certify that I have no objection if the contents of the report of my psychological evaluation are disclosed to others in connection with my consideration for the Witness Security Program.

9-27.000 PRINCIPLES OF FEDERAL PROSECUTION

9-27.001 Preface

The publication of these Principles of Federal Prosecution is a significant event in the history of federal criminal justice. It provides to federal prosecutors, for the first time in a single authoritative source, a statement of sound prosecutorial policies and practices for particularly important areas of their work. As such, it should promote the reasoned exercise of prosecutorial authority, and contribute to the fair, evenhanded administration of the federal criminal laws.

The manner in which federal prosecutors exercise their decision-making authority has far-reaching implications, both in terms of justice and effectiveness in law enforcement and in terms of the consequences for individual citizens. A determination to prosecute represents a policy judgment that the fundamental interests of society require the application of the criminal laws to a particular set of circumstances--recognizing both that serious violations of federal law must be prosecuted, and that prosecution entails profound consequences for the accused and the family of the accused whether or not a conviction ultimately results. Other prosecutorial decisions can be equally significant. Decisions, for example, regarding the specific charges to be brought, or concerning plea dispositions, effectively determine the range of sanctions that may be imposed for criminal conduct. Consent to pleas of nolo contendere may affect the success of related civil suits for recovery of damages. Also, the government's contribution during the sentencing process may assist the court in imposing a sentence that fairly accommodates the interests of society with those of convicted individuals.

These Principles of Federal Prosecution have been designed to assist in structuring the decision-making process of attorneys for the government. For the most part, they have been cast in general terms with a view to providing guidance rather than to mandating results. The intent is to assure regularity without regimentation, to prevent unwarranted disparity without sacrificing flexibility.

The availability of this statement of Principles to federal law enforcement officials and to the public should serve two important purposes: ensuring the fair and effective exercise of prosecutorial responsibility by attorneys for the government, and promoting confidence on the part of the public and individual defendants that important prosecutorial decisions will be made rationally and objectively on the merits of each case. The Principles will provide convenient reference points for the process of making prosecutorial decisions; they will facilitate the task of training new attorneys in the proper discharge of their duties; they will contribute to more effective management of the government's limited prosecutorial resources by promoting greater consistency among the prosecutorial activities of the 95 United States Attorney's offices and between their activities and the Department's law enforcement priorities; they will make possible better coordination of investigative and prosecutorial activity by enhancing the understanding of investigating departments and agencies of the considerations underlying prosecutorial decisions by the Department; and they will inform the public of the careful process by which prosecutorial decisions are made.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

Important though these Principles are to the proper operation of our federal prosecutorial system, the success of that system must rely ultimately on the character, integrity, sensitivity, and competence of those men and women who are selected to represent the public interest in the federal criminal justice process. It is with their help that these principles have been prepared, and it is with their efforts that the purposes of these principles will be achieved.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-27.100 GENERAL PROVISIONS

9-27.110 Purpose

A. The principles of federal prosecution set forth herein are intended to promote the reasoned exercise of prosecutorial discretion by attorneys for the government with respect to:

1. Initiating and declining prosecution;
2. Selecting charges;
3. Entering into plea agreements;
4. Opposing offers to plead nolo contendere;
5. Entering into non-prosecution agreements in return for cooperation; and
6. Participating in sentencing.

B. Comment

Under the federal criminal justice system, the prosecutor has wide latitude in determining when, whom, how, and even whether to prosecute for apparent violations of federal criminal law. The prosecutor's broad discretion in such areas as initiating or foregoing prosecutions, selecting or recommending specific charges, and terminating prosecutions by accepting guilty pleas has been recognized on numerous occasions by the courts. See, e.g., Oyler v. Boles, 368 U.S. 448 (1962); Newman v. United States, 382 F.2d 479 (D.C. Cir. 1967); Powell v. Katzenbach, 359 F. 2d 234 (D.C. Cir. 1965), cert. denied, 384 U.S. 906 (1966). This discretion exists by virtue of his/her status as a member of the Executive Branch, which is charged under the Constitution with ensuring that the laws of the United States be "faithfully executed". U.S. Const. art. II, §3. See Nader v. Saxbe, 497 F.2d 676, 679 n.18 (D.C. Cir. 1974).

Since federal prosecutors have great latitude in making crucial decisions concerning enforcement of a nationwide system of criminal justice, it is desirable, in the interest of the fair and effective administration of justice in the federal system, that all federal prosecutors be guided by a general statement of principles that summarizes appropriate considerations to be weighed, and desirable practices to be followed, in discharging their prosecutorial responsibilities.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Although these principles deal with the specific situations indicated, they should be read in the broader context of the basic responsibilities of federal attorneys: making certain that the general purposes of the criminal law--assurance of warranted punishment, deterrence of further criminal conduct, protection of the public from dangerous offenders, and rehabilitation of offenders--are adequately met, while making certain also that the rights of individuals are scrupulously protected.

9-27.120 Application

A. In carrying out criminal law enforcement responsibilities, each Department of Justice attorney should be guided by the principles set forth herein, and each U.S. Attorney and each Assistant Attorney General should ensure that such principles are communicated to the attorneys who exercise prosecutorial responsibility within his/her office or under his/her direction or supervision.

B. Comment

It is expected that each federal prosecutor will be guided by these principles in carrying out his/her criminal law enforcement responsibilities unless a modification of, or departure from, these principles has been authorized pursuant to USAM 9-27.140, infra. However, it is not intended that reference to these principles will require a particular prosecutorial decision in any given case. Rather, these principles are set forth solely for the purpose of assisting attorneys for the government in determining how best to exercise their authority in the performance of their duties.

9-27.130 Implementation

A. Each U.S. Attorney and responsible Assistant Attorney General should establish internal office procedures to ensure:

1. That prosecutorial decisions are made at an appropriate level of responsibility, and are made consistent with these principles; and

2. That serious, unjustified departures from the principles set forth herein are followed by such remedial action, including the imposition of disciplinary sanctions when warranted, as are deemed appropriate.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

B. Comment

Each U.S. Attorney and each Assistant Attorney General responsible for the enforcement of federal criminal law should supplement the guidance provided by the principles set forth herein by establishing appropriate internal procedures for his/her office. One purpose of such procedures should be to ensure consistency in the decisions within each office by regularizing the decision making process so that decisions are made at the appropriate level of responsibility. A second purpose, equally important, is to provide appropriate remedies for serious, unjustified departures from sound prosecutorial principles. The U.S. Attorney or Assistant Attorney General may also wish to establish internal procedures for appropriate review and documentation of decisions.

9-27.140 Modifications or Departures

A. A U.S. Attorney may modify or depart from the principles set forth herein as necessary in the interests of fair and effective law enforcement within the district. Any significant modification or departure contemplated as a matter of policy or regular practice must be approved by the appropriate Assistant Attorney General and the Deputy Attorney General.

B. Comment

Although these materials are designed to promote consistency in the application of federal criminal laws, they are not intended to produce rigid uniformity among federal prosecutors in all areas of the country at the expense of the fair administration of justice. Different offices face different conditions and have different requirements. In recognition of these realities, and in order to maintain the flexibility necessary to respond fairly and effectively to local conditions, each U.S. Attorney is specifically authorized to modify or depart from the principles set forth herein, as necessary in the interests of fair and effective law enforcement within the district. In situations in which a modification or departure is contemplated as a matter of policy or regular practice, the appropriate Assistant Attorney General and the Deputy Attorney General must approve the action before it is adopted.

9-27.150 Non-Litigability

A. The principles set forth herein, and internal office procedures adopted pursuant hereto, are intended solely for the guidance of attorneys for the government. They are not intended to, do not, and may not be relied upon to create a right or benefit, substantive or procedural, enforceable at law by a party to litigation with the United States.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

B. Comment

This statement of principles has been developed purely as a matter of internal Departmental policy and is being provided to federal prosecutors solely for their own guidance in performing their duties. Neither this statement of principles nor any internal procedures adopted by individual offices pursuant hereto creates any rights or benefits. By setting forth this fact explicitly, USAM 9-27.150, supra, is intended to foreclose efforts to litigate the validity of prosecutorial actions alleged to be at variance with these principles or not in compliance with internal office procedures that may be adopted pursuant hereto. In the event that an attempt is made to litigate any aspect of these principles, or to litigate any internal office procedures adopted pursuant to these materials, or to litigate the applicability of such principles or procedures to a particular case, the U.S. Attorney concerned should oppose the attempt and should notify the Department immediately.

9-27.200 INITIATING AND DECLINING PROSECUTION

9-27.210 Generally: Probable Cause Requirement

A. If the attorney for the government has probable cause to believe that a person has committed a federal offense within his/her jurisdiction, he/she should consider whether to:

1. Request or conduct further investigation;
2. Commence or recommend prosecution;
3. Decline prosecution and refer the matter for prosecutorial consideration in another jurisdiction;
4. Decline prosecution and initiate or recommend pre-trial diversion or other non-criminal disposition; or
5. Decline prosecution without taking other action.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

B. Comment

USAM 9-27.210 sets forth the courses of action available to the attorney for the government once he/she has probable cause to believe that a person has committed a federal offense within his/her jurisdiction. The probable cause standard is the same standard as that required for the issuance of an arrest warrant or a summons upon a compliant (see Rule 4(a), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure), for a magistrate's decision to hold a defendant to answer in the district court (see Rule 5.1(a), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure), and is the minimal requirement for indictment by a grand jury (see Branzburg v. Hayes, 408 U.S. 665, 686 (1972)). This is, of course, a threshold consideration only. Merely because this requirement can be met in a given case does not automatically warrant prosecution; further investigation may be warranted, and the prosecutor should still take into account all relevant considerations, including those described in the following provisions, in deciding upon his/her course of action. On the other hand, failure to meet the minimal requirement of probable cause is an absolute bar to initiating a federal prosecution, and in some circumstances may preclude reference to other prosecuting authorities or recourse to non-criminal sanctions as well.

9-27.220 Grounds for Commencing or Declining Prosecution

A. The attorney for the government should commence or recommend federal prosecution if he/she believes that the person's conduct constitutes a federal offense and that the admissible evidence will probably be sufficient to obtain and sustain a conviction, unless, in his/her judgment, prosecution should be declined because:

1. No substantial federal interest would be served by prosecution;
2. The person is subject to effective prosecution in another jurisdiction; or
3. There exists an adequate non-criminal alternative to prosecution.

B. Comment

USAM 9-27.220 expresses the principle that, ordinarily, the attorney for the government should initiate or recommend federal prosecution if he/she believes that the person's conduct constitutes a federal offense and that the admissible evidence probably will be sufficient to obtain and sustain a conviction. Evidence sufficient to sustain a conviction is required under Rule 29(a), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, to avoid a judgment of acquittal. Moreover, both as a matter of fundamental fairness and in the interest of the efficient administration of justice, no prosecution should be initiated against any person unless the government believes that the person probably will be found guilty by an unbiased trier of fact. In this connection, it should be noted that, when deciding whether to prosecute, the government attorney need not have in hand all the evidence upon which he/she intends to rely at trial: it is sufficient that he/she have a reasonable belief that such evidence will be available and admissible at the time of trial. Thus, for example, it would be proper to commence a prosecution though a key witness is out of the country, so long as the witness's presence at trial could be expected with reasonable certainty.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

The potential that--despite the law and the facts that create a sound, prosecutable case--the fact-finder is likely to acquit the defendant because of the unpopularity of some factor involved in the prosecution or because of the overwhelming popularity of the defendant or his/her cause, is not a factor prohibiting prosecution. For example, in a civil rights case or a case involving an extremely popular political figure, it might be clear that the evidence of guilt--viewed objectively by an unbiased fact-finder--would be sufficient to obtain and sustain a conviction, yet the prosecutor might reasonably doubt whether the jury would convict. In such a case, despite his/her negative assessment of the likelihood of a guilty verdict (based on factors extraneous to an objective view of the law and the facts), the prosecutor may properly conclude that it is necessary and desirable to commence or recommend prosecution and allow the criminal process to operate in accordance with its principles.

Merely because the attorney for the government believes that a person's conduct constitutes a federal offense and that the admissible evidence will be sufficient to obtain and sustain a conviction, does not mean that he/she necessarily should initiate or recommend prosecution: USAM 9-27.220 notes three situations in which the prosecutor may properly decline to take action nonetheless: when no substantial federal interest would be served by prosecution; when the person is subject to effective prosecution in another jurisdiction; and when there exists an adequate non-criminal alternative to prosecution. It is left to the judgment of the attorney for the government whether such a situation exists. In exercising that judgment, the attorney for the government should consult USAM 9-27.230, 9-27.240, or 9-27.250, infra, as appropriate.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-27.230 Substantial Federal Interest

A. In determining whether prosecution should be declined because no substantial federal interest would be served by prosecution, the attorney for the government should weigh all relevant considerations, including:

1. Federal law enforcement priorities;
2. The nature and seriousness of the offense;
3. The deterrent effect of prosecution;
4. The person's culpability in connection with the offense;
5. The person's history with respect to criminal activity;
6. The person's willingness to cooperate in the investigation or prosecution of others; and
7. The probable sentence or other consequences if the person is convicted.

B. Comment

USAM 9-27.230 lists factors that may be relevant in determining whether prosecution should be declined because no substantial federal interest would be served by prosecution in a case in which the person is believed to have committed a federal offense and the admissible evidence is expected to be sufficient to obtain and sustain a conviction. The list of relevant considerations is not intended to be all-inclusive. Obviously, not all of the factors will be applicable to every case, and in any particular case one factor may deserve more weight than it might in another case.

1. Federal Law Enforcement Priorities

Federal law enforcement resources and federal judicial resources are not sufficient to permit prosecution of every alleged offense over which federal jurisdiction exists. Accordingly, in the interest of allocating its limited resources as to achieve an effective nationwide law enforcement program, from time to time the Department establishes national investigative and prosecutorial priorities. These priorities are designed to focus federal law enforcement efforts on those matters within the federal jurisdiction that are most deserving of federal attention and are most likely to be handled effectively at the federal level. In addition, individual U.S.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Attorneys may establish their own priorities, within the national priorities, in order to concentrate their resources on problems of particular local or regional significance. In weighing the federal interest in a particular prosecution, the attorney for the government should give careful consideration to the extent to which prosecution would accord with established priorities.

2. Nature and Seriousness of Offense

It is important that limited federal resources not be wasted in prosecuting inconsequential cases or cases in which the violation is only technical. Thus, in determining whether a substantial federal interest exists that requires prosecution, the attorney for the government should consider the nature and seriousness of the offense involved. A number of factors may be relevant. One factor that is obviously of primary importance is the actual or potential impact of the offense on the community and on the victim.

The impact of an offense on the community in which it is committed can be measured in several ways: in terms of economic harm done to community interests; in terms of physical danger to the citizens or damage to public property; and in terms of erosion of the inhabitants' peace of mind and sense of security. In assessing the seriousness of the offense in these terms, the prosecutor may properly weigh such questions as whether the violation is technical or relatively inconsequential in nature, and what the public attitude is toward prosecution under the circumstances of the case. The public may be indifferent, or even opposed, to enforcement of the controlling statute, whether on substantive grounds, or because of a history of non-enforcement, or because the offense involves essentially a minor matter of private concern and the victim is disinterested in having it pursued. On the other hand, the nature and circumstances of the offense, the identity of the offender or the victim, or the attendant publicity, may be such as to create strong public sentiment in favor of prosecution. While public interest, or lack thereof, deserves the prosecutor's careful attention, it should not be used to justify a decision to prosecute, or to take other action, that cannot be supported on other grounds. Public and professional responsibility sometimes will require the choosing of a particularly unpopular course.

Economic, physical, and psychological considerations are also important in assessing the impact of the offense on the victim. In this connection, it is appropriate for the prosecutor to take into account such matters as the victim's age or health, and whether full or partial restitution has been made. Care should be taken in weighing the matter of restitution, however, to ensure against contributing to an impression that an offender can escape prosecution merely by returning the spoils of his/her crime.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

3. Deterrent Effect of Prosecution

Deterrence of criminal conduct, whether it be criminal activity generally or a specific type of criminal conduct, is one of the primary goals of the criminal law. This purpose should be kept in mind, particularly when deciding whether a prosecution is warranted for an offense that appears to be relatively minor; some offenses, although seemingly not of great importance by themselves, if commonly committed would have a substantial cumulative impact on the community.

4. The Person's Culpability

Although the prosecutor has sufficient evidence of guilt, it is nevertheless appropriate for him/her to give consideration to the degree of the person's culpability in connection with the offense, both in the abstract and in comparison with any others involved in the offense. If, for example, the person was a relatively minor participant in a criminal enterprise conducted by others, or his/her motive was worthy, and no other circumstances require prosecution, the prosecutor might reasonably conclude that some course other than prosecution would be appropriate.

5. The Person's Criminal History

If a person is known to have a prior conviction or is reasonably believed to have engaged in criminal activity at an earlier time, this should be considered in determining whether to initiate or recommend federal prosecution. In this connection, particular attention should be given to the nature of the person's prior criminal involvement, when it occurred, its relationship if any to the present offense, and whether he/she previously avoided prosecution as a result of an agreement not to prosecute in return for cooperation or as a result of an order compelling his/her testimony. By the same token, a person's lack of prior criminal involvement or his/her previous cooperation with the law enforcement officials should be given due consideration in appropriate cases.

6. The Person's Willingness to Cooperate

A person's willingness to cooperate in the investigation or prosecution of others is another appropriate consideration in the determination whether a federal prosecution should be undertaken. Generally speaking, a willingness to cooperate should not, by itself, relieve a person of criminal liability. There may be some cases, however, in which the value of a person's cooperation clearly outweighs the federal interest in prosecuting him/her. These matters are discussed more fully below, in connection with plea agreements and non-prosecution agreements in return for cooperation.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

7. The Person's Personal Circumstances

In some cases, the personal circumstances of an accused may be relevant in determining whether to prosecute or to take other action. Some circumstances peculiar to the accused, such as extreme youth, advanced age, or mental or physical impairment, may suggest that prosecution is not the most appropriate response to his/her offense; other circumstances, such as the fact that the accused occupied a position of trust or responsibility which he/she violated in committing the offense, might weigh in favor of prosecution.

8. The Probable Sentence

In assessing the strength of the federal interest in prosecution, the attorney for the government should consider the sentence, or other consequence, that is likely to be imposed if prosecution is successful, and whether such a sentence or other consequence would justify the time and effort of prosecution. If the offender is already subject to a substantial sentence, or is already incarcerated, as a result of a conviction for another offense, the prosecutor should weigh the likelihood that another conviction will result in a meaningful addition to his/her sentence, might otherwise have a deterrent effect, or is necessary to ensure that the offender's record accurately reflects the extent of his/her criminal conduct. For example, it might be desirable to commence a bail-jumping prosecution against a person who already has been convicted of another offense so that law enforcement personnel and judicial officers who encounter him/her in the future will be aware of the risk of releasing him/her on bail. On the other hand, if the person is on probation or parole as a result of an earlier conviction, the prosecutor should consider whether the public interest might better be served by instituting a proceeding for violation of probation or revocation of parole, than by commencing a new prosecution. The prosecutor should also be alert to the desirability of instituting prosecution to prevent the running of the statute of limitations and to preserve the availability of a basis for an adequate sentence if there appears to be a chance that an offender's prior conviction may be reversed on appeal or collateral attack. Finally, if a person previously has been prosecuted in another jurisdiction for the same offense or a closely related offense, the attorney for the government should consult existing departmental policy statements on the subject of "successive prosecution" or "dual prosecution," depending on whether the earlier prosecution was federal or nonfederal (see USAM 9-2.142).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

Just as there are factors that it is appropriate to consider in determining whether a substantial federal interest would be served by prosecution in a particular case, there are considerations that deserve no weight and should not influence the decision. These include the time and resources expended in federal investigation of the case. No amount of investigative effort warrants commencing a federal prosecution that is not fully justified on other grounds.

9-27.240 Prosecution in Another Jurisdiction

A. In determining whether prosecution should be declined because the person is subject to effective prosecution in another jurisdiction, the attorney for the government should weigh all relevant considerations, including:

1. The strength of the other jurisdiction's interest in prosecution;
2. The other jurisdiction's ability and willingness to prosecute effectively; and
3. The probable sentence or other consequences if the person is convicted in the other jurisdiction.

B. Comment

In many instances, it may be possible to prosecute criminal conduct in more than one jurisdiction. Although there may be instances in which a federal prosecutor may wish to consider deferring to prosecution in another federal district, in most instances the choice will probably be between federal prosecution and prosecution by state or local authorities. USAM 9-27.240 sets forth three general considerations to be taken into account in determining whether a person is likely to be prosecuted effectively in another jurisdiction: the strength of the jurisdiction's interest in prosecution; its ability and willingness to prosecute effectively; and the probable sentence or other consequences if the person is convicted. As indicated with respect to the considerations listed in paragraph 3, these factors are illustrative only, and the attorney for the government should also consider any others that appear relevant to him/her in a particular case.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

1. The Strength of the Jurisdiction's Interest

The attorney for the government should consider the relative federal and state characteristics of the criminal conduct involved. Some offenses, even though in violation of federal law, are of particularly strong interest to the authorities of the state or local jurisdiction in which they occur, either because of the nature of the offense, the identity of the offender or victim, the fact that the investigation was conducted primarily by state or local investigators, or some other circumstance. Whatever the reason, when it appears that the federal interest in prosecution is less substantial than the interest of state or local authorities, consideration should be given to referring the case to those authorities rather than commencing or recommending a federal prosecution.

2. Ability and Willingness to Prosecute Effectively

In assessing the likelihood of effective prosecution in another jurisdiction, the attorney for the government should also consider the intent of the authorities in that jurisdiction and whether that jurisdiction has the prosecutorial and judicial resources necessary to undertake prosecution promptly and effectively. Other relevant factors might be legal or evidentiary problems that might attend prosecution in the other jurisdiction. In addition, the federal prosecutor should be alert to any local conditions, attitudes, relationships, or other circumstances that might cast doubt on the likelihood of the state or local authorities conducting a thorough and successful prosecution.

3. Probable Sentence Upon Conviction

The ultimate measure of the potential for effective prosecution in another jurisdiction is the sentence, or other consequence, that is likely to be imposed if the person is convicted. In considering this factor, the attorney for the government should bear in mind not only the statutory penalties in the jurisdiction and sentencing patterns in similar cases, but also the particular characteristics of the offense or of the offender that might be relevant to sentencing. He/she should also be alert to the possibility that a conviction under state law may in some cases result in collateral consequences for the defendant, such as disbarment, that might not follow upon a conviction under federal law.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-27.250 Non-Criminal Alternatives to Prosecution

A. In determining whether prosecution should be declined because there exists an adequate non-criminal alternative to prosecution, the attorney for the government should consider all relevant factors, including:

1. The sanctions available under the alternative means of disposition;
2. The likelihood that an appropriate sanction will be imposed; and
3. The effect of non-criminal disposition on federal law enforcement interests.

B. Comment

When a person has committed a federal offense, it is important that the law respond promptly, fairly, and effectively. This does not mean, however, that a criminal prosecution must be initiated. In recognition of the fact that resort to the criminal process is not necessarily the only appropriate response to serious forms of antisocial activity, Congress and state legislatures have provided civil and administrative remedies for many types of conduct that may also be subject to criminal sanction. Examples of such non-criminal approaches include civil tax proceedings; civil actions under the securities, customs, antitrust, or other regulatory laws; and reference of complaints to licensing authorities or to professional organizations such as bar associations. Another potentially useful alternative to prosecution in some cases is pre-trial diversion (see USAM 1-12.000).

Attorneys for the government should familiarize themselves with these alternatives and should consider pursuing them if they are available in a particular case. Although on some occasions they should be pursued in addition to the criminal law procedures on other occasions they can be expected to provide an effective substitute for criminal prosecution. In weighing the adequacy of such an alternative in a particular case, the prosecutor should consider the nature and severity of the sanctions that could be imposed, the likelihood that an adequate sanction would in fact be imposed, and the effect of such a non-criminal disposition on federal law enforcement interests. It should be noted that referrals for non-criminal disposition, other than to Civil Division attorneys or other attorneys for the government, may not include the transfer of grand jury material unless an order under Rule 6(e), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, has been obtained.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-27.260 Impermissible Considerations

A. In determining whether to commence or recommend prosecution or take other action, the attorney for the government should not be influenced by:

1. The person's race; religion; sex; national origin; or political association, activities, or beliefs;
2. His/her own personal feelings concerning the person, the person's associates, or the victim; or
3. The possible effect of his/her decision on his/her own professional or personal circumstances.

B. Comment

USAM 9-27.260 sets forth various matters that plainly should not influence the determination whether to initiate or recommend prosecution or take other action. They are listed here not because it is anticipated that any attorney for the government might allow them to affect his/her judgment, but in order to make clear that federal prosecutors will not be influenced by such improper considerations. Of course, in a case in which a particular characteristic listed in subparagraph (1) is pertinent to the offense (for example, in an immigration case the fact that the offender is not a United States national, or in a civil rights case the fact that the victim and the offender are of different races), the provision would not prohibit the prosecutor from considering it for the purpose intended by the Congress.

9-27.270 Records of Prosecutions Declined

A. Whenever the attorney for the government declines to commence or recommend federal prosecution, he/she should ensure that his/her decision and the reasons therefore are communicated to the investigating agency involved and to any other interested agency, and are reflected in the files of his/her office.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

B. Comment

USAM 9-27.270 is intended primarily to ensure an adequate record of disposition of matters that are brought to the attention of the government attorney for possible criminal prosecution, but that do not result in federal prosecution. When prosecution is declined in serious cases on the understanding that action will be taken by other authorities, appropriate steps should be taken to ensure that the matter receives their attention and to ensure coordination or follow-up. This might be done, for example, through the appropriate Federal-State Law Enforcement Committee.

9-27.300 SELECTING CHARGES

9-27.310 Charging Most Serious Offenses

A. Except as hereafter provided, the attorney for the government should charge, or should recommend that the grand jury charge, the most serious offense that is consistent with the nature of the defendant's conduct, and that is likely to result in a sustainable conviction.

B. Comment

Once it has been determined to initiate prosecution, either by filing a complaint or an information, or by seeking an indictment from the grand jury, the attorney for the government must determine what charges to file or recommend. When the conduct in question consists of a single criminal act, or when there is only one applicable statute, this is not a difficult task. Typically, however, a defendant will have committed more than one criminal act and his/her conduct may be prosecuted under more than one statute. Moreover, selection of charges may be complicated further by the fact that different statutes have different proof requirements and provide substantially different penalties. In such cases, considerable care is required to ensure selection of the proper charge or charges. In addition to reviewing the concerns that prompted the decision to prosecute in the first instance, particular attention should be given to the need to ensure that the prosecution will be both fair and effective.

At the outset, the attorney for the government should bear in mind that at trial he/she will have to produce admissible evidence sufficient to obtain and sustain a conviction or else the government will suffer a dismissal. For this reason, he/she should not include in an information or recommend in an indictment charges that he/she cannot reasonably expect to prove beyond a reasonable doubt by legally sufficient evidence at trial.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

In connection with the evidentiary basis for the charges selected, the prosecutor should also be particularly mindful of the different requirements of proof under different statutes covering similar conduct. For example, the bribery provisions of 18 U.S.C. §201 require proof of "corrupt intent," while the "gratuity" provisions do not. Similarly, the "two witness" rule applies to perjury prosecutions under 18 U.S.C. §1621 but not under 18 U.S.C. §1623.

USAM 9-27.310 expresses the principle that the defendant should be charged with the most serious offense that is encompassed by his/her conduct and that is likely to result in a sustainable conviction. Ordinarily, this will be the offense for which the most severe penalty is provided by law. This principle provides the framework for ensuring equal justice in the prosecution of federal criminal offenders. It guarantees that every defendant will start from the same position, charged with the most serious criminal act he/she commits. Of course, he/she may also be charged with other criminal acts (as provided in USAM 9-27.320, infra), if the proof and the government's legitimate law enforcement objectives warrant additional charges.

In assessing the likelihood that a charge of the most serious offense will result in a sustainable conviction, the attorney for the government should bear in mind some of the less predictable attributes of those rare federal offenses that carry a mandatory, minimum term of imprisonment. In many instances, the term the legislature has specified certainly would not be viewed as inappropriate. In other instances, however, unusually mitigating circumstances may make the specified penalty appear so out of proportion to the seriousness of defendant's conduct that the jury or judge in assessing guilt, or the judge in ruling on the admissibility of evidence, may be influenced by the inevitable consequence of conviction. In such cases, the attorney for the government should consider whether charging a different offense that reaches the same conduct, but that does not carry a mandatory penalty, might not be more appropriate under the circumstances.

The exception noted at the beginning of USAM 9-27.310 refers to pre-charge plea agreements provided for in USAM 9-27.330, infra.

9-27.320 Additional Charges

A. Except as hereafter provided, the attorney for the government should also charge, or recommend that the grand jury charge, other offenses only when, in his/her judgment, additional charges:

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

1. Are necessary to ensure that the information or indictment:
  - a. Adequately reflects the nature and extent of the criminal conduct involved; and
  - b. Provides the basis for an appropriate sentence under all the circumstances of the case; or
2. Will significantly enhance the strength of the government's case against the defendant or a codefendant.

B. Comment

It is important to the fair and efficient administration of justice in the federal system that the government bring as few charges as are necessary to ensure that justice is done. The bringing of unnecessary charges not only complicates and prolongs trials, it constitutes an excessive--and potentially unfair--exercise of power. To ensure appropriately limited exercises of the charging power, USAM 9-27.320 outlines three general situations in which additional charges may be brought: when necessary adequately to reflect the nature and extent of the criminal conduct involved; when necessary to provide the basis for an appropriate sentence under all the circumstances of the case; and when an additional charge or charges would significantly strengthen the case against the defendant or a codefendant.

1. Nature and Extent of Criminal Conduct

Apart from evidentiary considerations, the prosecutor's initial concern should be to select charges that adequately reflect the nature and extent of the criminal conduct involved. This means that the charges selected should fairly describe both the kind and scope of unlawful activity; should be legally sufficient; should provide notice to the public of the seriousness of the conduct involved; and should negate any impression that, after committing one offense, an offender can commit others with impunity.

2. Basis for Sentencing

Proper charge selection also requires consideration of the end result of successful prosecution--the imposition of an appropriate sentence under all the circumstances of the case. In order to achieve this result, it ordinarily should not be necessary to charge a person with every offense for which he/she may technically be liable (indeed, charging every such offense may in some cases be perceived as an unfair attempt to induce a guilty plea). What is important is that the person be charged in such a manner that, if he/she is convicted, the court may impose an appropriate sentence. The phrase "all the circumstances of the case" is intended to include any factors that may be relevant to the sentencing decision. Examples of such factors are the basic purposes of sentencing (deterrence, protection of the public, just punishment, and rehabilitation); the penalty provisions of the applicable statutes; the gravity of the offense in terms of its actual or potential impact, or in terms of the defendant's motive; mitigating or aggravating factors such as age, health, restitution, prior criminal activity, and cooperation with law enforcement officials; and any other legitimate legislative, judicial, prosecutorial, or penal or correctional concern, including special sentencing provisions for certain classes of offenders and other post-conviction consequences such as disbarment or disqualification from public office or private position.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

3. Effect on Government's Case

When considering whether to include a particular charge in the indictment or information, the attorney for the government should bear in mind the possible effects of inclusion or exclusion of the charge on the government's case against the defendant or a codefendant. If the evidence is available, it is proper to consider the tactical advantages of bringing certain charges. For example, in a case in which a substantive offense was committed pursuant to an unlawful agreement, inclusion of a conspiracy count is permissible and may be desirable to ensure the introduction of all relevant evidence at trial. Similarly, it might be important to include a perjury or false statement count in an indictment charging other offenses, in order to give the jury a complete picture of the defendant's criminal conduct. Failure to include appropriate charges for which the proof is sufficient may not only result in the exclusion of relevant evidence, but may impair the prosecutor's ability to prove a coherent case, and lead to jury confusion as well. In this connection, it is important to remember that, in multi-defendant cases, the presence or absence of a particular charge against one defendant may affect the strength of the case against another defendant.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

In short, when the evidence exists, the charges should be structured so as to permit proof of the strongest case possible without undue burden on the administration of justice.

9-27.330 Pre-Charge Plea Agreements

A. The attorney for the government may file or recommend a charge or charges without regard to the provisions of USAM 9-27.310 and 9-27.320, supra, if such charge or charges are the subject of a pre-charge plea agreement entered into under the provisions of USAM 9-27.400, infra.

B. Comment

USAM 9-27.330 addresses the situation in which there is a pre-charge agreement with the defendant that he/she will plead guilty to a certain agreed-upon charge or charges. In such a situation, the charge or charges to be filed or recommended to the grand jury may be selected without regard to the provisions of USAM 9-27.310 and 9-27.320, supra.

Before filing or recommending charges pursuant to a pre-charge plea agreement, the attorney for the government should consult the plea agreement provisions of USAM 9-27.400, infra, and should give special attention to USAM 9-27.430, infra, thereof, relating to the selection of charges to which a defendant should be required to plead guilty.

9-27.410 Plea Agreements Generally

A. The attorney for the government may, in an appropriate case, enter into an agreement with a defendant that, upon the defendant's plea of guilty or nolo contendere to a charged offense or to a lesser or related offense, he/she will move for dismissal of other charges, take a certain position with respect to the sentence to be imposed, or take other action.

B. Comment

USAM 9-27.410 permits, in appropriate cases, the disposition of federal criminal charges pursuant to plea agreements between defendants and government attorneys. Such negotiated dispositions should be distinguished from situations in which a defendant pleads guilty or nolo contendere to fewer than all counts of an information or indictment in the absence of any agreement with the government. Only the former type of disposition is covered by the provisions of USAM 9-27.400.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Negotiated plea dispositions are explicitly sanctioned by Rule 11 (e)(1), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, which provides that:

The attorney for the government and the attorney for the defendant or the defendant when acting pro se may engage in discussions with a view toward reaching an agreement that, upon the entering of a plea of guilty or nolo contendere to a charged offense or to a lesser or related offense, the attorney for the government will do any of the following:

- (A) Move for dismissal of other charges; or
- (B) Make a recommendation, or agree not to oppose the defendant's request, for a particular sentence, with the understanding that such recommendation or request shall not be binding upon the court; or
- (C) Agree that a specific sentence is the appropriate disposition of the case.

Three types of plea agreements are encompassed by the language of USAM 9-27.410, agreements whereby, in return for the defendant's plea to a charged offense or to a lesser or related offense, other charges are dismissed ("charge agreements"); agreements pursuant to which the government takes a certain position regarding the sentence to be imposed ("sentence agreements"); and agreements that combine a plea with a dismissal of charges and an undertaking by the prosecutor concerning the government's position at sentencing ("mixed agreements").

It should be noted that the provision relating to "charge agreements" is not limited to situations in which the defendant is the subject of charges to be dismissed. Although this will usually be the case, there may be situations in which a third party would be the beneficiary of the dismissal of charges. For example, one family member may offer to plead guilty in return for the termination of a prosecution pending against another family member, or a corporation may tender a plea in satisfaction of its own liability as well as that of one of its officers. Although plea agreements of this sort are permitted under paragraph 1 they can easily be misunderstood as manifestations of a double standard of justice. Accordingly, they should not be entered into routinely, but only after careful consideration of all relevant factors, including those specifically set forth in USAM 9-27.420, infra.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The language of USAM 9-27.410 with respect to "sentence agreements" is intended to cover the entire range of positions that the government might wish to take at the time of sentencing. Among the options are: taking no position regarding the sentence; not opposing the defendant's request; requesting a specific type of sentence (e.g., a fine, probation, or sentencing under a specific statute such as the Youth Corrections Act), a specific fine or term of imprisonment, or not more than a specific fine or term of imprisonment; and requesting concurrent rather than consecutive sentences.

The concession required by the government as part of a plea agreement, whether it be a "charge agreement," a "sentence agreement," or a "mixed agreement," should be weighed by the responsible government attorney in the light of the probable advantages and disadvantages of the plea disposition proposed in the particular case. Particular care should be exercised in considering whether to enter into a plea agreement pursuant to which the defendant will enter a nolo contendere plea. As discussed in USAM 9-27.500, infra, there are serious objections to such pleas and they should be opposed unless the responsible Assistant Attorney General concludes that the circumstances are so unusual that acceptance of such a plea would be in the public interest.

9-27.420 Considerations to be Weighed

A. In determining whether it would be appropriate to enter into a plea agreement, the attorney for the government should weigh all relevant considerations, including:

1. The defendant's willingness to cooperate in the investigation or prosecution of others;
2. The defendant's history with respect to criminal activity;
3. The nature and seriousness of the offense or offenses charged;
4. The defendant's remorse or contrition and his/her willingness to assume responsibility for his/her conduct;
5. The desirability of prompt and certain disposition of the case;
6. The likelihood of obtaining a conviction at trial;

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

7. The probable effect on witnesses;
8. The probable sentence or other consequences if the defendant is convicted;
9. The public interest in having the case tried rather than disposed of by a guilty plea;
10. The expense of trial and appeal; and
11. The need to avoid delay in the disposition of other pending cases.

B. Comment

USAM 9-27.420 sets forth some of the appropriate considerations to be weighed by the attorney for the government in deciding whether to enter into a plea agreement with a defendant pursuant to the provisions of Rule 11(e), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. The provision is not intended to suggest the desirability or lack of desirability of a plea agreement in any particular case or to be construed as a reflection on the merits of any plea agreement that actually may be reached; its purpose is solely to assist attorneys for the government in exercising their judgment as to whether some sort of plea agreement would be appropriate in a particular case. Government attorneys should consult the investigating agency involved in any case in which it would be helpful to have its views concerning the relevance of particular factors or the weight they deserve.

1. Defendant's Cooperation

The defendant's willingness to provide timely and useful cooperation as part of his/her plea agreement should be given serious consideration. The weight it deserves will vary, of course, depending on the nature and value of the cooperation offered and whether the same benefit can be obtained without having to make the charge or sentence concession that would be involved in a plea agreement. In many situations, for example, all necessary cooperation in the form of testimony can be obtained through a compulsion order under Title 18, U.S.C. §§6001-6003. In such cases, that approach should be attempted unless, under the circumstances, it would seriously interfere with securing the person's conviction.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

2. Defendant's Criminal History

One of the principal arguments against the practice of plea-bargaining is that it results in leniency that reduces the deterrent impact of the law and leads to recidivism on the part of some offenders. Although this concern is probably most relevant in non-federal jurisdictions that must dispose of large volumes of routine cases with inadequate resources, nevertheless it should be kept in mind by federal prosecutors, especially when dealing with repeat offenders or "career criminals." Particular care should be taken in the case of a defendant with a prior criminal record to ensure that society's need for protection is not sacrificed in the process of arriving at a plea disposition. In this connection, it is proper for the government attorney to consider not only the defendant's past convictions, but also facts of other criminal involvement not resulting in conviction. By the same token, of course, it is also proper to consider a defendant's absence of past criminal involvement and his/her past cooperation with law enforcement officials.

3. Nature and Seriousness of Offense Charged

Important considerations in determining whether to enter into a plea agreement may be the nature and seriousness of the offense or offenses charged. In weighing these factors, the attorney for the government should bear in mind the interests sought to be protected by the statute defining the offense (e.g., the national defense, constitutional rights, the governmental process, personal safety, public welfare, or property), as well as nature and degree of harm caused or threatened to those interests and any attendant circumstances that aggravate or mitigate the seriousness of the offense in the particular case.

4. Defendant's Attitude

A defendant may demonstrate apparently genuine remorse or contrition, and a willingness to take responsibility for his/her criminal conduct by, for example, efforts to compensate the victim for injury or loss, or otherwise to ameliorate the consequences of his/her acts. These are factors that bear upon the likelihood of his/her repetition of the conduct involved and that may properly be considered in deciding whether a plea agreement would be appropriate.

It is particularly important that the defendant not be permitted to enter a guilty plea under circumstances that will allow him/her later to proclaim lack of culpability or even complete innocence.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Such consequences can be avoided only if the court and the public are adequately informed of the nature and scope of the illegal activity and of the defendant's complicity and culpability. To this end, the attorney for the government is strongly encouraged to enter into a plea agreement only with the defendant's assurance that he/she will admit the facts of the offense and of his/her culpable participation therein. A plea agreement may be entered into in the absence of such an assurance, but only if the defendant is willing to accept without contest a statement by the government in open court of the facts it could prove to demonstrate his/her guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. Except as provided in USAM 9-27.440, infra, the attorney for the government should not enter into a plea agreement with a defendant who admits his/her guilt but disputes an essential element of the government's case.

5. Prompt Disposition

In assessing the value of prompt disposition of a criminal case, the attorney for the government should consider the timing of a proffered plea. A plea offer by a defendant on the eve of trial after the case has been fully prepared is hardly as advantageous from the standpoint of reducing public expense as one offered months or weeks earlier. In addition, a last-minute plea adds to the difficulty of scheduling cases efficiently and may even result in wasting the prosecutorial and judicial time reserved for the aborted trial. For these reasons, government attorneys should make clear to defense counsel at an early stage in the proceedings that, if there are to be any plea discussions, they must be concluded prior to a certain date well in advance of the trial date. However, avoidance of unnecessary trial preparation and scheduling disruptions are not the only benefits to be gained from prompt disposition of a case by means of a guilty plea. Such a disposition also saves the government and the court the time and expense of trial and appeal. In addition, a plea agreement facilitates prompt imposition of sentence, thereby promoting the overall goals of the criminal justice system. Thus, occasionally it may be appropriate to enter into a plea agreement even after the usual time for making such agreements has passed.

6. Likelihood of Conviction

The trial of a criminal case inevitably involves risks and uncertainties, both for the prosecution and for the defense. Many factors, not all of which can be anticipated, can affect the outcome. To the extent that these factors can be identified, they should be considered in deciding whether to accept a plea or go to trial. In this connection, the prosecutor should weigh the strength of the government's case relative to the anticipated defense case, bearing in mind legal and evidentiary problems that might be expected, as well as the importance of the credibility of witnesses. However, although it is proper to consider factors bearing upon the likelihood of conviction in deciding whether to enter into a plea agreement, it obviously is improper for the prosecutor to attempt to dispose of a case by means of a plea agreement if he/she is not satisfied that the legal standards for guilt are met.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

7. Effect on Witnesses

Although the public has "the right to every person's evidence," attorneys for the government should bear in mind that it is often burdensome for witnesses to appear at trial and that, sometimes, to do so may cause them serious embarrassment or even place them in jeopardy of physical or economic retaliation. The possibility of such adverse consequences to witnesses should not be overlooked in determining whether to go to trial or attempt to reach a plea agreement. Another possibility that may have to be considered is revealing the identity of informants. When an informant testifies at trial, his/her identity and relationship to the government become matters of public record. As a result, in addition to possible adverse consequences to the informant, there is a strong likelihood that the informant's usefulness in other investigations will be seriously diminished or destroyed. These are considerations that should be discussed with the investigating agency involved, as well as with any other agencies known to have an interest in using the informant in their investigations.

8. Probable Sentence

In determining whether to enter into a plea agreement, the attorney for the government may properly consider the probable outcome of the prosecution in terms of the sentence or other consequences for the defendant in the event that a plea agreement is reached. If the proposed agreement is a "sentence agreement" or a "mixed agreement," the prosecutor should realize that the position he/she agrees to take with respect to sentencing may have a significant effect on the sentence that is actually imposed. If the proposed agreement is a "charge agreement," the prosecutor should bear in mind the extent to which a plea to fewer or lesser offenses may reduce the sentence that otherwise could be imposed. In either event, it is important that the attorney for the government be aware of the need to preserve the basis for an appropriate sentence under all the circumstances of the case.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9. Trial Rather Than Plea

There may be situations in which the public interest might better be served by having a case tried rather than by having it disposed of by means of a guilty plea. These include situations in which it is particularly important to permit a clear public understanding that "justice is done" through exposing the exact nature of the defendant's wrong-doing at trial, or in which a plea agreement might be misconstrued to the detriment of public confidence in the criminal justice system. For this reason, the prosecutor should be careful not to place undue emphasis on factors which favor disposition of a case pursuant to a plea agreement.

10. Expense of Trial and Appeal

In assessing the expense of trial and appeal that would be saved by a plea disposition, the attorney for the government should consider not only such monetary costs as juror and witness fees, but also the time spent by judges, prosecutors, and law enforcement personnel who may be needed to testify or provide other assistance at trial. In this connection, the prosecutor should bear in mind the complexity of the case, the number of trial days and witnesses required, and any extraordinary expenses that might be incurred such as the cost of sequestering the jury.

11. Prompt Disposition of Other Cases

A plea disposition in one case may facilitate the prompt disposition of other cases, including cases in which prosecution might otherwise be declined. This may occur simply because prosecutorial, judicial, or defense resources will become available for use in other cases, or because a plea by one of several defendants may have a "domino effect," leading to pleas by other defendants. In weighing the importance of these possible consequences, the attorney for the government should consider the state of the criminal docket and the speedy trial requirements in the district, the desirability of handling a larger volume of criminal cases, and the workloads of prosecutors, judges, and defense attorneys in the district.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-27.430 Selecting Plea Agreement Charges

A. If a prosecution is to be concluded pursuant to a plea agreement, the defendant should be required to plead to a charge or charges:

1. That bears a reasonable relationship to the nature and extent of his/her criminal conduct;
2. That has an adequate factual basis;
3. That makes likely the imposition of an appropriate sentence under all the circumstances of the case; and
4. That does not adversely affect the investigation or prosecution of others.

B. Comment

USAM 9-27.430 sets forth the considerations that should be taken into account in selecting the charge or charges to which a defendant should be required to plead guilty once it has been decided to dispose of the case pursuant to a plea agreement. The considerations are essentially the same as those governing the selection of charges to be included in the original indictment or information.

1. Relationship to Criminal Conduct

The charge or charges to which a defendant pleads guilty should bear a reasonable relationship to the defendant's criminal conduct, both in nature and in scope. This principle covers such matters as the seriousness of the offense (as measured by its impact upon the community and the victim), not only in terms of the defendant's own conduct but also in terms of similar conduct by others, as well as the number of counts to which a plea should be required in cases involving offenses different in nature or in cases involving a series of similar offenses. In regard to the seriousness of the offense, the guilty plea should assure that the public record of conviction provides an adequate indication of the defendant's conduct. In many cases, this will probably require that the defendant plead to the most serious offense charged. With respect to the number of counts, the prosecutor should take care to assure that no impression is given that multiple offenses are likely to result in no greater a potential penalty than is a single offense.

The requirement that a defendant plead to a charge that bears a reasonable relationship to the nature and extent of his/her criminal conduct is not inflexible. There may be situations involving cooperating defendants in which considerations such as those discussed in USAM 9-27.600, infra, take precedence. Such situations should be approached cautiously, however. Unless the government has strong corroboration for the cooperating defendant's testimony, his/her credibility may be subject to successful impeachment if he/she is permitted to plead to an offense that appears unrelated in seriousness or scope to the charges against the defendants on trial. It is also doubly important in such situations for the prosecutor to ensure that the public record of the plea demonstrates the full extent of the defendant's involvement in the criminal activity giving rise to the prosecution.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

2. Factual Basis

The attorney for the government should also bear in mind the legal requirement that there be a factual basis for the charge or charges to which a guilty plea is entered. This requirement is intended to assure conviction after a guilty plea of a person who is not in fact guilty. Moreover, under Rule 11 (f), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, a court may not enter a judgment upon a guilty plea "without making such inquiry as shall satisfy it that there is a factual basis for the plea." For this reason, it is essential that the charge or charges selected as the subject of a plea agreement be such as could be prosecuted independently of the plea under these principles. However, as noted infra, in cases in which Alford or nolo contendere pleas are tendered the attorney for the government may wish to make a stronger factual showing. In such cases there may remain some doubt as to the defendant's guilt even after the entry of his/her plea. Consequently, in order to avoid such a misleading impression, the government should ask leave of the court to make a proffer of the facts available to it that show the defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt.

3. Basis for Sentencing

In order to guard against inappropriate restriction of the court's sentencing options, the plea agreement should provide adequate scope for sentencing under all the circumstances of the case. To the extent that the plea agreement requires the government to take a position with respect to the sentence to be imposed, there should be little danger since the court will not be bound by the government's position. When a "charge agreement" is involved, however, the court will be limited to imposing the maximum term authorized by statute for the offense to which the guilty plea is entered. Thus, the prosecutor should take care to avoid a "charge agreement" that would unduly restrict the court's sentencing authority. In this connection, as in the initial selection of charges, the prosecutor should take into account the purposes of sentencing, the penalties provided in the applicable statutes, the gravity of the offense, any aggravating or mitigating factors, and any post conviction consequences to which the defendant may be subject. In addition, if restitution is appropriate under the circumstances of the case, a sufficient number of counts should be retained under the agreement to provide a basis for an adequate restitution order, since the court's authority to order restitution as part of the sentence it imposes is limited to the offenses for which the defendant is convicted, as opposed to all offenses that were committed. See 18 U.S.C. §3651; United States v. Buechler, 557 F.2d 1002, 1007 (3d Cir. 1977); USAM 9-16.210.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

4. Effect on Other Cases

In a multiple-defendant case, care must be taken to ensure that the disposition of the charges against one defendant does not adversely affect the investigation or prosecution of co-defendants. Among the possible adverse consequences to be avoided are the negative jury appeal that may result when relatively less culpable defendants are tried in the absence of a more culpable defendant or when a principal prosecution witness appears to be equally culpable as the defendants but has been permitted to plead to a significantly less serious offense; the possibility that one defendant's absence from the case will render useful evidence inadmissible at the trial of co-defendants; and the giving of questionable exculpatory testimony on behalf of the other defendants by the defendant who has pled guilty.

9-27.440 Plea Agreements When Defendant Denies Guilt

A. The attorney for the government should not, except with the approval of the Assistant Attorney General with supervisory responsibility over the subject matter, enter into a plea agreement if the defendant maintains his/her innocence with respect to the charge or charges to which he/she offers to plead guilty. In a case in which the defendant tenders a plea of guilty but denies that he/she has in fact committed the offense to which he/she offers to plead guilty, the attorney for the government should make an offer of proof of all facts known to the government to support the conclusion that the defendant is in fact guilty.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

B. Comment

USAM 9-27.440 concerns plea agreements involving "Alford" pleas--guilty pleas entered by defendants who nevertheless claim to be innocent. In North Carolina v. Alford, 400 U.S. 25 (1970), the Supreme Court held that the Constitution does not prohibit a court from accepting a guilty plea from a defendant who simultaneously maintains his/her innocence, so long as the plea is entered voluntarily and intelligently and there is a strong factual basis for it. The Court reasoned that there is no material difference between a plea of nolo contendere, where the defendant does not expressly admit his/her guilt, and a plea of guilty by a defendant who affirmatively denies his/her guilt.

Despite the constitutional validity of Alford pleas, such pleas should be avoided except in the most unusual circumstances, even if no plea agreement is involved and the plea would cover all pending charges. Such pleas are particularly undesirable when entered as part of an agreement with the government. Involvement by attorneys for the government in the inducement of guilty pleas by defendants who protest their innocence may create an appearance of prosecutorial overreaching. As one court put it, "the public might well not understand or accept the fact that a defendant who denied his guilt was nonetheless placed in a position of pleading guilty and going to jail." See United States v. Bednarski, 445 F.2d 364, 366 (1st Cir. 1971). Consequently, it is preferable to have a jury resolve the factual and legal dispute between the government and the defendant, rather than have government attorneys encourage defendants to plead guilty under circumstances that the public might regard as questionable or unfair. For this reason, government attorneys should not enter into Alford plea agreements without the approval of the responsible Assistant Attorney General.

Apart from refusing to enter into a plea agreement, however, the degree to which the Department can express its opposition to Alford pleas may be limited. Although a court may accept a proffered plea of nolo contendere "only after due consideration of the views of the parties and the interest of the public in the effective administration of justice" (Rule 11(b), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure), at least one court has concluded that it is abuse of discretion to refuse to accept a guilty plea "solely because the defendant does not admit the alleged facts of the crime." United States v. Gaskins, 485 F.2d 1046, 1048 (D.C. Cir. 1973); but see United States v. Bednarski, supra; United States v. Biscoe, 518 F.2d 95 (1st Cir. 1975). Nevertheless, government attorneys can and should discourage Alford pleas by refusing to agree to terminate prosecutions where an Alford plea is proffered to fewer than all of the charges pending. As is the case with guilty pleas generally, if such a plea to fewer than all the charges is tendered and accepted over the government's objection, the attorney for the government should proceed to trial on any remaining charges not barred on double jeopardy grounds unless the U.S. Attorney or, in cases handled by departmental attorneys, the responsible Assistant Attorney General, approves dismissal of those charges.

Government attorneys should also take full advantage of the opportunity afforded by Rule 11(f) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure in an Alford case to thwart the defendant's efforts to project a public image of innocence. Under Rule 11(f) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, the court must be satisfied that there is "a factual basis" for a guilty plea. However, the Rule does not require that the factual basis for the plea be provided only by the defendant. See United States v. Navedo, 516 F.2d 293 (2d Cir. 1975); Irizarry v. United States, 508 F.2d 960 (2d Cir. 1974); United States v. Davis, 516 F.2d 574 (7th Cir. 1975). Accordingly, attorneys for the government in Alford cases should endeavor to establish as strong a factual basis for the plea as possible not only to satisfy the requirement of Rule 11(f) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, but also to minimize the adverse effects of Alford pleas on public perceptions of the administration of justice.

9-27.450 Records of Plea Agreements

A. If a prosecution is to be terminated pursuant to a plea agreement, the attorney for the government should ensure that the case file contains a record of the agreed disposition, signed or initialed by the defendant or his/her attorney.

B. Comment

USAM 9-17.450 is intended to facilitate compliance with Rule 11, Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, and to provide a safeguard against misunderstandings that might arise concerning the terms of a plea agreement. Rule 11(e)(2), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, requires that a plea agreement be disclosed in open court (except upon a showing of good cause, in which case disclosure may be made in camera), while Rule 11(e)(3), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, requires that the disposition provided for in the agreement be embodied in the judgment and sentence. Compliance with these requirements will be facilitated if the agreement has been reduced to writing in advance, and the defendant will be precluded from successfully contesting the terms of the agreement at the time he/she pleads guilty, or at the time of sentencing, or at a later date. If time does not permit the preparation of a record of the plea agreement in advance, as when the plea disposition is agreed to on the morning of arraignment or trial, the attorney for the government should subsequently include in the case file a brief notation concerning the fact and terms of the agreement.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-27.500 OPPOSING OFFERS TO PLEAD NOLO CONTENDERE

9-17.510 Opposition Except in Unusual Circumstances

A. The attorney for the government should oppose the acceptance of a plea of nolo contendere unless the (Assistant Attorney General with supervisory responsibility over the subject matter) U.S. Attorney concludes that the circumstances of the case are so unusual that acceptance of such a plea would be in the public interest.

B. Comment

Rule 11(b), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, requires the court to consider "the views of the parties and the interest of the public in the effective administration of justice" before it accepts a plea of nolo contendere. Thus, it is clear that a criminal defendant has no absolute right to enter a nolo contendere plea. The Department has long attempted to discourage the disposition of criminal cases by means of nolo pleas. The basic objections to nolo pleas were expressed by Attorney General Herbert Brownell, Jr., in a departmental directive in 1953:

One of the factors which has tended to breed contempt for federal law enforcement in recent times has been the practice of permitting as a matter of course in many criminal indictments the plea of nolo contendere. While it may serve a legitimate purpose in a few extraordinary situations and where civil litigation is also pending, I can see no justification for it as an everyday practice, particularly where it is used to avoid certain indirect consequences of pleading guilty, such as loss of license or sentencing as a multiple offender. Uncontrolled use of the plea has led to shockingly low sentences and insignificant fines which are no deterrent to crime. As a practical matter it accomplished little that is useful even where the Government has civil litigation pending. Moreover, a person permitted to plead nolo contendere admits his guilt for the purpose of imposing punishment for his acts and yet, for all other purposes, and as far as the public is concerned, persists in his denial of wrongdoing. It is no wonder that the public regards consent to such a plea by the Government as an admission that it has only a technical case at most and that the whole proceeding was just a fiasco.

For these reasons, government attorneys have been instructed for more than twenty-five years not to consent to nolo pleas except in the most unusual circumstances, and to do so then only with departmental approval. However, despite continuing adherence to this policy by attorneys for the government, and despite the continuing validity of the policy's rationale, the federal criminal justice system continues to suffer from misuse of nolo contendere pleas, particularly in white collar crime cases.

As federal prosecutors focus more of their attention on white collar crime activities, greater numbers of defendants seek to dispose of the charges against them by means of nolo pleas, and the frequency with which such pleas are accepted by the courts is increasing. The acceptance of nolo pleas from affluent white collar defendants, as opposed to other types of defendants, lends credence to the view that a double standard of justice exists. Moreover, even though a white collar defendant whose nolo plea is accepted may not be sentenced more leniently than one who is required to plead guilty, such a defendant often persists in his/her protestations of innocence, maintaining that his/her plea was entered solely to avoid litigation and save business expense.

The continued adverse consequences to the criminal justice system of the misuse of nolo pleas--diminished respect for law, impairment of law enforcement efforts, and reduced deterrence--warrant re-examination of the government's response to such pleas. Heretofore, it was believed that a posture of non-consent by government attorneys would prevent the acceptance of nolo pleas except in extraordinary cases. Now the forthright expression of opposition is required. Accordingly, as stated in paragraph A above, federal prosecutors should henceforth oppose the acceptance of a nolo plea, unless the (responsible Assistant Attorney General) U.S. Attorney concludes that the circumstances are so unusual that acceptance of the plea would be in the public interest. Such a determination might be made, for example, in an unusually complex antitrust case if the only alternative to a protracted trial is acceptance of a nolo plea.

9-27.520 Offer of Proof

A. In any case in which a defendant seeks to enter a plea of nolo contendere, the attorney for the government should make an offer of proof of the facts known to the government to support the conclusion that the defendant has in fact committed the offense charged.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

B. Comment

If a defendant seeks to avoid admitting guilt by offering to plead nolo contendere, the attorney for the government should make an offer of proof of the facts known to the government to support the conclusion that the defendant has in fact committed the offense charged. This should be done even in the rare case in which the government does not oppose the entry of a nolo plea. In addition, as is the case with respect to guilty pleas, the attorney for the government should urge the court to require the defendant to admit publicly the facts underlying the criminal charges. These precautions should minimize the effectiveness of any subsequent efforts by the defendant to portray himself/herself as technically liable perhaps, but not seriously culpable.

9-27.530 Argument in Opposition

A. If a plea of nolo contendere is offered over the government's objection, the attorney for the government should state for the record why acceptance of the plea would not be in the public interest; and should oppose the dismissal of any charges to which the defendant does not plead nolo contendere.

B. Comment

When a plea of nolo contendere is offered over the government's objection, the prosecutor should take full advantage of Rule 11(b), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, to state for the record why acceptance of the plea would not be in the public interest. In addition to reciting the facts that could be proved to show the defendant's guilt, the prosecutor should bring to the court's attention whatever arguments exist for rejecting the plea. At the very least, such a forceful presentation should make it clear to the public that the government is unwilling to condone the entry of a special plea that may help the defendant avoid legitimate consequences of his/her guilt. If the nolo plea is offered to fewer than all charges, the prosecutor should also oppose the dismissal of the remaining charges.

9-27.600 ENTERING INTO NON-PROSECUTION AGREEMENTS IN RETURN FOR COOPERATION

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-27.610 Non-Prosecution Agreements Generally

A. Except as hereafter provided, the attorney for the government may, with supervisory approval, enter into a non-prosecution agreement in exchange for a person's cooperation when, in his/her judgment, the person's timely cooperation appears to be necessary to the public interest and other means of obtaining the desired cooperation are unavailable or would not be effective.

B. Comment

1. In many cases, it may be important to the success of an investigation or prosecution to obtain the testimonial or other cooperation of a person who is himself/herself implicated in the criminal conduct being investigated or prosecuted. However, because of his/her involvement, the person may refuse to cooperate on the basis of his/her Fifth Amendment privilege against compulsory self-incrimination. In this situation, there are several possible approaches the prosecutor can take to render the privilege inapplicable or to induce its waiver.

a. First, if time permits, the person may be charged, tried, and convicted before his/her cooperation is sought in the investigation or prosecution of others. Having already been convicted himself/herself, the person ordinarily will no longer have a valid privilege to refuse to testify, and will have a strong incentive to reveal the truth in order to induce the sentencing judge to impose a lesser sentence than that which otherwise might be found appropriate.

b. Second, the person may be willing to cooperate if the charges or potential charges against him/her are reduced in number or degree in return for his/her cooperation and his/her entry of a guilty plea to the remaining charges. Usually such a concession by the government will be all that is necessary, or warranted, to secure the cooperation sought. Since it is certainly desirable as a matter of policy that an offender be required to incur at least some liability for his/her criminal conduct, government attorneys should attempt to secure this result in all appropriate cases, following the principles set forth in USAM 9-27.430, supra, to the extent practicable.

c. The third method for securing the cooperation of a potential defendant is by means of a court order under 18 U.S.C. §§6001-6003. Those statutory provisions govern the conditions under which uncooperative witnesses may be compelled to testify or provide information notwithstanding their invocation of the privilege against compulsory self-incrimination. In brief, under the so-called "use immunity" provisions of those statutes, the court may order the person to testify or provide other information, but neither his/her testimony nor the information he/she provides may be used against him/her, directly or indirectly, in any criminal case except a prosecution for perjury or other failure to comply with the order. Ordinarily, these "use immunity" provisions should be relied on in cases in which attorneys for the government need to obtain sworn testimony or the production of information before a grand jury or at trial, and in which there is reason to believe that the person will refuse to testify or provide the information on the basis of his/her privilege against compulsory self-incrimination. (See USAM 1-11.000).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

d. Finally, there may be cases in which it is impossible or impractical to employ the methods described above to secure the necessary information or other assistance, and in which the person is willing to cooperate only in return for an agreement that he/she will not be prosecuted at all for what he/she has done. The provisions set forth hereafter describe the conditions that should be met before such an agreement is made, as well as the procedures recommended for such cases.

It is important to note that these provisions apply only if the case involves an agreement with a person who might otherwise be prosecuted. If the person reasonably is viewed only as a potential witness rather than a potential defendant, and the person is willing to cooperate, there is no need to consult these provisions.

USAM 9-27.610 describes three circumstances that should exist before government attorneys enter into non-prosecution agreements in return for cooperation: the unavailability or ineffectiveness of other means of obtaining the desired cooperation; the apparent necessity of the cooperation to the public interest; and the approval of such a course of action by an appropriate supervisory official.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

2. Unavailability or Ineffectiveness of Other Means

As indicated above, non-prosecution agreements are only one of several methods by which the prosecutor can obtain the cooperation of a person whose criminal involvement makes him/her a potential subject of prosecution. Each of the other methods--seeking cooperation after trial and conviction, bargaining for cooperation as part of a plea agreement, and compelling cooperation under a "use immunity" order--involves prosecuting the person or, at least, leaving open the possibility of prosecuting him/her on the basis of independently obtained evidence. Since these outcomes are clearly preferable to permitting an offender to avoid any liability for his/her conduct, the possible use of an alternative to a non-prosecution agreement should be given serious consideration in the first instance.

Another reason for using an alternative to a non-prosecution agreement to obtain cooperation concerns the practical advantage in terms of the person's credibility if he/she testifies at trial. If the person already has been convicted, either after trial or upon a guilty plea, for participating in the events about which he/she testifies, his/her testimony is apt to be far more credible than if it appears to the trier of fact that he/she is getting off "scot free". Similarly, if his/her testimony is compelled by a court order, he/she cannot properly be portrayed by the defense as a person who has made a "deal" with the government and whose testimony is, therefore, suspect; his/her testimony will have been forced from him/her, not bargained for.

In some cases, however, there may be no effective means of obtaining the person's timely cooperation short of entering into a non-prosecution agreement. The person may be unwilling to cooperate fully in return for a reduction of charges, the delay involved in bringing him/her to trial might prejudice the investigation or prosecution in connection with which his/her cooperation is sought, and it may be impossible or impractical to rely on the statutory provisions for compulsion of testimony or production of evidence. One example of the latter situation is a case in which the cooperation needed does not consist of testimony under oath or the production of information before a grand jury or at trial. Other examples are cases in which time is critical, as where use of the procedures of 18 U.S.C. §§6001-6003 would unreasonably disrupt the presentation of evidence to the grand jury or the expeditious development of an investigation, or where compliance with the statute of limitations or the Speedy Trial Act precludes timely application for a court order.

Only when it appears that the person's timely cooperation cannot be obtained by other means, or cannot be obtained effectively, should the attorney for the government consider entering into a non-prosecution agreement.

3. Public Interest

If he/she concludes that a non-prosecution agreement would be the only effective method for obtaining cooperation, the attorney for the government should consider whether, balancing the cost of foregoing prosecution against the potential benefit of the person's cooperation, the cooperation sought appears necessary to the public interest. This "public interest" determination is one of the conditions precedent to an application under 18 U.S.C. §6003 for a court order compelling testimony. Like a compulsion order, a non-prosecution agreement limits the government's ability to undertake a subsequent prosecution of the witness. Accordingly, the same "public interest" test should be applied in this situation as well. Some of the considerations that may be relevant to the application of this test are set forth in USAM 9-27.620, infra.

4. Supervisory Approval

Finally, the prosecutor should secure supervisory approval before entering into a non-prosecution agreement. Prosecutors working under the direction of a U.S. Attorney must seek the approval of the U.S. Attorney or a supervisory Assistant U.S. Attorney. Departmental attorneys not supervised by a U.S. Attorney should obtain the approval of the appropriate Assistant Attorney General or his/her designee, and should notify the U.S. Attorney or Attorneys concerned. The requirement of approval by a superior is designed to provide review by an attorney experienced in such matters, and to ensure uniformity of policy and practice with respect to such agreements. This section should be read in conjunction with USAM 9-27.640, infra, concerning particular types of cases in which an Assistant Attorney General or his/her designee must concur in or approve an agreement not to prosecute in return for cooperation.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-27.620 Considerations to be Weighed

A. In determining whether a person's cooperation may be necessary to the public interest, the attorney for the government, and those whose approval is necessary, should weigh all relevant considerations, including:

1. The importance of the investigation or prosecution to an effective program of law enforcement;
2. The value of the person's cooperation to the investigation or prosecution; and
3. The person's relative culpability in connection with the offense or offenses being investigated or prosecuted and his/her history with respect to criminal activity.

B. Comment

This paragraph is intended to assist federal prosecutors, and those whose approval they must secure, in deciding whether a person's cooperation appears to be necessary to the public interest. The considerations listed here are not intended to be all-inclusive or to require a particular decision in a particular case. Rather, they are meant to focus the decision-maker's attention on factors that probably will be controlling in the majority of cases.

1. Importance of Case

Since the primary function of a federal prosecutor is to enforce the criminal law, he/she should not routinely or indiscriminately enter into non-prosecution agreements, which are, in essence, agreements not to enforce the law under particular conditions. Rather, he/she should reserve the use of such agreements for cases in which the cooperation sought concerns the commission of a serious offense or in which successful prosecution is otherwise important in achieving effective enforcement of the criminal laws. The relative importance or unimportance of the contemplated case is therefore a significant threshold consideration.

2. Value of Cooperation

An agreement not to prosecute in return for a person's cooperation binds the government to the extent that the person carries out his/her part of the bargain. See United States v. Carter, 454 F.2d 426 (4th Cir. 1972); cf. Santobello v.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

New York, 404 U.S. 257 (1971). Since such an agreement forecloses enforcement of the criminal law against a person who otherwise may be liable to prosecution, it should not be entered into without a clear understanding of the nature of the quid pro quo and a careful assessment of its probable value to the government. In order to be in a position adequately to assess the potential value of a person's cooperation, the prosecutor should insist on an "offer of proof" or its equivalent from the person or his/her attorney. The prosecutor can then weigh the offer in terms of the investigation or prosecution in connection with which the cooperation is sought. In doing so, he/she should consider such questions as whether the cooperation will in fact be forthcoming, whether the testimony or other information provided will be credible, whether it can be corroborated by other evidence, whether it will materially assist the investigation or prosecution, and whether substantially the same benefit can be obtained from someone else without an agreement not to prosecute. After assessing all of these factors, together with any others that may be relevant, the prosecutor can judge the strength of his/her case with and without the person's cooperation, and determine whether it may be in the public interest to agree to forego prosecution under the circumstances.

3. Relative Culpability and Criminal History

In determining whether it may be necessary to the public interest to agree to forego prosecution of a person who may have violated the law, in return for that person's cooperation, it is also important to consider the degree of his/her apparent culpability relative to others who are subjects of the investigation or prosecution, as well as his/her history of criminal involvement. Of course, it would not be in the public interest to forego prosecution of a high-ranking member of a criminal enterprise in exchange for his/her cooperation against one of his/her subordinates, nor would the public interest be served by bargaining away the opportunity to prosecute a person with a long history of serious criminal involvement in order to obtain the conviction of someone else on less serious charges. These are matters with regard to which the attorney for the government may find it helpful to consult with the investigating agency or with other prosecuting authorities who may have an interest in the person or his/her associates.

It is also important to consider whether the person has a background of cooperation with law enforcement officials, either as a witness or an informant, and whether he/she has previously been the subject of a compulsion order under 18 U.S.C. §§6001-6003 or has escaped prosecution by virtue of an agreement not to prosecute. The latter information may be available by telephone from the Witness Records Unit of the Criminal Division.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-27.630 Limiting Scope of Commitment

A. In entering into a non-prosecution agreement, the attorney for the government should, if practicable, explicitly limit the scope of the government's commitment to:

1. Non-prosecution based directly or indirectly on the testimony or other information provided; or
2. Non-prosecution within his/her district with respect to a pending charge or to a specific offense then known to have been committed by the person.

B. Comment

The attorney for the government should exercise extreme caution to ensure that his/her non-prosecution agreement does not confer "blanket" immunity on the witness. To this end, he/she should, in the first instance, attempt to limit his/her agreement to non-prosecution based on the testimony or information provided. Such an "informal use immunity" agreement has two advantages over an agreement not to prosecute the person in connection with a particular transaction: first, it preserves the prosecutor's option to prosecute on the basis of independently obtained evidence if it later appears that the person's criminal involvement was more serious than it originally appeared to be; second, it encourages the witness to be as forthright as possible since the more he/she reveals the more protection he/she will have against a future prosecution. To further encourage full disclosure by the witness, it should be made clear in the agreement that the government's forbearance from prosecution is conditioned upon the witness's testimony or production of information being complete and truthful, and that failure to testify truthfully may result in a perjury prosecution.

Even if it is not practicable to obtain the desired cooperation pursuant to an "informal use immunity" agreement, the attorney for the government should attempt to limit the scope of the agreement in terms of the testimony and transactions covered, bearing in mind the possible effect of his/her agreement on prosecutions in other districts. In United States v. Carter, 454 F.2d 426 (4th Cir. 1972), the court held that a conviction in the Eastern District of Virginia on charges of forgery and conspiracy involving stolen Treasury checks must be vacated and the case remanded for an evidentiary hearing to determine whether, in a prior related investigation and prosecution in the District of Columbia involving stolen government checks, a promise had been made to the defendant by an Assistant U.S. Attorney for the District of Columbia that he would not be prosecuted in that district or elsewhere for any related offense if he would plead guilty to one misdemeanor count and cooperate with federal investigators in naming his accomplices. The court indicated that if the facts were as the defendant contended, then the conviction in the Virginia district would have to be reversed and the indictment dismissed. No issue of double jeopardy was involved. The effect of this decision is that a non-prosecution agreement by a government attorney in one district may be binding in other judicial districts even though the U.S. Attorneys in the other districts are not privy to, or aware of, the agreement.

In view of the Carter decision, it is important that non-prosecution agreements be drawn in terms that will not bind other federal prosecutors without their consent. Thus, if practicable, the attorney for the government should explicitly limit the scope of his/her agreement to non-prosecution within his/her district. If such a limitation is not practicable and it can reasonably be anticipated that the agreement may affect prosecution of the person in other districts, the attorney for the government contemplating such an agreement should communicate the relevant facts to the Assistant Attorney General with supervisory responsibility for the subject matter.

Finally, the attorney for the government should make it clear that his/her agreement relates only to non-prosecution and that he/she has no independent authority to promise that the witness will be admitted into the Department's Witness Security program or that the Marshal's Service will provide any benefits to the witness in exchange for his/her cooperation. This does not mean, of course, that the prosecutor should not cooperate in making arrangements with the Marshal's Service necessary for the protection of the witness in appropriate cases. The procedures to be followed in such cases are set forth in USAM 9-21.000, supra.

9-27.640 Agreements Requiring Assistant Attorney General Approval

A. The attorney for the government should not enter into a non-prosecution agreement in exchange for a person's cooperation without first obtaining the approval of the Assistant Attorney General with supervisory responsibility over the subject matter, or his/her designee, when:

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

1. Prior consultation or approval would be required by a statute or by Departmental policy for a declination of prosecution or dismissal of a charge with regard to which the agreement is to be made; or

2. The person is:

a. A high-level federal, state, or local official;

b. An official or agent of a federal investigative or law enforcement agency; or

c. A person who otherwise is, or is likely to become, of major public interest.

B. Comment

USAM 9-27.640 sets forth special cases that require approval of non-prosecution agreements by the responsible Assistant Attorney General or his/her designee. Subparagraph (1) covers cases in which existing statutory provisions and departmental policies require that, with respect to certain types of offenses, the Attorney General or an Assistant Attorney General be consulted or give his/her approval before prosecution is declined or charges are dismissed. See USAM 6-2.410, 6-2.420 (tax offenses); USAM 9-2.111 (bankruptcy frauds); USAM 9-2.132, 9-2.146 (internal security offenses); and USAM 9-2.158 (5), 9-2.134 (air piracy). An agreement not to prosecute resembles a declination of prosecution or the dismissal of a charge in that the end result in each case is similar: a person who has engaged in criminal activity is not prosecuted or is not prosecuted fully for his/her offense. Accordingly, attorneys for the government should obtain the approval of the appropriate Assistant Attorney General, or his/her designee, before agreeing not to prosecute in any case in which consultation or approval would be required for a declination of prosecution or dismissal of a charge.

Subparagraph (2) sets forth other situations in which the attorney for the government should obtain the approval of an Assistant Attorney General, or his/her designee, of a proposed agreement not to prosecute in exchange for cooperation. Generally speaking, the situations described will be cases of an exceptional or extremely sensitive nature, or cases involving individuals or matters of major public interest. In a case covered by this provision that appears to be of an especially sensitive nature, the Assistant Attorney General should, in turn, consider whether it would be appropriate to notify the Attorney General or the Deputy Attorney General.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-27.650 Records of Non-Prosecution Agreements

A. In a case in which a non-prosecution agreement is reached in return for a person's cooperation, the attorney for the government should ensure that the case file contains a memorandum or other written record setting forth the terms of the agreement. The memorandum or record should be signed or initialed by the person with whom the agreement is made or his/her attorney, and a copy should be forwarded to the Witness Records Unit of the Criminal Division.

B. Comment

The provisions of this section are intended to serve two purposes. First, it is important to have a written record in the event that questions arise concerning the nature or scope of the agreement. Such questions are certain to arise during cross-examination of the witness, particularly if the existence of the agreement has been disclosed to defense counsel pursuant to the requirements of Brady v. Maryland, 373 U.S. 83 (1965) and Giglio v. United States, 405 U.S. 150 (1972). The exact terms of the agreement may also become relevant if the government attempts to prosecute the witness for some offense in the future. Second, such a record will facilitate identification by government attorneys (in the course of weighing future agreements not to prosecute, plea agreements, pre-trial diversion, and other discretionary actions) of persons whom the government has agreed not to prosecute.

The principal requirements of the written record are that it be sufficiently detailed that it leaves no doubt as to the obligations of the parties to the agreement, and that it be signed or initialed by the person with whom the agreement is made and his/her attorney, or at least by one of them.

A copy of each non-prosecution agreement should be sent to the Criminal Division's Witness Records Unit. The Witness Records Unit will then be able to identify persons who have been the subject of such agreements, as well as to provide federal prosecutors, on request, with copies of the types of agreements used in the past.

9-27.700 PARTICIPATING IN SENTENCING

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-27.710 Participation Generally

A. During the sentencing phase of a federal criminal case, and the initial parole hearing phase, the attorney for the government should assist the sentencing court and the Parole Commission by:

1. Attempting to ensure that the relevant facts are brought to their attention fully and accurately; and
2. Making sentencing and parole release recommendations in appropriate cases.

B. Comment

Sentencing in federal criminal cases is primarily the function and responsibility of the court. This does not mean, however, that the prosecutor's responsibility in connection with a criminal case ceases upon the return of a guilty verdict or the entry of a guilty plea; to the contrary, the attorney for the government has a continuing obligation to assist the court in its determination of the sentence to be imposed and to aid the Parole Commission in its determination of a release date for a prisoner within its jurisdiction. In discharging these duties, the attorney for the government should, as provided in USAM 9-27.720 and 9-27.760, infra, endeavor to ensure the accuracy and completeness of the information upon which the sentencing and release decisions will be based. In addition, as provided in USAM 9-27.730 and 9-27.760, infra, in appropriate cases the prosecutor should offer recommendations with respect to the sentence to be imposed and with respect to the granting of parole.

9-27.720 Establishing Factual Basis for Sentence

A. In order to ensure that the relevant facts are brought to the attention of the sentencing court fully and accurately, the attorney for the government should:

1. Cooperate with the Probation Service in its preparation of the presentence investigation report;
2. Review material in the presentence investigation report that is disclosed by the court to the defendant or his/her attorney;
3. Make a factual presentation to the court when:
  - a. Sentence is imposed without a presentence investigation and report;

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

b. It is necessary to supplement or correct the presentence investigation report;

c. It is necessary in light of the defense presentation to the court; or

d. It is requested by the court; and

4. Be prepared to substantiate significant factual allegations disputed by the defense.

B. Comment

1. Cooperation with Probation Service

To begin with, if sentence is to be imposed following a presentence investigation and report, the prosecutor should cooperate with the Probation Service in its preparation of the presentence report for the court. Under Rule 32(c)(2), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, the report should contain "any criminal record of the defendant and such information about his characteristics, his financial condition and the circumstances affecting his behavior as may be helpful in imposing sentence or in granting probation or in the correctional treatment of the defendant, and such other information as may be required by the court." While much of this information may be available to the Probation Service from sources other than the government, some of it may be obtainable only from prosecutorial or investigative files to which probation officers do not have access. For this reason, it is important that the attorney for the government respond promptly to Probation Service requests by providing the requested information whenever possible. The attorney for the government should also recognize the occasional desirability of volunteering information to the Probation Service; especially in a district where the Probation Office is overburdened, this may be the best way to ensure that important facts about the defendant come to its attention. In addition, the prosecutor should be particularly alert to the need to volunteer relevant information to the Probation Service in complex cases, since it cannot be expected that probation officers will obtain a full understanding of the facts of such cases simply by questioning the prosecutor or examining his/her files.

The relevant information can be communicated orally, or by making portions of the case file available to the probation officer, or by submitting a sentencing memorandum or other written presentation for inclusion in the presentence report. Whatever method he/she uses, however, the attorney for the government should bear in mind that since portions of the report may be shown to the defendant or defense counsel, care should be taken to prevent disclosures that might be harmful to law enforcement interests.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

2. Review of Presentence Report

Rule 32(c)(3)(A), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, requires the court, upon request, to permit the defendant or his/her counsel to read and comment upon such portions of the presentence report as do not reveal diagnostic opinion, confidential sources of information, or information which if disclosed might result in harm to the defendant or others. Pursuant to Rule 32(c)(3)(C), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, any material disclosed to the defendant or his/her counsel must also be disclosed to the attorney for the government. Consequently, if the defense inspects portions of the presentence report, the attorney for the government should not forego his/her opportunity to examine the same material. Such examination may reveal factual inaccuracies in, or omissions from, the report that should be corrected. And even if no inaccuracies or omissions appear, such an examination will enable the attorney for the government to assess the validity of any comments made by the defense and, under Rule 32(a)(1), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, to respond appropriately.

3. Factual Presentation to Court

In addition to assisting the Probation Service with its presentence investigation and reviewing the portions of the presentence report disclosed to the defense, the attorney for the government may find it necessary in some cases to make a factual presentation directly to the court. Such a presentation is authorized by Rule 32(a)(1), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, which permits the defendant and his/her counsel to address the court and states that "[t]he attorney for the government shall have an equivalent opportunity to speak to the court." It has been suggested that failure to permit the government to address the court after the defense presentation may necessitate a remand for resentencing in order to afford the government its opportunity to speak to the court. See United States v. Jackson, 563 F.2d 1145, 1148 (4th Cir. 1977).

The need to address the court concerning the facts relevant to sentencing may arise in four situations: (a) when sentence is imposed without a presentence investigation and report; (b) when necessary to correct or supplement the presentence report; (c) when necessary in light of the defense presentation to the court; and (d) when requested by the court.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

a. Furnishing Information in Absence of Presentence Report

Rule 32(c)(1), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, authorizes the imposition of sentence without a presentence investigation and report, if the defendant consents or if the court finds that the record contains sufficient information to permit the meaningful exercise of sentencing discretion. Imposition of sentence pursuant to this provision usually occurs when the defendant has been found guilty by the court after a non-jury trial, when the case is relatively simple and straightforward, when the defendant has taken the stand and has been cross-examined, and when it is the court's intention not to impose a prison sentence. In such cases, and any others in which sentence is to be imposed without benefit of a presentence investigation and report (such as where a report on the defendant has recently been prepared in connection with another case), it may be particularly important that the attorney for the government take advantage of the opportunity afforded by Rule 32(a)(1), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, to address the court, since there will be no later opportunity to correct or supplement the record. Moreover, even if government counsel is satisfied that all facts relevant to the sentencing decision are already before the court, he/she may wish to make a factual presentation for the record that makes clear the government's view of the defendant, the offense, or both.

b. Correcting or Supplementing Presentence Report

As noted above, whenever portions of the presentence report are shown to the defense, the attorney for the government should take advantage of his/her opportunity to examine the same material. If he/she discovers any significant inaccuracies or omissions, he/she should bring them to the court's attention at the sentencing hearing, together with the correct or complete information.

c. Responding to Defense Assertions

Having read the presentence report prior to the sentencing hearing, the defendant or his/her attorney may dispute specific factual statements made therein. More likely, without directly challenging the accuracy of the report, the defense presentation at the hearing may omit reference to the derogatory information in the report, while stressing any favorable information and drawing all inferences beneficial to the defendant. Some degree of selectivity in the defense presentation is probably to be expected, and will be recognized by the court. There may be instances, however, in which the defense presentation, if not challenged, will leave the court with a view of the defendant or of the offense significantly different from that appearing in the presentence report. If this appears to be a possibility, the attorney for the government should respond by correcting factual errors in the defense presentation, pointing out facts and inferences ignored by the defense, and generally reinforcing the objective view of the defendant and his/her offense expressed in the presentence report.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

d. Responding to Court's Requests

There may be occasions when the court will request specific information from government counsel at the sentencing hearing (as opposed to asking generally whether the government wishes to be heard). When this occurs, the attorney for the government should, of course, furnish the requested information if it is readily available and no prejudice to law enforcement interests is likely to result from its disclosure.

4. Substantiation of Disputed Facts

In addition to providing the court with relevant factual material at the sentencing hearing when necessary, the attorney for the government should be prepared to substantiate significant factual allegations disputed by the defense. This can be done by making the source of the information available for cross-examination or, if there is good cause for nondisclosure of his/her identity, by presenting the information as hearsay and providing other guarantees of its reliability, such as corroborating testimony by others. See United States v. Fatico, 579 F.2d 707, 713 (2d Cir. 1978).

9-27.730 Conditions for Making Sentencing Recommendations

A. The attorney for the government should make a recommendation with respect to the sentence to be imposed when:

1. The terms of a plea agreement require him/her to do so; or
2. The public interest warrants an expression of the government's view concerning the appropriate sentence.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

B. Comment

USAM 9-27.730 describes two situations in which an attorney for the government should make a recommendation with respect to the sentence to be imposed: when the terms of a plea agreement require him/her to do so, and when the public interest warrants an expression of the government's view concerning the appropriate sentence. The phrase "make a recommendation with respect to the sentence to be imposed" is intended to cover tacit recommendations (i.e., agreeing to the defendant's request or not opposing the defendant's request) as well as explicit recommendations for a specific type of sentence (e.g., probation, a fine, incarceration); for imposition of sentence under a specific statute (e.g., the Youth Corrections Act, 18 U.S.C. §§5005 et seq., or the Narcotic Addict Rehabilitation Act, 18 U.S.C. §§4251 et seq.); for a specific condition of probation, a specific fine, or a specific term of imprisonment; and for concurrent or consecutive sentences.

The attorney for the government should be guided by the circumstances of the case and the wishes of the court concerning the manner and form in which sentencing recommendations are made. If the government's position with respect to the sentence to be imposed is related to a plea agreement with the defendant, that position must be made known to the court at the time the plea is entered. In other situations, the government's position might be conveyed to the probation officer, orally or in writing, during the presentence investigation; to the court in the form of a sentencing memorandum filed in advance of the sentencing hearing; or to the court orally at the time of the hearing.

1. Recommendations Required by Plea Agreement

Rule 11(e)(1), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, authorizing plea negotiations, implicitly permits the prosecutor, pursuant to a plea agreement, to make a sentence recommendation, agree not to oppose the defendant's request for a specific sentence, or agree that a specific sentence is the appropriate disposition of the case. If the prosecutor has entered into a plea agreement calling for the government to take a certain position with respect to the sentence to be imposed, and the defendant has entered a guilty plea in accordance with the terms of the agreement, the prosecutor must perform his/her part of the bargain or risk having the plea invalidated. See Machibroda v. United States, 368 U.S. 487, 493 (1962); Santobello v. United States, 404 U.S. 257, 262 (1971).

2. Recommendations Warranted by the Public Interest

From time to time, unusual cases may arise in which the public interest warrants an expression of the government's view concerning the appropriate sentence, irrespective of the absence of a plea agreement. In some such cases, the court may invite or request a recommendation by the prosecutor, while in others the court may not wish to have a sentencing recommendation from the government. In either event, whether the public interest requires an expression of the government's view concerning the appropriate sentence in a particular case is a matter to be determined with care, preferably after consultation between the prosecutor handling the case and his/her supervisor--the U.S. Attorney or a supervisory Assistant U.S. Attorney, or the responsible Assistant Attorney General or his/her designee.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

In considering the public interest question, the prosecutor should bear in mind the attitude of the court towards sentencing recommendations by the government, and should weigh the desirability of maintaining a clear separation of judicial and prosecutorial responsibilities against the likely consequences of making no recommendation. If he/she has good reason to anticipate the imposition of a sanction that would be unfair to the defendant or inadequate in terms of society's needs, he/she may conclude that it would be in the public interest to attempt to avert such an outcome by offering a sentencing recommendation. For example, if the case is one in which the imposition of a term of imprisonment plainly would be inappropriate, and the court has requested the government's view, the prosecutor should not hesitate to recommend or agree to the imposition of probation. On the other hand, if the responsible government attorney believes that a term of imprisonment is plainly warranted and that, under all the circumstances the public interest would be served by his/her making a recommendation to that effect, he/she should make such a recommendation even though the court has not invited or requested him/her to do so. Recognizing, however, that the primary responsibility for sentencing lies with the judiciary, government attorneys should avoid routinely taking positions with respect to sentencing, reserving their recommendations instead for those unusual cases in which the public interest warrants an expression of the government's view.

In connection with sentencing recommendations, the prosecutor should also bear in mind the potential value in some cases of the imposition of innovative conditions of probation. For example, in a case in which a sentencing recommendation would be appropriate and in which it can be anticipated that a term of probation will be imposed, the responsible government attorney may conclude that it would be appropriate to recommend, as a specific condition of probation, that the defendant make full restitution for actual damage or loss caused by the offense of which he/she convicted, that he/she participate in community service activities, or that he/she desist from engaging in a particular type of business.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-27.740 Considerations to be Weighed in Determining Sentencing Recommendations

A. In determining what recommendation to make with respect to the sentence to be imposed, the attorney for the government should weigh all relevant considerations, including:

1. The seriousness of the defendant's conduct;
2. The defendant's background and personal circumstances;
3. The purpose or purposes of sentencing applicable to the case; and
4. The extent to which a particular sentence would serve such purpose or purposes.

B. Comment

When a sentencing recommendation is to be made by the government--whether as part of a plea agreement or as otherwise warranted in the public interest--the recommendation should reflect the best judgment of the prosecutor as to what would constitute an appropriate sentence under all the circumstances of the case. In making this judgment, the attorney for the government should consider any factors that he/she believes to be relevant, with particular emphasis on the four considerations specifically set forth in USAM 9-27.740: the seriousness of the defendant's conduct; the defendant's background and personal circumstances; the purpose or purposes of sentencing applicable to the particular case; and the extent to which a particular sentence would serve such purpose or purposes. In this connection, the prosecutor should bear in mind that, by offering a recommendation, he/she shares with the court the responsibility for avoiding unwarranted sentence disparities among defendants with similar backgrounds who have been found guilty of similar conduct.

1. Seriousness of Defendant's Conduct

The seriousness of the defendant's conduct should be assessed not only with reference to the type of crime committed and the penalty provided for the offense in the abstract, but also in terms of factors peculiar to the commission of the offense in the particular case. Among such factors might be circumstances attending the commission of the offense that aggravate or mitigate its seriousness, such as: the age of the victim; the number of victims; the defendant's motivation and culpability; the nature and degree of harm caused or threatened by the offense, including the reparability or irreparability of any damage caused; the extent to which the defendant profited from the offense; the degree to which the offense involved a breach of special trust, particularly public trust; the complicity of the victim; and public concern generated by the offense.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

2. Defendant's Background and Personal Circumstances

In formulating a sentence recommendation, the attorney for the government should always consider the defendant's criminal history, the degree of his/her dependence on criminal activity for a livelihood, and his/her timely cooperation in the investigation or prosecution of others. Beyond these factors, it may also be appropriate to consider the defendant's age, education, mental and physical condition (including drug dependence), vocational skills, employment record, family ties and responsibilities, roots in the community, remorse or contrition, and willingness to assume responsibility for his/her conduct.

3. Applicable Sentencing Purposes

The attorney for the government should consider the seriousness of the defendant's conduct, and his/her background and personal circumstances, in light of the four purposes or objectives of the imposition of criminal sanctions:

- a. To deter the defendant and others from committing crime;
- b. To protect the public from further offenses by the defendant;
- c. To assure just punishment for the defendant's conduct;
and
- d. To promote the correction and rehabilitation of the defendant.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The attorney for the government should recognize that not all of these objectives may be relevant in every case and that, for a particular offense committed by a particular offender, one of the purposes, or a combination of purposes, may be of overriding importance. For example, in the case of a young first offender who commits a non-violent offense, the primary or sole purpose of sentencing might be rehabilitation. On the other hand, the primary purpose of sentencing a repeat violent offender might be to protect the public, and the perpetrator of a massive fraud might be sentenced primarily to deter others from engaging in similar conduct.

4. Relationship Between Sentence and Purpose of Sentencing

Having in mind the purpose or purposes sought to be achieved by sentencing in a particular case, the attorney for the government should consider the available sentencing alternatives in terms of the extent to which they are likely to serve such purpose or purposes. For example, if the prosecutor believes that the primary objective of the sentence should be to encourage the rehabilitation of the defendant, he/she may conclude that a term of imprisonment would not be appropriate. If, on the other hand, the primary purpose of the sentence is to incapacitate the defendant from committing additional crimes, then a substantial term of imprisonment might be warranted. And, in a case involving neither the need for rehabilitation nor for protection of the public from further criminal acts by the defendant, the objectives of deterrence and just punishment might best be achieved by a substantial fine, with or without a short period of imprisonment.

9-27.750 Disclosing Factual Material to Defense

A. The attorney for the government should disclose to defense counsel, reasonably in advance of the sentencing hearing, any factual material not reflected in the presentence investigation report that he/she intends to bring to the attention of the court.

B. Comment

Due process requires that the sentence in a criminal case be based on accurate information. See, e.g., Moore v. United States, 571 F.2d 179,182-184 (3d Cir. 1978). Accordingly, the defense should have access to all material relied upon by the sentencing judge, including memoranda from the prosecution (to the extent that considerations of informant safety permit), as well as sufficient time to review such material and an opportunity to present any refutation that can be mustered. See, e.g.,

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

United States v. Perri, 513 F.2d 572, 575 (9th Cir. 1975); United States v. Rosner, 485 F.2d 1213, 1229-30 (2d Cir.), cert, denied, 417 U.S. 950 (1974); United States v. Robin, 545 F.2d 775 (2d Cir. 1976). USAM 9-27.750 is intended to facilitate satisfaction of these requirements by providing the defendant with notice of information not contained in the presentence report that the government plans to bring to the attention of the sentencing court.

9-27.760 Assisting Parole Commission

A. If the sentence imposed includes a term of confinement that subjects the defendant to the jurisdiction of the Parole Commission, the attorney for the government should:

1. Forward to the Commission information necessary to ensure the proper application of the Commission's parole guidelines; and

2. Make a recommendation with respect to parole if required to do so by the terms of a plea agreement, or if there exist particularly aggravating or mitigating circumstances that justify a period of confinement different from that recommended in the parole guidelines.

B. Comment

The Parole Commission has authority to set release dates for federal prisoners who have been sentenced to a term of imprisonment for more than one year or who have been incarcerated pursuant to the Narcotic Addict Rehabilitation Act (18 U.S.C. §4251 et seq.) or the Youth Corrections Act (18 U.S.C. §5005 et seq.). The Commission's determination in a particular case is made with reference to parole guidelines that "indicate the customary range of time to be served before release for various combinations of offense (severity) and offender (parole prognosis) characteristics." See 28 C.F.R. §2.20(b).

The information necessary to determine a prisoner's offense and offender characteristics may be available to the Commission through the presentence report. In some cases there may be no presentence report, however. In other cases the report may not reflect all the facts about the offender or the offense that the prosecutor believes are necessary to the informed application of the Parole Commission's guidelines. For example, the report may not contain an adequate description of the defendant's cooperation with the government, or it may omit information relating to charges that have been or will be dropped as part of a plea agreement. There may also be cases in which the attorney for the government does not have access to the presentence report and, consequently, cannot judge its adequacy in terms of the Parole Commission's requirements. Moreover, the prosecutor should bear in mind that the Parole Commission will not know what took place at the sentencing hearing unless one of the parties provides it with a transcript of the proceedings. Finally, if the defendant is released on bail pending appeal, the attorney for the government should bear in mind the possibility that the defendant's post-sentence conduct may be pertinent to the Parole Commission's determination.

To ensure that the Parole Commission has all the information it needs, the attorney for the government should forward to the Chief Executive Officer of the institution to which the defendant will be committed U.S.A. Form 792 ("Report on Convicted Prisoner"), setting forth such information as he/she believes is necessary to ensure the proper application of the parole guidelines (see USAM 9-34.220 and 9-34.221). The Form 792 submission should be made promptly after the sentencing hearing, and may be supplemented thereafter if necessary, since the Commission's initial parole determination ordinarily will be made within a short time after the defendant's incarceration.

In supplying information to the Parole Commission, the prosecutor should bear in mind that the Commission, like the sentencing judge, is permitted to consider unadjudicated charges in assessing the seriousness of an individual's criminal behavior. See Billiteri v. United States Board of Parole, 541 F.2d 938, 944-945 (2d Cir. 1976). Accordingly, the information supplied need not be related solely to the offense or offenses for which the person was convicted, but should reflect the full range and seriousness of the conduct that could have been charged and proved. On the other hand, Commission regulations require that the information it considers meet "a threshold test of reliability." See 44 Fed. Reg. 12692-93 (March 8, 1979). Thus the same standard should be applied to Form 792 submissions as is applied to factual presentations at judicial sentencing hearings and, with respect to contested facts, there should be included a summary of corroborating information sufficient to overcome a denial by the prisoner.

Recommendations by the prosecutor concerning parole should be made when, as a part of a plea agreement, the prosecutor has agreed to make a recommendation, or when the prosecutor concludes, preferably after consultation with his/her supervisor, that the period of confinement recommended in the parole guidelines would be inappropriate in light of particularly aggravating or mitigating circumstances of the case. In the latter situation, the recommendation should be accompanied by a statement of the aggravating or mitigating circumstances and, if the severity rating of the criminal conduct involved is at issue, should specify the severity rating that the prosecutor believes to be applicable.

9-34.600 THE NEW SENTENCING SCHEME

The principal goal of the Sentencing Reform Act is to establish a uniform, determinate federal sentencing system that will accomplish the purposes of just punishment, deterrence, incapacitation, and rehabilitation. This goal is to be achieved primarily through the use of sentencing guidelines established by a presidentially-appointed Sentencing Commission, which will be composed of seven members and a staff. At least three members must be active federal judges, who will not be required to resign from the bench to serve on the Commission. The initial set of guidelines is scheduled to be completed in April 1986. In establishing the guidelines, the Commission will examine the offense and offender characteristics that judges now consider in making sentencing determinations, and will determine which of those should be reflected in the guidelines, which ones occur so infrequently that they should not be considered in the guidelines but might justify a departure from the guidelines, and which ones should not affect the sentence at all.

The guidelines will specify a variety of narrow sentencing ranges -- from probation with minimal conditions, to probation with more stringent conditions, to fines of various levels, and then to imprisonment for various terms -- for each offense, depending on the particular history and characteristics of the defendant and the circumstances of the offense. Consequently, a particular offense -- for example bank robbery -- might have a dozen or more suggested sentencing ranges, only one of which would fit a given case.

Under the new guideline system, the presentence report will continue to be prepared by the probation officer. The report will be available to the defendant and the government subject to the provisions of Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 32(c)(3). The report will identify the characteristics of the offense and the offender and the guideline range that the probation officer believes applicable to the defendant. The sentencing hearing will focus on the accuracy of the probation officer's conclusions and on the question of whether the sentence should be imposed within or outside the applicable guideline range. The judge will then impose sentence, ordinarily within the guideline range.

If the judge thinks it would be inappropriate to impose a sentence within the guideline range he finds to be applicable, because there was a factor that should affect the sentence that was not adequately considered by the Sentencing Commission in developing the guidelines, he may impose a sentence above or below the guideline recommendation. However, the judge must state his reasons for doing so on the record, and preferably in writing. Prosecutors who are asking the court to impose a sentence above the guideline recommendation should consider submitting a proposed statement of findings for the court. A sentence that is below the guideline range is appealable by the government, but by statute the Attorney General or Solicitor General must personally approve the filing of the notice of appeal. No "protective" notices of appeal should be filed.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-34.000 PROBATION, PAROLE AND PARDON

9-34.100 PROBATION

9-34.110 Authority To Grant Probation

Upon entering a judgment of conviction of any offense other than offenses punishable by death or life imprisonment, and other than certain violations of the Narcotic Control Act of 1956, the court may, in its discretion, suspend either the imposition or execution of sentence and place the defendant on probation for a period not exceeding 5 years. 18 U.S.C. §3651. Probation may be granted where the offense is punishable only by a fine (United States v. Berger 145 F.2d 888 (2d Cir. 1944)), or by both fine and imprisonment. When the offense is punishable by both fine and imprisonment, the court may impose a fine and place the defendant on probation as to imprisonment. In such case, payment of the fine may be made one of the conditions of probation.

The fact that a statute prescribes a minimum penalty, as is the case in certain of the Internal Revenue statutes relating to liquor violations, is not a bar to suspension of imposition or execution of sentence and the grant of probation. Where the defendant is a corporation, the court may suspend imposition or execution of sentence and place the corporation on probation. ✓

Upon conviction for an offense not punishable by death or life imprisonment, but punishable by imprisonment for more than 6 months, the court may impose a sentence in excess of 6 months; may direct that 6 months or less of such sentence be served in a jail or a treatment institution; or may suspend execution of the remainder of the sentence and place the defendant on probation for such period and upon such conditions as the court deems best. 18 U.S.C. §3651.

9-34.120 Restitution as Condition

The court may not order restitution, as a condition of probation, in excess of the actual damage or loss to the victim of the offense for which conviction is had or to which a plea of guilty is entered. Karrell v. United States, 181 F.2d 981 (9th Cir. 1950), cert. denied., 340 U.S. 891 (1950). Consequently, an order of restitution cannot include sums representing alleged losses caused by offenses which were not charged in the indictment, or which were charged in counts which have been dismissed, or on which the defendant has been acquitted.

9-34.130 Advantage To Government Of Suspending Imposition

If sentence is imposed, its execution suspended, and the defendant placed on probation, the court is without power to increase the sentence if probation is subsequently revoked. On the other hand, if the court suspends imposition of sentence and places the defendant on probation, it has authority, upon revoking probation, to impose any sentence which it could have imposed originally. 18 U.S.C. §3653. Thus, there is ordinarily a distinct advantage in suspending imposition rather than execution of sentence when probation is contemplated. Furthermore, suspension of imposition of sentence may prove to be an incentive to good conduct because of the uncertainty of the extent of punishment which violation of the conditions of probation may incur.

9-34.140 Termination of Power to Place on Probation

The power to suspend execution of sentence and place a defendant on probation is terminated immediately upon imprisonment under such sentence, and is terminated as to all of the sentences composing a single cumulative sentence immediately upon imprisonment for any part of the cumulative sentence. Affronti v. United States, 350 U.S. 79 (1955).

9-34.150 Effective Date Of Probation

Absent a specific direction to the contrary, the probationary period will commence to run at the time the court grants probation. This is true though the defendant is sentenced to imprisonment on another count of the same indictment or is at the time of probation order already serving a state or federal sentence of imprisonment. In such case the period of probation will run concurrently with the prison sentence. Engle v. United States, 332 F.2d 89 (6th Cir. 1964); Sanford v. King, 136 F.2d 106 (5th Cir. 1943). However, the court has power by specific direction to make the probation period take effect upon termination of the prison term. Frad v. Kelly, 320 U.S. 312 (1937); Cosman v. United States, 302 U.S. 617 (1938); Graddis v. United States, 280 F.2d 334 (6th Cir. 1960).

9-34.160 Revocation

If within the period of probation the defendant violates any of the conditions which have been imposed by the court, the order granting probation may be revoked and sentence imposed, or if sentence has been previously imposed, such sentence or any lesser sentence may be ordered executed. An order of revocation may be entered only after hearing upon the alleged violation of probation at which the probationer is entitled to representation by counsel. Counsel will be appointed for those who are financially unable to retain their own counsel. 18 U.S.C. §3006A; Escoe v. Zerbst, 295 U.S. 490 (1935); Gagnon v. Scarpelli, 411 U.S. 778 (1973).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

Any warrant for the arrest of the probationer for violation of probation must be issued no later than 5 years from the effective date of the grant of probation. 18 U.S.C. §3653; compare Justras v. United States, 340 F.2d 305 (1st Cir. 1965); Demarois v. Farrell, 87 F.2d 957 (8th Cir. 1937), cert. denied, 302 U.S. 683; United States v. Gernie, 228 F. Supp. 329 (S.D.N.Y. 1964).

9-34.200 PAROLE

9-34.210 Eligibility

Every prisoner, with exceptions outlined below, who is in custody under a federal sentence of more than one year becomes eligible for parole consideration upon serving one-third of the term or terms imposed if he/she has observed the rules of the institution in which he/she is being held. 18 U.S.C. §4205(a). When plural sentences are ordered to run consecutively the aggregate term is the basis for computing parole eligibility. Consecutive sentences are aggregated without regard to their length and no distinction is made as to a term of imprisonment imposed under a felony conviction and another imposed under a misdemeanor conviction. The law also provides that a prisoner serving a life sentence or a term exceeding 30 years shall be eligible for parole consideration after serving 10 years. 18 U.S.C. §4205(a).

9-34.211 Exception for Juveniles

Committed juvenile delinquents and committed youth offenders may be released on parole supervision at any time after commitment. See 18 U.S.C. §5041 and 18 U.S.C. §5017(a), respectively.

9-34.212 Eligibility Date Specified By Court

The court has certain discretionary powers as to parole eligibility upon entering a judgment of conviction if the court pronounces a sentence of more than 1 year, it may designate in the sentence a minimum term at which time the prisoner shall become eligible for parole consideration. Such minimum terms may be less than, but shall not be more than, one-third of the maximum sentence imposed. 18 U.S.C. §4205(b)(1). It provides further that the court may fix the maximum term of imprisonment and specify in the sentence that the prisoner may become eligible for parole consideration at such time as the Parole Commission may determine. 18 U.S.C. §4205(b)(2). If the court imposes a sentence of not less than six months but not more than one year, the court may at the time of sentencing provide for the release of the prisoner as if on parole after service of one-third of the sentence. 18 U.S.C. §4205(f).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-34.220 Preparation of Reports on Convicted Prisoner for the Parole Commission

All U.S. Attorneys, Assistant U.S. Attorneys, and Criminal Division Attorneys are required to prepare a Form 792 "Report on Convicted Prisoners by United States Attorney" in all cases in which a defendant has been sentenced to a prison term in excess of one year. The completed forms are to be submitted to the Chief Executive Officer of the institution to which the defendant will be committed as soon as the defendant has been sentenced.

9-34.221 Duty to Complete the Report

It is especially important that the Parole Commission be apprised of the specific data it needs for decision making. An attorney's responsibility for the case continues through the sentencing process. All attorney should be familiar with the Principles of Federal Prosecution, which appear in USAM 9-27.000, in particular, Part C6 at pages 55 and 56. That part fully sets forth the responsibilities of federal prosecutors to prepare and submit a completed Form 792.

9-34.222 Preparation Of Form 792

The Parole Commission needs to be fully informed of aggravating and mitigating factors surrounding each offense. To accomplish that end observe the following when preparing Form 792.

A. Describe the details of the offense itself. Include the dollar amounts involved in the crime; this is important to the Parole Commission when it rates the severity of an offense, particularly in income tax, fraud, embezzlement, drug and theft cases. In drug cases, provide information on the quantity and purity of the drugs.

B. Explain the prisoner's role in the offense. The Parole Commission should be told of the nature and severity of the prisoner's involvement relative to that of his/her codefendants; this will prevent unjust disparity in the treatment among codefendants and help the Parole Commission to compare the prison terms of principals and accessories.

C. Outline related charges dismissed upon entry of a guilty plea or not proved at trial. Whatever the government was prepared to prove should be reported fully, because the Parole Commission is entitled to consider unadjudicated charges so long as the prisoner has notice of them.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

D. Provide investigative information concerning the prior history of the prisoner and/or the offense (if it was part of an on-going pattern of behavior). The Parole Commission needs specific data on the magnitude and duration of the criminal behavior; considered are the amount of sophistication and/or planning of the offense, and the degree to which the offense was part of a large scale criminal conspiracy or a continuing criminal enterprise. While the prisoner's general reputation is not specific enough for consideration in parole release decision making, his/her criminal reputation should be reported to the Parole Commission so that a determination can be made whether or not to treat his/her case under the original jurisdiction procedure. 28 C.F.R. §217.

The Parole Commission must disclose to the prisoner the reports and documents used in parole release decision making; if materials are considered which fall within the three broad exemptions of 18 U.S.C §4208(c), the Parole Commission need only furnish the prisoner with a summary though the Parole Commission may consider the report in full. Information on Form 792 which falls within these exemptions should be summarized in general terms; the precise exemption chosen need not be revealed or justified. As a standard precaution, the name of the preparing attorney can be deleted from the disclosable copy of the report.

Summaries should be typewritten on a separate page with the heading SUMMARY OF INFORMATION WITHHELD, and should be attached to the copy Form 792 which has been excised for disclosure to the prisoner. Send the original and excised copy to the institution in which the prisoner is confined. If investigative reports are included with the prosecuting attorney's report, the responsibility agency should be requested to provide summaries if any material is deemed by that agency to be exempt from disclosure.

A copy of the current Form USA-792 follows. See pages 6 and 7 of this chapter. All previous editions of the form are obsolete and should be destroyed.

9-34.224 Parole Commission Guidelines

All prosecuting attorneys should be familiar with the Parole Commission's guidelines, both in plea negotiations and in completing the Form 792. The Commission's most recent guideline table (full text to appear at 28 C.F.R. §2.20) follows. See pages 8-30 of this chapter.

NOTE: This report must be completed for the use of the U.S. Parole Commission in all cases in which the defendant has received a prison term of more than one year. It is an essential source of information for parole decision-making. Submit the report as soon as the defendant has been sentenced.

I. DESCRIPTION OF THE OFFENSE: Give a full account of the offense and describe any mitigating or aggravating circumstances. Be specific about such matters as total dollar amounts or property values involved, drug quantities and purities, the number of victims and extent of injury, and the overall extent of any joint or on-going criminal conduct. Estimate relative culpability if the offense involved co-defendants.

1987 USAM (superseded)

II. CORROBORATING EVIDENCE: If there are aggravating circumstances not established by the conviction, explain what evidence supports the Government's version.

III. COOPERATION: Was the defendant of assistance to the Government? The Parole Commission will consider substantial cooperation otherwise unrewarded as a possible circumstance in mitigation of punishment.

IV. RECOMMENDATION RELATIVE TO PAROLE: This section is optional. (See the paroling policy guidelines at 28 CFR § 2.20)

DISCLOSURE INSTRUCTIONS (to institution staff):

_____ This report may be disclosed to the prisoner.

_____ Do not disclose this report under any circumstances and retain it in a secure file. A disclosable copy of this report with deletions, and a summary of deleted material pursuant to 18 U.S.C. 4208 (c) is attached for disclosure to the prisoner. The original is to be shown to the Parole Commission.

NOTIFICATION REQUEST:

_____ I wish to be notified of the date and place set for this prisoner's parole hearing.

_____ I wish to be notified of the Commission's decision in this case.

Disposition of copies: This form is to be completed in triplicate. The original and one copy are to be sent to the Chief Executive Officer of the institution to which the prisoner is committed and a copy retained by the U.S. Attorney. The institution copies should be given to the Bureau of Prisons' Community Program offices for delivery with the prisoner. If not possible, they should be mailed to the institution as soon as possible after sentence is imposed. The CPO will be able to advise of the institution to which the defendant was committed. (The U.S. Marshal can put you in contact with your local CPO.)

CHAPTER THIRTEEN. GENERAL NOTES AND DEFINITIONS

Subchapter A - General Notes

Subchapter B - Definitions

CHAPTER ONE - OFFENSES OF GENERAL APPLICABILITY

- 101 Conspiracy
Grade conspiracy in the same category as the underlying offense.
- 102 Attempt
Grade attempt in the same category as the offense attempted.
- 103 Aiding and Abetting
Grade aiding and abetting in the same category as the underlying offense.
- 104 Accessory After the Fact*
Grade accessory after the fact as two categories below the underlying offense, but not less than Category One.

--- NOTE TO CHAPTER ONE

The reasons for a conspiracy or attempt not being completed may, where the circumstances warrant, be considered as a mitigating factor (e.g., where there is voluntary withdrawal by the offender prior to completion of the offense). [[Notes and Procedures. In grading unconsummated conspiracy offenses, care must be taken to distinguish the specific and imminent elements of the offense (which are to be considered) from those which are speculative and remote]].

CHAPTER TWO - OFFENSES INVOLVING THE PERSON

SUBCHAPTER A - HOMICIDE OFFENSES

- 201 Murder
Murder*, or a forcible felony* resulting in the death of a person other than a participating offender, shall be graded as Category Eight.
- 202 Voluntary Manslaughter*
Category Seven.
- 203 Involuntary Manslaughter*
Category Four.

SUBCHAPTER B - ASSAULT OFFENSES

- 211 Assault During Commission of Another Offense
(a) If serious bodily injury* results or if 'serious bodily injury is clearly intended', grade as Category Seven;
(b) If bodily injury* results, or a weapon is fired by any offender, grade as Category Six;
(c) Otherwise, grade as Category Five.
- 212 Assault
(a) If serious bodily injury* results or if 'serious bodily injury is clearly intended', grade as Category Seven;

-----
*Terms marked by an asterisk are defined in Chapter Thirteen.

10/01/83

- (b) If bodily injury* results or a dangerous weapon is used by any offender, grade as Category Five;
- (c) Otherwise, grade as Category Two.
- (d) Exception: If the victim was known to be a 'protected person'* or criminal justice official, grade conduct under (a) as Category Seven, (b) as Category Six, and (c) as Category Three.

SUBCHAPTER C - KIDNAPING AND RELATED OFFENSES

221 Kidnaping

- (a) If the purpose of the kidnaping is for ransom or 'political' terrorism, grade as Category Eight.
- (b) If a person is held hostage in a known place for purposes of extortion (e.g., forcing a bank manager to drive to a bank to retrieve money by holding a family member hostage at home), grade as Category Seven;
- (c) If a victim is used as a shield or hostage in a confrontation with law enforcement authorities, grade as Category Seven;
- (d) Otherwise, grade as Category Seven.
- (e) Exception: If not for ransom or terrorism, and no bodily injury to victim, and limited duration (e.g., abducting the driver of a truck during a hijacking and releasing him unharmed an hour later), grade as Category Six.

222 Demand for Ransom

- (a) If a kidnaping has, in fact, occurred, but it is established that the offender was not acting in concert with the kidnapper(s), grade as Category Seven;
- (b) If no kidnaping has occurred, grade as 'extortion'.

SUBCHAPTER D - SEXUAL OFFENSES

231 Forcible Rape or Forcible Sodomy

- (a) Category Seven.
- (b) Exception: If a prior consensual sexual relationship is present between victim and offender, grade as Category Six.

232 Carnal Knowledge*

- (a) Category Four.
- (b) Exception: If the relationship is clearly consensual, and the victim is at least 14 years old, and the age difference between victim and offender is less than four years, grade as Category One.

SUBCHAPTER E - OFFENSES INVOLVING AIRCRAFT

241 Aircraft Piracy Category Eight.

242 Interference with a Flight Crew

- (a) If the conduct or attempted conduct has potential for creating a significant safety risk to an aircraft or passengers, grade as Category Seven;
- (b) Otherwise, grade as Category Two.

*Terms marked by an asterisk are defined in Chapter Thirteen.

10/01/83

SUBCHAPTER F - COMMUNICATION OF THREATS

251 Communicating a Threat [to kill, assault, or kidnap]

(a) Category Four;

(b) Notes:

- (1) Any overt act committed for the purposes of carrying out a threat in this subchapter may be considered as an aggravating factor.
- (2) If for purposes of extortion or obstruction of justice, grade according to Chapter Three, Subchapter C, or Chapter Six, Subchapter B, as applicable.

CHAPTER THREE - OFFENSES INVOLVING PROPERTY

SUBCHAPTER A - ARSON AND OTHER PROPERTY DESTRUCTION OFFENSES

301 Property Destruction by Arson or Explosives

- (a) If the conduct results in serious bodily injury* or if 'serious bodily injury is clearly intended*', grade as Category Seven;
- (b) If the conduct (i) involves any place where persons are present or likely to be present; or (ii) involves a residence, building, or other structure; or (iii) results in bodily injury*, grade as Category Six;
- (c) Otherwise, grade as 'property destruction other than listed above' but not less than Category Five.

302 Wrecking a Train

Category Seven.

303 Property Destruction Other Than Listed Above

- (a) If the conduct results in bodily injury* or serious bodily injury*, or if 'serious bodily injury is clearly intended*', grade as if 'assault during commission of another offense';
- (b) If damage of more than $500,000 is caused, grade as Category Six;
- (c) If damage of more than $100,000 but not more than $500,000 is caused, grade as Category Five;
- (d) If damage of at least $20,000 but not more than $100,000 is caused, grade as Category Four;
- (e) If damage of at least $2000 but less than $20,000 is caused, grade as Category Three;
- (f) If damage of less than $2000 is caused, grade as Category One.
- (g) Exception: If a significant interruption of a government or public utility function is caused, grade as not less than Category Three.

SUBCHAPTER B - CRIMINAL ENTRY OFFENSES

311 Burglary or Unlawful Entry

- (a) If the conduct involves an armory or similar facility (e.g., a facility where automatic weapons or war materials are stored) for the purpose of theft or destruction of weapons or war materials, grade as Category Six;
- (b) If the conduct involves an inhabited dwelling (whether or not a victim is present), or any premises with a hostile confrontation with a victim, grade as Category Five;
- (c) If the conduct involves use of explosives or safecracking, grade as Category Five;
- (d) Otherwise, grade as 'theft' offense, but not less than Category Two.

*Terms marked by an asterisk are defined in Chapter Thirteen.

10/01/83

- (e) Exception: If the grade of the applicable 'theft' offense exceeds the grade under this subchapter, grade as a 'theft' offense.

SUBCHAPTER C - ROBBERY, EXTORTION, AND BLACKMAIL

321 Robbery

(a) Category Five.

(b) Exceptions:

- (1) If the grade of the applicable 'theft' offense exceeds the grade for robbery, grade as a 'theft' offense.
- (2) If any offender forces a victim to accompany any offender to a different location, or if a victim is forcibly detained for a significant period, grade as Category Six.
- (3) Pickpocketing (stealth-no force or fear), see Subchapter D.

(c) Note: Grade purse snatching (fear or force) as robbery.

322 Extortion

(a) If by threat of physical injury to person or property, or extortionate extension of credit (loansharking)*, grade as Category Five;

(b) If by use of official governmental position, grade according to Chapter Six, Subchapter C.

(c) Exceptions:

- (1) If the grade of the applicable 'theft' offense exceeds the grade under this subchapter, grade as a 'theft' offense;
- (2) If a victim is physically held hostage for purposes of extortion, grade according to Chapter Two, Subchapter C.

323 Blackmail [threat to injure reputation or accuse of crime]

Grade as a 'theft' offense according to the value of the property demanded, but not less than Category Three. Actual damage to reputation may be considered as an aggravating factor.

SUBCHAPTER D - THEFT AND RELATED OFFENSES

331 Theft, Forgery, Fraud, Trafficking in Stolen Property*, Interstate Transportation of Stolen Property, Receiving Stolen Property, Embezzlement, and Related Offenses

(a) If the value of the property* is more than $500,000, grade as Category Six;

(b) If the value of the property* is more than $100,000 but not more than $500,000, grade as Category Five;

(c) If the value of the property* is at least $20,000 but not more than $100,000, grade as Category Four;

(d) If the value of the property* is at least $2000 but less than $20,000, grade as Category Three;

(e) If the value of the property* is less than $2000, grade as Category One.

(f) Exceptions:

- (1) Offenses involving stolen checks or mail, forgery, fraud, interstate transportation of stolen or forged securities, trafficking in stolen property*, or embezzlement shall be graded as not less than Category Two;

- (2) Theft of an automobile shall be graded as no less than Category Three. Note: where the vehicle was recovered within 72 hours with no significant damage and the circumstances indicate that the only purpose of the theft was temporary use (e.g., joyriding), such circumstances may be considered as a mitigating factor.
- (g) Note: In 'theft' offenses, the total amount of the theft committed or attempted by the offender, or others acting in concert with the offender, is to be used. [[Notes and Procedures. Example (1): Seven persons in concert commit a theft of $70,000; each receives $10,000. Grade according to the total amount ($70,000). Example (2): Seven persons in concert fraudulently sell stock worth $20,000 for $90,000. Grade according to the loss ($70,000)]].

- 332 Pickpocketing [stealth-no force or fear]
Grade as a 'theft' offense, but not less than Category Three.
- 333 Fraudulent Loan Applications
Grade as a 'fraud' offense according to the amount of the loan.
- 334 Preparation or Possession of Fraudulent Documents
(a) If for purposes of committing another offense, grade according to the offense intended;
(b) Otherwise, grade as Category Two.
- 335 Criminal Copyright Offenses
(a) If very large scale (e.g., more than 100,000 sound recordings or more than 10,000 audio visual works), grade as Category Five;
(b) If large scale (e.g., 20,000-100,000 sound recordings or 2,000-10,000 audio visual works), grade as Category Four;
(c) If medium scale (e.g., 2,000-19,999 sound recordings or 200-1,999 audio visual works), grade as Category Three;
(d) If small scale (e.g., less than 2000 sound recordings or less than 200 audio visual works), grade as Category Two.

SUBCHAPTER E - COUNTERFEITING AND RELATED OFFENSES

- 341 Passing or Possession of Counterfeit Currency or Other Medium of Exchange*
(a) If the face value of the currency or other medium of exchange is more than $500,000, grade as Category Six;
(b) If the face value is more than $100,000 but not more than $500,000, grade as Category Five;
(c) If the face value is at least $20,000 but not more than $100,000, grade as Category Four;
(d) If the face value is at least $2000 but less than $20,000, grade as Category Three;
(e) If the face value is less than $2000, grade as Category Two.
- 342 Manufacture of Counterfeit Currency or Other Medium of Exchange* or Possession of Instruments for Manufacture Grade manufacture or possession of instruments for manufacture (e.g., a printing press or plates) according to the quantity printed (see passing or possession)), but not less than Category Five. The term 'manufacture' refers to the capacity to print or generate multiple copies; it does not apply to pasting together parts of different notes.

*Terms marked by an asterisk are defined in Chapter Thirteen.

10/01/83

SUBCHAPTER F - BANKRUPTCY OFFENSES

- 351 Fraud in Bankruptcy or Concealing Property
Grade as a 'fraud' offense.

SUBCHAPTER G - VIOLATION OF SECURITIES OR INVESTMENT REGULATIONS AND ANTITRUST OFFENSES

- 361 Violation of Securities or Investment Regulations (15 U.S.C. 77ff,80)
(a) If for purposes of fraud, grade according to the underlying offense;
(b) Otherwise, grade as Category Two.

362 Antitrust Offenses

- (a) If estimated economic impact is more than one million dollars, grade as Category Four;
(b) If the estimated economic impact is more than $100,000 but not more than one million dollars, grade as Category Three;
(c) Otherwise, grade as Category Two.
[[Notes and Procedures: The term 'economic impact' refers to the estimated loss to any victims (e.g., loss to consumers from a price fixing offense).]]

CHAPTER FOUR - OFFENSES INVOLVING IMMIGRATION, NATURALIZATION, AND PASSPORTS

- 401 Unlawfully Entering the United States as an Alien Category Two.
- 402 Smuggling of Alien(s) into the United States
Category Three.
- 403 Offenses Involving Passports
(a) If making an unlawful passport for distribution to another, possession with intent to distribute, or distribution of an unlawful passport, grade as Category Three;
(b) If fraudulently acquiring or improperly using a passport, grade as Category Two.
- 404 Offenses Involving Naturalization or Citizenship Papers
(a) If forging or falsifying naturalization or citizenship papers for distribution to another, possession with intent to distribute, or distribution, grade as Category Three;
(b) If acquiring fraudulent naturalization or citizenship papers for own use or improper use of such papers, grade as Category Two;
(c) If failure to surrender canceled naturalization or citizenship certificate(s), grade as Category One.

CHAPTER FIVE - OFFENSES INVOLVING REVENUE

SUBCHAPTER A - INTERNAL REVENUE OFFENSES

- 501 Tax Evasion [income tax or other taxes]
(a) If the amount of tax evaded or evasion attempted is more than $500,000, grade as Category Six;

*Terms marked by an asterisk are defined in Chapter Thirteen.

10/01/83

- (b) If the amount of tax evaded or evasion attempted is more than $100,000 but not more than $500,000, grade as Category Five;
- (c) If the amount of tax evaded or evasion attempted is at least $20,000 but not more than $100,000, grade as Category Four;
- (d) If the amount of tax evaded or evasion attempted is at least $2000 but less than $20,000, grade as Category Three;
- (e) If the amount of tax evaded or evasion attempted is less than $2000, grade as Category One.
- (f) Notes:
  - (1) Grade according to the amount of tax evaded or evasion attempted, not the gross amount of income. [[Notes and Procedures. Example: An offender fails to report income of $30,000, thus avoiding $10,000 in taxes; the severity rating is determined by the tax avoided (i.e., $10,000)]].
  - (2) Tax evasion refers to failure to pay applicable taxes. Grade a false claim for a tax refund (where tax has not been withheld) as a 'fraud' offense.

502 Operation of an Unregistered Still
Grade as a 'tax evasion' offense.

SUBCHAPTER B - CUSTOMS OFFENSES

- 511 Smuggling Goods into the United States
- (a) If the conduct is for the purpose of tax evasion, grade as a 'tax evasion' offense.
  - (b) If the article is prohibited from entry to the country absolutely (e.g., illicit drugs or weapons), use the grading applicable to possession with intent to distribute of such articles, or the grading applicable to tax evasion, whichever is higher, but not less than Category Two;
  - (c) If the conduct involves breaking seals, or altering or defacing customs marks, or concealing invoices, grade according to (a) or (b), as applicable, but not less than Category Two.
- 512 Smuggling Goods into Foreign Countries in Violation of Foreign Law
(re: 18 U.S.C. 546)
Category Two.

SUBCHAPTER C - CONTRABAND CIGARETTES

- 521 Trafficking in Contraband Cigarettes (re: 18 U.S.C. 2342)
Grade as a tax evasion offense.

CHAPTER SIX - OFFENSES INVOLVING GOVERNMENTAL PROCESS

SUBCHAPTER A - IMPERSONATION OF OFFICIALS

- 601 Impersonation of Official
- (a) If for purposes of commission of another offense, grade according to the offense attempted, but not less than Category Two;
  - (b) Otherwise, grade as Category Two.

*Terms marked by an asterisk are defined in Chapter Thirteen.

FEBRUARY 13, 1984
Ch. 34, p.17

SUBCHAPTER B - OBSTRUCTING JUSTICE

611 Perjury

- (a) If the perjured testimony concerns another offense, grade according to the underlying offense, but not less than Category Three;
- (b) Otherwise, grade as Category Three.
- (c) Suborning perjury, grade as perjury.

612 Unlawful False Statements Not Under Oath
Category One.

613 Tampering With Evidence or Witness, Victim, or Informant

- (a) If the underlying purpose concerns another offense, grade according to the offense involved, but not less than Category Three;
- (b) Otherwise, grade as Category Three.
- (c) Exception: Intimidation by threat of physical harm, grade as not less than Category Five.

614 Misprision of a Felony*

Grade as if 'accessory after the fact' but not higher than Category Three.

615 Harboring a Fugitive

Grade as 'accessory after the fact' but not higher than Category Three. Use the category of the offense for which the fugitive is wanted as the underlying offense.

616 Escape

If in connection with another federal offense for which a severity rating can be assessed, grade the underlying offense and apply the rescission guidelines to determine an additional penalty. Otherwise, grade as Category Three. [[Notes and Procedures. Grade as Category Three only if the underlying offense behavior cannot be established in accord with Commission regulations]].

617 Failure to Appear*

- (a) In Felony Proceedings. If in connection with an offense for which a severity rating can be assessed, add to the guidelines otherwise appropriate the following: (i)  $\leq 6$  months if voluntary return within 6 days, or (ii) 6-12 months in any other case. Otherwise, grade as Category Three. [[Notes and Procedures. Grade as Category Three only if the underlying offense behavior cannot be established in accord with Commission regulations]].
- (b) In Misdemeanor Proceedings. Grade as Category One.
- (c) Note: For purposes of this subsection, a misdemeanor is defined as an offense for which the maximum penalty authorized by law (not necessarily the penalty actually imposed) does not exceed one year."

618 Contempt of Court

- (a) Criminal Contempt. Where imposed in connection with a prisoner serving a sentence for another offense, add  $\leq 6$  months to the guidelines otherwise appropriate.
- (b) Civil Contempt. See 28 C.F.R. 2.10.

*Terms marked by an asterisk are defined in Chapter Thirteen.

10/01/83

SUBCHAPTER C - OFFICIAL CORRUPTION

- 621 Bribery or Extortion [use of official position - no physical threat]
(a) Grade as a 'theft offense' according to value of the bribe, demand, or the favor received (whichever is greater), but not less than Category Three.
(b) If the above conduct involves a pattern of corruption (e.g., multiple instances over a period exceeding six months), grade as not less than Category Four.
(c) If the purpose of the conduct is the obstruction of justice, grade as if 'perjury'.
(d) Notes:
(1) The grading in this subchapter applies to each party to a bribe.
(2) The extent to which the criminal conduct involves a breach of public trust, causing injury beyond that describable by monetary gain, may be considered as an aggravating factor.
- 622 Other Unlawful Use of Governmental Position
Category Two.

CHAPTER SEVEN - OFFENSES INVOLVING INDIVIDUAL RIGHTS

SUBCHAPTER A - OFFENSES INVOLVING CIVIL RIGHTS

- 701 Conspiracy Against Rights of Citizens (re: 18 U.S.C. 241)
(a) If death results, grade as Category Eight;
(b) Otherwise, grade as if 'assault'.
- 702 Deprivation of Rights Under Color of Law (re: 18 U.S.C. 242)
(a) If death results, grade as Category Eight;
(b) Otherwise, grade as if 'assault'.
- 703 Federally Protected Activity (re: 18 U.S.C. 245)
(a) If death results, grade as Category Eight;
(b) Otherwise, grade as if 'assault'.

- 711 Interception and Disclosure of Wire or Oral Communications (re: 18 U.S.C. 2511)
Category Two.
- 712 Manufacture, Distribution, Possession, and Advertising of Wire or Oral Communication Intercepting Devices (re: 18 U.S.C. 2512)
(a) Category Three.
(b) Exception: If simple possession, grade as Category Two.

-----
*Terms marked by an asterisk are defined in Chapter Thirteen.

10/01/83

- 713 Unauthorized Opening of Mail
Category Two.

CHAPTER EIGHT - OFFENSES INVOLVING EXPLOSIVES AND WEAPONS

SUBCHAPTER A - EXPLOSIVES OFFENSES AND OTHER DANGEROUS ARTICLES

- 801 Unlawful Possession of Explosives; or Use of Explosives During a Felony
Grade according to offense intended, but not less than Category Five.
- 802 Mailing Explosives or Other Injurious Articles with Intent to Commit a Crime
Grade according to offense intended, but not less than Category Five.
- 803 Improper Transportation or Marking (re: 18 U.S.C. 832, 833, 834)
(a) If resulting in death or serious bodily injury, grade as Category
Four;
(b) Otherwise, grade as Category Three.

SUBCHAPTER B - FIREARMS

- 811 Possession by Prohibited Person (e.g., ex-felon)
Category Three.
- 812 Unlawful Possession or Manufacture of Sawed-off Shotgun, Machine Gun, Silencer, or Assassination kit*
(a) If silencer or assassination kit*, grade as Category Six;
(b) If sawed-off shotgun or machine gun, grade as Category Five.

[[Notes and Procedures. Consider unlawful possession of a weapon combined with other offenses under the multiple separate offense procedure of Chapter Thirteen]].

- 813 Unlawful Distribution of Weapons or Possession with Intent to Distribute
(a) If silencer(s) or assassination kit(s)*, grade as Category Six;
(b) If sawed-off shotgun(s) or machine gun(s), grade as Category Five;
(c) If multiple weapons (rifles, shotguns, or handguns), grade as Category
Four;
(d) If single weapon (rifle, shotgun, handgun), grade as Category Three.

CHAPTER NINE - OFFENSES INVOLVING ILLICIT DRUGS

SUBCHAPTER A - HEROIN AND OPIATE* OFFENSES

- 901 Distribution or Possession with Intent to Distribute
(a) If extremely large scale (e.g., involving 3 kilograms or more of 100% pure heroin, or equivalent amount), grade as Category Eight [except as noted in (c) below];
(b) If very large scale (e.g., involving 1 kilogram but less than 3 kilograms of 100% pure heroin, or equivalent amount), grade as Category Seven [except as noted in (c) below];
(c) Where the Commission finds that the offender had only a peripheral role*, grade conduct under (a) or (b) as Category Six;

*Terms marked by an asterisk are defined in Chapter Thirteen.

10/01/83

- (d) If large scale (e.g., involving 50-999 grams of 100% pure heroin, or equivalent amount), grade as Category Six [except as noted in (e) below];
- (e) Where the Commission finds that the offender had only a peripheral role*, grade conduct under (d) as Category Five.
- (f) If medium scale (e.g., involving 5-49 grams of 100% pure heroin, or equivalent amount), grade as Category Five;
- (g) If small scale (e.g., involving less than 5 grams of 100% pure heroin, or equivalent amount), grade as Category Four [except as noted in (h) below];
- (h) If evidence of opiate dependence and very small scale (e.g., involving less than 1.0 grams of 100% pure heroin, or equivalent amount), grade as Category Three.

902 Simple Possession
Category One.

SUBCHAPTER B - MARIHUANA AND HASHISH OFFENSES

911 Distribution or Possession with Intent to Distribute

- (a) If extremely large scale (e.g., involving 20,000 pounds or more of marihuana/6,000 pounds or more of hashish/600 pounds or more of hash oil), grade as Category Six [except as noted in (b) below];
- (b) Where the Commission finds that the offender had only a peripheral role*, grade conduct under (a) as Category Five;
- (c) If very large scale (e.g., involving 2,000-19,999 pounds of marihuana/600-5,999 pounds of hashish/60-599 pounds of hash oil), grade as Category Five;
- (d) If large scale (e.g., involving 200-1,999 pounds of marihuana/60-599 pounds of hashish/6-59.9 pounds of hash oil), grade as Category Four;
- (e) If medium scale (e.g., involving 50-199 pounds of marihuana/15-59.9 pounds of hashish/1.5-5.9 pounds of hash oil), grade as Category Three;
- (f) If small scale (e.g., involving 10-49 pounds of marihuana/3-14.9 pounds of hashish/.3-1.4 pounds of hash oil), grade as Category Two;
- (g) If very small scale (e.g., involving less than 10 pounds of marihuana/less than 3 pounds of hashish/less than .3 pounds of hash oil), grade as Category One.

912 Simple Possession
Category One.

SUBCHAPTER C - COCAINE OFFENSES

921 Distribution or Possession with Intent to Distribute

- (a) If very large scale (e.g., involving more than 1 kilogram of 100% purity, or equivalent amount), grade as Category Six [except as noted in (b) below];
- (b) Where the Commission finds that the offender had only a peripheral role*, grade conduct under (a) as Category Five;
- (c) If large scale (e.g., involving 100 grams-1 kilogram of 100% purity, or equivalent amount), grade as Category Five;
- (d) If medium scale (e.g., involving 5-99 grams of 100% purity, or equivalent amount), grade as Category Four;

*Terms marked by an asterisk are defined in Chapter Thirteen.

10/01/83

- (e) If small scale (e.g., involving 1.0-4.9 grams of 100% purity, or equivalent amount), grade as Category Three;
- (f) If very small scale (e.g., involving less than 1 gram of 100% purity, or equivalent amount), grade as Category Two.

922 Simple Possession
Category One.

SUBCHAPTER D - OTHER ILLICIT DRUG OFFENSES*

- 931 Distribution or Possession with Intent to Distribute
- (a) If very large scale (e.g., involving more than 200,000 doses), grade as Category Six [except as noted in (b) below];
  - (b) Where the Commission finds that the offender had only a peripheral role*, grade conduct under (a) as Category Five;
  - (c) If large scale (e.g., involving 20,000-200,000 doses), grade as Category Five;
  - (d) If medium scale (e.g., involving 1,000-19,999 doses), grade as Category Four;
  - (e) If small scale (e.g., involving 200-999 doses), grade as Category Three;
  - (f) If very small scale (e.g., involving less than 200 doses), grade as Category Two.

932 Simple Possession
Category One.

--- NOTES TO CHAPTER NINE

- (1) Grade manufacture of synthetic illicit drugs as listed above, but not less than Category Five.
- (2) 'Equivalent amounts' for the cocaine and opiate categories may be computed as follows: 1 gram of 100% pure is equivalent to 2 grams of 50% pure and 10 grams of 10% pure, etc.

CHAPTER TEN - OFFENSES INVOLVING NATIONAL DEFENSE

SUBCHAPTER A - TREASON AND RELATED OFFENSES

1001 Treason
Category Eight.

1002 Rebellion or Insurrection
Category Seven.

SUBCHAPTER B - SABOTAGE AND RELATED OFFENSES

1011 Sabotage
Category Eight.

- 1012 Enticing Desertion
- (a) In time of war or during a national defense emergency, grade as Category Four;
  - (b) Otherwise, grade as Category Three.

1013 Harboring or Aiding a Deserter
Category One.

-----
*Terms marked by an asterisk are defined in Chapter Thirteen.

10/01/83

SUBCHAPTER C - ESPIONAGE AND RELATED OFFENSES

1021 Espionage
Category Eight.

SUBCHAPTER D - SELECTIVE SERVICE OFFENSES

1031 Failure to Register, Report for Examination or Induction
(a) If committed during time of war or during a national defense emergency, grade as Category Four;
(b) If committed when draftees are being inducted into the armed services, grade as Category Three;
(c) Otherwise, grade as Category One.

SUBCHAPTER E - OTHER NATIONAL DEFENSE OFFENSES

1041 Offenses Involving Nuclear Energy
Unauthorized production, possession, or transfer of nuclear weapons or special nuclear material or receipt of or tampering with restricted data on nuclear weapons or special nuclear material, grade as Category Eight.

CHAPTER ELEVEN - OFFENSES INVOLVING ORGANIZED CRIME ACTIVITY, GAMBLING, OBSCENITY, SEXUAL EXPLOITATION OF CHILDREN, PROSTITUTION, AND NONGOVERNMENTAL BRIBERY

SUBCHAPTER A - ORGANIZED CRIME OFFENSES

1101 Racketeer Influence and Corrupt Organizations (re: 18 U.S.C. 1961-63)
Grade according to the underlying offense attempted, but not less than Category Five.

1102 Interstate or Foreign Travel or Transportation in Aid of Racketeering Enterprise (re: 18 U.S.C. 1952)
Grade according to the underlying offense attempted, but not less than Category Three.

SUBCHAPTER B - GAMBLING OFFENSES

1111 Gambling Law Violations - Operating or Employment in an Unlawful Business (re: 18 U.S.C. 1955)
(a) If large scale operation [e.g., Sports books (estimated daily gross more than $15,000); Horse books (estimated daily gross more than $4,000); Numbers bankers (estimated daily gross more than $2,000); Dice or card games (estimated daily 'house cut' more than $1,000)]; grade as Category Four;
(b) If medium scale operation [e.g., Sports books (estimated daily gross $5,000 - $15,000); Horse books (estimated daily gross $1,500 - $4,000); Numbers bankers (estimated daily gross $750 - $2,000); Dice or card games (estimated daily 'house cut' $400 - $1,000)]; grade as Category Three;

10/01/83

- (c) If small scale operation [e.g., Sports books (estimated daily gross less than $5,000); Horse books (estimated daily gross less than $1,500); Numbers bankers (estimated daily gross less than $750); Dice or card games (estimated daily 'house cut' less than $400)]; grade as Category Two;
- (d) Exception: Where it is established that the offender had no proprietary interest or managerial role, grade as Category One.

1112 Interstate Transportation of Wagering Paraphenalia (re: 18 U.S.C. 1953)
Category Three.

1113 Wire Transmission of Wagering Information (re: 18 U.S.C. 1084)
Grade as if 'operating a gambling business'.

1114 Operating or Owning a Gambling Ship (re: 18 U.S.C. 1082)
Category Three.

1115 Importing or Transporting Lottery Tickets; Mailing Lottery Tickets or Related Matter (re: 18 U.S.C. 1301, 1302)
(a) Grade as if 'operating a gambling business';
(b) Exception: If non-commercial, grade as Category One.

SUBCHAPTER C - OBSCENITY

1121 Mailing, Importing, or Transporting Obscene Matter
(a) If for commercial purposes, grade as Category Three;
(b) Otherwise, Category One.

1122 Broadcasting Obscene Language
Category One.

SUBCHAPTER D - SEXUAL EXPLOITATION OF CHILDREN

1131 Sexual Exploitation of Children* (re: 18 U.S.C. 2251, 2252)
(a) Category Six;
(b) Exception: Where the Commission finds the offender had only a peripheral role (e.g., a retailer receiving such material for resale but with no involvement in the production or wholesale distribution of such material), grade as Category Five.

SUBCHAPTER E - PROSTITUTION AND WHITE SLAVE TRAFFIC

1141 Interstate Transportation for Commercial Purposes
(a) If physical coercion, or involving person(s) of age less than 16, grade as Category Six;
(b) If involving person(s) of ages 16-17, grade as Category Five;
(c) Otherwise, grade as Category Four.

1142 Prostitution
Category One.

-----
*Terms marked by an asterisk are defined in Chapter Thirteen.

10/01/83

SUBCHAPTER F - NON-GOVERNMENTAL BRIBERY

1151 Bribery not Involving Federal, State, or Local Government Officials

- (a) If the value of the bribe or of the favor received (whichever is greater) is $20,000 or more, grade as Category Three; otherwise, grade as Category Two.
- (b) If the conduct involves bribery in a sporting contest, grade as Category Three.

SUBCHAPTER G - CURRENCY OFFENSES

1161 Currency Offenses (e.g., laundering money)

- (a) If very large scale (e.g., the estimated gross amount of currency involved is more than $500,000), grade as Category Six;
- (b) If large scale (e.g., the estimated gross amount of currency involved is more than $100,000 but not more than $500,000), grade as Category Five;
- (c) If medium scale (e.g., the estimated gross amount of currency involved is at least $20,000 but not more than $100,000), grade as Category Four;
- (d) If small scale (e.g., the estimated gross amount of currency involved is less than $20,000), grade as Category Three.

CHAPTER TWELVE - MISCELLANEOUS OFFENSES

If an offense behavior is not listed, the proper category may be obtained by comparing the severity of the offense behavior with those of similar offense behaviors listed in Chapters One - Eleven. If, and only if, an offense behavior cannot be graded by reference to Chapters One - Eleven, the following formula may be used as a guide.

Maximum Sentence Authorized by Statute [Not necessarily the sentence imposed]	Grading (Category)
< 2 yrs . . . . .	1
2 - 3 yrs . . . . .	2
4 - 5 yrs . . . . .	3
6 - 10 yrs. . . . .	4
11 - 20 yrs. . . . .	5
21 - 29 yrs. . . . .	6
30 yrs - life . . . . .	7

CHAPTER THIRTEEN - GENERAL NOTES AND DEFINITIONS

SUBCHAPTER A - GENERAL NOTES

1. If an offense behavior can be classified under more than one category, the most serious applicable category is to be used.

-----

10/01/83

2. If an offense behavior involved multiple separate offenses, the severity level may be increased. Exception: in cases graded as Category Seven, multiple separate offenses are to be taken into account by consideration of a decision above the guidelines rather than by increasing the severity level. [[Notes and Procedures. In certain instances, the guidelines specify how multiple offenses are to be rated. In offenses rated by monetary loss (e.g., theft and related offenses, counterfeiting, tax evasion) or drug offenses, the total amount of the property or drugs involved is used as the basis for the offense severity rating (e.g., a number of check thefts should ordinarily be treated according to the total loss, rather than as multiple separate offenses). In instances not specifically covered in the guidelines, the decision-makers must exercise discretion as to whether or not the multiple offense behavior is sufficiently aggravating to justify increasing the severity rating. The following chart is intended to provide guidance in assessing whether the severity of multiple offenses is sufficient to raise the offense severity level; it is not intended as a mechanical rule.

MULTIPLE SEPARATE OFFENSES

Severity	Points	Severity	Points
Category One	= 1/9	Category Five	= 9
Category Two	= 1/3	Category Six	= 27
Category Three	= 1	Category Seven	= 45
Category Four	= 3

Examples: 3 Category Five Offenses [3x(9)=27] = Category Six
 5 Category Five Offenses [5x(9)=45] = Category Seven
 2 Category Six Offenses [2x(27)=54] = Category Seven

The term 'multiple separate offenses' generally refers to offenses committed at different times. However, there are certain circumstances in which offenses committed at the same time are properly considered multiple separate offenses for the purpose of establishing the offense severity rating. These include (a) unrelated offenses, and (b) offenses involving the unlawful possession of weapons during commission of another offense.

Examples:

- (1) An offender commits a robbery (Category Five) in which he steals $80,000 (Category Four). Because the offenses occurred at the same time and are related, grade in the highest applicable category (Category Five) and not as multiple separate offenses.
- (2) An offender commits a robbery (Category Five) in which shots are fired to scare the bank employees (Category Six). Because the offenses occurred at the same time and are related, grade in the highest applicable category (Category Six) and not as multiple separate offenses.
- (3) An offender when arrested for smuggling three aliens is found also in possession of $8,000 worth of stolen goods. Even though the offenses were discovered at the same time, they are unrelated; therefore consideration under the multiple separate offenses procedure is appropriate.
- (4) An offender commits two robberies with a sawed-off shotgun. Grade under the multiple offense procedure as 3 Category Five offenses (3 x 9 = 27 points) = Category Six.]]

3. In cases where multiple sentences have been imposed (whether consecutive or concurrent, and whether aggregated or not) an offense severity rating shall be established to reflect the overall severity of the underlying criminal behavior. This rating shall apply whether or not any of the component sentences has expired.
4. The prisoner is to be held accountable for his own actions and actions done in concert with others; however, the prisoner is not to be held accountable for activities committed by associates over which the prisoner has no control and could not have been reasonably expected to foresee. [[Notes and Procedures. Example: An offender on one occasion steals $2000 worth of property and sells it to a fence, who is engaged in an ongoing operation. If it is not established that the offender was himself an active participant in the ongoing operation, he is to be held accountable only for the one incident]].
5. The following are examples of circumstances that may be considered as aggravating factors: extreme cruelty or brutality to a victim; the degree of permanence or likely permanence of serious bodily injury resulting from the offender's conduct; an offender's conduct while attempting to evade arrest that causes circumstances creating a significant risk of harm to other persons (e.g., causing a high speed chase or provoking the legitimate firing of a weapon by law enforcement officers).
6. The phrase 'may be considered an aggravating/mitigating factor' is used in this index to provide guidance concerning certain circumstances which may warrant a decision above or below the guidelines. This does not restrict consideration of above or below guidelines decisions only to these circumstances, nor does it mean that a decision above or below the guidelines is mandated in every such case.

SUBCHAPTER B - DEFINITIONS

1. 'Accessory after the fact' refers to the conduct of one who, knowing an offense has been committed, assists the offender to avoid apprehension, trial, or punishment (e.g., by assisting in disposal of the proceeds of an offense). Note: Where the conduct consists of concealing an offense by making false statements not under oath, grade as 'misprision of felony'. Where the conduct consists of harboring a fugitive, grade as 'harboring a fugitive'.
2. 'Assassination kit' refers to a disguised weapon designed to kill without attracting attention. Unlike other weapons such as sawed-off shotguns which can be used to intimidate, assassination kits are intended to be undetectable in order to make the victim and bystanders unaware of the threat. A typical assassination kit is usually, but not always, a firearm with a silencer concealed in a briefcase or similar disguise and fired without showing the weapon.
3. 'Bodily injury' refers to injury of a type normally requiring medical attention [e.g., broken bone(s), laceration(s) requiring stitches, severe bruises].

*Terms marked by an asterisk are defined in Chapter Thirteen.

4. 'Carnal knowledge' refers to sexual intercourse with a female who is less than 16 years of age and is not the wife of the offender.
5. 'Extortionate extension of credit' refers to any extension of credit with respect to which it is the understanding of the creditor and the debtor at the time it is made that delay in making repayment or failure to make repayment could result in the use of violence or other criminal means to cause harm to the person, reputation, or property of any person.
6. 'Failure to appear' refers to the violation of court imposed conditions of release pending trial, appeal, or imposition or execution of sentence by failure to appear before the court or to surrender for service of sentence.
7. 'Forcible felony' includes, but shall not be limited to, kidnaping, rape or sodomy, aircraft piracy or interference with a flight crew, arson or property destruction offenses, escape, robbery, extortion, or criminal entry offenses, and attempts to commit such offenses.
8. 'Involuntary manslaughter' refers to the unlawful killing of a human being without malice in the commission of an unlawful act not amounting to a felony, or in the commission in an unlawful manner, or without due caution and circumspection of a lawful act which might produce death.
9. 'Misprision of felony' refers to the conduct of one who, having knowledge of the actual commission of a felony, conceals and does not as soon as possible make known the same to some judge or other person in civil or military authority. The 'concealment' described above requires an act of commission (e.g., making a false statement to a law enforcement officer).
10. 'Murder' refers to the unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought. 'With malice aforethought' generally refers to a finding that the offender formed an intent to kill or do serious bodily harm to the victim without just cause or provocation.
11. 'Opiate' includes heroin, morphine, opiate derivatives, and synthetic opiate substitutes.
12. 'Other illicit drug offenses' include, but are not limited to, offenses involving the following: amphetamines, hallucinogens, barbiturates, methamphetamines, and phencyclidine (PCP).
13. 'Other medium of exchange' includes, but is not limited to, postage stamps, governmental money orders, or governmental coupons redeemable for cash or goods.
14. 'Peripheral role' in drug offenses refers to conduct such as that of a person hired as a deckhand on a marijuana boat, a person hired to help offload marijuana, a person with no special skills hired as a courier of drugs on a commercial airline flight, or a person hired as a chauffeur in a drug transaction. This definition does not include persons with decision-making or supervisory authority, persons with relevant special skills (e.g., a boat captain, chemist, or airplane pilot), or persons who finance such operations.

10/01/83

15. 'Protected person' refers to a person listed in 18 U.S.C. 351 (relating to Members of Congress), 1114 (relating to certain officers and employees of the United States), 1116 (relating to foreign officials, official guests, and internationally protected persons), or 1751 (relating to presidential assassination and officials in line of succession).
16. 'Serious bodily injury' refers to injury creating a substantial risk of death, major disability or loss of a bodily function, or disfigurement.
17. 'Serious bodily injury clearly intended' refers to a limited category of offense behaviors where the circumstances indicate that the bodily injury intended was serious (e.g., throwing acid in a person's face, or firing a weapon at a person) but where it is not established that murder was the intended object. Where the circumstances establish that murder was the intended object, grade as an 'attempt to murder'.
18. 'Sexual exploitation of children' refers to employing, using, inducing, enticing, or coercing a person less than 16 years of age to engage in any sexually explicit conduct for the purpose of producing a visual or print medium depicting such conduct with knowledge or reason to know that such visual or print medium will be distributed for sale, transported in interstate or foreign commerce, or mailed. It also includes knowingly transporting, shipping, or receiving such visual or print medium for the purposes of distribution for sale, or knowingly distributing for sale such visual or print medium.
19. 'Trafficking in stolen property' refers to receiving stolen property with intent to sell.
20. 'Value of the property' refers to the estimated replacement cost to the victim.
21. 'Voluntary manslaughter' refers to the unlawful killing of a human being without malice upon a sudden quarrel or heat of passion."

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-34.230 Communication With Parole Commission

In order to insure that all pertinent information is made available to the Pardon Attorney and the Parole Commission when U.S. Attorneys contact these offices in connection with individuals who are subject to their jurisdictions, it is requested that such contacts be by letter over the signature of the U.S. Attorney, with a copy of the letter forwarded to the Criminal Division. This procedure will enable the Criminal Division to check its files and personnel for other pertinent information which should be considered by the Pardon Attorney or the Parole Commission.

9-34.240 Period of Supervision

A prisoner released on parole remains under supervision to the expiration of the maximum term of sentence. 18 U.S.C. §4201(a). However, the Parole Commission has the power to terminate supervision at an earlier date, 18 U.S.C. §4211(a), and must terminate supervision five years after the parolee's release on parole unless the Commission finds after a hearing that it is likely that the parolee will engage in future criminal conduct. 18 U.S.C. §4211(c).

9-34.250 Mandatory Release

A prisoner who is denied parole serves his/her term less good-time deductions, and is then released under parole supervision for the remainder of his/her maximum term less 180 days. 18 U.S.C. §4164. This form of release is called mandatory release.

9-34.260 Violator Warrants

In the case of a prisoner released on parole, or mandatory release, a summons or a warrant charging violation of the conditions of parole may be issued by the Parole Commission. 18 U.S.C. §4213.

If the misconduct constituting the violation of parole is a new criminal offense punishable by imprisonment and results in a conviction, either state or federal, the revocation of parole causes the parolee to forfeit sentence credit for the time he/she spent on parole. 18 U.S.C. §4210(b)(2); see Harris v. Day, 649 F.2d 755 (10th Cir. 1981). If the misconduct is not also the subject of a separate criminal conviction, however, the time spent on parole is not forfeited.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

A federal court has no power to direct that a sentence shall run concurrently with the time owing as a parole violator under a previous sentence unless the Parole Commission has already ordered that the parole be revoked. 18 U.S.C. §4210. See Zerbst v. Kidwell, 304 U.S. 359 (1938); Tippit v. Squier, 145 F.2d 211 (9th Cir. 1944).

9-34.270 Release on Bail

When a parolee has been arrested as a parole violator, a federal court has no inherent power to order the release of the parolee on bail pending his/her parole revocation hearing. If a prisoner has filed a habeas corpus petition, the court has the power to grant his/her release on bail pending the disposition of the habeas corpus petition, but only upon a showing of extraordinary circumstances. Luther v. Molina, 627 F.2d 71 (7th Cir. 1980); Galante v. Warden, 573 F.2d 707 (2d Cir. 1977).

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-34.400 SENTENCING REFORM ACT OF 1984

9-34.410 Introduction

The Sentencing Reform Act of 1984, when it is implemented, will completely reform the federal sentencing system. The new system is intended to promote the goals of fairness--to the public and to defendants --and uniformity in sentencing by (1) providing a comprehensive and consistent statement of the purposes of sentencing and of the sentences available to achieve those purposes; (2) requiring judges to impose sentences pursuant to detailed guidelines established by an independent Sentencing Commission; (3) permitting defense appeals of sentences above the guideline ranges and permitting government appeals of sentences below the guideline ranges; and (4) abolishing parole. Although most of the Act will not become effective until November 1, 1986, the repeal of the Youth Corrections Act took effect on October 12, 1984. See USAM 9-8.200. However, the Department's position is that the Act continues to be applicable to defendants whose offenses were committed before the latter date.

9-34.420 The New Sentencing Scheme, Policy [Reserved]

9-34.430 Criminal Division Contacts

Questions on the sentencing chapter, other than those concerning fine collection, should be directed to attorneys in the General Litigation and Legal Advice Section (FTS 724-7081).

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-37.000 HABEAS CORPUS

9-37.001 Availability of Writ

A federal prisoner may contest the legality of his/her custody (conditions of confinement, duration of sentence) by petitioning the district court for writs of habeas corpus (28 U.S.C. §2241). Such petition must be directed to the court of the judicial district in which the prisoner's custodian (warden or jailer) may be reached by service of process. 28 U.S.C. §2243. See Braden v. 30th Judicial Circuit Court, 410 U.S. 484, 495-501 (1973), (the court distinguishes between the actual custodian for jurisdiction and venue purposes.) The Attorney General, Director of the Bureau of Prisons and the Chairman of the Parole Commission are usually not the custodians of the petitioning prisoner. McCoy v. U.S. Board of Parole, 537 F.2d 962, 964 (8th Cir. 1976).

When a petition is followed by award of the writ or a rule to show cause, and it appears that the identical issue or issues were disposed of on a previous application for a writ, and that the current petition contains no new issue, the U.S. Attorney should file a motion to dismiss on that ground in conjunction with (his) return or answer. Such procedure is proper under authority of 28 U.S.C. §2244. ← his/her

In addition, the defenses set forth in the following USAM sections should be considered in filing a return to a habeas corpus action.

9-37.110 Habeas Corpus Relief of (Servicemen) Denied Discharge as Conscientious Objectors ← Members of the Service

9-37.111 Exhaustion of Military Judicial Remedies

There is no requirement that a (serviceman) exhaust military judicial remedies before seeking habeas corpus relief as a conscientious objector. In other words, the pendency of military courtmartial proceedings has no bearing on the availability of habeas corpus relief for a (serviceman) seeking discharge from the service as a conscientious objector. Parisi v. Davidson, 405 U.S. 34 (1972). The reason for this is that the relief sought by the petitioner, i.e., honorable discharge from the service, would not be available to the petitioner "with reasonable promptness and certainty" ← member of the service ← member of the service through the machinery of the military judicial system..." Parisi v. Davidson, supra at 41-42;

9-37.112 Exhaustion of Military Administrative Remedies

The decision of the military will be deemed ripe for judicial review upon the final action of the Department of the Army, Conscientious Objector Review Board, as delegate of the Secretary of the Army; Chief, Office of Personnel, as delegate of the Commandant of the Coast Guard; Commandant of the Marine Corps; Commander, Naval Military Personnel Command, Department of the Navy; the Director, Secretary of the Air Force/Personnel Council (SAF/PC), in the case of officers, or, in the case of enlisted personnel, action by Chief of Operation Programs, Enlisted Separation Branch (MPC/MPCAKE). Boards for the Correction of Military Records also exist in the various military branches. An application to these military boards is deemed to be an extraordinary remedy. While such procedures remain available, exhaustion of such a remedy should not be insisted on by the government as a precondition to judicial review. See Montgomery v. Rumsfeld, 572 F.2d 250 (9th Cir. 1978); Hayes v. Secretary of Defense, 515 F.2d 668 (D.C. Cir. 1975); Ludlum v. Resor, 507 F.2d 398 (1st Cir. 1974).

9-37.120 Bureau of Prisons Policy Administrative Remedy Procedure

A. The Bureau of Prisons has established a comprehensive administrative procedure to review a prisoner's complaints which relate to any aspect of imprisonment. 28 C.F.R. §542.13.

B. A prisoner should exhaust these administrative procedures before seeking habeas corpus relief. Bradshaw v. Carlson, 682 F.2d 1050, 1052 (3d Cir. 1981); Kyle v. Hansberry, 677 F.2d 1386, 1391 (11th Cir. 1982).

9-37.130 Parole Commission Administrative Appeal Procedure

A. The U.S. Parole Commission has established comprehensive administrative review procedures. See 28 C.F.R. §§2.25, 2.26.

B. Prisoners must exhaust those administrative remedies before seeking habeas corpus relief. Ruwiwat v. Smith, 701 F.2d 844, 845 (9th Cir. 1983); Guida v. Nelson, 603 F.2d 261, 262 (2d Cir. 1979); U.S. ex rel. Saunders v. Arnold, 535 F.2d 848, 851 (3d Cir. 1976).

9-37.200 LACK OF PROPER JURISDICTION/VENUE

9-37.210 District for Venue Purposes

The most appropriate district for venue purposes is the one in which the prisoner is confined or where the immediate custodian is located.

A. The jurisdiction of the district court is dependant on the ability of the court issuing the writ to exercise personal jurisdiction over the custodian. 28 U.S.C. §2241(a); Braden v. 30th Judicial Circuit Court, supra.

B. The Board of Parole is not the appropriate party in a habeas corpus case, and venue is best placed in the district where the prisoner is confined. Billiteri v. Board of Parole, 541 F.2d 938, 948 (2d Cir. 1976).

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

A prisoner may attack the legality of the imposition of sentence (as opposed to the legality of the execution of sentence) by filing a motion to vacate, correct or set aside the sentence under 28 U.S.C. §2255. Such a motion should be made in the district where the court imposed the sentences.

General materials on criminal and civil forfeiture may be found in the Drug Agents' Guide to Forfeiture of Assets (prepared by the Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA)), which is available for purchase from the Government Printing Office, and in Criminal Forfeitures Under the RICO and Continuing Criminal Enterprise Statutes in the Handbook on the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984 and Other Criminal Statutes Enacted by the 98th Congress (prepared by the Criminal Division), and in Forfeitures Volume I: Introduction to Civil Statutes (prepared by the Asset Forfeiture Office, Criminal Division). In addition, the Asset Forfeiture Office is planning a new manual on forfeiture procedures with additional discussions of the provisions of the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984 relating to forfeiture and the Department of Justice Assets Forfeiture Fund. In the meantime, attorneys with forfeiture questions are encouraged to contact the Asset Forfeiture Office at FTS 272-6423. Its mailing address is:

9-38.100 OFFERS IN COMPROMISE OF FORFEITURE

9-38.110 Authority to Compromise Forfeiture

Attorney General Order No. 1034-83 and Criminal Division Directive No. 116, effective October 26, 1983, have re delegated the authority of the Assistant Attorney General of the Criminal Division under 28 C.F.R. §§0.160, 0.162, 0.164, and 0.171 to close or compromise civil and criminal forfeiture cases (other than bail bond forfeitures) to the Director of the Asset Forfeiture Office. They also redelegate to the U.S. Attorneys the authority of the Assistant Attorney General to close a forfeiture case or to accept or reject offers in compromise made in relation to some forfeiture cases. U.S. Attorneys are required to "consult" with the Asset Forfeiture Office before accepting or rejecting an offer in compromise or plea bargain in which the difference between the actual value of the property and the proposed settlement is $60,000 or more. Where the difference between the actual value of the property and the proposed settlement exceeds $750,000 or 10 percent of the original claim, whichever is greater, approval by the Deputy Attorney General is required in accordance with 28 C.F.R. §§0.160 and 0.161. Authorization requests for such settlements are to be processed through the Asset Forfeiture Office.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

When the agency or agencies involved have objected in writing to the proposed closing or to the acceptance or rejection of an offer in compromise, and the matter cannot be resolved, or when the U.S. Attorney believes that the matter should receive special attention because of a question of law or policy or for any other reason, it must be decided by the Assistant Attorney General. Such matters should be submitted to the Asset Forfeiture Office in the first instance, which will make a recommendation to the Assistant Attorney General.

9-38.200 REMISSION OR MITIGATION OF FORFEITURE

Attorney General Order No. 1034-83 and Criminal Division Directive No. 116, effective October 26, 1983, have redelegated the authority of the Assistant Attorney General of the Criminal Division to grant or deny petitions for remission or mitigation of forfeiture to the Director of the Asset Forfeiture Office.

9-38.210 Procedure

Seized property appraised by the seizing agency at $100,000 or less when seized is subject to administrative forfeiture by the seizing agency unless a claimant brings the matter into court by filing a claim and a cost bond. Petitions for remission or mitigation of administrative forfeitures should be submitted to the seizing agency. See 28 C.F.R. §9.4. Seized property having an appraised value exceeding $100,000 when seized and seized property for which a claimant has filed a claim and a cost bond are subject to judicial forfeiture, and petitions for the remission or mitigation of such property, should be submitted to the U.S. Attorney for the judicial district in which the property has been seized. See 28 C.F.R. §9.3. All petitions submitted should conform to the requirements set forth in 28 C.F.R. §§9.3(a) and 9.5(a).

Upon receipt of a petition for remission or mitigation of forfeiture, the U.S. Attorney should direct the seizing agency to investigate and submit a report to him/her on the merits of the petition if such investigation is necessary to determine the merits of the petition. A copy of this report, the petition, and a recommendation from the seizing agency and the U.S. Attorney as to allowance or denial of the petition should be forwarded to the Asset Forfeiture Office, Post Office Box 521, Ben Franklin Station, Washington, D.C. 20044. The telephone number is FTS 272-6423. The Asset Forfeiture Office will not accept a petition in cases where a similar petition has been administratively denied by the seizing agency prior to the referral of the case to the U.S. Attorney for forfeiture proceedings. See 28 C.F.R. §9.3(g). In judicial forfeiture cases other than those under the Internal Revenue liquor laws, the Director of the Asset Forfeiture Office will consider petitions for remission or mitigation until the property is sold, placed in official use, or otherwise disposed of. In judicial forfeitures under the Internal Revenue liquor laws, petitions will be considered only prior to the time a decree of forfeiture is entered; thereafter, district courts have exclusive jurisdiction over the property. See 28 C.F.R. §9.3(h); 18 U.S.C. §3617.

The Asset Forfeiture Office will notify the petitioner or his/her attorney, and the U.S. Attorney, of the disposition of the petition in accordance with 28 C.F.R. §9.3(d) or (e). If the petition is denied, the petitioner has 20 days from the date of the notice to submit one request for reconsideration (based on evidence not previously considered) to the Director of the Asset Forfeiture Office and to submit a copy of such request to the U.S. Attorney. See 28 C.F.R. §§9.3(j) through (m). Upon receipt of a copy of a request for reconsideration, the U.S. Attorney should withhold further action taken on the request by the Director of the Asset Forfeiture Office. If the U.S. Attorney does not receive a copy of the request for reconsideration within 20 days of the date of the notice of denial, he/she should proceed with the forfeiture. See 28 C.F.R. §9.3(k).

Within 3 months after the disposal of forfeited property a petition for restoration of the proceeds of sale (or for value where the property has been retained or delivered for official use) may be submitted in the same manner as a petition for remission or mitigation. In accordance with 28 C.F.R. §9.3(f), petitions for restoration may be submitted only where the petitioner was in circumstances which prevented him/her from knowing of the property's seizure prior to the declaration of forfeiture.

RE: Administrative Forfeiture of Real Property

NOTE: 1. This is issued pursuant to USAM 1-1.550.
2. Distribute to Holders of Title 9.
3. Insert at end of Title 9.

AFFECTS: USAM 9-38.211

PURPOSE: This bluesheet sets forth new policy requiring that all real property forfeiture under all laws that allow such forfeitures, including 18 U.S.C. §2245 and 21 U.S.C. §881, shall proceed judicially.

The following is a new section:

9-38.211 Administrative Forfeiture of Real Property

The enactment of the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984, Pub. L. 98-473, broadened the categories of real property forfeitable to the United States. For example, 21 U.S.C. §881(a) (7) provides for the forfeiture of real property that was "used or intended to be used . . . to commit or to facilitate the commission of [a felony under title 21 of the United States Code]." In addition, the customs laws that govern most civil forfeiture actions were amended to allow for the administrative forfeiture of property with an appraised value of $100,000 or less, 19 U.S.C. §1607.

Administrative forfeitures are by definition uncontested and are conducted solely by the investigative agency, primarily the Drug Enforcement Administration and Federal Bureau of Investigation. If a party with an interest in the property seeks to contest the forfeiture, the party must file with the investigative agency a claim to the property and a cost bond. The matter is thereafter referred to the appropriate United States Attorney for initiation of a judicial forfeiture action.

The attendant increase in administrative forfeitures of real property has proved to be a mixed blessing. First, the number of properties forfeited administratively has not been as great as we first expected. Experience has shown that a party with an interest in real property will generally file a claim and bond thereby obtaining a judicial resolution of the forfeiture.

Second, the United States has been unsuccessful in selling for fair market value the real property forfeited administratively. The United States Marshals Service, the agency charged with the disposal of the majority of forfeited real property, seeks to sell property in a number of ways, ranging from auction to a sale negotiated by a real estate broker. Regardless of the method of sale used, in most instances the buyer must obtain financing in order to purchase the property. The procurement of title insurance by the buyer for the protection of the lending institution is a condition precedent to obtaining the requested financing.

It has come to the government's attention that title insurance companies have refused to issue title insurance on real property forfeited administratively. The net result of such refusal is either the stock piling of forfeited real estate resulting in increased expenses for the United States and a deprivation of the proceeds of sale to the Assets Forfeiture Fund, or a cash auction of the property for far less than its fair market value.

Department personnel and various Assistant United States Attorneys have contacted numerous title insurance companies throughout the country in an effort to resolve this problem. Notwithstanding attempts to convince the companies of the legality of administrative forfeitures and assurances that the due process rights of all known parties-in-interest have not been abridged, the United States has been unsuccessful in getting any national title insurance company to agree to issue title insurance on property forfeited to the United States administratively.

When this problem first came to light, the Department suggested the Marshals Service request that the appropriate United States Attorney institute a quiet title action in order to obtain a title acceptable to the title insurance companies. Such actions require notification of the same parties notified in the initial administrative forfeiture action and have often resulted in a rehearing of the forfeiture. Additionally, the Asset Forfeiture Office has been informed that many Assistant United States Attorneys have refused to institute such actions.

In order to resolve this problem, it has been determined that henceforth all real property forfeitures under all laws that allow such forfeitures, including 18 U.S.C. §2254 and 21 U.S.C. §881, shall proceed judicially. It is not anticipated that this policy will result in a significant increase in case load for any United States Attorney's Office.

The Criminal Division has conveyed this change in policy to all Department agencies. In addition, the United States Attorney in each district should contact all applicable law enforcement agencies in that district to ensure that this policy is fully adhered to and disseminated.

All questions regarding this matter should be directed to the Director of the Asset Forfeiture Office, Criminal Division.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-39.000 CONTEMPT OF COURT

9-39.010 General Definition of Contempt

Contempt of court may be generally defined as an act of disobedience or disrespect towards the judicial branch of the Government, or an interference with its orderly process. It is an offense against a court of justice or a person to whom the judicial functions of the sovereignty have been delegated.

9-39.100 CRIMINAL VERSUS CIVIL CONTEMPT

Since different substantive and procedural rules have been held to apply to civil and criminal contempts, distinctions between the two forms of contempt must be noted.

9-39.110 Tests for Distinguishing

9-39.111 Nature of the Relief Sought

A contempt is criminal where punishment by way of fine or imprisonment is deemed imperative to vindicate the authority of the court. In contrast, civil contempt is remedial, rather than punitive, serves only the purpose of the party litigant, and is intended to coerce compliance with an order of the court or to compensate for losses or damages caused by noncompliance. Shillitani v. United States, 384 U.S. 364, 368-70 (1966); Nye v. United States, 313 U.S. 33, 42 (1941); Gompers v. Bucks Stove and Range Co., 221 U.S. 418, 442 (1911); Carlson Fuel Co. v. United Mine Workers, 517 F.2d 1348, 1349 (4th Cir. 1975); In Re Rumaker, 646 F.2d 870 (5th Cir. 1980); United States v. Powers, 629 F.2d 619 (9th Cir. 1980); United States v. North, 621 F.2d 1255 (3d Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 866 (1981); Falstaff Brewing Corp. v. Miller Brewing Co., 702 F.2d 770 (9th Cir. 1983).

9-39.112 Mechanical Distinction

A Proceeding in criminal contempt is a separate and independent proceeding at law from the main cause, with the public on one side and the defendant on the other. Proceedings in civil contempt are usually between the original parties and are instituted and tried as part of the main cause or as a supplemental proceeding thereto. Bray v. United States, 423 U.S.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

73 (1975); Gompers v. Bucks Stove and Range Co., supra, 221 U.S. at 444-45; Parker v. United States, 153 F.2d 66, 70 (1st Cir. 1946).

9-39.113 Purging (Doing those acts, whether of a negative or affirmative nature, which were required by the court.)

The general rule is that purging of contempt is not a complete defense in a criminal contempt action. This is for the reason that the primary aim of a criminal contempt action is vindication of the authority of the court and punishment for disobedience already accomplished. Consequently, a person found guilty of criminal contempt may be sentenced to a fixed and definite term of imprisonment, or be required to pay an unconditional fine. United States v. Shipp, 203 U.S. 563 (1906); Skinner v. White, 505 F.2d 685, 689 (5th Cir. 1974).

In a civil contempt action, the issue of purging is determined by whether the action is coercive or compensatory in nature. A "coercive civil" contempt action is one wherein the principal object is respondent's compliance with the court decree. This is to be contrasted with a "compensatory civil" contempt action wherein the principal object is the receipt of an award or compensation. The contemnor in a coercive civil contempt action possesses the "keys to his own cell" since he may not be sentenced to a fixed or definite term of imprisonment or subjected to an unconditional fine. Penfield Co. v. SEC, 330 U.S. 585, 595 (1947); Gompers v. Buck Stove and Range Co., supra, 221 U.S. at 441-42; Duell v. Duell, 178 F.2d 683, 685-86 (D.C. Cir. 1949); Parker v. United States, supra, 153 F.2d at 70 (1st Cir.); In Re Nevitt, 117 F. 448, 461 (8th Cir. 1902). An unconditional award or fine may, however, be imposed in a compensatory civil contempt action. McComb v. Jacksonville Paper Co., 336 U.S. 187, 191 (1949); United States v. United Mine Workers of America, 330 U.S. 258, 303-04 (1947); Backo v. Local 281, United Brothers of Carpenters and Joiners, 438 F.2d 176, 182 (2d Cir. 1970), cert. denied, 404 U.S. 858 (1971); Parker v. United States, supra, 153 F.2d 66 (1st Cir.).

9-39.120 Characterization of the Action When Both Criminal and Civil Contempt Elements are Present

When a contempt action is not clearly specified as criminal or civil and a single order is entered granting both punitive and remedial relief, the criminal feature of the order is dominant and fixes its character for purposes of review. Penfield Co. v. SEC, supra, 330 U.S. at 591; Union Tool Co. v. Wilson, 259 U.S. 107, 110 (1922); Falstaff Brewing Corp. v. Miller Brewing Co., 702 F.2d 770, 778 (9th Cir. 1983).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-39.200 INDIRECT VERSUS DIRECT CONTEMPT

A contempt is indirect when it occurs out of the presence of the court, thereby requiring the court to rely upon the testimony of third parties for proof of the offense. It is direct when it occurs under the court's own eye and within its hearing. United States v. Peterson, 456 F.2d 1135, 1139 (10th Cir. 1972); United States v. Marshall, 451 F.2d 372, 373 (9th Cir. 1971); United States v. Willet, 432 F.2d 202, 204 (4th Cir. 1970).

9-39.300 INDIRECT CRIMINAL CONTEMPT

9-39.310 Institution of the Action

9.39.311 Federal Jurisdiction and Venue

Although the courts possess an inherent power to enforce obedience to their orders so that they may properly perform their functions, Myers v. United States, 264 U.S. 95, 103 (1924), Congress has placed statutory limitations upon the exercise of this power. Nye v. United States, supra, 313 U.S. at 45. All forms of contempt, whether they be delineated as criminal, civil, indirect or direct, must fall within one of the three categories of misbehavior described in 18 U.S.C. §401. Indirect contempts come within paragraph (2) of 18 U.S.C. §401, paragraph (3) of 18 U.S.C. §401 and the "so near thereto" clause of paragraph (1) of 18 U.S.C. §401. Direct contempts are confined to the "in presence" clause of paragraph (1) of 18 U.S.C. §401.

The court wherein proper venue or federal jurisdiction exists in an 18 U.S.C. §401 proceeding has been generally agreed to be the court which rendered the decree and not the court located in the district where the violation occurred. Myers v. United States, supra, 264 U.S. at 101; Stiller v. Hardman, 324 F.2d 626, 628 (2d Cir. 1963); Sullivan v. United States, 4 F.2d 100, 101 (8th Cir. 1925); Dunham v. United States, 289 F. 376, 378 (5th Cir. 1923).

9-39.312 Notice Under Rule 42(b) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure

An indirect criminal contempt action must be instituted pursuant to the notice requirements set forth in FED. R. CRIM.P. 42(b). It need not be instituted by a criminal indictment, Green v. United States, 356 U.S. 165

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

(1958); consequently, the sufficiency of a criminal contempt petition filed under FED. R. CRIM.P. 42(b) is not to be tested by the more stringent standards set for an indictment. Bullock v. United States, 265 F.2d 683, 691-92 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 360 U.S. 909 (1959). Furthermore, notice under FED. R. CRIM.P. 42(b) need not be as precise or as detailed as the certificate which the judge is required to prepare in a summary contempt proceeding under FED. R. CRIM.P. 42(a). United States v. Robinson, 449 F.2d 925, 930 n. 8 (9th Cir. 1971). Formal notice is not required where the defendant has actual knowledge of the nature of the contempt proceedings. In re Sadin, 509 F.2d 1252 (2d Cir. 1975); United States v. Handler, 476 F.2d 709 (2d Cir. 1973). However, rather than risk the possibility of misunderstanding, the notice requirements of FED. R. CRIM.P. 42(b) should be strictly complied with. See Universal City Studios v. N.Y. Broadway International Corp., 705 F.2d 94 (2d Cir. 1983). Cf. United States v. North, 621 F.2d 1255, n. 7 (3d Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 866 (1981).

In the event a defendant deems the charges made in the criminal contempt petition to be too indefinite his remedy is to move the court for a bill of particulars. Fox v. United States, 77 F.2d 210 (4th Cir. 1935), cert. denied, 298 U.S. 642 (1936); Conley v. United States, 59 F.2d 929, 935 (8th Cir. 1932).

The petition under FED. R. CRIM.P. 42(b) must satisfy the basic requirements of "fair notice." United States v. United Mine Workers of America, supra, 330 U.S. at 298-300. It must also state the "essential facts" constituting the criminal contempt charged. United States v. J. Myers Schine, 260 F.2d 552, 557 (2d Cir. 1958), cert. denied, 358 U.S. 934 (1959); Carlson v. United States, 209 F.2d 209, 218 (1st Cir. 1954). The words "criminal contempt" need not be used in the petition or rule to show cause, so long as the contemnor realizes that a criminal contempt prosecution is contemplated. United States v. Joyce, 498 F.2d 592, 595 (7th Cir. 1974).

Although verification of the petition may be based upon information and belief, United States v. United Mine Workers of America, supra, 330 U.S. at 296, it is considered good practice for the government to file an affidavit with the petition. National Labor Relations Board v. Arcade-Sunshine Co., 122 F.2d 964, 965 (D.C. Cir. 1941).

FED. R. CRIM.P. 42(b) requires that the notice allow a "reasonable time for the preparation of a defense." A "reasonable time" will vary according to the circumstances of each case, but in no event can the time be reduced below the minimum needed adequately to prepare a defense. Nevertheless, a short time can be sufficient time. United States v. Hutchinson, 633 F.2d 754 (9th Cir. 1980); United States v. Hawkins, 501 F.2d 1029 (9th

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Cir.), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 1079 (1974); In Re Sadin, supra; In Re Lewis, 501 F.2d 418 (9th Cir. 1974); United States v. Alter, 482 F.2d 1016, 1023 (9th Cir. 1973).

When the contemnor's defenses raise complex legal issues or there is an indication that an evidentiary hearing may be required to resolve factual issues, the five-day notice period prescribed by FED. R. CRIM.P. 45(d) should be adopted as the standard, absent a showing by the government of some compelling need to shorten time and absent a showing by the contemnor of some reason why a longer time is needed to prepare a defense. Compelling need for reducing time is not shown by the fact alone that the alleged contemnor is a witness in a pending grand jury investigation. In Re Vigil, 524 F.2d 209 (10th Cir. 1975); United States v. Alter, supra, 482 F.2d at 1023 (9th Cir. 1973).

9-39.313 Probable Cause of a Willful Violation

It is unclear as to whether probable cause that a willful violation has occurred is a condition precedent to the commencement of a criminal contempt action. Initially, it should be noted that the vast majority of criminal contempt decisions make no mention of such a requirement. However, in United States v. Kelsey-Hayes Co., 476 F.2d 265 (6th Cir. 1973), the court dismissed the case prior to trial on the basis of its determination that there was a lack of probable cause that a willful violation had occurred. In In Re United Corporation, 166 F.Supp. 343 (D. Del. 1958), it was held to be within the court's discretion to require a showing of probable cause before appointing an attorney to prosecute a criminal contempt action which was initiated by a private party, as opposed to the United States.

9-39.314 Necessity of a Demand for Compliance with the Decree

The prevailing view is that the petitioner is not required to attempt to obtain compliance with the decree before filing a criminal contempt action for the reason that an act of criminal contempt once committed may not be purged. In re Curtis' petition, 240 F.Supp. 475, 483 (W.D. S.C. 1965), aff'd., 362 F.2d 999 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 386 U.S. 914 (1966). Accordingly, a court may punish a party for criminal contempt even though the party eventually complies with the order. Gompers v. Bucks Stove and Range Co., supra, 221 U.S. at 452. However, in United States v. Kelsey-Hayes Co., supra, the court noted, in the course of granting a motion to dismiss prior to trial, that its decision was prompted in part by what it contended to be the lack of fairness emanating from the failure of the government to attempt to obtain compliance with the decree prior to commencing the criminal proceeding.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-39.315 Use of a Single Petition to Institute Both a Civil and Criminal Contempt Action

Although a single petition may be used to institute both a civil and a criminal contempt action directed at the same transaction or series of transactions, it has been held that the better practice is to file the petitions for such actions separately. Monroe Body Co. v. Herzoq, 13 F.2d 705 (6th Cir. 1926), modified, 18 F.2d 578 (1927). The petition, in the event that civil and criminal contempt actions are filed together, must satisfy the requirements of FED. R. CRIM.P. 42(b).

9-39.316 Rule of the Grand Jury

In Green v. United States, supra, 356 U.S. at 187, the Supreme Court held that criminal contempt actions need not be instituted by an indictment within the meaning of the Fifth Amendment of the United States Constitution. Although an indictment by a grand jury is not imperative in order to institute a criminal contempt action, such an action may be instituted by an indictment. United States v. Snyder, 428 F.2d 520, 522 (9th Cir. 1970), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 903 (1970); United States v. Bukowski, 435 F.2d 1094, 1103 (7th Cir. 1970), cert. denied, 401 U.S. 911 (1971); Carlson v. United States, supra, 209 F.2d at 218 (1st Cir.); United States v. Goldfarb, 167 F.2d 735 (2d Cir. 1948). In such a case, however, the indictment must comply with the notice requirements of Rule 42(b). United States v. Mensik, 440 F.2d 1232 (4th Cir. 1971); In re Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen of N. America, 402 F.Supp. 725 (E.D. Wis. 1975). Cases have indicated that it may be objectionable to proceed by way of indictment because the interjection of an independent body into the contempt process might interfere with or impede judicial disposition of such matters. United States v. Levya, 513 F.2d 774, 775 (5th Cir. 1975).

9-39.317 Persons Against Whom the Action May Be Commenced

To be held in criminal contempt for violation of a court order, the defendant must be an original party, one legally identified with an original party, or an aider and abettor of one of the above enumerated persons. Backo v. Local 281, United Brothers of Carpenters and Joiners, 438 F.2d 176, 180-81 (2d Cir. 1970), cert. denied, 404 U.S. 858 (1971); Reich v. United States, 239 F.2d 134, 137 (1st Cir. 1956); cert. denied, 352 U.S. 1004

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

(1957). But see, Manness v. Meyers, 419 U.S. 449 (1975) (attorney giving good faith legal advice not to be found in contempt).

9-39.318 Role of the Prosecutor

Prosecutive participation is ordinarily necessary to assist the court in the presentation of a criminal contempt case. The procedural requirements of FED. R. CRIM.P. 42(b), and those such as trial by jury imposed judicially under due process considerations, give rise to the need for presentation of the evidence by an officer of the court appointed for prosecutive purposes. The U.S. Attorney naturally assumes the role of prosecutor when he initiates an application for a show cause order under FED. R. CRIM.P. 42(b). However, in a number of circumstances involving the disobedience of judicial authority outside the presence of the court, contempt proceedings are initiated sua sponte by the court or by private litigants for whose benefit such orders have issued. In the great majority of cases the dedication of the executive branch to the preservation of respect for judicial authority makes the acceptance by the U.S. Attorney of the court's request to prosecute a mere formality; however, there may be sound reasons in a given case for the U.S. Attorney to decline participation in the proceedings and for the prosecution to be conducted on behalf of the court by private counsel appointed by the court for this purpose. On a case-by-case basis, the U.S. Attorney should evaluate not only the propriety of his/her participation in 18 U.S.C. §401 proceedings, but also the interest of the government as a litigant vis-a-vis the clear duty of the U.S. Attorney to preserve respect for the authority of the federal court upon which most clearly successful law enforcement relies.

he/she

9-39.320 Defenses

9-39.321 Negation of Essential Elements

A. Lack of requisite intent

It is generally agreed that some kind of wrongful intent is required to sustain a criminal contempt conviction. McComb v. Jacksonville Paper Co., 336 U.S. 187, 191 (1949); see also, Falstaff Brewing Corp. v. Miller Brewing Co., 702 F.2d 770, 782-783 (9th Cir. 1983). There must be a willful, contumacious, or reckless state of mind to warrant conviction for criminal contempt. In Re Joyce, 506 F.2d 373 (5th Cir. 1975). In many cases it has been held that general criminal intent is all that is required to satisfy the scienter element in a criminal contempt action. United States v. Fidanean, 465 F.2d 755 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 409 U.S. 1054

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

(1972); United States v. Custer Channel Wing Corporation, 376 F.2d 675, 680 (4th Cir. 1967), cert. denied, 389 U.S. 850. That the acts were volitional and done with an awareness that they were unlawful shows a sufficient degree of intent, regardless of motive. See, United States v. Patrick, 542 F.2d 381, 389 (7th Cir. 1976), cert. denied, 430 U.S. 931 (1977). On the other hand, authority exists for the proposition that a specific or flagrant intent to violate a decree is essential to a criminal contempt action. United States v. Kelsey-Hayes Company, supra; In Re Floersheim, 316 F.2d 423, 428 (9th Cir. 1963); United States v. Kroger Grocery and Baking Co., 163 F.2d 168, 173-174 (7th Cir. 1947); Kelton v. United States, 294 F. 491, 495 (3d Cir. 1923), cert. denied sub nom., Douglas v. United States, 264 U.S. 590 (1924); Proudfit Loose Leaf Co. v. Kalamazoo Loose Leaf Binder Co., 230 F. 120, 132 (5th Cir. 1915).

B. Lack of knowledge with respect to (1) to decree's existence, or (2) the occurrence of conduct violative of the decree.

The lack of knowledge of the decree's existence at the time he/she acted contrary thereto, or the lack of knowledge with respect to the occurrence of the violative acts, ordinarily exonerates the defendant of criminal liability. In Re Joyce, supra; Yates v. United States, 316 F.2d 718, 723 (10th Cir. 1963). It is doubtful, however, whether either of these defenses could be successfully employed if the defendant were an original party, as opposed to an aider and abettor, or if knowledge of a violation of the decree could have been obtained through an exercise of reasonable diligence.

C. Lack of knowledge with respect to the proscribed conduct.

If the decree is ambiguous, the defendant may assert as a defense that there was a lack of fair notice with respect to the proscribed conduct. United States v. Wefers, 435 F.2d 826, 830 (1st Cir. 1970). The "mistaken construction must be one which was adopted in good faith and which, given the background and purpose of the order, is plausible." United States v. Greyhound Corp., 508 F.2d 529, 532 (7th Cir. 1974). This defense is unavailable, however, where the decree is so precise and definite that it could not be misinterpreted by a respondent with knowledge of its existence. In re Home Discount Co., 147 F. 538, 555-56 (N.D. Ala. 1906).

9-39.322 Statute of Limitations

18 U.S.C. §3282 applies a five-year statute of limitations to all criminal contempt actions encompassed by 18 U.S.C. §401. If, however, the contemptuous act constitutes also a criminal offense under any statute of the United States or under the laws of any state in which the act was committed, then the contempt must be prosecuted under 18 U.S.C. §402. By reason of 18 U.S.C. §3285, a one-year statute of limitations applies to contempt actions brought under 18 U.S.C. §402. It should be noted, however, that 18 U.S.C. §402 is inapplicable to "contempts committed in disobedience of any lawful writ, process, order, rule, decree, or command entered in any suit or action brought or prosecuted in the name of, or on behalf of, the United States."

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The "continuing act" concept is applicable to criminal contempt actions. United States v. J. Myer Schine, supra, 260 F.2d at 555-56 (2d Cir.).

9-39.323 Good Faith Reliance Upon the Advice of Counsel

According to the majority view, acting in good faith upon the advice of counsel is not a defense to an action for criminal contempt. United States v. Seavers, 472 F.2d 607 (6th Cir. 1973); United States v. Dimauro, 441 F.2d 428 (8th Cir. 1971); United States v. Snyder, 428 F.2d 520, 522 (9th Cir. 1970), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 903 (1970); United States v. Goldfarb, supra, 167 F.2d at 735 (2d Cir. 1948). Good faith reliance upon the advice of counsel may, however, be considered in mitigation of punishment. United States v. Custer Channel Wing Corp., 247 F.Supp. 481, 503 (D. Md. 1965), aff'd, 376 F.2d 675 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 389 U.S. 850 (1967); In Re La Varre, 48 F.2d 216, 222 (D. Ga. 1930); Levinstein v. E.I. Dupont DeNemours and Co., 258 F. 662, 665-66 (D. Del. 1919).

Some decisions have held that good faith reliance upon the advice of counsel is a complete defense in a criminal contempt action. In re Eskay, 122 F.2d 819 (3d Cir. 1941); Proudfit Loose Leaf Co. v. Kalamazoo Loose Leaf Binder Co., supra, 230 F. at 134 (6th Cir.)

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

9-39.326 Violation of an Invalid Decree

A decree which has been erroneously rendered must nonetheless be obeyed until overturned, and violators thereof may be punished for criminal contempt. United States v. United Mine Workers of America, supra, 330 U.S. at 293; United States v. J. Myer Schine, supra, 260 F.2d at 557 (2d Cir.). A possible exception exists where the order is "transparently" unlawful. Walker v. City of Birmingham, 388 U.S. 307, 315 (1967). See also, Maness v. Meyers, 419 U.S. 449 (1975) (lawyer may not be held in contempt for good faith advice to client to invoke Fifth Amendment).

A contempt proceeding does not open to reconsideration the legal or factual basis of the underlying order; the proceeding is not a retrial of the original controversy. Maggio v. Zeitz, 333 U.S. 56, 69 (1948); United States v. First State Bank, 691 F.2d 332 (7th Cir. 1982). Thus, an issue that could have been raised when the decree was entered cannot be raised for the first time in a contempt proceeding. See generally, United States v. Rylander, ___ U.S. ___, 33 Crim. L.Rep. (BNA) 3007 (April 19, 1983).

9-39.327 Inability Versus Refusal to Comply

The good faith inability to comply with a decree, as contrasted with the refusal to do so, is a complete defense to a criminal contempt action. United States v. Joyce, supra, 498 F.2d at 596 (7th Cir.); United States v. J. Myer Schine, supra, 260 F.2d at 555 (2d Cir.); NLRB v. Bell Oil and Gas Co., 98 F.2d 405, 406 (5th Cir. 1938); In re Home Discount Co., supra, 147 F. at 555-56 (N.D. Ala. 1906). But the defendant bears the burden at least after some initial showing, of demonstrating an inability to comply, and defendant cannot invoke the Fifth Amendment as a justification for not meeting the burden. See, United States v. Rylander, ___ U.S. ___, 33 Crim. L.Rep. (BNA) 3007 (April 20, 1983); United States v. Hankins, 565 F.2d 1344 (5th Cir.), opinion clarified and rehearing denied, 581 F.2d 431 (1978), cert. denied, 440 U.S. 909 (1979).

9-39.330 Consolidation for Trial of Issues in Civil and Criminal Contempt Proceedings

Consolidation for trial of issues germane to civil and criminal actions involving the same transaction or series of transactions is permitted where the parties stipulate to such. In addition, consolidation without stipulation is generally allowed and appellate courts have not reversed except where there has been substantial prejudice. United States v. United Mine Workers of America, supra, 330 U.S. at 298-300; Mitchell v. Fiore, 470 F.2d

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

1149, 1153 (3d Cir. 1972), cert. denied, 411 U.S. 938 (1973).

9-39.340 Right to Counsel

A person in criminal or civil contempt may not be sentenced to a term of imprisonment unless he was afforded the right to counsel at the contempt proceeding. Argersinger v. Hamlin, 407 U.S. 25 (1972); In Re Rosahn, 671 F.2d 690, 697 (2d Cir. 1982); In Re Di Bella, 518 F.2d 955 (2d Cir. 1975); In Re Kilgo, 484 F.2d 1215 (4th Cir. 1973); Henkel v. Bradshaw, 483 F.2d 1386 (9th Cir. 1973).

9-39.350 Privilege Against Self-Incrimination

The privilege against self-incrimination contained in the Fifth Amendment to the United States Constitution is available in criminal contempt cases. Bloom v. Illinois, 391 U.S. 194, 205 (1968); Gompers v. Bucks Stove and Range Co., supra, 221 U.S. at 444. A corporation or partnership charged with criminal contempt, however, has no privilege against self-incrimination within the meaning of the Fifth Amendment. United States v. Kordel, 397 U.S. 1, 7 (1970); Bellis v. United States, 417 U.S. 85 (1974).

9-39.360 Burden of Proof

In a criminal contempt action the United States has the burden of proving each of the elements of the offense beyond a reasonable doubt. Bloom v. Illinois, supra, 391 U.S. at 205; Gompers v. Bucks Stove and Range Co., supra, 221 U.S. at 444; Falstaff Brewing Corp. v. Miller Brewing Co., 702 F.2d 770, n.1 (9th Cir. 1983); United States v. Columbia Broadcasting System, 497 F.2d 107 (5th Cir. 1974); United States v. Peterson, supra, 456 F.2d 1135 (10th Cir. 1972).

9-39.400 DIRECT CONTEMPT

9-39.410 Witness's Refusal to Obey Court Order to Testify at Trial Versus Witness's Refusal to Obey Court Order to Testify Before a Grand Jury.

A witness who refuses to testify at trial after having been granted immunity from prosecution may be summarily convicted of direct criminal contempt under Rule 42(a) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. Such refusals to testify are contemptuous of judicial authority because they are intentional obstructions of court proceedings that literally disrupt the progress of the trial and hence the orderly administration of justice. "Rule 42(a) was never intended to be limited to situations where a witness uses scurrilous language, or threatens or creates overt physical disorder and thereby disrupts a trial. All that is necessary is that the judge certify that he 'saw or heard the conduct constituting the contempt and that it was committed in the actual presence of the court.'" United States v. Wilson, 421 U.S. 309, 315 (1975); Howell v. Jones, 516 F.2d 53, (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 424 U.S. 916 (1976).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

In contrast, a witness who refuses to testify before a grand jury on the ground of the privilege against self-incrimination after having been granted immunity from prosecution and ordered to do so by a court, may only be prosecuted for criminal contempt according to the procedures applicable to indirect contempts under FED. R. CRIM.P. 42(b). The witness may not be brought before the court, asked the same questions as were asked by the grand jury and then found in summary criminal contempt for refusing to answer these questions. Harris v. United States, 382 U.S. 162 (1965); United States v. DiMauro, supra. According to the majority view, when a witness is to be held in civil, as opposed to criminal, contempt for refusing to testify or to produce evidence before a grand jury, the procedures of FED. R. CRIM.P. 42(b) must likewise be followed. In re Sadin, supra, 509 F.2d 1252, 1255 (2d Cir. 1975); In re Vigil, supra, 524 F.2d 209, 218-19 (10th Cir. 1975); United States v. Hawkins, 501 F.2d 1029, 1031 (9th Cir. 1974), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 1079 (1974). In re Mintzer, 511 F.2d 471, 472 n. 1 (1st Cir. 1974). Title 28, United States Code, Section 1826(a), which provides for summary civil contempt proceedings whenever a witness refuses without just cause to comply with a court order to testify before a grand jury, therefore, "has no effect upon the procedural ground rules the [Supreme] Court had laid in cases antecedent . . . enactment of the statute--rules which expressly forbade summary proceedings for such contempts." United States v. Alter, supra, 482 F.2d 1016, 1022 (9th Cir.). In the Seventh Circuit, however, a witness who refuses to testify before a grand jury after having been granted immunity and ordered to do so by a court may be summarily held in civil contempt. In re October 1969 Grand Jury, 435 F.2d 350 (7th Cir. 1970).

9-39.420 Necessity of Warning of Contemptuous Conduct

When the defendant's conduct is clearly contemptuous, United States v. Schiffer, 351 F.2d 91 (6th Cir. 1965), cert. denied, 384 U.S. 1003 (1966), or where he is aware of the character of his conduct, United States v. Seale, 461 F.2d 345 (7th Cir. 1972), the court need not warn the defendant of the fact that his/her conduct is contemptuous prior to summarily holding him/her in criminal contempt although such a warning may be appropriate. United States v. Abascal, 509 F.2d 752, 755 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 422 U.S. 1027 (1975).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-39.430 Summary Punishment at the End of Trial--Judicial Bias

"[T]here are two policies which may justify summary contempt proceedings before the trial judge. First, it may be necessary to preserve order in the courtroom in order to protect the authority of the court and the integrity of the trial process--the policy of preserving order. Second, there is a notion that when contemptuous conduct has occurred before the judge in open court, it would be a useless formality and a waste of resources to indulge in a full hearing because the judge, having witnessed the conduct, is competent to interpret the facts and apply the law--the waste of resources justification." United States v. Meyer, 462 F.2d 827, 831 (D.C. Cir. 1972); Cooke v. United States, 267 U.S. 517, 534 (1925). When a summary contempt proceeding is conducted at the end of a trial, the policy of preserving order in the courtroom is inapplicable since the trial has already been terminated. If the judge is biased against contemnor, then the waste of resources justification is absent since the judge will be unable to competently interpret the facts and apply the law. Bias arises when the judge becomes "personally embroiled" with the contemnor, Offutt v. United States, 348 U.S. 11, 17 (1954), when he/she necessarily becomes embroiled in a running controversy with the contemnor so that he/she might naturally be expected to harbor "marked personal feelings," Mayberry v. Pennsylvania, 400 U.S. 455, 464 (1971); Taylor v. Hayes, 418 U.S. 488, 503 (1974), or when he/she is in adversary posture with the contemnor, even if he/she has not been personally attacked. Johnson v. Mississippi, 403 U.S. 212, 215-216 (1971). It should be noted that it is not the contemnor's conduct alone which determines whether there exists bias, but rather the character of the judge's response to such conduct. Taylor v. Hayes, supra, 418 U.S. at 503 n. 10.

During the course of a trial, a judge may impose immediate summary punishment upon a contemnor even if he is biased. The policy of preserving order in the courtroom outweighs the waste of resources justification. Mayberry v. Pennsylvania, supra, at 400 U.S. at 463; United States v. Seale, supra, 461 F.2d at 351 (7th Cir.). Where the judge chooses to act summarily at the end of the trial, when the policy of preserving order in the courtroom is inapplicable, he/she may only do so in the absence of bias. Where bias is present, the judge must disqualify himself/herself and permit another judge to conduct the contempt proceeding pursuant to FED. R. CRIM.P. 42(b). Compare Taylor v. Hayes, supra, 418 U.S. 488; Mayberry v. Pennsylvania, supra, 400 U.S. 455; Offutt v. United States, supra, 348 U.S. 11; United

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

States v. Meyer, supra, 462 F.2d 827 (D.C. Cir.); In re Dellinger, 461 F.2d 389 (7th Cir. 1972); and United States v. Seale, supra, 461 F.2d 345 (7th Cir.) with Sacher v. United States, 343 U.S. 1 (1952); Weiss v. Burr, 484 F.2d 973 (9th Cir. 1973), cert. denied, 414 U.S. 1161 (1974); United States v. Schiffer, supra, 351 F.2d 91 (6th Cir.); United States v. Galante, 298 F.2d 72 (2d Cir. 1962). In the absence of bias, the preferred procedure is for the judge to act summarily at the end of the trial rather than during the trial where the contemnor is an attorney. Such a procedure minimizes the prejudice to the attorney's client which arises from the contempt action. Taylor v. Hayes, supra, 418 U.S. at 498; Mayberry v. Pennsylvania, supra, 400 U.S. at 463 (policy is not present where defendant is proceeding pro se); Sacher v. United States, supra, 343 U.S. 1.

When a contemnor is to be summarily held in criminal contempt at the end of trial, he/she should be given "an opportunity to speak in his/her own behalf in the nature of a right of allocution." Groppi v. Leslie, 404 U.S. 496, 504 (1972); Taylor v. Hayes, supra, 418 U.S. at 498; Weiss v. Burr, supra.

9-39.440 Certification of Judge Under Rule 42(a) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure

Under FED. R. CRIM.P. 42(a), the judge in a summary criminal contempt action must certify that "he saw or heard the conduct constituting the contempt and that it was committed in the actual presence of the court. The order of contempt shall recite the facts and shall be signed by the judge and entered of record." The conduct described in the certificate must in itself constitute contempt. Hallinan v. United States, 182 F.2d 880 (9th Cir. 1950), cert. denied, 341 U.S. 952 (1951). This is because "the function of the certificate is not to give notice to the defendant or to frame an issue to be tried, but solely to permit an appellate court to review the judge's action." United States v. Marshall, 451 F.2d 372, 377 (9th Cir. 1971); In re Williams, 509 F.2d 949 (2d Cir. 1975); United States v. Schrimsher, 493 F.2d 842 (5th Cir. 1974). The certificate must recite the specific factual findings upon which the charges are based. Conclusory allegations are not sufficient. In re Williams, supra, 509 F.2d 949 (2d Cir.); United States v. Schrimsher, supra. The certificate does not meet the requirements of FED. R. CRIM.P. 42(a) if it incorporates the entire trial transcript by general reference, rather than recite specific facts. In re Williams, supra; United States v. Marshall, supra. A judge's failure to make the required certificate does not necessarily call for reversal of the contempt conviction. A remand of the cause to permit an opportunity for the necessary certificate may be a sufficient remedy. United States v. Mars, 551 F.2d 771, affirmed after remand, 553 F.2d 508 (6th Cir. 1977).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

9-39.500 LEAST POSSIBLE POWER RULE

In a contempt proceeding, the court must exercise the least possible power to obtain the desired result. This rule requires that the trial judge expressly consider the feasibility of obtaining acceptable relief through the imposition of civil contempt before resorting to criminal contempt. Although such a consideration is required, the judge need not in fact impose civil penalties prior to the imposition of criminal penalties. United States v. Wilson, 421 U.S. 309 (1975); Shillitani v. United States, supra, 384 U.S. 364; Baker v. Eisenstadt, 456 F.2d 382 (1st Cir.), cert. denied, 409 U.S. 846 (1972).

Furthermore, this rule requires that summary punishment be reserved for "exceptional circumstances." Harris v. United States, supra, 382 U.S. at 164. But see, United States v. Wilson, supra.

9-39.610 Jury Trial

The Supreme Court has adopted the standard of 18 U.S.C. §1(3) defining a "petty offense," insofar as it has ruled that imprisonment for longer than six months for contempt is constitutionally impermissible without a jury trial, Taylor v. Hayes, supra, 418 U.S. 488. See also, Frank v. United States, 395 U.S. 147 (1969) (sentence of three years probation permissible without jury trial). However, the court has declined to rule that contempt proceedings, at least as to organizations, resulting in fines of greater than $500 are automatically entitled to jury trials. Muniz v. Hoffman, 422 U.S. 454, 477 (1975).

A court may, during the course of a trial, impose successive summary contempt orders resulting in an aggregate sentence of imprisonment of more than six months in the absence of a jury trial. Such sentencing is permissible so long as no one contempt order carries a sentence of greater than six months. If, however, the court chooses to impose a single finding of contempt at the termination of the trial, imprisonment for longer than six months is constitutionally impermissible without a jury trial, even if the judge calculates the sentence of imprisonment for each contempt at six months or less. Codispoti v. Pennsylvania, 418 U.S. 506 (1974).

If the contempt falls within the purview of 18 U.S.C. §402, contempts constituting crimes, then the contemnor is automatically entitled to a jury trial by reason of 18 U.S.C. §3691.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-39.620 Public Trial

The Sixth Amendment right to a public trial attaches to contempt proceedings. Mayberry v. Pennsylvania, supra, 400 U.S. 455; Bloom v. Illinois, supra, 391 U.S. 194; Sacher v. United States, supra, 343 U.S. 1; In re Oliver, 333 U.S. 257 (1948); In Re Rosahn, 671 F.2d 690 (2d Cir. 1982). The public may, however, be excluded from the courtroom during that portion of the proceeding in which the minutes of a grand jury are read into the record in a contempt action involving the refusal to testify before a grand jury. Levine v. United States, 362 U.S. 610 (1960); In Re DiBella, supra, 518 F.2d 955 (2d Cir. 1975).

9-39.700 DOUBLE JEOPARDY

Summary punishment for contempt of court under Rule 42(a) will not bar a subsequent prosecution for the same act as an independent statutory offense. United States v. Rollerson, 449 F.2d 1000 (D.C. Cir. 1971) (hurling a water pitcher at prosecutor in open court held punishable both as contempt and assault); United States v. Mirra, 220 F.Supp. 361 (S.D. N.Y. 1963).

The court of appeals in Rollerson declined to decide whether the double jeopardy clause would bar a criminal prosecution following a separate contempt hearing pursuant to Rule 42(b). United States v. Rollerson, supra, 449 F.2d at 1005 n. 13. But see United States v. Lederer, 140 F.2d 136, 138 (7th Cir. 1944); which ruled that the power of the Attorney General to subsequently prosecute for an independent regulatory violation does not preclude the right of the court to protect the dignity of its injunction through a contempt prosecution on notice and hearing.

Contumacious refusals by an individual to testify in successive trials can properly be charged as two counts of criminal contempt without subjecting the defendant to double jeopardy or a multitudinous indictment. United States v. Smith, 532 F.2d 158 (10th Cir. 1976).

9-39.800 SENTENCING

9-39.810 Effect of 18 U.S.C. §401 on the Appropriate Fine or Imprisonment.

18 U.S.C. §401 provides that a court may not both fine and imprison a contemnor for a single act of criminal contempt. In re Bradley, 318 U.S. 50, 51 (1943); United States v. Hilburn, 625 F.2d 1177 (6th Cir. 1980);

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

United States v. DiGirolomo, 548 F.2d 252 (8th Cir. 1977); MacNeil v. United States, 236 F.2d 149, 154 (1st Cir.), cert. denied, 352 U.S. 912 (1956). This, however, does not prohibit the imposition of a fine and a term of imprisonment when both civil and criminal contempt actions are commenced in regard to the same transaction, Penfield Co. v. SEC, supra, 330 U.S. at 594, with one serving as a punitive exaction and the other as a coercive or compensatory sanction. Mitchell v. Fiore, supra, 470 F.2d at 1154 (3d Cir. 1972).

9-39.820 Discretion with Respect to the Appropriate Fine of Imprisonment

Courts have broad discretion in setting the appropriate fine or imprisonment following a criminal contempt proceeding. See, Frank v. United States, 395 U.S. 147, 149 (1969); United States v. United Mine Workers of America, supra, 330 U.S. at 303; United States v. Ray, 683 F.2d 1116 (6th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 163 S.Ct. 578 (1983); United States v. Greyhound Corp., supra, 508 F.2d at 541 (7th Cir. 1974); Moore v. United States, 150 F.2d 323, 325 (10th Cir. 1945), cert. denied, 326 U.S. 740 (1945); Brooks v. United States, 119 F.2d 636, 646 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 313 U.S. 594 (1941). However, the sentence imposed in a criminal contempt is subject to appellate review and modification. Green v. United States, 356 U.S. 165 (1958); United States v. Bukowski, 435 F.2d 1094 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 401 U.S. 911 (1971).

9-39.900 APPEAL

18 U.S.C. §3731 has been construed to permit appeals by the United States in criminal contempt actions wherein a district court enters what is tantamount to a dismissal of an indictment or an information. United States v. Sanders, 196 F.2d 895, 897 (10th Cir.), cert. denied, 344 U.S. 829 (1952).

The conviction in a criminal contempt action is a final judgment and is immediately appealable. It is stated to be the settled rule that an order which fines or imprisons the contemnor in a civil contempt proceeding is reviewable only on appeal from the final judgment of the main cause of action because a civil contempt proceeding is in effect a continuation of the main proceeding. Carbon Fuel Co. v. United Mine Workers, 517 F.2d 1348 (4th Cir. 1975). However, an order of confinement under 28 U.S.C. §1826 for refusing without just cause to testify or produce other information in response to a court order is immediately appealable. There has been some controversy with respect to the provision in 28 U.S.C. §1826(b) which requires disposition of an appeal from an order of confinement under that section not later than 30 days from the filing of such appeal. The test of

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Memo. No. 844, dated January 18, 1977, which deals with this subject is as follows:

"SUBJECT: Civil Contempt Appeals Under 28 U.S.C. §1826(b)

This memorandum deals with the effect of a court of appeals' failure to dispose of an appeal from a civil contempt order within 30 days of its filing. In relevant part, 28 U.S.C. §1826(b) reads: "Any appeal from an order of confinement under this section shall be disposed of as soon as practicable, but not later than thirty days from the filing of such appeal." The question has been raised as to whether the 30-day provision is jurisdictional.

The Criminal Division's view is that a court of appeals does not lose jurisdiction over a civil contempt appeal which has not been disposed of within the 30-day time period prescribed by 28 U.S.C. §1826(b). It is our position that the sole effect of a court's failure to abide by the time limit is to require the release of any confined contemnor at the expiration of the 30-day period pending disposition of the appeal. Cf. In Re Rosahn, 671 F.2d 690 (2d Cir. 1982) (jurisdiction not affected during period when contemnor is not confined).

28 U.S.C. §1826 was enacted as part of Title III of the Organized Crime Control Act of 1969. The 30-day provision was originally inserted in the bill at the recommendation of this Department to mitigate the absolute no-bail provision which appeared in the bill as drafted. The provision survived as originally proposed notwithstanding the fact that the bail standard was relaxed to the form in which it appears today, i.e., no bail only "if it appears that the appeal is frivolous or taken for delay."

Case law dealing with the failure to dispose of a civil contempt appeal within 28 U.S.C. §1826(b)'s 30-day time limit is not uniform. The Circuit Court, in In Re Melickian, 547 F.2d 416 (8th Cir. 1977), adopted the Criminal Division's position and ruled that "when decision is impossible or unadvisable (sic) within the thirty day period, the procedure followed by this Court which releases the contemnor pending disposition [of the appeal] best reconciles the various issues bound up in the bail issue." The Seventh Circuit has also held that the 30-day period is not jurisdictional. See, In re January 1976 Grand Jury, 534 F.2d 719, 730 n. 11 (7th Cir. 1976). In addition, a number of circuits have retained jurisdiction beyond the 30-day period, consistently with the view that the 30-day limitation is nonjurisdictional. See, e.g., Brown v. United States, 465 F.2d 371, 372 (9th Cir. 1972) (per curiam) ("appellant has been at liberty upon a stay granted by this court, and, accordingly, no one has been prejudiced by the limitations of the thirty-day period set forth in 28 U.S.C. §1826"); Beverly v. United States, 468 F.2d 732, 740-42 (5th Cir. 1972) ("because of a breakdown in briefing schedule . . . and taking note of appellant's motion for extension of Section 1826(b)'s thirty-day time limit if necessary to insure thorough consideration . . . , we [extend the time limit]"); United States v. Doe, 460 F.2d 328, 332 n. 3 (1st Cir. 1972), cert. denied sub nom Popkin v. United States, 411 U.S. 909 (1973) ("Although we gave this matter first priority, when faced with the choice of exceeding the statute or sacrificing deliberation, we chose the former"). Other courts, in disposing of appeals within the 30-day period, have apparently regarded it as mandatory and jurisdictional. See, Andretta v. United States, 530 F.2d 681, 682 (6th Cir. 1976) (per curiam); In re Long Visitor, 523 F.2d 443, 445 (8th Cir. 1975); In re DiBella, 499 F.2d 1175, 1176 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 1032 (1974); In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 491 F.2d 42, 44 & n. 3 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (per curiam); In re Grumbles, 453 F.2d 119, 121 n. 7 (3d Cir. 1971) (per curiam), cert. denied, 406 U.S. 932 (1972). The Tenth Circuit indeed has stated that compliance with the 30-day provision is mandatory even though this results in a hurried review of transcripts and complex briefs. In re Berry, 521 F.2d 179, 181 (per curiam), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 928 (1975), 28 U.S.C. §1826(b) is mandatory and may not be extended by any waiver, any stay, or release on personal recognizance").

The Criminal Division's position is predicated on the indication in the legislative history that the purpose of the 30-day period in 28 U.S.C. §1826(b) was to protect those appellants incarcerated as a result of the denial of bail pending appeal. See, Hearings on S.30 before the Subcommittee on Criminal Laws and Procedures of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, 91st Cong., 1st Sess., p. 371; Hearings before Subcommittee No. 5 of the House Committee on the Judiciary on S.30 and related proposals, 91st Cong., 2nd Sess., p. 163. Construing 28 U.S.C. §1826(b) to cause loss of jurisdiction by the court of appeals resulting in no review of an order of confinement for civil contempt would defeat the congressional purpose to protect confined contemnors. Alternatively, if as the court of appeals in In re Melickian, supra, assumed, a jurisdictional reading of 28 U.S.C. §1826(b) requires vacation not only of the appeal but of the district court's order of confinement whenever the appeal is not decided within 30 days, the result is equally unsatisfactory since it would completely defeat the coercive purpose of civil contempt. Additionally, courts have expressed concern that a jurisdictional construction of the statute would render it unconstitutional where its effect is to preclude adequate consideration of legal issues. See, In re January 1976 Grand Jury, supra, 534 F.2d at 730 n. 11; Brown v. United States, supra, 465 F.2d at 372.

Although the view of the Criminal Division is that the time limit contained in 28 U.S.C. §1826(b) is not jurisdictional, government attorneys should urge the courts of appeals to dispose of civil contempt appeals within the 30-day period whenever this is possible without sacrificing the necessary deliberation. Prompt disposition serves not only to protect contemnors confined pending appeal but also to prevent disruption of the grand jury process and frustration of the purposes of civil contempt where the appellant has been released pending appeal.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-40.000 BANKING FRAUDS

9-40.100 EMBEZZLEMENT, ABSTRACTION, PURLOINING OR WILFUL MISAPPLICATION,
18 U.S.C. §§656, 657

These sections differ mainly in the types of financial institutions to which they apply. 18 U.S.C. §656 applies to Federal Reserve banks, member banks, national banks and banks whose deposits are insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. 18 U.S.C. §657, insofar as it concerns the banking industry (it also concerns various governmental and quasi-governmental agencies) applies to financial institutions insured by the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation and the Administrator of the National Credit Union Administration. The following will thus apply to both statutes.

9-40.110 Applicability

The purpose of these statutes is to preserve and protect the assets of banks having a federal relationship. See United States v. Garrett, 396 F. 2d 289 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 393 U.S. 952 (1968).

However, they apply only to a particular class of individuals, i.e., officers, directors, agents, employees or whoever is connected in any capacity with any of the designated institutions. See United States v. Cooper 464 F. 2d 648 (10th Cir. 1972), cert. denied, 409 U.S. 1107, reh'g denied, 410 U.S. 959 (1973).

The term "connected in any capacity" is necessarily broad to include any person who has such a relationship to the institution that he/she could injure it by committing one or more of the criminal offenses set out in 18 U.S.C. §656 and §657. In the Garrett case, the defendants, who were held to be "connected in any capacity," had purchased a controlling interest in a bank, had exercised control through naming employees and associates to the board of directors, and were active in the affairs of the bank through increasing deposits. In United States v. Edick, 432 F. 2d 350 (4th Cir. 1970), the defendant was the employee of a corporation which handled the proofing and bookkeeping for several banks controlled by a holding company. Because of the defendant's position, the defendant was able to divert bank funds. The defendant's relation to the bank was held to be the same as if the defendant had been a bank employee doing this essential bookkeeping work; and, therefore, the court held that he was at least "connected in any capacity," if not an agent. Similarly, in United States v. Fulton. 640 F. 2d 1104, 1105 (9th Cir. 1981), the defendantembezzler was covered under the statute even though she worked for a mortgage company which was a wholly-owned subsidiary of a federally insured bank.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

One district court in an unreported case has apparently limited the class of persons "connected in any capacity" to those who perform a banking function type of service. United States v. Finnegan (E.D. Va.) (See United States Attorneys' Bulletin, Vol. 6., No. 7, March 28, 1958). In the Finnegan case, a rental agency was authorized to collect rentals from lessees of portions of a building owned by the Savings and Loan Association, and an employee of the rental agency had falsified receipts of the agency. The court ruled that the employee was not "connected in any capacity" with the bank, as proscribed by 18 U.S.C. §1006. This presumably would also apply to 18 U.S.C. §656 and §657.

More recently another district court also in an unreported case has extended the limitation even further and dismissed an indictment charging a bank employee with a violation of 18 U.S.C. §1005 on the grounds that the indictment did not charge the defendant with "either making false entries herself or with causing those entries to be made in her role as a bank employee." United States v. Edwards, (D. Conn. 1983). In the Edwards case, defendant, a teller at a bank, was charged with five counts of depositing worthless checks into her own account, in violation of 18 U.S.C. §1005. The indictment, however, did not allege that the defendant was acting in her capacity as a bank employee in depositing the alleged checks, or that her role as a bank employee played any part in the false entries which allegedly resulted from the check deposits. The district court, in its opinion, stated that "it is clear to the Court that §1005 is intended not simply to apply only to bank officers, directors, agents and employees, but also to reach only such conduct as is performed by such individuals in their capacity as bank officers, directors, agents, or employees."

9-40.120 Actions Proscribed

The term "embezzlement" means the unlawful taking or conversion by a person to his/her own use of the monies, funds or credits which came into his/her custody or possession lawfully by virtue of his/her office or employment. See United States v. Northway, 120 U.S. 327 (1887). If embezzlement is charged, the conversion alleged may not be to some third party other than the embezzler himself/herself. See United States v. Williams, 478 F. 2d 369 (4th Cir. 1973). Rather abstraction or misapplication should be charged where there is a third-party beneficiary.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

But it is a jury question whether or not the defendant had sole access to the funds so as to support a charge of embezzlement. See United States v. Walker, 677 F.2d 1014, 1016 (4th Cir. 1982).

Abstraction is the act of one who, being an officer of a national banking association, wrongfully takes or withdraws monies, funds or credits with the intent to injure or defraud the bank or some other person, and without the bank's knowledge or consent, or that of its board of directors, converts them to the use of oneself or some other person or entity other than the bank. United States v. Breese, 131 F. 915 (W.D.N.C. 1904), rev'd on other grounds, 142 F. 250 (4th Cir. 1906). The word "abstract" has long been a term of certain, simple and unambiguous meaning. See United States v. Archambault, 441 F.2d 281 (10th Cir. 1971); United States v. Northway, supra.

There has apparently been only one case which discussed "purloining" in the context of 18 U.S.C. §656, and the court therein accepted the definition which has applied to other criminal statutes, United States v. Archambault, supra. "Purloining" is a species of larceny which fills the gap between the sometimes doubtful common law definition of larceny and the modern criminal code definition of larceny. See United States v. Archambault, supra, citing, United States v. Handler, 142 F.2d 351 (2d Cir. 1944); Crabb v. Zerbst, 99 F.2d (5th Cir. 1938).

Recently, a majority of the U.S. Supreme Court held that the Federal Bank Robbery Act, which proscribes the "taking and carrying away" of bank property with an intent to steal, 18 U.S.C. §2113(b), is not limited in its application to common-law larcenies and that the statute can also be applied to some instances of obtaining money under false pretenses. See Bell v. United States, 103 S. Ct. 2398 (1983). The majority was careful to point out, however, that the statute would not apply to a false pretenses case where there is no taking and carrying away.

The term "misapplication" means a wilful and unlawful misuse of monies, funds or credit of the bank made with intent to injure or defraud the bank. See Hernandez v. United States, 608 F.2d 1361 (10th Cir. 1979); United States v. Welliver, 601 F.2d 203 (5th Cir. 1979); Garrett v. United States, supra. See also United States v. Moraites, 456 F.2d 435, 441 (3d Cir. 1972).

"The misapplication of funds proscribed by 18 U.S.C. §656 occurs when funds are distributed under a record which misrepresents the true state of the record with the intent that bank officials, bank examiners or the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation will be deceived." United States v. Twiford, 600 F.2d 1339 (10th Cir. 1979) quoting, United States v. Kennedy, 564 F.2d 1329, 1339 (9th Cir. 1977).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-40.130 Examples of Misapplications

The following fact patterns are examples of misapplication, but not an exhaustive list of possible schemes. See USAM 9-40.131; 9-40.132; 9-40.133; 9-40.134; 9-40.135; 9-40.136, infra.

9-40.131 Bad Loans

The bad loan is probably the most obvious type of misapplication but it should be noted that a bad loan in and of itself might be mere maladministration as opposed to criminal misapplication. See United States v. Giragusian, 349 F.2d 166 (1st Cir. 1965); United States v. Williams, supra; Hernandez v. United States, supra; United States v. King, 484 F.2d 924 (10th Cir. 1973). It can occur by either granting an unsecured loan to a person who is not financially able to repay or by granting a loan on knowingly inadequate or valueless collateral. See Mulloney v. United States, 79 F.2d 566 (1st Cir. 1935), cert. denied, 296 U.S. 658 (1936). The bad loan is often correlated with an interest of a bank officer or employee. See Hargreaves v. United States, 75 F.2d 68 (9th Cir. 1935). The bad loan can be a misapplication, however, without any showing that the bank officer personally benefited from the transaction, if it can be shown that the officer acted in reckless disregard of the bank's interest. See Logsdon v. United States, 253 F.2d 12 (6th Cir. 1958)

In United States v. Hernandez, supra, a conviction of a bank officer was upheld for misapplications involving loans, the issuance of an unauthorized letter of credit and the continued funding of large overdrafts without proof that there was a personal gain to the officer. A conviction for misapplication through continued funding of overdrafts was also upheld in Swingle v. United States, 389 F.2d 220 (10th Cir. 1974); United States v. Mayr, 487 F.2d 67 (5th Cir. 1973), cert. denied, 417 U.S. 914 (1974) (officer funded overdrafts and covered them with signed blank checks left by the borrower on the morning when bank examiners were due to arrive).

9-40.132 Dummy Loans

A misapplication occurs where an officer of a bank knowingly lends money to fictitious or financially insecure borrowers, where the loans are for his/her own benefit and his/her interest in said loans is concealed from the bank. See United States v. Fortunato, 402 F.2d 79 (2d Cir. 1968) cert. denied, 394 U.S. 933 (1969), United States v. Cooper, 464 F.2d 650 (10th Cir. 1972), United States v. Kernodle, 367 F. Supp. 844 (M.D.N.C.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

1973). However, when the nominee borrower is financially able to repay the loan or was at the time the loan was made, it may be difficult to establish the requisite intent to injure and defraud the bank. See United States v. Gens, 493 F.2d 216 (1st Cir. 1974). The court there delineates the circumstances where third party loans are in violation of the statute as follows:

(1) where the bank official knew the name debtor was either fictitious or wholly unaware that his/her name was being used;

(2) where the bank official knew that the named debtor was financially incapable of repaying the loan proceeds of which he/she passed on to a third party; and

(3) where the bank officials assured the named debtor, regardless of his/her financial capabilities that they would look for repayment only to the third party, who actually received the loan proceeds.

However, the court went on to indicate that a loan where the named debtor is both financially capable and fully understands that it is his/her responsibility to repay a loan to him/her cannot, absent other circumstances, properly be characterized as a sham or dummy, even if the bank officials know the debtor will turn over the proceeds to a third party. Thus, it may be difficult to establish a misapplication in this situation in the absence of other circumstances.

The court went on to elucidate as to this in a footnote (Id. at 222)

(w)e do not go far as to say that the obligation of a financially responsible party to a bank will in all cases mean that post-loan transfers to a third party will not result in liability for willful misapplication but (i)n the absence of a showing of special circumstances demonstrating injury or risk of injury to the bank, despite the obligation of a financially responsible party to the bank, liability cannot be found.

Subsequent to Gens, the Ninth Circuit in United States v. Dreitzler, 577 F.2d 539 (9th Cir. 1978) and the Tenth Circuit in United States v. Twiford, 600 F.2d 1339 (10th Cir. 1979) specifically rejected the Gens decision. Although the Third Circuit in United States v. Gallagher, 576 F.2d 1028 (3d Cir. 1978) initially accepted the Gens rationale, the court rejected the loan-reloan approach in circumstances where the nominee borrower was turning the proceeds of the loan back over to the bank officer and found that there was misapplication in such circumstances. See United States v. Krepps, 605 F.2d 101 (3d Cir. 1979). In the Krepps case, the defendant, a bank officer, caused the bank to lend money to named debtors who then transferred the funds back to the defendant. The scheme permitted the defendant to obtain loans for himself in excess of the amount prescribed by statute. In reviewing the conviction, the Third Circuit examined the element of wilful misapplication in light of the factual circumstances. The court held that it was of no consequence that the government did not prove that the named debtors lacked either the ability or intent to repay the loans. Whether the debtors were bona-fide borrowers who made subsequent transfers of the loan proceeds to the defendant was not a factual issue of importance. Rather, the element of wilful misapplication was established by the defendant's dual status as loan officer and loan beneficiary.

Recently, the Eighth Circuit has twice followed the Third Circuit's lead in the Krepps case and found a violation of the misapplication statute where the proceeds of the loan were not turned over to a true third party but are turned over to the bank officer. See United States v. Steffen, 641 F.2d 591, 597 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 452 U.S. 943 (1981), in which the court states:

Gens and the other "bad loan" cases, however, involved bank officials who made loans to certain debtors knowing that the loans would go to third parties. Typically, such loans were to be the result of poor judgment rather than willful misapplication, e.g., United States v. Gallagher, 576 F.2d 1028, 1046 (3d Cir. 1978) and cases cited therein.

A different situation is presented where, as here, a bank officer makes a loan to putative borrowers, with the intent that the proceeds be used for his own benefit. The officer conceals his interest from the bank in order to circumvent the statutory limitations on insider loans. In such cases Courts have held that the financial condition of the putative borrower is irrelevant.

Mere undisclosed self-dealing on the part of the loan officer may not be enough for misapplication. There must be some false pretense or false statement accompanying the transaction. See United States v. Schoenhut, 576 F.2d 1010, 1025 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 964 (1978). Nonetheless self-dealing usually generates some false statement or active deception. For example, in United States v. Foster, 566 F.2d 1045, 1050 (6th Cir. 1977), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 917 (1978), the deception was the granting of a loan for a greater amount than was required for the stated purpose in order to fund the loan officer's own contribution to the partnership which received the loan.

In addition to 18 U.S.C. §656 and §657, consideration should also be given to other statutes in connection with third-party loans for the benefit of bank officials. An officer of a national or FDIC insured bank can be prosecuted for receiving directly any benefit from a loan transaction under 18 U.S.C. §215, and an officer of a savings and loan association or credit institution, can be prosecuted under 18 U.S.C. §1006 for participation, directly or indirectly in any loan. Further, if a banking regulation is violated, the participants in the scheme might possibly be prosecuted on the theory of a conspiracy to defraud the United States through a deliberate circumvention of a regulatory program. Finally, consideration may be given to a violation of 18 U.S.C. §1014 if the borrower, even if financially responsible, falsifies the loan application as to the purpose of the loan.

9-40.133 Brokered Loans

Where an agreement either exists or is entered into between the broker and a bank, by which the bank will approve an individual loan if the broker obtains deposits in the amount of the loan a misapplication may occur. The broker generally participates by offering an extra point on certificates of deposit; the additional interest and brokers' fee are paid out of the proceeds of the loan. The brokered loan can only constitute a misapplication if the loan is worthless from inception. The factor distinguishing the brokered loan from a worthless loan is deposits; and, therefore, if there is a misapplication, the broker may be prosecuted as aider and abettor since his/her actions caused the making of the loan.

9-40.134 Bond Swapping

This activity can in some aggravated instances be a misapplication. The fact pattern is essentially the selling by the bank to a broker of one security at a price substantially greater than the prevailing market value and simultaneous purchasing of another security at substantially above the present market value. The detriment to the bank is that the broker receives a better security, i.e., less speculative but with a present low value. This transaction has the effect of deferring the accounting for loss on the sale of the security in excess of the market value at the time. The banking community has been advised by their supervisory agencies that this practice is considered to be unsafe and unsound and that prosecution may result from it. It is the feeling of the Department that the regulation of bond swapping practices by banks should be controlled by the regulatory agencies unless the facts of a particular case are so aggravated as to warrant criminal prosecution for fraud or if it can be shown that the bank official personally benefited.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-40.135 Check Kiting

The check kite, which can be prosecuted as a bank fraud under the recently enacted 18 U.S.C. §1344, provided the activity occurred after October 12, 1984, can be prosecuted as a misapplication under 18 U.S.C. §656. See United States v. Giordano, 489 F.2d 327 (2d Cir. 1973). The courts have held that the knowing use of funds and credits of a bank to further an illegal and fraudulent check kite is a misapplication as that term is used in the statute. See United States v. Rades, 495 F.2d 1166 (3d Cir. 1974); United States v. Giordano, supra. Of course, there must be a guilty party within the designated class. To preclude an acquittal on the basis that there was not a guilty principal, it is suggested that there should also be a charge under the mail or wire fraud statute, 18 U.S.C. §§1341 or 1343, or, for activity occurring after October 12, 1984, under the recently enacted bank fraud statute, 18 U.S.C. §1344. If a bank officer, director, agent or employee is involved, a check kiting scheme might come within the scope of 18 U.S.C. §1005. There is also the possibility of charging a violation of interstate transportation of property obtained by fraud under 28 U.S.C. §2314 if it can be shown that the property taken by fraud was so transported.

In United States v. Ness, 665 F.2d 248 (8th Cir. 1981), the defendant bank officer was convicted of misapplication for "check rolling" which occurred when he arranged, in violation of bank procedure, for insufficient checks to be paid out of the banks funds rather than charged to the drawer's account or returned without payment.

9-40.136 Compensating Balances

Misuse of correspondent bank balances can be a misapplication where the facts show a detriment to the bank and a benefit to its officers. In such a scheme, bank officers utilized correspondent accounts of their banks for the purpose of compensating lending banks for loans granted to those officials or their associates. By using these accounts in this manner, the official may be able to obtain a loan at the preferential rate or circumvent other statutes and administrative regulations. Since the borrower maintains these balances as a condition of the loan, the borrower is able to utilize the funds and credits of his/her bank for his/her own benefit. See United States v. Mann, 517 F.2d 259 (5th Cir. 1975), and United States v. Brookshire, 514 F.2d 786 (10th Cir. 1975). It is also possible that these correspondent bank balances could constitute violations of the mail or wire fraud statutes or a conspiracy to defraud the United States by deliberate circumvention of a statutory scheme.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

In United States v. Larson, 581 F.2d 664 (7th Cir. 1978), the defendant bank president obtained a personal loan of $40,000 from another bank at a favorable rate of 7% interest in exchange for his depositing $50,000 of his own bank funds in a dormant, non-interest bearing account at the lending bank. The court of appeals found that the compensating deposit constituted misapplication.

9-40.140 Elements

The essential elements of the crime are as follows: (1) the accused must be of the designated class of persons (2) of a particular type of federally-connected institution, and (3) he/she must have wilfully misapplied monies, funds or credits of such institution or entrusted to its custody (4) with the intent to injure or defraud the institution. United States v. Vanatta, 189 F. Supp. 939 (D. Hawaii 1960).

The general rule is that since the words "wilful misapplication" have no settled technical meaning, there must be averments to show how the misapplication was made and that it was an unlawful one. United States v. Britton, 107 U.S. 655, 669 (1882). Mulloney v. United States, supra. The court in the Britton case distinguished misapplication from maladministration. The honest exercise of official discretion in good faith, without fraud, for the advantage, or supposed advantage of the association is not punishable; but if official action is taken, not in the honest exercise of discretion, in bad faith, for personal advantage and with fraudulent intent, it is punishable. For evidence sufficient to support a finding that the bank president and an attorney acted with sufficient knowledge and intent, see United States v. Fusaro, 708 F.2d 17 (1st Cir.), cert. denied, U.S. 104 S.Ct. 524 (1983).

The various circuit courts do not agree on the required averments to allege misapplication. For instance, it is generally necessary to allege that the monies, funds or credits were converted to the use of the accused or to some party other than the bank; however, in the Tenth Circuit if the total charge was embezzlement, abstraction, purloining or misapplication, it was held inherent in the indictment that appellant stood accused of Archambault, 441 F.2d 281 (10th Cir. 1971). Misapplication, as distinguished from embezzlement, does not require a showing of prior lawful possession. United States v. Hazeem, 679 F.2d 770 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 848 (1982).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

An essential element of the crime is that the defendant must be shown to have an intent to injure or defraud the bank. The language "intent to injure or defraud" was omitted from the 1948 revision of 18 U.S.C. §656 because it was thought to be redundant. See United States v. Logsdon, 132 F. Supp. 3 (W.D. Ky. 1955), aff'd., 253 F.2d 12 (6th Cir. 1958). However, the reviser's note specifically states that the language changes were not intended to affect the substantive law.

It has been held that the allegation that a defendant wilfully misapplied the monies of a bank is sufficient to charge the necessary fraudulent intent since such intent is inherent in the term "wilful misapplication." Logsdon v. United States, supra. This position seems to have been adopted by the Ninth Circuit when the rest of the indictment makes clear the existence of fraudulent intent. See Ramirez v. United States, 318 F.2d 155 (9th Cir. 1963). There is an indication in Judge Learned Hands' dictum in United States v. Matot, 146 F.2d 197 (3d Cir. 1944), that wilful misapplication presupposes fraudulent intent. However, it is suggested that an indictment expressly allege that the wilful misapplication "was with intent to injure or defraud" the bank or institution. The District Court of Hawaii held that it was essential to specifically state that the wilful misapplication was with the intent to injure or defraud. United States v. Vannatta, supra. All of the essential elements of the crime must be charged in the indictment. United States v. Cawthon, 125 F. Supp. 419 (M.D. Ga. 1954). Therefore, although there are cases to the contrary, it is advisable to include the specific language "with intent to injure or defraud" the institution. In this regard, see United States v. Adamson, 700 F.2d 953 (5th Cir. 1983) (en banc), cert. denied, U.S. 104 S.Ct 116 (1983), which overruled United States v. Welliver, 601 F.2d 203 (5th Cir. 1979). In the Adamson case, the court in its decision stated that:

[W]e conclude that the appropriate mens rea standard for §656 is knowledge....The trier of the fact may infer the required intent, i.e., knowledge, from the defendant's reckless disregard of the interest of the bank; however, jury instruction should not equate recklessness with intent to injure or defraud....Accordingly, we overrule that portion of United States v. Welliver, 601 F.2d 203 (5th Cir.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

1979), which held that the proper mens rea standard for §656 was a reckless disregard of the interests of the bank.

Adamson, supra, at 965.

In reference to proof, fraudulent intent may be inferred from all the circumstances surrounding the transactions in question, and there need not be any direct evidence. See United States v. Daileda, 229 F. Supp. 143 (M.D. Pa. 1964), aff'd, 342 F.2d 218 (3d Cir. 1965); United States v. Acree, 466 F.2d 1114 (10th Cir. 1972) cert. denied, 410 U.S. 913 (1973). The requisite intent was characterized in Logsdon, supra, as a "reckless disregard" for the interest of the bank, and this standard has been held to be the minimum requirement for proof of intent to injure or defraud. See Giragosian v. United States, 349 F.2d 166 (5th Cir. 1965). A person charged with knowledge of the naturally foreseeable consequences of his/her acts and proof of those consequences has been held sufficient to prove criminal intent. United States v. Schmidt, 471 F.2d 385 (3d Cir. 1972); Golden v. United States, 318 F.2d 357 (1st Cir. 1963); United States v. Harper, 33 F. 471 (6th Cir. 1887). The government, however, must show that the acts were done wilfully and intentionally, and were not merely acts of inadvertence or carelessness. Thus, the charge of to the jury that they could find the defendant guilty of embezzlement if he/she "knew or should have known" that his/her act constituted embezzlement was held to be reversible error, as the phrase "should have known" could render one to be guilty for mere negligence. United States v. Williams, supra. For a discussion of the appropriate jury instructions regarding the issue of intent to defraud, see United States v. Hansen, 701 F.2d 1215 (7th Cir. 1983).

Proof that normal loan procedures are circumvented or facts were concealed from other bank officers or the board of directors would be indicative of fraudulent intent. Robinson v. United States, 30 F.2d 25 (6th Cir. 1929). Proof of a failure to obtain sufficient collateral, Mulloney v. United States, supra, and proof of the repeated cashing of NSF checks, Logsdon v. United States, supra, and proof of self-interest on the part of the bank officer or employee in an otherwise questionable transaction, Flickinger v. United States, 150 F.1 (6th Cir. 1906), would all be evidence of intent to injure or defraud. Evidence of prior transactions, involving embezzlements from the same bank and closely related in time to the offense charged, also constituted similar offenses relevant to show knowledge and intent. United States v. Zarra, 298 F. Supp. 1074 (M.D.Pa. 1969), aff'd, 423 F.2d 1227 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 826 (1970). Proof of loss to the institution is probative of intent to injure or defraud. United States v. Matsinger, 191 F.2d 1014

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

(3d Cir. 1951), and in a case involving an aider and abettor, knowledge of specific acts of concealment would be relevant evidence of intent. United States v. Daileda, supra; Benchwich v. United States, 297 F.2d 330 (9th Cir. 1961). Even evidence of a defendant's acts after the period of an indictment charging misapplication, including evidence of gambling to recoup losses, has been held admissible as bearing an intent. Benchwich v. United States, supra. Similarly, evidence that the loan was not for the benefit of the apparent borrower but rather to aid another heavily indebted borrower to pay off a loan for which the authorizing officer had been criticized, was sufficient to support a conviction for misapplication. United States v. Luke, 701 F.2d 1104 (4th Cir. 1983).

Defense evidence showing that the defendant was person of means and did meet or could have met a demand for payment has been produced in cases involving overdrafts. Such evidence is probative of intent. United States v. Matot, supra; United States v. Broxmeyer, 192 F.2d 230 (2d Cir. 1951); Seals v. United States, 221 F.2d 243 (8th Cir. 1955). However, it is not determinative. Rakes v. United States, 169 F.2d 739 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 335 U.S. 826 (1948). In the Rakes case, the defendant claimed he had assets and intended to pay the money back. The court rejected both of these contentions stating:

Moreover, the fact that a man has assets does not negative an intent to steal;...the fact that he intends to pay it back doesn't negative his intent to misapply in the first instance.

9-40.150 Loss to the Bank

As previously mentioned, a necessary element is a conversion of funds to the use of the defendant or some other person. However, it is not a defense that there was in fact no loss to the institution. See United States v. Fortunato, 402 F.2d 79 (2d Cir. 1968), cert. denied, 394 U.S. 933 (1969). United States v. Acree, supra. The offense is committed if possession, control or use is lost even though it be only momentary, Rakes v. United States, supra; United States v. Matsinger, supra; United States v. Kernodle, supra; subsequent return of the fund is no defense, United States v. Acree, supra. It is not necessary for funds to actually leave the bank, as most banking transactions consist of bookkeeping entries rather than actual transfers of cash. See United States v. Rickert, 459 F.2d 352 (5th Cir. 1972). But see contra, Johnson v. United States, 95 F.2d 813 (4th Cir. 1938). In short, it is not necessary for the government to allege or to prove that the bank actually suffered any loss as a result of the defendant's actions. A review of the cases establishes that the requisite intent may be established if the defendant's acts created the "possibility that the bank would suffer injury." United States v. Larson, 581 F.2d 664, 668 (7th Cir. 1978).

It has also been held that the possibility that the bank may benefit from misuse of its funds does not negate the intent to injure and defraud since the wrongdoing was complete at the time the alleged bribe payments were made. United States v. Caldwell, 544 F.2d 691 (4th Cir. 1976). However, the same court held in United States v. Arthur, 544 F.2d 720 (4th Cir. 1976) that the illegal use of bank funds must be for a specific purpose and not merely to create good will. See also United States v. Beran, 546 F.2d 1316, cert. denied, 97 S. Ct. 1330 (1976), where it was held that only probability of loss to the bank is necessary to establish intent to defraud, that neither a possibility to future benefit to the bank nor restitution are defenses to the charge of misapplication. However, see United States v. Riley, 550 F.2d 233 (5th Cir. 1977) where it was held that intent to injure and defraud is an essential element and evidence to disprove this element may not be excluded.

9-40.160 Bank Funds

Funds do not become bank funds solely because one who is an officer of the bank received them, irrespective of the capacity in which the officer does so, and when a bank officer holds funds in a fiduciary capacity for others, they do not become funds of the bank, even though the officer deposits them in his/her own bank. In Golden v. United States, supra, the defendant was an officer of a bank which was coadministrator of an estate in Massachusetts. Because of doubt as to whether certain insurance checks were a part of the Massachusetts estate or the Tennessee estate, the defendant was to hold these proceeds apart from the general funds of the estate on deposit with the bank. The court held that the issue whether the insurance proceeds were received by the defendant in the defendant's official capacity as a bank officer or in an individual capacity should have been submitted to the jury. In the Hudson case, the defendant was president of the bank and treasurer of a drainage district. Checks were sent to the defendant in the defendant's capacity as treasurer of the drainage district and not as agent for the bank; therefore, the defendant's use of the funds for personal expenditures did not constitute a misapplication within the statute.

In United States v. Harter, 116 F.2d 51 (7th Cir. 1946), the defendant was convicted of wilful misapplication and embezzlement. As an officer of a trust company, the defendant sold stock which belonged to a customer, and the proceeds of such sales were placed by the broker in an account for the trust company at a correspondent bank. A deposit ticket was made out to indicate a deposit by a corporation as the result of the securities sold. The court stated that these proceeds had been deposited to the credit of the trust company in its correspondent bank, and as between the trust company and the defendant the credit represented funds of the trust company. In Groves v. United States, 343 F.2d 850 (8th Cir. 1965), the defendant was a branch manager who took checks payable to the association from a customer and deposited them to his own account. The defendant then issued spurious passbooks to the customer and represented that the money was properly with the association. The court upheld the conviction for embezzlement over the defendant's claim that the defendant was the customer's agent and that the money never became the property of the association. The court held that the defendant took the checks as agent for the association and noted that the defendant went to great lengths to convince the customer that the funds were deposited with the association.

The funds of a wholly-owned subsidiary belong to the parent bank within the meaning of 18 U.S.C. §657 and there may be a prosecution for misapplication as long as the parent corporation is a federally insured bank or lender. See United States v. Cartwright, 632 F.2d 1290, 1292 (5th Cir. 1980).

9-40.170 Duplicity In Indictments

Banking indictments often charge defendants with "embezzling abstracting, purloining and wilfully misapplying" funds or credits. These offenses are separate and distinct so that the inclusion of all of them in one count has been held to be duplicitous. United States v. Cadwallader, 59 F. 677 (W.D. Wis. 1893). However, there is authority to the contrary. Theobald v. United States, 3 F.2d 601 (8th Cir. 1925). The preferred draftsmanship would be to charge only one of the offenses in a single count.

Another possibly duplicitous allegation that appears in many banking indictments is the charge that the defendant embezzled an amount of the monies, funds and credits of institution. Several cases have held that these terms are not synonymous, each denoting a different form of bank assets, so that charging the embezzlement of all three in one count is duplicitous. See United States v. Greene, 65 F. 488 (E.D. Mo. 1894). In United States v. Westbrook, 114 F. Supp. 192 (W.D. Ark. 1953), it was held by adding the words "to wit, $1,400" to "money, funds, and credits" the words funds and credits become surplusage and should be disregarded and hence were not duplicitous. Money refers to currency or the circulating medium of the country; the word "funds" refers to government, state, country, municipal or other bonds and to other forms of obligations and securities in which investments may be made; and the word "credit" refers to notes and bills payable to the bank, and to other forms of direct promises to pay money to it. See United States v. Smith, 152 F.542 (W.D. Ky. 1907).

A series of cases in the Ninth Circuit have upheld such a charge when modified by the statement that "a more particular description of said monies, funds and credits was to the grand jurors unknown." Bower v. United States, 296 F. 694 (9th Cir. 1924); Williams v. United States, 275 F. 129 (9th Cir. 1921); Sheridan v. United States, 236 F. 305 (9th Cir. 1916). The Seventh Circuit has also stated that this phrase can save an indictment. Peck v. United States, 65 F.2d 59 (7th Cir. 1933).

There is also authority for the bald proposition that joining these three items is not duplicitous. Mulloney v. United States, supra. This case appears never to have been followed by any other court, perhaps because neither reason nor authority is cited for its conclusion.

It is, therefore, advisable in drafting an indictment to specify the nature of the conversion and that which was converted, or if unable to define the type of asset, to add a phrase to the effect that "a more particular description of the monies, funds and credits is not known by the grand jurors." It would also seem that if the indictment spells out the precise things that were embezzled or misapplied the requirement of notice to the defendant would be satisfied.

The problem of duplicity or multiplicity frequently arises where there has been a series of acts of embezzlement or misapplication. There is then an inclination to combine these violations in one count, setting forth the time period during which they occurred and the total amount embezzled or misapplied, rather than a separate count for each violation, particularly where each violation involves a relatively small amount. Since the courts have not extensively considered this problem in connection with banking violations, reliance must be placed on the general rule that duplicity must be resolved by the test of whether each offense requires proof of an additional fact that the others do not. (See USAM 9-42.220 for a general discussion of duplicity.)

Court considerations of the problem in banking cases are: (1) United States v. Martindale, 146 F. 280, 288-289 (D. Kan. 1903), where the court held that where a sum of a bank's money was fraudulently applied to the payment of three notes, since the misapplications have occurred and should be charged in separate counts. The court also strongly disapproved of the

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

"general" or "comprehensive" type of count which alleges only that between two dates a total sum of money, funds or credits were abstracted or misapplied from a bank. (2) However, in United States v. Matsinger, supra, the court held when two checks are part of one transaction and one misapplication, it is not necessary to have separate counts for each check. See also United States v. Daley, 454 F.2d 505 (1st Cir. 1972) a (non-banking embezzlement case). (3) In United States v. Hale, 468 F.2d 435 (5th Cir. 1972), reh'g denied, 475 F.2d 1404 (1973), where the defendant objected to being sentenced on each of six counts of misapplication, the court held that where each count required proof that the others did not, conviction and punishment on each count was proper.

The rule, in the absence of judicial determination to the contrary, appears to be that when a bank officer or employee is moved to embezzle, misapply or abstract bank funds or money, this impulse, even if it results in a series of transactions, constitutes a separate violation and should be charged in a separate count. Each successive impulse, no matter how much it is in common with previous ones, must be the subject of individual counts.

9-40.180 Aiding and Abetting

Since 18 U.S.C. §656 and §657 are class statutes, it is essential that the indictment contain a sufficient factual allegation that the bank official violated the statute, whether or not that official is actually charged in the indictment, if an aider and abettor is to be charged. The mere statement of a conclusion that the bank official violated the statute is not sufficient. See United States v. Tornabene, 222 F.2d 875 (2d Cir. 1955). Essential to the crime of aiding and abetting a bank official in violating 18 U.S.C. §656 and §657 is the guilt of the bank official. See United States v. Pyle, 279 F. 290 (S.D. Cal. 1921); United States v. Giordano, supra. While it is necessary to prove the guilt of a principal within the designated class, Giragodian v. United States, supra, guilt of the aider and abettor may be established without an actual conviction of the principal. See United States v. Tokoph, 514 F.2d 597 (10th Cir. 1975). In the Tokoph case, the principal pleaded guilty to one count of the indictment, and the remaining counts were dismissed. The conviction of the aider and abettor on the counts that were dismissed as to the principal was upheld, as there was a showing of the principal's guilt as to those counts, even though the principal was not actually convicted on them. Thus, the lack of a conviction of the principal is not fatal, so long as the principal is not actually acquitted.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

An aiding and abetting indictment is sufficient if it substantially followed the language of the statute or uses words of similar import. See United States v. Zarra, 298 F. Supp. 1074 (M.D. Pa. 1969), aff'd 423 F.2d 1227 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 826 (1970). The indictment which was held sufficient in the Zarra case charged the defendant with aiding, abetting, counseling, commanding, inducing and procuring Hesse, an officer of the bank, who "wilfully and knowingly and with intent to injure or defraud the bank" embezzled the funds, in violation of 18 U.S.C. §656 and §2. An indictment alleging that a bank officer, together with aiders and abettors, "with intent to defraud did wilfully misapply" bank funds was sufficient to charge intent to injure or defraud, an essential element of the offense. See United States v. Mullins, 355 F.2d 883 (7th Cir. 1966).

Another necessary element of aiding and abetting is that the defendant was in some manner associated with the venture, participated in it as in something the defendant wished to bring about and sought by the defendant's action to make it succeed. See United States v. Luxenberg, 374 F.2d 241 (6th Cir. 1967). The defendant need not know the modis operandi of the principal, so long as the defendant shared the principal's criminal purpose to injure and defraud the bank. See Benchwick v. United States, supra. To support a conviction, the aider and abettor must be shown to have knowledge that the officer intended to affect a conversion. See United States v. Docherty, 468 F.2d 989 (2d Cir. 1972). Knowledge that the bank employee was giving the aider and abettor embezzled funds is an essential element, that may be inferred from all the facts and circumstances. See United States v. Johnson, 447 F.2d 31 (7th Cir. 1971).

9-40.190 Conspiracy

The conspiracy statute can also be used to prosecute those conspiring to commit the offenses mentioned herein. There are two distinct types of conspirational action for which 18 U.S.C. §371 provides criminal sanctions. The first involving a conspiracy to "commit any offense" against the United States, concerns conspiracies having as their object the commission of unlawful acts subject to criminal prosecution or suit for penalty. See United States v. Hutto, 256 U.S. 524 (1921). The second prong of the general conspiracy section, involving a conspiracy "to defraud the United States," includes conspiracies having as their purpose impairing, obstructing, or defeating the lawful function of any department of government. Hass v. Henkel, 216 U.S. 426 (1909). Therefore, it appears that a viable theory of prosecution would be to charge a conspiracy to defraud the United States by the deliberate circumvention of a statutory scheme. See United States v. Levinson, 405 F.2d 971 (6th Cir. 1968). In the Levinson case, the indictment charged that the defendants conspired to defraud the United States of its right to have its loan guaranty program administered in accordance with a certain civil regulation. The statutory scheme therein was circumvented by the submission of false documents, and the fact that there was no criminal penalty provided by the regulation was of no consequence. See Hyde v. United States, 225 U.S. 347 (1912); United States v. Keitel, 211 U.S. 370 (1908).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

This second prong of the conspiracy statute would appear to be a viable theory for prosecuting misuse of correspondent bank balances. The apparent reason for an officer to place the funds of his/her bank in another bank is to enable him/her to do indirectly that which he/she is precluded from doing directly, and by using the bank's moneys in this manner, the officer may be able to circumvent numerous regulations promulgated to protect the assets of the federally regulated institutions. Certain of these regulations are as follows: 12 U.S.C. §83, which precludes a bank from making a loan secured by its own stock; 12 U.S.C. §84, which sets a lending limit to any one borrower; 12 U.S.C. §371(c), loan limit to affiliates; 12 U.S.C. §248, precludes excessive loans for the speculative carrying of securities; 15 U.S.C. §78ff and §78g, 12 C.F.R. §221, loans on securities in excess of margin limitations; 12 U.S.C. §375z, loans to executive officers. Although all but 15 U.S.C. §78ff and §78g do not carry any criminal penalty, it is felt that they give color to the activities of an officer defendant and evidence that the officer had an ulterior motive in his/her actions.

9-40.200 FALSE STATEMENTS--18 U.S.C. §1014

This section covers the knowing making of false statements or wilfully overvaluing any property or security for the purpose of influencing in any way the action of the enumerated agencies and organizations. Prior to the 1970 amendments to this section the only banking institutions, pertinent to our consideration, which were covered were Federal Savings and Loan Associations and Federal Credit Unions. The amendments added insured state chartered credit unions, and institutions whose deposits are insured by the Federal Savings and Loan Corporation or the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. The federal jurisdiction was thus greatly expanded and it was feared that the Assistant U.S. Attorneys would be over burdened by matters which were to a large extent, collection of bad debts. While this has not materialized, Assistant U.S. Attorneys are urged to exercise extreme caution in assuming prosecutive jurisdiction over cases that clearly are more appropriately subject to state or local prosecution. However, the statute should not be overlooked as a tool to preserve the integrity of federally insured banking institutions and its use in conjunction with other statutes having the same purpose.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

Venue is governed by the general rule under the various false statement and false claim statutes. See United States v. Blecker, 657 F.2d 629, 632 (4th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 1150 (1982) (false claim statute). A violation of section 1014 is indictable either in the district where the false statement is prepared and mailed, or where the statement is received. See United States v. Wuagneux, 683 F.2d 1343, 1356 (11th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, U.S. 104 S.Ct. 69 (1983).

Generally the making of a number of false statements to a lending institution in a single document constitutes only one criminal violation under section 1014. See United States v. Sue, 586 F.2d 70, 71 (8th Cir. 1978). See also United States v. Thibadeau, 671 F.2d 75, 79 (2d Cir. 1982). However, in Bins v. United States, 331 F.2d 390 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 379 U.S. 880 (1964), the court of appeals found duplicity in an indictment that charged the defendant in each count with making false statements on two different FHA forms. In United States v. Canas, 595 F.2d 73, 78 (5th Cir. 1979), the court of appeals distinguished Bins and found that an indictment can properly charge in a single count false statements made on different documents as long as the documents were necessary parts of a loan package meant to obtain a single loan.

9-40.210 Elements of Offense

The elements of the offense are: (1) making a false statement or wilfully overvaluing property or security knowing same to be false, (2) for the purpose of influencing in any way the action, (3) of the enumerated agencies and organizations. Actual damage of reliance is not an essential element of the offense. See Kay v. United States, 303 U.S. 1 (1938); United States v. Sabatino, 485 F.2d 540 (2d Cir. 1973), cert. denied, 415 U.S. 948 (1974); United States v. Kernodle, supra; United States v. Goberman, 458 F.2d 226 (3d Cir. 1972); United States v. Trexler, 474 F.2d 369 (5th Cir.) cert. denied, 412 U.S. 929 (1973). In the Kay case, the court held that it was no defense that the false statements inflating the amount of the mortgage claim were not influential in securing favorable action; the important fact was that the false statements were made for the purpose of influencing action. Furthermore, it is irrelevant whether or not the person making the false statement was to receive or intended to receive the fruits of the misstatement. United States v. Kay, 101 F.2d 270 (2d Cir. 1939), cert. denied, 306 U.S. 660 (1939).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

In addition, the statement made must be capable of influencing the enumerated agency or organization. United States v. Simmons, 503 F.2d 831 (5th Cir. 1974).

It should be noted that reliance on the false statement is not an element of a 18 U.S.C. §1014 prosecution. United States v. Tokoph, supra. Furthermore, there need not be any actual defrauding of the bank. United States v. Kennedy, 564 F.2d 1329 (9th Cir. 1977), cert. denied, 435 U.S. 944 (1978). Rather, the statute required that all statements supplied to lending institutions which have the capacity to influence them be accurate or at least not knowingly false. United States v. Goberman, supra. In this regard the false statement may have the requisite capacity to influence not only at inception but also over the life of the loan with respect to extending the loan, deferring action upon it or modifying it. The statute does not require that the information be furnished before the debt is incurred. See United States v. Gardner, 681 F.2d 733 (11th Cir. 1982). A false statement under section 1014 includes a statement that a particular party is to be a borrower on a loan when in fact that party is never intended to receive the loan proceeds or have any liability on the loan. United States v. Adamson, 665 F.2d 649, 659 (5th Cir. 1982), reversed on other grounds, 700 F.2d 953 (5th Cir. 1983) (en banc), cert. denied, U.S. 104 S. Ct. 116 (1983).

In Robinson v. United States, 345 F.2d 1007 (10th Cir.), cert. denied, 382 U.S. 839 (1965), the court held that it was not a valid defense to assert that the understatement of liabilities was caused by the association manager, who filled in the answers on the application, only asking defendant how much money was owed the bank, and where the defendant was doing business. By signing the application, the defendant attested to the truth of the statement therein. It was also asserted in Robinson that the loan application was not relied upon. The defendant was told by various members of the board that his application would receive a favorable consideration, but the court noted that the loan committee met and gave final approval after the submission of the defendant's application. Also, it is not a defense that the president of a federal savings and loan association knew that certain statements were false, as other members of the board of directors also had to approve the loans, and the false statements were capable of influencing those directors. See United States v. Niro, 338 F.2d 439 (2d Cir. 1964). However, if the officer makes the loan on his/her own authority, knowing the loan application to be false, it would be better to charge 18 U.S.C. §656 and 18 U.S.C. §2, the aiding and abetting of a misapplication of bank funds (assuming a "bad" loan). A charge of 18 U.S.C. §1014 might fail because the false statement is not capable of influencing the bank, as the officer was predisposed to grant the loan anyway.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

In United States v. Kramer, 500 F.2d 1185 (10th Cir. 1974), a conviction for violation of 18 U.S.C. §1014 and 18 U.S.C. §2 was reversed because the defendant bank president had unrestricted authority to make the loan. The court said in such case, a false statement concerning the borrower's net worth, where the lending officer had knowledge of its falsity, served no useful or influential purpose. This was so even though the loan in question was also approved by the Board of Directors after one director asked the defendant bank president if the borrower's financial statement warranted the loan. The court said that the directors' approval was on the basis of the president's recommendation, not on the statement itself. This appears erroneous, as the false financial statement, was capable of influencing the board of directors, and presumably was submitted to influence them, whether in fact it did or not. Nonetheless, in such a situation, the better charge, assuming a "bad" loan, would be 18 U.S.C. §656 and 18 U.S.C. §2.

In United States v. Baity, 489 U.S. 256 (5th Cir. 1973), the defendants corroborated on a false financial statement submitted after the loan had been disbursed. The conviction was upheld, on the theory that the false statement could influence the bank in one of the enumerated ways, such as on a renewal or a deferral of action. In United States v. Trexler, supra, a conviction was upheld for a false statement to do a future act; the defendant told the bank he would pay the bank money received from the sale of automobiles which he had financed, when in fact, the defendant kept the money. Obviously in such a case, the government must show that the defendant intended to divert the funds at the time the statement was signed.

It has also been held: (1) that defendant was willing to repay the loans and did in fact do so does not negate intent to defraud the bank when loans were obtained on false statements, United States v. Braverman, 522 F.2d 218 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 985 (1975); (2) the use of forged securities as collateral for loans is a violation of the statute, United States v. Larsen, 526 F.2d 256 (5th Cir. 1976); (3) in an unpublished decision of the 10th Circuit Court of Appeals, November, 1976, United States v. Hubbell, it was held that the statute does not require that the application be written or formal to be the basis of a prosecution; and (4) both oral and written statements are covered by the statute, United States v. Zwego, 657 F.2d 248, 250 (10th Cir. 1981).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

9-40.220 Check Kite Cases

Until very recently there was a conflict among the various courts of appeals as to whether check kiting was a violation of 18 U.S.C. §1014, on the theory that this was overvaluing property to influence the action of the bank. However, the United States Supreme Court resolved this conflict and held, in a five to four decision, that depositing "bad checks" in federally insured banks was not proscribed by 18 U.S.C. §1014. United States v. Williams, 458 U.S. 279 (1982).

In its opinion the court stated that to obtain a conviction under 18 U.S.C. §1014, the government must demonstrate (1) that the defendant made a "false statement or report," or "wilfully overvalue[d] any land, property or security" and (2) that he/she did so "for the purpose of influencing any way the action of [a described financial institution] upon any application, advance...commitment or loan." The court held that Williams' conviction could not stand because the government had failed to meet the first of these burdens. The court reasoned that, technically speaking, a check is not a factual assertion, and so cannot be characterized as "true" or "false." Hence Williams' deposits of several checks that were not supported by sufficient sums could not be deemed to be "false statements." The court explained that Williams' check did not make any representation about his bank balance, and cited the definition of a check set out in the Uniform Commercial Code, which states that a check is simply "a draft drawn on a bank and payable on demand," U.C.C. §3-104(2)(b), which "contain[s] an unconditional promise or order to pay a sum certain in money," U.C.C. §3-104(1)(b).

For similar reasons, the court concluded that Williams' actions could not be regarded as "overvaluing" property or a security. The court explained that in literal sense, the face amounts of the checks were their "values." Hence forth, this effectively eliminates the use of 18 U.S.C. §1014 in prosecuting check kiting cases.

9-40.300 FALSE ENTRIES--18 U.S.C. §1005 and §1006

18 U.S.C. §1005 and §1006 prohibit false entries and are correlative to 18 U.S.C. §656 and §657. The banks involved in 18 U.S.C. §1005 are the Federal Reserve Bank, Member Bank, National Bank or Insured Bank. The institutions enumerated in 18 U.S.C. §1006 within our consideration are any credit or savings and loan corporation or association authorized or acting under the laws of the United States or any institution the accounts of which are insured by the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation, or the National Credit Union Administration. Both 18 U.S.C. §1005 and §1006 include offenses for making false entries and the unauthorized issuing of obligations; 18 U.S.C. §1006 also makes it an offense to participate in any way in a transaction or loan of an institution referred to this section. The individuals to whom 18 U.S.C. §1005 and §1006 applies will be discussed in the following applicability section.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

A violation of one of 18 U.S.C. §1005 and §1006 is usually involved when there is a violation of 18 U.S.C. §656 or §657 since a false entry is often used to cover up such violation.

9-40.310 Applicability

The individuals included under 18 U.S.C. §1005 are officers, directors, agents or employees, the term "connected in any capacity" does not appear in this section. In 18 U.S.C. §1006 the individuals involved are officers, agents, employees or those connected in any capacity. (In reference to the term "connected in any capacity," see the discussion in connection with 18 U.S.C. §656 and §657.) While 18 U.S.C. §1006 in its entirety is a class statute, 18 U.S.C. §1005 has a class limitation only in its first paragraph. See Edick v. United States, 432 F.2d 350 (4th Cir. 1970). In Edick, the court held that the third clause of 18 U.S.C. §1005 was not limited to the class of persons enumerated in the first clause. The court stated that in looking at comparable statutes when the Congress intended class limitation to carry through to subsequent clauses or paragraphs, it has repeated them.

9-40.311 Banking Holding Companies

Prior to discussion of the actions proscribed as criminal violations, it should be noted that officers, directors, agents and employees of bank holding companies or one bank holding company are subject to the same penalties for false entries as those applicable to bank officers, directors, agents and employees under 18 U.S.C. §1005, 12 U.S.C. §1847.

9-40.320 Actions Proscribed

9-40.321 False Entries

Both 18 U.S.C. §1005 and §1006 prohibit the making of false entries in any book, report, or statement with the intent to defraud the institution or other person or to deceive any officer of the bank, examiner or agent appointed to examine the institution.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The elements of the offense are (1) making a false entry, (2) with intent to defraud or deceive. A false entry includes any entry on the books of the bank which is intentionally made to represent what is not true or does not exist. See Agnew v. United States, 165 U.S. 36, 52 (1897). Any entry in which that which has been done by the officers or agents of the bank is correctly set forth in detail is not a false entry. See Coffin v. United States, 156 U.S. 432 (1895). If ostensible borrowers are not liable to the bank on their notes, an entry on the bank's books showing liability could be a false entry under the holding and rationale of United States v. Darby, 289 U.S. 224 (1933). In the Darby case, the court described a false entry as "intentionally made to represent what is not true or does not exist" and held Darby had made a false entry when he recorded his spouse as being liable on a note with full knowledge that her signature was forged. The court noted that the aim of the statute is to give assurance that upon inspection of a bank, public officers and others will find in its books of account a picture of its true condition. It is settled law that if a note representing a sham transaction is entered on the books of a bank as an asset, to give an appearance of credit which in fact was never extended to the maker of the note, such action may be found by a jury to demonstrate intent to injure and defraud the bank within the statute prohibiting knowingly and making false entries. See United States v. Fortney, 399 F.2d 106 (3d Cir.). In United States v. Biggerstaff, 383 F.2d 675 (4th Cir. 1967), cert. denied, 390 U.S. 958 (1963), there was no genuine transaction. Various individuals had signed the necessary papers for an installment loan, and among those papers was a note for which they received nothing. The court held that this was a false entry since there was in reality no substance to the transaction, and the court stated that this was true even though the individuals might possibly have been liable on the note under state law. The court in Biggerstaff distinguished the Coffin case on the ground that the Coffin case involved a true entry of a transaction which was authorized, i.e., that checks of an insolvent were honored and carried on the books as an extension of credit.

In United States v. Mischlich, 310 F. Supp. 669 (D. N.J. 1970), the court upheld the conviction for knowingly causing a false entry to be made upon the books of a national bank. In the Mischlich case, the accounts receivable assigned to the bank purported to arise from sales which had never been made. In Laws v. United States, 66 F.2d 870 (10th Cir. 1933), the cashier had no authority to draw checks on an insurance company and this was known by the bank. The cashier did draw such checks and thereby caused a false entry to be made showing a deflated balance for the insurance company.

Not only does the statute cover the making of the entry or directing someone to make it, but it also covers an entry which the person caused to be made. See United States v. Giles, 300 U.S. 41 (1937). In the Giles case, the defendant withheld deposit tickets which in the ordinary course would have been recorded by the bookkeeper. And in the Laws case, the defendant had drawn checks on a customer's account which, having been recorded, indicated a deflated balance in comparison to the actual amount the bank owed the customer.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The crime of making false entries includes entries on books of a bank which are intentionally made to represent what is not true with intent to deceive banks' officers or defraud the association. Hargreaves v. United States, 75 F.2d 68 (9th Cir. 1935) as opposed to the intent to injure or defraud the bank as in misapplication, 257 F.648 (9th Cir. 1918). But see, United States v. Kirkpatrick, 361 F.2d 866 (6th Cir. 1969).

9-40.322 Book, Report, or Statement

It has been held that an FDIC questionnaire signed by a bank officer in reference to loans is a report of the bank within the scope of the false entry statute, and a false answer thereto would constitute a false entry. Crenshaw v. United States, 116 F.2d 737 (6th Cir. 1940), cert. denied, 312 U.S. 703 (1941), cert. dismissed, 314 U.S. 702 (1941). The statute is violated if a bank officer causes minutes of a fictitious meeting to be entered into the bank's records. See United States v. Steffen, 641 F.2d 591 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 452 U.S. 943 (1981). Also, minute books of an ostensible committee of the board of directors are books as contemplated by the statute and a false entry indicating that loans had been approved is punishable. Lewis v. United States, 22 F.2d 760 (8th Cir. 1927). It should also be noted that any offense which may be chargeable under either 18 U.S.C. §1001 or §1005 in this context should be charged under 18 U.S.C. §1005 as it is the more specifically applicable statute. United States v. Beer, 518 F.2d 168 (5th Cir. 1975). Also it is a violation of 18 U.S.C. §1005 to document a loan for one party when in fact the proceeds of the loan went to another party. United States v. Luke, 701 F.2d 1104, 1108 (4th Cir. 1983).

9-40.323 Intent

18 U.S.C. §1005 requires a specific intent to defraud as an element of the offense. See United States v. Pollack, 503 F.2d 87, 91 (9th Cir. 1974). Contra Harrison v. United States, 279 F.2d 19, 23 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 364 U.S. 864 (1960). It is not essential, however, that the indictment allege a specific intent to defraud as long as it tracks the statutory language. See United States v. Fusaro, 708 F.2d 17, 23 (1st

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Cir.), cert. denied, U.S. 104 S.Ct. 524 (1983). But a showing of "recklessness" is not a sufficient showing of intent. United States v. Adamson, 665 F.2d 649, 657 (5th Cir. 1982), reversed on other grounds, 700 F.2d 953 (5th Cir. 1983) (en banc), cert. denied, U.S. 104 S. Ct. 116 (1983).

Three criminal intents are expressed disjunctively in 18 U.S.C. §1005 and §1006 in reference to false entries: the intent to injure, the intent to defraud or the intent to deceive. In dismissing the argument that the government must prove an intent to injure or defraud and also the intent to deceive, the court in McKnight v. United States, 97 F.2d 208 (6th Cir. 1899), stated that several intents expressed in the statute are set forth disjunctively; therefore, it is sufficient to prove any one of the intents though all are cumulatively charged in the indictment. See also Billingsley v. United States. 178 F.2d 653 (8th Cir. 1910). With the exception of one old district court case, the courts which have considered duplicity have held that an indictment is not duplicitous because it is alleged that the false entry was made with intent to injure and defraud and to deceive the officers of the bank and Comptroller of the Currency. Boone v. United States, 257 F.2d 963 (8th Cir. 1919); United States v. Mulloney, supra.

The Supreme Court has held that the making of a false entry in the books of the bank with intent to deceive is all that is necessary to bring the act within the statute, and the fact that its falsity may be exposed by an examination of other books of account does not render it any less a false entry made with intent to deceive. See United States v. Britton, 107 U.S. 655, 644 (1882), accord, Phillips v. United States, 406 F.2d 599 (10th Cir. 1969). It is not necessary to prove a motive for the deceit. A person is presumed to intend the natural and probable consequences of his/her acts, and certainly it seems obvious that if false entries are made in the books of a bank, the examiner will be deceived by them. See Dunlap v. United States, 70 F.2d 35 (7th Cir. 1934).

It is not necessary that actual damages be shown in order to constitute fraud. See Baiocchi v. United States, 333 F.2d 32 (5th Cir. 1964); Harrison v. United States, 279 F.2d 19 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 364 U.S. 864, (1960). The fact that a false entry was made is prima facie evidence of intent to defraud. See Phillips v. United States, 218 F.2d 385 (9th Cir. 1935).

9-40.324 Unauthorized Transactions

Both 18 U.S.C. §1005 and §1006 prohibit the unauthorized making, drawing, issuing, putting forth or assigning any note, debenture, bond or other obligation, draft, bill of exchange, acceptance, mortgage, judgment or decree. No specific intent to injure or defraud a bank has been previously required. However, the Ninth Circuit has recently held, United States v. Pollack, 503 F.2d 87 (9th Cir. 1974) that the intent to injure or defraud is a necessary element of all offenses set forth in 18 U.S.C. §1005. As the government has generally alleged and proven intent to injure or defraud and Section 1174(a) of the Department's Proposed Revision of Title 18 of the United States Code would specifically make "intent to deceive or harm another person or a Government" an element of the offense, this decision was not appealed. Accordingly, the intent to injure or defraud should always be alleged.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-40.325 Participation

The third criminal act in 18 U.S.C. §1006 is not mentioned in 18 U.S.C. §1005. This involves participation to any extent in the proceeds or benefits from any loan or transaction with the institution. The statute is intended to do much more than forbid unsophisticated embezzlement, larceny or theft; it is a typical conflict of interest prohibition. See Beaudine v. United States, 368 F.2d 417 (6th Cir. 1966).

This particular crime with respect to National and FDIC insured banks is partially covered by the bribery statute, 18 U.S.C. §215. There can be no doubt that Congress intended by the enactment of this statute to remove from the path of officials the temptation to enrich themselves at the expense of the borrowers or the bank, and also to prevent improvident loans. See Ryan v. United States, 278 F.2d 836 (9th Cir. 1960).

Participation in reference to indicated bank officials usually constitutes a misapplication under 18 U.S.C. §656. See Garrett v. United States, 396 F.2d 489 (5th Cir. 1968) cert. denied, 393 U.S. 952 (1968). In the Garrett case, the defendants received a fee for causing a bank which they owned to purchase certain mortgages. Participation is analogous to misapplication cases involving loans made for the benefit of the officer.

Intent to defraud only need to be shown to convict under this section. Loss to the institution need not be shown, only that the defendant acted with intent to deceive or cheat, to cause financial loss to another or to bring about financial gain to himself/herself. See United States v. Beaudine, supra; United States v. Weaver, 360 F.2d 903 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 385 U.S. 825 (1966).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-40.400 BANK FRAUD--18 U.S.C. §1344

Part G of Chapter XI of the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-473, 98 Stat. 2147 (1984), signed into law October 12, 1984, created a new general bank fraud offense, codified at 18 U.S.C. §1344. The new law supplements the existing criminal provisions relating to fraud against federally insured financial institutions.

9-40.410 Applicability

This statute covers any scheme to defraud which is occurring on or after October 12, 1984. The statutory language is modeled directly on the mail fraud statute. It proscribes the use of a scheme or artifice either to defraud a federally chartered or insured financial institution or to obtain any of the monies, funds, credits, assets, securities, or other property owned by, or under the control of, such an institution. The institutions protected by the statute are those chartered under the laws of the United States or insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation, or the National Credit Union Administration.

The new statute was requested by the Department of Justice to correct numerous deficiencies existing in federal criminal banking statutes. Among these deficiencies were the following:

The felony bank fraud statutes, 18 U.S.C. §§656, 657, 1005, and 1006, are class-limited statutes which apply only to persons associated with the financial institution in ownership or operational capacities. This class limitation has, on some occasions, caused prosecutive problems in cases involving aggravated conduct by persons who had no acknowledged affiliation with the institution. The new bank fraud statute has no such class limitation.

The misapplication statutes, 18 U.S.C. §§656 and 657, were subject to differing interpretations in the courts of appeals, particularly as they applied to nominee loan cases in which the nominee borrower had the financial capacity to repay the loan.

The new provision should cure this split among the circuits.

Following the Supreme Court's decision in Williams v. United States, 458 U.S. 279 (1982), which held that 18 U.S.C. §1014--the bank false statement statute--did not apply to check kiting cases, there has been no comprehensive criminal provisions available to prosecute check kiting cases because the industry practice of using courier services in the clearing process precluded the use of the mail fraud statute. The legislative history makes it clear that the new bank fraud statute is intended to apply to check kiting cases. See S. Rep. No. 98-225, at 378. Similarly, the legislative history makes it clear that the new statute is intended to supplement 18 U.S.C. §2113 when financial institution property is obtained by false pretenses in the absence of a common law "taking and carrying away" of the property. Id.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

In cases involving the victimization of an insured financial institution by the use of a shell or "bogus" offshore bank, the legislative history again specifically asserts congressional intention that the bank fraud provision have extra-territorial reach and that the offender may be prosecuted if present within the United States, even if the fraudulent conduct took place outside the borders of the United States. Id. at 379.

The general bank fraud statute should be viewed as a supplement to, rather than a substitute for, existing criminal provisions relating to frauds perpetrated on insured financial institutions. The choice of offenses to be charged should be made on the basis of the facts of individual cases.

Prosecutions under section 1344 may be analogized to the traditional use of the mail fraud statute to prosecute fraudulent conduct not otherwise the subject of specific criminal statutes. It should be noted, however, that unlike the mail fraud statute, the bank fraud statute is not included as a predicate offense under RICO (18 U.S.C. §1962).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-40.531 General

Present 18 U.S.C. §215 was created by Part F of Chapter XI of the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984 (Pub. L. No. 98-473, Title II, October 12, 1984). It is the culmination of a ten year effort to improve federal bank bribery laws and replaces former 18 U.S.C. §215 and §216 which were replete with enforcement problems. <sup>1/</sup> The offenses defined by the former sections were only misdemeanors. They did not directly cover the offerer or payer of the bribe. Section 215 only applied where the payment was a quid pro quo or a precondition for a loan. They did not cover all federally insured institutions, and it was not clear that all non-loan transactions of a financial institution were covered.

9-40.532 Corrupt Bank Officer--18 U.S.C. §215(a)

New subsection 215(a) prohibits any officer, director, employee, agent, or attorney of a financial institution, a bank holding company, or a savings and loan holding company, as defined in Section 215(c), except as provided by law, from soliciting or receiving anything of value for or in connection with any transaction or business of the financial institution. <sup>2/</sup> The thing of value can be for the benefit of the official or of any other person or entity (other than the financial institution). Subsection 215(d) states that the salaries or fees paid by the financial institution to its own officers, employees, and agents are not encompassed within the provisions of subsection 215(a) or (b).

1/ In this portion of the Manual dealing with section 215, the term "bank" is used generically to cover all federally regulated institutions protected under the statute. Also the terms "employee" or "officer" are meant to cover all individuals affiliated with the protected institutions as recognized by the statute.

2/ There is an apparent technical omission in both subsections (a) and (b). The "in connection with" language includes "financial institution" but omits "bank holding company" or "savings and loan holding company." Under the statute "bank holding company" and "savings and loan holding company" are defined separately from "financial institution." Therefore the statute does not presently cover bribery "in connection with" the business of a "bank holding company" or a "savings and loan holding company." The Department of Justice has proposed technical amendments to the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984 to correct this omission.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The term "in connection with any transaction or business of such financial institution" is more comprehensive in scope than the earlier section 215 and is based on comparable language in former 18 U.S.C. §216. See S. Rep. No. 98-225 at 375. The new section 215 expands the concept of criminal liability beyond the simple quid pro quo formula where the favorable treatment is conditioned upon the actual or promised receipt of the bribe. Section 215 proscribes as well a bank officer's receipt of gratuities given to him/her for or because of his/her bank-related decisions or activity. The scope of section 215, therefore, parallels the scope of the gratuity provisions applicable to federal officials in section 201. 3/

9-40.533 Bribe Offerer or Payer--18 U.S.C. §215(b)

New subsection 215(b) prohibits any person from directly or indirectly giving, offering, or promising anything of value, except as provided by law, to an official of a financial institution, bank holding company or savings and loan holding company for or in connection with any transaction or business of the financial institution. The addition of the subsection fills a major gap in the earlier section 215 which did not directly cover the offerer or payer of the bribe. The thing of value can be for the benefit of the official or of any other person or entity (other than the financial institution). Just as with subsection 215(a), the gratuity provisions of 18 U.S.C. §§201(f) and (g) provide a useful analogy with subsection 215(b).

9-40.534 Definitions--18 U.S.C. §215(c)

New subsection 215(c) contains the definition for "financial institution," "bank holding company," and "savings and loan holding

3/ 18 U.S.C. §§201(f) and (g) prohibit the giving or receipt of unlawful gratuities. Sections 201(f) and (g) do not require proof of a quid pro quo or unlawful influence. These subsections require the government to prove merely that something of value was given to a public official for or because of an official act performed or to be performed by him/her. The government does not have the burden of proving, as it does in the case of 18 U.S.C. §§201 (b) and (c), that the gratuity was given for the purpose of influencing that or any other official act. See United States v. Neiderberger, 580 F.2d 63, 68-69 (3d Cir. 1978); United States v. Evans, 572 F.2d 455, 481 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 870 (1978); United States v. Brewster, 165 U.S. Appeals D.C., 1, 21, 506 F.2d 62, 82, (1974).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

company." "Financial institutions" includes FDIC and FSLIC insured institutions, credit unions insured by the National Credit Union Administration, and other federally regulated financial institutions, such as small business investment companies, defined in the Small Business Investment Act of 1958, any Federal Home Loan Bank, and any federal land bank or land bank association, the transactions of which it is in the federal interest to safeguard. 4/ See S. Rep. 98-225 at 375-376.

There is an apparent technical omission in subsection 215(d). This subsection states that the thing of value either offered or received by a bank officer or employee shall not include the "payment by a financial institution of the usual salary or director's fee... [or] a reasonable fee paid by such financial institution to such officer, director, employee, agent or attorney for services rendered to such financial institution." In exempting normal salaries and fees paid to bank officers, this subsection failed to include "bank holding company" and "savings and loan holding company." "Financial institution" as defined by the statute does not include holding companies. As a result, the statute on its face fails to exclude from consideration as a thing of value the salary or normal fees the officer, director, or employee receives from a bank holding company or savings and loan holding company. The Department of Justice has submitted technical amendments to the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984 to correct this omission.

It should also be noted that "financial institution" as defined in subsection (c) does not include a Federal Reserve Bank. Therefore bribery of a Federal Reserve Bank officer or employee cannot be prosecuted under section 215. But a Federal Reserve Bank officer or employee is a "public official" under 18 U.S.C. §201 and can be prosecuted for bribery under that statute. See United States v. Hollingshead, 672 F.2d 751, 754 (9th Cir. 1982).

4/ Although members of the Federal Reserve System are not expressly covered, any state bank, which handles deposits as part of its normal services and which is a member of the Federal Reserve System, will be insured by the FDIC and, therefore, will be a "financial institution" within the meaning of section 215(c). Similarly, "financial institution" does not expressly cover a "national bank," but every national bank is insured by the FDIC.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

9-40.535 The Elements of the Offense

There are three basic elements of the offense proscribed by section 215. In the case of subsection 215(a), the government must prove (1) an act of soliciting or receiving a thing of value by an officer or employee of a financial institution, bank holding company, or savings and loan holding company either for himself/herself or a third party (other than the financial institution itself); (2) that the act of soliciting or receiving was done by the officer or employee knowingly and willfully; and (3) that the officer or employee knew that the act of soliciting or receiving was for or in connection with a transaction or business of a financial institution.

In the case of subsection 215(b), the government must prove (1) an act of offering or giving a thing of value to an officer or employee of a financial institution, bank holding company, or savings and loan holding company for the benefit of either the officer or employee himself/herself or a third party (other than the financial institution itself); (2) that the act of offering or giving was done knowingly and willfully; and (3) that the one who offered or gave the thing of value knew that the act of offering or giving was for or in connection with a transaction or business of a financial institution.

9-40.536 Intent of the Parties

Section 215 does not expressly set forth an intent element. The Department of Justice believes that the statute will be interpreted to contain a "general intent" element, namely, that the defendant intend to do the act of soliciting or receiving, offering or giving, knowing that such act was for or in connection with a transaction or business of a financial institution. No specific intent to influence by a bribe or to be influenced by a bribe is necessary. Accordingly, section 215 resembles sections 201(f) and (g) of Title 18. <sup>5/</sup>

In proving that the defendant did the act knowing that such act was done in connection with a financial institution's business, the government

<sup>5/</sup> Whereas sections 201(b) and (c)--bribery of a federal official--are specific intent crimes, sections 201(f) and (g)--illegal gratuities--require no specific intent or quid quo pro. See United States v. Standefer, 610 F.2d 1076, 1080 (3d Cir. 1979), (en banc), aff'd, 447 U.S. 10 (1980).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

is required to prove only that the defendant did the act of giving or receiving, knowing that it was done for or because of some financial institution related act--of either a general or specific nature--that the bank officer either has done, will do, or might do in the future. 6/ The facts of a given case, however, may show more than section 215 requires, namely, a specific intent on the part of one or more of the parties to actually influence or be influenced by the offer or receipt of the thing of value. In such a case, the specific intent to influence or be influenced will obviously encompass the lesser intent or mental state of knowing that the act was "in connection with" bank business.

9-40.537 The Defense of "Except As Provided by Law"

Section 215 provides a statutory defense to the charge to the extent that the receipt of the thing of value is or was "provided by law." The legislative history of the statute provides no specific guidance as to what Congress had in mind when it provided this defense.

The absence of such a statutory defense need not be pleaded in the indictment. See USAM 9-12.325 (negating Statutory Exceptions). Any indictment should, however, charge that the conduct was done "unlawfully."

9-40.538 Penalties

Under either subsection 215(a) or (b), if the item offered or given is greater than $100 in value, the offense is a felony punishable by up to 5 years imprisonment and/or fine of $5,000 or three times the value of the bribe or gratuity, whichever is greater. If the thing of value is $100 or less, the offense is a misdemeanor punishable by imprisonment of up to one year and/or a fine of $1,000. It should be noted that under the provisions of the Criminal Fine Enforcement Act of 1984 (Pub. L. No. 98-596, Oct. 30, 1984), a higher fine may be imposed for offenses committed after December 31, 1984. Pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §3623, (1) an individual may be fined up to $250,000 for a felony and up to $100,000 for a misdemeanor which is punishable by imprisonment up to six months and (2) a corporation may be fined up to $500,000 for a felony and up to $100,000 for a misdemeanor.

9-40.539 Policy Concerning Prosecution

A. The Priority of Bank Bribery and Bank Fraud Prosecutions

For the past two years the Department of Justice has been concerned with the recent upsurge in bank failures and near failures, especially those brought about by insider fraud and misconduct. In 1984, there were 79 bank failures and 27 failures of savings and loans, an unprecedented number since the advent of federal controls in the 1930's. In the previous year, 1983, there were a total of 48 bank failures and 46 failures of savings and loans.

Congress itself was well aware of the problem. In submissions to the Subcommittee on Commerce, Consumer and Monetary Affairs of the House Government Operations Committee in the summer of 1984, the Justice Department found that in a survey of 75 FDIC-insured banks that failed from January 1, 1980, to June 17, 1983, 61 percent of such failures involved actual or probable criminal misconduct by bank insiders. In its own estimate, the FDIC told the Subcommittee that criminal misconduct was a "major contributing factor" in 45 percent of the same 75 bank failures. Congress recognized that criminality among bank officers rarely springs from a vacuum but often evolves from cozy relationships between bank officer and customer. With this as a backdrop, Congress passed the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984 which, along with other provisions, gave a new and comprehensive scope to the bank bribery statute.

U.S. Attorneys shall place bank fraud and bank bribery prosecutions high on their list of white collar crime enforcement priorities. The health of the nation's banking industry is essential to the health of the nation's economy. Instances of bank bribery and bank fraud, even if directed toward relatively small banks, seriously undermine the confidence and trust that individuals and businesses place in the banking industry as a whole. That confidence and trust will diminish all the more if the public fails to perceive a comprehensive and active federal law enforcement presence in the industry.

B. Prosecutive Policy With Respect to Individual Cases

The purpose of 18 U.S.C. §215 is to deter the payment of bribes or gratuities to officials of financial institutions and thereby protect the integrity of such institutions and their transactions. See S. Rep. No. 98-225, at 375-376 (1984). The bribery statute recognizes that officers and employees of federally insured or regulated institutions owe a fiduciary duty of honest services to their employer.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

In accordance with section 215's legislative purpose of protecting against corruption in the banking and savings and loan industry, it is the Department of Justice's policy that cases prosecuted under this provision entail breaches of fiduciary duty or dishonest efforts to undermine bank transactions. Because section 215 is intended to reach acts of corruption in the banking industry, it should not be used to prosecute inconsequential conduct. For example, in the banking industry as in other industries, situations can arise that involve insignificant gift giving or entertaining that plainly do not involve a breach of a fiduciary duty or dishonesty. Typical of such situations are the occasional receipt of meals, entertainment, or other gifts of modest or nominal value where the conduct is either authorized by or disclosed to bank management. Moreover, these are situations where the size of the benefit, either offered or received, in relationship to the bank transaction or business either sought or discussed by the customer is inconsequential. Such inconsequential conduct should not form the basis for prosecution under section 215.

The following should be considered in assessing whether there is a defense to a bribery or gratuity allegation or whether the conduct is at most insignificant and does not warrant prosecution.

1. The Applicability of a Bank's Own Standard of Conduct

Various banks on their own initiative have established, and may be expected to establish, certain guidelines or standards of conduct regarding their employees' receipt of benefits such as meals, entertainment, and gifts from bank customers. By adopting such standards a bank implicitly recognizes that a certain amount of entertainment does not amount to a corrupting influence on the bank's transactions. Consequently, a bank officer's compliance with reasonable standards of conduct of his/her own bank would constitute a formidable barrier to successful prosecution if the officer's conduct is ever challenged.

Senior management, however, cannot avoid the bribery statute by simply adopting for itself loose and uninhibited standards of conduct even when full disclosure is made to the bank's board of directors.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The issue is one of "reasonableness." A "reasonable" standard of conduct is one which permits an employee to receive the normal amenities that facilitate the discussion of bank business, such as a business luncheon, but which excludes the receipt of those benefits which serve no demonstrable business purpose, such as a weekend hunting or fishing expedition or the receipt of scarce or expensive tickets to athletic or theatrical events. Clearly, conduct that falls squarely within reasonable standards of behavior presents no corrupting threat and is inappropriate for prosecution.

2. Social and Family Ties of the Banker

It is not uncommon for bankers to have close social or family ties with some of those with whom they do business. Where these ties exist, gifts and entertainment may have more to do with social and family ties than with bank business. Accordingly, prosecutors shall closely examine the relationship between the bank customer and bank officer. For an analogy regarding federal employees and their social family ties, see 28 C.F.R. §45.735-14(c)(1)-(4).

3. The Possibility of a Clarifying Regulation

It appears that the federal supervisory agencies, such as the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, the Federal Reserve Board, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, the Office of Controller of the Currency, or the National Credit Union Administration, through their regulatory powers regarding unsafe or unsound banking practices, may issue regulations that authorize financial institutions to regulate the receipt of nominal gratuities by a code of ethics. Such regulations, if adopted, may help clarify the situations in which, in the view of the supervisory agency, the officers and employees of financial institutions may, without running counter to the purpose of the statute, receive gratuities of nominal value or be modestly entertained by bank customers to facilitate the discussion of bank business.

If such regulations are promulgated, the Department of Justice, in adopting its own prosecutive policy under the statute, will take into account the supervisory agency's expertise and judgment in defining those activities or practices which the agency believes do not undermine an employee's or officer's fiduciary duty to the financial institution.

A similar clarifying regulation was established for federal government employees by President Johnson shortly after the enactment of the federal gratuity and conflict of interest provisions, 18 U.S.C. §§201-211. See 28 C.F.R. §45.735-14. For example, Executive Order No. 11222, 30 Fed. Reg. 6469 (May 8, 1965), as amended by Executive Order No. 11590, 36 Fed. Reg. 7831 (April 23, 1971), provides in part that:

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

...it may be appropriate to provide exceptions (1) governing obvious family or personal relationships where the circumstances make it clear that it is those relationships rather than the business of the persons concerned which are the motivating factors--the clearest illustration being the parents, children or spouses of federal employees; (2) permitting acceptance of food and refreshments available in the ordinary course of a luncheon or dinner or other meeting or on inspection tours where an employee may properly be in attendance; or (3) permitting acceptance of loans from banks or other financial institutions on customary terms to finance proper and usual activities of employees, such as home mortgages loans.

C. Conclusion

Each U.S. Attorney is required to decide whether a bank employee's conduct in apparent violation of the statute is serious enough to warrant federal criminal prosecution or whether the case should be declined in favor of civil remedies.

All U.S. Attorneys are encouraged to communicate to state and local authorities, through their respective Law Enforcement Coordinating Committees (LECC), their understanding of the new bank bribery statute. Specifically the LECC should solicit the input of local law enforcement officials, including state regulatory officials, in an attempt to identify which local institutions or officials or which practices, if any, are suitable for investigation.

In dealing with the bank bribery statute, it is likely that U.S. Attorneys or their Assistants will be called upon by local bankers for some guidance concerning what is or what is not acceptable practice under the statute. If this occurs, no advice, formal or informal, may be given other than to respond by stating what is contained in the United States Attorney's Manual.

9-41.000 BANKRUPTCY FRAUDS

The criminal provisions relating to bankruptcy were enacted to preserve honest administration in bankruptcy proceedings and to ensure the distribution to creditors of as large a portion of the bankrupt's estate as possible. These criminal sanctions are embodied in Title 18, United States Code, Sections 151-155.

Section §151 makes it clear that the following provisions, 18 U.S.C. §§152-155, are applicable not only to bankruptcy proceedings but to any proceeding, arrangement or plan under the Bankruptcy Act, Title 11, United States Code. As defined:

The term "bankrupt" means a debtor by or against whom a petition has been filed under Title 11.

The term "bankruptcy" includes any proceeding, arrangement, or plan to Title 11.

The term "debtor" means a debtor concerning whom a petition has been filed under Title 11.

9-41.100 18 U.S.C. §152 VIOLATIONS

The principal criminal violations in connection with bankruptcy proceedings are set forth in 18 U.S.C. §152, which covers not only a bankrupt but anyone who could possibly attempt to defeat the purpose of the Bankruptcy Act through fraudulent means. The nine paragraphs of the section denounce the following activities:

- A. The concealment of property belonging to the estate of a debtor,
- B. The making of false oaths or accounts in or in relation to any case under Title 11,
- C. The making of a false declaration, certificate, verification or statement under penalty or perjury as permitted under Section 1746 of Title 28 or in relation to any case under Title 11,
- D. The making of false claims against the estate of a debtor,
- E. The fraudulent receipt of property from a debtor,

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

F. Bribery and extortion in connection with a case under Title 11,

G. Transfer or concealment of property in contemplation of a case under Title 11,

H. The concealment or destruction of documents relating to the property or affairs of a debtor, and

I. The withholding of documents from the administrators of a case under Title 11.

It should be noted that although 18 U.S.C. §152 creates nine separate crimes, each offense may be charged separately. United States v. Gordon, 379 F. 2d 788 (2d Cir. 1967); United States v. Arge, 418 F. 2d 721 (10th Cir. 1969). However, it is not appropriate to allege two offenses and impose two convictions as a result of one set of facts, all of which are essential elements of each crime. United States v. Ambrosiani, 610 F.2d 65 (1st Cir. 1979).

An essential element in the commission of all offenses under 18 U.S.C. §152 is that they must be committed "knowingly and fraudulently". United States v. Yasser, 114 F.2d 558 (3d Cir. 1940); United States v. Beery, 678 F.2d 856 (10th Cir. 1982). An indictment must charge both terms or their equivalents. United States v. Constock, 161 F. 644 (R.I. Cir. 1908). United States v. Martin, 408 F.2d 949 (7th Cir. 1969), cert. denied, 396 U.S. 824 (1969). Also, a jury must be charged with the importance of the two terms. Hersh v. United States, 58 F.2d 799 (9th Cir. 1934).

9-41.110 Concealment Of Property

Whoever knowingly and fraudulently conceals from the custodian, trustee, marshal, or other officer of the court charged with the control or custody of property, or from creditors in any case under Title 11 any property belonging to the estate of a debtor.

The elements of the offense are as follows: that the act was done "knowingly and fraudulently"; that it was an act of "concealment" of property belonging to the "estate of a debtor" from either an "officer of the court" or "creditors"; and that it was done by a "person". 2 COLLIER ON BANKRUPTCY para. 29.05, p.1156 (14th Ed.).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The term "conceal" is no longer statutorily defined. However, an indictment for concealment of assets must, standing alone, allege time and place, description of property concealed, names or identification of parties from whom concealed, that property was part of bankrupt estate and that acts were committed knowingly and fraudulently, United States v. Arge, supra. United States v. Ivers, 512 F.2d 121 (10th Cir. 1975). Since a bankrupt has a duty to list all of his/her property, the withholding of information is within the definition of conceal. Coghalan v. United States, 147 F.2d 233 (8th Cir. 1945), cert. denied, 325 U.S. 888 (1945); United States v. Zimmerman, 158 F.2d 559 (7th Cir. 1946), United States v. Klupt, 475 F.2d 1015 (2d Cir. 1973). In United States v. Greenbaum, 252 F. 259 (E.D. Mich 1918), reversed on other grounds, 280 F. 474 (6th Cir. 1922), the court stated that the gist of the offense charged is the knowing and fraudulent withholding of property no matter what means were used. It has been held that failing to schedule assets fraudulently transferred prior to the filing of a petition, followed by a failure to reveal the transfer to the trustee, is a concealment. Goetz v. United States, 59 F.2d 511 (7th Cir. 1932), cert. denied, 287 U.S. 649 (1932). It is not necessary for the trustee to make a demand in order to establish concealment. Douchan v. United States, 136 F.2d 144 (6th Cir. 1943), cert. denied, 319 U.S. 773 (1943); United States v. Young, 339 F.2d 1003 (7th Cir. 1964).

For the first paragraph of 18 U.S.C. §152 to apply, there must be a concealment during the bankruptcy proceeding. This does to mean, however, that the initial act of concealing must occur after the filing of the petition; it merely means that the property must remain concealed after the commencement of the bankruptcy proceeding. Early cases found this to be a "continuing concealment". United States v. Cohen, 142 F. 983 (D.N.Y. 1906), affd, 157 F. 65, cert. denied, 207 U.S. 596 (1907); Glass v. United States, 231 F. 65 (3d Cir. 1916). United States v. Arge, supra; United States v. Ivers, supra. This term is still useful in those cases in which there has been a concealment of property prior to bankruptcy and a failure to disclose after a petition has been filed. See United States v. Fallman, 28 F. Supp. 251 (D. Mass. 1939); Sultan v. United States, 249 F.2d 385 (5th Cir. 1957).

It makes no difference where the assets are physically secreted, the act of concealment occurs at the time and place where the bankruptcy proceeding is commenced. United States v. Schireson, 116 F.2d 881 (3d Cir. 1940). The court stated that the offense was not hiding away or secreting of the property, but rather the withholding knowledge of the property from the trustee. See also United States v. Gordon, 379 F.2d 788 (2d Cir. 1967), cert. denied, 389 U.S. 927 (1967).

There must be a concealment from one of the persons enumerated in the first paragraph of 18 U.S.C. §152. If there is a concealment from more than one of those persons mentioned, it is a separate and independent offense as to each person. The prosecution charging concealment against one will not bar the subsequent indictment charging concealment from another. United States v. Yacht, 135 F. Supp. 911 (S.D.N.Y. 1955). However, regardless of the number of items concealed, there is only one concealment. Where there are multiple items charged the proof of concealment of any one will sustain the charge. Bisno v. United States, 299 F.2d 711 (9th Cir. 1961). But see United States v. Kaldenberg, 429 F.2d 161 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 929 (1970) where in a chapter XI proceeding rental payments were withheld from a receiver, the court held that where there are separate and distinct concealments there may be a count for each concealment. See also United States v. Moss, 562 F.2d 155 (2d Cir. 1977).

All the essential elements of the offense must be charged in the indictment. Generally, the indictment is sufficient if it describes the offense in the terms of the statute. There must be an allegation of time and place. But it has been held sufficient if the indictment stated that the concealment took place at a given city "in this district" on a given day. United States v. Greenbaum, 252 F. 259 (E.D. Mich. 1918), rev'd on other grounds, 280 F. 474 (6th Cir. 1922).

The description of the property in an indictment is a most important requirement and one about which there is disagreement. Generally, an indictment is held sufficient if the description is in somewhat general terms, such as "certain goods, wares, money, merchandise, shoes, and personal property." United States v. Schireson, supra. The description as assets of a certain value and "assets belonging to the estate in bankruptcy" were held to be too vague in Beitel v. United States, 306 F.2d 665 (5th Cir. 1962); "merchandise commonly sold in a self-service department store" was likewise held not sufficient, United States v. Mathies, 202 F. Supp 797 (W.D. Penn. 1962). It is sufficient to aver that a certain amount of money has been concealed. United States v. Lake, 129 F. 499 (E.D. Ark. 1904). As previously mentioned, it is not necessary to allege the manner of concealment.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Although it is essential that guilt be established beyond a reasonable doubt, the proof may be wholly circumstantial. United States v. Ayotte, 385 F.2d 988 (6th Cir. 1967), rev'd on other grounds, 394 U.S. 310 (1969); Metheany v. United States, 365 F.2d 90, (9th Cir. 1966), United States v. Martin, 408 F.2d 949 (7th Cir. 1969). Unexplained shortages of property of bankruptcy, shown to have been in debtor's possession prior thereto is sufficient to go to the jury. Bisno v. United States, 299 F.2d 711 (9th Cir. 1971); Gunzberg v. United States, 297 F.2d 829 (5th Cir. 1962). However, the jury cannot be charged that this is an inference of guilt, United States v. Stone, 282 F.2d 547 (2d Cir. 1960).

It is for the jury to determine the truth of the defendant's explanation. Cohen v. United States, 67 F.2d 449 (4th Cir 1933); rev'd on other grounds, 280 F. 474 (6th Cir. 1922), United States v. Stone, supra.

9-41.120 False Oath Or Account

Whoever knowingly and fraudulently makes a false oath or account in or in relation to any case under Title 11.

This paragraph sets out the offense of perjury in a bankruptcy proceeding. It was held prior to the 1926 Act that false swearing in bankruptcy proceedings should be charged under the appropriate provision of the Bankruptcy Act and not under the general provision for perjury, which is now 18 U.S.C. §1621, Rosenthal v. United States, 248 F. 684 (8th Cir. 1918). This case may be doubtful authority under the present section. It is to be noted that under the present paragraph of 18 U.S.C. §152 the possible punishment is not greater than the perjury provisions of 18 U.S.C. §1621. It is settled law that a man cannot be convicted under both statutes on the same facts. Rosenthal v. United States, supra.

The offense is more analogous to the false statement statute, 18 U.S.C. §1001, than perjury, however, see, Meer v. United States, 235 F.2d 65 (1956); United States v. Lynch, 180 F.2d 696 (1950), and the strict requirement of perjury prosecutions do not apply; Marachowsky v. United States, 201 F.2d 5 (7th Cir. 1953); Morshium v. United States, 285 F.2d 949 (5th Cir. 1960) and United States v. Curry, 313 F.2d 337 (3d Cir. 1963). The elements of the offense are as follows: that the false oath must be knowingly and fraudulently made; that the oath must be false; that the statement is material to the issue; and that the oath is made in any proceeding or in relation to any proceeding under the act. In the indictment, it must be alleged that the statement was false. United States v. Baker, 243 F. 741 (D. R.I. 1917) and United States v. Curry, supra. It is suggested that such allegations be made even though there is authority to the contrary. See United States v. Freed, 179 F. 236 (2d Cir. 1910).

In view of the strictness with which indictments are sometimes construed, it is undoubtedly safer to follow the practice of giving complete details concerning the false oath. There should be an allegation that the testimony was material. See however, United States v. Lake, 129 F. 499 (D. Ark. 1904); United States v. Phillips, 606 F.2d 884 (9th Cir. 1979). Ulmer v. United States, 219 F. 641 (6th Cir. 1915) cert. denied 238 U.S. 638 (1915). In proving the crime, it must be shown that the oath was properly administered to the defendant. See Cameron v. United States, 192 F. 548 (2d Cir. 1911), rev'd on other grounds, 231 U.S. 710 (1914). Recantation does not in and of itself cure an original false statement under oath in a case under Title 11. United States v. Diorio, 451 F.2d 21 (2d Cir. 1971).

It is well established that the immunity provisions of the Bankruptcy Act do not apply for perjury charges. Glickstein v. United States, 222 U.S. 139 (1911).

A false oath is perjury to the extent that an indictment for subornation of perjury will lie under 18 U.S.C. §1632. Hammer v. United States, 271 U.S. 620 (1926).

18 U.S.C. §152 was amended in November 1978 to read as follows:

Whoever knowingly and fraudulently makes a false declaration certification, verification or statement under penalty (of) perjury as permitted under Section 1746 of Title 28, United States Code, in or in relation to any case under Title 11.

Thus, unsworn declaration made under penalty of perjury in bankruptcy proceedings are to be treated in the same manner as sworn statements. Until the courts rule differently the cases cited under sworn false statement prohibitions may be used as guidelines for matters involving this paragraph.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-41.130 False Claims

Whoever knowingly and fraudulently presents any false claim for proof against the estate of a debtor, or uses any such claim in any case under Title 11, personally, or by agent, proxy, or attorney, or as agent, proxy, or attorney.

The obvious purpose of this provision is to prevent fraud by the presentation of inflated or fictitious claims or the use of such claims. The elements of the offense are as follows: the claim must be filed or used with criminal intent; it is necessary to show that the claim was false; and that it was presented or used in any case under Title 11. 2 COLLIER ON BANKRUPTCY para. 29.07 (14th Ed.).

The court ruled in Levinson v. United States, 263 F. 257 (3d Cir. 1920), that the defense of reliance upon the advice of counsel is not a valid defense when apparently the defendant had not told the truth to his attorney. The court allowed evidence that defendant's claim of loan was in reality a purchase of stock. In United States v. Abraham, 347 F.2d 395 (7th Cir. 1965), the court held that even though the bill reflected the customary procedure for billing, it was intentionally inflated and therefore was false and fraudulent as to the bankrupt's estate and its other creditors.

9-41.140 Fraudulent Receipt Of Property

Whoever knowingly and fraudulently receives any material amount of property from a debtor after the filing of a case under Title 11 with intent to defeat the provisions of Title 11.

This paragraph is to some extent the counterpart of the first paragraph in that it is aimed at preventing concealment of assets by those who would so assist the debtor. An important difference is that this paragraph also may apply to a creditor.

The essential elements of the offense are as follows: that there was receipt of a material amount of property, from a bankrupt; that this occurred after the filing of a proceeding under the Act; that this was knowingly and fraudulently done with the intent to defeat the Act.

Although it has not been decided what constitutes the material amount, it would appear that this requirement was inserted in the section to prevent prosecutions for relatively insignificant transfers. The term "property" has been held to include money under the provision of this paragraph. United States v. Wernikove, 206 F. Supp. 407 (E.D. Pa. 1962). In reference to the term "material amount" a conviction has been sustained in which the amount involved was about $500.00. Knoell v. United States, 239 F. 16 (3d Cir. 1971), writ of error dismissed, 246 U.S. 648 (1918).

Property which was received both physically and legally before the filing is not covered by this paragraph. However, a conspiracy to receive the property could be charged even though physical transfer preceded the petition if further overt acts subsequently occurred, under the authority of Knoell, supra.

The additional intent, to defeat the act, means only that the conduct must have been willful. United States v. Lawson, 255 F. Supp. 261 (D. Minn. 1966). In charging intent to defeat the act, it is not necessary to specify which provision of the act is "intended to be defeated." Lurie v. United States, 20 F.2d 589 (6th Cir. 1927).

9-41.150 Extortion And Bribery

Whoever knowingly and fraudulently gives, offers, receives or attempts to obtain any money or property, remuneration, compensation, reward, advantage, or promise thereof, for acting or forbearing to act in any case under Title 11.

This paragraph covers any extortion and bribery and any attempt to extort to bribe, and is basically directed at creditors who attempt to gain a preference by forbearing to impede the bankruptcy proceeding.

The two essential elements of the offense are the criminal intent and the bribery or extortion or the attempt to bribe or to extort. The statute in question does not say one shall not extort money from another as a consideration for acting or forbearing to act unlawfully, but for acting or forbearing to act at all. United States v. Dunkley, 235 F. 1000 (D. Cal. 1916), United States v. Weiss, 168 F. Supp. 728 (W.D. Penn. 1958).

Two other statutes may possibly be used in prosecuting bribery violations. Where the attempt is made to bribe a judicial officer, section 210 of Title 18 may be used; this section denounces the attempted bribery of the judicial officer. Section 1503 of Title 18 denounces an intent corruptly to influence any officer of any court of the United States.

9-41.160 Fraudulent Transfer Or Concealment

Whoever, either individually or as an agent or officer of any person or corporation, in contemplation of a case under Title 11 by or against him or any other person or corporation, or with intent to defeat the provisions of Title 11 knowingly and fraudulently transfers or conceals any of his property or the property of such other person or corporation.

This paragraph prohibits the concealment or transfer by anyone acting individually or as an agent or officer of any person or corporation. The elements of the offense are as follows: that it was committed knowingly and fraudulently; that it was committed by an agent or officer of a person or corporation; that the property concealed or transferred belonged to the person or corporation; that the transfer was in contemplation of a proceeding or with intent to defeat the provisions of Title 11. The words "concealed or transferred" are to be read in the disjunctive, and therefore it is not necessary that there be concealment where property has been transferred. United States v. Switzer, 252 F.2d 139 (2d Cir. 1958), cert. denied, 357 U.S. 922 (1958). It is now practically impossible for officers to shift assets about among interrelated corporations and avoid violating the prohibitions of the sixth paragraph merely because the shift is not concealed. 2 COLLIER ON BANKRUPTCY para. 29.10. This paragraph does not name the persons from whom the property must be concealed as is done in the first paragraph; however, it seems logical that in establishing concealment there must be someone who had a right to know about the existence of the property such as that class enumerated in the first paragraph. Establishing a case under this paragraph is similar to establishing one under the first paragraph.

Although it is safe to couple the alternative elements in one count, i.e., "in contemplation of a case under Title 11 and with intent to defeat the provisions of Title 11" "concealed and transferred", it is probably preferable to set out the offenses in separate counts. It need not be alleged that the property was "concealed and transferred", since either the transfer or the concealment is a violation. Burchinal v. United States, 342 F.2d 982 (10th Cir. 1965).

9-41.170 Fraudulent Treatment Of Documents

Whoever after the filing of a case under Title 11 or in contemplation thereof, knowingly and fraudulently conceals, destroys, mutilates, falsifies, or makes a false entry in any document affecting or relating to the property or affairs of a debtor.

This paragraph prohibits the concealment, obstruction, mutilation or falsification of a document. It must be shown that this was knowingly and fraudulently done after filing a proceeding or in contemplation of such a filing and that the document related to the property or affairs of debtor. The few prosecutions under this clause have been tied to other counts.

9-41.180 Fraudulent Withholding Of Documents

Whoever after the filing of a case under Title 11 knowingly and fraudulently withholds from a custodian, trustee, marshal, or other officer<sup>(2)</sup> of the Court entitled to its possession, any document affecting or relating to the property or affairs of a debtor.

This paragraph covers the withholding of a document from an officer of the court. Prosecutions under the eighth paragraph have been coupled with counts involving other offenses under this section. As with the seventh paragraph, the principal use of the withholding charge may be as an offense on which a jury might convict even though not satisfied that there was a concealment or fraudulent transfer. 2 COLLIER ON BANKRUPTCY para. 29.12.

9-41.200 EMBEZZLEMENT AND ABUSE OF POSITION

Two of the sections proscribing criminal acts in connection with bankruptcy proceedings are directed at court officers, and a third applies to all participants in a case under Title 11.

9-41.210 18 U.S.C. §153: Embezzlement By Trustee Or Officer

Whoever knowingly and fraudulently appropriates to his own use, embezzles, spends, or transfers any property or secretes or destroys any document belonging to the estate of a debtor which came into his charge as trustee, custodian, marshal, or other officer of the court, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

18 U.S.C. §153 is comprehensive enough to cover every intentional and fraudulent withholding of, or parting with, the property of the estate of a debtor by the court officers enumerated therein. The essential elements of the offense are as follows: that at the time property or documents came into the defendant's possession (he) was an officer of the court in charge of the estate of a debtor; that the property or documents belong to the estate; (however, the indictment need not specifically state that property belonged "to the estate" and the duty imposed continues after the closing of the case under Title 11), United States v. Ivers, 512 F.2d 121 (8th Cir. 1975); that the property was embezzled in one way or another or that the document was secreted or destroyed; and that the activity was done knowingly and fraudulently. United States v. Lynch, 180 F.2d 696 (7th Cir. 1950); United States v. Kaufman, 453 F.2d 306 (2d Cir. 1971).

The Court stated In re Bird, 107 F.2d 386 (2d Cir. 1939), that "[w]hile embezzlement is, indeed, an offense punishable by imprisonment it is not such an offense under the Bankruptcy Act unless the embezzled property came into the charge of the accused as trustee, receiver, custodian, marshal, or other officer of the court." It has been held that although an indictment charging violation of another criminal embezzlement provision (18 U.S.C. §645) is defective, the indictment stands if it alleges facts which will bring it under 18 U.S.C. §153. Pruett v. United States, 3 F.2d 353 (9th Cir. 1925).

This statute is not to be read as concerning itself only with property which property belongs to the estate of the bankrupt, but includes all property which comes into the possession of the court officer by reason of his/her position as such. Meather v. United States, 36 F.2d 156 (9th Cir. 1929).

9-41.220 Section 154: Adverse Interest And Conduct

Whoever, being a custodian, trustee, marshal, or other officer of the court, knowingly purchases, directly or indirectly, any property of the estate of which he is such officer in a case under Title 11; or

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Whoever being such officer, knowingly refuses to permit a reasonable opportunity for the inspection of the documents and accounts relating to the affairs of estates in his charge by parties in interest when directed by the court to do so--

Shall be fined not more than $500, and shall forfeit his office, which shall thereupon become vacant. As amended Nov. 6, 1978, Pub. L. 95-598, Title III, §314(a)(2), (e)(1),(2), 92 Stat. 2676, 2677.

It should be noted that this is only a misdemeanor statute in which the penalty is not more than $500 and the forfeiture of the office. There are simpler procedures for removing trustees, marshals, or other officers (11 U.S.C. §324), but this statute could be useful if a judge refused to remove such a person(s).

9-41.230 18 U.S.C. §155: Fee Agreement

The final criminal provision applies to all participants in a bankruptcy proceeding. While Title 11 prohibits fee arrangement, (11 U.S.C. §102(c) and (d), 18 U.S.C. §155 provides the criminal sanctions as follows:

Whoever being a party in interest, whether as a debtor, creditor, receiver, trustee or representative of any of them or attorney for any such party in interest, in any receivership, or case under Title 11 in any United States court or under its supervision, knowingly or fraudulently enters into any agreement, express or implied, with another such party in interest or attorney for another such party in interest, for the purpose of fixing the fees or other compensation to be paid to any party in interest or to any attorney for any party in interest for services rendered in connection therewith, from the assets of the estate;

Shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The obvious purpose of this section is the prohibition against the exacting of unreasonable fees for service performed by all those involved in a case under Title 11. In effect it is a safeguard to protect against allowing named participants in a bankruptcy proceeding from dividing up a debtor's estate. However, this section is not intended to prevent a debtor from agreeing to compensate his/her attorney, in any amount agreed upon so long as the compensation was to be paid after the bankruptcy proceedings had been closed. In re Trans-State Oil Co., 24 F. Supp. 454 (Tex. 1938), rev'd on other grounds, 99 F. 658 (5th Cir. 1938).

9-41,300 IMMUNITY PROVISION

Title 11 Section 343 provides,

The debtor shall appear and submit to examination under oath at the meeting of creditors under section 341(a) of the title. Creditors, any indenture trustee, or any trustee or examiner of the case may examine the debtor.

The purpose of the examination is to enable creditors and the trustee to determine if assets have been improperly disposed of or concealed.

Efforts to thwart examinations through the exercise of the privilege against self-incrimination have been met with the enactment of the immunity section (11 U.S.C. §344) which provides,

Immunity for persons required to submit to examination, to testify, or to provide information in a case under this title may be granted under part V of Title 18.

This section carries part V, (section 6001 et seq. of Title 18, Crime and Criminal Procedure), over into bankruptcy cases. Thus, for a witness to be ordered to testify before a bankruptcy court, in spite of a claim of privilege, the U.S. Attorney for the district in which the court sits would have to request the immunity order from that district court. The rule would apply to both debtors, creditors, and any other witnesses in a bankruptcy case. If the immunity were granted, the witness would be required to testify. If not, the witness could claim the privilege against self-incrimination.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Immunity provision of this section prohibits not only evidentiary use of compelled testimony, but its use as an investigatory lead, and bars the use of any evidence obtained by focusing investigation on witness as a result of compelled disclosure. In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 497 F. Supp. 979 (E.D. Pa. 1980).

Under 18 U.S.C. §3057 bankruptcy judges, receivers and trustees are required to report criminal violations to U.S. Attorneys. The following safeguards have been recommended by the Bankruptcy Division, Administrative Office of the United States Courts, in order to protect against inadvertent use of the bankrupt's testimony in developing a criminal case against the bankrupt.

In criminal referrals based upon evidence or leads not directly or indirectly obtained from the testimony of the bankrupt, the existing referral procedures will be followed.

In any case in which the debtor testifies and a criminal investigation is underway or is anticipated, the bankruptcy judge will order that no one shall have access to the transcript of the debtor's testimony without first identifying himself/herself and signing an appropriate record reflecting that he/she has requested and been granted access to the transcript. Adoption of this procedure will assist the government in showing in any subsequent criminal proceeding that the prosecution did not have the benefit of a review of that portion of the debtor record.

In addition, in any case under Title 11 in which the debtor testifies, and a criminal investigation is underway or is anticipated, the bankruptcy judge will appropriately advise trustees, creditors, attorneys, and other persons who heard the debtor's testimony that, in the event they are interviewed concerning criminal aspects of the case, no disclosure should be made concerning the content of the immunized testimony of the debtor.

In any instance in which the only evidence of criminality is developed is the debtor's testimony, the referee will refer the case to the U.S. Attorney for possible criminal investigation without making reference to any information based directly or indirectly upon the debtor's testimony. The U.S. Attorney will request the Federal Bureau of Investigation to conduct a limited investigation, possibly including a review of available books and records and the bankrupt's schedules, to determine whether there is independent evidence upon which a criminal investigation may be predicated.

However, since in Kastigar v. United States, 406 U.S. 441 (1972) the court stated:

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

This total prohibition on use provides a comprehensive safeguard, barring the use of compelled testimony as an 'investigatory lead' and also barring the use of any evidence obtained by focusing investigation on a witness as a result of his compelled disclosures.

The Criminal Division recognizes that the argument may be raised that the immunity bars a referral based solely upon the immunized testimony, but it is believed that in cases of significant import, at least, the Department has a responsibility to investigate regardless of this factor.

When the debtor is a corporation, bankruptcy judges will consider the feasibility of clearly designating an individual not suspected of criminal conduct as the person to represent the debtor, thus possibly avoiding a grant of immunity to a prospective criminal defendant. However, if a corporate officer voluntarily testified without being clearly designated to speak for the corporation, it has been held that the immunity provisions are applicable under these circumstances. United States v. Coyne, 587 F.2d 111 (2d Cir. 1978).

Where the bankrupt or officer of a bankrupt corporation designated to represent the corporation is the defendant in a bankruptcy prosecution and has testified at the first meeting of creditors, the burden of proof is on the government to show that its evidence is independent of such testimony; however, such proof is by preponderance of the evidence rather than beyond a reasonable doubt, United States v. Seiffert, 501 F.2d 974 (5th Cir. 1974); (Bloch v. Consino, 535 F.2d 1165 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 86 (1976)). It has also been held that the books and records of the debtor and the bankruptcy documents are not subject to the immunity provisions of Title 11. United States v. Seiffert, supra; United States v. Falcone, 544 F.2d 607 (2d Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 430 U.S. 916 (1977).

9-41.400 PLANNED BANKRUPTCY

One aspect of bankruptcy fraud to which particular consideration should be given is the planned bankruptcy or "scam" operation. While the scheme has many variations basically it involves the purchase of merchandise from many creditors, the disposal of the goods for cash, the concealment of the proceeds, and then either claiming bankruptcy or having the creditors force the bankruptcy.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

In some instances the perpetrators of this scheme purposely purchase relatively small quantities of merchandise from a large number of suppliers. Since no one creditor suffers a great loss, no complaint may be made unless one or more of the creditors organizes the others to pursue the matter. Since frequently the books and records disappear with the perpetrator, one of the major tasks of the investigation is to find all of the victims.

All of the schemes employed cannot be set forth, a few entail the following:

A. Setting up a new company, with a bank account, a legitimate or apparently legitimate balance sheet, paying initial invoices in full on modest orders, increasing orders and paying less and finally placing large orders which are not paid for, with the merchandise being sold at cost or shipped to other locations, and with the operations of the scheme disappearing with the proceeds or the merchandise.

B. Setting up a company with a name similar to one with an established credit rating with "new" branches, placing large orders and absconding with goods or proceeds.

C. Acquiring control or purchasing a company with a good credit rating and employing the scheme before suppliers become aware of a change in ownership.

In addition to the use of the statute designed to combat bankruptcy frauds as to the concealment and transfer of assets, in these matters consideration should be given to the use of the mail and wire fraud statutes, 18 U.S.C. §1341 and §1343, and the interstate transportation of property obtained by fraud statute, 18 U.S.C. §2314. See United States v. Castellana, 349 F.2d 264 (2d Cir. 1965), cert. denied, 383 U.S. 928 (1966); United States v. Jacobs, 395 F.2d 469 (8th Cir. 1968); United States v. Wolcott, 379 F.2d 521 (7th Cir. 1967); United States v. Dioguardi, 428 F.2d 1033 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 825 (1970); United States v. Goodman, 285 F.2d 378 (5th Cir. 1960) and United States v. Harris, 388 F.2d 373 (7th Cir. 1967).

9-41.500 REPORT OF VIOLATIONS

Title 18, United States Code, Section 3057(a) requires the judge, receiver or trustee having reasonable grounds for believing that any violation of laws of the United States relating to insolvent debtors,

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

receiverships or reorganization plans have been committed, to report all the facts and circumstances to the appropriate U.S. Attorney. This report has been made mandatory in order that the United States Attorney be apprised of possible violations which ordinarily would not come to (his) attention. Upon receipt of this report, the U.S. Attorney determines whether an FBI investigation should be commenced; and upon completion of this investigation decides whether criminal action is warranted. The judge's report of possible violations is not a condition precedent to the initiation of an FBI investigation. ← his/her Investigations are often begun as the result of information furnished by creditors or other interested parties, rather than by report pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §3057(a), and it is thus immaterial, when prosecuting an offender under any of the criminal provisions, whether the procedure set forth in 18 U.S.C. §3057(a) has or has not been followed. Dean v. United States, 51 F.2d 481 (9th Cir. 1931); 2 COLLIER ON BANKRUPTCY (14th ed.), 1236. This section does not confer any procedural rights upon a defendant. United States v. Filiberti, 353 F. Supp. 252 (D. Conn. 1973).

The U.S. Attorney, in declining prosecution, should furnish the Department with a cogent and reasonably detailed explanation of (his) reasons for declination, together with specific reference to the facts of the case. The mere conclusion that the facts of the case do not warrant criminal prosecution or that the facts do not indicate that an offense has been committed is not sufficient. This requirement is applicable regardless of the method by which the investigation was initiated and as well to those cases in which a report is received pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §3057(a) and the United States determines that no investigation is necessary. However, where the report is received under 18 U.S.C. §3057(a) the judge should be advised of action taken or declination, although reasons for declination need not be indicated. ← his/her

It is to be noted that the personal opinion of the judge or trustee as to whether a criminal offense has occurred or as to whether criminal proceedings should or should not be commenced is in no way binding on the U.S. Attorney or determinative of the issues involved. Similarly, the decision of an officer of the Bankruptcy Court not to refer a matter to the U.S. Attorney should be determinative in any prosecutive analysis.

9-42.000 FRAUD AGAINST THE GOVERNMENT

9-42.010 Coordination of Criminal and Civil Fraud Against the Government Cases

A. The FBI has been directed to furnish to both the Commercial Litigation Branch of the Civil Division and the Fraud Section of the Criminal Division copies of all reports in all matters in which the reports show that the character of the investigation consists of the following categories:

1. Fraud Against the Government;
2. Federal Housing Administration Matters;
3. Veterans Administration Matters;
4. Small Business Administration Matters;
5. Federally-Insured Student Loan Matters;
6. Medicare Matters;
7. Theft of Government Property;
8. Federal Lending and Insurance Agencies;
9. Bribery; and
10. Conflict of Interest.

Other investigative agencies are required to forward reports in any similar categories to the appropriate U.S. Attorney.

While bribery and conflict of interest matters are not presently within the jurisdiction of the Fraud Section of the Criminal Division (but rather the Public Integrity Section), they are within the jurisdiction of the Commercial Litigation Branch of the Civil Division.

B. The United States has both statutory (e.g., the False Claims Act, 31 U.S.C. §§231-235) and common law rights of action against the government and from the corruption of its officials. Every report of fraud or official corruption should be analyzed for its civil potential before the file is closed. In the first instance, this review should be conducted by the Assistant U.S. Attorney or Departmental attorney assigned to the initial referral. Fraud against the government claims involving more than $200,000 in single damages plus forfeitures should be referred to the Commercial Litigation Branch.

C. Cases pursued criminally must also be analyzed for civil potential. This analysis should be conducted at the earliest possible stage. Criminal dispositions by plea bargain should not waive or release the government's civil interests, except in return for adequate consideration, as measured by the Department's standards for civil settlements generally. Proposed civil depositions involving over $200,000 in single damages plus forfeitures must be referred to the Commercial Litigation Branch for approval. See 28 C.F.R. §§0.45(d), 0.160, and Civil Division Directive No. 145-81, 46 Fed. Reg. 52352 (October 21, 1981); 28 C.F.R. Appendix to Subpart Y.

D. The Commercial Litigation Branch of the Civil Division notifies the appropriate U.S. Attorney and other interested offices of the Department of Justice of potential civil actions which come to the Commercial Litigation Branch's attention. The Commercial Litigation Branch coordinates its cases with the U.S. Attorney to assure the pursuit of both civil and criminal redress. This may include the simultaneous initiation of civil and criminal proceedings where the monetary recovery to the government and the deterrent effect will be enhanced, giving due consideration to the risks to the criminal case and the availability of protective orders and stays.

E. The Commercial Litigation Branch of the Civil Division follows the investigation as it develops and, where necessary, requests, in coordination with the U.S. Attorney and other interested offices of the Department of Justice, that investigation be conducted relating to areas such as damages, which are particularly pertinent to civil action.

F. The Commercial Litigation Branch of the Civil Division gives consideration at the earliest possible date to the initiation of civil action. The Commercial Litigation Branch advises the U.S. Attorney and other interested offices of the Department of Justice of any contemplated civil action. Absent a specific, detailed statement that there is a strong likelihood that institution of civil action would materially prejudice contemplated criminal prosecution of specific subjects, the decision to institute civil action is governed solely by the standards specified in 38 Op. Atty. Gen. 98 (1934). This is, the suit is instituted unless there is: (1) doubt as to collectibility; or (2) doubt as to the facts or law.

G. The Commercial Litigation Branch of the Civil Division, in cases in which the investigation warrants the conclusion that dissipation of any substantial amounts of assets is likely, seeks provisional relief, notwithstanding the degree to which the criminal aspects of the matter have been concluded. The Commercial Litigation Branch advises the U.S.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Attorney and other interested offices of the Department of Justice of any provisional action. Such provisional relief is sought unless there is a clear likelihood that efforts to prevent dissipation of assets would materially prejudice criminal prosecution of specific subjects. The criterion for determining "substantial assets" is set at $50,000, and in cases in which assets of this amount may be dissipated, efforts at provisional relief to secure recovery on behalf of a client agency should, if a conflict exists, be resolved within the Department at the appropriate level.

H. The Commercial Litigation Branch of Civil Division is accorded greater latitude in urging client agencies to withhold payment of claims presented by any subject known to have engaged in fraudulent conduct. The Commercial Litigation Branch advises the U.S. Attorney and other interested offices of the Department of Justice. Absent a specific, detailed statement that action would materially prejudice contemplated criminal prosecution of specific subjects, the decision to withhold is governed by the usual Department of Justice standards. The government's common law right to withhold payment by setoff has been upheld by the Supreme Court, United States v. Munsey Trust Co., 332 U.S. 234 (1947). The right to void tainted claims is granted by statute governing many fraudulently abused programs, e.g., 12 U.S.C. §1709(e). Withholding is an important tool for effecting civil redress, and in recent years the government has successfully defended a number of cases in which client agencies have employed this self-help remedy. See, e.g., Peterson v. Weinberger, 508 F.2d 45 (5th Cir. 1975); Brown v. United States, 524 F.2d 693 (Ct. Cl. 1975); Continental Management, Inc. v. United States, 527 F.2d 613 (Ct. Cl. 1975). The negotiation of favorable settlements in unliquidated matters also may be enhanced by the bargaining leverage which withholding affords. Client agencies also should be urged to withhold pay and retirement benefits to federal employees separated because of evidence of wrongdoing.

The current regulations regarding the withholding or setoff of backpay or retirement benefits are found at 4 C.F.R. Part 101 and 5 C.F.R. §831, respectively;

I. The existing delegations of authority to settle civil fraud claims are set forth in 28 C.F.R. §§0.45(d), 0.160, and Civil Division Directive No. 145-81, 46 Fed. Reg. 52352 (October 27, 1981); 28 C.F.R. Appendix to Subpart Y. They provide for redelegation of the Assistant Attorney General's authority in Civil Division cases to branch directors, unit chiefs, and attorneys in charge of field offices of the Civil Division as follows:

1. Branch directors may compromise, reject offers in compromise, or close claims, in all cases against the government,

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

where the amount to be paid by the government pursuant to the offer does not exceed $150,000 and in all cases involving claims asserted by the government where the difference between the gross amount of original claim and the proposed settlement does not exceed $150,000;

2. U.S. Attorneys are authorized to compromise, close or file suit in cases in which the sum of single damages and forfeitures under the False Claims Act, if applicable, does not exceed $200,000;

3. U.S. Attorneys are not authorized to close, compromise, or file suit in cases involving bribery, conflict of interest, breach of fiduciary duty, breach of employment contract or exploitation of public office, regardless of amount, without first consulting with the branch directors;

4. U.S. Attorneys are authorized to take all necessary steps to protect the interest of the United States, regardless of the amount claimed, in certain categories of civil actions referred directly to them by concerned agencies.

9-42.020 Scope of the General Fraud Against the Government Statutes

While Congress has enacted numerous specific statutes to deal with particular types of fraud against the government, enforcement efforts rely principally on three rather general statutes: 18 U.S.C. §§287, 371 (discussed at USAM 9-42.300, infra), and 18 U.S.C. §1001 (discussed at USAM 9-42.100 through 9-42.251, infra). The scope of 18 U.S.C. §287, which encompasses false claims submitted to the United States is narrow and is discussed in USAM 9-42.180, infra. Of fundamental concern is the type of relationship the fraudulent act must have with the federal government in order to warrant federal prosecution.

9-42.100 18 U.S.C. §1001: FALSE STATEMENT, CONCEALMENT

18 U.S.C. §1001 provides:

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Whoever, in any matter within the jurisdiction of any department or agency of the United States knowingly and willfully falsifies, conceals or covers up by any trick, scheme or device a material fact, or makes any false, fictitious or fraudulent statements or representations, or makes or uses any false writing or document knowing the same to contain any false, fictitious or fraudulent statement or entry . . . .

The operative language of 18 U.S.C. §1001 is "in any matter within the jurisdiction of any department or agency of the United States." An often-raised defense is the claim that because the alleged act or activity has no reasonable relation to the federal government, no federal jurisdiction lies.

In determining the context in which the prohibited conduct must occur to be within the scope of 18 U.S.C. §1001, the courts have had no problem with the validity of a legislative interest to insure the integrity of official functions encompassing utilization of 18 U.S.C. §1001 to protect the government "from the perversion which might result from the deceptive practices described," Bryson v. United States, 396 U.S. 64 (1969); Bramblett v. United States, 348 U.S. 503 (1955); United States v. Gilliland, 312 U.S. 86, 93 (1941).

9-42.110 Items Not Required to be Proved

The courts have held that 18 U.S.C. §1001 does not require:

A. Any financial or property loss to the federal government (though one often exists), Gilliland, supra, at 93, Gollaher v. United States, 419 F.2d 520, 526 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 396 U.S. 960 (1969); United States v. Richmond, 700 F.2d 1183, 1188 (8th Cir. 1983); United States v. Godel, 361 F.2d 21, 24 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 385 U.S. 838 (1966); United States v. Hawkins, 295 F.2d 837 (6th Cir. 1961).

B. That the false statement be made directly to the federal government, United States v. Richmond, supra, at 1187; United States v. Uni Oil Co., 646 F.2d 946, 954-55 (5th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 908 (1982); United States v. Stanford, 589 F.2d 285, 297 (7th Cir. 1978), cert. denied, 440 U.S. 983 (1979), United States v. Krause, 507 F.2d 113, 117 (5th Cir. 1975); United States v. Candella, 487 F.2d 1223, 1227 (2d Cir. 1973), cert. denied, 415 U.S. 977 (1974).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

C. Any favorable agency action, Brandow v. United States, 268 F.2d 559 (9th Cir. 1959); United States v. Quirk, 167 F. Supp. 462 (E.D. Pa. 1958), aff'd, 266 F.2d 26 (3d Cir. 1959).

D. Reliance by the government, United States v. Hicks, 619 F.2d 752, 754-55 (8th Cir. 1980); United States v. Norberg, 612 F.2d 1, 4 (1st Cir. 1979); United States v. Lichenstein, 610 F.2d 1272, 1278 (5th Cir. 1980); United States v. Goldfine, 538 F.2d 815, 820-21 (9th Cir. 1978).

E. Actual knowledge of federal agency jurisdiction, United States v. Yermian, _____ U.S. _____, 104 S. Ct. 2936 (1984).

In reversing Yermian, 708 F.2d 365 (9th Cir. 1983), the Supreme Court tackled the issue of the scope of knowledge required by 18 U.S.C. §1001, and held, in a sharply divided 5-4 opinion, that the government need not prove that the false statement was made with actual knowledge on the part of the defendant of the federal agency jurisdiction.

A majority of the Supreme Court, looking to the language of the statute, found the phrase "in any matter within the jurisdiction of any department or agency of the United States" to be a jurisdictional requirement only, and that a "natural reading" or the statutory language of 18 U.S.C. §1001 made it "clear that Congress did not intend the term 'knowingly' to apply to the jurisdictional element of 18 U.S.C. §1001," but rather to the falsity of the statement. Dissenters wrote that the language of 18 U.S.C. §1001 is ambiguous, and that the statutory history is likewise unclear on what standard of proof attaches to the jurisdictional issue.

Notwithstanding the importance of this decision, even more interesting is footnote 14, in Yermian, supra, which notes that the Supreme Court need not rule on the necessity or the propriety of the giving of any instruction on culpability--including one of reasonable foreseeability. The language in the footnote is itself ambiguous enough to support arguments in favor of or against the giving of such an instruction. Given the narrowness of the majority position and the position of the dissenting justices, it may be the better part of valor to seek an instruction on reasonable foreseeability in subsequent cases.

See also, United States v. Baker, 626 F.2d 512, 515-516 (5th Cir. 1980); United States v. Stanford, supra, at 246-298; United States v. Lewis, 587 F.2d 854 (6th Cir. 1978).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-42.120 Jurisdictional Requirements Satisfied

Jurisdictional requirements are satisfied if:

A. The agency had the power to act on the statement, United States v. DiFonzo, 603 F.2d 1260, 1264 (7th Cir. 1979); Ogden v. United States, 303 F.2d 724, 743 (9th Cir. 1962), cert denied, 376 U.S. 973 (1964).

B. There is an "intended" relationship between the act and the federal government, United States v. Stanford, supra, at 297; United States v. Krause, supra; United States v. Candella, supra, United States v. Jones, 464 F.2d 1118 (8th Cir. 1972); United States v. Ebeling, supra at 434.

C. The act was calculated to induce government action, United States v. Barbato, 471 F.2d 918, 922 (1st Cir. 1973); United States v. Maenza, 475 F.2d 251, 253 (7th Cir. 1973); United States v. Lee, 422 F.2d 1049, 1051 (5th Cir. 1970); Brandow v. United States, supra; United States v. Allen, 193 F. Supp. 954 (S.D. Cal. 1961); United States v. Quirk, supra.

The Supreme Court has interpreted 18 U.S.C. §1001 broadly. See, e.g., Bryson v. United States, 396 U.S. 64 (1969). The statute is viewed as seeking to protect both the operation and the integrity of the government. A false statement may threaten to obstruct or impair the "honest and faithful operation of some governmental agency and/or the value and integrity of a document or report issued by that government agency." See United States v. Myers, supra at 531.

9-42.130 Statements Meriting Prosecution

Whether or not the relationship between the fraudulent statement and the government is sufficient to warrant prosecution often depends on the context of the false statement. Not all false statements violate 18 U.S.C. §1001. Statements meriting prosecution may be made in at least three ways:

A. Directly to a federal agency, e.g., application form for employment, Alire v. United States, 313 F.2d 31 (10th Cir. 1962); non-communist affidavits with the NLRB, United States v. Pezzati, 160 F. Supp. 787 (D. Colo. 1958).

B. To a private person or institution which implements federal programs, e.g., Medicare fiscal intermediaries, United States v. Kraude, 467 F.2d 37, 38 (9th Cir.), cert denied, 409 U.S. 1076 (1972); FHA and

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

VA loans secured initially through local banks which have authority to determine if applicant satisfies statutory requirements for eligibility, United States v. Levinson, 405 F.2d 971 (6th Cir. 1968), cert. denied, 395 U.S. 906, 958 (1968); Preuit v. United States, 382 F.2d 277 (9th Cir. 1967); statements to private employer of number of hours worked, United States v. Giarraputo, 140 F. Supp. 831 (E.D.N.Y. 1956).

C. To one's self, as false statements in business records which may be subject to federal government inspection, Gonzales v. United States, 286 F.2d 118 (10th Cir. 1961), cert. denied, 365 U.S. 878 (1961) (records subject to inspection by Rural Electrification Administration); United States v. Ganz, 48 F. Supp. 323, 325 (D. Mass. 1942) (subject to O.P.A. inspection).

This area may expand as a result of the periodic federal control over wages and prices, with audits being the only means of enforcing compliance.

These various acts have one common feature: they affect either the operation or integrity of the government. All that is necessary for jurisdiction to lie is that the false statement touch on a federal interest; it is not necessary that the statement affect or influence that interest. The only limitation on this rule is that the federal interest must exist at the time the false statement is made; it cannot arise after the defendant has made a false statement, Terry v. United States, 131 F.2d 40 (8th Cir. 1942).

Once it is determined that there is jurisdiction, issues of materiality, knowledge, falsity, etc. arise. See USAM 9-42.140, infra.

9-42.140 Elements of 18 U.S.C. §1001

A. The following acts are prohibited:

1. Making a false statement;
2. Using a false statement;
3. Falsifying;
4. Concealing; and
5. Covering up.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

B. Whether the above acts are criminal depends on whether or not there is an affirmative response to all of the following questions:

1. Was the act material?
2. Was the act within the jurisdiction of the department or agency of the United States?
3. Was the act done knowingly and willfully?

9-42.141 The Making of a False Statement

The false statement may be written or oral, United States v. Beacon Brass Co., 344 U.S. 43, 46 (1952); United States v. Rose, 570 F.2d 1358, 1364 (9th Cir. 1978); United States v. Massey, 550 F.2d 300, 305 (5th Cir. 1977); Hensley v. United States, 406 F.2d 481 (10th Cir. 1968). It may be sworn or unsworn, Eccc Inc. v. Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, 645 F.2d 339 (5th Cir. 1981); United States v. Massey, supra, United States v. Isaacs, 493 F.2d 1124, 1158 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 417 U.S. 976 (1974); Neely v. United States, 300 F.2d 67, 71-72 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 369 U.S. 864 (1962); United States v. Stephens, 315 F. Supp. 1008, 1010 n.2 (W.D. Okla 1970). It may be voluntary or required by law, Neely v. United States, supra, at 71; Knowles v. United States, 224 F.2d 168, 172 (10th Cir. 1955); see also cases cited in United States v. Odgen, 303 F.2d 724, 743 n.70 (9th Cir. 1962), cert. denied, 376 U.S. 973 (1964). The statement need not be presented, submitted or stated directly to the federal government, United States v. Richmond, 700 F.2d 1183, 1187 (8th Cir. 1983); United States v. Stanford, 589 F.2d 285, 297 (7th Cir. 1978), cert. denied, 440 U.S. 983 (1979); United States v. Lange, 528 F.2d 1280 (5th Cir. 1976); United States v. Candella, 487 F.2d 1223, 1227 (2d Cir. 1973), cert. denied, 415 U.S. 977 (1974).

9-42.142 Knowingly and Willfully

18 U.S.C. §1001 prohibits the knowing and willful commission or omission of certain acts.

A. To commit an act "knowingly" is to do it with knowledge or awareness of the true facts or situation, and not because of mistake, accident or some other innocent reason, United States v. Weatherspoon, 581 F.2d 595, 600-01 (7th Cir. 1978); United States v. Lange, 528 F.2d 1280, 1288 (5th Cir. 1976). Knowledge of the relevant criminal provision governing the conduct is not required, Johnson v. United States, 410 F.2d

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

38, 47 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 396 U.S. 822 (1969). The false statement need not be made with an intent to deceive if there is an intent to mislead or to induce belief in its falsity, United States v. Lichenstein, 610 F.2d 1272, 1277-78 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 447 U.S. 907 (1980); United States v. Godwin, 566 F.2d 975, 976 (5th Cir. 1978). Reckless disregard of whether a statement is true or a conscious effort to avoid learning the truth can be construed as acting "knowingly," United States v. Evans, 559 F.2d 244, 244-46 (5th Cir. 1977), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 1015 (1978); United States v. Egenberg, 441 F.2d 441, 444 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 404 U.S. 944 (1971); United States v. Abrams, 427 F.2d 86, 91 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 832 (1970). A defendant cannot be relieved of the consequences of a material misrepresentation for lack of knowledge when the means of ascertaining truthfulness are available, United States v. Weiler, 385 F.2d 62, 65-66 (3d Cir. 1967).

B. An act is done "willfully" if done voluntarily and intentionally and with the specific intent to do something the law forbids, United States v. Malinowski, 472 F.2d 850 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 411 U.S. 970 (1973); United States v. Clearfield, 358 F. Supp. 564, 574 (E.D. Pa. 1973). There is no requirement of showing evil intent on the part of a defendant in order to prove that he/she acted "willfully," Malinowski, supra; Neely v. United States, supra, at 72; McBride v. United States, 225 F.2d 249, 253-55 (5th Cir. 1955), cert. denied, 350 U.S. 934 (1965).

9-42.143 Materiality

The Second Circuit requires materiality of the false statement only in the first clause of 18 U.S.C. §1001, United States v. Rinaldi, 393 F.2d 97 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 393 U.S. 913 (1965); United States v. Aadal, 368 F.2d 962 (2d Cir. 1966), cert. denied, 386 U.S. 970 (1967); United States v. Marchisio, 344 F.2d 653 (2d Cir. 1965). In each of the cases cited, however, the court nevertheless found the false statement to be material. The majority and better view is that the element of materiality pervades the entire statute. See United States v. Adler, 633 F.2d 1287, 1291 (8th Cir. 1980); United States v. Diggs, 613 F.2d 988, 999 (D.C. Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 446 U.S. 982 (1980); United States v. DiTongo, 603 F.2d 1260 (7th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 1018 (1980); United States v. Valdez, 594 F.2d 725, 728 (9th Cir. 1979); United States v. Johnson, 530 F.2d 52 (5th Cir. 1976); Brethauer v. United States, 333 F.2d 302, 206 (8th Cir. 1964).

Almost every court that has considered the issue has held that the question of materiality of a false statement or a concealed fact under 18

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

U.S.C. §1001 is an issue of law to be decided by the trial court. See United States v. Sinclair, 229 U.S. 263, 298 (1929); United States v. McIntosh, 655 F.2d 80, reh'g denied, 660 F.2d 497 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 948 (1982); United States v. Baker, 626 F.2d 512, 514 n.4 (5th Cir. 1980); United States v. Adler, supra, at 1292, United States v. Ivey, 322 F.2d 523 (4th Cir. 1963). But see, United States v. Valdez, 594 F.2d 725, 729 (9th Cir. 1979), where the Ninth Circuit held materiality to be a question of fact to be submitted to the jury. For a succinct statement of the legal as opposed to factual rationale, see United States v. Ven-Fuel, Inc., 602 F.2d 747, 753 (5th Cir. 1979).

The most often cited test for materiality appears in United States v. Weinstock, 231 F.2d 699, 701 (D.C. Cir. 1956):

"Material" when used in respect to evidence is often confused with "relevant," but the two terms have wholly different meanings. To be "relevant" means to relate to the issue. To be "material" means to have probative weight, i.e., reasonably likely to influence the tribunal in making a determination required to be made. A statement may be relevant but not material.

The test is whether the false statement has a natural tendency to influence, or was capable of influencing, the decision of the tribunal in making a determination required to be made. See United States v. Carrier, 654 F.2d 559, 561 (10th Cir. 1981); United States v. DiFonzo, 603 F.2d 1260, 1266 (7th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 1018 (1980), United States v. Valdez, 594 F.2d 725, 728 (9th Cir. 1979); United States v. Cooper, 493 F.2d 473, 474 (5th Cir. 1974); United States v. Jones, 464 F.2d 1118, 1122 (8th Cir. 1972).

It is not part of the test that the government actually be influenced by the false statement or concealment, United States v. Diaz, 690 F.2d 1352 (5th Cir. 1982); United States v. Jones, supra, at 1121-22; Gonzales v. United States, 286 F.2d 118, 122 (10th Cir. 1960), cert. denied, 365 U.S. 878 (1961); United States v. Clearfield, 358 F. Supp. 564, 574 n.23 (E.D. Pa. 1973). Nor is it part of the test that the government actually relies on the statement or concealment. See cases collected at USAM 9-42.110, supra. It is also not necessary that the issue to which the false statement or fact is material be the main issue. The Court in Weinstock v. United States, supra, at 703, held that "the issue to which the false statement is material need not be the main issue; it may be a collateral issue. And it need not bear directly upon the issue but may merely augment or diminish the evidence upon some point. But it must have some weight in the process of reaching a decision."

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Whether the agency would have accepted or rejected the cause irrespective of the concealed fact or false statement is not determinative of materiality. See Gollaher v. United States, 419 F.2d 520, 529 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 396 U.S. 960 (1969). In United States v. Quirk, 167 F. Supp. 462, 464 (E.D. Pa.), aff'd, 266 F.2d 26 (3d Cir. 1959), the defendant's application falsely reciting certain facts was rejected for reasons unrelated to his false statement. The court held that the purpose of 18 U.S.C. §1001 was to prohibit the willful submission of false statements "calculated to induce agency reliance or action, irrespective of whether actual favorable agency action was, for other reasons impossible." See United States v. Quirk, supra, at 464. The court held, citing Freidus v. United States, 223 F.2d 598, 601 (D.C. Cir. 1955), that the test is whether the false statements were, in and of themselves, capable of influencing a governmental function.

The definition of materiality under 18 U.S.C. §1001 is essentially the same as that covered by 18 U.S.C. §§1621 and 1623, which are the perjury statutes. For a brief summary of that definition, see 60 Am. Jur. 2d, Perjury, §11. See also United States v. Gremillion, 464 F.2d 901, 904-05 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 409 U.S. 1085 (1972), for a discussion of materiality under 18 U.S.C. §1621.

Materiality is best shown by the testimony of expert witnesses, generally those who make the decisions on the application or statements in the particular case as to the influence that defendant's allegedly false statement might have had on the ultimate result of the transaction. Two cases where courts of appeal have reversed convictions on materiality grounds, United States v. Talkington, 589 F.2d 415, 417 (9th Cir. 1978), and United States v. Beer, 518 F.2d 168, 172-73 (5th Cir. 1975), contain discussions of what evidence on materiality was lacking in those cases.

9-42.144 False

18 U.S.C. §1001 requires that the statement or representation be actually false and the government has the burden of establishing the alleged falsity of the statement. Webster's 3d International Dictionary defines the adjective "false" as: "not corresponding to truth or reality." Although a statement may be misleading, unauthorized, or even fraudulent, a conviction under this section cannot be sustained unless the statement is also false. See United States v. Diogo, 320 F.2d 898, 905-09 (2d Cir. 1963) (literally true that defendant married). Where a statement is ambiguous, it is incumbent upon the government to negative any reasonable interpretation that would make the defendant's statement factually correct, Diogo supra, at 907; United States v. Race, 632 F.2d 1114, 1120 (4th Cir. 1980); United States v. Anderson 579 F.2d 455 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 980 (1978). The question of whether a literally true statement can be a false representation is an open one. While the Second Circuit in Diogo, supra, has held that a literally true statement cannot be said to be a false representation, the Fifth Circuit has twice held to the contrary, United States v. Rodgers, 624 F.2d 1303, 1310-11 (5th Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 450 U.S. 917 (1981); Peterson v. United States, 344 F.2d 419, 427 (5th Cir. 1965).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

This problem can be avoided in part by casting the indictment in terms of a "concealment of a material fact" rather than the making of a false statement or representation, Diogo, supra, at 902.

In United States v. Outer Harbor Dock & Wharf Co., 124 F. Supp. 337 (S.D. Cal. 1954), the government charged that the defendants had falsely represented to the government that they were obligated under a lease with the city of Los Angeles to remove a building erected by the Navy on land leased by the city to the defendants. The Court held that the defendant's company was so obligated, and that therefore there had been no misrepresentation. The Court commented that criminal fraud could not be inferred from a reasonable opinion as to the legal effect of a contract, whether that opinion was erroneous or correct. Id. at 345. This is not to say that criminal fraud may not be inferred where the opinion is made in bad faith.

9-42.145 Department or Agency

18 U.S.C. §1001 requires that the false statement be in a "matter within the jurisdiction of any department or agency." 18 U.S.C. §6 defines department and agency:

As used in this Title:

The term "department" means one of the executive departments enumerated in section 1 of Title 5, unless the context shows that such term was intended to describe the executive, legislative, or judicial branches of the government.

The term "agency" includes any department, independent establishment, commission, administration, authority, board or bureau of the United States or any corporation in which the United States has a proprietary interest, unless the context shows that such term was intended to be used in a more limited sense.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

In United States v. Bramblett, 348 U.S. 503 (1955), the Supreme Court stated:

Congress could not have intended to leave frauds such as this without penalty. The development scope and purpose of the section [18 U.S.C. §1001] shows that "department" as used in this context, was meant to describe the executive, legislative and judicial branches of the Government.

United States v. Bramblett, supra, involved false statements to the Disbursing Office of the House of Representatives, which is engaged in what could be characterized as administrative functions of the legislature. While it has been suggested that 18 U.S.C. §1001 is limited to administrative and housekeeping chores in connection with the legislative branch of the government, there is no authority for such a restriction.

Several courts have viewed the application of 18 U.S.C. §1001 to the judicial branch more narrowly than Bramblett suggests. In Morgan v. United States, 309 F.2d 234 (D.C. Cir. 1962), cert. denied, 373 U.S. 917 (1963), the court limited the application of 18 U.S.C. §1001 to those items which essentially involved the "administrative" or "housekeeping" function of the judiciary and strictly excepted those items which involve the judicial machinery of the court. The court found that representations as to license to practice law were of the administrative or housekeeping type. In United States v. Erhardt, 381 F.2d 173 (6th Cir. 1967), the court applied the Morgan interpretation and held 18 U.S.C. §1001 does not apply to the introduction of false documents in a criminal proceeding. More recently the Fifth Circuit has held that 18 U.S.C. §1001 does not apply to a bail-removal hearing in a criminal proceeding. United States v. Abrahams, 604 F.2d 386 (5th Cir. 1979).

A false statement made to the court in a private civil action has been held to be beyond the scope of the statute. See United States v. D'Amato, 507 F.2d 26 (2d Cir. 1974). The court in D'Amato held that 18 U.S.C. §1001 does not apply where the government is involved in the civil action only by way of its presence as a court deciding a matter in which neither it nor its agencies are involved. Compare United States v. Stephens, 315 F. Supp. 1008 (W.D. Okla. 1970), which upheld a conviction under 18 U.S.C. §1001 for a false statement made in a civil proceeding to vacate a criminal sentence.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Other government departments or agencies which have been held to be "agencies" within the statute are the War Assets Administration, United States v. Todorow, 173 F.2d 439 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 337 U.S. 925 (1949); the Veterans Administration, Sanchez v. United States, 134 F.2d 279 (1st Cir.), cert. denied, 319 U.S. 768 (1943); the Internal Revenue Service, United States v. Ryan, 455 F.2d 728, 733 (9th Cir. 1972), United States v. Ratner, 464 F.2d 101 (9th Cir. 1972); but see United States v. Bush, 503 F.2d 813 (5th Cir. 1974), and Paternoistro v. United States, 311 F.2d 298, 309 (5th Cir. 1962); the U.S. Tax Court, Stein v. United States, 363 F.2d 587 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 385 U.S. 934 (1966); the Commodity Credit Corporation, Spivey v. United States, 109 F.2d 181 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 310 U.S. 631 (1940); Army Post Exchanges, United States v. Brethauer, 333 F.2d 302, 305 (8th Cir. 1964) (this case effectively expanded the term "agency" to include those agencies created by administrative regulation as well as by statute); Bureau of Customs, United States v. Hain, 218 F. Supp. 922, 929-30 (S.D.N.Y. 1963).

Those "agencies" which have been held not to be agencies or departments within the statute are the federal grand jury, United States v. Allen, 193 F. Supp. 954 (S.D. Cal. 1961), and the Federal Bureau of Investigation, United States v. Lambert, 470 F.2d 354 (5th Cir. 1972); Friedman v. United States, 374 F.2d 363 (8th Cir. 1967); contra, United States v. Stark, 131 F. Supp. 190 (D.Md. 1955). See also USAM 9-42.160, infra.

9-42.146 Concealment--Failure to Disclose

18 U.S.C. §1001 is often referred to as a false statement statute, and yet its scope extends beyond statements. 18 U.S.C. §1001 proscribes the acts of making false statements, falsifying, concealing or covering up. Concealment and cover-up are essentially identical concepts. Also a concealment very often is the result of a falsification. These latter acts need not have any relation to a statement. A concealment may involve a failure to disclose or partial disclosures of information required on an application form, Olin Mathieson v. United States, 368 F.2d 525 (2d Cir. 1966); Frasier v. United States, 267 F.2d 62 (1st Cir. 1959); under such a theory, however, the government will have to prove that the defendant had a duty to disclose the facts in question at the time he/she was alleged to have concealed them, United States v. Irwin, 654 F.2d 671, 678-79 (10th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 1016 (1982); concealment may also involve a merely physical act of concealment such as transferring inspection stamps, United States v. Steiner Plastics Mfg. Co., 231 F.2d 149 (2d Cir. 1956); changing numbers on bottles to conceal rejection, United States v. Private Brands, 250 F.2d 554 (2d Cir. 1957), cert.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

denied, 355 U.S. 957 (1958); keeping false prescription records thereby concealing use of morphine, United States v. Coil, 343 F.2d 573 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 382 U.S. 821 (1965); use of false stamp thereby concealing ownership of tobacco, United States v. Ivey, 322 F.2d 523 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 375 U.S. 953 (1963); omission in financial statement of relevant facts, Neeley v. United States, 300 F.2d 67, 73 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 369 U.S. 864 (1962); false statement as to existence of a second mortgage, United States v. Hawkins, 295 F.2d 837 (6th Cir. 1961).

Several courts have required that the indictment set forth the essential acts constituting the concealment, Harris v. United States, 217 F. Supp. 86 (M.D. Ga. 1962); see also United States v. Apex Distributing Company, 148 F. Supp. 365 (D.R.I. 1957); United States v. White, 69 F. Supp. 562 (S.D. Cal. 1946), or at least be prepared to prove that the "concealment by trick..." consisted of affirmative acts, United States v. London, 550 F.2d 206 (5th Cir. 1977).

9-42.150 False Statements as to Future Actions

While the falsification which is the subject of prosecution is usually of past or present facts, it need not be so. A present statement as to future intent, e.g., a promise to do that which is not actually intended, is a false statement of an existing intent. See United States v. Diggs, 613 F.2d 988, 999 (D.C. Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 466 U.S. 982 (1980); United States v. Elmore 267 F.2d 595 (4th Cir.) cert. denied, 361 U.S. 832 (1959). See also United States v. Grayson, 166 F.2d 863 (2d Cir. 1949). Obviously, it is difficult to demonstrate the defendant's present intent as to the future.

For other in futuro cases, see United States v. Elmore, supra (wheat obtained on promise of intended use); United States v. Corcoran, 229 F.2d 295 (5th Cir. 1956) (Veteran's Administration (VA) home, loan-intent to occupy a home); United States v. Lurie, 222 F.2d 11 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 350 U.S. 835 (1955) (Veteran's preference in purchase of surplus property--intent to go into oil transporting business); United States v. McCoy, 169 F.2d 776 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 335 U.S. 898 (1948) (purpose for purchasing); United States v. Rubinstein, 166 F.2d 249 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 333 U.S. 868 (1948) (statement to draft board that employer needed him); United States v. Grayson, 166 F.2d 863 (2d Cir. 1948). For a restatement of these and other cases, see United States v. Johnson, 284 F. Supp. 273 (W.D. Mo. 1968), aff'd, 410 F.2d 38 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 396 U.S. 822 (1969) (certification of compliance).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-42.160 False Statement to a Federal Investigator

Quite often the circumstances arise where a false statement has been made in response to an inquiry by an FBI agent or other agency investigator, e.g., Secret Service, HUD, Immigration. The issue arises whether such a statement is within the purview of 18 U.S.C. §1001. While at first blush the cases conflict, they are distinguishable on the basis of the nature of the inquiry and the form of the response.

A. Where the false statement has been made as a result of the questioning of an FBI agent, the preponderance of authority is to the effect that 18 U.S.C. §1001 does not apply, United States v. Schnaiderman, 568 F.2d 1208, 1213 (5th Cir. 1978); United States v. Bedore, 455 F.2d 1109 (9th Cir. 1972); Paternostro v. United States, 311 F.2d 298 (5th Cir. 1962), United States v. Ehrlichman, 379 F. Supp. 291, 292 (D.D.C. 1974), aff'd on other grounds, 546 F.2d 910 (D.C. Cir. 1976), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 1120 (1977). Where the false statement is volunteered to an FBI agent or U.S. Attorney, however, the courts have generally held that 18 U.S.C. §1001 does apply. See United States v. Lambert, 501 F.2d 943, 945 (5th Cir. 1974); United States v. Adler, 380 F.2d 917 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 389 U.S. 1006 (1967); United States v. Van Valkenberg, 157 F. Supp. 599 (D. Alaska 1958); contra, Friedman v. United States, 374 F.2d 363 (8th Cir. 1967). The cases appeared distinguishable in that a volunteered false statement results in the government's investigatory machinery being set in motion whereas when the statement is made in response to an FBI inquiry, the investigatory machinery has already been moving, and no injury to the United States occurs.

B. The courts have given other reasons for not applying 18 U.S.C. §1001 to false statements made to the FBI:

1. That the response is not a statement within the purview of 18 U.S.C. §1001, Paternostro v. United States, supra United States v. Davey, 155 F. Supp. 175 (S.D.N.Y. 1957); United States v. Stark, 131 F. Supp. 190 (D. Md. 1955).

2. That the response is not within the jurisdiction of the FBI, Friedman v. United States, supra, United States v. Stark, supra, contra, United States v. Adler, supra; United States v. Lambert, supra.

C. However, a unanimous Supreme court decision in United States v. Rodgers, ___ U.S. ___, 104 S. Ct. 1942 (1984), in reversing the Eighth Circuit and its prior reliance on Friedman, supra, held the statutory language clearly encompassed criminal investigations, and its legislative history would not support a more restricted reach. Concluding (1) criminal investigations surely fell within the term "in any matter;" and (2) the Bureau qualified as "department(s) or agencie(s)," the Court said the language "within the jurisdiction" merely differentiates the official, authorized functions of an agency or department from matters peripheral to the business of that body. It is now clear that the term "jurisdiction," defined as the "right to say and the power to act;" Gonzales v. United States, 286 F.2d 118 (10th Cir. 1960), should not be given a narrow or technical meaning, United States v. Fern, 696 F.2d 1269 (5th Cir. 1983), and extends to the "power to investigate."

Although the holding of this case is based upon those instances where an individual knowingly and willfully volunteers false information to a law enforcement or other agency, the language contained therein may be equally applicable to those not targets of an investigation who, when questioned by a law enforcement agency, knowingly provide false information. Such further construction must, in all likelihood, await another prosecution and court decision.

D. The statute has been held to apply where the false response is made to an investigator other than an FBI agent; to IRS, United States v. Ratner, 464 F.2d 101 (9th Cir. 1972); United States v. McCue, 301 F.2d 452 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 370 U.S. 939 (1962); to S.E.C., United States v. Mahler, 363 F.2d 673 (2d Cir. 1966); to an Army officer, Frasier v. United States, 267 F.2d 62 (1st Cir. 1959); to the immigration authority, Tzantarmas v. United States, 402 F.2d 163 (9th Cir. 1968), cert. denied, 394 U.S. 966 (1969).

E. The problem has also been viewed from another direction--the form of the false statement. Where the statement takes the form of an "exculpatory no," 18 U.S.C. §1001 should not apply irrespective of who asks the question. "In such instances it has been held that where an individual falsely denies the truth of questions submitted to him by government agents, such responses are not 'statements' or 'representations' within the meaning of Section 1001 and therefore are not subject to criminal prosecution under it," United States v. Lambert, 470 F.2d 354, 358 (5th Cir. 1972), vacated, 501 F.2d 943 (1974); United States v. Bush, 503 F.2d 813 (5th Cir. 1974); Paternostro v. United States, supra; United States v. Phillipe, 173 F. Supp. 582 (S.D.N.Y. 1959); United States v. Davey, supra; United States v. Levin, 133 F. Supp. 88 (D. Colo. 1953); United States v. Stark, supra. One other reason for such an approach is the latent spirit of the Fifth Amendment. See Stark, supra, at 207.

The Second and Ninth Circuits in Tzantarmas v. United States, supra; United States v. Adler, supra, and Brandow v. United States, 268 F.2d 559

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

(9th Cir. 1959), expressly reject the "exculpatory no" analysis. Those circuits distinguished Paternostro v. United States, supra; United States v. Stark, supra, and other cases in the same line and went on to disapprove of the strict construction of "jurisdiction" and "statement" in 18 U.S.C. §1001, pointing to the broad language of United States v. Bramblett, 348 U.S. 503 (1955).

F. A useful alternative to 18 U.S.C. §1001 may be 18 U.S.C. §1512, which provides:

(a) Whoever knowingly uses intimidation or physical force, or threatens another person, or attempts to do so, or engages in misleading conduct toward another person, with intent to -

(b) Hinder, delay, or prevent the communication to a law enforcement officer or judge of the United States of information relating to the commission or possible commission of a Federal offense or a violation of conditions of probation, parole, or release pending judicial proceedings... shall be fined... or imprisoned... or both.

9-42.170 Corporation--Crimes--Conspiracy

It is well settled that a corporation may be convicted of criminal violations. See New York Central v. H.R.R. Co., 212 U.S. 481, 492 (1909); United States v. Union Supply, 215 U.S. 50, 54-55 (1909); United States v. Cotter, 60 F.2d 689 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 287 U.S. 666 (1932). Corporations have been convicted of making false statements. See United States v. Olin Mathieson Chemical Corp., 368 F.2d 523 (2d Cir. 1966); United States v. Alamo Fence Co. of Houston, 240 F.2d 179 (5th Cir. 1957).

Corporations have been convicted of conspiracy. See New York Central v. H.R.R. Co., supra, at 497; United States v. Mininsohn, 101 F.2d 477, 478 (3d Cir. 1939); see also United States v. A.M.A., 130 F.2d 233 (D.C. Cir. 1942), aff'd, 317 U.S. 519 (1943); United States v. Nearing, 252 F. 223 (S.D.N.Y. 1918). Corporations have been convicted of conspiracy with their officers and agents, Alamo Fence Co., supra. See also cases cited in United States v. Kemmel, 160 F. Supp. 718, 720 (M.D. Pa. 1958). While there is some authority for the proposition that a corporation cannot conspire with its own agents. See, e.g., United States v. Nelson Radio, 200 F.2d 911 (5th Cir. 1952), cert. denied, 345 U.S. 925 (1953); United States v. Marion County Co-op Ass'n, 114 F. Supp. 58 (W.D. Ark. 1953), the authority is limited to cases involving anti-trust statutes, which by their very nature demand more than conspiracy between a corporation and its agents.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-42.180 False Claim (18 U.S.C. §287)

18 U.S.C. §287, the general false claims statute provides:

Whoever makes or presents to any person or officer in the civil, military or naval service of the United States, or to any department or agency thereof, any claim upon or against the United States, or any department or agency thereof, knowing such claim to be false, fictitious or fraudulent, shall be fined... or imprisoned... or both.

18 U.S.C. §287, like 18 U.S.C. §1001, had its origin in an 1863 statute which was drafted "in the wake of a spate of frauds upon the government." United States v. Bramblett, 348 U.S. 503, 504 (1955). Originally the statute penalized presentment "for payment or approval" of false claims upon or against the Government... Bramblett, supra, at 504. False statements made "for the purpose of obtaining, or aiding in obtaining, the approval or payment of such claim" were also proscribed. The Act of June 25, 1948, 62 Stat. 749, divided the sections into 18 U.S.C. §287 and 18 U.S.C. §1001, respectively, United States v. D'Amato, 507 F.2d 26 (2d Cir. 1974). See also the Act of March 2, 1863, 12 Stat. 696.

The purpose of 18 U.S.C. §287, is to protect the government from false, fictitious or fraudulent claims. See United States v. Montoya, 716 F.2d 1340 (10th Cir. 1983); United States v. Computer Science Corp., 689 F.2d 1181 (4th Cir. 1982); cert. denied, ___ U.S. ___ (1983); United States v. Lewis, 587 F.2d 854 (6th Cir. 1978); United States v. Niefert-White Co., 390 U.S. 228 (1968).

The claim need not be false, fictitious and fraudulent; a claim that is false, fictitious or fraudulent will fall within the purview of 18 U.S.C. §287. The language of the statute is to be considered in the disjunctive. See United States v. Blecker, 657 F.2d 629 (4th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 1150 (1982); United States v. Irwin, 654 F.2d 671 (10th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 1016 (1982); United States v. Milton, 602 F.2d 231 (9th Cir. 1979); United States v. Maher, 582 F.2d 842 (4th Cir. 1978), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 1115 (1979); Johnson v. United States, 410 F.2d 38 (8th Cir. 1969), cert. denied, 396 U.S. 822 (1969).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

See Johnson v. United States, supra; United States v. Mastros, 257 F.2d 808 (3d Cir. 1958), cert. denied, 358 U.S. 830 (1958) (a settlement proposal seeks the collection of money from the government and is a claim under 18 U.S.C. §287).

9-42.181 Elements of 18 U.S.C. §287

A. The essential elements of 18 U.S.C. §287 are:

1. A claim is made,
2. Against or to a department or agency of the United States,
3. For money or property,
4. The claim was false, fictitious or fraudulent and material; and 1/
5. The person must have known at the time that the claim was false, fictitious or fraudulent.

Although it is clear from the case law that specific intent to defraud is not required for a conviction under 18 U.S.C. §287, the circuits are divided on the issue of whether willingness is an essential element of 18 U.S.C. §287. For example, the Tenth, Fifth and Second Circuits have held that willfulness is not an essential element of 18 U.S.C. §287, United States v. Irwin, supra; United States v. Cook, 586 F.2d 572 (5th Cir. 1978), cert. denied, 442 U.S. 909 (1979); United States v. Precision Medical Laboratories, Inc., 539 F.2d 434 (2d Cir. 1978). The Ninth, Eighth and Fourth Circuits have reached decisions that appear to indicate that willfulness is an essential element of 18 U.S.C. §287, United States v. Milton, supra; United States v. Maher, supra; Johnson v. United States, supra.

1/ But see, United States v. Irwin, supra; United States v. Haynie, 568 F.2d 1091 (5th Cir. 1978), herein discussing materiality as an essential element.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

B. Two critical elements of proof for 18 U.S.C. §287 are:

1. A claim on the United States for money or property, United States v. Neifert - White Co., supra; United States v. McNinch, 356 U.S. 595 (1958); United States v. Cohn, 270 U.S. 339 (1926); United States v. Mastros, supra. All cited cases define claims as attempts at securing money or property. The money or property which is the subject of the claim must be shown.

2. A presentation of a claim. It must be more than an intention to make a claim. The claim must be presented actually and physically and thereby made to the government, United States ex. rel. Marcus v. Hess, 317 U.S. 537 (1943); Bridgeman v. United States, 140 F.577 (9th Cir. 1905); United States v. Christopherson, 216 F.2d 225 (E.D. Mo. 1919). While the clearest case is presentation directly to the government, it may go through an intermediary. Presentation of a refund check for payment constitutes making a false claim on the United States. See United States v. Branker, 395 F.2d 881 (2d Cir. 1968), cert. denied sub nom., Lacey v. United States, 393 U.S. 1029 (1969); Scolnick v. United States, 331 F.2d 598 (1st Cir. 1964); Dimick v. United States, 116 F. 825 (9th Cir. 1902), cert. denied, 189 U.S. 509 (1903).

The Supreme Court in United States ex. rel. Marcus v. Hess, supra, held that a person submitting a claim need not submit it directly to an agency or department to be convicted or "causing" a false claim to be made. See United States v. Brogren, 63 F. Supp. 702 (D. Mass. 1945). See also 18 U.S.C. §286, which proscribes conspiracy to defraud the United States with respect to false claim.

18 U.S.C. §287 has a civil counterpart in 31 U.S.C. §3729, known as the False Claims Act, which is administered by the Civil Division. Prosecutors should be certain that all False Claims Act matters, even if declined criminally, are referred for consideration of civil fraud actions to the Civil Division, Commercial Litigation Branch, if more than $200,000 is involved, otherwise to the Civil Section of the U.S. Attorneys Office. While it is not legally required, United States v. Baker Lackwood, 138 F.2d 48 (8th Cir. 1943), the normal procedure is to pursue the criminal prosecution first. When there is an opportunity to prosecute under either 18 U.S.C. §287 or §1001, the Civil Division benefits more by a prosecution under 18 U.S.C. §187, because 18 U.S.C. §187 and 31 U.S.C. §3729 have much the same elements of proof. This fact allows the Civil Division to take advantage of the doctrines of estoppel by judgment and res judicata, Emich Motors Corp. v. General Motors Corp., 340 U.S. 558, 568-69 (1951); Sealfon v. United States, 332 U.S. 575 (1948).

While it is clear that the materiality of the false statement must be shown in order to obtain a conviction under 18 U.S.C. §1001, United States

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

v. Montemayer, supra; United States v. Voorhees, 593 F.2d 346 (8th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 441 U.S. 936 (1979), the issue is not as clear under 18 U.S.C. §287. The circuits are split on the issue of whether materiality is an essential element of 18 U.S.C. §287. The Tenth Circuit in United States v. Irwin, supra, has decided that materiality is not an essential element of 18 U.S.C. §287. Dicta in the Fifth Circuit's decision in United States v. Haynie, 568 F.2d 1091 (5th Cir. 1978), indicates approval of the Tenth Circuit's holding on materiality in Irwin. The Eighth Circuit and the Fourth Circuit have held that materiality is an essential element of 18 U.S.C. §287, United States v. Pruitt, 702 F.2d 152 (8th Cir. 1983); United States v. Snider, 502 F.2d 645 (4th Cir. 1974). Finally, neither a false claim nor a false statement need be presented directly to the government to be actionable, United States v. Montoya, supra; United States v. Catena, 500 F.2d 1319 (3d Cir. 1974), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 1047 (1974); Pereira v. United States, 347 U.S. 1 (1954). Also, there is no need to demonstrate that the defendant knew the false claim and false statement would adversely affect federal funds, United States v. Stanford, 589 F.2d 285 (9th Cir. 1978), cert. denied, 440 U.S. 983 (1979); United States v. Lewis, supra.

Although there are differences in the operative language of 18 U.S.C. §1001 and 18 U.S.C. §287 concerning specific intent to defraud, willfulness and materiality, there are instances where criminal conduct will violate both statutes. In that event, either statute may be used to prosecute, United States v. Ruster, 712 F.2d 409 (9th Cir. 1983); United States v. Mackie, 681 F.2d 1121 (9th Cir. 1982).

9-42.190 False Statements and the Venue Statute, 18 U.S.C. §3237

The Supreme Court has cautioned that the venue rules are not to be treated lightly, United States v. Johnson, 323 U.S. 273, 276 (1961). The Sixth Amendment has been interpreted to provide a guarantee of trial in the state and district in which the crime was committed, Salinger v. Loisel, 265 U.S. 224, 232 (1924); Haas v. Henkel, 216 U.S. 462, 473 (1910); United States v. Burton, 202 U.S. 344, 381 (1906); In re Palliser, 136 U.S. 256, 265 (1890). If prosecution is brought in an improper venue, timely objection will result in dismissal of the indictment, Johnson, supra, and the error will prevent further proceedings if the statute of limitations has run, Borow v. United States, 101 F. Supp. 211, 215 (D. N.J. 1951); see also Valenti v. United States, 207 F.2d 242 (3d Cir. 1953). The key statute is 18 U.S.C. §3237.

While venue is prescribed in the United States Constitution, Art. III, Section 2, Congress has the power to define the elements of a crime carefully and give the executive power to prosecute it in one or any of the districts in which the crucial elements of the crime are performed, United States v. Travis, 364 U.S. 631 (1961). 18 U.S.C. §3237(a) provides that venue is proper in multiple district offenses where the offense was "begun, continued, or completed." Of principal concern is determining when a false statement offense has begun.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Where a person merely prepares a false document, clearly no crime has been committed. However, it is not inconsistent to contend that venue is proper in the place of preparation when that person mails or delivers the document to the government, thus committing a crime. This analysis is consistent with 18 U.S.C. §3237, which provides that venue is proper in any district in which a crime began, continued, or was completed, when that crime began in one district and was completed in another.

Several courts have specifically stated that preparation for the commission of the crime is not part of the crime and therefore venue is not proper in the district of preparation. See United States v. Lombardo, 241 U.S. 73 (1916); United States v. Reas, 99 F.2d 752 (4th Cir. 1938); United States v. Borow, 101 F. Supp. 211 (D. N.J. 1951). One court has specifically held that place of preparation is not proper under 18 U.S.C. §1001, United States v. Mischlich, 310 F. Supp. 669 (D. N.J. 1970), aff'd, 445 F.2d 1194 (3d Cir.) cert. denied, 404 U.S. 984 (1971). These courts view preparation as independent from commission. A different result should be reached when the "preparation" is an integral part of the commission of the crime, and it can fairly be said that by doing the act of preparation the defendant "began" the commission of the crime. Once an offense has been completed, 18 U.S.C. §3237 should permit the government the option of bringing prosecution in any proper district as far back as the "beginning" of the crime, as defined by the pertinent statute.

In Travis, supra, the Supreme Court was faced with the interplay of two statutes, 18 U.S.C. §1001 and Section 9(h) of the National Labor Relations Act. The latter statute provides that no action would be taken by the NLRB until certain affidavits were on file in the District of Columbia. The issue was whether venue in the place of mailing of the affidavits was proper. The Court seized on the language in Section 9(h) denying any NLRB action "until" the document was on file and in 18 U.S.C. §1001 requiring that the false statement be made "within the jurisdiction of department or agency." It reasoned that Section 9(h) did not begin to operate until the affidavit was received by the NLRB, and thus, at the time of mailing, the false statement was not within the jurisdiction of any department or agency. The more specific fraud statutes, see USAM 9-42.231, infra, do not have "under the jurisdiction" language. This would seem to indicate that the "under the jurisdiction" language in 18

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

U.S.C. §1001 is not intended to have any venue significance. Because of the peculiar interaction of Section 9(h) with 18 U.S.C. §1001, the government and courts have read Travis restrictively. See United States v. Ruehrup, 333 F.2d 641 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 379 U.S. 903 (1964); Imperial Meat v. United States, 316 F.2d 435 (10th Cir.), cert. denied, 375 U.S. 820 (1963); see also 10 U.S. Attorney's Bulletin 229 (1962).

With the exception of Travis, the cases hold the place of mailing of a false document to be a proper place for prosecution, United States v. Ruehrup, supra; Imperial Meat v. United States, supra, see United States v. Henslee, 262 F.2d 486 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 355 U.S. 905 (1957); DeRosier v. United States, 218 F.2d 420 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 349 U.S. 921 (1955); see also United States v. Candella, 487 F.2d 1223, 1227-28 (2d Cir. 1973); United States v. LaBar, 506 F. Supp. 1267 (M.D. Pa. 1981), aff'd, 688 F.2d 826 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 945 (1982); United States v. Downey, 257 F. 366 (D.R.I. 1919), United States v. Bridgeman, 140 F. 577 (9th Cir. 1905).

The other possible place of venue is that of filing which is the most certain place of venue, In re Palliser, 136 U.S. 257 (1890), see also United States v. Candella, supra. It is always proper, with two exceptions: (1) when the place of filing is improper, e.g., a bank officer improperly files his/his client's VA papers in violation of a VA regulation, United States v. Flaxman, 304 F. Supp. 1301 (S.D.N.Y. 1969), (2) when there is a duty to file and defendant is prosecuted for failure to file, proper venue is not place of required filing, but defendant's domicile, United States v. Lombardo, 241 U.S. 73 (1915).

9-42.211 Jurisdiction

Congress has the power to attach extraterritorial effect to criminal statutes. Determining whether it has exercised this power is a problem. In United States v. Bowman, 260 U.S. 94, 97-98 (1922), the Supreme Court held that the nature of the offense is determinative of whether enforcement of the offense will be limited to the territorial United States. The Court recognized the right of the United States "to defend itself against obstruction, or fraud wherever perpetrated." See 18 U.S.C. §§287, 371, 1001. See United States v. Williams, 464 F.2d 599 (2d Cir.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

1972), United States v. Pizzarusso, 388 F.2d 8 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 392 U.S. 936 (1968) (false statement); United States v. Rivard, 375 F.2d 882 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 389 U.S. 884 (1967). See also Final Report of the National Commission on Reform of Federal Criminal Laws, Proposed New Federal Criminal Code 208 and Comments (1971). While the principle of extraterritoriality may not be limited to United States citizens, Bowman, supra, where a defendant named in an indictment is not a United States citizen, personal jurisdiction may be secured only if he/she is within the territorial United States.

There are two methods of securing personal jurisdiction over a United States citizen residing in a foreign country: (1) extradition, (2) revocation or expiration of passport. Extradition is feasible if the foreign country is party to a treaty permitting extradition and the offense charged is extraditable. See USAM 9-15.000. An alternative is to indict and await return of the offender. Return of a person under indictment may be expedited by having his/her passport revoked or limited for use to return to the United States.

The applicable regulations are:

22 C.F.R. §51.71 A passport may be revoked, restricted, or limited where:

(a) The applicant would not be entitled to issuance of a new passport under 35.71.

22 D.F.R. §51.70

(a) A passport, except for direct return to the United States, shall not be issued in any case in which:

(1) The applicant is the subject of an outstanding Federal warrant of arrest or felony. . . .

9-42.212 Venue

Under U.S. Const. Art. III, cl. 2, Congress is given the power to establish venue where an offense is not committed within any state. In 18 U.S.C. §3238, Congress provided that the trial of all offenses committed upon high seas or out of the jurisdiction of any state or district shall be in the district in which the offender is arrested or is first brought. If there are two offenders, venue is proper in the district in which any of them is arrested or is first brought. If the offenders are not arrested or brought into any district, an indictment or information may be filed in the district of the last known residence of any offender or if no such residence is known, in the District of Columbia.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-42.220 Multiplicity, Duplicity, Single Document Policy

The same act can be violative of two statutes and thus, prosecution on two counts for one act is permissible, United States v. Gavieres, 220 U.S. 338 (1910) (same acts and words violated statutes proscribing indecent acts and insulting a public officer.) However, this type of indictment and prosecution is not encouraged and may very well be impractical. The prosecutor is urged to choose the particular statute designed to proscribe the conduct.

A more serious problem arises where the alleged criminal conduct involves a series of activities. The issue is whether the indictment should be constituted of one count encompassing all the acts, or one count for each act. The problem has been framed in two judicial concepts: duplicity and multiplicity.

Duplicity is the joining in a single count of two or more separate offenses. See United States v. Isaacs, 492 F.2d 1124 (7th Cir. 1974); Gerberding v. United States, 471 F.2d 55 (8th Cir. 1973); United States v. Gibson, 310 F.2d 79, 80 (2d Cir. 1962); United States v. Goodman, 285 F.2d 378, 379-80 (5th Cir. 1960), cert. denied, 366 U.S. 930 (1961); United States v. Travis, 247 F.2d 130 (10th Cir. 1957). A count is not duplicitous, however, if it simply charges commission of a single offense by different means. See Rule 7(c), 8(a), Fed. R. Crim. P., United States v. Tanner, 471 F.2d 128 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 409 U.S. 949 (1972); United States v. Murray, 335 F. Supp. 792 (D. Minn. 1970), aff'd, 452 F.2d 503 (8th Cir. 1971), cert. denied, 405 U.S. 935 (1972), United States v. Todorow, 173 F.2d 439 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 337 U.S. 925 (1949). United States v. Lubomski, 277 F. Supp. 716 (D. Ill. 1967); United States v. Manber, 127 F. Supp. 925, 927 (D. Mass. 1955).

The issue presented is determining the proper unit of prosecution. Two tests are discussed in this connection: (1) identical proof, and (2) legislative intent.

A. The first test simply involves the determination of whether each offense requires proof of an additional fact that the other does not. See United States v. Blockburger, 284 U.S. 299 (1931); United States v. Albrecht, 273 U.S. 1 (1927); United States v. Schrenzel, 462 F.2d 765 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 409 U.S. 984 (1972); United States v. Doherty,

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

193 F.2d 487 (10th Cir. 1951). This test is designed to guard against the possibility that confusion as to basis of the verdict may subject defendant to double jeopardy, United States v. Tanner, supra; United States v. Gaviaras, supra.

B. The second test is one of legislative intent. See United States v. Prince, 352 U.S. 322 (1956); United States v. Bell, 349 U.S. 81 (1954); United States v. Burton, 202 U.S. 344 (1905); United States v. Bramblett, 231 F.2d 489, 491 (D.C. Cir. 1956). This latter test often involves the determination of whether Congress intended to prohibit each individual act or a course of conduct composed of a series of acts, United States v. Universal C.I.T. Credit Corp., 344 U.S. 218 (1952); Ebeling v. Morgan, 237 U.S. 625 (1914).

A necessary adjunct to rules for determining congressional intent is a guide for resolving issues of multiplicity in the absence of any expressed intent. The courts have adopted a policy of resolving doubts against multiple offenses where an expression of congressional intent is lacking (rule of lenity). See United States v. Enmons, 410 U.S. 396, 411 (1973); Rewis v. United States, 401 U.S. 808, 812 (1971); United States v. Prince, supra; United States v. Bell, supra; Irby v. United States, 390 F.2d 432 (D.C. Cir. 1967) (en banc); United States v. Bramblett, supra.

9-42.221 Some Specific Problems

A defendant violates 18 U.S.C. §1001 each time he/she makes a false statement. If the false statements are contained in one document, however, it is the better course to indict on one count only. This policy is in response to expressed judicial displeasure on multi-count indictments based on one document, United States v. Fisher, 231 F.2d 99, 103 (9th Cir. 1956); United States v. Bramblett, supra at 491. Further, little is to be gained by multi-count filing in such cases, because in most cases sentences would be concurrent. This policy does not apply to false statements or perjury before a grand jury. See Gebbehart, 422 F.2d 281 (9th Cir. 1970). This limitation should apply only where the false statements are contained in one document. If the same or different false statements appear in more than one document, multiple counts are warranted. See United States v. Adams, 281 U.S. 202 (1929); United States v. Morrison, 43 F.R.D. 516 (N.D. Ill. 1967); United States v. Grossman, 154 F. Supp. 813, 818-19 (D. N.J. 1957). Further, separate but similar false applications are punishable as separate offenses, Cuddeback v. United States 192 F. Supp. 860 (S.D.N.Y. 1961).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

An indictment for conspiracy to commit a substantive crime and for the substantive crime itself is proper only when each offense is alleged in a separate count, and conviction is proper on both counts, United States v. Pinkerton, 328 U.S. 640 (1945); United States v. Doherty, supra. An indictment for conspiracy to violate several crimes proscribed under different statutes is proper as a single count. The alleged crime is one conspiracy, therefore, only one offense should be charged, United States v. Braverman, 317 U.S. 49 (1942); United States v. Frohwerk, 249 U.S. 204 (1919); United States v. May, 175 F.2d 994 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 338 U.S. 830 (1949); United States v. Manton, 107 F.2d 834 (2d Cir. 1938), cert. denied, 309 U.S. 664 (1940). However, where an indictment charges one conspiracy but at trial the government proves numerous conspiracies with one of several defendants as a link, the proof has been held to be prejudicial to his/her co-defendants because it impairs their ability to defend themselves. See United States v. Kotteakos, 328 U.S. 750 (1945). See also United States v. Berger, 295 U.S. 78 (1935), United States v. Butler, 494 F.2d 1246 (10th Cir. 1974); United States v. Canella, 157 F.2d 470 (9th Cir. 1946), United States v. Varelli, 407 F.2d 735 (7th Cir. 1969), cert. denied, 405 U.S. 1040 (1972). The issue which most often arises is whether the scheme consisted of multiple conspiracies or one large conspiracy. See United States v. Blumenthal, 332 U.S. 539 (1947); United States v. McQuin, 434 F.2d 391 (8th Cir. 1970), United States v. James, 416 F.2d 467 (5th Cir. 1969); United States v. Hutul, 416 F.2d 607 (7th Cir. 1969).

9-42.230 General Versus Specific Statutes

Issues arise when subsequent to the enactment of a general statute like 18 U.S.C. §1001, Congress passes a more specific statute, e.g., 18 U.S.C. §1010 (false statements in Federal Housing Administration transactions). In such cases it is necessary to determine the effect of the more specific statute on the scope of the more general. Further, it must be determined whether the prosecutor has unlimited discretion to choose the statute under which he/she will prosecute. This problem is to be distinguished from the question of when defendant is entitled to a jury instruction as to lesser included offenses. It is also to be distinguished from the situation where a defendant commits two different crimes proscribed by two different statutes in the same transaction or occurrence.

The initial step is to determine whether Congress has expressed its intent on the relationship of the general and specific statutes. See United States v. Bell, 349 U.S. 81 (1954), United States v. Beacon Brass Co., 344 U.S. 43 (1952), United States v. Kniess, 413 F.2d 752 (9th Cir.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

1969); United States v. Roseman, 364 F.2d 18 (9th Cir. 1966), cert. denied, 386 U.S. 918 (1967). Unfortunately, Congress rarely expresses its intent with sufficient clarity. But see 15 U.S.C. §714(m)(e) (1970).

The argument that a specific statute enacted subsequent to a general statute repeals the latter is often advanced, and just as often rejected. See United States v. Borden, 308 U.S. 188 (1939); Washington v. Miller, 235 U.S. 422 (1914); United States v. Matanky, 346 F. Supp. 116 (C.D. Cal. 1972); Mumber v. United States, 127 F. Supp. 925 (D. Mass. 1955); United States v. Cohen, 201 F.2d 386 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 345 U.S. 951 (1953). However, one court has indicated that where the two statutes clearly "conflict," congressional intent may be determined by looking to the dates of enactment and the statutes' relative specificity; United States v. Roseman, supra at 25.

Often the result is that a prosecutor may choose to proceed under either of two statutes which apply to the same criminal act. This direction is sanctioned in the cases:

U.S. Attorney of the district where a violation of a federal statute occurs is charged with the duty of prosecution and vested with complete control over the proceedings, in the exercise of his discretion. If the facts show a violation of two or more statutes, he may elect under which he will prosecute, in the absence of a prohibitory statute . . .

Deutch v. Anderhold, Warden, 80 F.2d 677, 678 (5th Cir. 1935).

"It is settled law . . . that where a single act violates more than one statute, the government may elect to prosecute under either;" Ehrlich v. United States, 238 F.2d 481, 485 (5th Cir. 1956). "[T]he government has the right to sue under any statute under which it can secure a conviction;" United States v. Morgan 380 F.2d 686, 703 (9th Cir. 1967), cert. denied, 390 U.S. 962 (1968). See also United States v. Burnett, 505 F.2d 815 (9th Cir. 1974), cert. denied, 420 U.S. 966 (1975); United States v. Brown, 483 F.2d 1359 (9th Cir. 1973); United States v. Chakmakis, 449 F.2d 315 (5th Cir. 1971); United States v. Hutcherson, 345 F.2d 964 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 382 U.S. 894 (1965).

The general rule that the prosecutor has absolute discretion is limited by some courts. Where the general and specific statutes provide for the same elements of proof, e.g., certain conduct done knowingly and willfully, some courts hold that the prosecutor has no right to election and may prosecute only under the specific statute. See United States v.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Bates, 429 F.2d 557, 559 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 831 ( ), and cases cited therein. However, these cases are clearly distinguishable. They involve a choice between a specific conspiracy statute, 21 U.S.C. §176(a), conspiracy to violate marihuana laws, and 18 U.S.C. §371. In all the cases, the prosecutor chose the more specific statute, and the defendant on appeal complained that because the statute was used he/she lost the possibility of probation. In that circumstance the court heard no complaint that the prosecutor should have chosen the general rather than the specific statute.

Support for this view derives from some ambiguous Supreme Court language and several circuit court decisions. In United States v. Chase, 135 U.S. 255, 260 (1889), the Court stated:

It is an old and familiar rule that where there is, in the same statute a particular enactment and also a general one, which in its most comprehensive sense, would include what is embraced in the former, the general enactment must be taken to affect only such cases within its general language as are not within the provision of the particular enactment.

This rule of construction is limited to situations where the general and specific enactments are in the same statute, however, a later Supreme Court opinion extended the rule to situations where the more specific statute appears "in same or another statute." See United States v. Ginsberg, 285 U.S. 204, 208 (1931); United States v. MacEvoy, 322 U.S. 102, 107 (1943). This authority is suspect because it does not limit the exclusive realm of the specific to situations where the elements of proof are identical and also because of recent circuit court cases which undauntingly affirm the prosecutor's right of election at least where the elements of proof are different.

United States v. Robinson, 142 F.2d 431 (8th Cir. 1944), states the rule that where the general and specific statutes prescribe the same elements, the prosecution is limited to using the specific statute. See also Price v. United States, 74 F.2d 120 (5th Cir. 1934), cert. denied, 294 U.S. 720 (1935). Several circuit courts have agreed with Robinson but have been able to distinguish it by finding the elements of proof in the particular situation to be different. See United States v. Pursley, 431 F.2d 961 (5th Cir. 1971); United States v. Conerly, 350 F.2d 679 (9th Cir. 1965), cert. denied, 382 U.S. 1018 (1966); United States v. Moran, 236 F.2d 36 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 352 U.S. 909 (1956). See also United States v. Rayer, 204 F. Supp. 486 (S.D. Cal. 1962), reh'g denied, 323 F.2d 519 (9th Cir. 1963), cert. denied, 375 U.S. 993 (1964); Ex Parte United

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

States v. Berkhoff, 65 F. Supp. 976 (D. Minn. 1946). Two Supreme Court opinions, Rosenberg v. United States, 346 U.S. 273 (1953); (Concur Clark, J.), United States v. Beacon Brass, supra, at 45, equivocately stated that at least where the elements of proof are different the prosecution has a choice. One district court, United States v. Lamb, 150 F. Supp. 310 (N.D. Cal. 1957), aff'd, 264 F.2d 950 (9th Cir. 1959), treats Robinson and Price as the well established law. The Court is quick to point out, however, that where the elements of proof are different, and where the specific and general cover some acts not encompassed by the other, the prosecutor has the right to elect.

The Robinson rule makes sense for several reasons. First, when Congress enacts statutes with different burdens of proof, the maximum penalty is usually related to the amount of proof required. Thus, where the elements of proof are identical, it would be illogical to suppose that Congress intended to prescribe two different maximum penalties or two different statutes of limitations, use of which is subject to the prosecutor's whim. Further, when Congress punishes the theft of United States mail property by sentence of five years and later punishes the theft of United States postal bags by sentence of only two years, it is expressing a value judgment on the particular interest it seeks to protect.

The second reason Robinson is sound is that it obviates the constitutional arguments of vagueness and uncertainty as to the penalty that might be imposed, excessive delegation of Congress of the power to place limits on the punishment for such conduct, and denial of equal protection of the laws. These contentions have been voiced by two Supreme Court dissenters, United States v. Berra, 351 U.S. 131, 135 (1955) (dissent Black, J.); Roberberg v. United States, 346 U.S. 273, 310 (1953) (dissent Douglas, J.), and by an unsuccessful defendant in United States v. Coppola, 296 F. Supp 903, reh'g, 300 F. Supp 932 (D. Conn 1969). While the constitutional arguments have been unsuccessful thus far, see, e.g., United States v. Escobar, supra, they have not been made in a Robinson situation where they would seemingly carry more weight.

The justification for this section discussing Robinson lies not with the viability of the argument, since statutes fitting it are hard to find, but rather in preparing the U.S. Attorney both to argue the rule is not law and, in the alternative, to distinguish it.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-42.231 Policy

It is the policy of the U.S. Justice Department, Fraud Section, that even where the U.S. Attorney has a choice of statutes it is better to go on the specific statute where possible unless aggravations or special circumstances are present. Examples of specific statutes are as follows:

There are numerous statutes which can be said are the more specific in reference to 18 U.S.C. §1001: 42 U.S.C. §408; 45 U.S.C. §228(m); 15 U.S.C. §645(a); 18 U.S.C. §1010; 18 U.S.C. §1005; 18 U.S.C. §657; 18 U.S.C. §1014; 18 U.S.C. §1006; 18 U.S.C. §658; 15 U.S.C. §§806-17; 15 U.S.C. §714(m); 29 U.S.C. §439; 29 U.S.C. §461, 18 U.S.C. §1546; and 26 U.S.C. §7214(a)(7). These statutes all fail to meet the Robinson test, limiting the prosecutor, thus, the prosecutor may elect to use 18 U.S.C. §1001 where one of these specific statutes also might apply.

9-42.300 18 U.S.C. §371: CONSPIRACY TO DEFRAUD THE UNITED STATES

The conspiracy statute, 18 U.S.C. §371, provides:

If two or more persons conspire either to commit any offense against the United States, or to defraud the United States, or any agency thereof in any manner or for any purpose, and one or more persons do an act to effect the act of the conspiracy, each shall be . . .
(emphasis supplied)

The operative language in 18 U.S.C. §371 is "defraud the United States". Although this language is broad, recent cases rely heavily on the definition of "defraud" provided by the Supreme Court in two early cases, Hass v. Henkel, 216 U.S. 462 (1910), Hammerschmidt v. United States, 265 U.S. 182 (1924). See also United States v. Keitel, 211 U.S. 370, 393-95 (1908). While Hammerschmidt attempted to limit the effect of Hass, circuit courts have relied on both attempts at defining "defraud the United States" to justify federal prosecution. See, e.g., United States v. Thompson, 366 F.2d 167 (6th Cir. 1966), cert. denied, 385 U.S. 973 (1966).

In Hass the Court stated

The statute is broad enough in its terms to include any conspiracy for the purpose of impairing, obstructing or defeating the lawful function of any department of Government . . . [A]ny conspiracy which is calculated to obstruct or impair . . . [agriculture department] efficiency and destroy the value of its operators and report as fair, impartial and reasonably accurate, would be to defraud the United States by depriving it of its lawful right and duty of promulgating or diffusing the information so officially acquired in the way and at the time required by law or departmental regulations.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Hass, supra, at 479-480.

In Hammerschmidt, Chief Justice Taft, writing for the Court, defined "defraud" as follows:

To conspire to defraud the United States means primarily to cheat the Government out of property or money, but it also means to interfere with or obstruct one of its lawful governmental functions by deceit, craft or trickery, or at least by means that are dishonest. It is not necessary that the Government shall be subjected to property or pecuniary loss by the fraud, but only that its legitimate official action and purpose shall be defeated by misrepresentation, chicanery or the overreaching of those charged with carrying out the governmental intention.

Hammerschmidt, supra, at 188.

The general purpose of the statute is to protect governmental functions from frustration and distortion through deceptive practices. See Gilbert, supra, and Ogden, supra. Those activities which courts have held defraud the United States "touch" the government in at least one of three ways:

- 1) They cheat the government out of money or property;
- 2) They interfere or obstruct legitimate Government activity;
- 3) They make wrongful use of a governmental instrumentality.

United States v. Hay, 527 F.2d 990, 997-998 (10th Cir. 1975).

9-42.310 Defrauding the Government of Money or Property

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-42.311 Cheating

Cheating the government of money or property may take many forms, including:

A. The inducement of payment for services or supplies not provided or provided at inflated prices, United States v. Huber, 603 F.2d 387 (2d Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 446 U.S. 917 (1980) (inflated claims on hospital's cost reports filed with Medicare); United States v. Jones, 464 F.2d 1118 (8th Cir. 1972) (overstated invoices), United States v. Burgin, 621 F.2d 1352 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 1015 (1980) (Medicare claims); United States v. Young, 575 F.2d 828 (10th Cir. 1978) (conspiracy to defraud VA by submitting false claims for payment of veterans' educational benefits for veterans who were not enrolled or who did not complete the work).

B. The inducement of payment for work for which the government is not responsible, United States v. Vincent, 648 F.2d 1046 (5th Cir. 1981) (a government-funded community action agency used the funds for the personal benefit of its executive director); United States v. Cella, 568 F.2d 1266 (9th Cir. 1978) (expenses for political activity were reflected on a hospital's cost report filed to receive Medicare reimbursement); United States v. Pintar, 630 F.2d 1270 (7th Cir. 1980) (conspiracy to defraud where government-funded employees performed political activity during office hours and then concealed it).

C. The inducement of payment of money or property because of status to which applicant is not lawfully entitled, Hyde v. Shine, 199 U.S. 62 (1905); United States v. Pezzati, 160 F. Supp. 787 (D. Colo. 1958) (communist affiliation).

Proof that the United States has been defrauded does not require any showing of pecuniary or proprietary loss, United States v. Jacobs, 475 F.2d 270 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 414 U.S. 821 (1973); United States v. D'Andrea, 585 F.2d 1351 (7th Cir. 1978); United States v. Johnson, 383 U.S. 169 (1965); Hyde v. Shine, 199 U.S. 62 (1905); United States v. Thompson, supra. One court noted that 18 U.S.C. §371 requires only "mission attempted," not "mission accomplished." United States v. Root, 366 F.2d 377, 383 (9th Cir.) cert. denied, 386 U.S. 912 (1966). See also, Cross v. United States, 392 F.2d 360 (8th Cir. 1968).

9-42.312 Obstruct or Impair Legitimate Government Activity

This type of fraud may take any of several forms:

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

A. Bribery of a government employee, kickbacks to government employees or extortion of money or favors by government employees. See United States v. Peltz, 433 F.2d 48 (2d Cir. 1970), cert. denied, 401 U.S. 955 (1971) (conspiracy to defraud United States where defendant conspired with a SEC employee to obtain confidential inside information about matters under consideration by the SEC and use the information for personal profit); United States v. Bernstein, 533 F.2d 775 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 998 (1976) (fraud on government when private lender seeking Federal Housing Administration insurance on loans obtained favorable appraisals from the FHA by bribing FHA staff appraisers); Harris v. United States, 367 F.2d 633 (1st Cir. 1966), cert. denied, 386 U.S. 915 (1967) (conspiracy to defraud United States when IRS collection officer and his supervisor took personal payment to satisfy tax); United States v. De Los Santos, 625 F.2d 62 (5th Cir. 1980) (mayor and city manager received payments from contractor when town received HUD-funded community development grant); United States v. Brasco, 516 F.2d 816 (2d Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 860 (1976) (congressman and his uncle convicted of receiving money to use their influence over Post Office in its award of contracts).

B. Obstructing or impairing a lawful, legitimate government function, e.g., United States v. D'Andrea, 585 F.2d 1351 (7th Cir. 1978) (misrepresentations to FHA to obtain mortgage insurance and false requisition orders for work performed); United States v. Swarek, 656 F.2d 331 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 1034 (1981) (fraud on Small Business Administration by misrepresenting company's paid-in capital to obtain SBA-guaranteed funds); United States v. Levinson, 405 F.2d 971 (7th Cir. 1978), cert. denied, 395 U.S. 958 (1969) (conspiracy to defraud based on submissions of VA home loans for automatic VA guaranty); United States v. Shoup, 608 F.2d 950 (3d Cir. 1979) (conspiracy to defraud United States where U.S. Attorney hired owner of voting machine company to aid grand jury investigation of vote fraud and owner agreed to alter report to receive favorable consideration for his company in getting voting machines); United States v. Bernstein, supra, (FHA defrauded by conspiracy to submit false statements on mortgage applications); United States v. Jordan, 627 F.2d 683 (5th Cir. 1980) (conspiracy to defraud where school officials of school participating in National School Lunch Program and dairy owners submitted claims for milk when orangeade was provided); United States v. Shermetaro, 625 F.2d 104 (6th Cir. 1980) (conspiracy to defraud IRS through defendants' operation of a sham company through which kickbacks were funneled and false deductions taken); United States v. Miller, 491 F.2d 638 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 970 (1974) (conspiracy to defraud based on defendants' failure to file corporate tax returns, making false representations to IRS agents, and submitting false documents to IRS agents.).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

9-42.313 Government Instrumentality

The fraud of wrongful use of a government instrumentality is characterized by the lack of threatened or real pecuniary or proprietary loss, or obstruction of governmental activity. Such a scheme is perpetrated through the use of a government whose pride and integrity will not countenance a misuse of itself, United States v. Thompson, supra, (kickback between chief and subcontractor); United States v. Goldsmith, 68 F.2d 5 (2d Cir. 1933) (use of false IRS receipts to defraud private persons of money). Furthermore, the United States has the right to insure that funds be administered in accordance with law and honesty without corrupt influence or bribery, United States v. Thompson, supra, at 171.

Thus, a scheme to "defraud the United States" can range from directly cheating or swindling money or property from the government to simply using the government in a wrongful fashion with the only injury being to the pride and integrity of the government. The limits of "defraud" can best be understood by examining several cases where prosecution proved unsuccessful.

In United States v. Kaiser, 179 F. Supp. 454 (N.D. Ill. 1960), the government prosecuted bridge toll booth operators who were pocketing some of the receipts for violation 18 U.S.C. §371. The government's theory was that when Congress appropriated the money to help build the bridge, it expressed the desire that it be toll free as soon as possible. By pocketing bridge revenues, the defendants were obstructing achievement of that wish. The court found the connection too tenuous and dismissed the indictments. In United States v. Woll, 157 F. Supp. 704 (E.D. Pa. 1957), supervisory personnel took time off to work on the home of their employer and his sister. The court held this was not fraud on the United States because the men were salaried and their salaries were attributed to overhead which the government contracts would bear whether or not the men were sick and did not work.

The cases demonstrate that the federal interest protected by the statute must be more than a congressional desire. Injury to the integrity of the government, however, is sufficient.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-42.400 OTHER FRAUDS AGAINST THE GOVERNMENT

9-42.410 Commercial Bribery Statute

The First Circuit sees the purpose of the Commercial Bribery Act, 41 U.S.C. §§51-54, as identical to that of the bribery statute, 18 U.S.C. §201, which is to protect the public from the evil consequences of corruption in public service, United States v. Howard, 345 F.2d 126 (1st Cir.), cert. denied, 382 U.S. 838 (1965). For analysis of the effect of bribery on government procurement, see United States v. Acme Process Co., 385 U.S. 138 (1966).

There are two parts to 41 U.S.C. §51. The first describes the prohibited activity and the second the civil remedy. 41 U.S.C. §54, the criminal statute, refers back only to the first part of 41 U.S.C. §51, see United States v. Travers, 361 F.2d 753 (1st Cir.), cert. denied, 385 U.S. 834 (1966).

Prosecutions under these statutes must show:

A. That defendant is within a class of persons covered by the statute, United States v. Howard, supra, at 129.

B. A payment of a fee, commission or compensation of any kind or the granting or accepting of any gift or gratuity. Id. (labor and materials); United States v. Grossman, 400 F.2d 951 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 393 U.S. 982 (1968) (property, corporate stock); United States v. Barnard, 255 F.2d 583 (10th Cir.), cert. denied, 358 U.S. 919 (1958) (washing machine).

C. Payment to be "by or on behalf of a subcontractor as defined by 52." See United States v. Moore, 347 F.2d 942 (9th Cir. 1965).

D. Payment made to a specified group, i.e. "(1) to any officer, partner, employee, or agent of a prime contractor holding a negotiated contract entered into by any department, agency or establishment of the United States for the furnishing of supplies, materials, equipment or services of any kind whatsoever; or to any such prime contractor or (2) to any officer, partner, employee, or agent of a higher tier subcontractor holding a subcontract under the prime contract, or to any such contractor," 41 U.S.C. §§51-54.

E. The existence of a negotiated contract. Note that before the 1960 Amendment, the Act applied only to cost-reimbursable contracts. The statute now covers all government contracts, including those made before the 1960 Amendment, except those subject to competitive bidding, United States v. Perry, 431 F.2d 1020 (9th Cir. 1970).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

F. That payment was for the purpose of inducing an award of a subcontract, or order, or as an acknowledgement of a subcontract or order previously awarded. Whether a bribe actually induces it or not is irrelevant, United States v. Howard, supra, at 128. The crime is completed upon the making of a bribe irrespective of whether it has any effect. As for the giver of the bribe or gratuity, a purpose to induce an award should be shown. The prosecution should show that the offeror of the bribe or gratuity intended to induce an award of federal contracts and that the acceptor of the bribe received it as such, United States v. Howard, supra, at 129. It is not enough that defendant contractor have federal contracts; the prosecution must link up the bribe with the federal contract, United States v. Dobar, 223 F. Supp. 8 (M.D. Fla. 1963). The court in United States v. Howard, supra, at 129, declined to rule on the issue of whether receiver must be in a position to affect the award.

G. The bribe was made or received with knowledge of the purpose of the bribe, United States v. Grossman, supra. Defendant need not know the terms of the government contract, but should know of the existence of the federal contract, United States v. Hanis, 246 F.2d 781 (8th Cir. 1956).

Prosecution for conspiracy (18 U.S.C. §371) to violate the act is available. See United States v. Barnard, supra; United States v. Hanis, supra; United States v. Thompson, 366 F.2d 167 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 385 U.S. 973 (1966).

9-42.420 Procurement Frauds

18 U.S.C. §§287, 371, 1001; 41 U.S.C. §§51-54 are the statutes most frequently used to prosecute procurement frauds. The common case involves defective material, false representations, deceptive practices, etc. A typical case may involve numerous management and labor employees at all levels.

One of the most persistent problems is showing criminal responsibility on the part of higher management. Where the particular circumstances are appropriate, a grant of immunity to the lower echelon employees is a useful tool.

18 U.S.C. §201(f)(g) is useful where a federal inspector, etc., is involved in the procurement fraud through a bribe or acceptance of gratuities.

A special procurement fraud unit has been established within the Fraud Section to focus on fraud and corruption in the Department of

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Defense multi-billion dollar procurement of equipment and services. This Defense Procurement Fraud Unit is composed of Fraud Section attorneys and attorneys representing the Civil Division, the local U.S. Attorney's Office and the Department of Defense Service branches. In addition, agents are detailed from the military investigative organizations and assistance is available from the Defense audit agencies and the FBI. Through the coordination and development of such resources and expertise, the unit works with U.S. Attorneys' Offices across the country to deter fraud by conducting nationally significant fraud investigations and prosecutions, as well as by monitoring referrals and focussing on problems in the area of Defense procurement. Although the unit's primary objective is criminal investigation and prosecution, it also works to incorporate civil and administrative remedies such as suspension and debarment into the enforcement efforts.

The unit is located in Alexandria, Virginia, because the Pentagon and other Defense procurement operations are located in the Eastern District of Virginia. For information and assistance, Richard A. Sauber, Chief of the Defense Procurement Fraud Unit, can be contacted at (FTS) 557-5171.

9-42.430 Medicare-Medicaid Frauds

In 1965 Congress enacted the Social Security Amendments of 1965, Pub. L. 89-97 (July 30, 1965), 79 Stat. 286:

To provide a hospital insurance program for the aged under the Social Security Act with a benefits program and an expanded program of medical assistance to increase benefits under the Old-Age, Survivors, and Disability Insurance System, to improve the Federal-State public assistance programs, and for other purposes.

The Act included two programs popularly known as Medicare, 42 U.S.C. §1395ff (Title 18 of Social Security Act of 1935), and Medicaid, 42 U.S.C. §1396ff (Title 19 of Social Security Act of 1935).

Medicare is administered by the Social Security Administration, Department of Health and Human Services. Investigations involving the medicare programs are conducted by Program Integrity Specialists of the SSA. Medicaid is administered by the Medical Services Administration of the Social and Rehabilitation Service, Department of HHS. Under the programs, the qualified patient is reimbursed a percentage of a fixed amount for particular services for which he/she paid and received. The claim is made on government Form 1492 which also permits the patient to assign his/her claim to the provider of the services who then receives payment directly.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

There are two potential actors in Medicare/Medicaid Fraud, the patient and his/her assignees. The assignee may be a doctor, hospital, or ambulance company. The fraud usually involves inflated claims for medical care authorized under either act. The patient may alter the size of a bill to reflect a greater amount charged paid. The doctor may submit a claim of non-existent patients and/or non-existent services. Most substantial Medicare/Medicaid frauds involve doctors' submission of numerous claims inflated slightly, e.g., ten $1,000 claims instead of one $10,000 claim. This is an attempt both to avoid detection, which is certain if there is one claim for $10,000, and to make it worthwhile financially. The applicable statutes are 18 U.S.C. §§287, 371 and 1001.

Hospitals and nursing homes claim reimbursement through filing annual cost reports. These reports may fraudulently overstate amounts due the provider and may be the subject of prosecutions under 18 U.S.C. §§371 and 1001. See, e.g., United States v. Cella, 568 F.2d 1266 (9th Cir. 1978); United States v. Smith, 523 F.2d 771 (5th Cir. 1975), cert. denied 429 U.S. 817 (1976). In one instance, a supplier of goods to hospitals who knew that his inflated invoices would cause the filing of overstated cost reports was prosecuted under 18 U.S.C. §§371 and 1001, United States v. Huber, 603 F.2d 387 (2d Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 446 U.S. 917 (1980).

In addition, 42 U.S.C. §1395nn provides for punishing as a felony the making of false statements or soliciting or receiving kickbacks in connection with the Medicare program while 42 U.S.C. §1396h applies the same prohibitions to the Medicaid program. These amendments to the Social Security Act were made in 1977 and changed the misdemeanor status of these crimes to felonies. For recent cases brought under the kickback portions of these statutes, see United States v. Duz-Mor Diagnostic Laboratory, 650 F.2d 223 (9th Cir. 1981); United States v. Hancock, 604 F.2d 999 (7th Cir., 1979), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 991 (1980); United States v. Pearlstein, 632 F.2d 661 (7th Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 1084 (1981). For a case brought under the false statement part of the statute, see United States v. Adler, 623 F.2d 1287 (6th Cir. 1980).

Since the people who receive medical treatment under the programs are often in a weakened physical condition, it is advisable to secure more witnesses than normally necessary to guard against the strong possibility of death or infirmities making court appearance impossible. In one Medicare case nearly 50 percent of the potential witnesses proved to be unsuitable for various reasons at the time of trial.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Another question is the number of counts to be included in the indictment. One count for each false claim or false statement is legally justified yet can create tension with trial judges who dislike lengthy indictments. Nevertheless, the use of numerous counts is desirable for several reasons:

- A. It guards against loss of witnesses due to death or infirmities;
- B. It negates the defense that false statements are caused by clerical mistake;
- C. It avoids the problem of trying to offer other false statements not mentioned in the indictment to show state of mind, intent, rebut claim of mistake or inadvertence, repetitious conduct, etc. See United States v. Roe, 316 F.2d 617 (5th Cir. 1963); United States v. Weis, 122 F.2d 675 (6th Cir.) cert. denied, 314 U.S. 687 (1941); and
- D. It maximizes penalty under 18 U.S.C. §408, which judges are inclined to treat lightly.

The Fraud Section has drafted a sample indictment which enables the prosecutor to include enough counts to solve the above difficulties yet satisfy the judiciary's desire for brevity.

9-42.431 Plea Bargaining

A potential problem area has been identified regarding the practice of plea bargaining as it relates to administrative sanctions available to the Health Care Financing Administration, Department of Health and Human Services, in Medicare - Medicaid fraud cases.

Specifically, provision 229 of Pub. L. No. 92-603, enacted on October 30, 1972, amended Sections 1862 and 1866(b) of the Social Security Act to enable the Secretary to deny payment under Title XVIII of the Act if he/she determines that a provider or person has committed fraud or abuse against the Medicare program. Subsequent to such determinations, Section 1903(1)(2) of the Act also prohibits Federal Financial participation (FFP) for payments to these providers or persons in the Medicaid program. In addition, the legislation (Pub. L. No. 95-142, Medicare-Medicaid Anti-Fraud and Abuse Amendments) enacted on October 25, 1977, contains a provision (Section 7) which requires the Secretary to suspend program participation for a physician or individual practitioner convicted of a criminal offense related to his/her involvement in the Medicare or

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Medicaid programs. Suspension from program participation is immediate and applicable to both programs. The Section 7 provision is incorporated in the Code of Federal Regulations at 42 C.F.R. §405.315-2 for Title XVIII and at 42 C.F.R. §450.85 for Title XIX.

Since the administrative sanction would generally be effectuated subsequent to any criminal proceedings, future plea bargains including commitments to forego or restrict administrative remedies which the Department of Health and Human Services may elect to pursue pursuant to the aforementioned provisions should be rare and made only after obtaining prior explicit approval from the Criminal Division.

9-42.440 Supplemental Security Income Program

Some U.S. Attorneys have received from the Social Security Administration (SSA), for consideration of prosecution, matters involving violations of the penal provisions of Title XVI of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. §1381, et seq.).

The Title in point concerns applications for and payment of general revenue funds as aid to aged, blind, or disabled individuals. Federal administration of such payments was assumed by SSA from the States on January 1, 1974. Over $5 billion in federal funds will be paid in fiscal 1975 under this program.

Attempts to defraud occur in connection with applications (claims) for aid and documents submitted in support thereof. The most common violations involve false statements about--or concealment of--an individual's financial condition. There are specific misdemeanor statutes covering such violations (42 U.S.C. §1383(1)(2), and (3)). There is also a statute covering the conversion of such payments by a representative payee (42 U.S.C. §1383a(4)); and a statute covering the unauthorized charging of a fee for services in connection with a claim under the title (42 U.S.C. §1383(d)(3)). Of course, felony statutes such as 18 U.S.C. §§287, 371 and 1001 are also applicable.

SSA acknowledges that many apparent violations of Title XVI have little prosecutive appeal because of such factors as the advanced age or illness of the prospective defendants, coupled frequently with a relatively low amount of improper payment. Such matters are referred to U.S. Attorneys with a recommendation against pursuit of the criminal aspects. However, matters in which the factors cited above are either not present or not compelling are referred with a recommendation for prosecution.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Each referral with a recommendation for prosecution contains the name and telephone number of the SSA program integrity specialist familiar with the facts of the case. You are invited to contact that individual for discussion, or additional investigation. Requests for FBI assistance in these welfare fraud prosecutions should be forwarded to the Criminal Division, Fraud Section, for review. The Bureau will supply investigative resources in appropriate matters but only on request of the department. Requests for Bureau assistance should not be directed to FBI field offices.

9-42.450 AID Frauds

The Agency for International Development (AID), is involved in numerous types of economic and aid programs abroad. The applicable federal criminal statutes are the same as those applicable to domestic economic aid programs, 18 U.S.C. §§287, 371, and 1001. In addition, 18 U.S.C. §641 applies to misapplication of AID funds.

Investigative jurisdiction lies with the AID Inspector General, Assistant Inspector General for Investigations and Inspections (AID/II), co-located with the Department of State, Washington, D.C. They have five Regional Inspectors General, co-located with the American Embassies in Abidjan, Ivory Coast; Mairobi, Kenya; Karachi, Pakistan; and Manila, Philippines.

Under the direction of the Inspector General (IG), it is the basic responsibility of Investigations and Inspections (II) to safeguard the reputation and objectives of the AID program; conduct periodic inspection activities to determine whether United States program objectives are being compromised; receive allegations of fraud, impropriety, malfeasance, etc., from any person or organization, especially those paid in whole or in part with AID funds; and conduct investigations to protect both the Agency and all individuals associated with AID.

The functions of II cover a broad range of inspection and investigation activities. These functions include, but are not limited to:

A. Planning and conducting inspections and investigations overseas and in the United States to:

1. Identify possible violations of AID regulations, federal criminal and civil fraud statutes in cases of AID-financed transactions or those involving AID employees; and

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

2. Uncover and report to management any irregularities in compliance and integrity aspects of Agency operations so that timely action can be taken to correct them.

B. Keeping appropriate AID offices and top management officials informed in the areas of inspections and investigations.

C. Maintaining records of all information, allegations, or complaints in the area of inspections and investigations activity.

D. Coordinating investigation and inspection activities with the Departments of Justice, Agriculture, State, Defense, and any other government agency, as appropriate.

E. Continually advising the IG on the development and implementation of Agency inspection and investigation activities.

AID contract and procurement frauds differ from other agency investigations in that there is an additional consideration--international relations--which must be considered in the decision on whether to prosecute. Questions concerning AID frauds should be directed to the Criminal Division, Fraud Section.

9-42.500 REFERRAL PROCEDURES

9-42.501 Relationship and Coordination with the Statutory Inspectors General

A. Policy Statement of the Department of Justice on its Relationship and Coordination with the Statutory Inspectors General of the Various Departments and Agencies of the United States.

The investigation and prosecution of fraud and corruption in federal programs is a major priority of the Department of Justice. On June 3, 1981, the Deputy Attorney General issued a "Policy Statement of the Department of Justice on its Relationship and Coordination with the Statutory Inspectors General of the Various Departments and Agencies of the United States." A copy of this statement appears at USAM 9-42.502, infra. The statement was first announced at a meeting of the President's Council on Integrity and Efficiency and was the result of a combined effort of the Criminal Division, the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the Executive Office for U.S. Attorneys.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The Policy Statement has two principal purposes--early alert system for prosecutors relative to ongoing investigations and increased emphasis on coordination and cooperation between the FBI and the Inspectors General.

Several particular provisions deserve special emphasis. Consistent with the Inspector General's obligation to "report to the Attorney General whenever the Inspector General has reasonable grounds to believe there has been a violation of law," the Inspector General is to report to "the United States Attorney in the District where the crime occurred . . ." Simultaneously, the Inspector General is expected to notify the appropriate FBI field office. The FBI is committed to investigating every criminal violation which the prosecutor determines will be prosecuted, if proved.

The timing of the report to the prosecutor is discussed in the Policy Statement. In an ordinary investigation involving completed past events, the Policy Statement simply tracks the Inspector General legislation and requires a report whenever there are reasonable grounds, i.e., some evidence, to believe that a federal crime has occurred. Immediate report is required for crimes of an ongoing nature, as well as organized crime allegations. Such urgent and sensitive matters often require use of sophisticated investigative techniques, and the Inspector General is to make an immediate report upon receipt of the information. The Policy Statement requires the FBI to advise the Inspector General when the Bureau initiates an investigation as well as to keep the Inspector General regularly informed of its progress.

After the report is made to the U.S. Attorney, the Policy Statement places special obligations on the prosecutor to make a variety of decisions, including whether to initiate a grand jury investigation, decline prosecution, or refer the matter for civil or administrative action. In addition, the prosecutor, and the FBI will address whether to ask the Inspector General to conduct a joint investigation with the FBI.

B. Implementation of the Policy Statement

Since the Department issued the June 3, 1981, Policy Statement there have been discussions over its meaning, with requests from various Inspectors General and the Federal Bureau of Investigation for further clarification of their respective investigative responsibilities.

The Department is concerned about the allocation of limited investigative resources and the possibility of competitive and, at times, redundant and unproductive relationships among law enforcement agencies generally. The Policy Statement addresses these issues and establishes a structure for early reporting of instances of criminality to the prosecutor. As a further refinement, to set out more clearly Department expectations regarding the use of the limited investigative resources in both the FBI and the Offices of Inspector General, the Policy Statement has been supplemented by the February 19, 1982, Implementation of the Policy Statement (see USAM 9-42.503, infra) which allocates investigative responsibility between the Inspectors General and the FBI with respect to four types of crime in which both have an investigative interest--bribery, significant allegations of fraud involving federal employees, organized crime matters and fraud against the government.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The Department believes this division of investigative responsibility will provide the Inspectors General and the FBI useful predictability on the commitment of resources in these types of investigations and lead to a more efficient use of limited investigative resources.

Implementation of the Policy Statement requires the cooperation and support of the U.S. Attorneys, the FBI, and the Inspectors General. The Fraud Section of the Criminal Division is charged with overseeing the operations of the policy and resolving any uncertainties or differing interpretations which arise in its implementation. Any questions or information should be directed to the Fraud Section's Deputy Chief for operations at FTS 724-7340.

9-42.502 Policy Statement of the Department of Justice on Its Relationship and Coordination with the Statutory Inspectors General of the Various Departments and Agencies of the United States

A. INTRODUCTION

The serious problem of fraud and waste in federal programs is one of the most important challenges facing the federal law enforcement community, which includes not only the Federal Bureau of Investigation, other investigative agencies and Department of Justice prosecutors but also the audit and investigation staffs of the Inspectors General. To meet this challenge we must effectively use our limited audit, investigative and prosecutorial resources and produce meaningful results. The Department of Justice has high expectations for the Inspectors General, but in the past, in some circumstances, we have not addressed and resolved in any comprehensive way how they are to work in the criminal justice system. The Department has now developed a framework for coordination of its efforts with the Inspectors General, which is outlined below.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

B. LEGAL FOUNDATION

The implementing statutes place with Inspectors General the responsibility for conducting investigations relating to the programs and operations of their agencies. The statutes also require Inspectors General to "report expeditiously to the Attorney General whenever the Inspector General has reasonable grounds to believe there had been a violation of criminal law."

The FBI is charged, in various sections of the United States Code, with the duty of investigating violations of law of the United States, and every Department and Agency head is required to report violations of Title 18 involving officers and employees of the government to the Department of Justice. The Attorney General is the chief law enforcement officer of the United States, and the President's Executive Order 12301 establishing the Council on Integrity and Efficiency recognized "the pre-eminent role of the Department of Justice in matters involving law enforcement and litigation."

C. GOAL OF POLICY

The Inspectors General were created in large part in response to the need for increased detection of fraud, waste, abuse and mismanagement in federal programs. In law enforcement, we have come to recognize that the United States is best served by formally initiating matters of possible criminality into the criminal justice system as early as possible. Accordingly, current FBI procedures generally provide for a preliminary prosecutive opinion before the initiation of a full-scale criminal investigation. This early alert system enables the Department of Justice to mount a coordinated and directed investigation and prosecution effort. In addition to enhancing the opportunity for a successful investigation and prosecution, this early review of the case allows for conservation of government resources, as well as for the opportunity to consider alternative or additional remedies such as civil and administrative action.

D. NOTIFICATION POLICY

With this as the background the Department offers the following guidance to Inspectors General on how to initiate a matter into the criminal justice system.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

1. When to Report

The basic rule is that whenever there is reason to believe a federal crime has occurred, the Department of Justice should be advised. There are two subcategories.

One category involves possible crimes which are completed past events and which, although they require prompt investigative and prosecutive attention, are not so urgent, or so sensitive as to suggest accelerated reporting and/or utilization of special law enforcement techniques. This first category of criminal allegations may require further investigation by the Inspector General to confirm, and should be reported whenever there is a reasonable indication, i.e., some evidence, to believe that a federal crime has occurred.

The second category involves possible crimes which are of such an urgent or sensitive nature that upon receipt of the mere allegation, accelerated reporting is required to allow for immediate prosecutive and investigative action. This second category involves allegations such as bribery, conflict of interest, fraud against the government and the like involving federal employees, and, in addition, any criminal conduct of an ongoing nature. Because of the law enforcement sensitivity, this category also includes information pertaining to the element generally known as organized crime. These urgent and sensitive matters necessitate immediate reporting to the Department because the FBI may be called on to employ body recorders, undercover operations, search warrants, Title III and other specialized law enforcement techniques which need FBI expertise and may require Department approval.

The wide variety of criminal matters prevents any more detailed description of these areas. Criminal investigators and prosecutors who are experienced in the criminal justice system generally know the types of allegations that suggest criminality as opposed to program abuse and waste. The differences can be subtle at times. The best guidance the Department can give the Inspectors General at this time is: if the case is close, report it. With experience, guidance will develop which will assist the Inspectors General in drawing the line between criminal matters and matters of abuse and waste more appropriately addressed within their agencies.

2. Where to Report

The Attorney General's interests include not only criminal investigation and prosecution but also the civil interests of the

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

United States. To fulfill all these interests and coordinate other actions, the Inspectors General should report the above described possible violations to the prosecutor. This normally will be the U.S. Attorney in the district where the crime occurred or is occurring. In certain circumstances the reporting may be to the appropriate section of the Criminal Division. These situations include matters in which venue is uncertain or headquarters coordination or action is suggested by the nature of the crime or program.

To assist the prosecutor and expedite any investigation by the FBI, the Inspector General should notify the FBI field office simultaneously with the report to the prosecutor concerning either category of allegation. The prosecutor will be responsible for notifying the Civil Division in all cases in which possible civil action is suggested.

3. What and How to Report

The report should generally consist of a written statement of the allegation, the facts developed, the evidence--both documentary and testimonial--supporting the facts, the history and status of the Inspector General investigation. The Criminal Division is developing a recommended reporting format which will identify important questions to be addressed in the report to the prosecutor. To insure that appropriate consideration is given to the Agency's civil fraud claims, however, the Inspector General may wish to make a separate referral to the Civil Division.

Presentation of the written report may be made by mail or in person. In urgent or sensitive cases, the written report should be preceded by a telephone call or personal visit from an authorized representative of the Inspector General immediately upon receipt of the allegation.

E. THE FBI AND PROSECUTOR ROLE

The FBI stands ready to make a total commitment to the investigation of fraud and corruption in federal programs. The FBI, with the primary role in investigating prosecutable violations of federal criminal law, will investigate every criminal violation which the prosecutor advises at the preliminary opinion state will be prosecuted, if proved. To fulfill this total commitment in the fraud and corruption area the FBI is prepared to adjust its investigation priorities, if required.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

At the time of reporting, the prosecutor, consulting with the FBI and the Inspector General, will be called on immediately to make a number of decisions, including whether:

1. To initiate a grand jury investigation,
2. To decline prosecution, or
3. To refer the matter for civil and/or administrative action.

In many circumstances, with the early reporting system, the prosecutor and the FBI will ask the Inspector General to conduct a joint investigation with the FBI or continue the investigation. In any event, the FBI and the prosecutor will often depend on the Inspector General and the agency to provide technical support to the investigation in the form of program expertise, location of documents, application of regulations, audit assistance and the like.

F. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE COMMITMENT

The requirement this policy places on the Inspectors General to report matters at an early stage places special obligations on the Department as well. The Department has undertaken substantial new responsibilities:

1. U.S. Attorneys and the Criminal and Civil Divisions will give investigations of Inspector General matters a high priority and make special efforts to keep the Inspectors General informed of the progress of prosecutive actions.
2. The Fraud Section of the Criminal Division will be charged with overseeing the operations of the policy and resolving any uncertainties of differing interpretations which may arise.
3. Recognizing the importance to the Inspectors General of expeditious action and reporting in investigations involving subjects who continue to do business with the agency, or who are federal employees, or who are under consideration for benefits, grants or contracts by the agency, the FBI will keep the Inspectors General regularly informed of the progress of the investigation except in those rare instances where disclosure might endanger FBI agents or adversely affect the investigation.
4. The FBI will notify the Inspector General, at the same time it seeks a preliminary prosecutive opinion, of FBI investigations which are predicated on information or allegations other than an Inspector General report (with the same safety and security of investigation caveat).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

5. The FBI will furnish a written summary at the conclusion of an investigation on the nature of judicial action, if any, taken. If administrative action is being considered by the federal agency, the FBI will, upon written request, provide for the exclusive use of the agency Inspector General, existing detailed investigative data less any federal grand jury or other material, the disclosure of which is not deemed to be in the best interest of the FBI operations (such as informant data).

6. The FBI will furnish, at the conclusion of the investigation and upon a written request which identifies the exact data needed, FBI investigative documents and Special Agent testimony for use in administrative proceedings consistent with existing Department regulations.

7. At the conclusion of a case the FBI and the prosecutor will attempt to provide for the Inspector General's use, an analysis of any underlying problems in the federal program or procurement procedures and practices that were uncovered during the course of the investigation and which need corrective action.

8. The FBI will provide the following services:

- a. Appropriate indices checks;
- b. Laboratory examinations;
- c. National Crime Information Center inquiries; and
- d. Identification record searches and other appropriate services.

9. The FBI has completed a major Inspector General/FBI undercover operation and is seeking the support of the Inspectors General in developing other such efforts. Substantial progress has been made in coordinating the prosecutive and investigation planning in this area through the Bureau's Undercover Review Committee. The Department expects to increase the use of this technique in the government fraud and corruption area.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

10. Training is a major and important element to this relationship between the FBI and the Inspectors General. The FBI Academy alone and jointly with the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center will provide relevant training to Inspector General personnel to enhance this new team relationship. A dialogue between FLETC and the Academy has already begun.

G. MEMORANDA OF UNDERSTANDING

As the Department and the Inspectors General gain experience with the principles set forth in this statement, refinements within the framework of the underlying policy will be formulated. It is contemplated that the FBI and the Inspectors General, consultation with the U.S. Attorneys and the Criminal Division will address matters such as local working relationships, joint investigative procedures, threshold reporting requirements, and delegation of investigative responsibility. These may take the form of procedural and operating memoranda of understanding.

H. CONCLUSION

The Department of Justice intends that the new policy statement will enhance the attention given to the problems of fraud and abuse in government programs. This can only be achieved through the cooperative and coordinated efforts of federal investigators, auditors and prosecutors, both civil and criminal. This policy is a first step in insuring that the limited law enforcement resources available to meet the challenges are used to the best advantage.

9-42.503 Implementation of the Policy Statement

Two premises underlie the following allocation of law enforcement investigative resources. First, both the FBI and Inspectors General with overlapping investigative jurisdiction have limited resources. Second, questions of appearance, sensitivity and expertise suggest the FBI is better suited to be primarily responsible for organized crime and corruption matters. The problem to be addressed in this communication is the most advantageous manner in which to direct the available investigative resources of the FBI and the Inspectors General.

With these considerations in mind, the following comments outline the Department of Justice approach with regard to the criminal investigative jurisdiction of the FBI and the Inspectors General. They are designed to implement and be consistent with the Policy Statement of the Department of Justice on Its Relationship and Coordination with the Statutory Inspectors

TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

General of the Various Departments and Agencies of the United States issued on June 3, 1981. A copy of this statement appears at USAM 9-42.502, supra.

A. Inspectors General will in all instances notify the FBI of the following criminal investigative matters:

1. Bribery matters;
2. Significant allegations of fraud which culpably involve United States government employees; and
3. Organized crime related matters, including both traditional (La Cosa Nostra) and non-traditional organizations such as other ethnic groups and outlaw motorcycle gangs.

The FBI will have the primary investigative role in these three areas and, as part of the notification, the IG will transfer the investigative file and consequently investigative responsibility to the FBI. The Inspector General simultaneously will notify the prosecutor of the above described matters.

B. The Inspectors General normally will have the responsibility for conducting investigations of fraudulent misconduct involving their respective departments and agencies by non-government personnel. However, the FBI will treat fraud against the government matters as a top priority and, if asked by the prosecutor, will investigate every criminal violation that the prosecutor advises will be prosecuted, if proved. The FBI maintains the right to investigate any criminal allegations which the FBI receives independently and which involve any agency's programs or functions wherein the alleged violations are within the FBI's jurisdiction.

C. The FBI will, given adequate manpower conditions, consider undertaking joint investigations with Inspector General personnel, and encourage joint undercover operations targeted against identified major crime problems.

D. The FBI will accept responsibility for other significant criminal investigative matters, consistent with the availability of investigative resources within the applicable FBI field office. As a general rule, the FBI will not initiate investigations concerning recipient/participant-type frauds, absent indications of a pattern of widespread criminal activity.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The Fraud and Corruption Tracking System is being developed to complement the Policy Statement and will be used to insure all appropriate offices are informed of ongoing investigations.

9-42.510 Social Security Administration

9-42.511 Social Security Violations

The Social Security Number (SSN) is the primary element of identification in the various earnings and benefit payment records maintained by SSA. It is the record identifier used to insure proper payment of benefits in both the Title II and Title XVI programs.

The SSN plays a vital role in electronic enforcement programs and record linkages, such as Project Match, which are designed to identify instances of improper payments. Given this reliance on the SSN, social security programs are susceptible to fraud when multiple numbers are employed by individuals intent on securing duplicate payments or concealing income. Not only would the use of multiple SSN's facilitate initial deceptions but would also inhibit subsequent detection under the various electronic enforcement programs.

The impact of SSN misuse prevades nearly all facets of today's automated record keeping society. The SSN is used as a personal identifier, either in the application or record keeping processes, by most federal and state agencies administering benefit programs, the Internal Revenue Service, many State Departments of Motor Vehicles, credit corporations and insurance companies. Accordingly, the SSN is the key to unlimited opportunities for fraud and abuse. SSA is strengthening its procedures dealing with the issuance of SSN's and has made a firm commitment to vigorously investigate SSN misuse. Although these cases may involve little or no overpayment, U.S. Attorneys are encouraged to prosecute SSN violations whenever possible.

Title XVI of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. §1381 et seq.), Supplemental Security Income (SSI) program, provides payments of benefits from general revenues to the needy aged, blind and disabled. Title II of the Act (42 U.S.C. §401 et seq.), provides benefits from trust funds to retired and disabled individuals, their survivors and dependents. Over $11.5 billion per month to almost 34 million beneficiaries is paid by SSA under these two programs alone.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Attempts to defraud occur in connection with applications (claims) for benefits and documents submitted in support thereof. Most violations under Title XVI involve false statements about--or concealment of--an individual's financial condition (42 U.S.C. §138a (1), (2), and (3)). Most violations under Title II involve false statements about--or concealment of--work activity affecting initial or continuing eligibility for disability benefits, changes in marital status, and misuse of benefits by representative payees (42 U.S.C. §408(a), (b), and (d)). The felony provisions of 42 U.S.C. §408 punish the making of false statements to secure benefits or obtain higher benefits, the conversion of another's benefits, and the use of false Social Security numbers to obtain benefits.

There is also a statute that covers the unauthorized charging of a fee for services in connection with a claim under both Titles (42 U.S.C. §1383 (d) (3) for Title XVI and 42 U.S.C. §406(a) for Title II). Felony statutes such as 18 U.S.C. §§287, 371, and 1001 are also applicable for both programs and have been used successfully.

Pursuant to an agreement reached between the Department of Justice and SSA in April 1977, SSA will not refer matters in which one or more of the factors below is present unless additional aggravated circumstances are present:

- A. The suspect is 75 or more years old;
- B. The suspected violation did not result in improper payment. This exception does not apply in criminal misuse cases such as conversion by a representative payee, SSN misuse or improper disclosure;
- C. There is evidence that the suspect has an illness expected to result in his/her death in the near future; and
- D. The suspected violation is solely a failure to disclose an increase in a pension amount.

The SSA has discontinued their procedure of summarizing each case involving one or more of the aforementioned factors and recommending against further action. SSA will, however, continue to take administrative action directed toward recovering any overpayments in those cases not warranting criminal prosecution. Matters in which the factors cited above are either not present or not compelling will be referred with an appropriate recommendation.

Each referral with a recommendation for prosecution contains the name and telephone number of the SSA Regional Integrity Specialist familiar with the facts of the case. You are invited to contact that individual for discussion, or additional investigation.

9-42.520 Department of Agriculture--Food Stamp Violations

As a result of the growing problem of theft, improper use and illegal trafficking of food stamps in violation of 7 U.S.C. §2024, modified referral procedures concerning fraud cases involving suspected food stamp violations have been established.

These procedures will provide a means of expediting the prosecution of significant cases while permitting latitude for the prompt administrative action by the Department of Agriculture in categories of cases not deemed to warrant prosecution.

The Department of Agriculture will not refer the following categories of food stamp violations for prosecutive consideration:

A. Retailers participating in the program

Routine reports of retailer violations where the only offenses committed or suspected are the sale of ineligible items for food stamps. (Any other violations by retailers, such as case discounting of food stamps, trafficking in stamps or ATP cards, retention of stamps or cards for security or other purposes, will be treated as significant and referred.)

B. Recipients authorized to participate in the program, and applicants for participation

Reports of:

1. False applications or forgery where the report indicates that the state prosecuting authorities are cognizant of these violations, intend to pursue them and there are no additional circumstances suggesting an overriding federal interest, e.g., widespread conspiracies or substantial public loss.

2. False applications where the recipient has made complete restitution.

C. Violations by others not authorized to possess food stamps

Reports of:

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

1. Thefts of food stamps or ATP cards where the total amount involved or suspected to be involved is small (less than $100).
2. Thefts where the identity of the thief is unknown.

All other reports containing substantial evidence of 7 U.S.C. §2024 or other food stamp related crimes will be referred to U.S. Attorneys for consideration and prosecution. The same is true of reports falling in the above nonsignificant categories if the Department of Agriculture feels that prosecution is desirable from a program standpoint.

9-42.530 Department of Defense Memorandum of Understanding

In August 1984, Attorney General Smith and Secretary of Defense Weinberger signed a Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) between the Departments of Justice and Defense Relating to the Investigation and Prosecution of Certain Crimes. Because of the breadth of the Memorandum and its application to both investigative and prosecutive jurisdiction, the full text follows. However, special attention is directed to the treatment of investigative jurisdiction of corruption, fraud and theft cases. It is important to note the responsibilities of the prosecutor:

- Concurrence before DOD can initiate any corruption investigation;
- Hold a conference to determine investigative jurisdiction in all fraud and theft matters; and
- Concurrence before DOD can initiate any administrative investigation or actions during the pendency of any criminal investigation.

The MOU was developed with the expectation that the more complex cases require the joint efforts of DOD and DOJ. In this regard a repeated theme of the MOU is the prosecutor's responsibility for coordinating and effectuating the various interests of the United States. The DOD/DOJ Fraud Procurement Unit has developed substantial expertise in these investigations and can assist in structuring and conducting the investigations requiring expertise from the FBI and DOD. Questions concerning the MOU should be directed to the Fraud Section at 724-7038 or the Unit at 557-5171.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING BETWEEN THE DEPARTMENTS OF JUSTICE AND DEFENSE RELATING TO THE INVESTIGATION AND PROSECUTION OF CERTAIN CRIMES

A. PURPOSE, SCOPE AND AUTHORITY

This Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) establishes policy for the Department of Justice and the Department of Defense with regard to the investigation and prosecution of criminal matters over which the two Departments have jurisdiction. This memorandum is not intended to confer any rights, benefits, privileges or form of due process procedure upon individuals, associations, corporations or other persons or entities.

This Memorandum applies to all components and personnel of the Department of Justice and the Department of Defense. The statutory bases for the Department of Defense and the Department of Justice investigation and prosecution responsibilities include, but are not limited to:

1. Department of Justice: Titles 18, 21 and 28 of the United States Code; and
2. Department of Defense: The Uniform Code of Military Justice, Title 10, United States Code, Sections 801-940; the Inspector General Act of 1978, Title 5 United States Code, Appendix I; and Title 5 United States Code, Section 301.

B. POLICY

The Department of Justice has primary responsibility for enforcement of federal laws in the United States District Courts. The Department of Defense has responsibility for the integrity of its programs, operations and installations and for the discipline of the Armed Forces. Prompt administrative actions and completion of investigations within the two (2) year statute of limitations under the Uniform Code of Military Justice require the Department of Defense to assume an important role in federal criminal investigations. To encourage joint and coordinated investigative efforts, in appropriate cases where the Department of Justice assumes investigative responsibility for a matter relating to the Department of Defense, it should share information and conduct the inquiry jointly with the interested Department of Defense investigative agency.

It is neither feasible nor desirable to establish inflexible rules regarding the responsibilities of the Department of Defense and the Department of Justice as to each matter over which they may have concurrent interest. Informal arrangements and agreements within the spirit of this MOU are permissible with respect to specific crimes or investigations.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

C. INVESTIGATIVE AND PROSECUTIVE JURISDICTION

1. CRIMES ARISING FROM THE DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE OPERATIONS

a. Corruption Involving the Department of Defense Personnel

The Department of Defense investigative agencies will refer to the FBI on receipt all significant allegations of bribery and conflict of interest involving military or civilian personnel of the Department of Defense. In all corruption matters the subject of a referral to the FBI, the Department of Defense shall obtain the concurrence of the Department of Justice prosecutor or the FBI before initiating any independent investigation preliminary to any action under the Uniform Code of Military Justice. If the Department of Defense is not satisfied with the initial determination, the matter will be reviewed by the Criminal Division of the Department of Justice.

The FBI will notify the referring agency promptly regarding whether they accept the referred matters for investigation. The FBI will attempt to make such decision in one (1) working day of receipt in such matters.

b. Frauds Against the Department of Defense and Theft and Embezzlement of Government Property

The Department of Justice and the Department of Defense have investigative responsibility for frauds against the Department of Defense and theft and embezzlement of government property from the Department of Defense. The Department of Defense will investigate frauds against the Department of Defense and theft of government property from the Department of Defense. Whenever a Department of Defense investigative agency identifies a matter which, if developed by investigation, would warrant federal prosecution, it will confer with the U.S. Attorney or the Criminal Division, the Department of Justice, and the FBI field office. At the time of this initial conference, criminal investigative responsibility will be determined by the Department of Justice in consultation with the Department of Defense.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

2. CRIMES COMMITTED ON MILITARY INSTALLATIONS

a. Subject(s) can be Tried by Court-Martial or are Unknown

Crimes (other than those covered by paragraph C.1.) committed on a military installation will be investigated by the Department of Defense investigative agency concerned and, when committed by a person subject to the Uniform Code of Military Justice, prosecuted by the Military Department concerned. The Department of Defense will provide immediate notice to the Department of Justice of significant cases in which an individual subject/victim is other than a military member or dependent thereof.

b. One or More Subjects cannot be Tried by Court-Martial

When a crime (other than those covered by paragraph C.1.) has occurred on a military installation and there is reasonable basis to believe that it has been committed by a person or persons, some or all of whom are not subject to the Uniform Code of Military Justice, the Department of Defense investigative agency will provide immediate notice of the matter to the appropriate Department of Justice investigative agency unless the Department of Justice has relieved the Department of Defense of the reporting requirement for that type or class of crime.

3. CRIMES COMMITTED OUTSIDE MILITARY INSTALLATIONS BY PERSONS WHO CAN BE TRIED BY COURT-MARTIAL

a. Offense is Normally Tried by Court-Martial

Crimes (other than those covered by paragraph C.1.) committed outside a military installation by persons subject to the Uniform Code of Military Justice which, normally, are tried by court-martial will be investigated and prosecuted by the Department of Defense. The Department of Defense will provide immediate notice of significant cases to the appropriate Department of Justice investigative agency. The Department of Defense will provide immediate notice in all cases where one or more subjects is not under military jurisdiction unless the Department of Justice has relieved the Department of Defense of the reporting requirement for that type or class of crime.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

b. Crimes Related to Scheduled Military Activities

Crimes related to scheduled military activities outside of a military installation, such as organized maneuvers in which persons subject to the Uniform Code of Military Justice are suspects, shall be treated as if committed on a military installation for purposes of this Memorandum. The FBI or other Department of Justice investigative agency may assume jurisdiction with the concurrence of the U.S. Attorney or the Criminal Division, Department of Justice.

c. Offense is not Normally Tried by Court-Martial

When there are reasonable grounds to believe that a federal crime (other than those covered by paragraph C.1.) normally not tried by court-martial, has been committed outside a military installation by a person subject to the Uniform Code of Military Justice, the Department of Defense investigative agency will immediately refer the case to the appropriate Department of Justice investigative agency unless the Department of Justice has relieved the Department of Defense of the reporting requirement for that type or class of crime.

D. REFERRALS AND INVESTIGATIVE ASSISTANCE

1. REFERRALS

Referrals, notices, reports, requests and the general transfer of information under this Memorandum normally should be between the FBI or other Department of Justice investigative agency and the appropriate Department of Defense investigative agency at the field level.

If a Department of Justice investigative agency does not accept a referred matter and the referring Department of Defense investigative agency then, or subsequently, believes that evidence exists supporting prosecution before civilian courts, the Department of Defense agency may present the case to the U.S. Attorney or the Criminal Division, Department of Justice, for review.

2. INVESTIGATIVE ASSISTANCE

In cases where a Department of Defense or Department of Justice investigative agency has primary responsibility and it requires limited assistance to pursue outstanding leads, the investigative agency requiring assistance will promptly advise the appropriate investigative agency in the other Department and, to the extent authorized by law and regulations, the requested assistance should be provided without assuming responsibility for the investigation.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

E. PROSECUTION OF CASES

1. With the concurrence of the Department of Defense, the Department of Justice will designate such Department of Defense attorneys as it deems desirable to be Special Assistant U.S. Attorneys for use where the effective prosecution of cases may be facilitated by the Department of Defense attorneys.

2. The Department of Justice will institute civil actions expeditiously in United States District Courts whenever appropriate to recover monies lost as a result of crimes against the Department of Defense; the Department of Defense will provide appropriate assistance to facilitate such actions.

3. The Department of Justice prosecutors will solicit the views of the Department of Defense prior to initiating action against an individual subject to the Uniform Code of Military Justice.

4. The Department of Justice will solicit the views of the Department of Defense with regard to its Department of Defense-related cases and investigations in order to effectively coordinate the use of civil, criminal and administrative remedies.

F. MISCELLANEOUS MATTERS

1. THE DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE ADMINISTRATIVE ACTIONS

Nothing in this Memorandum limits the Department of Defense investigations conducted in support of administrative actions to be taken by the Department of Defense. However, the Department of Defense investigative agencies will coordinate all such investigations with the appropriate Department of Justice prosecutive agency and obtain the concurrence of the Department of Justice prosecutor or the Department of Justice investigative agency prior to conducting any administrative investigation during the pendency of the criminal investigation or prosecution.

2. SPECIAL UNIFORM CODE OF MILITARY JUSTICE FACTORS

In situations where an individual subject to the Uniform Code of Military Justice is a suspect in any crime for which a Department of

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Justice investigative agency has assumed jurisdiction, if a Department of Defense investigative agency believes that the crime involves special factors relating to the administration and discipline of the Armed Forces that would justify its investigation, the Department of Defense investigative agency will advise the appropriate Department of Justice investigative agency or the Department of Justice prosecuting authorities of these factors. Investigation of such a crime may be undertaken by the appropriate Department of Defense investigative agency with the concurrence of the Department of Justice.

3. ORGANIZED CRIME

The Department of Defense investigative agencies will provide to the FBI all information collected during the normal course of agency operations pertaining to the element generally known as "organized crime" including both traditional (La Cosa Nostra) and nontraditional organizations whether or not the matter is considered prosecutable. The FBI should be notified of any investigation involving any element of organized crime and may assume jurisdiction of the same.

4. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE NOTIFICATIONS TO DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE INVESTIGATIVE AGENCIES

a. The Department of Justice investigative agencies will promptly notify the appropriate Department of Defense investigative agency of the initiation of the Department of Defense related investigations which are predicated on other than a Department of Defense referral except in those rare instances where notification might endanger agents or adversely affect the investigation. The Department of Justice investigative agencies will also notify the Department of Defense of all allegations of the Department of Defense related crimes where investigation is not initiated by the Department of Justice.

b. Upon request, the Department of Justice investigative agencies will provide timely status reports on all investigations relating to the Department of Defense unless the circumstances indicate such reporting would be inappropriate.

c. The Department of Justice investigative agencies will promptly furnish investigative results at the conclusion of an investigation and advise as to the nature of judicial action, if any, taken or contemplated.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

d. If judicial or administrative action is being considered by the Department of Defense, the Department of Justice will, upon written request, provide existing detailed investigative data and documents (less any federal grand jury material, disclosure of which would be prohibited by Rule 6(e), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure), as well as agent testimony for use in judicial or administrative proceedings, consistent with Department of Justice and other federal regulations. The ultimate use of the information shall be subject to the concurrence of the federal prosecutor during the pendency of any related investigation or prosecution.

5. TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

a. The Department of Justice will provide to the Department of Defense all technical services normally available to federal investigative agencies.

b. The Department of Defense will provide assistance to the Department of Justice in matters not relating to the Department of Defense as permitted by law and implementing regulations.

6. JOINT INVESTIGATIONS

a. To the extent authorized by law, the Department of Justice investigative agencies and the Department of Defense investigative agencies may agree to enter into joint investigative endeavors, including undercover operations, in appropriate circumstances. However, all such investigations will be subject to Department of Justice guidelines.

b. The Department of Defense, in the conduct of any investigation that might lead to prosecution in Federal District Court, will conduct the investigation consistent with any Department of Justice guidelines. The Department of Justice shall provide copies of all relevant guidelines and their revisions.

7. APPREHENSION OF SUSPECTS

To the extent authorized by law, the Department of Justice and the Department of Defense will each promptly deliver or make available to the other suspects, accused individuals and witnesses where authority to investigate the crimes involved is lodged in the other Department. This MOU neither expands nor limits the authority of either Department to perform apprehensions, searches, seizures, or custodial interrogations.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

G. EXCEPTION

This Memorandum shall not affect the investigative authority now fixed by the 1979 "Agreement Governing the Conduct of the Defense Department Counterintelligence Activities in Conjunction with the Federal Bureau of Investigation" and the 1983 Memorandum of Understanding between the Department of Defense, the Department of Justice, and the FBI concerning "Use of Federal Military Force in Domestic Terrorist Incidents."

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-43.000 MAIL FRAUD - 18 U.S.C. §1341

The mail fraud statute, 18 U.S.C. §1341, provides:

"Whoever, having devised or intending to devise any scheme or artifice to defraud, or for obtaining money or property by means of false or fraudulent pretenses, representations, or promises, or to sell, dispose of, loan, exchange, alter, give away, distribute, supply, or furnish or procure for unlawful use any counterfeit or spurious coin, obligation, security, or other article, or anything represented to be or intimated or held out to be such counterfeit or spurious article, for the purpose of executing such scheme or artifice or attempting to do so, places in any post office or authorized depository for mail matter, any matter or thing whatever to be sent or delivered by the Postal Service or takes or receives therefrom, any such matter or thing, or knowingly causes to be delivered by mail according to the direction thereon, or at the place at which it is directed to be delivered by the person to whom it is addressed, any such matter or thing, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both."

As amended August 12, 1970, effective July 1, 1971.

9-43.100 PROCEDURES

9-43.110 Investigation of Complaints

Complaints involving the use of the mails to defraud, whether intra-state or interstate, are usually investigated by the Postal Inspection Service of the U.S. Postal Service. If securities are involved, the complaint may also be submitted to the Securities and Exchange Commission. Occasionally, investigations by the Federal Bureau of Investigation into violations of statutes within the Bureau's investigative jurisdiction (for example, bankruptcy, ITSP) may also disclose possible violations of the mail fraud statute. In those instances, copies of the investigative reports are furnished both to the appropriate U. S. Attorney and to the Department.

Accordingly, persons making complaints concerning mail fraud violations should be referred to the Postal Inspection Service or the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC), if securities are involved.

Reports submitted to the U. S. Attorneys by the Postal Inspection Service need not be forwarded to the Department, arrangements having been made with the Chief Postal Inspector for their dissemination in the Department. Generally, SEC criminal reference reports are submitted to the Department, for consideration as to dissemination to U. S. Attorneys.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-43.120 Policy Concerning Prosecutions

Ordinarily prosecutions should not be undertaken if the scheme employed consists of some isolated transactions between individuals, involving minor loss to the victims, in which case the parties should be left to settle their differences by civil or criminal litigation in the state courts. On the other hand, if the scheme is in its nature directed to defrauding a class of persons, or the general public, through the mails, with a substantial pattern of conduct, serious consideration should be given to prosecution.

9-43.200 ELEMENTS OF THE OFFENSE

The essential elements of the offense are (1) the devising of a scheme and artifice to defraud, and (2) the use of the mails in furtherance of the scheme. Pereira v. United States, 347 U.S. 1 (1954); Milam v. United States, 322 F.2d 104 (5th Cir. 1963). It is well settled that the gist of the offense is the use of the mails in furtherance of the scheme to defraud and that each separate use of the mails constitutes a separate and distinct offense. Durland v. United States, 167 U.S. 306 (1896); Badders v. United States, 240 U.S. 391 (1916). An excellent dissertation on mail fraud law is contained in the "Manual of Jury Instructions in Federal Criminal Cases," Part II, Chapter XVI, "Mail Fraud Offenses," adopted by the Seventh Circuit Judicial Conference Committee on Jury Instructions as reported in 36 F.R.D. 600.

9-43.210 The Scheme and Artifice to Defraud

The statute does not define the terms "scheme" or "artifice" and the courts have traditionally been reluctant to offer definitions of either term except in the broadest and most general terms. For example, in United States v. Dexter, 154 F. 890 (N.D. Iowa 1907) the District Court stated that:

A "scheme" may be said to be a design or plan formed to accomplish some purpose. An "artifice" may be said to be an ingenious contrivance or device of some kind, and when used in a bad sense the word corresponds with "trick" or "fraud". Hence a "scheme or artifice" to defraud, within the meaning of this statute, would be to form some plan or devise some trick to perpetrate a fraud upon another. Dexter, supra, at 896.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The fraudulent aspect of the scheme to defraud is to be measured by nontechnical standards and is not restricted by any common-law definition of false pretenses. The law puts its imprimatur on the accepted moral standards and condemns conduct which fails to match the "reflection of moral uprightness, of fundamental honesty, fair play and right dealing in the general and business life of members of society." Gregory v. United States, 253 F.2d 104, 109 (5th Cir. 1958). For as Judge Holmes once observed, "the law does not define fraud; it needs no definition; it is as old as falsehood and as versatile as human ingenuity." Weiss v. United States, 122 F.2d 675, 681 (5th Cir. 1941). The scope of potential schemes or artifices to defraud as those terms are used in the statute is delimited only by man's ingenuity ← one in devising new methods to defraud the community. All that must be shown is that the scheme be one "reasonably calculated to deceive persons of ordinary prudence and comprehension." Silverman v. United States, 213 F.2d 405 (5th Cir. 1954); Gusow v. United States, 347 F.2d 755 (10th Cir. 1965); Blanchly v. United States, 380 F.2d 665, 671 (5th Cir. 1967).

An intent to defraud is indispensable to successful prosecution. Beck v. United States, 305 F.2d 595, 599 (10th Cir. 1962); United States v. Durland, 161 U.S. 306, 313 (1896). However, direct proof of willful intent is not necessary, but can be inferred from the activities of the parties involved. Henderson v. United States, 202 F.2d 400 (6th Cir. 1953); United States v. Bertin, 254 F. Supp. 937 (D. Md. 1966).

A scheme to defraud may involve a plan to obtain money or property by means of false and fraudulent pretenses knowingly made and calculated to deceive persons of ordinary prudence. United States v. Painter, 314 F.2d 939 (4th Cir. 1963); United States v. New South Farm & Home Co., 241 U.S. 64 (1916); United States v. Wimberly, 34 F. Supp. 904 (W.D. La. 1940). It encompasses false representations as to future intentions, as well as existing facts. Durland v. United States, supra. A scheme to defraud may be actionable even though no actual misrepresentations are made. Phillips v. United States, 356 F.2d 297 (9th Cir. 1965); Linden v. United States, 254 F.2d 560 (4th Cir. 1958); Silverman v. United States, 213 F.2d 405 (5th Cir. 1954); Henderson v. United States, 202 F.2d 400 (6th Cir. 1953). The deception need not be premised on the verbalized words alone. The arrangement of the words, or the circumstances in which they are used may serve to convey a false and deceptive appearance. United States v. Burton, 443 F.2d 912, 913 (4th Cir. 1971); Lustiger v. United States, 386 F.2d 132 (9th Cir. 1967); Gusow v. United States, 347 F.2d 755, 756 (10th Cir. 1965); Cacy v. United States, 298 F.2d 227, 229 (5th Cir. 1961). Deception may also, of course, involve the concealment of material fact. Williams v. United States, 368 F.2d 972 (10th Cir. 1966); Blachy v. United States, 380 F.2d 665 (5th Cir. 1967); United States v. Press, 336 F.2d 1003 (2d Cir. 1964); United States v. Bush, 522 F.2d 641, 651 (7th Cir. 1975). It may even take the form of reckless disregard for the truthfulness of the representations made. United States v. Marley, 549 F.2d 561 (8th Cir. 1977) (wire fraud); United States v. Henderson, 446 F.2d 960, 966 (8th Cir. 1971); Gusow v. United States, 347 F.2d 755 (10th Cir. 1965); United States v. Sheiner, 410 F.2d 337, 341 (2d Cir. 1969); Irwin v. United States, 338 F.2d 770 (9th Cir.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

1964); United States v. Meyer, 359 F.2d 837 (7th Cir. 1966). No amount of honest belief that an enterprise would eventually succeed can excuse the willful misrepresentations by which the investors' funds are obtained. United States v. Painter, 314 F.2d 939, 943 (4th Cir. 1963). It is not necessary to communicate the false representations to the victims. Kreuter v. United States, 218 F.2d 532, 535 (5th Cir. 1955); United States v. Sylvanus, 192 F.2d 96, 106 (7th Cir. 1951).

The words "to defraud" do not, however, include threat and coercion through fear or force. Accordingly, extortion alone is not within the proscription of the mail fraud statute. Fasulo v. United States, 272 U.S. 620 (1926), overruling Horman v. United States, 116 F. 350 (6th Cir. 1902).

The great weight of authority holds that it is not necessary that the scheme be successful or that anyone was actually defrauded by the scheme. United States v. Pollack, 534 F.2d 964, 971 (D.C. Cir. 1976); United States v. Regent Office Supply Co., 421 F.2d 1174, 1180 (2d Cir. 1970); United States v. George, 447 F.2d 508, 512 (7th Cir. 1973); United States v. Reicin, 497 F.2d 563 (7th Cir. 1974). Cases holding to the contrary were rejected by Judge Blackmun, now Associate Justice, in United States v. Gross, 416 F.2d 1205 (8th Cir. 1969). The mail fraud statute prohibits the use of the mails for the purpose of executing a scheme or artifice to defraud, or attempting to do so. Accordingly, as specifically stated in the statute, attempts as well as consummated crimes are punishable, and the scheme need not be successful.

A scheme to defraud may include the deprivation of a state or other governmental body of its right to the honest and faithful services of its elected or appointed officials. United States v. Caldwell, 544 F.2d 691 (4th Cir. 1976) indictment set out; United States v. Brown, 540 F.2d 364 (8th Cir. 1976) distinguishing United States v. McNieve, 536 F.2d 1245 (8th Cir. 1976); United States v. Craig, 528 F.2d 773 (7th Cir. 1976); United States v. Rauhoff, 525 F.2d 1170 (7th Cir. 1975); United States v. Bush, 522 F.2d 641 (7th Cir. 1975); United States v. Isaacs (Kerner), 493 F.2d 1124 (7th Cir. 1973); United States v. Faser, 303 F. Supp. 380 (E.D. La. 1969). For additional cases see discussion under USAM 9-43.246, infra, Political and Commercial Corruption.

A scheme to defraud may include the obtaining of secret profits by the employee or official. United States v. Faser, supra; United States v. Isaacs, supra. See also, United States v. Drisko, 303 F. Supp. 858 (E.D. Va. 1969); United States v. Carter, 217 U.S. 286, 308 (1910); United States v. Drumm, 329 F.2d 109, 113 (1st Cir. 1964); United States v. Bowen, 290 F.2d 40, 44-45 (5th Cir. 1961) (civil suits to recover secret profits).

Similarly a scheme to deprive an employer of the honest and faithful services of an employee (commercial bribery) is actionable. United States v. Bryza, 522 F.2d 414 (7th Cir. 1975); United States v. George, 477 F.2d 508 (7th Cir. 1973); United States v. Gerule, 437 F.2d 239 (10th Cir. 1970); United States v. Proctor and Gamble Company, 47 F. Supp. 676 (D. Mass. 1942).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Violation of a fiduciary relationship is also actionable. Post v. United States, 407 F.2d 319 (D.C. Cir. 1968); United States v. Hoffa, 205 F. Supp. 710 (S.D. Fla. 1962); United States v. Buckner, 108 F.2d 921 (2nd Cir. 1940); United States v. Groves, 122 F.2d 87 (2nd Cir. 1941); United States v. Guterma, 179 F. Supp. 420 (E.D. N.Y. 1959). However, in order to prove a scheme to defraud under the mail fraud statute there must be proof of a scheme embracing actual or active fraud, and proof of a mere constructive fraud is insufficient. Epstein v. United States, 174 F.2d 754 (6th Cir. 1949).

So long as it can be shown that a particular individual participated in one of the schemes described above, it is not necessary to show that he/she was in fact a public official, employee or fiduciary himself/herself. See, United States v. Rauhoff, supra; United States v. George, supra.

Schemes to defraud a state or other governmental body through material misrepresentation, deceit, or active concealment of fact may be actionable where loss may be shown, as in a scheme to defraud a state of a sales tax revenue, United States v. Brewer, 528 F.2d 492 (4th Cir. 1975); United States v. Melvin, 544 F.2d 767 (5th Cir. 1977); United States v. Mirabile, 503 F.2d 1065 (8th Cir. 1974); United States v. Flaxman, 495 F.2d 344 (7th Cir. 1974); or where the loss may be as intangible as that of the benefits of public office, as in a scheme to defraud a city of an honest election. United States v. States, 488 F.2d 761 (8th Cir. 1973); see also, United States v. Aczel, 219 F.2d 917 (Ind. 1915); United States v. Classic, 35 F. Supp. 457 (E.D. La. 1940); contra, United States v. Randle, 39 F. Supp. 759 (W.D. La. 1941). However, prior approval from the Criminal Division's Public Integrity Section is required before instituting prosecutions under the mail fraud statute, 18 U.S.C. §1341, or the fraud by wire statute, 18 U.S.C. §1343, in election fraud cases.

9-43.220 Use of the Mails in Execution of the Scheme

It is not necessary that a scheme to defraud contemplate the use of the mails as an essential element of the offense. Pereira v. United States, 347 U.S. 1, 8 (1954); United States v. Young, 232 U.S. 155 (1914). It is necessary, however, that the alleged mailing be "for the purpose of executing the scheme, as the statute requires." Kann v. United States, 232 U.S. 88, 94 (1944); Parr v. United States, 363 U.S. 370 (1960); United States v. Maze, 414 U.S. 395 (1974). Each mailing that forms a basis for a count must be in furtherance of executing the fraudulent scheme. United States v. Keane, 522 F.2d 534 (7th Cir. 1975).

The mailing can be by anyone, and it is not necessary that the defendant himself/herself uses the mails. Pereira v. United States, supra; United States v. Calvert, 523 F.2d 895, 903 (8th Cir. 1975); Milam v. United States, 322 F.2d 104, 107 (5th Cir. 1963). It is sufficient if he/she "caused" the mailings. The standard was set forth in United States v. Pereira, supra, at 8, as follows: "Where one does an act with knowledge that use of the mails will follow in the ordinary course of business, or where such use can reasonably be foreseen, even though not actually intended, then he 'causes' the mails to be use." Each participant in a scheme to defraud is responsible for the use of the mails in furtherance of the scheme. Isaacs v. United States, 301 F.2d 706, 725 (8th Cir. 1962); Steiner v. United States, 134 F.2d 931 (5th Cir. 1943); United States v. Nance, 502 F.2d 615, 619 (8th Cir. 1974).

It is not necessary that false representations themselves were transmitted by mail, or that the defendant received mail from the victim. It is sufficient that the use of the mail was caused by the defendant in furtherance of his/her fraudulent scheme. United States v. Sorce, 308 F.2d 299, 300-301 (4th Cir. 1962), cited with approval in United States v. Lichota, 351 F.2d 81, 89 (6th Cir. 1965). The mailings need not be to or from an intended victim. Pereira v. United States, supra.

The mailed matter need not disclose on its face a fraudulent representation or purpose, but need only have some relation to the scheme. Durland v. United States, 161 U.S. 306, 313 (1896). Mailings may be in furtherance of the scheme even though the scheme is unsuccessful. Durland v. United States, supra, at 315; Erwin v. United States, 242 F.2d 336, 337 (6th Cir. 1957); Hermansen v. United States, 230 F.2d 173 (5th Cir. 1956); Kreuter v. United States, 218 F.2d 532, 535 (5th Cir. 1955); United States v. Sylvanus, 192 F.2d 96, 105-106 (7th Cir. 1951); Deaver v. United States, 155 F.2d 740, 743 (D.C. Cir. 1945); Norman v. United States, 100 F.2d 905, 907 (6th Cir. 1939). Each use of the mails in furtherance of a fraudulent scheme is a separate offense. Badders v. United States, 240 U.S. 391 (1916). Newspaper advertisements which lure prospective victims can be charged in a mail fraud count, since some copies are mailed in the ordinary course of the newspaper's business to mail subscribers. United States v. Hopkins, 357 F.2d 14, 16 (6th Cir. 1966); Pritchard v. United States, 386 F.2d 760, 765 (8th Cir. 1967); Atkinson v. United States, 344 F.2d 97, 99 (8th Cir. 1965); United States v. Thaw, 353 F.2d 581, 584 (4th Cir. 1965); Weatherby v. United States, 150 F.2d 465, 466 (10th Cir. 1945).

9-43.221 In Execution of the Scheme

As previously indicated, and as provided by the statute, the mailing must be for the purpose of executing the scheme to defraud, Kann v. United States, supra, and must be foreseeable. United States v. Pereira, supra. Whether these elements are proved depends upon the factual situation involved. An excellent dissertation on whether the mails are used in furtherance of the scheme and are foreseeable is contained in United States v. Shepherd, 511 F.2d 119 (5th Cir. 1975). That case involved a check kiting fraud, wherein the defendant argued that the transmittal of the worthless checks by mail was only an incidental result of the fraudulent scheme, and not within the statute. The Court stated:

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

The Shepherds rely on United States v. Maze, 1974, 414 U.S. 395, 94 S.Ct. 645, 38 L. Ed. 2d 603; Parr v. United States, 1960, 363 U.S. 370, 80 S.Ct. 1171, 4 L. Ed. 2d 1277; and Kann v. United States, 1944, 323 U.S. 88, 65 S.Ct. 148, 89 L. Ed. 88, to support the attack on their convictions. Maze set out a two-pronged test to determine the existence of jurisdiction. A fraudulent scheme will constitute a federal crime if the defendant "causes" the mails to be used, and the mailings are "sufficiently closely related" to the scheme. Id. 414 U.S. at 399, 94 S.Ct. 645, 38 L. Ed. 2d 603.

The first prong of this test is clearly satisfied here. As the Court pointed out in Pereira v. United States, 1954, 347 U.S. 1, 9, 74 S.Ct. 358, 98 L. Ed. 435, and recognized in Maze, it is not necessary that the defendant himself place the matter into a mail depository, only that he have a reasonable basis to foresee that the mails will be used. It is apparent that the Shepherds knew that the mails would be used in the check collection process.

Our task, therefore, is to determine whether the mailings in this case are "sufficiently closely related" to the fraudulent scheme. To satisfy this test the mailing must be "for the purpose of executing the scheme," Kann, supra, 323 U.S. at 94, 65 S.Ct. at 151; but [i]t is not necessary that the scheme contemplate the use of the mails as an essential element." Periera, supra, 347 U.S. at 8, 74 S.Ct. at 362. What is crucial is that the mailing be "incident to an essential part of the scheme." Id.

Both Maze and Parr involved the fraudulent use of credit cards. The government asserted that the mailing of invoices subsequent to fraudulent purchases was sufficient to invoke jurisdiction under the mail fraud statute. The Supreme Court rejected the government's position since the fraud had been completed upon the use of the credit cards, when the goods and services had been irrevocably received and the fraudulent scheme had thus reached fruition by the time the mails were used. The mails were not utilized to further the scheme.

Similar to Maze and Parr, but closer factually to the case at hand is Kann which involved the cashing of fraudulent use of credit cards. In Kann, corporate officers set up a dummy corporation to divert profits from the corporation for which they acted in order to pay themselves additional compensation without rendering services. The officers had the dummy corporation issue checks in their names and cashed the checks. The use of the mails was in the check collection process. The mailings were held to be insufficient to establish jurisdiction. The Court stressed the fact that the scheme had reached fruition upon the cashing of the checks, since the "persons intended to receive the money had received it irrevocably," and therefore "the subsequent banking transactions between the banks concerned were merely incidental and collateral to the scheme and not a part of it." Id., 323 U.S. at 94, 95, 65 S.Ct. at 151.

In this case, Shepherd did not intend to irrevocably receive the money he fraudulently obtained. The purpose of the scheme was to obtain, for a significant period of time, "forced credit," which he ultimately might repay. The scheme had not reached fruition, but was ongoing.

It was deemed significant in Kann that "[i]t was immaterial to [defendants], or to any consummation of the scheme, how the bank which paid or credited the check would collect from the drawee bank." Id., 323 U.S. at 94, 65 S.Ct. at 151. Shephard's scheme, on the other hand, uniquely depended upon the check collection process. It was the delay that enabled Shepherd to receive the forced credit, and it was the use of the mails that caused the delay.

Kann carefully distinguished its particular fact situation from the factual situation sub judice "where the use of the mails is a means of concealment so that further frauds which are part of the scheme may be perpetrated." Id., 323 U.S. at 94-95, 65 S.Ct. at 151. We have recently recognized this distinction in United States v. Constant, 501 F.2d 1284 (5th Cir. 1974). There the defendant maintained checking accounts in New Jersey and Florida banks. He would draw a check on the New Jersey account, which contained insufficient funds to cover the check, and immediately depart for Florida to deposit the check in his Florida account. He would then draw a check on the Florida account to deposit in the New Jersey account in order to cover the deficit he created in that account. This practice continued with the amounts of the checks accelerating.

The defendant in Constant, relying on Maze, argued that the scheme had reached fruition when the depository bank credited defendant's account upon the deposit of a worthless check. This Court, however, distinguished Maze because the delay which was encountered by the mailing "was a central element" in the scheme. Id. at 1291 of 501 F.2d.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

As in Constant, the use of the mails by Shepherd was a central element in the scheme. Shepherd's receipt of forced credit involved a series of deposits of worthless checks to cover the dishonor of prior worthless checks. Consequently, not only did he obtain forced credit during the collection process of the initial checks deposited, but he was able to extend this credit by subsequent deposits of worthless checks. The delay caused by the mails was therefore doubly crucial.

It is thus clear that the use of the mails in this case was "incidental to an essential element of the scheme" and was therefore "for the purpose of executing the fraudulent scheme" as required by the mail fraud statute.

Shepard, supra, at 121-122.

9-43.222 Lulling Letters

It is a well established principle of mail fraud law that use of the mails after money is obtained may nevertheless be "for the purpose of executing" the fraud. This proposition was considered by the Supreme Court in United States v. Sampson, 371 U.S. 75 (1962), in which case salesmen fraudulently obtained applications and advance payments from businessmen and then mailed acceptances to the defrauded victims to lull them into believing the services would be performed. The Court held that such a "lulling" use of the mails was the purpose of executing the fraudulent scheme. After discussing the decisions in Kann, supra, and Parr, supra, the Court in Sampson concluded:

We are unable to find anything in either the Kann or the Parr case which suggests that the Court was laying down an automatic rule that a deliberate, planned use of the mails after the victims' money had been obtained can never be 'for the purpose of executing' the defendants' scheme. Rather the Court found only that under the facts in these cases the schemes had been fully executed before the mails were used. And Court of Appeals decisions rendered both before and after Kann have followed the view that subsequent mailings can in some circumstances provide the basis for an indictment under the mail fraud statute.

Sampson, supra, at 80.

Although in Maze, supra, a credit card case, the Supreme Court found the mailings insufficiently closely related to the defendant's scheme to bring his conduct within the statute, the Court reaffirmed the lulling letter concept of Sampson, supra. Thus, post-purchase mailings which are designed to lull the victim into a false sense of security, postpone inquiries or complaints, or make the transaction less suspect are mailings in furtherance of this scheme. United States v. Ashdown, 509 F.2d 793, 800 (5th Cir. 1975); United States v. MacClain, 501 F.2d 1006, 1012 (10th Cir. 1974); United States v. Porter, 441 F.2d 1204, 1211 (8th Cir. 1971); United States v. Blue, 138 F.2d 351, 359 (6th Cir. 1943); Henderson v. United States, 425 F.2d 134, 141 (5th Cir. 1970); Sparrow v. United States, 402 F.2d 826, 829 (10th Cir. 1968); Bliss v. United States, 354 F.2d 456, 457 (8th Cir. 1966); United States v. Pollack, 534 F.2d 964, 972 (D.C. Cir. 1976). There is no rule that the money must change hands after the mailing. United States v. Love, 535 F.2d 1152, 1160 (9th Cir. 1976).

9-43.232 Bankruptcy (Scam) Frauds

A planned bankruptcy (scam) scheme is one to obtain supplies on credit, make quick sales, collect the proceeds, make no payments to creditors, and allow the company to fall into bankruptcy, making off with such loot as might meanwhile have been gathered. Kaplan v. United States, 7 F.2d 594, 595 (2d Cir. 1925). Prosecutions may be instituted:

A. Under the Bankruptcy Act, 18 U.S.C. §152: United States v. Dioguardi, 428 F.2d 1033 (2d Cir. 1970); United States v. Piccini, 412 F.2d 591 (2d Cir. 1969); United States v. 9-43.238 Credit Card Frauds

A. The Mail Fraud Statute, 18 U.S.C. §1341

The Supreme Court, in United States v. Maze, 414 U.S. 395 (1974), decided that the forwarding by mail of credit card vouchers to credit card issuers for payment subsequent to the receipt of merchandise through the unauthorized use of a credit card did not constitute a use of the mails in furtherance of a fraudulent scheme so as to sustain prosecution under the mail fraud statute. Accordingly, mail fraud prosecutions in the credit card area are now limited to those instances (a) involving fraud in obtaining the credit card, with the use of the mail being prior to the receipt of the goods and services, Green v. United States, 494 F.2d 820 (5th Cir. 1974); King v. United States, 494 F.2d 353 (6th Cir. 1975); United States v. Woods, 535 F.2d 255 (4th Cir. 1974); United States v. Stein, 500 F.2d 687 (9th Cir. 1974); United States v. Arnold, 543 F.2d 1224 (8th Cir. 1977), or (b) involving a dishonest merchant who has knowledge that the use is unauthorized. In the latter instance, the forwarding of the voucher for payment is an integral part of the scheme, since the merchant has not yet been paid. United States v. Adamo, 534 F.2d 31 (3d Cir. 1976).

B. 15 U.S.C. §1644 - Fraudulent Use Of A Credit Card

Prosecutions may be instituted under 15 U.S.C. §1644, as amended October 28, 1974, which (1) prohibits, in transactions affecting interstate commerce, the obtaining of goods and services aggregating $1,000 in a single year through the use of stolen or fraudulently obtained credit cards, United States v. Mikelberg, 517 F.2d 246 (5th Cir. 1975), (2) prohibits the use of facilities of interstate commerce in the sale or transportation of stolen credit cards, United States v. Nichols, 534 F.2d 202 (9th Cir. 1976), (3) prohibits "fencing" activities involving stolen credit cards, (4) prohibits the sale or transportation of tickets for interstate travel having a value of $500 or more obtained through the use of stolen credit cards, and (5) prohibits merchants from furnishing merchandise or services through the use of stolen credit cards with knowledge that the cards were stolen.

Investigation into violations of 15 U.S.C. §1644 is conducted by the Postal Inspection Service.

9-43.246 Political And Commercial Corruption

A. COMMERCIAL BRIBERY

A scheme to defraud an employer of the honest and faithful services of an employee (often referred to as "commercial bribery") is actionable under the mail fraud statute. Two of the earliest cases in this area are United States v. Proctor & Gamble Co., 47 F. Supp. 676 (D. Mass. 1942) (company paid bribes to the employees of a competitor to obtain confidential business information), and Abbott v. United States, 239 F.2d 310 (5th Cir. 1956)

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

(defendant paid employee to furnish valuable geophysical maps belonging to his employer). In 1973 the Seventh Circuit found in United States v. George, 477 F.2d 508 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 414 U.S. 827 (1973), that a purchasing agent who received kickbacks from a supplier and failed to disclose them to his/her employer could be prosecuted for mail fraud. Other cases followed. See i.e., United States v. Bryza, 522 F.2d 414, 421-423 (7th Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 426 U.S. 912 (1976) (a purchasing agent with International Harvester received kickbacks from suppliers); United States v. Reece, 614 F.2d 1259, 1261 (10th Cir. 1980) (purchasing agent of wholesome grocery received "brokerage fees" from suppliers); United States v. Bohonus, 628 F.2d 1167, 1171 (9th Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 447 U.S. 928 (1981) (an insurance manager for a company extracted kickbacks from the insurance broker). In United States v. Barta, 635 F.2d 999 (2d Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 450 U.S. 998 (1981), the Second Circuit upheld a mail fraud indictment against an employee of a securities firm who had engaged in bond trading using the firm's credit. More recently, the Second Circuit upheld the use of the mail fraud statute against a non-employee, a securities broker, who passed on confidential information received from trusted employees of an investment banking firm for the purpose of enabling his co-schemers, including the employees, to purchase stock in companies subject to mergers and acquisitions. United States v. Newman, 664 F.2d 12 (2d Cir. 1981).

In analyzing these instances of commercial bribery, the courts have recognized that not every breach of a fiduciary duty by an employee amounts to criminal fraud. See, United States v. George, 477 F.2d at 512 and United States v. Barta, 635 F.2d at 1005-07. The breach of fiduciary duty must be accompanied by some misrepresentation of or failure to disclose material information. In United States v. Ballard, 663 F.2d 534, 540-541 (5th Cir. 1981), modified, 680 F.2d 352 (5th Cir. 1982), the Fifth Circuit recently analyzed the employee's breach of fiduciary duty coupled with his failure to disclose material information. The Ballard court explained that:

A breach of fiduciary duty can constitute an illegal fraud under §1341 only when there is some detriment to the employer. The possible detriment here is that one of the alleged deprivations of an employee's faithful and honest service may have involved a violation of the employee's duty to disclose material information to the employer. . . Our focus shall thus be on the duty to disclose, which may be imposed by state or federal statute or may arise from the employment relationship itself. . . and on materiality, which exists whenever an employee has reason to believe the information would lead a reasonable employer to change its business conduct.

Id.

Therefore, the test is whether or not the employer upon learning that an employee is receiving kickbacks, brokerage fees, or has an interest in a related company, or some other comparable fact, would change his/her business practice in any significant way. If so, the information is material and the employee is perpetrating a fraud on the employer by failing to disclose it.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

Commercial bribery can also be prosecuted under the Travel Act, 18 U.S.C. §1952. See Perrin v. United States, 444 U.S. 37, 46 (1979). Commercial bribery prosecutions are also possible under 18 U.S.C. §2314. See Abbott v. United States, 239 F.2d 310, 312 (5th Cir. 1956).

B. FIDUCIARY FRAUDS

Violations of a fiduciary relationship are also prosecutable under the mail fraud statute. One of the earliest cases was United States v. Buckner, 108 F.2d 921 (2nd Cir.), cert. denied, 309 U.S. 669 (1940), in which a trustee was prosecuted for expropriating trust funds. In Post v. United States, 407 F.2d 319 (D.C. Cir. 1968), cert. denied, 393 U.S. 1092 (1969), promoters in a country club endeavor were prosecuted for mail fraud because of their failure to disclose to stockholders and subscribers their interests in leased land and construction contracts. In United States v. Bronston, 658 F.2d 920 (2nd Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 456 U.S. 915 (1982), an attorney was successfully prosecuted for mail fraud for his continued representation of a client despite warnings from his law partners that such representation amounted to a serious conflict of interest in light of the law firm's current representation of a competing client. In United States v. Curry, 681 F.2d 406 (5th Cir. 1982), the chairman of a political action committee was prosecuted for converting to his own use political contributions. The Curry court found the evidence sufficient for mail fraud but reversed and remanded in light of the court's failure to give a good faith instruction. In United States v. Boffa, 688 F.2d 919 (3d Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 103 S.Ct. 1272 and 1280 (1983), the defendants engaged in a "labor switch" scheme whereby the proprietors of a trucking company, in secret cooperation with a union official, withdrew their hauling contract for the purpose of firing union drivers and then resubmitted a new hauling contract in the name of an ostensibly different company enabling them to hire nonunion drivers. The Boffa court upheld the mail fraud theory of the case to the extent that the scheme deprived the union drivers of their contractual rights and their intangible rights in the honest and loyal services of their union representative but was forced to reverse the mail fraud counts because the scheme in the language of the indictment too broadly criminalized the actions of the defendants for depriving the union drivers of their rights "secured by section 7 of the National Labor Relations Act."

C. POLITICAL CORRUPTION

A scheme to defraud may include the deprivation of a state or local governmental body of its right to the honest and faithful services of its elected or appointed officials. Some of the earliest cases in this area involve public officials receiving bribes or kickbacks. See Shushan v. United States, 117 F.2d 110 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 313 U.S. 574 (1941) (local officials were bribed in order to further scheme to refund local bonds at exorbitant rates) and Bradford v. United States, 129 F.2d 274 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 317 U.S. 683 (1942) (city officials bribed in order to have the city pay an exorbitant price for buses). See also, United States

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

v. Caldwell, 544 F.2d 691 (4th Cir. 1976) (banker paid kickbacks to state treasurer in order to secure state funds deposited into non-interest bearing accounts); United States v. Brown, 540 F.2d 364 (8th Cir. 1976) (city building commissioner extracted kickbacks from building contractors); and United States v. Rauhoff, 525 F.2d 1170 (7th Cir. 1975) (defendants convicted of scheme to bribe the Illinois Secretary of State in order to procure and retain contracts for the production of license plates). However, in United States v. McNeive, 536 F.2d 1245 (8th Cir. 1976), the Eighth Circuit reversed a mail fraud conviction of a city plumbing inspector who received by mail small unsolicited gratuities for the performance of ministerial tasks and who accorded no preferential treatment to the payors of the gratuities. The McNeive court found no "scheme to defraud."

The Seventh Circuit in United States v. Bush, 522 F.2d 641, 648 (7th Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 424 U.S. 977 (1976), held that a breach of a fiduciary duty by a public official standing alone is not a sufficient fraud for the mail fraud statute. In Bush the defendant who was the press secretary to the late Mayor Richard Daley held a hidden interest in a company which had an exclusive contract with the city for display advertising at Chicago's O'Hare International Airport. The Bush court found sufficient evidence of a fraud "only when [the defendant's] failure to provide honest and faithful services [was] combined with his material misrepresentations... and his active concealment... Id. The Bush court also pointed out that the government was not obligated to show any actual loss of money to the city. As the court stated:

Much was said at trial about the fact that the city did not lose money on the contract and that it was one of the best in the country. However, that argument is not convincing. First of all, if the city had known of Bush's interest it might have been able to obtain a better contract. Secondly, the mail fraud statute seeks to prohibit fraudulent conduct regardless of ultimate loss or damage to the victims of the crime. United States v. Reicin, 497 F.2d 563 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 996, 95 S.Ct. 309, 42 L.Ed.2d 269 (1974). Since 1961 Bush made a profit of over $200,000 from his hidden interest in the airport advertising contract. If the citizens of Chicago and other public officials had known of Bush's interest they could have rightfully negotiated an advertising contract which might have earned those profits for the city. The net result was that Bush, through his scheme, made a deal with the city by which the city profited. The deal may have been a good one for the city; the problem is that Bush deprived the city and its officials of making a better deal, of the best deal possible, in order that he might share in the profits.

Mandel, 591 F.2d 1347 (4th Cir.), aff'd in relevant part of reh'g en banc, 602 F.2d 653 (4th Cir. 1979) cert. denied, 445 U.S. 961 (1980) (Governor Mandel failed to disclose to the Maryland legislature his business associates' interest in a racetrack at the time of pending legislation affecting additional racint dates).

The most recent extension of the mail fraud statute in the area of political corruption comes from the Second Circuit in United States v. Margiotta, 688 F.2d 108 (2nd Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 103 S.Ct. 1891 (1983). Margiotta was Republican Committee Chairman of Nassau County, Long Island and the Town of Hempstead. Margiotta was convicted of carrying forward a scheme involving the distribution of insurance commissions on municipal properties to his political associates. Although Margiotta did not occupy public office, the court of appeals found that he was a de facto government leader who owed a fiduciary duty to the citizens and had an obligation to disclose the insurance agreement to the public even though he himself did not receive any of the insurance commission proceeds.

Mackay, 491 F.2d 616 (10th Cir. 1973); United States v. Crosby 294 F.2d 928 (2d Cir. 1961); United States v. Dardi, 330 F.2d 316 (2nd Cir. 1964). In the above cases, both mail fraud counts and Securities Act counts were included in the indictments, as authorized in Edwards v. United States, 312 U.S. 473, 483-484 (1941).

Matrimonial: Pereira v. United States, 347 U.S. (1953); Lindsay v. United States, 322 F.2d 688 (9th Cir. 1964) (wire fraud). Divorce mill: United States v. Edwards, 458 F.2d 875 (5th Cir. 1972). Illegal horse betting scheme: United States v. Bagdasian, 291 F.2d 163 (4th Cir. 1961) (wire fraud). Fraudulent financing of home improvement contracts: United States v. Schall, 371 F. Supp. 912 (W.D. Pa. 1974).

9-43.300 VENUE IN MAIL FRAUD PROSECUTIONS

The constitutional requirement regarding venue relates to the locality of the offense and not the personal presence of the offender. Since the gravamen of the offense of mail fraud is the use of mails, the place where the scheme is conceived or put into motion is immaterial. Kreuter v. United States, 218 F.2d 532 (5th Cir. 1955); United States v. Hoffa, 205 F. Supp. 710 (S.D. Fla. 1962). The criminal act according to 18 U.S.C. §1341 may be prosecuted in any district where one who, for the purpose of executing or attempting to execute a scheme or artifice to defraud, "places in any post office or authorized depository for mail matter, any matter or thing to be sent or delivered by the Postal Service," or "takes or receives therefrom, any such matter or thing," or "knowingly causes to be delivered by mail according to the direction thereon . . . any such matter or thing." Accordingly, the mail fraud statute has its own "built-in" venue provisions.

Venue, then, must be charged in one of the following districts: (1) the district in which the count letter was placed in the mail by the defendant; see Irvin v. United States, 338 F.2d 770 (9th Cir. 1964); Marvin v. United States, 279 F.2d 451 (10th Cir. 1960); Holdsworth v. United States, 179 F.2d 933 (1st Cir. 1950); Kaufman v. United States, 163 F.2d 404 (6th Cir. 1947); Bozel v. United States, 139 F.2d 153 (6th Cir. 1943); (2) the district in which the defendant took or received the count letter from the mails; see, United States v. Cobb, 397 F.2d 416 (7th Cir. 1968); United States v. Sorce, 308 F.2d 299 (4th Cir. 1962); Marvin v. United States, 279 F.2d 451 (10th Cir. 1960); United States v. Wolfson, 322 F. Supp. 798 (D. Del. 1971); (3) the district in which the defendant knowingly caused a letter to be delivered according to the direction thereon; see, Hagner v. United States, 285 U.S. 427 (1931); Kreuter v. United States, 218 F.2d 532 (5th Cir. 1955); United States v. Wolfson, 322 F. Supp. 798 (D. Del. 1971); Nemec v. United States, 191 F.2d 810 (9th Cir. 1951); Gates v. United States, 122 F.2d 571 (10th Cir. 1941). Of course allegations and proof that defendant caused a letter to be placed in or taken from an authorized depository for mail matter is tantamount to alleging and proving that he/she did the act himself. Pereira v. United States, 347 U.S. 1 (1954); Marvin v. United States, 279 F.2d 451 (10th Cir. 1960); United States v. Brandom, 320 F. Supp. 520 (W.D. Mo. 1970).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

Several decisions have held that venue for mail fraud prosecutions also lies in any district through which the count letter passed, citing as authority the provisions of 18 U.S.C. §3237(a). United States v. Fassoulis, 445 F.2d 13 (2d Cir. 1971); United States v. Sorce, 308 F.2d 299 (4th Cir. 1962); United States v. Inches, 253 F. Supp. 312 (D. Ariz. 1966); United States v. Duma, 228 F. Supp. 755 (S.D. N.Y. 1964); United States v. Hoffa, 205 F. Supp. 710 (S.D. Fla. 1962); Hesse v. United States, 187 F. Supp. 375 (E.D. N.Y. 1960). (Of the foregoing cases, Duma is the only one where the mailings charged were in districts through which the mails passed. The other all charged mailings in the district where the mail was deposited or in the district wherein the mails were delivered.) 18 U.S.C. §3237(a) provides in relevant part that any offense involving the use of the mails is a continuing offense and ". . . except as otherwise expressly provided by enactment of Congress . . ." may be prosecuted in any district from, through or into which such mail matter moves.

An application of 18 U.S.C. §3237(a) to 18 U.S.C. §1341 would significantly broaden venue possibilities to include any district through which a letter or other matter deposited in the mails passes on its way from the place of sending to the place of delivery. 18 U.S.C. §3237(a) must, however, be read in light of the constitutional requirements and the explicit provisions of 18 U.S.C. §1341. The locus of the offense under 18 U.S.C. §1341 has been carefully specified; and only the acts of "placing", "taking" and "causing to be delivered" at a specified place have been penalized. Venue, therefore, should be placed according to the specific prohibitions of 18 U.S.C. §1341, irrespective of 18 U.S.C. §3237(a). See Travis v. United States, 364 U.S. 631, 636-37 (1960), wherein the Supreme Court points out that "venue should not be made to depend upon the chance use of the mails, when Congress has so carefully indicated the locus of the crimes." The locus for mail fraud prosecutions is specifically set forth in 18 U.S.C. §1341; since Congress has "otherwise expressly provided", 18 U.S.C. §3237 is inapplicable to mail fraud. In view of the foregoing, it is the Criminal Division's view that those cases authorizing prosecutions under 18 U.S.C. §1341 in districts through which the mails merely pass are incorrectly decided.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-43.400 DRAFTING A MAIL FRAUD INDICTMENT

9-43.410 Scheme And Artifice

An indictment under 18 U.S.C. §1341 must sufficiently charge the two necessary elements of an offense within the statute: (a) that the accused devised and intended to devise a scheme and artifice to defraud, and (b) used or caused the use of the mails in execution or attempted execution of the scheme. United States v. Young, 232 U.S. 155 (1914). It is insufficient to charge the violation in the language of the statute. United States v. Hess, 124 U.S. 483, 488-489 (1888); United States v. Mercer, 138 F. Supp. 288 (N.D. Cal. 1955). The indictment must contain a reasonably detailed description of the particular scheme the defendant is charged with devising. United States v. Curtis, 506 F.2d 985 (10th Cir. 1974). Subsequent to retrial on a superseding indictment, the conviction of Curtis was affirmed. United States v. Curtis, supra. United States v. Bagdasian, 291 F.2d 163 (4th Cir. 1961); United States v. Faser, 303 F. Supp. 380 (E.D. La. 1969); United States v. Berlin, 254 F. Supp. 937 (D. Md. 1966).

In drafting a mail fraud substantive charge, it is not necessary to allege: (a) that the scheme or artifice contemplated a use of the mails in its execution, United States v. Young, supra; Wolpa v. United States, 86 F.2d 35 (8th Cir. 1936); (b) that anyone was actually defrauded, United States v. Gross, 416 F.2d 1205 (8th Cir. 1969); or (c) that anyone suffered a loss because of the scheme; United States v. George, 477 F.2d 508 (7th Cir. 1973); Hass v. United States, 93 F.2d 427 (8th Cir. 1938); United States v. Rowe, 56 F.2d 747 (2nd Cir. 1932); Linn v. United States, 234 F. 543 (7th Cir. 1916); United States v. McKay, 45 F. Supp. 1007 (W.D. Mich. 1942). While an intent to defraud is essential for conviction, it is not necessary to charge it where such an intention is apparent from the very nature of the scheme alleged. Hass v. United States, supra; Kriebel v. United States, 3 F.2d 692 (7th Cir. 1925).

Where the scheme was devised with an intent to defraud one or more specific individuals, whose identities are known, their names should be stated in the indictment. If their names are unknown, it is advisable to allege that the names of such persons are unknown to the grand jurors. See generally, Durland v. United States, 161 U.S. 306 (1896); United States v. Strauss, 443 F.2d 986 (1st Cir. 1971); Hyney v. United States, 44 F.2d 134 (6th Cir. 1930); Berry v. United States, 15 F.2d 634 (5th Cir. 1926). Where the scheme is aimed at the defrauding of a class of persons, it is sufficient to give a general description of the class. Butler v. United States, 317 F.2d 249 (8th Cir. 1963); United States v. Unger, 295 F.2d 889 (7th Cir. 1961); Belvin v. United States, 273 F.2d 583 (5th Cir. 1960);

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Wolpa v. United States, supra; Hyney v. United States, 44 F.2d 134 (6th Cir. 1930).

Where an important element of the scheme lies in the knowing use of false and fraudulent pretenses and representations for the purpose of obtaining money or property, the indictment should detail the pretenses and representations along with an allegation regarding their falsity and the knowledge of the accused regarding that fact. United States v. Comyns, 248 U.S. 349 (1919); Roper v. United States, 54 F.2d 845 (10th Cir. 1931); Krotkiewicz v. United States, 19 F.2d 421 (6th Cir. 1927); Kercheval v. United States, 12 F.2d 904 (8th Cir. 1926). It is not necessary to allege the manner or respect in which the misrepresentations were false, and the failure to so allege is not defective pleading. Chew v. United States, 9 F.2d 348, 352 (8th Cir. 1925); United States v. Schecter, 35 F.2d 11 (E.D. Pa. 1940); United States v. Womack, 98 F.2d 742, 744 (7th Cir. 1939); United States v. Curtis, 506 F.2d 985 (10th Cir. 1974). While false representations concerning value are often key features of the scheme and properly chargeable as such damage to a victim is not an essential element of the offense. It is not necessary to allege that the intended victims were to receive something worth less than they were to pay for it. United States v. New South Farm & Home Co., 241 U.S. 64 (1916); Moore v. United States, 2 F.2d 839 (7th Cir. 1924); Wilson v. United States, 275 F. 307 (2d Cir. 1921).

Where the making of false promises constitutes an element of the scheme and artifice, the indictment should allege it in the description of the scheme with details of the promises or promissory representations relied on. United States v. Comyns, supra; Durland v. United States, 161 U.S. 306 (1896). Fraudulent intent may appear either by allegations that the defendant had no intention of performing such promises and representations or by other sufficient allegations. United States v. Comyns, supra; Durland v. United States, supra; United States v. Rowe, 56 F.2d 747 (2d Cir. 1932); Kriebel v. United States, 8 F.2d 692 (7th Cir. 1925); Tucker v. United States, 224 F. 833 (6th Cir. 1915). Along these lines, it should be noted that in the description of the scheme in the indictment it is not necessary to set out verbatim written or printed matter. United States v. Suchman, 206 F. Supp. 688 (D. Md. 1962); Freeman v. United States, 244 F. 1 (7th Cir. 1917).

The precise time when the scheme was devised is not material so long as it is made to appear that it was devised prior to the use of the mails alleged to have been made in its execution or attempted execution. Bauman v. United States, 156 F.2d 534 (5th Cir. 1946); Hyney v. United States, supra; Chew v. United States, supra. No date, therefore, need be set, and if stated it is not binding on the prosecution. Fournier v. United States, 58 F.2d 3 (7th Cir. 1932); Munch v. United States, 24 F.2d 518 (5th Cir. 1928).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

An indictment is not necessarily duplicitious because it charges the devising of a scheme and artifice to defraud and for obtaining money and property by false and fraudulent pretenses, representations and promises. McLendon v. United States, 14 F.2d 12 (5th Cir. 1926); United States v. Culver, 224 F. Supp. 419, 424 (D. Md. 1963). Allegations which are unnecessary to the validity of the indictment, and which may therefore be disregarded as surplusage, include averments as to consummation of the scheme, Norcott v. United States, 65 F.2d 913 (7th Cir. 1933); United States v. Clark, 125 F.2d 913 (M.D. Penn. 1943); or as to a particular of execution; Cowl v. United States, 33 F.2d 794 (8th Cir. 1919); Silkworth v. United States, 10 F.2d 711 (2nd Cir. 1926); or as to ownership, Matthews v. United States, 15 F.2d 139 (8th Cir. 1926); Nelson v. United States, 16 F.2d 71 (8th Cir. 1926); Brady v. United States, 26 F.2d 400 (8th Cir. 1928); Hartzell v. United States, 72 F.2d 569 (8th Cir. 1934).

It is not necessary that the indictment identify each defendant with the particular role that he/she is to take in the execution of the scheme. Alexander v. United States, 95 F.2d 873 (8th Cir. 1938); see also, Moore v. United States, 2 F.2d 839 (7th Cir. 1924).

Because descriptions of the scheme are frequently quite lengthy, it is suggested that those descriptive paragraphs set out in full in one count be adopted and incorporated into another count by suitable reference pursuant to the provision of Rule 7(c), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. United States v. Garrison, 280 F.2d 493 (7th Cir. 1960); see also, Nichols v. United States, 48 F.2d 46 (5th Cir. 1931); Bartholomew v. United States, 177 F. 902 (6th Cir. 1910). Although the count in which such matters is set forth may be deficient in other respects, such fact does not destroy its validity for reference purposes. Crain v. United States, 162 U.S. 625, 633 (1895); United States v. Shavin, 287 F.2d 647 (7th Cir. 1961); Muench v. United States, 96 F.2d 332 (8th Cir. 1938); Robinson v. United States, 33 F.2d 238 (9th Cir. 1929). The courts have held that introductory paragraphs not part of another count and specifically referring to the counts involved are considered part of the numbered counts following them. United States v. McGuire, 381 F.2d 306, 318 (2d Cir. 1967) (SEC violations), citing, United States v. Taylor, 207 F.2d 437 (2d Cir. 1953). The essential allegations of a count may be supplied by reference to the matters set forth in the introductory parts of an indictment. United States v. Vanderpool, 528 F.2d 1205 (4th Cir. 1975). Several courts have held that the scheme need not be repeated in subsequent counts if a use of the mail is furtherance of the "aforesaid scheme" is charged in those counts, Nichols v. United States, 48 F.2d 46 (5th Cir. 1931); Clark v. United States, 298 F.2d 293 (8th Cir. 1924). However, we recommend against such draftmanship.

The following cases discuss the sufficiency of indictments charging particular schemes and may be of some use in drafting particular indictments. United States v. Comyns, 248 U.S. 349 (1919) (service); United States v. New South Farm & Home Co., 241 U.S. 64 (1916) (land); Durland v. United States, 161 U.S. 306 (1896) (investment); Stokes v. United States, 157 U.S. 187 (1895) (mercantile); United States v. Unger, 295 F.2d 889 (7th Cir. 1961) (insurance); United States v. Bunker, 290 F. 207 (M.D. Tex., 1923) (stock sales); Bartholomew v. United States, 117 F. 902 (6th Cir. 1910) (forgery); Betts v. United States, 132 F. 228 (1st Cir. 1904) (bucket shop); United States v. Faser, 303 F. Supp. 380 (W.D. La. 1969) (breach of trust); United States v. Bertin, 254 F. Supp. 937 (D. Md. 1966) (debt consolidation); United States v. Hoffa, 205 F. Supp. 710 (S.D. Fla. 1962) (breach of trust); United States v. McKay, 45 F. Supp. 1007 (W.D. Mich. 1942) (breach of trust); United States v. Wimberly, 34 F. Supp. 904 (W.D. La. 1940) (breach of trust); United States v. Brunet, 227 F. Supp 766 (W.D. Wis. 1964) (correspondence school); United States v. Reicin, 497 F.2d 563 (8th Cir. 1974) (insurance indictment set out in text).

9-43.420 Charging A Use Of The Mails

Since the use actually made of the mails constitutes the gist of the offense, such use must be pleaded with certainty of time, place and circumstances. United States v. Cobb, 397 F.2d 416, 417 (7th Cir. 1968); United States v. DeWelles, 345 F.2d 387 (7th Cir. 1965); McNear v. United States, 60 F.2d 861 (10th Cir. 1932); Colburn, v. United States, 223 F. 590 (8th Cir. 1915); United States v. Culver, 224 F. Supp. 419 (D. Md. 1963). Whether the particular use made of the mails be placing in the mails, taking from the mails or causing delivery of a letter or other communication, it is essential to allege that the act was "for the purpose of executing and attempting to execute" the scheme. Robinson v. United States, 33 F.2d 238 (9th Cir. 1929); Krotkiewicz v. United States, 19 F.2d 421 (6th Cir. 1927); Moore v. United States, 2 F.2d 839 (7th Cir. 1924).

The allegation that the use made of the mails was "for the purpose of executing and attempting to execute the scheme" described is generally sufficient unless it appears from the face of the communication that it could not possibly have any effect in furthering or carrying out the scheme. United States v. Sampson, 371 U.S. 75 (1962); United States v. Brickey, 296 F. Supp. 742 (W.D. Ark. 1969); United States v. Pilnick, 267 F. Supp. 791 (S.D. N.Y. 1967); United States v. Hoffa, 205 F. Supp. 710 (S.D. Fla. 1962). The particular communication charged need not be one to or from an intended victim. Pereira v. United States, 347 U.S. 1 (1953).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Allegations as to the time and place of using the mails in violation of the statute are essential. Hagner v. United States, 285 U.S. 427 (1931); Durland v. United States, 161 U.S. 306 (1896); United States v. Cobb, 397 F.2d 416 (7th Cir. 1968); Bauman v. United States, 156 F.2d 534 (5th Cir. 1946). This burden is met, however, where the mailing is charged as occurring on or about a stated date, prior to the return of the indictment, within the statutory period of limitations and during the existence of the scheme. United States v. Kenofsky, 243 U.S. 440 (1917); Whiteside v. United States, 346 F.2d 500, 503-504 (8th Cir. 1965); Jacobs v. United States, 395 F.2d 469, 478 (8th Cir. 1968); United States v. Guest, 74 F.2d 730 (2nd Cir. 1935); Chew v. United States, 9 F.2d 348 (8th Cir. 1925). Allegation as to place of deposit or delivery is sufficient where it states a definite location showing venue within the jurisdiction of the court. Salinger v. United States, 272 U.S. 542 (1926); United States v. Sorce, 308 F.2d 299 (4th Cir. 1962); Holdsworth v. United States, 179 F.2d 933 (1st Cir. 1950).

The particular communication, whether a letter, postal card, package, writing, circular, pamphlet, or advertisement, should be particularly identified and described. United States v. Cobb, 397 F.2d 416 (7th Cir. 1968); Tenenbaum v. United States, 11 F.2d 927 (5th Cir. 1926); United States v. Suchman, 206 F. Supp. 688 (D. Md. 1962); United States v. Garrison, 168 F. Supp. 622 (E.D. Wis. 1958). It is not necessary, however, to allege that it contained any false pretense or representation. Tenenbaum v. United States, 11 F.2d 927 (5th Cir. 1926); United States v. Culver, 224 F. Supp. 419 (D. Md. 1963); nor how it would aid or was intended to aid in execution of the scheme. Durland v. United States, 161 U.S. 306 (1896); Muench v. United States, 96 F.2d 332 (8th Cir. 1938); Chew v. United States, 9 F.2d 348 (8th Cir. 1925).

Each mailing in furtherance of the scheme and artifice to defraud is a separate offense. Badders v. United States, 240 U.S. 391 (1916). Accordingly, proper draftsmanship requires that only one mailing should be alleged in each count, otherwise the count would be duplicious. However, in that case the proper relief is not dismissal of the indictment, but an election by the government as to which mailing it will proceed on. United States v. Goodman, 285 F.2d 378, 379 (5th Cir. 1961).

It is very important that the draftsman charged the proper method of violation of the statute. For example, if the count letter is mailed to the district of indictment, from another district, be sure to charge a taking from the mails, or delivery according to the direction thereon, rather than a placing in the mail. Conversely, charge a placing in the mail in the district of indictment of a letter addressed to someone outside that district. See, Hagner v. United States, 285 U.S. 427 (1931), which points up the problems incident to inept pleading of the use of the mails in furtherance of the scheme.

9-43.421 Charging A Placing In The Mails

Where the act relied on is the mailing of a communication in execution of the scheme, such act is properly and sufficiently charged by alleging in the words of the statute that the accused "placed" (or, caused to be placed) the described communication in a named post office or in "an authorized depository for mail matter" in a named city and state, "to be sent and delivered by the United States Postal Service" to a named person at a named place. Irwin v. United States, 338 F.2d 770 (9th Cir. 1964); Marvin v. United States, 279 F.2d 451 (10th Cir. 1960); Holdsworth v. United States, 179 F.2d 933 (1st Cir. 1950); United States v. Herziq, 26 F.2d 487 (D.C. Cir. 1928). Where the act of mailing is so alleged it is not necessary to allege that the communication was enclosed in an envelope; that such envelope was addressed; that postage was prepaid; or, if there is more than one defendant, which of them committed the act. Wolpa v. United States, 86 F.2d 35 (8th Cir. 1936); Hyney v. United States, 44 F.2d 134 (6th Cir. 1930); Chew v. United States, 9 F.2d 348 (8th Cir. 1925). It is unnecessary to charge that the defendant "wilfully" caused to be placed in the mails, or "wilfully" caused to be taken and received from the mails. Parr v. United States, 265 F.2d 894, 901 (5th Cir. 1959); United States v. Suchman, 206 F. Supp. 688, 689 (D. Md. 1962). See also, United States v. Gerhart, 275 F. Supp. 443, 454 (S.D.W. Va. 1967).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-43.422 Charging A Taking From The Mails

When dealing with the taking and receiving of a communication from the mails, such act is properly and sufficiently charged by an allegation under the statute that the defendant did take and receive (or, cause to be taken and received) the described communication from the mails. United States v. Cobb, 397 F.2d 416 (7th Cir. 1968); United States v. Sorce, 308 F.2d 299 (4th Cir. 1962); Marvin v. United States, 279 F.2d 451 (10th Cir. 1960); Finnegan v. United States, 231 F. 561 (6th Cir. 1916); United States v. Wolfson, 322 F. Supp. 798 (D. Del. 1971).

9-43.423 Charging A Delivery by Mail According To The Director Thereon

Where the act relied on is the delivery by mail of a communication in execution of the scheme, such act is properly and sufficiently charged by alleging in the words of the statute that the defendant did "knowingly cause" the described communication "to be delivered by mail" to a named person at a named place within the jurisdiction, "according to the direction thereon," or "at the place at which it was directed to be delivered by the person to whom it was addressed." Kreuter v. United States, 218 F.2d 532 (5th Cir. 1955); Nemec v. United States, 191 F.2d 810 (9th Cir. 1951); Gates v. United States, 122 F.2d 571 (10th Cir. 1941); Hartzell v. United States, 72 F.2d 569 (8th Cir. 1934); Hyney v. United States, supra.

Where it is charged that the accused caused delivery of a letter or other communication in violation of the third clause of the statute, it is necessary to allege that he/she did so knowingly. United States v. Richman, 369 F.2d 465 (7th Cir. 1966); Glenn v. United States, 303 F.2d 536 (5th Cir. 1962); Hyney v. United States, supra. This is not necessary where it is charged that the defendant placed something in the mails or took something therefrom in violation of the first or second clauses since the statute does not use the word "knowingly" in those connections. Benham v. United States, 13 F.2d 558 (6th Cir. 1926); United States v. Bunker, 290 F. 207 (N.D. Tex. 1923); United States v. Hoffa, 205 F. Supp. 710 (S.D. Fla. 1962). The element established by "knowingly", when a causing to be delivered is charged, can be satisfactorily described by the phrase "for the purpose of executing the aforesaid scheme and attempting to do so" so that a lack of the specific charge of "knowingly" is not necessary fatal. Stevens v. United States, 306 F.2d 834 (5th Cir. 1962); Glenn v. United States, supra. However, good draftsmanship dictates that "knowingly" be expressly charged in order to obviate an attack on the indictment.

TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-43.424 Sample Mailing Count

drafts-person → The following sample mailing charge can be tailored to fit the appropriate factual situation. In a multiple count indictment, the draftsman should not forget to incorporate by reference in subsequent counts the scheme and artifice charged in the first count. This might appropriately be accomplished as follows:

COUNT II

1. The grand jury alleges and incorporates by reference herein all paragraphs of Count I of this Indictment, excepting the last paragraph thereof (the mailing charge), as constituting a scheme and artifice to defraud.

2. On or about the _____ day of _____, 19____, in the District of _____, (name the defendants), the defendants herein, for the purpose of executing the aforesaid scheme and artifice, and attempting to do so, did

(a) place and cause to be placed in an authorized depository for mail matter, a letter addressed to _____ from _____, to be sent and delivered by the Postal Service, or

(b) take and receive, and cause to be taken and received, from the mails a letter addressed to _____ from _____, or

(c) knowingly cause to be delivered by mail, according to the direction thereon, a letter addressed to _____ from _____ in violation of 18 U.S.C. §1341. It is unnecessary to charge that the defendant "wilfully" caused to be placed in the mails, or "wilfully" caused to be taken and received from the mails. Parr v. United States, 265 F.2d 894, 901 (5th Cir. 1959); United States v. Suchman, 206 F. Supp. 688, 689 (D. Md. 1962). See also, United States v. Gerhart, 275 F. Supp. 443 (S.D. W. Va. 1967).

9-43.500 EVIDENCE

9-43.510 Scheme And Artifice To Defraud

9-43.511 Intent to Defraud

It is indispensable in proving the existence of a scheme to defraud (although not a specific intent to use the mails) on the part of defendants. Durland v. United States, 161 U.S. 306, 313 (1896); United States v. Porter, 441 F.2d 1204 (8th Cir. 1971); United States v. Seasholtz, 435 F.2d 4 (10th Cir. 1970); United States v. Rabinowitz, 327 F.2d 62 (6th Cir. 1964); Beck v. United States, 305 F.2d 595, 599 (10th Cir. 1962). Direct proof of willful intent is not necessary but can be inferred from the activities of the parties involved. Golubin v. United States, 393 F.2d 590 (10th Cir. 1968); United States v. Andreadis, 366 F.2d 423 (2nd Cir. 1966); United States v. Hopkins, 357 F.2d 14 (6th Cir. 1966); Gusow v. United States, 347 F.2d 755 (10th Cir. 1964); Babson v. United States, 333 F.2d 662 (9th Cir. 1964); Henderson v. United States, 202 F.2d 400 (6th Cir. 1953); United States v. Bertin, 254 F. Supp. 937 (D. Md. 1966).

9-43.512 Persons Defrauded

In the absence of an express allegation that the accused planned to defraud everyone who dealt with him/her it is not necessary to prove such an intent. Myers v. United States, 223 F. 919 (2d Cir. 1915). See also, Stephens v. United States, 41 F.2d 400 (9th Cir. 1930); Levinson v. United States, 5 F.2d 567 (6th Cir. 1925).

9-43.513 False Representations

Where false representations are charged, the government is not required to prove all representations alleged but only one or more or a sufficient number to show that the scheme was actually set up and that the defendant intentionally acted in some way to further its operation with knowledge that it included the making of falsifications. Schafer v. United States, 265 F.2d 750, 753 (8th Cir. 1959); Kaplan v. United States, 18 F.2d 939, 943 (2d Cir. 1927); Holmes v. United States, 134 F.2d 125, 133 (8th Cir. 1943); Havener v. United States, 49 F.2d 196 (10th Cir. 1931); Weiss v. United States, 122 F.2d 675, 681 (5th Cir. 1941); Anderson v. United States, 369 F.2d 11, 15 (8th Cir. 1966).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

salespersons → Where the scheme to defraud included making sales by means of certain false representations conveyed through salesmen, proof of the same representations being made at widely different places to different persons by numerous agents in the same period is evidence that the scheme existed and that the particular salesman was carrying it on. Reistroffer v. United States, 258 F.2d 379, 387 (8th Cir. 1958). Although such testimony is hearsay, and therefore inadmissible unless it falls within an exception to the hearsay rule, such statements are permitted if they have been expressly or impliedly authorized, or have been ratified by the person against whom they are offered. Beck v. United States, 305 F.2d 595, 600 (10th Cir. 1962) and cases cited therein; Pritchard v. United States, 386 F.2d 760 (8th Cir. 1967); Fabian v. United States, 358 F.2d 187, 191 (8th Cir. 1966).

9-43.514 Loss To Victims

The government is not required to prove that anyone was actually defrauded or actually sustained a loss. United States v. Gross, 416 F.2d 1205 (8th Cir. 1969); United States v. Bush, 552 F.2d 641 (7th Cir. 1975); United States v. George, 477 F.2d 508 (7th Cir. 1973); Shale v. United States, 388 F.2d 616 (5th Cir. 1968); United States v. Andreadis, 366 F.2d 423 (2nd Cir. 1966); New England Enterprises, Inc. v. United States, 400 F.2d 58, 72 (1st Cir. 1968). But evidence of the success of the scheme or loss on the part of the victim is admissible to show an intent to defraud. United States v. Meyer, 359 F.2d 837 (7th Cir. 1966); Farrell v. United States, 321 F.2d 409 (9th Cir. 1963).

9-43.515 Impression Testimony

Impression testimony, that is, testimony of victims as to how they had been misled by defendants, is admissible to show an intent to defraud. The leading case on impression testimony is Phillips v. United States, 356 F.2d 297, 307 (9th Cir. 1965). See also, Farrell v. United States, supra; United States v. Burton, 443 F.2d 912 (4th Cir. 1971); Lustiger v. United States, 386 F.2d 132 (9th Cir. 1967); Linden v. United States, 254 F.2d 560 (4th Cir. 1958); Silverman v. United States, 213 F.2d 405 (5th Cir. 1954).

9-43.520 Evidentiary Rules Of Conspiracy

Where a scheme and artifice to defraud is shared by two or more, it becomes a conspiracy to defraud; the rules of evidence are the same as where a conspiracy is charged, and the acts of each party in furthering the common scheme are the acts of all. Pinkerton v. United States, 328 U.S. 640, 647 (1945); Blue v. United States, 138 F.2d 351, 358 (6th Cir. 1943); Isaacs v. United States, 301 F.2d 706 (8th Cir. 1965); United States v. Joyce, 499 F.2d 9, 16 (7th Cir. 1974); United States v. Perkal, 530 F.2d 604 (4th Cir. 1976). Although joining a conspiracy subjects the later joiner to some of the consequences of earlier activity by others, an individual cannot be criminally liable for substantive offenses committed by coconspirators or coschemers before that individual joined the scheme or after he/she had withdrawn from it. United States v. Knippenberg, 502 F.2d 1056, 1059 (7th Cir. 1973); Gradsky v. United States, 376 F.2d 993, 997 (5th Cir. 1967). Accordingly, he/she is not criminally responsible for the substantive mailings by coschemers before he/she joined or after he/she withdrew from the fraudulent scheme. Glazerman v. United States, 421 F.2d 547, 551 (10th Cir. 1970).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

See discussion of conspiracy to violate the mail fraud statute in USAM 9-51.700, infra.

9-43.530 Similar Acts Or Conduct

Evidence of other act or conduct of a like or similar nature will not be admitted to prove a character of a person in order to show he/she acted in conformity therewith. However, such evidence is admitted for other purposes such as proof of motive, opportunity, intent, plan, scheme, knowledge, modus operandi, or absence of mistake or accident. United States v. Nunez, 483 F.2d 453 (9th Cir. 1973); United States v. Pitman, 475 F.2d 1335 (9th Cir. 1973). Evidence of other offenses not charged in the indictment is admissible to show intent. Goodman v. United States, 273 F.2d 853, 857 (8th Cir. 1960). Other similar transactions, before and after acts charged in the indictment, are admissible as proof of intent. United States v. Mancuso, 444 F.2d 619, 695 (5th Cir. 1971); McConkey v. United States, 444 F.2d 788 (8th Cir. 1971) (wire fraud); United States v. Prionas, 438 F.2d 1049 (8th Cir. 1971); New England Enterprises, Inc. v. United States, 400 F.2d 58, 70 (1st Cir. 1969); United States v. Rosenblum, 339 F.2d 473 (2nd Cir. 1964); Fabian v. United States, 358 F.2d 187, 193 (8th Cir. 1966).

9-43.540 Communication To Victims

Since success of the scheme is not essential to completion of the offense, it is not necessary to prove communication of the alleged false representations to the victims. United States v. Sylvanus, 192 F.2d 96, 106 (7th Cir. 1951); Kreuter v. United States, 218 F.2d 532 (5th Cir. 1955). Since it is the use of the mails in furtherance of the fraudulent scheme that is prohibited rather than fraud upon any recipient of material sent through the mails, the testimony of a victim is admissible to prove the scheme even though there has been no use of the mails in defrauding him/her. Frank v. United States, 202 F.2d 559, 563 (10th Cir. 1955); United States v. Schaefer, 299 F.2d 625, 629 (7th Cir. 1962); Atkinson v. United States, 344 F.2d 97, 99 (8th Cir. 1965); Henderson v. United States, 202 F.2d 400, 405 (6th Cir. 1953).

9-43.550 Complaint Letters

Complaint letters received by defendants are admissible as relevant to the issue of intent to defraud. The inference might readily be drawn that, since the defendant knew victims were being misled by solicitation literature and other representations, the continued operation of the business despite this knowledge showed the existence of a scheme defraud. United States v. Middlebrooks, 431 F.2d 299, 301 (5th Cir. 1970); United States v. Press, 336 F.2d 1003, 1011 (2nd Cir. 1964); United States v. Sheehan, 428 F.2d 67 (8th Cir. 1970).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-43.560 Parole Evidence Rule

The parole evidence rule regarding executed contracts does not make inadmissible the oral testimony of victims to show fraud in the transaction, Mesch v. United States, 407 F.2d 1286 (10th Cir. 1969); Shale v. United States, 388 F.2d 616 (5th Cir. 1968); Nickles v. United States, 381 F.2d 258 (10th Cir. 1967); Gibson v. United States, 268 F.2d 568 (D.C. Cir. 1959).

9-43.570 Acts Beyond The Statute Of Limitations

Proof of transactions and events occurring more than five years prior to the return of the indictment is admissible if part of the scheme. The gist of the offense is the use of the mails; if the prohibited use of the mails was within the period, the prosecution is timely. It is no defense that the scheme was found earlier, and proof running back is admissible to show the scheme and intent if it is connected up with the scheme existing when use of the mails occurred. United States v. Blosser, 440 F.2d 697, 699 (10th Cir. 1971); United States v. Brandom, 479 F.2d 830 (8th Cir. 1973). The fact that a scheme may extend back beyond the limitation period does not outlaw an offense committed in furtherance of the scheme within the period. United States v. Gross, 416 F.2d 1205, 1210 (8th Cir. 1969); United States v. Andreas, 458 F.2d 491 (8th Cir. 1972); United States v. Ashdown, 509 F.2d 793, 797 (5th Cir. 1975); United States v. Brandom, supra.

9-43.580 Good Faith

Good faith is a complete defense to a charge of mail fraud. Beck v. United States, 305 F.2d 595, 599 (10th Cir. 1962); United States v. Baren, 305 F.2d 527, 533 (2d Cir. 1962); Harris v. United States, 261 F.2d 792, 796 (9th Cir. 1958); Silverman v. United States, 213 F.2d 405, 407 (5th Cir. 1954); Rabinowitz v. United States, 327 F.2d 62 (6th Cir. 1964). Evidence of similar transactions carried out honestly tends to show good faith. United States v. Shavin, 287 F.2d 647 (7th Cir. 1961). Proof of an expectation of performance must, however, be more than evidence of a mere hope. Williams v. United States, 278 F.2d 535 (9th Cir. 1960). No amount of honest belief on the part of the defendant that the enterprise promoted by him/her will ultimately make profits for investors in such an enterprise will excuse false representations made to obtain money for the enterprise. Foshay v. United States, 68 F.2d 205, 210 (8th Cir. 1933); United States v. Painter, 314 F.2d 939, 943 (4th Cir. 1963).

9-43.590 Proof of Mailing

The fact of mailing is a necessary element of the offense of mail fraud. But such a mailing can be proved circumstantially. The use of the mails can be proved circumstantially by a witness who testifies that the specific item would have been mailed as a matter of routine or custom as part of an office's practice and procedure. United States v. Scott, 668 F.2d 384, 388 (8th Cir. 1981); United States v. Ledesma, 632 F.2d 670, 675 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 998 (1981); United States v. Brackenridge, 590 F.2d 810, 811 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 440 U.S. 985 (1979); United States v. Joyce, 499 F.2d 9, 15 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 1031 (1974); United States v. Flaxman, 495 F.2d 344, 349 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 1031 (1974).

9-43.600 [RESERVED]

9-43.700 CONSPIRACY TO VIOLATE THE MAIL FRAUD STATUTE

The federal conspiracy statute, 18 U.S.C. §371, makes it an offense to conspire to commit, inter alia any offense against the United States. In proving such a conspiracy, it must be shown that (a) an agreement to violate a federal statute existed, (b) the defendant was a party to the agreement, and (c) an overt act to effect the object of the conspiracy was performed. Ingram v. United States, 360 U.S. 672 (1959). An excellent discussion of conspiracy law is contained in the "Manual of Jury Instructions in Federal Criminal Cases", Part II, Chapter X, "Conspiracy Offense", adopted by the Seventh Circuit Judicial Conference Committee on Jury Instructions as reported in 36 F.R.D. 502 et seq. It is not the purpose here to develop conspiracy law; however, a few observations relating specifically to conspiracies to commit mail fraud should be noted.

9-43.710 The Agreement to Commit Mail Fraud

In order to sustain a conviction for conspiracy to violate the mail fraud statute, 18 U.S.C. §1341, it must be alleged and proved that the conspirators intended to commit the substantive offense prohibited. Since the use of the mails is the substantive violation under 18 U.S.C. §1341, the indictment must allege, and the proof show, that the conspirators intended to utilize the mails in furtherance of a fraudulent scheme. Pereira v. United States, 347 U.S. 1 (1954); Farmer v. United States, 223 F. 903, 907 (2d Cir. 1915); Blue v. United States, 138 F.2d 351, 360 (6th Cir. 1943). An averment of intent is accomplished by merely alleging that the defendants "conspired" to use the mails in furtherance of the unlawful scheme. See generally, Williams v. United States, 208 F.2d 447 (5th Cir. 1953). Direct proof of an explicit agreement is not necessary to show conspiracy, which is usually proved by circumstantial evidence. The acts of conspiracy, taken by themselves, are rarely of an unequivocally guilty character, and they can only properly be estimated when connected with all the surrounding circumstances. Blue v. United States, supra.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

When applying the conspiracy statute (18 U.S.C. §371) to mail fraud schemes involving two or more people, the question arises whether the government must prove a higher level of scienter on the part of the conspirator than it would have to prove if it simply charged the conspirator (as a co-schemer) with substantive mail fraud. With substantive mail fraud, the government is not required to prove actual intent to use the mails as long as it can prove that the defendant co-schemer could have reasonably foreseen a use of the mails in furtherance of the fraud. Pereira v. United States, supra; United States v. Johnston, 547 F.2d 282, 284 (5th Cir. 1977), cert. denied, 431 U.S. 942 (1978); United States v. Curtis, 537 F.2d 1091, 1095 (10th Cir.), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 962 (1976). But the circuits have apparently divided in recent years (without recognizing the division) on whether or not actual intent to use the mails is required when a conspiracy charge is added to substantive mail fraud. Pereira clearly holds that a conspiracy to commit mail fraud requires an "agreement to use the mails." Pereira v. United States, supra, at 12. Although the opinion does not say so, the facts in Pereira suggest that "an agreement to use the mails" is established when an actual use of the mails occurs which was reasonably foreseeable to the conspirators.

However, in 1976 the Eighth Circuit in United States v. Donahue, 539 F.2d 1131, 1135 (8th Cir. 1976), held that "where the charge is conspiracy to violate [the mail or wire fraud statutes], the government must also show that the scheme contemplated the use of the medium in question." Donahue relied principally on Blue v. United States, supra, an opinion ten years prior to Pereira in which the question was raised with earlier but nearly identical versions of the mail fraud and conspiracy statutes. Blue specifically held that with the charge of conspiracy to commit mail fraud, as opposed to substantive mail fraud, "the Government has to sustain a heavier burden of proof as to the intent of the conspirators—not only to defraud, but also to defraud by use of the mails." Id., at 360. See also, Fisher v. United States, 324 F.2d 775, 780 (8th Cir. 1963), cert. denied, 377 U.S. 999 (1964) and Guardalibini v. United States, 128 F.2d 984, 985 (5th Cir. 1942).

But in United States v. Reed, 721 F.2d 1059, 1060 (6th Cir. 1983), the Sixth Circuit overruled Blue on this very point and held that the level of scienter necessary to prove conspiracy to commit mail fraud is no different than that necessary to prove substantive mail fraud, namely, a "reasonably foreseeable" use of the mails. Accordingly, the Eighth Circuit's Donahue opinion has become less convincing.

In 1977 the Seventh Circuit addressed the issue at length and, without mentioning any of the cases cited above except for Pereira, held that in the case of conspiracy to commit mail fraud, it is not necessary for the government to prove that a defendant agreed to join the conspiracy with knowledge that the conspiracy contemplated the unlawful use of the mails or that the defendants conspired intending to use the mails. United States v. Craig, 573 F.2d 455, 485-86 (7th Cir. 1977), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 820 (1978). The Craig court relied in part on United States v. Mauro, 501 F.2d proof of the offense of mail fraud requires a showing of a scheme to defraud and a mailing which was caused by a schemer for purposes of executing the scheme. In a mail fraud prosecution, there is no need to prove the intent of the defendant to use the mails. United States v. Tenebaum, 327 F.2d 210 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 377 U.S. 905, 84 S.Ct. 1165, 12 L.Ed. 2d 177 (1964). It is sufficient to show that the mailings were in furtherance of the scheme, and were caused by the defendants. Hence, culpability for conspiracy to commit the offense of mail fraud requires only that one agree with others to commit the acts which constitute the substantive offense of mail fraud, i.e. one must agree to participate in a scheme to defraud in which the reasonably foreseeable use of the mails in furtherance of the scheme is caused by a co-schemer/co-conspirator.

45, 51 (2nd Cir. 1974), in support of the proposition "that the mental state required for a conspiracy conviction is not greater than that necessary to commit the underlying substantive offense." United States v. Craig, supra, at 485. Mauro in turn is based principally on United States v. Feola, 420 U.S. 671, 694-95 (1974). In Feola, the court upheld the convictions of the appellants for conspiring to assault a federal officer even though there was no proof that the appellants knew the "federal" status of the victim. As the Seventh Circuit explained in United States v. Craig, supra, at 486:

Conspiracy to commit a crime is a different offense from the crime which is the object of the conspiracy. Pereira v. United States, supra, at 11; Morris v. United States, 7 F.2d 785 (8th Cir. 1925). Accordingly, a conspiracy to violate the mail fraud statute can be accomplished without mailing a letter. Blue v. United States, supra, at 360; Van Riper v. United States, 13 F.2d 961, 967 (2d Cir. 1926).

Care must be taken to distinguish between the development of a single overall conspiracy encompassing a scheme to defraud and the development of several separate and variant conspiracies, since a variation in proof may be fatal. Kotteakos v. United States, 328 U.S. 750 (1946); Blumenthal v. United States, 322 U.S. 539 (1947); Isaacs v. United States, 301 F.2d 706 (8th Cir. 1962). United States v. Perez, 489 F.2d 51 (5th Cir. 1973).

The answer to the question whether there is a single conspiracy, therefore, depends on whether there is a single agreement. If there is but one conspiracy. A test whether the activities of the defendant constitute a single conspiracy is whether there is a common purpose underlying the separate acts, whether the same objective is being pursued in each instance, and whether there is concerted action to achieve this end. It follows hence that the fact that the conspirators undertook to commit several crimes does not necessitate the conclusion that there are several conspiracies. A conspiracy may be likened to a wheel, with the hub constituting the central figure, the spokes forming its various branches and ramifications, all being held together by the rim, which represents the agreement.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

United States v. Speed, 78 F. Supp. 366, 368-369 (D. D.C. 1948), cited with approval in Hayes v. United States 329 F.2d 209, 213 (8th Cir. 1964); Koolish v. United States, 340 F.2d 513, 524 (8th Cir. 1965); Friedman v. United States, 347 F.2d 697, 708 (8th Cir. 1965).

If an overall conspiracy is proved, it is immaterial whether or not there were minor conspiracies or schemes inside the overall conspiracy, and that some of the defendants participated in these inner or smaller schemes, but not in all of them. Koolish v. United States, supra, at 525, cited with approval in United States v. McKuin, 434 F.2d 391 (8th Cir. 1970). See also, United States v. Perez, 489 F.2d 51 (5th Cir. 1973).

9-43.720 Participation in the Conspiracy

"Participation in a criminal conspiracy need not be proved by direct evidence; a common purpose may be inferred from a 'development and a collocation of circumstances'." Glasser v. United States, 315 U.S. 60, 80 (1942). Once there is satisfactory proof of the existence of a conspiracy, slight evidence connecting a defendant with the conspiracy may be sufficient. The question of a particular defendant's connection with it may be merely a matter of "whether the stick fits so natural into position in the fagot as to convince that it is part of it." Phelps v. United States, 160 F.2d 858, 867 (8th Cir. 1947). It is not necessary that conspirators be aware of each other's existence, or their respective roles in carrying out the conspiracy. Isaacs v. United States, 301 F.2d 706, 725 (8th Cir. 1962); United States v. Gilboy, 160 F. Supp. 442 (M.D. Pa. 1958).

A conspiracy, especially one which contemplates a continuity of purpose and a continued performance of acts, is presumed to continue until there has been an affirmative showing that it has terminated; and its members continued to be conspirators until there has been affirmative showing that they have withdrawn. Hyde v. United States, 225 U.S. 347, 366-67 (1962); Pinkerton v. United States, 328 U.S. 640 (1946); Blue v. United States, 138 F.2d 351, 360 (5th Cir. 1943); Marino v. United States, 91 F.2d 691 (9th Cir. 1937); United States v. Etheridge, 424 F.2d 951, 964 (6th Cir. 1970); United States v. Goldberg, 401 F.2d 644, 648 (8th Cir. 1969); United States v. Serlin, 538 F.2d 737, 743 (7th Cir. 1976), and cases cited therein.

The indictment may name some conspirators who are not charged in the indictment as defendants, and may allege conspirators who are unknown to the grand jury. Romontio v. United States, 400 F.2d 618 (10th Cir. 1968); Herman v. United States, 289 F.2d 362 (5th Cir. 1961). Such an allegation, when proper, may prevent unnecessary dismissals of conspirators where their other named co-conspirators are acquitted. Romontio v. United States, supra, at 619; United States v. Sparrow, 470 F.2d 885 (10th Cir. 1972). But see, Worthington v. United States, 64 F.2d 936 (7th Cir. 1933) regarding the necessity that there is a person capable of being a conspirator.

9-43.730 Acts Committed in Furtherance of the Conspiracy

Once a conspiracy has been established, the acts and declarations of each conspirator are the acts and declarations of all, United States v. Garrison, 168 F. Supp. 622 (E.D. Wis. 1958), provided, of course, that the defendants against whom the acts are admitted were knowingly participants in the agreement. Phillips v. United States, 356 F.2d 297 (9th Cir. 1965). Although joining a conspiracy subjects the late joiner to some of the consequences of earlier activity by others in furtherance of the conspiracy, an individual cannot be held criminally liable for substantive offenses committed by members of the conspiracy before that individual had joined the conspiracy or after he/she had withdrawn from it. United States v. Knippenberg, 502 F.2d 1056, 1059 (7th Cir. 1973); Gradsky v. United States, 376 F.2d 993, 995 (5th Cir. 1967). Accordingly, he/she is not responsible for the substantive mailings by his/her coconspirators before he/she joined or after he/she withdrew from the conspiracy. Glazerman v. United States, 421 F.2d 547, 551 (10th Cir. 1970).

As stated in Yates v. United States, 364 U.S. 298, at 334: "It is not necessary that an overt act be the substantive crime charged in the indictment as the object of the conspiracy. Pierce v. United States, 252 U.S. 239, 224; United States v. Rabinowich, 238 U.S. 78, 86. Nor, indeed, need such an act, taken by itself, even be criminal in character. Braverman v. United States, 317 U.S. 49. The function of an overt act in a conspiracy prosecution is simply to manifest 'that the conspiracy is at work', Carlson v. United States, 187 F.2d 366, 370, and is neither a project still resting solely in the minds of the conspirators nor a fully completed operation no longer in existence.

See also, Holmes v. United States, 134 F.2d 125, 134 (8th Cir. 1943). All conspirators need not join in the commission of an overt act, for, if one of the conspirators commits an overt act in furtherance of the conspiracy, it becomes the act of all. Marino v. United States, 91 F.2d 691, 695 (9th Cir. 1937). United States v. Brown, 335 F.2d 170, 172 (2nd Cir. 1964). The government is not limited to overt acts pleaded in proving the conspiracy. It may show other acts of the conspirators occurring during the life of the conspiracy. United States v. Perez, 489 F.2d 51, 70 (5th Cir. 1973). Substantive offenses can be charged as overt acts. Pinkerton v. United States, 328 U.S. 640, 644 (1946).

Acts of concealment in furtherance of the objects of the conspiracy can be charged as overt acts. United States v. Littman, 421 F.2d 981 (2nd Cir. 1970); Walters v. United States, 256 F.2d 840 (9th Cir. 1958). But acts subsequent to attaining the conspiratorial objects, which do not further the objective, cannot support a conviction. See, Grunewald v. United States, 352 U.S. 391 (1957); Krulewitch v. United States, 336 U.S. 440 (1949); Lutwak v. United States, 344 U.S. 604 (1953).

TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-43.740 Drafting a Conspiracy Count

The indictment must allege and the proof show that the conspirators agreed with each other to utilize the mails in furtherance of a fraudulent scheme. Accordingly, the indictment should charge that the defendants conspired to use the mails in furtherance of a scheme to defraud, rather than that they conspired to devise a scheme and artifice to defraud. The latter pleading is fatally defective. See United States v. Strauss, 283 F.2d 155 (5th Cir. 1960). But as indicated in USAM 9-43.710, supra, there appears to be a division of authority on whether or not a conspiracy to commit mail fraud requires proof of an actual intent to use the mails as opposed to requiring only a reasonably foreseeable use of the mails.

Set forth below is a suggested form for use in charging a conspiracy to violate the mail fraud statute, in which the scheme and artifice set forth in a substantive count is incorporated by reference into the conspiracy count.

Commencing on or about (date) and continuing to (date) or return of this indictment), in the _____ District of _____ and within the jurisdiction on this court (name defendants in capital letters), the defendants herein, did wilfully and knowingly conspire, combine, confederate and agree together and with each other, and with other persons to the Grand Jury unknown, to commit offenses against the United States, that is to say, to use the mails and cause the use of the mails in furtherance and execution of a scheme and artifice to defraud is set for obtaining money and property by means of false and fraudulent pretenses, representations and promises, which said scheme and artifice to defraud is set forth more fully in paragraphs (all paragraphs except the charging mailing paragraph) of Counts 1 of this indictment, all of which are incorporated by reference herein as if fully set forth herein, the object of said conspiracy being violations of Title 18, United States Code, Section 1341.

In furtherance of the conspiracy, and to effect the objects thereof, the defendants did commit, among others, the following overt acts in the _____ District of _____ and elsewhere:

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-44.000 FRAUD BY WIRE, RADIO OR TELEVISION, 18 U.S.C. §1343

The Fraud by wire statute, 18 U.S.C. §1343, provides:

Whoever, having devised or intending to devise any scheme or artifice to defraud, or for obtaining money or property by means of false or fraudulent pretenses, representations or promises, transmits or causes to be transmitted by means of wire, radio, or television communication in interstate or foreign commerce, any writings, signs, signals, pictures, or sounds for the purpose of executing such scheme or artifice, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

(As amended July 11, 1956.)

9-44.100 INVESTIGATION OF COMPLAINTS

Primary investigative jurisdiction into possible violations of the fraud by wire statute is vested in the Federal Bureau of Investigation. In some instances, where securities are involved, complaints may be investigated by the Securities and Exchange Commission. In other instances investigations conducted by the Postal Inspection Service of the United States Postal Service may disclose possible violations of the fraud by wire statute. In both instances, the investigations are usually continued by the agency initiating the investigation. Reports of investigation are disseminated directly to the appropriate United States Attorney.

9-44.200 ELEMENTS OF THE OFFENSE

The essential elements of the offense are (1) the devising of a scheme and artifice to defraud, and (2) a transmittal in interstate or foreign commerce by means of wire, radio or television communication of writings, signs, signals, pictures or sounds for the purpose of executing the scheme and artifice to defraud. Huff v. United States, 301 F.2d 760, 765 (5th Cir. 1962); Lindsey v. United States, 332 F.2d 688, 690 (9th Cir. 1964); United States v. O'Malley, 535 F.2d 589, 592 (10th Cir. 1976) and cases cited therein; United States v. Freeman, 524 F.2d 337, 339 (7th Cir. 1974); United States v. Patterson, 534 F.2d 1113 (5th Cir. 1976); United States v. Wise, 553 F.2d 1173 (8th Cir. 1977).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-44.210 The Scheme and Artifice to Defraud

Since the fraud by wire statute was patterned after the mail fraud statutes, United States v. Mercer, 133 F. Supp. 288 (N.D. Calif. 1955), mail fraud principles (see generally USAM 9-43.210, infra.), have been applied to fraud by wire prosecutions. As in mail fraud law, it is not necessary that the victim of the scheme be actually deceived or suffer a loss. Lindsey v. United States, supra; Huff v. United States, supra; United States v. Jackson, 451 F.2d 281, 283 (5th Cir. 1971); United States v. O'Malley, supra; Pollack v. United States, 534 F.2d 964, 971 (D.C. Cir. 1976); United States v. Patterson, supra. Reckless disregard for the truthfulness of the representations made is actionable. United States v. Marley, 549 F.2d 561 (8th Cir. 1977).

9-44.220 Use of a Wire Communication in Interstate or Foreign Commerce

Since the statute requires a transmission in interstate or foreign commerce, an intrastate transmission does not constitute an offense. Borfuff v. United States, 310 F.2d 918 (5th Cir. 1962). It has long been clear that the mail fraud statute reaches schemes in which the defendant did not personally place any matter in the mails; it is sufficient to show that he or she "caused" the mailings. See USAM 9-43.220, infra. The scope of the fraud by wire statute is equally broad. United States v. Calvert, 523 F.2d 895 (8th Cir. 1975). While it is necessary to show that a defendant caused the use of a wire, it is not necessary to establish that the defendant directly participated in the use of the wire. United States v. Wise, 553 F.2d 1173 (8th Cir. 1977). It is sufficient if some communication was the foreseeable result of the act. United States v. Jones, 554 F.2d 251 (5th Cir. 1977); United States v. Snyder, 505 F.2d 595, 601 (5th Cir. 1974), citing United States v. Boulihan, supra, wherein the Circuit Court concluded there is no requirement that the accused know that instrumentalities of interstate communications are used or foresee that such instrumentalities may be used.

Each use of the interstate instrumentality constitutes a separate offense. Sibley v. United States, 344 F.2d 103 (5th Cir. 1965); Henderson v. United States, 425 F.2d 138 (5th Cir. 1970); United States v. Calvert, supra at 903. The gist of the offense is not the scheme to defraud, but the use of the interstate wire communication. United States v. Garland, 337 F. Supp. 1, 3 (N.D. Ill. 1971).

As in mail fraud law, see USAM 9-43.221, infra., it is not necessary that the victim be the originator of the wire communication, United States v. Hancock, 268 F.2d 205 (2d Cir. 1959) or the recipient of the wire communication. United States v. Freeman, supra, and cases cited therein; United States v. Auler, 539 F.2d 642 (7th Cir. 1976); or even a participant in the communication. United States v. Goldstein, 532 F.2d 1035, 1316 (9th Cir. 1976); United States v. Wise, supra, at 1174.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-44.221 In Execution of the Scheme and Artifice

As provided by the statute, the interstate or foreign wire transmission must be for the purpose of executing the scheme and artifice to defraud. United States v. Pollack, supra; United States v. Calvert, supra; United States v. Holmes, 390 F. Supp. 1077 (W.D. Missouri 1975). The decision in United States v. Maze, 414 U.S. 395 (1974) has no adverse impact on fraud by wire prosecutions where the scheme has not reached fruition. United States v. Pollack, supra, at 971; United States v. Calvert, supra, at page 904. See also generally, USAM 9-43.221, infra discussing the use of the mails in execution of a fraudulent scheme. A wire use after the scheme has come to an end is not within the statute. Battaglia v. United States, 349 F.2d 556, 561 (9th Cir. 1965); United States v. West, 549 F.2d 545, 556 (8th Cir. 1977).

9-44.222 Lulling Telegrams and Telephone Calls

Telegrams sent for the purpose of conveying assurances to the victim of the fraud and to prevent action on his or her part which might interfere with the carrying out of the scheme are actionable under the fraud by wire statute. Wiltsey v. United States, 222 F.2d 600 (4th Cir. 1955). See also USAM 9-43.222, infra (lulling letters).

9-44.230 Representative Schemes

9-44.231 Generally

The representative schemes set forth in USAM 9-43.230 et seq., supra, (mail fraud) are equally amenable to fraud by wire prosecution, provided interstate or foreign wire communication or transmission is used to execute the scheme.

9-44.232 Fraud on the Media (Telephone Company)

The fraudulent use of telephone credit cards to obtain service without charge is actionable under 18 U.S.C. §1343. United States v. Fincke, 437

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

F.2d 856 (2d Cir. 1971); United States v. Jones, 554 F.2d 251 (5th Cir. 1977). See also, United States v. Beckley, 259 F. Supp. 567 (N.D. Ga. 1965); Scott v. United States, 448 F.2d 581 (5th Cir. 1971).

Schemes to defraud the telephone company of its revenues through so-called "blue boxes" and "black boxes" are also actionable. United States v. Hanna, 260 F. Supp. 430 (S.D. Fla. 1966), aff'd 404 F.2d 405 (5th Cir. 1968); Brandon v. United States, 382 F.2d 607 (10th Cir. 1967); United States v. Jaworski, 343 F. Supp. 406 (D. Minn. 1972); United States v. Scaramuzzo, 505 F.2d 102 (9th Cir. 1974); United States v. De Leeuw, 368 F. Supp. 426 (E.D. Wisc. 1974); United States v. Shah, 371 F. Supp. 1170 (W.D. Pa. 1974); United States v. Ewert, 372 F. Supp. 734 (E.D. Wisc. 1974); United States v. Freeman, supra; United States v. Klegg, 509 F.2d 605 (5th Cir. 1975); United States v. Douglas, 510 F.2d 266 (9th Cir. 1975); United States v. Sorota, 515 F.2d 573 (5th Cir. 1975); United States v. Glanzer, 521 F.2d 11 (9th Cir. 1975); United States v. Patterson, 528 F.2d 1037 (5th Cir. 1976); United States v. Goldstein, supra; United States v. Patterson, 534 F.2d 1113 (5th Cir. 1976); United States v. Auler, supra; United States v. Harvey, 540 F.2d 1345 (8th Cir. 1976); United States v. Manning, 542 F.2d 685 (6th Cir. 1976).

9-44.300 VENUE IN FRAUD BY WIRE PROSECUTION

Unlike the mail fraud statute, see discussion of venue in mail fraud prosecutions, USAM 9-43.300, supra, the fraud by wire statute makes no reference to the venue of the offense. Accordingly, the provisions of 18 U.S.C. §3237(a) apply, and prosecutions may be instituted in any district in which an interstate or foreign telephone call, telegram, radio or television, writing, sign, signal, picture or sound was issued or terminated. United States v. Fassoulis, 185 F. Supp. 138 (S.D. N.Y. 1960); Boruff v. United States, 310 F.2d 918 (5th Cir. 1962), and United States v. Spiro, 385 F.2d 210 (7th Cir. 1967). Since the statute specifically requires an interstate transmission, an intrastate transmission does not constitute an offense. Boruff v. United States, supra.

9-44.400 DRAFTING A FRAUD BY WIRE INDICTMENT

9-44.410 Scheme and Artifice to Defraud

An indictment under 18 U.S.C. §1343 must sufficiently charge the two necessary elements of an offense within the statute; (a) that the accused devised and intended to devise a scheme and artifice to defraud and (b) transmitted by means of wire, radio or television communication in interstate or foreign commerce, any writings, signs, signals, pictures or sounds for the purpose of executing such scheme. It is insufficient to charge the violation in the language of the statute. United States v. Mercer, supra. As in mail fraud, the indictment must contain a reasonably detailed description of the particular scheme the defendant is charged with devising. United States v. Garland, 337 F. Supp. 1, 3 (N.D. Ill. 1971); United States v. Bagdasian, 291 F.2d 163 (4th Cir. 1961). Where specific representations are charged, it is not necessary to aver the manner or respect in which these misrepresentations were false. United States v. Bagdasian, supra. The comments relating to charging a scheme to defraud in a mail fraud indictment, as set forth in USAM 9-43.410, supra, apply also to fraud by wire indictments. It is not necessary to allege that the scheme contemplated the use of the wires in its execution; United States v. Snyder, supra, or that anyone suffered a loss, Huff v. United States, supra.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-44.420 Charging an Interstate or Foreign Transmission

Set forth below is a suggested form for charging an interstate telephone conversation under 18 U.S.C. §1343:

On or about (date) in (your district) John Doe, the defendant herein, did transmit and cause to be transmitted by means of wire communication in interstate commerce certain signs, signals and sounds, to wit, a telephone conversation between (name) in (your district) and (name) in (district in another state) for the purpose of executing the said scheme and artifice to defraud. ← John/Jane Doe

For cases in which the charging paragraph is set out, see, United States v. Jackson, 451 F.2d 281 (5th Cir. 1971) (telephone); United States v. Fassoulis, 185 F. Supp. 138 (S.D. N.Y. 1960) (telephone); Huff v. United States, supra (telephone); Wentz v. United States, 244 F.2d 172 (9th Cir. 1957) (telegram); United States v. Garland, supra (telephone). It is not necessary to set out in the indictment in haec verba the telephone conversation itself. United States v. Garland, supra.

9-44.500 EVIDENCE

See generally, USAM 9-43.500, supra (mail fraud).

9-44.510 Evidentiary Rules of Conspiracy

Under 18 U.S.C. §1343, where a scheme and artifice to defraud is shared by two or more, it becomes a conspiracy to defraud. The rules of evidence are the same as where a conspiracy is charged, and the acts of all. Kumpe v. United States, 250 F.2d 125 (5th Cir. 1957); United States v. Conte, 349 F.2d 304 (6th Cir. 1965).

9-44.520 Wire Transmission in Interstate Commerce

9-44.521 Fact of Actual Transmission

An inter state communication must be proved. Boruff v. United States, 310 F.2d 918 (5th Cir. 1962); United States v. Marino, 421 F.2d 640 (2d Cir. 1969). Generally, the communication is proved by introduction of records of the Western Union, in the case of telegrams, United States v. Sparrow, 470 F.2d 885 (10th Cir. 1972), or by telephone company records. See, United States v. Jones, 554 F.2d 251 (5th Cir. 1977) United States v. Green, 295 F.2d 280 (6th Cir. 1961). Parties to the telephone conversation may also provide evidence of the fact of communication, particularly where they placed the long distance calls.

9-44.522 Authentication

The burden of proof is on the government to prove the content of the telephone conversations charged as offenses under the statute. Osborne v. United States, 371 F.2d 913 (9th Cir. 1967). It is well settled that telephone calls may be authenticated by circumstantial evidence as well as by direct recognition of the person calling. United States v. Alper, 449 F.2d 1223, 1229 (4th Cir. 1971), citing, United States v. Frank, 290 F.2d 195 (3d Cir. 1961). Recognition of the voice is not necessary to identification of the person with whom the conversation is alleged to have been had. Like any other ordinary fact, it may be established by direct evidence or circumstances. Andrews v. United States, 78 F.2d 274 (10th Cir. 1935). See also the following cases discussing the circumstantial evidence which established the identity of the voice in question. United States v. Zweig, 467 F.2d 1217 (7th Cir. 1972); Cwach v. United States, 212 F.2d 520, 524-525 (8th Cir. 1954); United States v. Platt, 435 F.2d 220, 223 (7th Cir. 1970); Spindler v. United States, 336 F.2d 678, 681 (9th Cir. 1964); United States v. 1924); McCormick, Evidence §218 et seq., particularly §326, p. 553. The ultimate question of authenticity is for the jury to decide. United States v. Zweiz, supra, at 1220. In Carbo v. United States, 314 F.2d 718, 743 (9th Cir. 1963), the Ninth Circuit stated the standard which a trial judge should apply in determining whether a telephone conversation has been adequately authenticated.

The issue of authenticity, the identity of the author of a particular piece of evidence such as a document or phone call, is for the jury once a prima facie case of authorship is made out by the proponent of the evidence. The connection between a telephone call and the caller may be established circumstantially. The issue for the trial judge in determining whether the required foundation for the introduction of the evidence has been established is whether the proof is such that the jury, acting as reasonable men, could find its authorship as claimed by the proponent.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-46.000 PROGRAM FRAUD AND BRIBERY

9-46.100 18 U.S.C. §666

9-46.110 Investigative Jurisdiction

The FBI has primary jurisdiction over investigations of bribery of officials involved in administering federal funds and over investigations of theft or misapplication by agents of organizations receiving more than $10,000 annually in federal funds, all as set out in 18 U.S.C. §666. However, each Department or Agency with an Inspector General has concurrent jurisdiction over violations affecting the relevant programs.

9-46.120 Discussion of Offense

Part C of Chapter XI adds a new section 666 to Title 18 dealing with embezzlement and bribery by agents of state and local governments or private organizations that receive federal funds. Three types of offenses are denoted in section 666. Subsection (a) prohibits the embezzlement, stealing, purloining, misapplication, obtaining by fraud or otherwise unauthorized conversion to one's own use or that of another, of property having a value of $5,000 or more by an agent, typically an employee, of an organization or of a state or local government agency that receives $10,000 or more annually in federal funds. Subsection (b), which also applies only to agents of state or local government agencies or of organizations receiving $10,000 or more annually in federal funds, prohibits them from soliciting or accepting a bribe because of their conduct in a transaction or matter of their agency or organization involving $5,000 or more. Subsection (c) applies to anyone, and proscribes the offering of a bribe for such a purpose to an agent of an organization or of a state or local government agency receiving $10,000 or more annually in federal funds. The maximum penalty is imprisonment for ten years and a fine of the greater of $100,000 or twice the amount obtained, solicited, or given in violation of the section.

The new section is designed to facilitate the prosecution of persons who steal money or otherwise divert property or services from state and local governments or private organizations--for example, universities, foundations and business corporations--that receive large amounts of federal funds. Under prior law, with minor exceptions, thefts from such governments or organizations could be prosecuted only under the general theft statute, 18 U.S.C. §641. Use of this statute was often precluded because title to the property stolen had passed from the federal government before it was stolen or the funds were so commingled that their federal character could not be shown. With respect to bribery, there was a question whether 18 U.S.C. §201, which punished corrupt payments to federal public officials, covers payments to a person employed by a private or state organization receiving federal funds. Cases such as United States v. Del Toro, 513 F.2d 656 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 826 (1975), and United States v. Loschiavo, 531 F.2d 659 (2d Cir. 1976), reversed convictions under 18 U.S.C. §201 where the bribee, technically an employee of the City of New York, was the assistant administrator of a Model Cities program which was funded 100% by the United States Department of Housing and Urban Development, which also paid 80% of the program employees' salaries. The Second Circuit held that notwithstanding such heavy federal involvement in the Model Cities program, the bribee was not a "public official" for purposes of 18 U.S.C. §201. But in Dixon v. United States, ___ U.S. ___, 104 S. Ct. 1172 (1984), the Supreme Court affirmed 18 U.S.C. §201 bribery convictions of two executives of a private nonprofit corporation, unaffiliated with the federal government, which had contracted with a city to administer federal block grant funds. The Supreme Court's rather ill-defined new "public official" test for 18 U.S.C. §201 is whether the person occupies a position of public trust with official federal responsibilities. Thus, Dixon provides under 18 U.S.C. §201 a prosecutive tool which might reach conduct left uncovered by 18 U.S.C. §666, but fully warranting federal prosecution.

The legislative history of the new 18 U.S.C. §666 demonstrates that this section should be construed broadly, consistent with its purpose of protecting the vast sums of money distributed through federal programs from theft, fraud and undue influence by bribery. This same legislative history, however, further demonstrates that the concept of "Federal program" is not unlimited, and that "there must exist a specific statutory scheme authorizing the federal assistance in order to promote or achieve certain policy objectives. Thus, not every federal contract or disbursement of funds would be covered. For example, if a government agency lawfully purchases more than $10,000 in equipment from a supplier, it is not the intent of this section to make a theft of $5,000 or more from the supplier a Federal crime." S. Rep. No. 98-225, 98th Cong., 1st Sess. 370 (1983).

9-46.130 Policy Considerations

Local prosecutors will often have a strong incentive as well as the ability to prosecute crimes involving local programs receiving federal funding. Consequently, the advisability of a federal prosecution under 18 U.S.C. §666 should be carefully weighed against the likelihood that state prosecution will be sufficient to protect federal interests. Until further notice, consultation with the Public Integrity Section of the Criminal Division is required prior to using the bribery provisions (subsection (b) or (c) of Section 666. Likewise, potential prosecutions involving the Dixson theory should be discussed with the Public Integrity Section before prosecution is undertaken.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-46.140 Criminal Division Contact

Questions regarding cases that involve federal, state or local officials should be referred to the Deputy Chief, Public Integrity Section (724-8983). Questions regarding any other cases, and general questions concerning the fraud and theft provisions of 18 U.S.C. §666, should be directed to the Deputy Chiefs, Fraud Section at FTS 724-7340 or 724-7288.

9-47.000 FOREIGN CORRUPT PRACTICES ACT OF 1977: 15 USC §78m(b) (2)-(3); 15 USC §78dd-1; 15 USC §78dd-2.

9-47.010 Corporate Recordkeeping

The Foreign Corrupt Practices Act of 1977 (P.L. 95-213; 91 Stat. 1494) was signed into law by the President on December 19, 1977. Section 102 of the Act amends Section 13(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 to require the maintenance of accurate records by corporations which are subject to the jurisdiction of the Securities and Exchange Commission. Section 102 (15 USC §78m(b) (2)-(3)) provides:

(2) Every issuer which has a class of securities registered pursuant to section 12 of this title and every issuer which is required to file reports pursuant to section 14(d) of this title shall--

(A) make and keep books, records, and accounts, which, in reasonable detail, accurately and fairly reflect the transactions and dispositions of the assets of the issuer; and

(B) devise and maintain a system of internal accounting controls sufficient to provide reasonable assurances that--

(i) transactions are executed in accordance with management's general or specific authorization;

(ii) transactions are recorded as necessary (I) to permit preparation of financial statements in conformity with generally accepted accounting principles or any other criteria applicable to such statements, and (II) to maintain accountability for assets;

(iii) access to assets is permitted only in accordance with management's general or specific authorization; and

(iv) the recorded accountability for assets is compared with the existing assets at reasonable intervals and appropriate action is taken with respect to any differences.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

(3) (A) With respect to matters concerning the national security of the United States, no duty or liability under paragraph (2) of this subsection shall be imposed upon any person acting in cooperation with the head of any Federal department or agency responsible for such matters if such act in cooperation with such head of a department or agency was done upon the specific, written directive of the head of such department or agency pursuant to Presidential authority to issue such directives. Each directive issued under this paragraph shall set forth the specific facts and circumstances with respect to which the provisions of this paragraph are to be invoked. Each such directive shall, unless renewed in writing, expire one year after the date of issuance.

(B) Each head of a Federal department or agency of the United States who issues a directive pursuant to this paragraph shall maintain a complete file of all such directives and shall, on October 1 of each year, transmit a summary of matters covered by such directives in force at any time during the previous year to the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence of the House of Representatives and the Select Committee on Intelligence of the Senate.

A willful violation of the provisions of Section 102 of the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act is a criminal act punishable, pursuant to the provisions of Section 32 (a) of the Securities Act of 1934, 15 USC §78ff(a) by a fine of not more than $10,000, or imprisonment of not more than five years.

It should be emphasized that the willful falsification of an issuer's books, records, or accounts in violation of Section 102 of the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act is a criminal offense whether or not such falsification is related to a foreign corrupt practice proscribed by Sections 103 and 104 of the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act (see USAM 9-47.020 and 9-47.030, infra). Such a falsification of the corporate records for any domestic purpose, unrelated to foreign bribery, may be the basis for a criminal charge.

9-47.020 Foreign Corrupt Practices By Issuers

Section 103 of the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act amends the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 to proscribe and establish criminal penalties for certain foreign corrupt practices by corporations subject to the jurisdiction of the Securities and Exchange Commission and by the officers, directors, employees agents and stockholders of such corporations. Section 103 of the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act provides in pertinent part:

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

It shall be unlawful for any issuer which has a class of securities registered pursuant to section 12 of this title or which is required to file reports under section 15(d) of this title, or for any officer, director, employee, or agent of such issuer or any stockholder thereof acting on behalf of such issuer, to make use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce corruptly in furtherance of an offer, payment, promise to pay, or authorization of the payment of any money, or offer, gift, promise to give, or authorization of the giving of anything of value to--

(1) any foreign official for purposes of--

(A) influencing any act or decision of such foreign official in his official capacity, including a decision to fail to perform his official functions; or in order to assist such issuer in obtaining or retaining business for or with, or directing business to, any person;

(B) inducing such foreign official to use his influence with a foreign government or instrumentality thereof to affect or influence any act or decision of such government or instrumentality,

(2) any foreign political party or official thereof or any candidate for foreign political office for purposes of--

(A) influencing any act or decision of such party, official, or candidate in its or his official capacity, including a decision to fail to perform its or his official functions; or

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

(B) inducing such party, official, or candidate to use its or his influence with a foreign government or instrumentality thereof to affect or influence any act or decision of such government or instrumentality,

in order to assist such issuer in obtaining or retaining business for or with, or directing business to, any person; or

(3) any person, while knowing or having reason to know that all or a portion of such money or thing of value will be offered, given, or promised, directly or indirectly, to any foreign official, to any foreign political party or official thereof, or to any candidate for foreign political office, for purposes of--

(A) influencing any act or decision of such foreign official, political party, party official, or candidate in his or its official capacity, including a decision to fail to perform his or its official functions;

(B) inducing such foreign official, political party, party official, or candidate to use his or its influence with a foreign government or instrumentality thereof to affect or influence any act or decision of such government or instrumentality, in order to assist such issuer in obtaining or retaining business for or with, or directing business to, any person.

(b) As used in this section, the term 'foreign official' means any officer or employee of a foreign government or any department, agency, or instrumentality thereof, or any person acting in an official capacity for or on behalf of such government or department, agency, or instrumentality. Such term does not include any employee of a foreign government or any department, agency, or instrumentality thereof whose duties are essentially ministerial or clerical.

15 U.S.C. §78dd-1

15 U.S.C. §78ff(c) provides:

(1) Any issuer which violates (this) section ...shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $1,000,000.

(2) Any officer or indirector of an issuer, or any stockholder acting on behalf of such issuer, who willfully violates (this) section... shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

(3) Whenever an issuer is found to have violated (this) section,... any employee or agent of such issuer who is a United States citizen, national, or resident or is otherwise subject to the jurisdiction of the United States (other than an officer, director, or stockholder of such issuer), and who willfully carried out the act or practice constituting such violation shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

(4) Whenever a fine is imposed under paragraph (2) or (3) of this subsection upon any officer, director, stockholder, employee, or agent of an issuer, such fine shall not be paid, directly or indirectly, by such an issuer.

15 U.S.C. §78ff(c)

9-47.030 Foreign Corrupt Practices By Domestic Concerns

Section 104 of the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act creates a new criminal offense, proscribing the same type of foreign corrupt practices when committed by United States citizens or certain commercial entities which are not subject to the jurisdiction of the Securities and Exchange Commission. Section 104 of the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act provides:

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

(a) It shall be unlawful for any domestic concern, other than issuer which is subject to section 30A of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, or any officer, director, employee, or agent of such domestic concern or any stockholder thereof acting on behalf of such domestic concern, to make use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce corruptly in furtherance of an offer, payment, promise to pay, or authorization of the payment of any money, or offer, gift, promise to give, or authorization of the giving of anything of value to—

(1) any foreign official for purposes of—

(A) influencing any act or decision of such foreign official in his official capacity, including a decision to fail to perform his official functions; or in order to assist such domestic concern in obtaining or retaining business for or with, or directing business to, any person;

(B) inducing such foreign official to use his influence with a foreign government or instrumentality thereof to affect or influence any act or decision of such government or instrumentality,

(2) any foreign political party or official thereof or any candidate for foreign political office for purposes of—

(A) influencing any act or decision of such party, official, or candidate in its or his official capacity, including a decision to fail to perform its or his official functions; or

(B) inducing such party, official, or candidate to use its or his influence with a foreign government or instrumentality thereof to affect or influence any act or decision of such government or instrumentality,

in order to assist such domestic concern in obtaining or retaining business for or with, or directing business to, any person; or

(3) any person, while knowing or having reason to know that all or a portion of such money or thing of value will be offered, given, or promised, directly or indirectly, to any foreign official, to any foreign political party or official thereof, or to any candidate for foreign political office, for purposes of—

(A) influencing any act or decision of such foreign official, political party, party official, or candidate in his or its official capacity, including a decision to fail to perform his or its official functions; or

(B) inducing such foreign official, political party, party official, or candidate to use his or its influence with a foreign government or instrumentality thereof, to affect or influence any act or decision of such government or instrumentality,

in order to assist such domestic concern in obtaining or retaining business for or with, or directing business to, any person.

(b)(1)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), any domestic concern which violates subsection (a) shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $1,000,000.

(B) Any individual who is a domestic concern and who willfully violates subsection (a) shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

(2) Any officer or director of a domestic concern, or stockholder acting on behalf of such domestic concern, who willfully violates subsection (a) shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

(3) Whenever a domestic concern is found to have violated subsection (a) of this section, any employee or agent of such domestic concern who is a United States citizen, national, or resident or is otherwise subject to the jurisdiction of the United States (other than an officer, director, or stockholder acting on behalf of such domestic concern), and who willfully carried out the act or practice constituting such violation shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

(4) Whenever a fine is imposed under paragraph (2) or (3) of this subsection upon any officer, director, stockholder, employee, or agent of a domestic concern, such fine shall not be paid, directly or indirectly, by such domestic concern.

(c) Whenever it appears to the Attorney General that any domestic concern, or officer, director, employee, agent, or stockholder thereof, is engaged, or is about to engage, in any act or practice constituting a violation of subsection (a) of this section, the Attorney General may, in his discretion, bring a civil action in an appropriate district court of the United States to enjoin such act or practice, and upon a proper showing a permanent or temporary injunction or a temporary restraining order shall be granted without bond.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

(d) As used in this section:

(1) The term 'domestic concern' means (A) any individual who is a citizen, national, or resident of the United States; or (B) any corporation, partnership, association, joint-stock company, business trust, unincorporated organization, or sole proprietorship which has its principal place of business in the United States, or which is organized under the laws of a State of the United States or a territory, possession, or commonwealth of the United States.

(2) The term 'foreign official' means any officer or employee of a foreign government or any department, agency, or instrumentality thereof, or any person acting in an official capacity for or on behalf of any such government or department, agency, or instrumentality. Such term does not include any employee of a foreign government or any department, agency, or instrumentality thereof whose duties are essentially ministerial or clerical.

(3) The term 'interstate commerce' means trade, commerce, transportation, or communication among the several States, or between any foreign country and any State or between any State and any place or ship outside thereof. Such term includes the intrastate use of (A) a telephone or other interstate means of communication, or (B) any other interstate instrumentality.

9-47.100 PROCEDURES

9-47.110 Investigation of Complaints

Allegations of violation of the provisions of Sections 102 (Recordkeeping) and 103 (Issuers) of the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act will usually be investigated by the Securities and Exchange Commission. Investigations of alleged violation of Section 104 (Domestic Concerns) will be conducted by the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

9-47.120 Policy Concerning Criminal Prosecutions

The investigation and prosecution of particular allegations of violation of this new Act will raise complex enforcement problems abroad as well as difficult issues of jurisdiction and statutory construction. For example, part of the investigation may involve interviewing witnesses in foreign countries concerning their activities with high-level foreign government officials. Additionally, relevant accounts maintained in United States banks and subject to subpoena may be directly or beneficially owned by senior foreign government officials. Close coordination of such investigations and prosecutions with the Department of State, the Securities and Exchange Commission and other interested agencies is essential. Moreover, pursuant to a Presidential directive, the Criminal Division has established a Foreign Corrupt Practices Act Review Procedure modeled after the Antitrust Division's Business Review Procedure. As part of this procedure, which is administered by the Fraud Section, the Assistant Attorney General for the Criminal Division reviews proposed business conduct which may constitute a violation of the Act and makes a binding decision on whether or not the Department will take an enforcement action if the transaction proceeds further. For all these reasons, the need for close centralized supervision of investigations and prosecutions under the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act is compelling. Consequently, unless otherwise agreed upon by the Assistant Attorney General for the Criminal Division, prosecutions of alleged violations of Sections 103 and 104 of the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act will be conducted by attorneys from the Criminal Division in Washington. Prosecutions of alleged violations of Section 102, when such violations are related to a violation of Section 103 or 104, will also be conducted by Criminal Division attorneys, unless otherwise directed by the Assistant Attorney General.

Any information relating to a possible violation of the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act should be brought immediately to the attention of the Criminal Division by contacting the Chief of the Fraud Section, who can be reached at (FTS) 724-7038. Even when such information is developed during the course of an apparently unrelated investigation, the Section Chief should be notified immediately.

9-47.130 Civil Injunction Actions

The Securities and Exchange Commission has authority to obtain civil injunctions against future violations of Sections 102 and 103 of the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act. Civil injunctions against violations of Section 104 of the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act (Section 104(c)) by Domestic Concerns shall be instituted by attorneys from the Criminal Division in cooperation with the appropriate U. S. Attorney, unless otherwise directed by the Assistant Attorney General.

9-47.140 Foreign Corrupt Practices Act Review Procedure

On March 20, 1980, the Attorney General signed Order No. 878-80 establishing the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act Review Procedure. The Review Procedure permits any party covered under Sections 103 and 104 of the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act to seek a statement from the Criminal Division of the Department's present enforcement intention with respect to those sections. The Review Procedure will not apply to Section 102 of the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act which deals with the maintenance of accurate books and records by corporations which are subject to the jurisdiction of the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Section 50.18, which has been added to Part 50, Chapter I, Title 28, Code of Federal Regulations, provides:

Although the Department of Justice is not authorized to give advisory opinions to private parties, the Criminal Division is willing, in certain circumstances, to review proposed conduct and state its present enforcement intention under sections 103 and 104 of the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act of 1977, 15 U.S.C. §§78dd-1, 78dd-2, but not including section 102 of the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act, 15 U.S.C. §§78m(b) (2), (3). The conditions for such review are set forth below:

(a) A request for a Foreign Corrupt Practices Act (FCPA) review letter must be submitted in writing in an original and five copies to the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Criminal Division, Attention: FCPA Review Group. The mailing address is P.O. Box 7814, Benjamin Franklin Station, Washington, D.C. 20044. The address for hand-delivery is 8th floor, Federal Triangle Building, 315 9th Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20530.

(b) The entire transaction which is the subject of the review request must be an actual transaction but need not involve only proposed conduct. The Criminal Division will not consider a request, however, unless that portion of the transaction for which clearance is sought involves only proposed conduct.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

(c) The Criminal Division will consider a review request only when submitted by a party or parties to the transaction which is the subject of the review request.

(d) The Criminal Division may, in its discretion, refuse to consider a review request.

(e) An FCPA review letter shall have no application to any party which does not join in the request therefor.

(f) A review request shall be specific and contain in detail all relevant and material information bearing on the conduct for which review is requested and on the circumstances of the proposed conduct. A review request must be signed on behalf of each requesting party by an appropriate senior officer with operational responsibility for the conduct which is the subject of the review request and who has been designated by the chief executive officer to sign the review request. In appropriate cases, the chief executive officer of each requesting party may be required to sign the review request. The person signing the review request must certify that it contains a true, correct and complete disclosure with respect to the proposed conduct and the circumstances of the conduct.

(g) Each party shall provide the Criminal Division with any additional information or documents the Division may thereafter request in order to review a matter. Any information furnished orally shall be promptly confirmed in writing, signed by the same person who signed the initial review request and certified by him to be a true, correct and complete disclosure of the requested information. In connection with any request for review, the Criminal Division will also conduct whatever independent investigation it believes is appropriate.

(h) After review of a request submitted hereunder, the Criminal Division may: state its present enforcement intention under sections 103 and 104 of the FCPA with respect to the proposed business conduct; decline to state its present enforcement intention; or take such other position or action as it considers appropriate.

(i) The Criminal Division will make every reasonable effort to respond to any review request within 30 days after receipt of the review request and of any requested additional information and documents.

(j) No oral clearance, release or other statement purporting to limit the enforcement discretion of the Department of Justice may be given. The requesting party or parties may rely only upon a written FCPA review letter signed by the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Criminal Division or his delegate.

(k) Each FCPA review letter can be relied upon by the requesting party or parties to the extent the disclosure was accurate and complete and to the extent the disclosure continues accurately and completely to reflect circumstances after the date of issuance of the review letter.

(l) An FCPA review letter will not bind or obligate any other agency; nor will it affect the obligations of the requesting party or parties to any other agency, nor under any statutory or regulatory provision other than those specifically cited in the particular review letter.

(m) Neither the submission of a request for an FCPA review, its pendency, nor the issuance of an FCPA review letter, shall in any way alter the responsibility of the party or parties to comply with the accounting requirements of section 102 of the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act 15 U.S.C. §§78m(b) (2), (3).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

(n) If the business conduct for which review is requested is subject to approval by a regulatory agency, a review request shall be considered before agency approval has been obtained only where it appears that exceptional and unnecessary burdens might otherwise be imposed on the requesting party or parties, or where the agency specifically requests that the party or parties first seek review from the Criminal Division. However, any FCPA review letter issued in these as in any other circumstances, will state only the Department's present enforcement intention under section 103 and 104 of the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act. Such FCPA review letter shall in no way be taken to indicate the Department's views on the legal or factual issues that may be raised before the regulatory agency, or in an appeal from the regulatory agency's decision.

(o) (1) The requesting party or parties may ask the Division to delay or to refrain from ever making publicly available parts of a review request, and part or all of any information or documents submitted in support of the review request. Any request for nondisclosure must be made at the time of submitting the review request or the information or documents to the Division. The requesting party or parties must: (i) specify precisely those parts of the request, information or documents that it asks not be made publicly available; (ii) state the minimum period of time during which nondisclosure is considered necessary; and (iii) justify the request for nondisclosure, both as to content and time, by showing that the material is exempt from mandatory public disclosure because it consists of trade secrets or commercial and financial information that is privileged and confidential is received from a person, 5 U.S.C. §552 (b)(4), or because it is otherwise exempt pursuant to any other provision of 5 U.S.C. §552 (b). If the Department determines that such grounds for nondisclosure exist, then except as provided by subparagraph (2) of this paragraph the material shall not be made publicly available unless release is ordered by a court of competent jurisdiction. If the Department determines that such grounds for nondisclosure do not exist, and the Department receives a request for disclosure of the material pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act, notice of the Department's determination that there are no grounds for nondisclosure will be given to the party or parties submitting the FCPA review request at least 7 days before any release to the Freedom of Information Act requester.

(o) (2) Nothing contained in subparagraph (1) of this paragraph shall limit the Division's right to issue, at its discretion, a release describing the identity of the party or parties submitting an FCPA review request, the general nature and circumstances of the proposed conduct, and the action taken by the Department in response to the FCPA review request. Where the Department determines such information to be exempt from mandatory disclosure, such a release shall not disclose: (i) the identity of the foreign country in which the proposed conduct is to take place; (ii) the identity of any foreign sales agents; or (iii) other types of identifying information. The Division shall index such release and place it in a file available to the public upon request.

(o) (3) This paragraph reflects a policy determination by the Department of Justice and is subject to any limitations on public disclosure and any required public disclosure arising from statutory restrictions, Executive Order, or the national interest.

(p) Any requesting party or parties may withdraw a review request at any time. The Division remains free, however, to submit such comments to the requesting party or parties as it deems appropriate. Failure to take action after receipt of a review request, documents or information, whether submitted pursuant to this procedure or otherwise, shall not in any way limit or stop the Division from taking any action at such time thereafter as it deems appropriate. The Division reserves the right to retain any review request, documents and information submitted to it under this procedure or otherwise and to use them for all governmental purposes.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-48.000 COMPUTER FRAUD

9-48.100 18 U.S.C. §1030

In 1984, Congress enacted legislation which for the first time specifically defines several computer-related offenses. Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-473, 98 Stat. 2190-2192 (1984). Section 1030 of Title 18, United States Code, makes it a crime to knowingly access a computer without authorization and thereby: (1) obtain certain classified information; (2) obtain certain information contained in the records of a financial institution or in the files of a consumer reporting agency; or (3) if the computer so accessed is a government computer, to use, modify, destroy, or disclose the information therein, or prevent the authorized use of the computer. The law also punishes attempts and conspiracies to commit these offenses.

9-48.110 Discussion of Offenses

9-48.111 18 U.S.C. §1030(a)(1): Computer Espionage

See USAM 9-90.330.

9-48.112 18 U.S.C. §1030(a)(2): Obtaining Financial or Credit Information from a Computer

18 U.S.C. §1030(a)(2) punishes persons who knowingly access a computer without authorization, or who exceed their authorization, and obtain certain information which is defined under the Right to Financial Privacy Act or the Fair Credit Reporting Act.

The statute prohibits access by a person, knowing the access is unauthorized, to a computer maintained by a financial institution, and who thereby obtains information contained in a financial record. The term "financial institution" includes any office of a bank, savings bank, industrial loan company, trust company, savings and loan, building and loan, homestead association (including cooperative banks), credit union, consumer finance institution, or person/organization which issues credit cards, located in the United States or its territories. See 12 U.S.C. §§3401(1) - (2); 15 U.S.C. §1602(n).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

However, the financial records protected by this statute are very limited under the narrow definitions of the Right to Financial Privacy Act. Only access to the accounts of individuals and partnerships of five or fewer individuals is prohibited. See 12 U.S.C. §§3401(4) - (5). Business and employment records of a financial institution are not covered, nor are corporate, trust and large partnership accounts.

The statute also prohibits unauthorized access to information contained in a file of a consumer reporting agency on a consumer. The protected information under the Fair Credit Reporting Act includes all credit, personal and other information on individuals (consumers) recorded and retained by a consumer reporting agency, regardless of how the information is stored. A credit reporting agency is defined as any person which regularly assembles and evaluates consumer credit information and provides "consumer reports" to third parties, and uses any means or facility of interstate commerce for the purpose of preparing or furnishing consumer reports. (15 U.S.C. §§1681(c), (d), (f) and (g)).

In order to prove a violation of 18 U.S.C. §1030(a)(2), it is necessary to show that the defendant knew the access to the computer was not authorized or that it was not within the scope of a previous authorization. Once it is proven that the defendant accessed the computer without authorization, the term "obtain" can be interpreted broadly to cover the situation where the person obtained control over the data to change records in a computer without physically removing any information from the computer. There is no requirement in the statute that the intruder intend to do anything with that information.

This provision does not reach information obtained incidentally or the use of information that has been obtained legitimately. The statute exempts from prosecution under 18 U.S.C. §1030(a)(2) persons who exceed authorized use of a computer simply to use the computer for purposes to which the authorization does not extend (for example, to do homework or play video games).

9-48.113 18 U.S.C. §1030(a)(3): Interfering with the Operation of a Government Computer

18 U.S.C. §1030(a)(3) punishes anyone who, without authorization or in excess of his or her authorization, knowingly accesses a computer that is "operated for or on behalf of the Government of the United States" and knowingly "uses, modifies, destroys, or discloses information in or prevents authorized use of" that computer if such conduct affects the operation of the government.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

This section proscribes two types of conduct:

A. Trespassing by a person who has no authorization whatsoever to enter the computer. This person could be guilty of any of the conduct specified in this section. The term "use" is intended to prohibit a trespasser such as this from reading government data files or changing records in the computer without physically removing any information from the computer.

B. Access by a person who has authorization to use the computer but who knowingly exceeds such authorization or acts outside the scope of a prior authorization. This person would violate the statute only if he or she modified, destroyed, or disclosed information in or prevented authorized use of the computer. The statute exempts from prosecution under 18 U.S.C. §1030(a)(3) persons who exceed authorized use of a computer simply to use the computer for purposes to which the authorization does not extend (for example, to do homework or play video games).

In addition, the offense of accessing a government computer and "disclos[ing] information in" such computer without authorization was not intended to be used to prosecute "whistleblowers" who attempt to expose fraud and abuse in government. Assuming these individuals have lawful access to the information, they are not trespassers to the information and do not violate the statute even if they do not have authority or approval to disclose that information. See 130 Cong. Rec. H 12074 (Daily ed. Oct. 10, 1984) (remarks of Rep. Hughes).

In the case of a computer that is being operated only part-time for the government, it is only the unauthorized access to the information related to the government operation that is proscribed. The expression "and such conduct affected such operation" indicates that some consequences to the government from the defendant's conduct must be proven.

Pertinent legislative history may be found in a report which accompanied H.R. 5616, proposed legislation which preceded the enactment of this statute but essentially tracked the language of the provisions that were passed. See House Committee on the Judiciary, Report on Counterfeit Access Device and Computer Fraud and Abuse Act of 1984, H.R. Rep. No. 894, 98th Cong., 2d. Sess. (1984). (H.R. 5616 consisted of five substantive provisions proposed as Sections 1030(a)(1) - (a)(5). Proposed §§1030(a)(1) and (a)(4) (which were based on language in the mail and wire fraud statutes) were not enacted. Section 1030(a)(2) and (a)(3) were passed as §§1030(a)(1) and (a)(2), and §1030(a)(5) was passed as §1030(a)(3).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The bill includes several new concepts not found in the statutes traditionally used to prosecute fraud cases. The Report sheds some light on the meaning of certain of its provisions. Section 1030 deals with an "unauthorized access" concept of computer fraud rather than the mere use of a computer. Thus, the conduct prohibited is analagous to that of a trespass (breaking and entering) rather than using a computer (similar to the use of a gun) in committing the offense. Ibid. at 20.

The FBI will conduct investigations of cases under 18 U.S.C. §1030(a)(2) involving institutions defined by the Right to Financial Privacy Act of 1978, i.e., the banking system. The FBI will handle cases that fall primarily within its traditional jurisdiction, including matters pertaining to organized crime, terrorism, and foreign counterintelligence. The Secret Service will investigate cases involving consumer reporting agencies as defined by the Fair Credit Reporting Act.

Responsibility for investigations of cases under 18 U.S.C. §1030(a)(3) will be divided among the FBI, Secret Service, Postal Service and the Inspectors General on a case by case basis. Assignments will be made as is appropriate for the offense and not otherwise exempted as traditional jurisdiction or a prior division of responsibility under this law.

9-48.120 Reporting Requirements

Copies of all indictments alleging violations of 18 U.S.C. §1030 should be provided to the Fraud Section and will be available as a resource to other offices. Information about prosecutions under this section must be compiled and reported by the Attorney General to Congress during the first three years following enactment of the statute.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-49.000 CREDIT CARD FRAUD

9-49.100 18 U.S.C. §1029

The Credit Card Fraud Act of 1984 expands 15 U.S.C. §1644 (fraudulent use of credit cards) and 15 U.S.C. §1693n (fraudulent use of debit instruments). Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-473, 98 Stat. 2183-4 (1984). The most significant provisions of 18 U.S.C. §1029: (1) broaden the definitions of credit card and debit instrument to include any "access device," such as an account number; (2) increase penalties in terms of both potential incarceration and potential fines; and (3) contain a substantial repeat offender provision.

Congress passed this legislation to give federal prosecutors a broad jurisdictional base to prosecute effectively a variety of credit card fraud schemes. However, certain jurisdictional thresholds were established to ensure that federal involvement is concentrated on the activities of major offenders. It is assumed that the bulk of the prosecutions for credit card fraud will continue to be handled by state and local law enforcement authorities.

9-49.110 Prohibited Conduct Under the New Act

18 U.S.C. §1029(a)(1) prohibits the production, use, or trafficking in counterfeit access devices. There is no requirement that the offender have direct contact with the person who is ultimately defrauded. For example, a counterfeiter may deal with a distributor who is fully aware that counterfeit cards are involved, and therefore is not a victim of fraud. However, the value of the manufacturer's illegally obtained product clearly indicates an intention to defraud an innocent party.

18 U.S.C. §1029(a)(2) prohibits the trafficking in or use of one or more unauthorized access devices during any 12-month period in which property aggregating $1,000 or more is obtained.

18 U.S.C. §1029(a)(3) prohibits the possession with intent to defraud of 15 or more counterfeit or unauthorized access devices. Any combination of counterfeit or unauthorized access devices would be sufficient to meet the 15 device requirement.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

18 U.S.C. §1029(a)(4) prohibits the fraudulent production, trafficking, and/or possession of device-making equipment, with the intent that such equipment be used in the production of a fraudulent access device. The offender need not intend that he/she will personally use the equipment to defraud but merely intend that the equipment will be used to defraud. As long as the offender has control over the equipment in the possession of another person, he/she is not required personally to have physical possession of it.

18 U.S.C. §§1029(b)(1) and (b)(2) prohibit attempts and conspiracies to commit an offense under this section.

9-49.120 Penalties

The statute provides the following maximum penalties for violations of the substantive provisions:

A. 18 U.S.C. §1029(a)(2) and (a)(3): a fine of not more than the greater of $10,000 or two times the value of the goods obtained or not more than 10 years imprisonment or both.

B. 18 U.S.C. §1029(a)(1) and (a)(4): a fine of not more than the greater of $50,000 or two times the value of the goods obtained or not more than 15 years imprisonment or both. (See USAM 9-120.600 for a discussion of the new fine levels and procedures for collection.)

18 U.S.C. §1029(b)(1) provides that an attempt to commit an offense under this section is punishable in the same manner as if the offense had been successfully completed.

18 U.S.C. §1029(b)(2) prohibits a conspiracy to commit any of the above described offenses and provides a penalty equal to the maximum fine for the commission of the offenses or one-half the maximum period of incarceration set out above or both.

The statute also provides enhanced penalties for repeat offenders convicted under 18 U.S.C. §1029(a). A defendant previously convicted under one of these sections faces a maximum fine of not more than the greater of $100,000 or two times the value of the property obtained or not more than 20 years incarceration or both.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-49.130 Definitions and Legislative History

Instead of using the term "credit card," or "debit instrument," the term "access device" is used in the statute and is defined broadly as any "card, plate, code, account number, or other means of account access that can be used, alone or in conjunction with another access device, to obtain money, goods, services, or any other thing of value, or that can be used to initiate a transfer of funds...." The only limitation, i.e., "other than a transfer originated solely by paper instrument, excludes activities such as passing forged checks.

Pertinent legislative history may be found in a report which accompanied H.R. 5616, proposed legislation which preceded the enactment of and was identical to this statute. It provides a detailed explanation of the definitions in the statute, and emphasizes the intended broad coverage of its provisions. House Committee on the Judiciary, Report on Counterfeit Access Device and Computer Fraud and Abuse Act of 1984, H.R. Rep. No. 894, 98th Cong., 2d. Sess. (1984).

The legislative history defines the terms "knowing state of mind" and "with the intent" as used in the 18 U.S.C. §1029(a). See United States v. Bailey, 444 U.S. 394, 404 (1976). The report discusses the concept of "willful blindness" and the proof required for such a defense to succeed. See United States v. Jewell, 532 F.2d 697, 700 n.7. (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 426 U.S. 951 (1976).

Congress intended that prosecutions for the use of "unauthorized access devices" be directed to activity involving a criminal or an organized crime ring that traffics in fraudulent credit cards. Offenses involving a valid card owner who knowingly uses an expired or revoked card should be handled by state and local authorities or in civil actions by the credit card companies.

9-49.140 Investigative Agencies

The statute gives authority to the Secret Service, in addition to any other agency having jurisdiction such as the Federal Bureau of Investigation (or the U.S. Postal Service under Title 15), to investigate offenses under this new section. The Secret Service and the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) have established guidelines to delineate their investigative authority where both agencies have concurrent jurisdiction. Generally, responsibility will be divided consistent with the traditional jurisdictional interests of the two agencies.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The FBI will conduct investigations of cases involving the banking system, or which include violations of the bank fraud and embezzlement statutes, fraud by wire, and bribery of bank officers and employees. The FBI will handle cases that fall primarily within its traditional jurisdiction, including matters pertaining to organized crime, terrorism, and foreign counterintelligence. The Secret Service will investigate violations of the statute in cases not involving banks, such as counterfeiting or misuse of credit cards or access devices of major credit card companies, telephone companies, and department stores, etc.

9-49.150 Reporting Requirements

Copies of all indictments alleging violations of 18 U.S.C. §1029 should be provided to the Fraud Section and will be available as a resource to other offices. Information about prosecutions under this section must be compiled and reported by the Attorney General to Congress during the first three years following enactment of the statute.

9-49.160 Fraudulent Use of Credit Cards and Debit Instruments-
Prosecutions under 18 U.S.C. §1029 and Statutes in Title 15

Although 18 U.S.C. §1029 effectively replaces both 15 U.S.C. §1644 and §1693n, the latter statutes have not been repealed. Thus, prosecutions are possible under either the new or old statute. Where possible, however, prosecution should be initiated under the new statute because of its broader scope, more severe penalties and because of the opportunity for enhanced penalties for repeat offenders. The misuse of account numbers, previously not covered in Title 15 and prosecutable only as a wire fraud, is now covered by 18 U.S.C. §1029.

A. 15 U.S.C. §1644 (the Truth in Lending Act) proscribes certain uses of any "counterfeit, fictitious, altered, forged, lost, stolen, or fraudulently obtained credit card" in transactions in or affecting interstate or foreign commerce.

B. 15 U.S.C. §1644(a) prohibits the use, or attempts and conspiracies to use such credit card to obtain anything having a value aggregating $1,000 or more within a one year period.

C. 15 U.S.C. §1644(b) prohibits the transportation, or attempts and conspiracies to transport such credit card in interstate or foreign commerce, knowing the card to be counterfeit, fictitious, altered, forged, lost, stolen, or fraudulently obtained.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

D. 15 U.S.C. §1644(c) prohibits the use of interstate or foreign commerce to sell or transport such credit card, knowing the card to be counterfeit, fictitious, altered, forged, lost, stolen, or fraudulently obtained.

E. 15 U.S.C. §1644(d) prohibits the receipt, concealment, use or transportation of anything having a value aggregating $1,000 or more within a one year period (except tickets for interstate or foreign transportation) which has moved in interstate or foreign commerce and was obtained with such credit card.

F. 15 U.S.C. §1644(e) prohibits the receipt, concealment, use, sale or transportation of one or more tickets for interstate or foreign transportation having a value of $500 or more and which were purchased or obtained with such card(s).

G. 15 U.S.C. §1644(f) prohibits furnishing money or anything having a value aggregating $1,000 or more within a one year period through the use of such card.

H. A companion statute, 15 U.S.C. §1693n(b)(1)-(b)(6) (the Electronic Fund Transfer Act), proscribes the same uses of any "counterfeit, fictitious, altered, forged, lost, stolen, or fraudulently obtained debit instrument" in transactions in or affecting interstate or foreign commerce. The term "debit instrument" is defined as "a card, code, or other device, other than a check, draft, or similar paper instrument, by the use of which a person may initiate an electronic fund transfer."

Both statutes provide maximum penalties of a $10,000 fine or imprisonment for ten years or both for conviction of these offenses.

Judicial construction of these statutes has significantly limited their coverage. The Ninth Circuit, in United States v. Callihan, 666 F.2d 422 (1982), held that only misuse of the card, not the card number, is prohibited by the statute. However, the Fourth Circuit has held to the contrary, United States v. Bice-Bey, 701 F.2d 1086, 1091-92 (1983). The term "fraudulently obtained credit card" in 15 U.S.C. §1644(a) has been interpreted not to reach transactions in which a credit card is originally obtained without fraudulent intent from an issuing company but is subsequently transferred to another person with the knowledge that it will be used fraudulently. See United States v. Kasper, 483 F. Supp. 1208 (E.D. Pa. 1980).

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-60.000 PROTECTION OF THE INDIVIDUAL

9-60.100 KIDNAPPING (18 U.S.C. §§1201-1202)

9-60.110 Federal Jurisdiction

Federal jurisdiction over kidnapping extends to the following motions: (1) kidnappings in which the victim is willfully transported in interstate or foreign commerce; (2) kidnappings within the special maritime and territorial jurisdiction of the United States; (3) kidnappings within the special aircraft jurisdiction of the United States; and (4) kidnappings in which the victim is a foreign official, an internationally protected person, or an official guest as those terms are defined in 18 U.S.C. §1116(b).

9-60.120 Investigative Jurisdiction

Investigative jurisdiction is vested in the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

9-60.130 Special Considerations

9-60.131 24 Hours Rebuttable Presumption

The rebuttable presumption set forth in 18 U.S.C. §1201(b) does not create a presumption of kidnapping. Rather, it creates a presumption of transportation in interstate or foreign commerce in cases where an actual kidnapping has been established. The presumption was added to the statute to give the FBI jurisdiction to investigate. In a federal prosecution under 18 U.S.C. §1201(a)(1), actual interstate or foreign transportation must be proved. See United States v. Moore, 571 F.2d 76 (2d Cir. 1978).

9-60.132 "Willful" Transportation in Interstate or Foreign Commerce

The original Federal Kidnapping Act, enacted in 1932, used the phrase "knowingly transport. . . in interstate or foreign commerce." Several changes in the Act were made in 1972 by Pub. L. No. 92-539, an "[a]ct for the Protection of Foreign Officials and Official Guests of the United States."

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The jurisdictional base was extended to include kidnappings in the special and maritime and territorial jurisdictions, the special aircraft jurisdiction, and situations where the victim is a "foreign official" or "official guest." Further, the statute was amended to direct its sanctions against those who "willfully" transported their victims in interstate or foreign commerce.

These changes were made to make the kidnapping itself the gist of the offense, rather than the transportation of the victim in interstate commerce and to facilitate in extraditing kidnappers from foreign countries. H. Rep. No. 92-1268, p. 10. See also S. Rep. No. 92-1105, p. 8. Discussion of the change from "knowingly" to "willfully" is absent from the legislative history. However, the section analysis in both the House and the Senate Reports states "jurisdiction to punish kidnapping is provided when (1) the victim is transported in interstate or foreign commerce (as under existing law)." H. Rep. No. 92-1268, p. 16; S. Rep. No. 92-1105, p. 17. This language militates against the view that Congress intended to change the intent requirements then existing under the kidnapping statute.

Several cases have discussed the intent requirements under the old law. In United States v. Powell, 24 F. Supp. 161 (E.D. Tenn. 1938), the court held that it was not an essential element of the offense that the defendant have knowledge of the crossing of state lines or intent to go from one state to another with such knowledge. The court in Eidson v. United States, 272 F.2d 684 (10th Cir. 1959), stated that it was not essential for the government to prove as an element of the offense that the defendant had specific knowledge of the exact location of the state line at the time he crossed it. "It is enough to show affirmatively that he knowingly set in motion the interstate trip; that he intentionally went to the place of his own selection; and that in doing so, he crossed the state line with the kidnapped victim in his custody." Eidson v. United States, supra at 687. Had Congress intended a higher degree of intent by its inclusion of the term "willfully" in the new law, it is extremely doubtful it would have done so without any discussion of the change for specific intent would make federal jurisdiction exceedingly difficult to prove. In accord, United States v. Bankston, 603 F.2d 528 (5th Cir. 1979); United States v. Napier, 518 F.2d 316 (9th Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 895 (1975).

9-60.133 Penalty Provision

Public Law No. 92-539 deleted the then existing death penalty provision and provided for a penalty of "imprisonment for any term of years or for life" for kidnapping, 18 U.S.C. §1201(a) or conspiracy to kidnap, 18 U.S.C. §1201(c).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

In 1976, Pub. L. No. 94-467 further extended the scope of the statute to cover situations in which the victim is a "foreign official, an internationally protected person, or an official guest," (see USAM 9-65.830), and provided for a penalty of not more than 20 years imprisonment for an attempted kidnapping of such individuals (18 U.S.C. §1201(d)).

9-60.134 Allegations of "Mental Kidnapping" or "Brainwashing" by Religious Cults

In recent years, we have received numerous complaints alleging that members of various religious sects are victims of "brainwashing," "mind-control," or "mental kidnapping" by leaders of these groups. A typical allegation is that new members are subjected to intensive indoctrination accompanied by inadequate amounts of food and sleep, with the result that they become "programmed" to obey the wishes and commands of their leader and cease to think for themselves. As a general rule in these situations, there is no information or allegation that the "brainwashed" sect member has been physically restrained from leaving the sect.

It is our position that an allegation of "brainwashing" accompanied by interstate travel would not support a prosecution under the federal kidnapping statute. We are brought to this conclusion by the statute and its judicial interpretation. In Chatwin v. United States, 326 U.S. 455 (1946), defendants, members of a Mormon cult, persuaded a 15-year old mentally retarded girl that a "celestial" or plural marriage was essential to her salvation, and she was taken interstate to consummate such a marriage. Subsequently, defendants were convicted under the federal kidnapping statute. The Supreme Court, in reversing the convictions, concluded that there was no evidence the victim had been confined against her will or that she lacked the mental capacity to understand the concept of celestial marriage and to exercise her own free will in this regard. In short, the purpose of the statute is to prohibit interstate kidnapping rather than general transgressions of morality involving the crossing of state lines. Therefore, in our view, a prosecution under the kidnapping statute could not be sustained based on evidence that an adult of normal intelligence was "brainwashed" into continued association with a religious sect. For cases involving possible violations of the peonage or involuntary servitude statutes (18 U.S.C. §§1581, 1583 and 1584) you should consult with the Involuntary Servitude Coordinators, Civil Rights

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Division, Criminal Section (FTS 633-3204), before making a prosecutive determination.

9-60.135 "Deprogramming" of Religious Sect Members

The Criminal Division has received a substantial number of complaints from members of various religious sects alleging that they have been abducted by their parents or persons acting on behalf of their parents for the purpose of "deprogramming," a process that purports to free the sect member from the influence of the sect. If these complaints indicate a possible violation of the federal kidnapping statute, the Federal Bureau of Investigation conducts an appropriate investigation. If investigation determines that prosecution may be warranted, the matter is presented to the appropriate U.S. Attorney's office.

Although there have been a number of successful state prosecutions of "deprogrammers," the only reported federal prosecution resulted in an acquittal. See United States v. Patrick, 532 F.2d 142 (9th Cir. 1976). Quite often in these "deprogramming" situations, the parents of the young adult cult member previously obtained an ex parte court order appointing the parents as temporary guardians or conservators for their adult son or daughter. Although the legality of these ex parte court orders may be questionable, the existence of such a court order would weigh heavily against a criminal prosecution.

It is a general policy of the Department not to become involved in situations which are essentially domestic relations controversies. If a parent abducts his/her adult child from a religious sect, accompanies the child throughout the "deprogramming," and there is no violence or other aggravating circumstances, these facts would weigh against federal involvement. An aggrieved individual in this situation can pursue civil remedies against his/her parents or others to obtain money damages or other relief. See, e.g., Ward v. Connor, 657 F.2d 45 (4th Cir. 1981). However, if violence or aggravating circumstances exist, particularly where professional "deprogrammers" are involved, criminal prosecution should be pursued if the evidence warrants.

9-60.150 FBI Assistance in Missing Persons Cases

In a missing person case, as a matter of cooperation, the FBI will, at the request of a state or local law enforcement agency, make available the facilities of the FBI Identification Division and the FBI Laboratory.

The FBI Identification Division will check its files for any current information, and will conduct any fingerprint comparisons that the local police agency requests. If a fingerprint record is available, a missing persons stop will be filed by the Identification Division at the request of a local police agency. Subject to certain conditions, missing persons stops also will be filed by the Identification Division at the request of a relative, other governmental agencies, and social service organizations, such as Red Cross and the Salvation Army, when acting on behalf of the relative of a missing person.

The FBI Laboratory will conduct certain technical examinations at the request of law enforcement authorities. These services include examinations of hair, clothing, and soil, as well as chemical and metallurgic examinations.

Information pertaining to certain categories of missing persons, including missing children, may be entered into the missing person file of the FBI operated National Crime Information Center (NCIC). Usually such entries are made by the local law enforcement agency which received the missing person complaint. However, since passage of the Missing Children Act (Pub. L. No. 97-292, amending, 28 U.S.C. §534) the FBI will receive information directly from parents of missing children for entry into NCIC, if the local law enforcement agency will not do so.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-60.160 Investigative Policy-Kidnapping vis a vis Missing Persons Complaints

For some time it has been the FBI's policy that, except in parental kidnapping matters, every reported kidnapping in which circumstances indicate that an actual abduction has taken place is afforded an immediate preliminary investigation to determine if a full investigation under the federal kidnapping statute is warranted.

Clearly, under these guidelines, the typical teenage runaway complaint would not be investigated as a federal kidnapping. Recently, however, some controversy has arisen as to the adequacy of the investigative guidelines in situations where much younger children are missing. With regard to missing children of very tender years, we believe that in many cases an abduction may be assumed so as to warrant an immediate preliminary kidnapping investigation by the FBI.

The Criminal Division has established a policy whereby this Division reviews any decision by the FBI not to conduct an investigation in those missing persons cases wherein the facts indicate possible violations of the federal kidnapping statute. Under this policy, the FBI will refer information concerning questionable missing person cases to the Criminal Division. The Division will thoroughly review such information, and if deemed warranted, will request the FBI to commence a kidnapping investigation.

U.S. Attorneys who become aware of a missing person case in their district which may involve a kidnapping should insure that such information is brought to the attention of the Criminal Division. Questions concerning this policy should be directed to attorneys of the General Litigation and Legal Advice Section (FTS) 724-7526, 724-6971.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-60.200 THE CRIMINAL SANCTIONS AGAINST ILLEGAL ELECTRONIC SURVEILLANCE (18 U.S.C. §§2510-2513 and 47 U.S.C. §605)

9-60.201 Introduction

The statutes prohibiting illegal electronic surveillance are found primarily in Title III of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968. Those statutes are:

A. 18 U.S.C. §2510 which defines the terms used throughout the remainder of the chapter;

B. 18 U.S.C. §2511 which prohibits the interception of wire and oral communications and the subsequent disclosure or use of illegally intercepted communications;

C. 18 U.S.C. §2512 which prohibits the manufacture, possession, advertisement, sale, and transportation in interstate or foreign commerce of devices that are primarily useful for the surreptitious interception of communications; and

D. 18 U.S.C. §2513 which provides for the forfeiture of any device which is used, manufactured, or possessed in violation of 18 U.S.C. §§2511 or 2512.

9-60.202 Purpose

In enacting Title III, Congress prohibited all interceptions of wire and oral communications except as specifically provided. The evidence is overwhelming that no hidden exceptions exist in the statute.

A. 18 U.S.C. §2511(1)(a) is clear. It prohibits, "[e]xcept as otherwise specifically provided," the willful interception of wire and oral communications.

B. The Senate Judiciary Report pertaining to Title III shows again and again that 18 U.S.C. §2511 prohibits all electronic surveillance except as specifically authorized. See S. Rep. No. 1097, 90th Cong., 2d Sess. 27-28 (1968) ("Title III prohibits all wiretapping and electronic surveillance" except as authorized); id. at 66 ("To assure the privacy of oral and wire communications, Title III prohibits all wiretapping and electronic surveillance" except as authorized); id. at 89 ("[A]ll unauthorized interception of [wire and oral] communications should be prohibited. . ."); id. at 91 ("Section 2511 of the new chapter prohibits, except as otherwise specifically provided in the chapter itself, the interception and disclosure of all wire or oral communications.")

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

C. Each Senator speaking of the electronic surveillance prohibition thought that it prohibited interceptions of communications except as specifically authorized. 114 Cong. Rec. 13200, 14469, 14724, 14747, 14762 (1968) (comments by Senators Scott, McClellan, Cooper, Mundt, and Percy).

D. As the foundation for the criminal provisions of Title III, Congress made several findings. One such finding clearly shows the intention to prohibit all unauthorized interceptions of communications:

In order to protect effectively the privacy of wire and oral communications, to protect the integrity of court and administrative proceedings and to prevent the obstruction of interstate commerce, it is necessary for Congress . . . to prohibit any unauthorized interception of such communications . . .

82 Stat. 211 (1968).

D. The Supreme Court has stated that, "[e]xcept as expressly authorized in Title III . . . all interceptions of wire and oral communications are flatly prohibited. Unauthorized interceptions and the disclosure or use of information obtained through unauthorized interceptions are crimes, 18 U.S.C. §2511(1) . . ." Gelbard v. United States, 408 U.S. 41, 46 (1972); see United States v. Giordano, 416 U.S. 505, 514 (1974).

9-60.203 Legislative History

There is an extensive survey of the case law as it existed in 1968 pertaining to electronic surveillance and a cogent statement of congressional intent in S. Rep. No. 1097, 90th Cong., 2d Sess. 88-108, reprinted in, 1968 U.S. Code Cong. & Adm. News 2177.

9-60.204 Importance of Enforcement

The criminal prohibitions against illegal wiretapping and eavesdropping are part of the same act which permits federal law enforcement officers to engage in court-authorized electronic surveillance. Congress viewed the criminal sanctions and the court authorization provisions as two sides of the same coin. The retention of the government's authorization to engage in court-authorized electronic surveillance may depend on its vigorous enforcement of the sanctions against illegal wiretapping and eavesdropping. Accordingly, nothing less than vigorous enforcement, consistent with the policy guidance set forth below, will suffice.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-60.205 Division Assistance

18 U.S.C. §§2510-2512 and 47 U.S.C. §605 are assigned to the General Litigation and Legal Advice Section of the Criminal Division. Attorneys responsible for these statutes may be reached at FTS 724-7144.

9-60.210 Definitions Applicable to 18 U.S.C. §2511(1) et seq.

9-60.211 "Wire Communication" (18 U.S.C. §2510(1))

The definition of "wire communication" is found in 18 U.S.C. §2510(1). It is intended to include all communications carried by a communications network.

9-60.212 "Communication Common Carrier" (18 U.S.C. §2510(10))

The definition of "communication common carrier" in 18 U.S.C. §2510(10) adopts the definition of "common carrier" in 47 U.S.C. §153(h). In essence, a "communication common carrier" is a company engaged as a common carrier for hire in interstate or foreign wire communications.

9-60.213 "Oral Communication" (18 U.S.C. §2510(2))

The term "oral communication" is defined in 18 U.S.C. §2510(3) to mean any verbal communication uttered by a person having a justifiable expectation of privacy. The legislative history indicates that an expectation of privacy would normally be justifiable in one's own home (citing Silverman v. United States, 365 U.S. 505 (1961)) or office (citing Berger v. New York, 388 U.S. 41 (1967)) but would not be justifiable in a jail cell (citing Lanza v. New York, 370 U.S. 139 (1962)) or an open field (citing Hester v. United States, 265 U.S. 57 (1924)). See S. Rep. No. 1097, 90th Cong., 2d Sess. 90 (1968). A trespasser would not have justifiable expectation of privacy. Cf. United States v. Pui Kan Lam, 483 F.2d 1202 (2d Cir. 1973), cert. denied, 415 U.S. 984 (1974).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-60.214 "Intercept" (18 U.S.C. §2510(4))

The word "intercept" is defined in 18 U.S.C. §2510(4) to mean the "aural acquisition of the contents of any wire or oral communication through the use of" a device. The word "aural," of course, limits the kinds of interceptions covered by Title III. Non-aural interceptions by pen registers (see United States v. New York Telephone Company, 434 U.S. 159 (1977)); S. Rep. No. 1097, 90th Cong., 2d Sess. 90 (1968)) or call-tracing devices are not covered by the statute.

9-60.215 "Electronic, Mechanical, Or Other Device" (18 U.S.C. §2510(5))

The term "electronic, mechanical, or other device" is defined in 18 U.S.C. §2510(5) to mean any device or apparatus which can be used to intercept communications. Two exceptions exist.

The first exception is for telephone instruments which are furnished by a communications common carrier and are being used in the ordinary course of business by the subscriber. The legislative history suggests that the genesis of the wording of the provision is found, in part, in the testimony of Hubert L. Kertz, Vice President of Operations, American Telephone and Telegraph Company (AT&T):

We would suggest [that the definitions] be revised to exclude from the definition of the term "electronic, mechanical, or other device," not only extension telephones, but all telephone instruments, equipment or facilities, or components thereof, used by a communications common carrier or any of its subscribers.

Hearings on the Right of Privacy Act of 1967, Before a Subcomm. of the Senate Comm. on the Judiciary, 90th Cong., 1st Sess. 586 (1967). Mr. Kertz noted that supervisory observing equipment is supplied to airlines, newspapers, and department stores. Id. at 587. He stated that AT&T insists in writing that employees be notified of the interceptions. Id. at 587 and 588. The equipment is only provided to businesses for insuring "that the quality of service that is provided . . . be good and that the airline or the department store is most interested in seeing to it that the employees at the switchboard or at the answering console are courteous and provide satisfactory service to their customers." Id. at 588. Responding to the question whether a notice should be placed on each telephone instrument subject to monitoring, Mr. Kertz replied, "I think we have got in our practices adequate protection for the privacy of the employees." Id.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Mr. Kertz does not provide the final word on what became 18 U.S.C. §2510(5)(a)(1). His proposal would have exempted absolutely from the definition of "electronic, mechanical, or other device" all telephone equipment and facilities installed by a communications common carrier in the ordinary course of its business. Instead, the provision exempts only such telephone facilities "used . . . in the ordinary course of business. . . ."

There are three possible precreators for the "ordinary course" exemption. The first is Federal Communications Commission (FCC) Commissioner Loevinger. He testified that the FCC believed that criminal liability should not depend on the origin of the extension telephone instrument. Instead of the proposed exemption for "telephone instruments furnished to the subscriber or user in the ordinary course of its business," he proposed an exemption for "an extension telephone in normal use by the subscriber or user." Id. at 518. The difficulty with giving credit to Mr. Loevinger for the provision is that his suggestion was ultimately rejected: 18 U.S.C. §2510(5)(a)(1) requires both installation by a communications common carrier and ordinary usage to qualify for the exemption.

In Simpson v. Simpson, 490 F.2d 803, 809 n.17 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 897 (1974), the court finds the genesis of the "ordinary use" language in the testimony of Professor Herman Schwartz in Hearings on the Anti-Crime Program Before a Subcomm. of the House Comm. on the Judiciary, 90th Cong., 1st Sess. 989 (1967). Since the eavesdropping legislation ultimately came from the Senate, we have examined the Senate hearings in which Professor Schwartz also testified. There he objected to the unqualified exclusion for telephone extensions and highlighted three instances that concerned him: (1) an eavesdropper might break into a building and listen on an extension, (2) the police might coerce someone into permitting them to listen on an extension, and (3) someone might obtain improper authority to listen on the extension. Senate Hearings, supra, at 395. But Professor Schwartz cannot be given all the credit for the "ordinary use" language. More than anyone else, we suspect that the credit belongs to Mr. Joseph A. Beirne, President of the Communications Workers of America. Mr. Beirne testified strongly against the entire concept of supervisory observing. Senate Hearings, supra, 466-68 and 476-78.

It thus appears that the "ordinary use" provision is a compromise between Kertz's position of permitting everything and Beirne's position permitting nothing. The key must be that the "ordinary use" provision was designed to protect privacy. The testimony of both Professor Schwartz and Mr. Beirne strongly supports this conclusion.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Supervisory observing equipment is designed for surreptitiously intercepting communications. Thus it may be argued that an "ordinary use" of supervisory observing equipment is to intercept communications without regard to privacy. However, such a view ignores the legislative history of 18 U.S.C. §2510(5)(a)(i). Rather than accepting Mr. Kertz's proposal for the blanket exception of telephone equipment, including supervisory observing facilities, Congress limited the exception to "ordinary use." Both Mr. Beirne's and Professor Schwartz's testimony shows that "ordinary use" must be read in privacy terms. Thus supervisory observing equipment is not exempted by the "ordinary use" provision unless at least one party has been notified of the existence and use of such equipment. Not only is this notification requirement found in Mr. Kertz's testimony in 1967, but it is part of present AT&T policy, at least as it pertains to subscriber use of such equipment. In a letter dated September 8, 1975, to the National Commission for the Review of Federal and State Laws Relating to Wiretapping and Electronic Surveillance, William Caming, Attorney for AT&T, wrote:

It is Bell System policy to furnish supervisory observing and service training assistance equipment solely to assist business subscribers in better evaluating the quality of telephone service being rendered by those of its employees handling calls placed "to the business." The implementation of this policy relies on adherence to administrative practices and intrastate tariff provisions which, in general, impose restrictions and conditions on the provision of this service, such as the following:

- Furnished only to business subscribers;
- Subscriber shall inform its employees their business telephone contacts are subject to observation;
- Service provided solely for purpose of determining the need for training or improving the quality of service rendered by employees in the handling of telephone calls to the subscriber of an impersonal business nature;

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

- Limitation of use to administrative lines only in connection with hotel, motel, club or like service involving public use, and may not be used for observing conversations between guest rooms or between guest rooms and other locations involving use of the message telephone network;
- Observing equipment may not be used for any other purpose;
- Subscriber shall not use service in manner contrary to tariff or law;
- Subscriber shall agree in writing to use the equipment solely for the purpose stated above, and to fully inform all affected employees.

Staff Studies and Surveys, National Commission for the Review of Federal and State Laws Relating to Wiretapping and Electronic Surveillance, 510-11 (1976).

In short, the "ordinary use" of supervisory observing equipment, which is required to bring it within the 18 U.S.C. §2510(5)(a)(i) exception, is installation and use for the purposes described above, plus notice. See James v. Newspaper Agency Corporation, 591 F.2d 579 (10th Cir. 1979). However, we know of no instance where a criminal prosecution was brought because a business misused such equipment.

The courts of appeals do not agree on the scope of the 18 U.S.C. §2510(5)(a)(i) exception as it pertains to telephone extensions. In our view, the better reasoning is found in United States v. Harpel, 493 F.2d 346 (10th Cir. 1974). In that case the court held that "a telephone extension used without authorization or consent to surreptitiously record a private telephone conversation is not used in the ordinary course of business. This conclusion comports with the basic purpose of the statute, the protection of privacy . . . ." Id. at 351. But cf. Briggs v. American Air Filter, Inc., 630 F.2d 414 (5th Cir. 1980); Anonymous v. Anonymous, 558 F.2d 677 (2d Cir. 1977).

9-60.216 Hearing Aid Exception

18 U.S.C. §2510(5)(b) excludes from the definition of "electronic, mechanical, or other device" a hearing aid used to correct subnormal

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

hearing to not better than normal. As a theoretical matter, use of an aid to hear sound that would otherwise be inaudible to a person with normal hearing in the same circumstances does not fall within this exception.

9-60.217 "Person" (18 U.S.C. §2510(6))

The term "person" is defined in 18 U.S.C. §2510(6) to mean any individual person as well as natural and legal entities. It specifically includes United States and state agents. According to the legislative history, "Only the governmental units themselves are excluded." S. Rep. No. 1097, 90th Cong., 2d Sess. 90 (1968).

9-60.218 "Contents" (18 U.S.C. §2510(8))

The term "contents" is defined in 18 U.S.C. §2510(8) to mean "any information concerning the identity of the parties [to a] communication or the existence, substance, purport, or meaning of that communication . . ." Even the "fact of the communication" is intended to fall within the definition. S. Rep. No. 1097, 90th Cong., 2d Sess. 91 (1968). In United States v. New York Telephone Company, supra, the Supreme Court held that a pen register, which discloses only the telephone numbers dialed, does not "intercept" (as that term is defined in 18 U.S.C. §2510(4)) the "contents" (as that term is defined in 18 U.S.C. §2510(8)) of communications since it does "not hear sound" and does not disclose whether the call was completed.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-60.219 "Endeavor" (18 U.S.C. §2511(1))

The term "endeavor," used in section 2511(1)(a)-(d), is defined to mean any effort to accomplish the acts that the statute was intended to prevent. The word "endeavor" is intended to be broader in scope than the word "attempt." See Osborn v. United States, 385 U.S. 323 (1966); United States v. Russell, 255 U.S. 138, 143 (1921).

9-60.220 "Willfully" (18 U.S.C. §2511(1))

The word "willfully" as used in 18 U.S.C. §2511(1)(a)-(d) and §2512(1) is defined in its legislative history by a reference to United States v. Murdock, 290 U.S. 389 (1933). See S. Rep. No. 1097, 90th Cong., 2d Sess. 93 (1968). Nevertheless, two courts have held that a mistaken belief that eavesdropping is legal is no defense to a charge under 18 U.S.C. §2511. See United States v. McIntyre, 582 F.2d 1221, 1224-25 (9th Cir. 1978); United States v. Schilleci, 545 F.2d 519, 526 (5th Cir. 1977).

9-60.230 18 U.S.C. §2511

9-60.231 Scope of Prohibitions

18 U.S.C. §2511 prohibits the unauthorized interception, disclosure, and use of wire and oral communications. The prohibitions are absolute, subject only to the specific exemptions in Title III. Consequently, unless an interception is specifically authorized, it is impermissible and, assuming existence of the requisite criminal intent, violates 18 U.S.C. §2511. See 9-60.202, supra.

18 U.S.C. §2511(1)(a) is a blanket prohibition against the willful interception, endeavor to intercept, or procurement of another person to intercept or endeavor to intercept any wire or oral communication. Although in a prosecution for illegally intercepting oral communications, the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals found that 18 U.S.C. §2511(1)(a) has as an essential element proof of "some basis for federal jurisdiction,"

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

United States v. Burroughs, 564 F.2d 1111, 1115 (4th Cir. 1977), the Criminal Division believes that case was incorrectly decided. Nevertheless, unless a compelling case is presented for charging otherwise, 18 U.S.C. §2511(1)(b) should be charged in interception of oral communications cases.

Unlike 18 U.S.C. §2511(1)(a), paragraph (b) of 18 U.S.C. §2511(1) is applicable only to oral communications. It is less pervasive than the prohibition against the interception of oral communications contained in 18 U.S.C. §2511(1)(a) and was included because of the question concerning the constitutionality of paragraph (a). See S. Rep. No. 1097, 90th Cong., 2d Sess. 92 (1968); United States v. Burroughs, supra, at 1115. Although the interception of an oral communication may violate more than one subparagraph of 18 U.S.C. §2511(1)(b), a person may be convicted of only one offense under the section. See S. Rep. No. 1097, 90th Cong., 2d Sess. 93 (1968).

18 U.S.C. §2511(c) and (d) provide additional penalties for the disclosure and use of illegally intercepted communications. The use or disclosure must be accompanied by knowledge or reason to know that the information concerned was obtained through an interception which violated 18 U.S.C. §2511(1). The legislative history shows that the phrase "knowing or having reason to know" is understood by referring to the case of Pereira v. United States, 347 U.S. 1 (1954). See S. Rep. No. 1097, 90th Cong., 2d Sess. 93 (1968). That case suggests that the knowledge element of a criminal offense can be satisfied either when the subject has actual knowledge or when the occurrence of the element "can reasonably be foreseen." Pereira v. United States, supra, at 9.

Once the contents of an intercepted communication have become "public information" or "common knowledge," disclosure or use of the contents of the communication is no longer prohibited. See S. Rep. No. 1097, 90th Cong., 2d Sess. 93 (1968).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-60.232 Constitutional Basis

Congress recited various findings and legislative conclusions in support of its enactment of Title III of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act. 82 Stat. 211-12 (1968) (see historical note in 18 U.S.C.A. §2510). These findings, as well as the specified jurisdictional elements in 18 U.S.C. §2511 and §2512 leave no doubt of the statute's constitutionality except, perhaps, to the extent that it applies to the interception of oral communications. See, e.g., Weiss v. United States, 308 U.S. 321 (1939), cited in, S. Rep. No. 1097, 90th Cong., 2d Sess. 92 (1968).

With respect to the interception of oral communications, Congress found that the contents of such communications were being used by persons whose activities affect interstate commerce and were being intercepted by devices whose possession, manufacture, distribution, advertising, and use were facilitated by interstate commerce. 82 Stat. 211 (1968). These findings, once it is accepted that a rational basis exists for them (see Katzenbach v. McClung, 379 U.S. 294, 303-04 (1964); Communist Party v. Subversive Activities Control Board, 367 U.S. 1, 94-95 (1961)), show that the interception of oral communications is a "class of activities" which can be appropriately regulated by the Congress. And once the "class of activities" is appropriately regulated, Congress may legislate under the Commerce Clause to reach individual instances of electronic eavesdropping in which the nexus with interstate commerce is lacking:

Where the class of activities is regulated and that class is within the reach of federal power, the courts have no power "to excise, as trivial, individual instances" of the class.

Perez v. United States, 402 U.S. 146, 154 (1971).

In addition to the exercise of its Commerce Clause powers, Congress intended to assert its power under the fifth clause of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution in prohibiting the unauthorized interception of oral communications. See S. Rep. No. 1097, 90th Cong., 2d Sess. 92 (1968) (citing United States v. Guest, 383 U.S. 745 (1966)). However, the Solicitor General has in the past declined to allow the Criminal Division to rely on this constitutional rationale.

9-60.240 Exceptions to the Prohibition Against Intercepting Communications

9-60.241 Interceptions By Common Carrier Personnel

18 U.S.C. §2511(a) (a) (1) permits employees of communication common carriers to intercept, disclose, or use wire communications in the normal course of employment while engaged in any activity which is necessarily incident to the rendition of service or to the protection of the rights or property of the carrier of the communication. Interception, divulgence, or use for other purposes is not permitted. The provision allows telephone companies to combat "blue box" toll fraud by intercepting portions of telephone calls which have been completed by circumventing the companies' billing systems. See United States v. Auler, 539 F.2d 642 (7th Cir. 1976); United States v. Clegg, 509 F.2d 605 (5th Cir. 1975).

9-60.242 Law Enforcement Interceptions Accomplished Consensually

18 U.S.C. §2511 (2)(c), a person who is acting under color of law may intercept communications when he/she is a party to a communication or when a communicating party consents to the interception. Cf. United States v. White, 401 U.S. 745 (1971).

9-60.243 Other Consensual Interceptions

When not acting under color of law, a person who intercepts a communication with the consent of a party does not violate 18 U.S.C. §2511(1) unless he/she intercepts for a criminal, tortious, or other injurious reason. 18 U.S.C. §2511(2)(d). The language concerning criminal, tortious, or other injurious acts was added as a floor amendment to Title III by Senator Hart. He explained the amendment by stating that:

one party [consensual interceptions are] also prohibited when the party acts in any way with an intent to injure the other party to the conversation . . . . For example the secret consensual recording may be made for the purpose of blackmailing the other party, threatening him, or publicly embarrassing him. The provision would not, however, prohibit such activity when the party records information of criminal activity by the other party with the purpose of taking such information to the police as evidence.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Nor does it prohibit such recording in other situations when the party acts out of a legitimate desire to protect himself and his own conversations from later distortions or other unlawful or injurious uses by the other party.

114 Cong. Rec. 14694 (1968). See S. Rep. No. 1097, 90th Cong., 2d Sess. 175-76 (1968) (additional views of Senator Hart).

The legislative history indicates that consent may be expressed or implied. Indeed, "[s]urveillance devices in banks or apartment houses for institutional or personal protection would be impliedly consented to." S. Rep. No. 1097, 90th Cong., 2d Sess. 94 (1968).

The implied-consent provision has not been treated expansively by the courts. Indeed, in Campiti v. Walonis, 611 F.2d 387, 396 (1st Cir. 1979), the court, apparently unaware of the appropriate legislative history, stated that "there is no implied consent exemption under the federal statute." Moreover, in Crooker v. United States Department of Justice, 497 F. Supp. 500, 503 (D. Conn. 1980), the court found that an inmate's knowledge of the fact that interceptions were occurring coupled with the prison administration's need for engaging in such monitoring were insufficient to establish consent.

In our view, a more thoughtful analysis can be found in Watkins v. L. M. Berry & Company, 704 F.2d 577 (11th Cir. 1983). In Watkins, the company for which plaintiff worked had a policy of monitoring employee sales calls as part of its regular training program. Employees were informed of the monitoring but told that personal calls would not be monitored except as necessary to determine whether a particular call was made for personal or business reasons. Nevertheless, a plaintiff's supervisor monitored a personal call, although how much of the call she heard was not clear. The district court granted summary judgment for the defendant. During the appeal, the defendants argued that plaintiff's acceptance of employment, knowing of the monitoring policy, constituted consent for the interception of the call.

The court of appeals noted that "consent is not to be cavalierly implied," but found that the plaintiff consented to the interception of business but not personal calls. Consequently, it reversed the district court.

The Criminal Division is convinced that consent can be implied in appropriate circumstances. Tying together the threads of Title III's legislative history and case law, we believe that there is a three-pronged test for implied consent. First, the communication (i.e. something akin to institutional or personal protection). Second, the intercepting party must limit the interception to the minimum necessary to fulfill that interest. And third, the intercepting party must notify a communicating party that his/her communications are subject to interception.

9-60.244 Other Exceptions

In addition to the authorized interceptions discussed above, the remaining two major kinds of authorized interceptions are (1) court-authorized or emergency interceptions conducted pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §2516 et seq., and (2) electronic surveillance conducted pursuant to the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act (50 U.S.C. §1801 et seq.).

9-60.250 Proof of 18 U.S.C. §2511(1) Violations

It is important to remember that in any prosecution based on the interception of wire communications, the government must establish, pursuant to the definition of a wire communication in 18 U.S.C. §2510(1), that the intercepted communications were made in whole or in part through the facilities of a communication common carrier engaged in providing facilities for the transmission of interstate or foreign communications. Proof that a telephone facility is operated by a common carrier can normally be established through judicial notice. However, failure to seek such notice can be fatal to the government's case. See United States v. Jones, 580 F.2d 219 (6th Cir. 1978); United States v. Blattel, 340 F. Supp. 1140 (D. Iowa 1972). But cf. United States v. Lentz, 624 F.2d 1280 (5th Cir. 1980).

The essential elements of a 18 U.S.C. §2511 (1)(a) violation are: (1) the act or acts of intercepting, endeavoring to intercept, or procuring any other person to intercept or endeavor to intercept a wire or oral communication and (2) the doing of such act or acts willfully. These elements contain sub-elements. A wire communication, as noted above, must be made through facilities for the transmission of wire communications by the aid of cable or other like connection furnished or operated by a communication common carrier in providing or operating such facilities for the transmission of interstate or foreign communications (18 U.S.C. §2510(1)). An oral communication must be uttered by a person having a justifiable expectation of privacy (18 U.S.C. §2510(2)).

The essential elements of a 18 U.S.C. §2511(1)(b) violation are: (1) the act or acts of using, endeavoring to use, or procuring another person to use or endeavor to use an electronic, mechanical, or other device or its method of operations or communication; (2) the device or its method of operation or target meets one of the criteria specified in 18 U.S.C. §2511(1)(b)(1)-(v); and (3) the doing of such act or acts willfully.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The essential elements of a violation of 18 U.S.C. §2511(1)(c) are: (1) the act or acts of disclosing or endeavoring to disclose to another person the contents of a wire or oral communication; (2) the doing of such act or acts knowing or having reason to know that the information was obtained through an illegal interception of a wire or oral communication; and (3) the doing of such act or acts willfully.

The essential elements of a violation of 18 U.S.C. §2511(1)(d) are: (1) the act or acts of using or endeavoring to use the contents of a wire or oral communication; (2) the doing of such act or acts knowing or having reason to know that the information was obtained through an illegal interception of a wire or oral communication; and (3) the doing of such act or acts willfully.

9-60.251 Lesser Offenses

There are two lesser offenses which, in limited circumstances, overlap with 18 U.S.C. §2511.

A. The first is 47 U.S.C. §502 which prohibits the willful violation of Federal Communications Commission regulations. Two pertinent regulations are found at 47 C.F.R. §2.701 and §15.11 which prohibit the use of radio devices to intercept or record conversations unless all parties to the conversation first consent. Since the penalty for a violation of 47 U.S.C. §502 is merely a maximum fine of $500 for each day on which a violation occurs, a charge under the section for a nonconsensual interception seems unduly lenient and would rarely be appropriate.

B. The second misdemeanor violation is 18 U.S.C. §242 which penalizes persons acting under color of law who deprive individuals of their civil rights. The statute is administered by the Civil Rights Division and prior authorization from that Division is required before a prosecution can be brought. Although 18 U.S.C. §242 may technically be available, law enforcement violators of the electronic surveillance prohibitions represent high priority targets for prosecution. Consequently, only in the most compelling circumstances should a charge or a plea to a charge under 18 U.S.C. §242 be considered.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-60.260 Prosecutive Policy--18 U.S.C. §2511

9-60.261 State Laws

Title III does not preempt the authority of the states to legislate concerning the interception of communications. Cf. S. Rep. No. 1097, 90th Cong., 2d Sess. 98 (1968) ("The proposed provision [concerning court-authorized interceptions] envisions that States would be free to adopt more restrictive legislation, or no legislation at all, but not less restrictive legislation.") The protection of privacy is as much a matter for local concern as protection of persons and property. Accordingly, the efforts of federal law enforcement personnel should supplement, not supplant, local action.

1984 USAM (superseded)

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

U.S. Attorneys should review the applicable statutes in their states. When there is no statute or when the existing statutes are inadequate, U.S. Attorneys should work through their federal-state law enforcement committees to obtain the enactment of appropriate legislation. When suitable state legislation exists but is not sufficiently used by local prosecutors, U.S. Attorneys should make efforts to stimulate local enforcement.

9-60.262 Overall Prosecutive Policy

The Department's overall prosecutive policy under 18 U.S.C. §2511 is to focus primarily on persons who engage or procure illegal electronic surveillance as part of the practice of their profession or as incident to their business activities. Less emphasis should be placed on the prosecution of persons who, in the course of transitory situations, intercept communications on their own without the assistance of a professional wiretapper or eavesdropper. This does not mean that such persons are never to be prosecuted, but simply that this type of prosecution is not a major thrust of the Department's enforcement program.

Most illegal interceptions fall into one of five categories: (1) domestic relations, (2) industrial espionage, (3) political espionage, (4) law enforcement, and (5) intrabusiness. The largest number of interceptions, more than 75 percent, are in the domestic relations category.

9-60.263 Vigorous Enforcement

It is the Department's policy to vigorously investigate and prosecute illegal interceptions of communications which fall within the industrial and political espionage, law enforcement, and intra-business categories. Generally such violations will have interstate ramifications which will make federal prosecution preferable to state prosecution. Nevertheless, in cases where the federal interest is slight, it may be appropriate to defer to state prosecution.

9-60.264 Domestic Relations Disputes

Illegal interceptions arising from domestic relations disputes generally present less of a federal interest and, therefore, local prosecution is more appropriate. However, this does not mean that federal prosecutors should abdicate responsibility for prosecuting such interceptions. Indeed, in view of the preponderance of this kind of interception, no enforcement program can be effective without the initiation of some prosecutions for deterrence purposes. U.S. Attorneys should develop effective liaison with local prosecutors in order to convince them to shoulder their share of the burden.

Within the category of domestic relations violations, primary attention should be given to those instances in which a professional is involved, e.g., private detective, attorney, moonlighting telephone company employee, and supplier of electronic surveillance devices. U.S. Attorneys should feel free to pursue these cases or refer them to local prosecutors; however, no professional should escape prosecution when a prosecutable case exists.

Domestic relations violations which do not involve a professional interceptor are the lowest priority cases for federal prosecution. While local prosecution is normally preferable, when local prosecutors are unwilling to pursue the case, resort to federal prosecution may be appropriate. Nevertheless, violations of this type will sometimes prove to be of insufficient magnitude to warrant either federal or state prosecution. In such cases, other measures may prove sufficient, for example, a civil suit for damages (18 U.S.C. §2520), suppression of evidence (18 U.S.C. §2515), or forfeiture of the wiretapping or eavesdropping paraphernalia (18 U.S.C. §2513).

9-60.265 Disturbed Persons

Disturbed persons often suspect that they are the victims of illegal interceptions. Consequently, a complaint, which is based solely on suspicious noises heard on the telephone, normally does not merit further investigation if the initial line check fails to produce independent evidence of a tap.

9-60.266 Law Enforcement Agencies

In the investigation of electronic surveillance allegations made against law enforcement agencies, U.S. Attorneys should monitor closely every aspect of the investigation to assure a vigorous effort.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-60.267 Use of Immunity

The clandestine nature of unlawful electronic surveillance often presents a formidable obstacle to successful investigation and prosecution. For this reason the need for a grant of immunity from prosecution, issued pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §§6001 et seq., sometimes proves indispensable. When necessary, consideration should be given to immunizing the least culpable "nonprofessional" person or persons who are necessary to develop a prosecutable case against an involved professional interceptor or supplier of interception devices.

9-60.268 Law on Interspousal Wiretaps

In Simpson v. Simpson, 490 F.2d 803 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 897 (1974), the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals held that the civil-remedies portion of Title III of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act (18 U.S.C. §2520) does not permit recovery by a wife in a suit against her husband for his wiretapping the telephone in the marital home. Unfortunately the Simpson decision suggests that such interspousal wiretapping is not a crime. Since domestic relations wiretapping is the preponderant kind of electronic surveillance, the Simpson case represents a significant inroad into the blanket prohibition contained in 18 U.S.C. §2511. (Fortunately, even the Simpson court suggested that no derivative spousal immunity exists to protect third parties who act at the behest of a spouse. Simpson v. Simpson, supra, 490 F.2d at 809; see United States v. Rizzo, 583 F.2d 907, 910 (7th Cir. 1978)).

The Criminal Division believes that Simpson, supra, where it finds that interspousal wiretapping does not violate Title III, is incorrectly decided. Indeed, the weight of judicial authority indicates that the Simpson court erred. See United States v. Jones, 542 F.2d 661 (6th Cir. 1976); Flynn v. Flynn, 560 F. Supp. 922 (N.D. Ohio 1983); Heymann v. Heymann, 548 F. Supp. 1041 (N.D. Ill. 1982); Kratz v. Kratz, 477 F. Supp. 463 (E.D. Pa. 1979); cf. Anthony v. United States, 667 F.2d 870 (10th Cir. 1982).

9-60.269 Applicability of 18 U.S.C. §2511 to the Interception of Radio Communications

If Title III and its legislative history are viewed from an overall perspective, then it is clear that radio communications are a third kind of communication, different from either wire or oral communications.

Under this view, point-to-point radio communications must be governed exclusively by 47 U.S.C. §605. Unfortunately, confusion is created by the anomalous reference in 18 U.S.C. §2511 (2)(b) to an "oral communication transmitted by radio," which was cited by the court in United States v. Hall, 488 F.2d 193, 196 (9th Cir. 1973), in holding that point-to-point radio communications are a form of oral communication falling within the purview of 18 U.S.C. §2511. Nevertheless, even if we accept the rationale in Hall, it would appear that the interception of an unscrambled point-to-point radio communication would not violate 18 U.S.C. §2511 since there can be no justifiable expectation of privacy in the communication. See United States v. Rose, 669 F.2d 23 (1st Cir. 1983). (It should be noted that the interception of the radio portion of a mobile to land-line telephone call can violate 18 U.S.C. §2511 since the definition of a "wire communication" in 18 U.S.C. §2510(1) includes any communication made "whole or in part" through the use of wire facilities. Wire communications, of course, need not be accompanied by a justifiable expectation of privacy, see, e.g., United States v. Hall, supra, 488 F.2d at 196).

9-60.270 Use of the Contents of Illegally Intercepted Communications Against the Interceptor

18 U.S.C. §2515 prohibits use of the contents of illegally intercepted communications as evidence in judicial proceedings. No exception is contained on the face of the statute for the use of the contents, when necessary, as evidence in a prosecution against the interceptor. Nevertheless, the legislative history of Title III indicates that "in certain limited situations disclosure and use of illegally intercepted communications would be appropriate to the proper performance of the officers' duties." See S. Rep. No. 1097, 90th Cong., 2d Sess. 99 (1968). The example given is the use and disclosure of illegally intercepted communications "in the investigation and prosecution of an illegal wiretapper himself." Id. at 99-100.

At least when the victims of the interceptions consent, the contents of the communication may be used against the interceptors. See United States v. Bragan, 499 F.2d 1376 (4th Cir. 1976). However, when the victims object, at least when the contents of the illegally intercepted communications are not necessary to prove the charges, one court has held that such contents may not be introduced at trial. See United States v. Liddy, 12 Cr. L. Rep. 2343 (D.C. Cir., Jan. 19, 1973)(otherwise unreported), rev'd, United States v. Liddy, 354 F. Supp. 217 (D.D.C. 1973).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-60.271 Electronic Surveillance in Prisons

Electronic surveillance within prisons generally involves the interception of oral, as opposed to wire, communications. Even when a visitor and prisoner are separated by a shield and speak over a "telephone," the communications are usually "oral" because the lines lack the requisite interstate nexus to be wire communications. See 18 U.S.C. §2510(1). Thus, prisoner-to-prisoner and visitor-to-prisoner oral communications in a prison are protected by Title III only in those instances in which the communicating parties have a justifiable expectation of privacy.

The Senate Report relevant to Title III states that an expectation of privacy "would clearly be unjustified in certain areas; for example, a jail cell. . ." See S. Rep. No. 1097, 90th Cong., 2d Sess. 90 (1968). In support of the proposition, it cites Lanza v. New York, 370 U.S. 139 (1962), a case in which the conversations of an inmate and his brother were intercepted. Therefore, it is doubtful that the interception by prison officials of communications between prisoners and visitors, other than attorneys, would form an appropriate basis for a prosecution under 18 U.S.C. §2511. See Christman v. Skinner, 468 F.2d 723 (2d Cir. 1972).

The willful interception of a communication between a prisoner and an attorney must be analyzed differently. The need for privacy during an attorney-client communication is so weighty and the recognition of the attorney-client privilege is so widespread, that even in prison, an attorney-client communication should normally be attended by a justifiable expectation of privacy. See Lanza v. New York, supra, 370 U.S. 143-44. Consequently, a prosecution under 18 U.S.C. §2511 could be maintained for the willful interception of a communication between an inmate and an attorney.

While "oral communications" are defined to include an expectation of privacy requirement (18 U.S.C. §2510(2)), "wire communications" are defined to include no such element (18 U.S.C. §2510(1)). See, e.g., Briggs v. American Air Filter Company, Inc., 630 F.2d 414, 417 & n.4 (5th Cir. 1980). Thus, the fact that a communicating inmate has no justifiable expectation of privacy when he or she communicates on the telephone does not necessarily result in the conclusion that interceptions of prisoner telephone communications are permissible. See Campiti v. Walonis, 611 F.2d 387 (1st Cir. 1979). In drawing the line between legal and illegal interceptions of prisoner telephone calls, the courts distinguish between calls intercepted pursuant to established prison regulations and accompanied by notice, which are legal, see United States v. Paul, 614

F.2d 115 (6th Cir. 1980); Crooker v. Department of Justice, 497 F. Supp. 500 (D. Conn. 1980), and other interceptions, which are illegal, see Campiti v. Walonis, supra, 611 F.2d 387.

9-60.280 18 U.S.C. §2512

9-60.281 Scope of Prohibitions

18 U.S.C. §2512 provides penalties for conduct concerning devices which are "primarily useful for the purpose of the surreptitious interception of wire and oral communications." It prohibits sending such devices through the mail or in interstate or foreign commerce. See 18 U.S.C. §2512(1)(a). It prohibits manufacturing, assembling, possessing, or selling such devices when a device or component has been sent through the mail or in interstate or foreign commerce. See 18 U.S.C. §2512(1)(b). Finally, it prohibits the publication of an advertisement (1) concerning any device if the advertisement promotes the use of the device for the purpose of surreptitious interceptions or (2) concerning devices which are primarily useful for the surreptitious interceptions of communications.

The legislative history indicates that the statutory prohibition applies to:

a relatively narrow category of devices whose principal use is likely to be for wiretapping or eavesdropping. . . . The prohibition will thus be applicable to, among others, such objectionable devices as the martini olive transmitter, the spike mike, the infinity transmitter, and the microphone disguised as a wristwatch, picture frame, cuff link, tie clip, fountain pen, stapler, or cigarette pack . . . . By banning these devices, a significant source of equipment highly useful for illegal electronic surveillance will be eliminated.

See S. Rep. No. 1097, 90th Cong., 2d Sess. 95 (1968). This list shows that there are two broad proscribed categories of devices: (1) devices which are disguised and (2) devices which are designed to intercept communications occurring at a distance from the listener (e.g., spike mike and infinity transmitter). The legislative history anticipates the use of expert testimony "in close cases." See S. Rep. No. 1097, 90th Cong., 2d Sess. 95 (1968). However, the history specifically exempts parabolic and other directional microphones "ordinarily used by broadcasters at sports events" from the reach of the statute. Id.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

It is worthy of note that 18 U.S.C. §2512(1)(c)(ii) prohibits the advertisement of any device for "surreptitious interception." Such advertising is prohibited although the device itself may not be primarily useful for surreptitious interceptions and although the interceptions promoted are surreptitious, one-party consensual interceptions permissible under 18 U.S.C. §2511 (2)(d). See United States v. Bast, 495 F.2d 138 (D.C. Cir. 1974).

9-60.282 Exceptions to 18 U.S.C. §2512 Prohibitions

Except for advertising, the 18 U.S.C. §2512 prohibitions do not apply to communication common carriers acting in the normal course of their business, see (18 U.S.C. §2512 (2)(a)); to the United States, States, or political subdivisions acting in the normal course of their activities, see (18 U.S.C. §2512(2)(b)); or to persons acting under contract with such carriers or governmental entities. The exceptions are necessary to effect the electronic surveillance authority given to common carriers, see (18 U.S.C. §2511(2)(a)(i)) and to law enforcement agencies, see (18 U.S.C. §2516). Consequently, the meaning of the phrases "normal course of . . . business" and "normal course of . . . activities" in 18 U.S.C. §2512 is best understood by referring to the interception authority found elsewhere in Title III.

As noted above, the statute exempts persons "under contract with" communications common carriers and government agencies from its possession and sale prohibitions. This does not mean that a manufacturer can keep an inventory of prohibited devices in anticipation of a privileged sale; he/she must be "under contract." Moreover, not even the legitimate dealer is exempt from the advertising prohibitions.

An issue that deserves discussion is whether police forces in states, whose legislatures have not enacted appropriate statutes enabling law enforcement officials to engage in court-authorized electronic surveillance (see 18 U.S.C. §2516(2)), may possess equipment which is primarily useful for intercepting communications without the consent of any communicating party. It is not in the "normal course of . . . activities" of the law enforcement agency to engage in nonconsensual electronic surveillance; therefore, possession of 18 U.S.C. §2512 devices for nonconsensual interception purposes cannot be excused by 18 U.S.C. §2512 (2)(b). Absent such an offending purpose, possession of such equipment is not necessarily illegal. Police agencies in non-authorization states are authorized to engage in consensual interceptions, 18 U.S.C. §2511(2)(c), and some of the offensive surveillance equipment may be suitable for consensual interceptions. For example, in a meeting between an undercover agent and a suspect in a motel room, a law enforcement agency might prefer to use a spike microphone to record the conversation rather than use a body recorder which is subject to discovery during a search of the undercover agency. But cf. United States v. Padilla, 520 F.2d 526 (1st Cir. 1975). Consequently, the possession of a device like a spike microphone by a police force in a non-authorization state would be permissible under 18 U.S.C. §2512(2)(b) as long as its use was limited to consensual interceptions.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-60.283 Prosecutive Policy

Flagrant violators of 18 U.S.C. §2512 should be prosecuted vigorously, especially violators who possess such devices in order to engage in electronic surveillance as a business.

Less culpable first offenders and those who violate the statute because of ignorance of the law may be appropriate subjects for more lenient disposition. In some cases a warning may be sufficient. Nevertheless, in all cases except, perhaps, for minor advertising violations, the U.S. Attorney's office should require that the prohibited device either be surrendered voluntarily to the FBI or forfeited pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §2513.

9-60.290 Miscellaneous

Any device used in a violation of 18 U.S.C. §2511 or sent, carried, manufactured, assembled, possessed, sold, or advertised in violation of 18 U.S.C. §2512 may be seized and forfeited to the United States pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §2513. The legislative history of the statute shows that 18 U.S.C. was intended to "impose an additional penalty on the individual who violates the provisions of sections 2511 and 2512. . ." S. Rep. No. 1097, 90th Cong., 2d Sess. 95 (1968).

When a prosecution is concluded or when prosecutive action is declined, all devices which have been used in violation of 18 U.S.C. §2511 and all devices sent, carried, manufactured, assembled, possessed, sold, or advertised in violation of section 2512, if their value is less than $10,000, should be delivered to the United States Marshal for the district in which the seizure was made for forfeiture. See 28 C.F.R. §8.2. If the value of the devices exceeds $10,000, then the U.S. Attorney should institute proceedings for their forfeiture. See 19 U.S.C. §1607 and §1610.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-60.291 Interception of Radio Communications: 47 U.S.C. §605

The first sentence of Section 605 of Title 47, United States Code, prohibits persons, who transmit or receive wire or radio communications, from divulging such communications except to authorized persons. According to the legislative history, the provision "is designed to regulate the conduct of communications personnel." S. Rep. No. 1097, 90th Cong., 2d Sess. 108 (1968). The section also prohibits either the unauthorized interception and divulgence or interception and use of radio communications.

The nature of radio communications is such that there is the potential for a multitude of petty 47 U.S.C. §605 violations which do not warrant the initiation of federal prosecutions. Consequently, the proper use of federal law enforcement resources usually requires that investigation and prosecution of 47 U.S.C. §605 violations be reserved for those cases in which there is a continuing, repeated, and flagrant violation of the law despite the application of lesser measures. It should be noted that the Cable Communications Policy Act of 1984 carved out an exception for the interception of satellite cable programming by an individual for private viewing. Prior to the Act, such an interception and use was, arguably, a violation of the law.

The work "person" in 47 U.S.C. §605 does not include a law enforcement officer acting in the usual course of his or her duties. See United States v. Hall, 488 F.2d 193 (9th Cir. 1973); S. Rep. No. 1097, 90th Cong., 2d Sess. 108 (1968). Consequently, not only is 47 U.S.C. §605 inapplicable to interceptions by law enforcement agents, it is also inapplicable to the instance where a person, who is not acting under color of law, intercepts a radio communication and divulges it only to a law enforcement officer acting in the normal course of his or her duties. However, if the intercepted transmission is the radio portion of a wire communication, then the felony prohibitions in 18 U.S.C. §2511 are applicable not only to the disclosure, but to the interception also. See United States v. Hall, supra.

It is here worth discussing the case of United States v. Rose, 669 F.2d 23 (1st Cir. 1983). In that case, an employee of the Federal Communications Commission intercepted a suspicious radio transmission and listened for five hours. He then turned the information over to the United States Coast Guard which intercepted further and then dispatched a cutter to where two vessels were transferring bales of marijuana. At their trial on drug charges, defendants moved to suppress the marijuana because, they alleged, their communications were intercepted unlawfully. The First Circuit Court of Appeals refused to reverse the district court's decision admitting the evidence, since, the appellate court found, 47 U.S.C. §605 not violated unless the communicating parties have both a subjective and reasonable expectation of privacy.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

To understand Rose, one must begin with the case of United States v. Hall, 488 F.2d 193 (9th Cir. 1973). The court in Hall incorrectly found that there are only two kinds of communications for the purpose of analysis under Title III of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968: wire communications and oral communications. Therefore, radio communications must necessarily be oral communications. Rose, apparently agreeing that radio communications are oral communications, read a justifiable-expectation-of-privacy requirement into 47 U.S.C. §605 (cf. 18 U.S.C. §2510(2)).

1984 USAM (superseded)

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The Rose and Hall analysis fails if we view the entire universe of Title III communications as composed of three kinds of communications: (1) wire, (2) oral, and (3) radio. If viewed thus, there is no justification for grafting the definition of "oral communication" onto Section 605. Indeed, the Criminal Division believes that 47 U.S.C. §605 has no justifiable-expectation-of-privacy element.

While the reasoning of Rose is incorrect, the result is proper. Since Coast Guard officials were acting in a law enforcement capacity, the disclosure of the radio communication to them and interception and use of other portions of the communication by them was not prohibited by 47 U.S.C. §605.

9-60.292 Unauthorized Reception of Cable Service: 47 U.S.C. §553

The Cable Communications Policy Act of 1984 added a new section, 47 U.S.C. §553. This section prohibits receiving cable communications service without permission of the operator, thereby prohibiting the theft of commercial cable communications.

The Act provides for both criminal and civil penalties for violations of this section. Willful violation for personal use is punishable by a fine of not more than $1,000 and/or imprisonment for not more than six months. Willful violation for commercial advantage or private financial gain is punishable by a fine of not more than $25,000 and/or imprisonment for not more than one year for the first offense. For subsequent willful violations for commercial advantage or private financial gain, the penalty is doubled. The victim of an interception may bring a civil action in federal court for an injunction, damages, and costs, including reasonable attorney's fees. Since there is a civil remedy for violations of 47 U.S.C. §553, U.S. Attorneys should consider whether this civil remedy is an adequate alternative to prosecution.

9-60.300 INTERSTATE EXTORTION: COMMUNICATIONS AND THREATS (18 U.S.C. §§875-877)

9-60.310 Description

18 U.S.C. §875 prohibits the transmission in interstate commerce of: (1) any demand or request for ransom or reward for the release of any kidnapped person; (2) a threat to kidnap or injure any person, either with or without the intent to extort; or (3) with intent to extort, a threat to injure the property or reputation of any person, including the reputation of a deceased person, or a threat to accuse any person of a crime.

18 U.S.C. §876 prohibits causing the mailing by the Postal Service, or the depositing for mail, of matter which contains: (1) a demand or request for ransom or reward for the release of any kidnapped person; (2) a threat to kidnap or injure any person either with or without the intent to extort; or (3) with intent to extort, a threat to injure the property or reputation of any person or deceased person, or threat to accuse any person of a crime.

18 U.S.C. §877 prohibits the mailing, in a foreign country for final delivery by the Postal Service within the United States of any communication containing: (1) a demand or request for ransom or reward for the release of any kidnapped person; (2) a threat to kidnap or injure any person, either with or without the intent to extort; (3) with intent to extort, a threat to injure the property or reputation of any person, including the reputation of a deceased person, or a threat to accuse any person of a crime.

9-60.320 Jurisdictional Requirements of 18 U.S.C. §875

This section applies only to interstate telephone calls or other communications that cross state lines. See United States v. Oxendine, 531 F.2d 957 (9th Cir. 1976).

9-60.330 Investigative Jurisdiction

Investigative jurisdiction for these statutes is vested in the FBI, with the following exception: the Postal Service investigates the depositing for mail, or causing to be so delivered, of any threat to injure the reputation of any person or to accuse any person of a crime.

√9-60.340 Supervisory Jurisdiction

Supervisory jurisdiction for these statutes is vested in the General Litigation and Legal Advice Section of the Criminal Division, FTS 724-6948.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-60.350 Special Considerations

A threat has been defined as "an avowed present determination or intent to injure presently or in the future." See United States v. Dysart, 705 F.2d 1247, 1256 (10th Cir. 1983); United States v. Marino, 148 F. Supp. 75, 77 (N.D. Ill. 1957). See also 2 E. Devitt and C. Blackmar, Federal Jury Practice Instructions, §66.04; (3d ed. 1977). Most courts have held that the government need not prove that the defendant actually intended to carry out the threat. See, e.g., United States v. Dysart, supra, at 1257; United States v. Hall, 493 F.2d 904, 905 (5th Cir. 1974), cert. denied, 422 U.S. 1044 (1975); United States v. Kelner, 534 F.2d 1026, 1025 n.6 (2d Cir. 1976), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 1022 (1977) (collecting cases). Contra, United States v. Patillo, 438 F.2d 13, 16 (4th Cir. 1971) (en banc). These decisions require only that the government prove that the defendant had the specific intent to communicate, by means of a facility of interstate commerce, a threat to injure. See, e.g., United States v. Kelner, supra, at 1023. The issue of defendant's intent in uttering particular words (e.g., whether an alleged threat was made seriously or merely in jest), is a question of fact to be determined by the jury upon consideration of the words themselves and the circumstances surrounding their use. See United States v. Carrier, 672 F.2d 300, 304-06 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 457 U.S. 1139 (1982); United States v. Lincoln, 589 F.2d 379, 381-82 (8th Cir. 1979); United States v. Maisonet, 484 F.2d 1356, 1358 (7th Cir. 1973) (if reasonable recipient familiar with context of communications would interpret communications as a threat, the issue should go to jury).

There is no requirement that the government prove that the defendant had the present ability to carry out his/her threat, United States v. Lincoln, 589 F.2d at 1023, or that the threat actually induced fear in the mind of the recipient. See United States v. Holder, 302 F. Supp. 296 (1969), aff'd, 427 F.2d 715 (9th Cir. 1970). Further, a threat may be communicated to persons others than the person to whom the threat is directed. See, e.g., United States v. Cooper, 523 F.2d (6th Cir. 1975) (threats to injure fictitious person made during calls to radio station). See also United States v. Kelner, supra (defendant threatened during television interview to assassinate foreign leader).

The Ninth Circuit has stated that, as a general rule, the truth of damaging allegations underlying a threat to injure the reputation of another is no defense to a charge of extortion. See United States v. Vander Linden, 561 F.2d 1340, 1341 (9th Cir. 1977), cert. denied, 435 U.S. 974 (1978).

The making of certain obscene or harassing calls is a violation of 47 U.S.C. §223. See USAM 9-63.400, infra.

9-60.370 Bomb Threats

The use of the mails, telephone, telegraph or other interstate commerce to make a threat or to maliciously convey false information concerning an alleged or actual attempt to injure any person or property by means of an explosive is a violation of 18 U.S.C. §844. See USAM 9-63.900, infra.

9-60.380 Threats Against the President, Certain other Federal Officials, and Certain Foreign Officials

Separate sections of Title 18 make it a crime to threaten the President, 18 U.S.C. §871, see USAM 9-65.200, infra; certain federal candidates and officials, 18 U.S.C. §879; and specified foreign guests and officials, 18 U.S.C. §878, see USAM 9-65.800, infra.

9-60.400 CRIMINAL SANCTIONS AGAINST ILLEGAL ELECTRONIC SURVEILLANCE--THE FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE SURVEILLANCE ACT (FISA), 50 U.S.C. §1809

9-60.401 Introduction

In the past sixteen years Congress has enacted two separate statutes governing electronic surveillance. Beginning in 1968, with Title III of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968, 18 U.S.C. §2510 et seq., and continuing with the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act of 1978 (FISA), 50 U.S.C. §1801 et seq., Congress has established a comprehensive body of law regulating this area.

These two statutes share several common characteristics. Both prescribe authorization procedures which must be followed before surveillance can be conducted. Compare 18 U.S.C. §§2516-17 with 50 U.S.C. §§1802-05. These procedures include judicial approval of surveillance applications; minimization of interceptions by surveilling officials; and limitations on the use of intercepted information. Moreover, both statutes impose civil and criminal sanctions on unauthorized surveillance activities. Compare 18 U.S.C. §§2511 (criminal penalties) and 2520 (civil sanctions) with 50 U.S.C. §§1809 (criminal penalties) and 1810 (civil sanctions).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Yet there are also significant differences between these two statutes. Title III of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act and the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act were designed to reach different types of activity. Thus, forms of surveillance which are encompassed by one statute may not be included under the other. The differences between Title III and FISA are most dramatically illustrated by the criminal provisions of the two statutes. The criminal section of the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act, 50 U.S.C. §1809, is at the same time both broader and narrower than the corresponding provisions of Title III. As discussed below, section 1809 covers a wider range of surveillance activities than does Title III. Yet, the criminal sanctions of that section apply to a much narrower class of individuals.

These differences have obvious significance for federal prosecutors. A full appreciation of the differences between the criminal provisions of FISA and Title III is necessary to the effective enforcement of either statute. 18 U.S.C. §§2511 and 2512, the criminal sections of Title III, are already discussed in detail in this Manual. See USAM 9-60.200 et seq. Accordingly, the purpose of these sections is to describe 50 U.S.C. §1809, the criminal provision of the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act. These sections will focus particularly on the elements of an offense under 50 U.S.C. §1809. Specific topics discussed include: the intent requirement for section 1809; the types of surveillance prohibited by that section, and the persons to whom FISA applies. These sections will also highlight, where appropriate, the differences between section 1809 and the complementary provisions of Title III.

9-60.402 Investigative Jurisdiction and Supervisory Responsibility

Investigative jurisdiction over violations of 50 U.S.C. §1809 rests with the Federal Bureau of Investigation. Supervisory responsibility for prosecutions involving section 1809 rests with the General Litigation and Legal Advice Section of the Criminal Division. Prior authorization of the Criminal Division is not required for instituting these prosecutions. U.S. Attorneys with questions regarding the application of section 1809 are encouraged, however, to contact the General Litigation and Legal Advice Section for assistance.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-60.410 50 U.S.C. §1809: Elements of the Offense

50 U.S.C. §1809(s) provides that:

A person is guilty of an offense if he intentionally -

(1) engages in electronic surveillance under color of law except as authorized by statute; or

(2) discloses or uses information obtained under color of law by electronic surveillance, knowing or having reason to know that the information was obtained through electronic surveillance not authorized by statute.

Like all criminal statutes, section 1809(a) defines what is prohibited in terms of both actions and intent. It is this coupling of a specific act with a particular state of mind which constitutes a crime. Therefore, in considering the elements of an offense under section 1809 it is appropriate to examine separately the intent required for an offense and the acts prohibited by the law. These two basic elements are described below.

9-60.411 The Intent Requirement

Section 1809(a) forbids any person from "intentionally" engaging in unauthorized electronic surveillance under color of law or using information obtained from such surveillance, knowing or having reason to know that the surveillance was not authorized. The use of the term "intentionally" suggests that violations of 50 U.S.C. §1809(a) are specific intent crimes.

This suggestion is made explicit by the legislative history to section 1809(a) which states that:

"The word 'intentionally' was carefully chosen. It is intended to reflect the most strict standard for criminal culpability. What is proscribed is an intentional violation of an order or one of the specified (statutory) provisions, not just intentional conduct. The Government would have to provide (sic) beyond a reasonable doubt that the conduct engaged in was in fact a violation and that it was engaged in with 'a conscious objective or desire' to commit a violation."

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

H.R. Rep. No. 1283, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 1, 97 (1978). Thus, it is clear that section 1809 is a specific intent crime which reaches only purposeful or deliberate efforts to engage in unauthorized surveillance or to use information obtained from unauthorized electronic surveillance.

9-60.412 Prohibited Acts

Under 50 U.S.C. §1809(a) a person violates the law when he/she engages in unauthorized electronic surveillance under color of law or discloses or uses information obtained under color of law through unauthorized electronic surveillance. 50 U.S.C. §1809(a)(1) and (2). Thus, section 1809(a) reaches two distinct acts. These are: (1) engaging in unauthorized electronic surveillance under color of law or (2) using or disclosing information obtained under color of law through unauthorized electronic surveillance.

In either event, however, the conduct proscribed by the statute involves unauthorized "electronic surveillance." Therefore, the term "electronic surveillance" in large measure defines the scope of this criminal sanction. For this reason, any understanding of the scope of section 1809(a) requires some consideration of this term.

9-60.413 Electronic Surveillance

Under the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act, "electronic surveillance" is defined to include "the acquisition by an electronic, mechanical, or other surveillance device of the contents of any wire communication to or from a person in the United States, without the consent of any party thereto, if such acquisition occurs within the United States . . . ." 50 U.S.C. §1809(f)(2). The "contents" of wire communications are, in turn, defined to include "any information concerning the identity of the parties to such communication or the existence, substance, purport, or meaning of that communication." 50 U.S.C. §1801(n). By defining electronic surveillance to include the receipt of information concerning the identity of parties to a wire communication or the existence of that communication, the statute suggests that the surveillance covered by FISA includes more than simply intercepting the verbal contents of some communication.

The legislative history of the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act confirms that this broad definition of electronic surveillance was intended to reach beyond verbal interceptions to other activities. In fact, the House Report on the Act expressly states that:

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The surveillance covered by paragraph (2) [of 50 U.S.C. §1801(f)] is not limited to the acquisition of the oral or verbal contents of a wire communication. It includes the acquisition of any other contents of the communication, for example, where computerized data is transmitted by wire. Therefore, it includes any form of 'pen register' or 'touchtone decoder' device which is used to acquire, from the contents of a wire communication, the identities or locations of the parties to that communication.

H.R. Rep. No. 1283, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 51 (1978); see S. Rep. No. 701, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 35 (1978).

By defining electronic surveillance to include interception of nonverbal information, FISA extends the protection of the law beyond that previously provided by either Title III or the Constitution. See Smith v. Maryland, 442 U.S. 735 (1979) (Fourth Amendment does not apply to pen registers); United States v. New York Telephone Co., 434 U.S. 157 (1977) (Title III does not apply to pen registers). This change has particular significance for criminal law enforcement. It means that FISA's criminal sanctions reach activities which would be permitted under Title III. For example, the legislative history of the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act reflects a clear congressional intent that 18 U.S.C. §1809 limit the ability of law enforcement officers to use nonconsensual, warrantless pen registers. As the House Report explains:

[50 U.S.C. §1809(a)(1)] carries forward the criminal provisions of chapter 119 [of Title III of the Omnibus Crime Control Act] and makes it a criminal offense for officers or employees of the United States to intentionally engage in electronic surveillance under color of law except as specifically authorized in chapter 119 of Title III and this title. Since certain technical activities--such as the use of pen registers--fall within the definition of electronic surveillance under this title, but not within the definition of wire or oral communications under chapter 119, the bill provides an affirmative defense to a law enforcement or investigative officer who engages in such an activity for law enforcement purposes in the course of his official duties, pursuant to a search warrant or court order.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

H.R. Rep. No. 1283, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 96 (1978) [emphasis added]. Thus, unlike Title III, FISA prohibits surveillance which does not involve interception of the verbal contents of any wire communication. Therefore if some surveillance device identifies the parties to a wire communication or the fact that such communication has occurred, it is encompassed by FISA. Under section 1809(a) the unauthorized use of such a device could constitute a criminal offense.

While the legislative history of section 1809 only refers to pen registers, it seems clear that the statute would prohibit other warrantless, nonverbal interceptions as well. The broader scope of FISA is illustrated by the following examples.

9-60.414 Computer Data Transmissions

Computers frequently rely upon wire communications to exchange data. These data transmissions are not verbal communications, yet through these transmissions a great deal of information is exchanged. Computer data transmissions provide yet another example of the broad reach of the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act. Title III would not prohibit the interception of computerized data carried by wire, since that interception would not involve "the aural acquisition of the contents of (a) wire . . . communication . . . ." 18 U.S.C. §2510(4) [emphasis added]. In contrast, interception of computer data transmissions would fall within the definition of "electronic surveillance" under FISA. Indeed, the legislative history of the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act specifically states that the Act reaches "the acquisition of any other contents of (a wire) communication, for example, where computerized data is transmitted by wire." H.R. Rep. No. 1283, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 51 (1978).

9-60.415 Pagers

Another device which illustrates the differences between Title III and FISA is the pager. A pager is a device which informs individuals of telephone messages when they are away from a telephone. All pagers receive radio signals, alerting their users to incoming telephone calls. The form of these radio transmissions may vary, however.

There are three common types of pagers. The first type is the "tone only" pager. This device emits a sound--usually a "beep"--upon receipt of a radio transmission when the user receives a telephone call. The user of the "tone only" pager must then contact his/her office or answering service to obtain the message left by the caller. A more sophisticated type of pager is the "display pager." This device will record and display a digital message to its user when a call is received. Finally, an even more sophisticated pager is the "tone and voice pager." This device receives a short verbal message from the caller.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

With respect to the "tone only" pagers, Title III and FISA apply in the same way. Neither statute reaches the interception of the radio signals transmitted to a "tone only" pager. Title III would not apply since the contents of a communication are not overheard. See 18 U.S.C. §2510(4). Nor would FISA apply. FISA only prohibits the interception of radio communications when the communications are made "under circumstances in which a person has a reasonable expectation of privacy." 50 U.S.C. §1801(f)(1). Since the message transmitted by a "tone only" pager is not a communication over which there would be a reasonable expectation of privacy, FISA should not prohibit its interception.

Similarly, both FISA and Title III would apply to the verbal messages transmitted by "tone and voice" pagers. Since the communication transmitted by this type of pager is in part verbal and was sent in part by wire, it would be protected under either statute.

"Display pagers," however, would be treated differently under FISA and Title III. Title III would not apply to such pagers because the acquisition of a digital message is not an aural acquisition. See 18 U.S.C. §2510(4). Yet FISA may prohibit the interception of digital radio signals since these signals are transmitted under circumstances which may give rise to a reasonable expectation of privacy.

In short, because of its broader reach, prosecutors must be sensitive to FISA's applicability in any case involving wire interception. Indeed, the broader reach of section 1809(a) has a dual significance for federal law enforcement. At the outset it means that prosecutions can be based on conduct, such as the use of pen registers, which does not violate Title III. But section 1809(a) also affects the way in which investigations are conducted. While the warrantless use of pen registers and other similar devices is permitted under Title III and the Fourth Amendment, section 1809 suggests that unauthorized use of these devices may be forbidden. Therefore, law enforcement officers who fail to obtain court authorization may be exposed to civil or criminal liability under the Act. See 50 U.S.C. §§1809 and 1810.

For this reason it is the policy of the Department of Justice to require federal law enforcement officers in every case to obtain a court order authorizing the installation and use of a pen register or other similar device. Procedures for obtaining such orders are described in USAM 9-7.231.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-60.420 Persons Covered by 50 U.S.C. §1809(a)

Yet another significant difference between 50 U.S.C. §1809 and the complementary sections of Title III involves the persons who are subject to these criminal sanctions. While FISA extends to a broader range of surveillance activities than does Title III, its criminal sanctions apply to a much smaller class of people. The criminal provision of Title III, 18 U.S.C. §2511, forbids "any person" from willfully intercepting oral or wire communications. Thus, Title III prohibits unlawful interception both by law enforcement officials, United States v. McIntyre, 582 F.2d 1221 (9th Cir. 1978), and by private individuals, United States v. Jones, 542 F.2d 661 (6th Cir. 1976).

In contrast, 50 U.S.C. §1809(a) only applies to those who engage in surveillance under color of law or use information obtained under color of law through electronic surveillance. By defining criminal liability in terms of acts taken "under color of law," section 1809(a) suggests that only persons cloaked with some governmental authority can violate this section. Thus, electronic surveillance conducted exclusively by private individuals would not violate 50 U.S.C. §1809.

The scope of 50 U.S.C. §1809 is further limited by subsection (d) of that statute, which provides that: "(t)here is federal jurisdiction over an offense under this section if the person committing the offense was an officer or an employee of the United States at the time the offense was committed." Thus, jurisdiction exists over violations of section 1809(a) only if the person acting under color of law was also a federal officer or employee. The addition of this subsection to the Act has the practical effect of limiting criminal liability under FISA to the actions of federal officials. See H. R. Rep. No. 1283, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 96 (1978) (50 U.S.C. §1809 "makes it a criminal offense for officers or employees of the United States to engage in electronic surveillance under color of law except as authorized in . . . Title III and this title.")

9-60.430 Penalties

Violations of 50 U.S.C. §1809 are punishable by as much as five years imprisonment, a $10,000 fine, or both. 50 U.S.C. §1809(c). The same penalty is imposed under Title III for violations of its criminal provisions. 18 U.S.C. §§2511(1) and 2512(1).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

In many instances electronic surveillance may violate both 50 U.S.C. §1809 and 18 U.S.C. §2511. For example, any intentional unauthorized interception of wire communications done by federal officials could violate both statutes. Yet it is clear that Congress did not intend for a single act to be punished under both statutes. The legislative history of section 1809 expressly addresses this issue. In its report on section 1809 the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence stated that:

Theoretically, because the definition of electronic surveillance in this title includes most activities encompassed within the term "interception of wire or oral communication" in (Title III), a single offense could violate both (50 U.S.C. §1809) and the criminal provision of (Title III). The committee intends that in such cases the Government proceed under only one of the provisions, not both.

H. R. Rep. No. 1283, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 97 (1978).

Thus, the legislative history of section 1809 unambiguously states that the same act may not be punished as a violation of both FISA and Title III of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act. Indeed, given this clear expression of legislative intent, it would seem that cumulative punishment of one act under both statutes would violate the Double Jeopardy Clause of the Fifth Amendment. See Missouri v. Hunter, 459 U.S. 359 (1983) (legislative intent determines whether two crimes are the same "offense" for purposes of the Double Jeopardy Clause).

9-60.500 CRIMINAL SOLICITATION

9-60.501 Overview

Section 373 of Title 18, United States Code, defines and punishes the offense of solicitation to commit a federal crime of violence. Congress believes that a person who makes a serious effort to induce another person to commit a crime of violence is a clearly dangerous person and that this act deserves criminal sanctions whether or not the crime of violence is actually committed. The purpose of section 373 is to allow law enforcement officials to intervene at an early stage where there has been a clear demonstration of an individual's criminal intent and danger to society. If the solicited crime of violence is actually carried out, the solicitor is punished as an aider and abettor. See Senate Report No. 225, 98th Cong., 1st Sess. 308-310 (1983).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-60.510 Investigative Jurisdiction

The Federal Bureau of Investigation has investigative jurisdiction. Where the underlying felony is within the investigative jurisdiction of another federal law enforcement agency, it may be appropriate for that other agency to be involved in or assume responsibility for investigating the solicitation. This issue is to be resolved on a case by case basis.

9-60.520 Supervisory Jurisdiction

Supervisory jurisdiction is exercised by the General Litigation and Legal Advice Section.

9-60.530 Elements

18 U.S.C. §373 contains two essential elements. First, the offender must have the intent that another person engage in conduct constituting a federal felony that has as an element the use, attempted use, or threatened use of violence against the person or property of another. That intent must be manifested by circumstances strongly corroborative of its existence. Second, he/she must command, entreat, induce, or otherwise endeavor to persuade that other person to engage in such conduct.

9-60.531 Intent

Expressly included in the first element is a requirement that the circumstances show that the offender is serious in his/her intention. The existence of strongly corroborating circumstances is a question of fact for the jury. Certain circumstances would be highly probative of the seriousness of the individual's intent, including but not limited to:

A. The fact that payment of some other benefit was offered to commit the offense;

B. The fact that reasonably apprehended harm or other detriment was threatened if the offense were not committed;

C. The fact that there were repeated solicitations to the same or different individuals to commit the offense; or

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

D. The fact that express credible protestations of seriousness were made in the solicitation.

The legislative history indicates that it is appropriate and desirable for the court to instruct the jury that circumstances such as those listed above tend to corroborate the existence of the required intent, and should be considered by the jury in making its determination. Similarly, it is appropriate for the court to instruct the jury concerning pertinent circumstances that tend to cast doubt on the existence of an intention that a violent felony be committed.

9-60.532 Conduct

The second element of the offense is that the offender engage in conduct characterizable as commanding, entreating, inducing, or endeavoring to persuade. For example, an order to commit an offense made by a person who stands in a relation of influence or authority over another constitutes a "command;" and threatening another if he/she will not commit an offense, or offering to pay him/her if he/she will, constitutes an "inducement." The phrase "otherwise endeavors to persuade" is intended to apply to any situation where a person seriously seeks to persuade another person to commit a violent felony. It is not intended, however, to reach the situation where an attempt to communicate a solicitation to another person is made, but the communication never reaches the intended recipient.

9-60.540 Violent Felony

It is significant the Congress did not merely refer to 18 U.S.C. §16 in defining the types of offenses of which solicitation is made criminal. 18 U.S.C. §16 defines a crime of violence as:

- (a) an offense that has as an element the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force against the person or property of another, or
- (b) any other offense that is felony and that, by its nature, involves a substantial risk that physical force against the person or property of another may be used in the course of committing the offense.

18 U.S.C. §373 is limited to solicitations of federal felonies that have as an element the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

See 18 U.S.C. §16(a). Consequently, the solicitation of a felony which meets the criteria of 18 U.S.C. §16(b), such as burglary, would not be a violation of 18 U.S.C. §373. The force may be against the person, e.g., assault, or against property, e.g., arson, but it must be the "property of another." Thus solicitation to commit arson of the solicitor's building is not proscribed. The concept of "property of another," in this context would be broad enough to encompass mortgaged property of the defendant where the mortgagee has only a security interest, as well as where title is vested in the mortgagee. See S. Rep. No. 307, 97th Cong., 1st Sess. 711-713 (1981), commenting on §§111 and 1731 of S. 1630 (the Criminal Code Reform Act of 1981). Reliance upon S. 1630 and its legislative history is appropriate inasmuch as the definition of "crime of violence" in the new 18 U.S.C. §16 is taken from that source. S. Rep. No. 225, 98th Cong., 1st Sess. 307 (1983). This history does not indicate whether the interest of an insurer would be covered. The force can be "threatened," as in extortion. 18 U.S.C. §373 does not penalize solicitation of violent misdemeanors.

9-60.550 First Amendment Implications

While 18 U.S.C. §373 prohibits words of instigation, the legislative intent is clear that what is made criminal is legitimately proscribable incitation to criminal activity, and not the mere advocacy of ideas, which is protected by the First Amendment. See S. Rep. No. 225, supra, at 309.

9-60.560 Penalty

18 U.S.C. §373 sets the penalty for solicitation as not more than one-half the maximum term of imprisonment or fine or both fixed for the crime solicited. It also provides that if the crime solicited is punishable by death, the maximum penalty for its solicitation is twenty years imprisonment.

9-60.570 Affirmative Defense--Renunciation

Subsection (b) of 18 U.S.C. §373 provides for an affirmative defense of renunciation. The defendant bears the burden of proving, by a preponderance of the evidence, that he/she voluntarily and completely abandoned his/her criminal intent and that he/she actually prevented the commission of the crime solicited. To be voluntary and complete, the renunciation must not be motivated by a decision to postpone the crime or to substitute another victim or objective. In addition, the defendant must actually prevent the crime; a mere effort or attempt to prevent the crime is not sufficient to meet the requirements of the defense.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-60.580 Culpability of Solicitee

Solicitation is an offense whether or not the solicited crime is committed. The fact that the solicitee can not be convicted of the violent felony is not a defense to a prosecution for criminal solicitation, any more than it is in a prosecution for aiding and abetting the substantive offense. A person is not less guilty of the commission of a crime because he used the overt behavior of an innocent or irresponsible agent. See Nigro v. United States, 117 F.2d 624 (8th Cir. 1941); United States v. Brandenburg, 155 F.2d 110 (8th Cir. 1946). The solicitee's lack of responsibility or capacity may be relevant, however, in determining the seriousness of the solicitor's intent since an entreaty to a very young child or an incapacitated person may indicate a lack of serious purpose. In addition, the refusal by the solicitee of a proposal or the fact that his/her agreement was feigned is also no defense.

9-60.590 Merger

The purpose of this statute is to allow law enforcement officials to intervene as early as possible to prevent criminal behavior. Consequently, if the solicitee successfully completes the criminal act, the solicitor may be prosecuted as an aider and abettor of the solicited act. S. Rep. No. 225, supra, at 308. The solicitation merges into the completed offense. See R. Perkins, Perkins on Criminal Law, 2d. Ed. (1969), at 584.

9-60.600 FELONY MURDER

9-60.601 Overview

Section 1111(a) of Title 18, United States Code, defines and prohibits murder in the first and second degree. First degree murders are divided into three categories: those which are premeditated, those which occur in the perpetration of, or the attempt to perpetrate, certain enumerated felonies, and those in which the death of an unintended victim results from a premeditated design to kill another. The enumerated felonies are arson, rape, burglary, robbery, escape, murder, kidnapping, treason, espionage, and sabotage.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-60.602 Legislative History

At common law, any killing which occurred during the commission of a felony was considered to have been committed with sufficient malice to warrant punishment as first degree murder. As the number of felonies expanded there was an increasing tendency to statutorily limit application of the felony murder rule to the original common law felonies or to those felonies deemed deserving of the harshest treatment. The most recent amendment to 18 U.S.C. §1111(a) is consistent with this history, adding to the list an offense which was treated as a felony under the common law (murder) and some offenses which are generally conceded to be among the most dangerous to society (kidnapping, escape, treason, espionage and sabotage). 18 U.S.C. §1111(a) contains a provision, unchanged by the recent amendments, which directs that an unintentional killing of a third person, committed in the course of an attempted or completed premeditated murder, be treated as first degree murder.

Murder has been included in the amended list to cover the situation in which the defendant acts in the heat of passion to kill A, but instead kills B. The Senate Judiciary Committee was of the view "that the danger presented to innocent persons in this situation is so severe that a defendant should be charged with first degree murder." See Senate Report No. 225 on S. 1762, 98th Cong., 1st Sess. 311 (1983).

9-60.610 Federal Jurisdiction

There is no federal jurisdiction unless the act which inflicts the fatal injury occurs on the federal enclave. 18 U.S.C. §§1111(b), 3236; United States v. Parker, 622 F.2d 298 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 851 (1980). However, there would appear to be jurisdiction of a homicide committed on an enclave even when the underlying felony occurred wholly outside the federal enclave, as where the killing occurs while the defendant is fleeing the crime scene. See W. LaFave and A. Scott, Criminal Law, 109-110, 118-121 (1972).

9-60.620 Investigative Jurisdiction

The Federal Bureau of Investigation normally has investigative jurisdiction. Where the underlying felony is within the investigative jurisdiction of another federal law enforcement agency, it may be appropriate for that other agency to be involved in or assume responsibility for investigating the homicide. This issue is to be resolved on a case by case basis.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-60.630 Supervisory Jurisdiction

Supervisory jurisdiction is exercised by the General Litigation and Legal Advice Section, 724-6971 and 7526.

9-60.640 Elements

There are two essential elements. First, a felony must be perpetrated or attempted. All elements of the underlying felony or the attempt to commit the underlying felony must be proved. See United States v. Herman, 576 F.2d 1139 (9th Cir. 1978); United States v. Lilly, 512 F.2d 1259 (9th Cir. 1975). Second, a killing must have resulted. The killing must occur during the res gestae of the felony but it may occur before, during, or after the felony. See United States v. Kaiser, 545 F.2d 467 (5th Cir. 1977); United States v. Bolden, 514 F.2d 1301 (D.C. Cir. 1975); R. Perkins, Criminal Law 94-95 (2d ed. 1968).

9-60.650 Conspiracy, Aiding and Abetting, and Unintended Victims

The doctrines of conspiracy and aiding and abetting apply fully to prosecutions under the murder statute. See United States v. Sampol, 636 F.2d 621, 675 (D.C. Cir. 1980). The murder statute permits prosecution for the murders of unintended victims. However, thorny problems are presented where the unintended victim--a bystander or a codefendant--has been killed by law enforcement authorities attempting to apprehend the defendant. There is no federal case law on these issues. Persuasive authority can be found in state court decisions, and guidance can be found in LaFave and Scott, supra, 548-554, and Perkins, supra, 720-722. Additional authority can be found under the federal bank robbery statute, 18 U.S.C. §2113(e), although it must be remembered that under the federal bank robbery statute the killing need not be part of the res gestae of the offense. See, e.g., United States v. Delay, 500 F.2d 1360 (8th Cir. 1974) (bank president and his family murdered in an attempt to avoid apprehension for bank robbery).

9-60.700 HOSTAGE TAKING (18 U.S.C. §1203)

9-60.710 Investigative Jurisdiction

The Federal Bureau of Investigation has investigative jurisdiction over violations of 18 U.S.C. §1203.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-60.720 Supervisory Jurisdiction

General Litigation and Legal Advice Section.

9-60.730 Prosecutive Policy

It is the view of the Department of Justice that most hostage taking matters that arise within the United States can best be handled by state and local authorities. However, there may at times be situations in which federal involvement is appropriate (e.g., if the hostage is a federal official or an international guest, the third party is the United States, the perpetrators are international terrorists, etc.). Because of the strong preference for state and local handling of hostage taking matters within the United States, attorneys for the government should discuss a proposed prosecution with the Criminal Division prior to its initiation. In cases of hostage taking outside the United States, other factors, such as legal issues regarding the exercise of extraterritorial jurisdiction, foreign policy considerations, and costs, are involved; therefore, it is mandatory that attorneys for the government seek approval from the Criminal Division prior to the initiation of a proposed prosecution.

9-60.740 Discussion of the Offense

9-60.741 General

18 U.S.C. §1203 is intended to implement fully the International Convention Against the Taking of Hostages. See International Legal Materials, Vol. XVIII, No. 6, November 1979, at 1457-1463.

9-60.742 Hostage Taking

Under the Convention, hostage taking is the seizing or detaining of an individual coupled with a threat to kill, injure, or continue to detain that individual in order to compel a third person or a governmental organization to do or abstain from doing any act as an explicit or implicit condition for the release of the detained individual. It is clearly the intent of the Congress that the statutory phrase "third person or a governmental organization" include everything covered by the term "third party" used in the Convention. The term "government organization"

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

covers national, state, and local governments as well as international governmental organizations. See 18 U.S.C. §831(f)(2). The term "person" covers "corporations, companies, associations, firms, partnerships, societies, and joint stock companies, as well as individuals." See 1 U.S.C. §1.

9-60.743 Offense--18 U.S.C. §1203(a)

Subsection 1203(a) makes it a federal crime to engage in hostage taking when the jurisdictional conditions in subsection 1203(b) are present.

Sec. 9-60.742-.743
Ch. 60, p. 42a

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-60.744 Jurisdictional Conditions--18 U.S.C. §1203(b)

Subsection 1203(b) sets forth the limits on federal jurisdiction over the crime of hostage taking.

A. Offenses Committed Outside the United States

If the hostage taking occurs outside the territorial jurisdiction of the United States, subsection 1203(b)(1) provides for federal jurisdiction in three circumstances: (a) if the perpetrator or one of the hostage victims is a national of the United States; (b) if the perpetrator, regardless of his/her nationality or the nationality of the hostage victim, is subsequently found in the United States; or (c) if the United States Government is the third party which the hostage taker is attempting to compel to take certain action. Under the Convention, the United States is obligated to make hostage taking a federal crime in all of these situations except when the victim is an American, in which case the Convention permits, rather than requires, coverage. The Congress chose to provide such protection for Americans by utilizing the permissive authority of the Convention and the "passive personality" (i.e., nationality of the victim) basis for extraterritorial jurisdiction under international law.

B. Offenses Committed Within the United States

Article 13 of the Convention states that the Convention "shall not apply where the offense is committed within a single state [i.e., country], the hostage and the alleged offender are nationals of that state, and the alleged offender is found in the territory of that state." Subsection 1203(b)(2) reflects the treaty limitations contained in article 13 by stating that it is not an offense if the crime occurred in the United States, all participants and victims are United States nationals, and all alleged offenders are found in the United States, unless the hostage taking is to compel action by the United States Government. In practical terms, this means that an American robber who seizes an American cashier at a convenience store in a city in the United States, and who makes a demand upon a third party other than the United States Government, and who is caught in the United States, cannot be prosecuted federally under section 1203(a).

9-60.745 Penalty

The penalty set forth in 18 U.S.C. §1203 is imprisonment for any term of years or for life. Moreover, under new 18 U.S.C. §3623 (Alternative

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Fines), effective for offenses occurring on or after January 1, 1985, a fine up to $250,000 is also possible. (See Sections 6 and 10 of the Criminal Fine Enforcement Act of 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-596, October 30, 1984.)

9-60.750 Legislative History

18 U.S.C. §1203 was a complete revision--written in the closing days of the 98th Congress by the Subcommittee on Crime of the House Judiciary Committee--of the Administration's bills on hostage taking (H.R. 5689, 98th Cong., 2d Sess. and S. 2624, 98th Cong., 2d Sess.). There is no congressional report on the rewritten version. For an explanation of H.R. 5689 and S. 2624, as introduced, see the Message from the President of the United States Transmitting Four Drafts of Proposed Legislation to Attack the Pressing and Urgent Problem of International Terrorism, House Document 98-211, 98th Cong., 2d Sess. S. 2624 passed the Senate as introduced. See 130 Cong. Rec. S. 14360-14361 (daily ed. October 11, 1984).

9-60.760 Effective Date

18 U.S.C. §1203 became effective on January 6, 1985, when the United States became a party to the Convention after having deposited its instrument of ratification of the Convention with the United Nations on December 7, 1984.

9-60.800 SPECIAL FORFEITURE OF COLLATERAL PROFITS OF CRIME ("Son of Sam")
(18 U.S.C. §§3671 and 3672)

9-60.801 Summary of Forfeiture Statute

On October 12, 1984, the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984 was signed by the President and became Public Law No. 98-473. In Chapter XIV of that Act, Congress provided for victim compensation and assistance in what may be cited as the "Victims of Crime Act of 1984." Included in that Chapter is section 1406(a) which amends Title 18 of the United States Code by adding a new chapter (232) entitled "Special Forfeiture of Collateral Profits of Crime." This anti-profits of crime law is designed to forfeit the proceeds due a convicted defendant from his/her sale of literary rights about his/her violent crime. This so-called "Son of Sam" anti-profits of crime law contains two sections, numbered 3671 and 3672.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

New 18 U.S.C. §3671 authorizes the U.S. Attorney at any time after a conviction of a defendant for an offense against the United States resulting in physical harm to an individual, upon notice to interested parties (the defendant, the person with whom the defendant has contracted, any transferee of proceeds due the defendant, and any person physically harmed as a result of the offense for which the defendant has been convicted), to move for the entry of an order of forfeiture to capture the proceeds of any contract relating to a depiction of such crime or the expression of the defendant's thoughts, opinions or emotions regarding such crime. The court must grant the motion if it determines that the interests of justice or an order of restitution so requires. Once a forfeiture order is entered the U.S. Attorney shall, in the detail required by section 3672, give newspaper notice of the entry of such order. The notice informs victims that the proceeds may be used to satisfy a judgment obtained against the defendant by a victim of an offense for which the defendant has been convicted.

Under 18 U.S.C. §3671, upon the entry of a forfeiture order the person with whom the defendant has contracted must pay all proceeds due under the contract to the Attorney General. Any proceeds paid to the Attorney General must be held in escrow for five years in the Crime Victims Fund established under section 1402 of the Act. During this five-year period the proceeds can be levied on to satisfy a money judgment rendered by a United States district court in favor of a victim of an offense of which the defendant has been convicted. The funds may also be levied upon to satisfy a fine imposed by a court of the United States. Also, when ordered by the court in the interests of justice, the proceeds may be used to satisfy a money judgment rendered in any court in favor of an injured victim of any violent crime for which the defendant has been convicted. The proceeds may also be used to pay for the legal representation of the defendant in matters arising from the offense for which the defendant has been convicted (but no more than 20 percent of the total proceeds may be so used). At the end of the five-year escrow period, the court shall direct the disposition of any remaining proceeds, and may require that this residue be paid into the Crime Victims Fund in the Treasury.

9-60.810 Legal Discussion

There are three interrelated constitutional issues likely to be raised in any "Son of Sam" enforcement proceeding. These involve procedural due process of law, the First Amendment and the government's right to forfeit the proceeds. The floor statements with respect to these issues are to be found in the Cong. Rec. S. 14209, (daily ed. October 11, 1984) and Cong. Rec. H. 12086-7, (daily ed. October 10, 1984).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-60.811 Procedural Due Process of Law

The procedures specified for the entry of a forfeiture order and disposition of the proceeds would appear to satisfy the Fifth Amendment's requirements of procedural due process of law inasmuch as the order is entered by a court only after a judicial hearing with notice to all interested parties, (see North Georgia Fishing, Inc. v. Di-Chem, Inc., 419 U.S. 601 (1975); Fuentes v. Shevin, 407 U.S. 67 (1972); and Sniadach v. Family Finance Corp., 395 U.S. 337 (1969)), although in appropriate circumstances it would seem permissible for the government to seek a temporary restraining order to prevent a transfer of the proceeds until there has been a hearing on a pending motion for a forfeiture order. See Mitchell v. W.T. Grant Co., 416 U.S. 600 (1974).

9-60.812 The First Amendment

To the extent that First Amendment rights (of the defendant, the press and the public) are implicated, it will be a matter for the court to balance the overall interest of society and the specific interests of the victims of the defendant's crimes in ensuring that no federal felon profits from any depiction of his/her crime with the asserted First Amendment rights of the defendant, the person contracted with, and the public to speak and to know. These first amendment issues are discussed extensively in Note, Publication Rights Agreements in Sensational Criminal Cases: A Response to the Problem, 68 Cornell L. Rev. 686 (1983); Comment, In Cold Type, Statutory Approaches to the Problem of the Offender as Author, 71 Journal of Crim. Law and Criminology, Northwestern Univ. School of Law 255 (1980); Note, Compensating the Victim from the Proceeds of the Criminal's Story--The Constitutionality of the New York Approach, 14 Columbia Journal of Law and Social Problems 93 (1978), and Note, Criminals--Turned--Authors: Victims' Rights v. Freedom of Speech, 54 Ind. L. Jour. 443 (1978), and in the interests of brevity will not be repeated here except to say that if the forfeiture (as distinguished from the attachment) nature of the statute is deemed to impermissibly impinge upon protected First Amendment interests, the court should be encouraged to exercise its discretion and return any residue to the defendant after the payment of all restitution orders, civil judgments, and allowable attorneys' fees.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-60.813 The Government's Right to Forfeit the Proceeds

Any substantive contentions of the defendant with respect to the issuance of the forfeiture order, the various levies and payments thereunder and the ultimate transfer of any unlevied upon or unused proceeds to the Crime Victims Fund will also have to be resolved by the court. To assist the court in the resolution of these issues, the court should be informed that twenty-five states currently have "Son of Sam" statutes. They fall into three basic types.

A. The first type, modeled after the New York statute (Exec. Law §632-a) has been adopted by sixteen states: Alaska (§18.67.165); Georgia (§17-14-31); Idaho (§19-5301); Illinois (70 §401-410); Iowa (§910.15); Kentucky (§346.165); Massachusetts (Ch. 258A §8); Minnesota (§299B.17); Nebraska (§§81-1836 - 81-1840); New Mexico (§31-22-22); Pennsylvania (71 P.S. §180-7.18); South Carolina (§§15-59-40 - 15-59-80); Tennessee (§§29-13-201 - 29-13-206); Texas (Rev. Civil Statutes, Art. 8309-I §§16-18); and Washington (§§7.68.200 - 7.68.915). These are attachment statutes wherein at the end of the escrow period all unlevied upon moneys remaining in the escrow account are returned to the defendant.

B. Five states, using the second type, depart from the New York statute in the matter of disposing of the unlevied upon moneys remaining in the escrow account. In these states: Alabama (§§41-9-80 - 41-9-84); Arizona (§13-4202); Connecticut (§54-218); Louisiana (§§1832-1836); and Oklahoma (22 §17), the unlevied upon residue reverts to the state and is paid into the state's Crime Victims Fund.

C. The third type is a mix of the first two, and the remaining four states with "Son of Sam" statutes have some form of return to the defendant and payment to the state. In Florida (§944.512) there is automatically taken from the proceeds twenty-five percent for the defendant's dependents. Twenty-five percent is set aside for the satisfaction of victims' claims and up to fifty percent can be levied upon by the state to compensate it for the costs of prosecuting and confining the defendant. However, the residue, if any, goes to the defendant. In Indiana (§16-7-3.7-1 - 16-7-3.7-6) only ninety percent of the payments due the defendant is placed in an escrow account and the residue, in the discretion of the violent crime compensation division, "may" be paid into the violent crime victims compensation fund. In Nevada (§217.265) one-half of the money received by the offender based on his/her notoriety must be paid into the fund for the compensation of victims of crime and there is no provision for the return of any of this amount to the offender. And in South Dakota (§§23A-28A-1 - 23A-28A-14) if there is no claim against the escrow account by victims of the crimes committed by the defendant,

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

the escrow account is available to satisfy civil judgments obtained by any governmental entity incurring prosecutorial or confinement costs with respect to the defendant. Here, too, the residue goes to the defendant.

Thirteen states which follow the New York statute (Alaska, Georgia, Idaho, Iowa, Kentucky, Minnesota, Nebraska, New Mexico, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, and Washington) maintain the escrow account for five years or until all actions pending against the defendant under the statute are terminated. They also provide that the statute of limitations for such actions does not commence to run until the escrow account has been established. The other two states which otherwise follow the New York statute generally have reduced both the duration of the escrow account waiting period and the duration of the limitations period to two years (Illinois) or three years (Massachusetts).

In those states which depart from New York in the matter of disposing of the residue, four states (Alabama, Arizona, Connecticut and Oklahoma) follow New York and allow five years for the bringing of the action with recovery from the escrow account. One state, however (Louisiana), has reduced these periods to three years.

In those four states which mix the two types of statutes Florida differs the most because the victims do not have to file suit and their identity and the extent of their damages is determined by the court in the lien enforcement proceedings. In Indiana the victim may claim against the fund only to the extent that his/her damage judgment exceeds the defendant's assets and upon completion of the criminal proceedings any moneys in the escrow account are transferred to the violent crime victims compensation fund if two years have elapsed from the commission of the offense and there are no civil actions pending. In Nevada, as noted above, there is no escrow account provision. And in South Dakota the five year escrow and limitations periods are in effect, but after four years any state governmental entity may bring its own action for money damages against the defendant to recover its costs of prosecution and imprisonment.

In six states (Florida, Iowa, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Nevada, and Tennessee) the "Son of Sam" statutes are limited to persons convicted of crime, whereas in the remaining nineteen states they cover persons accused of or convicted of crime (although in Washington only after a hearing). And in five states (Connecticut, Illinois, Nevada, New Mexico, and Oklahoma), the statutes are limited to violent crimes, while in the other twenty states they apply to any crime (although Alabama, Florida, and Indiana specifically provide that such crimes be felonies).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Thus the federal statute is similar to the Florida, Iowa, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Nevada and Tennessee statutes in that it is limited to convicted persons; is similar to the Connecticut, Illinois, Nevada, New Mexico, and Oklahoma statutes in that it is limited to violent crimes; is similar to the Washington statute in that it captures proceeds only after notice and hearing; and is similar to the Indiana statute in that it contains a provision allowing, but not requiring, that any residue from the escrow account be paid into the Crime Victims Fund.

The theories upon which the state statutes rely for the ultimate taking by the government of the unlevied upon residue in the escrow accounts vary. In Alabama it is provided that the residue "shall revert to the state." In Arizona the concept is that every contract for re-enactment of crime "is contrary to public policy and void unless the contract provides for the payment to the commission of any monies which would be paid to the accused for such information or rights." In Florida the statute asserts a "state lien" and the "Department of Legal Affairs is authorized and directed to take such legal action as is necessary to perfect and enforce the lien created by this section." In South Dakota the governmental entity incurring the cost of prosecuting and convicting the accused or incurring the cost of his/her incarceration is authorized "to bring a civil action in a court of competent jurisdiction and recover (a) money judgment for damages" against the accused for "reimbursement for actual costs of prosecution and imprisonment." No theory of recovery is articulated in the Connecticut, Indiana, Louisiana, and Oklahoma statutes.

The federal statute serves two separate purposes. It establishes an escrow account to hold the proceeds of the defendant's contract for five years to satisfy fines and restitution orders and to allow victims to satisfy their civil judgments from the fund. It also limits the amount of moneys payable to attorneys from the fund to twenty percent. (Payments to attorneys is discussed in depth in the Cornell Law Review note referenced in USAM 9-60.812, supra.) The other purpose is to provide funding for the Crime Victims Fund.

No great difficulty should be had with the escrow account concept since it is only an attachment statute, with no transfer (except possibly via a TRO) prior to notice to all interested parties and a hearing thereon. Only the five-year duration is subject to controversy. But given the uncertainty of getting notice to victims of the existence of the escrow account and the need to afford victims a reasonable period after receiving such notice to prepare and commence their damage actions against the defendant, the consensus of most states with "Son of Sam" statutes that five years is reasonable should be sustained.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The second purpose of the federal statute is to create a source of funding for the Crime Victims Fund. Federal forfeiture statutes generally reflect the view that contraband, and instrumentalities or proceeds of crime are subject to forfeiture and these statutes have been consistently upheld against constitutional challenges. Thus on November 1, 1983, the Supreme Court upheld the forfeiture of the "profits" obtained in racketeering activity, Russello v. United States, 52 U.S.L.W. 4003 (No. 82-472), and on June 25, 1984, the Sixth Circuit in United States v. Premises Known as 8584 Old Brownsville Road, 736 F.2d 1129 (6th Cir. 1984), upheld the forfeiture of both real and personal property as "proceeds" traceable to the exchange of things of value for controlled substances. And while normally the events which give rise to criminal or civil forfeiture occur concomitantly with the criminal offense (e.g., the criminal forfeiture of the "profits" obtained in illegal drug enterprises and the civil forfeiture of the moneys recieved from the sale of contraband), post-offense events are operative in these areas, such as the civil forfeiture of a vehicle which was purchased with drug proceeds. Here the proceeds are directly traceable to the criminal act since they are merely a description or portrayal of that act or the defendant's thoughts with respect to such crime. The forfeiture is but a collateral consequence of the conviction. Since Congress could have made all such contracts illegal, compare United States v. Ferber, 458 U.S. 747 (1982) (state statutes forbidding child pornography are constitutional), and Veritimos v. United States, 404 F.2d 1030, 1032, n.4 (1st Cir. 1968) ("Congress could have prohibited the transfer of firearms altogether"), Congress can forfeit the proceeds of such contracts. As was stated in Barrett v. Wojtowicz, 66 A.D. 2d 604, 615 (N.Y. Sup. Ct., 2d Dept., Mar. 12, 1979), "(A)ny judgment that may be recovered by plaintiff should be deemed one in rem and be limited by the court to a recovery of the pro rata amount which is found to be payable to him from the escrow account held by the Crime Victims Compensation Board for the benefit of all the victims of the defendant's crime and such judgment should not be deemed a judgment in personam against any other assets of the defendant." TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-60.830 Pertinent Policy Considerations

Strong policy considerations favor sua sponte application by the U.S. Attorney for a section 3671 order of special forfeiture whenever the U.S. Attorney is made aware of the existence of a contract relating to the depiction of an offense against the United States resulting in physical harm to an individual. Not only does such an order advance the federal policy of denying the convicted defendant an opportunity to exploit for profit his/her wrongdoing, it creates a fund which can be variously used: (1) to satisfy civil judgments obtained in federal and state courts in favor of a victim, or his/her legal representative, of an offense resulting in physical harm to such victim of which the defendant has been convicted; (2) to satisfy criminal fines imposed by federal courts upon the defendant; (3) to satisfy orders of restitution imposed by federal courts pursuant to the provisions of 18 U.S.C. §3579, and (4) to provide additional funding for the Crime Victims Fund. The fund can also be used to pay for the defendant's legal representation (but no more than 20 percent of the total proceeds may be so used). The fund may also be available to satisfy state criminal fines and state restitution orders. Thus, consideration should be given prior to seeking a forfeiture order to deferring to state action where local statutes permit, state authorities express an intention to act, and considerations of federal-state comity indicate that in the particular circumstances the state has the greater interest in controlling the distribution of the proceeds.

Since section 3671 specifically permits a ". . . motion . . . made at any time after conviction of a defendant . . . to forfeit all or any part of proceeds received . . . by that defendant . . . from a contract," such motion may be made with respect to any moneys owed under the contract after the passage of the Victims of Crime Act notwithstanding that the contract may have been executed prior to the passage of the Act (October 12, 1984). See Agron v. Crime Victims Compensation Board (N.Y. Sup. Ct., 1st Judicial Dist., Justice Nadel), reported in New York Law Journal, Friday, March 27, 1981. Money paid under a contract prior to passage of the Act would not be recoverable; nor would money received prior to conviction under a contract entered into subsequent to the passage of the Act. The phrase "any time after conviction" not only governs the timing of the motion but the res to be forfeited as well.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-61.000 CRIMES INVOLVING PROPERTY

9-61.100 NATIONAL MOTOR VEHICLE THEFT ACT--DYER ACT (18 U.S.C. §§2311-2313)

9-61.101 Scope

The National Motor Vehicle Theft Act relates to offenses involving the interstate and foreign transportation of stolen motor vehicles and aircraft (18 U.S.C. §2312 and §2313). The Motor Vehicle Theft Law Enforcement Act of 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-547, 98 Stat. 2754 (1984), expanded federal criminal jurisdiction to other acts involving stolen "road" motor vehicles (i.e., automobiles, trucks, vans, motorcycles, etc.) and "off-highway" mobile equipment. Activities now criminally prohibited include the removal or falsification of the identification number for a road motor vehicle or a road motor vehicle part (18 U.S.C. §511); trafficking in road motor vehicles or road motor vehicle parts with removed or falsified identification numbers (18 U.S.C. §2320); and the exportation or importation of stolen road motor vehicles and off-highway mobile equipment (18 U.S.C. §553). See USAM 9-61.900, infra.

9-61.110 Investigative Jurisdiction

Violations of the National Motor Vehicle Theft Act (Dyer Act), as amended (18 U.S.C. §§2311-2313), are within the investigative jurisdiction of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

9-61.120 Supervising Section

General Litigation and Legal Advice Section.

9-61.130 Policy Concerning Prosecution

To achieve uniform application of the statute in all judicial districts and to keep Dyer Act prosecutions in proper perspective with other prosecutions, the following guidelines should be followed in determining whether a stolen motor vehicle report is to be investigated and prosecution instituted.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

While it may occasionally be advantageous to prosecute certain thefts or criminal receipt of vehicles or aircraft under 18 U.S.C. §2314 or §2315, so as to make available electronic surveillance under 18 U.S.C. §2516, or the enhanced penalties of 18 U.S.C. §1961 (RICO), prosecutions under those statutes must follow these guidelines.

Because of an aircraft's normally large monetary value and its ability to be used to commit other serious criminal offenses, such as drug smuggling, each interstate or foreign transportation of a stolen aircraft should be judged on its own individual prosecutive merits.

9-61.131 Organized Rings and Multi-Theft Operations

Consistent with available resources, organized ring cases and multi-theft operations of motor vehicles involving an interstate or foreign aspect should be federally investigated and prosecuted. To the extent possible, the investigation and prosecution of this type of professional criminal activity should be conducted in coordination and cooperation with state and local authorities. If the local or state authorities are unable to prosecute the jointly investigated cases, federal prosecution should be undertaken insofar as is consistent with available resources. For purposes of this policy the phrase "organized ring cases and multi-theft operations" (hereinafter referred to as "ring") means organized criminal activity involving at least two or more individuals who steal three or more motor vehicles and dispose of them in some fashion for their own economic profit. Where limitations on prosecutive resources preclude federal prosecution of all ring cases not pursued by state or local authorities, the following are among the factors which should be considered in choosing which cases to pursue: the involvement of elements of organized crime; the number of individuals involved in the ring; the number of vehicles believed to have been stolen; the aggregate monetary value of the stolen vehicles; the type of business used to facilitate the illegal activity; the presence of any corruption of public officials; the duration and geographical scope of the criminal endeavor; and the past criminal records of the prospective defendants.

9-61.132 Individual Thefts--Exceptional Circumstances

Except as precluded by USAM 9-61.133, infra, individual interstate and foreign motor vehicle theft cases involving exceptional circumstances may be considered for federal prosecution if the local or state authorities are justifiably unable to institute a successful prosecution. Because of various other federal prosecutive priorities, only a portion of the individual theft cases involving exceptional circumstances will qualify for federal prosecution. In determining whether "exceptional circumstances" justifying federal prosecution are present, the following examples may be considered illustrative but not exhaustive:

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

A. The stolen vehicle is used in the commission of a separate felony for which punishment less than for the Dyer Act would be expected from local courts;

B. The stolen vehicle is demolished, sold, transported or exported to a foreign country, heavily stripped or grossly misused;

C. An individual steals more than one vehicle in such a manner as to form a pattern of conduct; and

D. The stolen vehicle constitutes heavy commercial vehicle or construction or farming equipment, such as a tractor truck, a farm tractor or a bulldozer.

9-61.133 Individual Thefts--Not Prosecuted Federally

Except in situations where 18 U.S.C. §5001 is to be utilized or there are indications that organized ring activity may be involved, federal process should not be filed against an individual, regardless of local prosecutive decisions, in the following instances where a stolen motor vehicle has been transported in interstate or foreign commerce:

A. Cases involving joy-riding;

B. Cases in which the individual to be charged is a juvenile (i.e., under 18 years of age); and

C. Cases in which the individual to be charged is at least 18 but less than 21 years of age and cannot be defined as a recidivist. A "recidivist" for purposes of this policy is a person who has on at least two prior occasions been arrested for motor vehicle thefts and on one or more occasions has been convicted for motor vehicle theft or another criminal offense.

9-61.134 Notification Requirements if Federal Prosecution is Declined for an Individual Theft Matter

When federal prosecution is declined for an individual Dyer Act violation, the Assistant U.S. Attorney making such decision shall notify the investigative agency of such decision and the reasons therefor. The Assistant U.S. Attorney shall also advise the investigative agency if exceptional circumstances were present in the matter. In addition, the Assistant U.S. Attorney shall remind the investigative agency of the provisions of 18 U.S.C. §5001, if such may be applicable. The Assistant U.S. Attorney shall request the investigating agency to notify the appropriate local authorities, including the appropriate local prosecutive office where a prosecutable case may be present, of his/her prosecutive determination and request, in those situations involving exceptional circumstances, to be notified by the investigative agency as to what prosecutive action is being undertaken by the local authorities. If the local authorities do not prosecute a matter involving exceptional circumstances the investigative agency shall so notify the federal prosecutor. Upon receipt of such notification the U.S. Attorney should review the matter in accordance with these guidelines, the present caseload of his/her office, the availability of witnesses and sufficient evidence, and the agreements and understandings reached as a result of the Law Enforcement Coordinating Committee for his/her District to determine whether federal prosecution is warranted.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-61.140 Discussion of the Offense

9-61.141 Legislative History

The Dyer Act was enacted by Congress on October 29, 1919. (See ch. 89, 41 Stat. 324). In 1945, aircraft were added to the statute. (See ch. 383, 59 Stat. 536.) In 1984, the federal jurisdictional basis in 18 U.S.C. §2313 was altered by section 203 of the Motor Vehicle Theft Law Enforcement Act of 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-547, 98 Stat. 2754 (1984). The former language in 18 U.S.C. §2313 of "moving as, or which is a part of, or which constitutes interstate or foreign commerce" was stricken and inserted in lieu thereof was "which has crossed a State or United States boundary after being stolen." The 1984 amendment also added to 18 U.S.C. §2313 the offense of possession. See USAM 9-61.146, infra.

9-61.142 Stolen

The term "stolen" should not be construed in the technical sense of common law larceny. Stolen covers all theft offenses regardless of whether such was in the nature of larceny, embezzlement, or false pretenses. See United States v. Turley, 352 U.S. 407 (1957); see also Bell v. United States, 462 U.S. 356 (1983). What is required is a felonious taking or conversion of another's property right in the vehicle regardless of how the perpetrator may originally have come into possession of the vehicle. While property interests obviously include the concepts of "title" and "possession," a financial company's "secured interest" in the vehicle has been deemed a sufficient property interest in the vehicle when the owner disposed of the vehicle contrary to the loan agreement. See United States v. Bunch, 399 F. Supp. 1156 (D. Md.), aff'd, 542 F.2d 629 (4th Cir. 1976). However, the statute does not cover situations where a person, engaging in a fraud upon the insurance company in concert with the vehicle's owner, disposes of a vehicle and the owner reports the vehicle as stolen since the insurance company had no property interest in the vehicle at the time it was disposed of. See United States v. Bennett, 665 F.2d 16 (2d Cir. 1981). Moreover, the vehicle must retain its stolen character during the transportation under 18 U.S.C. §2312 or the receipt, concealment, storing, bartering, selling or disposal under 18 U.S.C. §2313. Total recovery by law enforcement or the owner's agent, in contrast with merely being placed under observation by law enforcement, will terminate the stolen character. See United States v. Muzii, 676 F.2d 919 (2d Cir. 1982); United States v. Dove, 629 F.2d 325 (4th Cir. 1980).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-61.143 Definitions

The terms "motor vehicle" and "aircraft" are defined in 18 U.S.C. §2311. Motor vehicle includes road vehicles (i.e., automobiles, vans, motorcycles, trucks, etc.) as well as self-propelled construction and farming equipment. See United States v. Straughan, 453 F.2d 422 (8th Cir. 1972); United States v. McGlamory, 441 F.2d 130 (5th Cir. 1971). Accordingly, the definition of motor vehicle is broader for 18 U.S.C. §§2312 and 2313 than it is for 18 U.S.C. §§511, 512, 553, and 2320. In the latter four sections the term covers only road vehicles. See section 2 of the Motor Vehicle Information and Cost Savings Act (15 U.S.C. §1901 (15)). The missing of a key part, e.g., the motor, does not mean that the vehicle ceases to be a motor vehicle. See United States v. McKlemurry, 461 F.2d 651 (5th Cir. 1972). Vehicles rebuilt by combining major parts of stolen motor vehicles with parts of other vehicles have been held to constitute a stolen motor vehicle. See United States v. Neville, 516 F.2d 1302 (8th Cir. 1975).

While a trailer is not a motor vehicle under 18 U.S.C. §§2312 or 2313 since it is not self-propelled, a trailer is "goods, wares or merchandise" under 18 U.S.C. §§2314 and 2315. See United States v. Kidding, 560 F.2d 1303 (7th Cir. 1977). (A trailer is, however, a "motor vehicle" for purposes of 18 U.S.C. §§511, 512, 553, and 2320. See 18 U.S.C. §511(c)(2)

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

and 15 U.S.C. §1901(15).) If a stolen motor vehicle was "chopped" into its key parts and some of the stolen parts (e.g., doors, fenders, engine, front-end assembly, etc.) were subsequently transported in interstate or foreign commerce, there would be no violation of 18 U.S.C. §2312 or §2313, but there may be a violation of 18 U.S.C. §2314 or §2315 if the stolen parts had a value of $5,000 or more. Shipments of such stolen parts which have a sufficient relationship may be aggregated to reach the $5,000 amount (see USAM 9-61.247, infra). The removal or falsification of an identification number of a road motor vehicle or road motor vehicle part may violate 18 U.S.C. §511, and trafficking in such road vehicles or parts may violate 18 U.S.C. §2320. See USAM 9-61.900, infra.

A title for a motor vehicle is a security under 18 U.S.C. §2314 and §2315 (see USAM 9-61.244, infra). A title for a motor vehicle is also a security under the new counterfeiting provision, 18 U.S.C. §511 (Securities of the States and private entities), added by Part D of Chapter XI of the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-473, 98 Stat. 2144 (1984), as a motor vehicle title is an instrument issued by a state evidencing ownership of goods, wares or merchandise (see 18 U.S.C. §511(c)(3)(B)). See USAM 9-61.800, infra.

9-61.144 Elements of 18 U.S.C. §2312

The elements of a violation under 18 U.S.C. §2312 are that the defendant:

- A. Unlawfully transports or causes to be transported in interstate or foreign commerce;
- B. A stolen motor vehicle or aircraft; and
- C. Knowing the same to be stolen.

The term "unlawfully" means contrary to law, i.e., the absence of lawful justification. For example, a person voluntarily returning stolen property to its lawful owner would not violate the statute. The term "causes to be" comes from 18 U.S.C. §2(b). See Pereira v. United States, 347 U.S. 1 (1953). Interstate or foreign transportation commences when the journey begins. See United States v. McElroy, 455 U.S. 642 (1982); United States v. Ajlouny, 629 F.2d 830 (2d Cir. 1980); Barfield v. United States 229 F.2d 936 (5th Cir. 1956).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-61.145 Elements of Former 18 U.S.C. §2313

The elements under former 18 U.S.C. §2313 are that the defendant:

- A. Receive, conceal, store, barter, sell, or dispose of;
- B. A stolen motor vehicle or aircraft;
- C. Which is moving as, which is a part of, or which constitutes interstate or foreign commerce; and
- D. Knowing the same to have been stolen.

The statute requires that the stolen vehicle retain its interstate or foreign commerce character at the time the defendant does one of the enumerated acts. The courts have clearly held that such commerce character does not terminate upon the arrival of the vehicle in another state and that it remains until the purpose of the transportation has been accomplished. See United States v. Licavoli, 604 F.2d 613 (9th Cir. 1979); United States v. Tobin, 576 F.2d 687 (5th Cir. 1978); United States v. Pichany, 490 F.2d 1073 (7th Cir. 1973). Hence, since transportations of stolen motor vehicles are often to fences, it can be argued that the commerce character remains until the fence disposes of the vehicle to a user. See Roberson v. United States, 237 F.2d 536 (5th Cir. 1956).

The question of whether the commerce character was continuing is a jury question. See Corey v. United States, 305 F.2d 232 (9th Cir. 1962). The defendant does not have to know of the continuing commerce character as that is only a jurisdictional element. See United States v. Beil, 577 F.2d 1313 (5th Cir. 1978); United States v. Smith, 461 F.2d 246 (10th Cir. 1972); Katz v. United States, 281 F.2d 124 (6th Cir. 1922). See also United States v. Feola, 420 U.S. 671 (1975). It has been held that changing the vehicle's identification numbers amounts to a concealing. See Donaldson v. United States, 82 F.2d 680 (7th Cir. 1936).

9-61.146 Elements of New 18 U.S.C. §2313

18 U.S.C. §2313 was amended by section 203 of the Motor Vehicle Theft Law Enforcement Act of 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-547, 98 Stat. 2754 (1984). The elements under new 18 U.S.C. §2313 are that the defendant:

- A. Receive, possess, conceal, store, barter, sell or dispose of;
- B. A stolen motor vehicle or aircraft;

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

C. Which has crossed a state or United States boundary after being stolen; and

D. Knowing the same to have been stolen.

The purposes of the 1984 amendments to 18 U.S.C. §2313 were to add the offense of possession and to remove the need for the prosecutor to prove a continuing commerce nexus after the stolen vehicle had been taken across a state or international boundary. See H.R. Rep. No. 1456 on H.R. 4178, 96th Cong., 2d Sess. 26 (1984); see also 125 Cong. Rec. 12244 (1979). 18 U.S.C. §2313 now continues federal criminal jurisdiction over a stolen vehicle after it has crossed a state or international boundary. Federal jurisdiction remains until the stolen vehicle is recovered. See USAM 9-61.142, supra. Since possession is itself now an offense, 18 U.S.C. §2313 may prove more useful in prosecuting the fences of motor vehicles stolen in a different state.

9-61.147 18 U.S.C. §2312 and §2313 are Predicate Offenses for a RICO Prosecution

Section 205 of the Motor Vehicle Theft Law Enforcement Act of 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-547, 98 Stat. 2754 (1984), amended Section 1961(1) of Title 18, United States Code, to include violations of 18 U.S.C. §2312 and §2313 as predicate acts for a RICO prosecution. The use of the RICO provisions against professional theft rings utilizing legitimate businesses to engage in their illegal activities could have a significant impact in reducing motor vehicle theft activity. All RICO prosecutions must be submitted to the Organized Crime and Racketeering Section for review and authorization. See USAM 9-110.100 - 9-110.413. For guidance on RICO prosecutions involving stolen motor vehicles and related offenses, contact the Organized Crime and Racketeering Section (633-8594).

9-61.150 Forms of Indictments

9-61.151 Form Indictment for 18 U.S.C. §2312

On or about the _____ day of _____, 19____, the defendant, _____, did unlawfully transport in interstate commerce a stolen motor vehicle, that is, a (give an adequate identifying description of the vehicle) from the State of _____ to _____, State of _____, in the _____ District of _____, knowing the same to be stolen.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-61.152 Form Indictment for Former 18 U.S.C. §2313

On or about the _____ day of _____, 19____, in the _____ District of _____, the defendant, _____
_____, did sell and dispose of a stolen motor vehicle, that is, a (give an adequate identifying description of the vehicle), which was moving as, was a part of, and constituted interstate commerce between the State of _____ and the State of _____, knowing the same to be stolen.

9-61.153 Form Indictment for New 18 U.S.C. §2313

On or about the _____ day of _____, 19____, in the _____ District of _____, the defendant, _____, did possess and store a stolen motor vehicle, that is, a (give an adequate identifying description of the vehicle), which vehicle had crossed a State boundary after being stolen, to wit, said vehicle being stolen on (date) in (city and state) and subsequently brought into the State of _____, knowing the same to have been stolen.

9-61.160 Venue

Prosecutions brought under this Act should normally be instituted in the district into which the stolen motor vehicle was last brought. However, in regard to ring cases the prosecution, in accordance with the provisions of 18 U.S.C. §3237, may be initiated in the judicial district in which the motor vehicle was stolen, transported through, or last brought depending upon the facts of the case. In ring cases, the U.S. Attorney exercising jurisdiction should contact the other U.S. Attorneys who might have jurisdiction and advise them of his/her actions.

With reference to individuals involved in non-ring cases who by definition are considered to be recidivists (see USAM 9-60.133C, supra), if the theft occurred in the place of the residence of a recidivist and local authorities in both the place of apprehension and the place of theft will not institute local charges, federal proceedings, if any, should be instituted at the place of the theft. Before instituting any prosecution of any such recidivist (i.e., non-ring participant), an effort must be made to persuade local authorities in both the jurisdiction of the theft and apprehension to institute local prosecution. In connection with such effort, local authorities should be notified of the provisions of 18

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

U.S.C. §5001 (see USAM 9-60.170, infra), which authorizes the return of youthful motor vehicle theft offenders to the place where the offense was committed at federal expense when certain conditions have been met.

Prosecution under 18 U.S.C. §2313 (receiving, concealing, selling, etc.) can be instituted only in the district in which those violations occur.

9-61.170 Use of 18 U.S.C. §5001 to Surrender Motor Vehicle Theft Perpetrators Under 21 Years of Age to State Authorities

In regard to any motor vehicle theft involving an interstate aspect where the perpetrator is less than 21 years of age, the provisions of 18 U.S.C. §5001 are available to assist the local authorities where the theft occurred to obtain the return of the perpetrator by the United States Marshals Service at federal expense to that jurisdiction in order to face criminal process brought by that jurisdiction. The Federal Bureau of Investigation should advise the United States Marshals Service of possible 18 U.S.C. §5001 situations in order that proper arrangements can be made. The filing of a federal complaint in order to acquire jurisdiction for the use of 18 U.S.C. §5001 is an appropriate and necessary federal prosecutive action. After the perpetrator is removed to the requesting local jurisdiction pursuant to the requirements of 18 U.S.C. §5001, any outstanding federal process should be dismissed.

9-61.230 Policy Concerning Prosecution

Prosecutions under the first two paragraphs of 18 U.S.C. §2314 and the first paragraph of 18 U.S.C. §2315 should be governed by the same factors that determine whether other non-governmental thefts or frauds (e.g., mail frauds or wire frauds) should be prosecuted federally. The $5,000 figure, originally adopted in 1934, was selected to limit federal involvement to significant cases. If the $5,000 figure had been indexed for inflation the comparable value in 1984 would be slightly under $40,000. (It should be realized that the penalty provision of $10,000 has also not been increased since its enactment and hence, while the amount of stolen property covered by the statute has been increasing with the passage of time, the monetary penalty in terms of its real value has been diminishing.) These figures are cited in order to provide a historical perspective for these sections. Of course, violations involving less than $40,000 should be prosecuted federally where the situation warrants.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The monetary figures are more important when considering prosecution under the "falsely made, forged, altered and counterfeit" securities provisions of 18 U.S.C. §2314 and §2315 which do not require any specific monetary amount to invoke federal jurisdiction. However, prosecutive judgments under all provisions of 18 U.S.C. §§2314 and 2315 should be balanced. While the "forgery" provisions permit federal jurisdiction for one forged security, prosecutive discretion should be exercised in favor of those instances where there is some compelling reason to bring the matter in federal courts. Hence, with regard to forged, falsely made, altered, or counterfeited securities under 18 U.S.C. §2314 or §2315, the Department's position is that such offenses are primarily within the purview of state law and should be prosecuted by state authorities where feasible, even though the requisites of federal jurisdiction under the Act are present. However, federal prosecution is recommended where particularly appropriate, as where the broad scope of defendant's activities (e.g., interstate "paper hangers") suggests a need for federal investigative facilities or appears to render inadequate the punishment imposed under state law, or where it is desirable that the charge be brought in conjunction with other federal charges, or where successful state prosecution appears precluded or the state fails or refuses to entertain prosecution.

9-61.240 Discussion of the Offense

9-61.241 General

The definitions for the terms "money," "securities," "tax stamp," and "value" are set forth in 18 U.S.C. §2311.

18 U.S.C. §2314, the "transportation" offense, consists of five different paragraphs. The first paragraph relates to the interstate or foreign transportation of the proceeds of a theft or a fraud where the proceeds have a value of $5,000 or more. The second paragraph relates to causing the interstate transportation of a victim to defraud the victim of $5,000 or more of money or property. The third paragraph relates to the interstate and foreign transportation of falsely made, forged, altered, or counterfeited securities or tax stamps. The fourth paragraph relates to the interstate or foreign transportation of a traveler's check bearing a forged countersignature. The fifth paragraph relates to the interstate or foreign transportation of the implements and tools used to falsely make, forge, alter, or counterfeit securities or tax stamps.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

18 U.S.C. §2315, the receipt and "fencing" offense, consists of three different paragraphs. The first paragraph relates to the receipt and disposition of the proceeds of a theft or fraud having a value of $5,000 or more while such proceeds still have an interstate or foreign commerce character. It also prohibits the pledging or accepting as security for a loan such stolen property of a value of $500. The second paragraph contains similar elements as the first paragraph except it relates to falsely made, forged, altered, or counterfeited securities or tax stamps and does not require a stated monetary value. Likewise, the third paragraph is comparable to the second paragraph except that it relates to the tools or implements used to falsely make, forge, alter, or counterfeit securities or tax stamps.

The penalties for both sections include a fine of not more than $10,000, imprisonment of not more than ten years, or both. For offenses occurring on or after January 1, 1985, the possible fine can be $250,000. See 18 U.S.C. §3623 (Alternative fines). In the last paragraph of both 18 U.S.C. §§2314 and 2315, there is a "proviso" clause which exempts certain governmental securities from the scope of the sections (see USAM 9-61.252, infra). The counterfeiting and forging of state and corporate securities is also covered by 18 U.S.C. §511 (Securities of the States and private entities). See USAM 9-61.800, infra. There is no statutory requirement under 18 U.S.C. §511 that such corporate and state securities be transported or have been transported in interstate or foreign commerce.

9-61.242 Legislative History

The National Stolen Property Act was originally enacted on May 22, 1934 (see ch. 333, 48 Stat. 794). At first it contained what is now the first paragraphs of 18 U.S.C. §2314 and §2315. The purpose of the Act was to extend the provisions of the National Motor Vehicle Theft Act (i.e., the Dyer Act (see ch. 89, 41 Stat. 324, now 18 U.S.C. §§2311-2313)) to other forms of stolen property. Congress decided to require that such property have a value of $5,000 or more in order not to burden the resources of the Department of Justice. (There is nothing in the legislative history to indicate that a "motor vehicle" which also happened to have a value of $5,000 or more could not be prosecuted under the new Act. At that time, however, few motor vehicles were of that value.) In 1939 Congress expanded the act to include falsely made, forged, altered and counterfeit securities (see ch. 413, 53 Stat. 1179). These changes are reflected in present paragraphs three and five in 18 U.S.C. §2314 and paragraphs two and three in 18 U.S.C. §2315. In 1948, the National Stolen Property Act as well as the National Motor Vehicle Theft Act were recodified in 18 U.S.C. as §§2311-2315 (see ch. 645, 62 Stat. 806). In

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

1956, the second paragraph in 18 U.S.C. §2314, relating to transporting the victim of a fraud in interstate commerce, was added (see ch. 519, 70 Stat. 507). In 1961, the term "tax stamps" was added to the third and fifth paragraphs of 18 U.S.C. §2314 and the first and second paragraphs of 18 U.S.C. §2315 (see Pub. L. No. 87-371, 75 Stat. 802). In 1968 the fourth paragraph of 18 U.S.C. §2314 was added to deal with the rationale of the decision in Streett v. United States, 331 F.2d 151 (8th Cir. 1964), as it applied to the countersignature on a traveler's check (see Pub. L. No. 90-535, 82 Stat. 885) (see USAM 9-61.250, infra). In 1984 the definition of "security" was amended to include a "valid or blank motor vehicle title." (See section 202 of the Motor Vehicle Theft Law Enforcement Act of 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-547, 98 Stat. 2754 (1984).)

9-61.243 Goods, Wares, Merchandise

Although it is called the National Stolen Property Act, the term "property" itself appears only in the second paragraph of 18 U.S.C. §2314 (which was added in 1956) and can be interpreted in that paragraph as including all forms of property, both personal and real. However, in the first paragraphs of 18 U.S.C. §2314 and §2315 the statutory language utilized is "goods, wares, merchandise, securities or money." The latter two terms will be discussed below (see USAM 9-61.244 and 9-61.245, infra). Since the gist of the offense under 18 U.S.C. §2314 is the interstate or foreign transportation, the types of property intended to be covered by the first paragraphs of 18 U.S.C. §§2314 and 2315 are those types of property which can be transported. Hence, the term "goods, wares, merchandise" appears to have been selected to represent all forms of personal property (other than securities or moneys) which could be transported. The term "goods, wares, merchandise" is not defined. It has been interpreted to be a "general and comprehensive designation of such personal property or chattels as are ordinarily a subject of commerce." See United States v. Seagraves, 265 F.2d 876 (3d Cir. 1959). It therefore includes those products sold in commerce (e.g., books, clothes, gasoline, oil, trailers, computers, televisions, food, vehicle parts, etc.)

It has also been held to cover information involving such trade secrets as manufacturing processes, see United States v. Bottone, 365 F.2d 389 (2d Cir. 1966); geological maps, United States v. Seagraves, 265 F.2d 876 (3d Cir. 1959); and chemical formulas, United States v. Greenwald, 479 F.2d 320 (6th Cir. 1973).

In the area of copyrighted works the Ninth Circuit and some other circuits have found the term to also be applicable. See United States v. Belmont, 715 F.2d 459 (9th Cir. 1983); United States v. Berkwith, 619 F.2d

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

649 (7th Cir. 1980); United States v. Whetzel, 589 F.2d 707 (D.C. Cir. 1978); United States v. Atherton, 561 F.2d 749 (9th Cir. 1977); United States v. Drebin, 557 F.2d 1316 (9th Cir. 1977) (the seminal copyrighted works case); United States v. Gallant, 570 F. Supp. 303 (E.D. N.Y. 1983); United States v. Sam Goody, Inc., 506 F. Supp. 380 (E.D. N.Y. 1981). However, the Fifth Circuit in United States v. Smith, 686 F.2d 234 (5th Cir. 1982), rejected the argument that copyrighted works were "goods, wares, or merchandise." The split in the circuits was resolved by the Supreme Court in favor of the view that the interstate transportation of infringing copies of a copyrighted work that was itself lawfully obtained does not violate 18 U.S.C. §2314. Dowling v. United States, _____ U.S. _____, 53 U.S.L.W. 4978 (June 28, 1985). For a further discussion of what aspects of copyright violations may still be covered by 18 U.S.C. §2314, see USAM 9-71.260, infra.

While the vast majority of personal property covered by the term "goods, wares, merchandise" will be tangible and subject to transportation, any stolen intangible property which in some fashion can be and is reduced to some tangible form prior to, during, or before the completion of the interstate or foreign transportation should be reachable under the first paragraphs of 18 U.S.C. §§2314 and 2315, especially in view of the broad purpose of the statute and the tracing doctrine which has developed under the statute (see USAM 9-61.251, infra). However, in attempting to expand the reach of the statute to its outer limits, the dictum of the Second Circuit in Bottonne, supra, at 393, should be borne in mind:

To be sure, where no tangible objects were ever taken or transported, a court would be hard pressed to conclude that "goods" had been stolen and transported within the meaning of section 2314; the statute would presumably not extend to the case where a carefully guarded secret formula was memorized, carried away in the recesses of a thievish mind and placed in writing only after a boundary had been crossed.

Nevertheless, the broad definition of interstate commerce enunciated by the Supreme Court in United States v. McElroy, 455 U.S. 642 (1982), the tracing doctrine, and the broad legislative purposes of the statute may, under certain egregious facts surrounding the acquisition of the information, convince a court of its applicability to stolen information not necessarily embodied in a tangible object at the time the stolen information crossed a state boundary as long as such stolen information was placed into a tangible object prior to the termination of the interstate transportation.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

It should be remembered that while certain written instruments may be deemed not to be "securities" under 18 U.S.C. §§2314 or 2315, they nevertheless may still be "goods, wares, merchandise" if there is some commercial market for them. See United States v. Gallipoli, 599 F.2d 100 (5th Cir. 1979) (airline tickets); United States v. Jones, 432 F. Supp. 801 (E.D. Pa. 1977), aff'd sub nom; United States v. Moore, 571 F.2d 154 (3d Cir. 1978) (theater tickets).

It is possible to consider a "motor vehicle" to be "goods, wares, or merchandise" under 18 U.S.C. §§2314 and 2315, provided the policy considerations set forth in USAM 9-61.130, supra, are complied with. There is nothing in the legislative history of the National Stolen Property Act to indicate that theft or receipt of motor vehicles having a value of $5,000 or more could not be prosecuted under 18 U.S.C. §§2314 and 2315. Because 18 U.S.C. §2312 and 18 U.S.C. §2314 have different elements they pass the test that "each provision required proof of a fact which the other does not." See Blockburger v. United States, 284 U.S. 299 (1932). Successful prosecutions for stolen motor vehicles and aircraft have been brought under 18 U.S.C. §§2314 or 2315. See United States v. Dove, 629 F.2d 325 (4th Cir. 1980); United States v. Runge, 593 F.2d 66 (8th Cir. 1979); United States v. Headid, 565 F.2d 1029 (8th Cir. 1977); United States v. Vicars, 465 F.2d 720 (6th Cir. 1972). In United States v. Grenagle, 588 F.2d 87 (4th Cir. 1978), the government prosecuted the defendant for the interstate transportation of a stolen van under 18 U.S.C. §2312 and then also tried to use the value of the van plus the value of the goods inside the van to reach the $5,000 figure for an 18 U.S.C. §2314 violation. The Fourth Circuit, in dismissing the conviction for the 18 U.S.C. §2314 count, stated that the government could have used either section but having used 18 U.S.C. §2312 for the van it could not also use the van for a 18 U.S.C. §2314 count. The clear teaching of Grenagle, supra, is that a 18 U.S.C. §2314 count by itself would be permissible.

9-61.244 Securities

The definition of "securities" is set forth in 18 U.S.C. §2311. It is beneficial in understanding its scope to divide it into several groupings. Accordingly, the term "securities" includes:

- (a) any note, stock certificate, bond, debenture, check, draft, warrant, traveler's check,

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

letter of credit, warehouse receipt, negotiable bill of lading, evidence of indebtedness;

(b) certificate of interest or participation in any profit-sharing agreement, collateral-trust certificate, preorganization certificate or subscription, transferable share, investment contract, voting-trust certificate;

(c) valid or blank motor vehicle title;

(d) certificate of interest in property, tangible or intangible;

(e) instrument or document or writing evidencing ownership of goods, wares, and merchandise, or transferring or assigning any right, title, or interest in or to goods, wares, and merchandise;

(f) in general, any instrument commonly known as a "security," or any certificate of interest or participation in, temporary or interim certificate for, receipt for, warrant, or right to subscribe to or purchase any of foregoing; or

(g) any forged, counterfeited, or spurious representation of any of the foregoing.

Except for the change in 1984 relating to motor vehicle titles, the definition has remained the same since its original enactment in 1934 when the National Stolen Property Act consisted of what is only the first paragraphs of present 18 U.S.C. §§2314 and 2315. The use of the word "includes" indicates the great breadth which should be given to the term. Group (g) seems to have been intended to relieve the government of any requirement to prove that the stolen securities were in fact genuine (e.g., a theft victim may have been holding unbeknownst to himself/herself counterfeit or forged securities.)

Group (a) represents the forms of securities that are most commonly encountered under 18 U.S.C. §§2314 and 2315. The term "evidence of indebtedness" appears to be the most elastic but the courts have been reluctant to expand its scope to such things as credit card charge slips, United States v. Canton, 470 F.2d 861 (2d Cir. 1972); airline tickets, United States v. Jones, 450 F.2d 523 (5th Cir. 1971); or department store scrip certificates, United States v. Dunlap, 573 F.2d 1092 (9th Cir.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

1978). Money orders, which are not specifically mentioned in the definition, are covered. United States v. Rochon, 575 F.2d 191 (8th Cir. 1978); United States v. Buckles, 562 F.2d 967 (5th Cir. 1977). Sight drafts are securities; United States v. Bass, 562 F.2d 967 (5th Cir. 1977).

Even before the 1984 amendment, securities were held to include automobile titles. See United States v. Elliott, 571 F.2d 880 (5th Cir. 1978); United States v. Dickson, 462 F.2d 184 (4th Cir. 1972); United States v. Rudge, 474 F. Supp. 360 (D. Iowa 1979). Other documents held to be securities include, equipment leases, United States v. Wexler, 621 F.2d 1218 (2d Cir. 1980); and quit claim deeds, United States v. Speidel, 562 F.2d 1129 (8th Cir. 1977). The definition is therefore not limited to securities normally considered securities by the commercial and financial community and is broader than the definition of security under the Securities and Exchange Act (15 U.S.C. §77b).

Blank traveler's checks are securities because they have all the indicia of bearer instruments. See United States v. Petti, 168 F.2d 221 (2d Cir. 1948); Peoples Savings Bank v. American Surety Co., 15 F. Supp. 911 (W.D. Mich. 1936). By the 1984 amendment, blank motor vehicle titles are now securities. As a general rule, most other blank forms for securities, however, are not in themselves securities. See United States v. Jackson, 576 F.2d 749 (8th Cir. 1978) (blank stock certificates are not securities). However, a blank form for a security may become a security, even though not fully filled out, when sufficient attributes of that type of instrument have been placed thereon. See United States v. Webb, 443 F.2d 308 (5th Cir. 1971) (unsigned payroll check); United States v. Anderson, 359 F. Supp. 61 (D. Ark. 1973) (counterfeit corporate bonds).

Under 18 U.S.C. §§2314 and 2315 a security, once it has been generated, must remain a security during the activity prohibited by these sections. Hence, any cancellation or voiding of a security by the issuer or its agent, evidenced on the document itself, would terminate its status as a "security." See United States v. Teresa, 420 F.2d 13 (4th Cir. 1969).

While there appears to be a split in authorities, the safer rule seems to be that whether a particular document is security under 18 U.S.C. §§2314 and 2315 is a factual question for the trier of fact and not a legal question for the court. See United States v. Johnson, 718 F.2d 1317 (5th Cir. 1983) (en banc), reversing prior panel decision at 700 F.2d 163.

While some courts have held that credit card invoices are "securities," the weight of the cases has caused the Department to take the position that a stolen or fraudulently obtained credit card is not a security nor a tool or thing fitted to be used in falsely making or counterfeiting a security within the meaning of the statute, and that a charge slip executed by means of or in connection with a credit card so obtained is not a security within 18 U.S.C. §§2314 or 2315. However, the misuse of such credit cards may be covered by 15 U.S.C. §1644 or 18 U.S.C. §1029 or §1341 (see USAM 9-43.238).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-61.245 Money

"Money" is defined in 18 U.S.C. §2311 to mean "the legal tender of the United States or of any foreign country, or any counterfeit thereof." Hence, the term appears limited to what would amount to be currency, and does not encompass the broader concepts of "funds" or "credits." While credits or funds on deposit in a bank may not be "money," their mode of transportation in interstate or foreign commerce may be accomplished by means of instruments covered within the concepts of "securities" or "goods, wares, merchandise."

9-61.246 Tax Stamp

"Tax stamp" is defined in 18 U.S.C. §2311 and it includes "any tax stamp, tax token, tax meter imprint, or any other form of evidence of an obligation running to a State, or evidence of the discharge thereof."

9-61.247 Value

"Value" is defined in 18 U.S.C. §2311 to mean "face, par, or market value, whichever is the greatest, and the aggregate value of all goods, wares, and merchandise, securities, and money referred to in a single indictment shall constitute the value thereof."

For purposes of 18 U.S.C. §§2314 and 2315 the value of the stolen property which must be proven is at least $5,000, except for pledging under 18 U.S.C. §2315 where the amount is only $500. The value of the stolen property is a jury question. See United States v. Williams, 657 F.2d 199 (8th Cir. 1981). And the value must be proven in terms of United States dollars. See United States v. Dior, 671 F.2d 351 (9th Cir. 1982). The value of the different types of property may be proven in different ways.

In addition to market value, the value of securities can be proven through the security's face value, see United States v. Sarkision, 545

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

F.2d 1237 (9th Cir. 1976), or its par value, United States v. Neary, 552 F.2d 1184 (7th Cir. 1977). Basically, the courts agree that any reasonable method of determining value is permissible. See United States v. Tauro, 362 F. Supp. 688 (W.D. Pa.), aff'd, 493 F.2d 1402 (3d Cir.1973). If the goods were stolen from a retail merchant, the value is its retail value; while if stolen from a wholesale merchant the value is its wholesale value. See United States v. Robinson, 687 F.2d 359 (11th Cir. 1982). The value may be determined at the time of theft or its transportation for prosecutions under 18 U.S.C. §2314, United States v. McMahan, 548 F.2d 712 (7th Cir. 1977), and at time of theft or at anytime during its receipt, concealment, or disposition under 18 U.S.C. §2315. See United States v. Luckey, 655 F.2d 203 (9th Cir. 1981); United States v. Reid, 586 F.2d 393 (5th Cir. 1978); United States v. McClain, 545 F.2d 988 (5th Cir. 1977).

While the definition of value appears to permit the aggregation of the total amount in an indictment, it has been held that what is meant is that each count must allege the $5,000 threshold amount. See United States v. Markus, 721 F.2d 442 (3d Cir. 1983). Transactions involving less than $5,000 can be aggregated and combined into a single count if there is enough relationship between the transactions or they are part of a single plan or conspiracy. See Schaffer v. United States, 362 U.S. 511 (1960); United States v. Honey, 680 F.2d 1228 (8th Cir. 1982); United States v. Perry, 638 F.2d 862 (5th Cir. 1981); Andrews v. United States, 108 F.2d 511 (4th Cir. 1939).

Market value is the means by which the value of most goods, wares, and merchandise will be established. This can be demonstrated by many methods. The value that the thief asks for the stolen goods and the value he/she actually sells them for can prove the value. See United States v. Simpson, 577 F.2d 78 (9th Cir. 1978). The value the insurance company paid for the theft claims may show the value. See United States v. Wegerman, 549 F.2d 1192 (8th Cir. 1977). Of course, the basic rule of what a willing seller and willing buyer will pay can also be used. Often times the thieves market value can be used to show the value. See United States v. Jackson, 576 F.2d 749 (8th Cir. 1978); United States v. Moore, 571 F.2d 154 (3d Cir. 1978); United States v. Tyers, 487 F.2d 828 (2d Cir. 1973); United States v. Ditata, 469 F.2d 1270 (7th Cir. 1972); Churder v. United States, 387 F.2d 825 (8th Cir. 1968); United States v. Kramer, 289 F.2d 909 (2d Cir. 1961).

At times a thief or possessor of stolen property may do something to it to increase its value. The statutory amount requirement may be satisfied by the enhanced value provided such accretion does not alter or change the nature of the property but merely fulfills it. See United

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

States v. Jones, 432 F. Supp. 801 (E.D. Pa. 1977), aff'd sub nom., United States v. Moore, 571 F.2d 154 (3d Cir. 1978) (stolen blank ticketron tickets were subsequently imprinted with dates of performances and value.)

9-61.248 Stolen, Converted and Taken by Fraud

The terms "stolen, converted, and taken by fraud" are intended to cover all forms of theft offenses regardless of whether such "taking" was in the nature of common law larceny, an embezzlement, or false pretenses. United States v. Lyda, 279 F.2d 461 (5th Cir. 1960). See also United States v. Truley, 352 U.S. 407 (1957) (under 18 U.S.C. §2312); and Bell v. United States, 462 U.S. 356 (1983) (under 18 U.S.C. §2113). The term covers the felonious taking or conversion of another's property right in the particular object. Hence, the term covers any deprivation of one's title, United States v. McClain, 545 F.2d 988 (5th Cir. 1977), or rightful possession, United States v. Zepin, 533 F.2d 279 (5th Cir. 1976). There must be a deprivation of an existing property right and the movement of one's own money out of state to avoid general creditors would not constitute such a taking. See United States v. Carman, 577 F.2d 556 (9th Cir. 1978).

While a forged endorsement may not constitute a violation of the third paragraph of 18 U.S.C. §2314 (see USAM 9-61.250, infra) such false endorsement of a security having the value of $5,000 or more would make the security "converted or taken by fraud" within the meaning of the first paragraph of 18 U.S.C. §§2314 and 2315. See United States v. Tyson, 690 F.2d 9 (1st Cir. 1982).

The property must retain its stolen character during the transportation under 18 U.S.C. §2314 or the receipt, concealment, storing, bartering, selling, disposing of, pledging, or accepting as a security for a loan under 18 U.S.C. §2315. Full recovery by the owner or his/her agents, including law enforcement officials, will terminate the stolen character. On the other hand, if the stolen property is not in the sole possession and under their "surveillance" the stolen character remains. See United States v. Muzil, 676 F.2d 919 (2d Cir. 1982); United States v. Dove, 629 F.2d 325 (4th Cir. 1980).

9-61.249 Falsely Made, Forged, Altered, and Counterfeited

While the terms "altered" and "counterfeited" are reasonably comprehensible, the concepts "falsely made" and "forged" are very complex

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

under existing case law interpreting 18 U.S.C. §§2314 and 2315. The term "altered" obviously applies to those situations where a perpetrator changes a material fact on an existing security (e.g., increases the amount from $500 to $50,000, substitutes another name for that of the original payee, etc.). And the term "counterfeit" normally encompasses the unauthorized reproduction of some existing document.

While there is a considerable split within the circuits as to the differences between "falsely made" and "forged," the better view is that they constitute different means or methods of violating the statute. See United States v. Hagerty, 561 F.2d 1197 (5th Cir. 1977); United States v. Tucker, 473 F.2d 1290 (6th Cir. 1973); Stinson v. United States, 316 F.2d 554 (5th Cir. 1963); Pines v. United States, 123 F.2d 825 (8th Cir. 1941). And while there is considerable disagreement as to the type of conduct encompassed within each term standing by itself (see 4 A.L.R. Fed. 793), there is general agreement that they comprehend falsity in the execution or making on the face of the writing rather than falsity of any facts set forth on the face of the writing. In other words, the document was actually issued by a person who was without the authority to so issue or it was issued contrary to his/her authority to issue. See United States v. Simpson, 577 F.2d 78 (9th Cir. 1978); Streett v. United States, supra. "Forgery" generally relates to the unauthorized use of the purported maker's signature while the term "falsely made" relates to any execution of a document drawn on either an existing or non-existing entity where there is no authority to so issue. See United States v. Lipscomb, 546 F.2d 787 (8th Cir. 1975); Pines v. United States, supra. Hence, when a person fills out a stolen blank money order, he/she is falsely making the security. See United States v. Smith, 426 F.2d 275 (6th Cir. 1970). As noted previously, there is no minimum monetary value for a falsely made, forged, altered, or counterfeit security or tax stamp.

The following situations have been held not to constitute a violation of that portion of the statute dealing with falsely made or forged securities:

A. Where a check is drawn by the maker in his/her own name on a bank in which he/she has no funds or no account (i.e., true name check). See United States v. Melvin, 316 F.2d 647 (7th Cir. 1963); Hall v. United States, 372 F.2d 603, 607 (4th Cir. 1967). Hence, insufficient funds check cases are exclusively within the province of state laws. (Note: If the fraudulently obtained property had a value of $5,000 or more and was subsequently transported in interstate or foreign commerce, there would be a violation of the first paragraph of 18 U.S.C. §2314.)

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

B. Where a fictitious name is used by the drawer, but it is the name by which he/she generally is known or by which he/she is known to the payee, and in drawing the check in this manner he/she does not intend to falsify his/her identity. See United States v. Gallagher, 94 F. Supp. 640 (W.D. Pa. 1950); United States v. Greever, 116 F. Supp. 755 (D. D.C. 1953).

C. Where the signature itself shows the signer is acting in the capacity of agent or trustee. See 41 A.L.R. 229; Gilbert v. United States, 370 U.S. 650 (1962).

D. Where a validly executed instrument contains a forged indorsement. See Prussian v. United States, 282 U.S. 675 (1931); Streett v. United States, supra, United States v. Roby, 499 F.2d 151 (10th Cir. 1974). The Streett case held that the countersignature on a travelers check is, in effect, a first endorsement and that a travelers check issued for value to a purchaser does not thereafter become a forged security by reason of forgery of the purchaser's countersignature. (See USAM 9-61.250 infra.)

A "blank" traveler's check is a security as it has on it all the necessary indicia prior to issuance. In the past it was the practice of traveler's check companies to require the purchaser to sign the traveler's check in the presence of the issuing clerk at time of issuance. Hence, when blank traveler's checks were stolen and a thief subsequently filled in a name (whether his/her own or someone else's), it has been held that such an instrument was falsely made and forged since the perpetrator lacked the authority to issue the check. See United States v. Law, 435 F.2d 1264 (5th Cir. 1970); United States v. Franco, 413 F.2d 282 (5th Cir. 1969). However, in recent years some traveler check issuers no longer require that the purchaser sign the checks in the presence of the issuing clerk. Apparently, this new procedure was adopted for the convenience of purchasers (e.g., either wife or husband could sign the check just before using and then place the countersignature (i.e., the second signature) on the check in the presence of the accepting merchant). Consequently, some traveler's checks are now issued in blank (i.e., no specified payee) and are bearer instruments at the time of issuance. It may be hard to distinguish between traveler's checks stolen before issuance and those stolen after issuance. Moreover, because of change in business procedures, the rationale of the Streett case (18 U.S.C. §2314 covers only the false making of the instrument, not its false indorsement) and the holder-in-due-course doctrine for bearer securities, courts may be less likely to hold that the false filling in of the payee's signature (i.e., original purchaser) is presently covered by the statute.

9-61.251 Forged Indorsements

While there has been universal agreement that falsely made and forged securities certainly relate to the unauthorized execution of the face of a document, there has been considerable dispute whether a forged indorsement is covered by the third paragraph of 18 U.S.C. §2314. Relying in part upon the Supreme Court holding in Prussian v. United States, 282 U.S. 675 (1931), that a forged indorsement on a United States government security was not a forged obligation of the United States (as an indorsement can only be an obligation of the indorser), the courts starting with Streett v. United States, supra, have generally held, when specifically addressing the issue, that forged indorsements are not encompassed within the purview of the third paragraph of 18 U.S.C. §2314. United States v. Tyson, 690 F.2d 9 (1st Cir. 1982); United States v. Sciortino, 601 F.2d 680 (2d Cir. 1979); United States v. Simpson, supra. While these holdings ignore the argument that a forged indorsement may itself be a "security" and the similarity of fraudulent intent by the false maker and the false indorser, the logic of these holdings plus the passage by Congress of the fourth paragraph of 18 U.S.C. §2314 in 1968 (Pub. L. No. 90-535, 82 Stat. 885) relating to countersignatures on traveler checks undercuts prior arguments. While the Department has not taken the position that forged indorsements can never be covered by the third paragraph of 18 U.S.C. §2314, we note the futility of such recent attempts United States v. Tyson, supra, United States v. Sciortino, supra, and United States v. Simpson, supra. Moreover, in view of the general prosecutive policy for these offenses (see USAM 9-61.230, supra) and the fact that securities with forged indorsements are "converted or taken by fraud" (United States v. Tyson, supra) and the ability to aggregate converted checks having a sufficient relationship to reach the $5,000 figure (see USAM 9-61.247, supra) under the first paragraph of 18 U.S.C. §2314, the absence of coverage of forged indorsements per se under the third paragraph may not be that detrimental to matters warranting federal prosecution.

It should be noted that the forged indorsement on state or corporate securities is now expressly covered by new 18 U.S.C. §511 (Securities of the State and private entities). See USAM 9-61.800, infra.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-61.252 Tracing

In passing the National Stolen Property Act, Congress intended to aid the states in the detection and prosecution of perpetrators who commit thefts or frauds in one jurisdiction and then flee that jurisdiction with the proceeds, and to keep the channels of interstate and foreign commerce free from the pollution of stolen and fraudulently taken proceeds. See United States v. Turley, 352 U.S. 407, 415 (1957); United States v. Sheridan, 329 U.S. 379, 384 (1946). To effectuate these legislative purposes, the courts, utilizing the principles of equity, have created a tracing doctrine for the proceeds of such thefts or frauds. Basically, if the proceeds actually transported in interstate or foreign commerce can be traced to the actual property stolen or taken by fraud and the proceeds are in the form of "goods," "wares," "merchandise," "securities," or "money," at the time of their interstate or foreign transportation the statute has been held applicable. The seminal case is United States v. Walker, 176 F.2d 504 (2d Cir. 1949). Walker involved the fraudulent acquisition by the perpetrator of checks sent by a mortgagee to the victim. The perpetrator exchanged the mortgagee's checks for two bank checks of $10,000 and $7,000, respectively, $3,000 in traveler checks, and $6,000 in cash. The defendant then exchanged the $10,000 bank check for 100 additional traveler's checks. The defendant was prosecuted for transporting more than $5,000 of the traveler checks taken feloniously by fraud in interstate commerce. The indictment was upheld. Walker, supra, at 566. The change in form doctrine has been recognized and followed in other cases. See United States v. Davis, 608 F.2d 555 (5th Cir. 1979); United States v. Levy, 579 F.2d 1332 (5th Cir. 1978); United States v. Pomponio, 558 F.2d 1172 (4th Cir. 1977); United States v. Poole, 557 F.2d 531 (5th Cir. 1977). In Poole, supra, however, one count of the defendant's conviction was reversed because the government failed to prove that the check actually transported in interstate commerce represented the proceeds of the fraud. In Poole, supra, the defendant defrauded a victim out of a check and deposited the victim's check in the perpetrator's local checking account. The victim's check never left the state. The perpetrator then sent his own personal check for the amount of the fraud to an out of state account of his. However, because the perpetrator had sufficient funds in his checking account, besides those obtained by fraud from the victim, to cover his personal check, the court held that the government did not establish that $5,000 or more of the fraudulently obtained funds were actually transported in interstate commerce. The Poole decision shows the need to specifically trace and identify the proceeds of the theft or fraud. If commingling of "good" funds with "stolen" funds occurs, such tracing can be difficult.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-61.253 Exceptions to 18 U.S.C. §2314 and §2315 (Proviso Clause)

In the last paragraph of both 18 U.S.C. §2314 and §2315, there is a proviso clause that makes these sections inapplicable to certain falsely made, forged, altered, or counterfeit securities. While the language of the proviso clause is confusing, the legislative intent is clear. In enacting in 1939 what is now the third and fifth paragraphs of 18 U.S.C. §2314 and the second and third paragraphs of 18 U.S.C. §2315, Congress intended to exclude from the coverage of these provisions those securities already protected by existing federal counterfeit laws. These securities are all governmental or quasi-governmental in nature. They include all securities and obligations issued by the United States government (see, e.g., 18 U.S.C. §§471, 472, 500). See United States v. Galardi, 476 F.2d 1072 (9th Cir. 1973). They also include those foreign securities covered originally by the Act of May 16, 1884, (ch. 52, 23 Stat. 22). See United States v. Arjona, 120 U.S. 479 (1887). These provisions are now codified in 18 U.S.C. §§478, 479, 480, 481, 482 and 483, 18 U.S.C. §478 covers the counterfeiting of the obligations of the foreign government itself. 18 U.S.C. §4812 covers the counterfeiting of bank notes issued by foreign banks or corporations, which notes are intended by law or usage of such foreign countries to circulate as currency. 18 U.S.C. §§479 and 481 are the uttering offenses for the securities described in 18 U.S.C. §§478 and 481, respectively. 18 U.S.C. §480 is the possession offense for the securities described in 18 U.S.C. §§478 and 481 respectively. See Forlini v. United States, 12 F.2d 681 (1926). (In the recodification in 1948, 18 U.S.C. §480 was moved, without any explanation being given, from what was its original fifth position in the Act of May 16, 1884, to its present third position.) An analysis of the legislative history clearly shows that it is only the bank notes intended by law or usage to circulate as money issued by foreign banks or corporations that are excluded by the proviso clause. Hence, checks, money orders, and other securities issued by foreign banks or corporations which are not intended to circulate as currency are within the reach of 18 U.S.C. §§2314 and 2315. See United States v. Burger, 728 F.2d 140 (2d Cir. 1984); United States v. Noe, 634 F.2d 860 (5th Cir. 1981); United States v. Ortiz, 444 F. Supp. 81 (W.D. Tex. 1977).

9-61.260 Elements of the Offenses Under 18 U.S.C. §§2314 and 2315

9-61.261 First Paragraph of 18 U.S.C. §2314

The elements of a violation under the first paragraph of 18 U.S.C. §2314 are that the defendant:

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

A. Unlawfully transports or causes to be transported in interstate or foreign commerce;

B. Goods, wares, merchandise, securities, or money having a value of $5,000 or more which are stolen, converted or taken by fraud; and

C. Knowing the same to be stolen, converted or taken by fraud.

The gist of this offense is transportation. The property must have value of $5,000 or more. The defendant does not have to be the actual thief, although he/she could be. The term "unlawfully" means contrary to law, i.e., the absence of lawful justification. For example, a person voluntarily returning property stolen, converted, or taken by fraud to its lawful owner would not violate the statute. The term "causes to be" comes from 18 U.S.C. §2(b). See Pereira v. United States, 347 U.S. 1 (1953). Interstate or foreign transportation commences when the journey begins. See United States v. McElroy, 455 U.S. 642 (1982); United States v. Ajlouny, 629 F.2d 830 (2d Cir. 1980).

18 U.S.C. §2314 may be applicable to certain check kiting schemes where a float has been created and the perpetrator is transporting in interstate or foreign commerce by means of securities (usually the perpetrator's own checks) the funds which he/she has been taking by fraud from the banking institution. See United States v. Flick, 516 F.2d 489 (7th Cir. 1975). The fact that he/she is using his/her own check to transport the bank's funds does not preclude prosecution as the statute permits tracing where the form of the "stolen" property is changed. (See USAM 9-61.251, supra.)

9-61.262 Second Paragraph of 18 U.S.C. §2314

The elements of the second paragraph of 18 U.S.C. §2314 are that defendant:

A. Devises or intends to devise a scheme to defraud or obtain money or property by false or fraudulent pretenses, representations, or promises.

B. Transports or causes to be transported or induces any person to travel in or be transported in interstate commerce; and

C. In the execution or concealment of a scheme or artifice to defraud that person of money or property having a value of $5,000 or more.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The gist of this offense is the interstate transportation of the victim. It does not require an actual loss of property by the victim. See United States v. Benson, 548 F.2d 42 (2d Cir. 1977). The provision does not require a specific intent to defraud a chosen individual as it requires only proof of a general intent to defraud. See United States v. Kelly, 569 F.2d 928 (5th Cir. 1978). The government does not have to prove that the victim relied on the false representations and was deceived by them. See United States v. Reina, 446 F.2d 16 (9th Cir. 1971). While the provision only covers interstate transportation, the courts have held in those situations where the victim has been induced to travel to a foreign country that there is interstate travel if he/she crossed into another state before his/her departure to the foreign country. See United States v. Kelly, supra; Charron v. United States, 412 F.2d 657 (9th Cir. 1969).

9-61.263 Third Paragraph of 18 U.S.C. §2314

The elements of the third paragraph of 18 U.S.C. §2314 are that the defendant:

- A. With unlawful or fraudulent intent;
- B. Transports or causes to be transported in interstate or foreign commerce;
- C. A falsely made, forged, altered, or counterfeit security or tax stamps; and
- D. Knowing the same to have been falsely made, forged, altered, or counterfeited.

A forged security does not have to be actually forged before the security crosses a state boundary provided that the forging takes place before the completion of the interstate journey. See United States v. McElroy, 455 U.S. 642 (1982). In most cases the defendant by negotiating the security will cause the receiver to send the security back to the issuer for collection. If the issuer is out of state, the defendant has caused its interstate transportation. See Pereira v. United States, 347 U.S. 1 (1953); 18 U.S.C. §2(b). The defendant does not have to know of the interstate transportation as that is only a jurisdictional element. See United States v. Ludwig, 523 F.2d 705 (8th Cir. 1975). See also United States v. Feola, 420 U.S. 671 (1975).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

When a perpetrator transports several counterfeit or forged securities at the same time he/she commits only one offense. See United States v. Squires, 581 F.2d 408 (4th Cir. 1978). However, when he/she negotiates a forged check at each of three different merchants, he/she commits three separate offenses. Amer v. United States, 367 F.2d 803 (8th Cir. 1966). On the other hand, if he/she negotiates three forged checks at the same time, he/she commits only one offense as it is presumed that the forged securities entered the stream of commerce together. See Cabbell v. United States, 636 F.2d 246 (8th Cir. 1980). While there is some case law to indicate that if the defendant can establish that, if the separately negotiated forged securities happened to travel together in the interstate banking channels, the separate offenses would merge, Ketchum v. United States, 327 F.Supp. 768 (D. Md. 1971), the better view would be that such happenstance occurrences should not control the purposes of the statute as each offense was started at a different time with a different victim. The fact that such securities "took the same plane" should be immaterial and the perpetrator, having assumed the risk of separate offenses, should face the possibility of consecutive sentences if the court deems such punishment to be warranted.

9-61.264 Fourth Paragraph of 18 U.S.C. §2314

The elements of the fourth paragraph of 18 U.S.C. §2314 are that defendant:

- A. With unlawful or fraudulent intent;
- B. Transports or causes to be transported in interstate or foreign commerce; and
- C. A traveler's check bearing a forged countersignature.

This provision is limited to the forged countersignature on traveler's checks (i.e., the second signature by the purchaser). It was sought by the traveler's check industry to overcome the problem concerning forged indorsements caused by the decision in Streett v. United States, 331 F.2d 151 (8th Cir. 1964). In view of recent practices by some traveler's check companies to issue their checks in blank and the basic holder-in-due-course doctrine for bearer securities, it is questionable whether a fourth paragraph violation can occur if the purchaser of the traveler's check does not sign the traveler's check before such checks are stolen from him/her.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-61.265 Fifth Paragraph of 18 U.S.C. §2314

The elements of the fifth paragraph of 18 U.S.C. §2314 are that the defendant:

- A. With unlawful or fraudulent intent;
- B. Transports or causes to be transported in interstate or foreign commerce; and
- C. Any tool, implement, or thing used or fitted to be used in falsely making, forging, altering, or counterfeiting any security or tax stamp or any part thereof.

This provision covers the tools and implements which can be used to falsely make, forge, alter, or counterfeit securities or tax stamps. In view of the breadth of the provision as to counterfeiting instrumentalities, the unlawful intended use of the tool for counterfeiting purposes will obviously have to be proven.

9-61.266 First Paragraph of 18 U.S.C. §2315

The elements under the basic offense of the first paragraph of 18 U.S.C. §2315 are that the defendant:

- A. Receive, conceal, store, barter, sell, or dispose of;
- B. Goods, wares, merchandise, securities or money stolen, converted or taken by fraud having the value of $5,000 or more;
- C. Which are moving as, which are a part of, or which constitute interstate or foreign commerce; and
- D. Knowing the same to have been stolen, converted, or taken by fraud.

The first paragraph also prohibits the pledging or accepting as security for a loan any goods, wares, merchandise, or securities stolen, converted, or taken by fraud, having the value of $500 or more which are moving as, which are a part of, or which constitute interstate or foreign commerce, knowing the same to be stolen, converted, or taken by fraud.

This paragraph requires that the stolen property still retain its interstate or foreign commerce character at the time the defendant does

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

one of the enumerated acts. The courts have clearly held that such commerce character does not terminate upon the arrival of the property in another state and that it remains until the purpose of the transportation has been accomplished. See United States v. Licavoli, 604 F.2d 613 (9th Cir. 1979); United States v. Tobin, 576 F.2d 687 (5th Cir. 1978); United States v. Pichany, 490 F.2d 1073 (7th Cir. 1973). As long as the property is in the hands of a fence versus a user (i.e., consumer) of the property, it can be argued that the commerce character remains. See Roberson v. United States, 237 F.2d 536 (5th Cir. 1956).

The question of whether the commerce character was continuing is a jury question. See Corey v. United States, 305 F.2d 232 (9th Cir. 1962). The defendant does not have to know of the continuing commerce character as such is only a jurisdictional element. See United States v. Beil, 577 F.2d 1313 (5th Cir. 1978); United States v. Smith, 461 F.2d 246 (10th Cir. 1972). See also United States v. Feola, 420 U.S. 671 (1975). While the statutory language of the first paragraph of 18 U.S.C. §2315 uses the word "taken" and not the words "taken by fraud," it has been held that "taken by fraud" is what was intended by Congress. See United States v. McClintic, 570 F.2d 685 (8th Cir. 1978).

9-61.267 Second Paragraph of 18 U.S.C. §2315

The elements for a violation of the second paragraph of 18 U.S.C. §2315 are that the defendant:

- A. Receive, conceal, store, barter, sell, dispose of, or pledge or accept as security or for a loan;
- B. A falsely made, forged, altered, or counterfeit security or tax stamp;
- C. Which is moving as, which is a part of, or which constitutes interstate or foreign commerce; and
- D. Knowing the same to have been falsely made, forged, altered, or counterfeited.

The discussion in USAM 9-61.266, supra on the retention of a security's interstate or foreign commerce character should be consulted.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-61.268 Third Paragraph of 18 U.S.C. §2315

The elements for a violation of the third paragraph of 18 U.S.C. §2315 are that the defendant:

A. Receive in interstate or foreign commerce or conceal, store, barter, sell, or dispose of;

B. Any tool, implement, or thing used or intended to be used in falsely making, forging, altering, or counterfeiting any security or tax stamp or any part thereof;

C. Which is moving as, which is part of, or which constitutes interstate or foreign commerce; and

D. Knowing that the same is fitted to be used, or has been used, in falsely making, forging, altering, or counterfeiting any security or tax stamp or part thereof.

The counterfeiting instrumentalities must retain their commerce character. (See USAM 9-61.266, supra.)

9-61.270 Forms of Indictments

9-61.271 First Paragraph of 18 U.S.C. §2314

On or about the _____ day of _____, 19____, the defendant, _____, did unlawfully transport in interstate commerce from _____, State of _____, to _____, State of _____, in the _____ District of _____, stolen goods, wares and merchandise, that is, _____, of the value of $5,000 or more, knowing the same to have been stolen.

On or about the _____ day of _____, 19____, the defendant, _____, did unlawfully transport in interstate commerce from _____, State of _____, to _____, State of _____, in the _____ District of _____, a security taken by fraud, to wit, (describe the security), of the value of $5,000 or more, knowing the same to have been taken by fraud.

9-61.272 Second Paragraph of 18 U.S.C. §2314

I. [Set out the scheme and artifice to defraud and obtain money and property by means of false and fraudulent pretenses, etc., as in a mail fraud (18 U.S.C. §1341).]

II. On or about the _____ day of _____, 19____, the defendant, _____, having devised and intended to devise the aforesaid scheme and artifice to defraud, and for obtaining money and property by means of false and fraudulent pretenses, representations and promises, did transport (name of victim) from _____, State of _____, to _____, State of _____, in the _____ District of _____, in the execution of the aforesaid scheme and artifice to defraud (name of victim) of property having a value of $5,000 or more, that is, (describe the property).

9-61.273 Third Paragraph of 18 U.S.C. §2314

On or about the _____ day of _____, 19____, the defendant, _____, with unlawful and fraudulent intent, did transport and cause to be transported in interstate commerce from _____, State of _____, in the _____ District of _____, to _____, State of _____, a falsely made and forged security, that is, (describe the security), knowing the same to be falsely made and forged.

Note: You may wish to attach a copy of the falsely made and forged security to the indictment. The "cause to be transported" comes from 18 U.S.C. §2(b). See Pereira v. United States, 347 U.S. 1 (1953).

9-61.274 First Paragraph of 18 U.S.C. §2315

On or about the _____ day of _____, 19____, in the _____ District of _____, the defendant, _____, did receive and conceal certain stolen securities, that is, (describe the securities) of a value of $5,000 or more, which were moving as, were a part of, and constituted interstate commerce from the State of _____ to the State of _____, knowing the same to have been stolen.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-61.275 Second Paragraph of 18 U.S.C. §2315

On or about the ____ day of _____, 19 ____, in the _____ District of _____, the defendant, _____, did receive and conceal certain counterfeit securities, that is, (describe the securities), which were moving as, were part of, and constituted interstate commerce from the State of _____ to the State of _____, knowing the same to have been counterfeited.

9-61.280 Venue

Venue for offenses under 18 U.S.C. §2314 are governed by the provisions of 18 U.S.C. §3237. In other words, the defendant may be prosecuted in any district where the interstate transportation was begun, continued, or completed. While the gist of the offense under the second paragraph of 18 U.S.C. §2314 is the interstate transportation of the victim and hence venue would be in any district that the victim began, continued, or completed his/her interstate journey, see United States v. Coppola, 486 F.2d 882 (10th Cir. 1973), since the statute also prohibits acts of inducement, venue probably also exists where such acts were made or had their effect. (Compare with venue under the obstruction of justice statutes in USAM 9-69.180, infra.)

Venue for an offense under 18 U.S.C. §2315 would be where one of the enumerated acts was performed.

Violations of the Theft from Interstate Shipment statute (18 U.S.C. §659) are within the investigative jurisdiction of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

9-61.330 Policy Concerning Prosecution

Thefts from interstate shipment should be prosecuted under federal laws where: (1) there is difficulty in establishing venue for state prosecution, (2) the thefts are systematic or widespread, (3) another related federal offense is charged against the defendant, or (4) federal prosecution would be advantageous to the administration of justice, such as in the detection, prevention, or prosecution of crimes generally.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Major theft cases and cases involving repeat offenders should be given priority attention under 18 U.S.C. §659. Since theft from interstate shipment is a concurrent offense, prosecutive agreements with state and local law enforcement authorities are appropriate.

The Criminal Division has no objection to a U.S. Attorney's preference that the FBI present to him/her cases involving the theft of goods or chattels having a certain minimum value (e.g., $100 or $250) and only those cases involving the theft of property valued at less than such figure where unusual circumstances are present. In establishing monetary amounts, however, U.S. Attorneys should fully realize that shippers and carriers often are subject to a series of minor thefts which in their combined loss value can account for more than 80% of cargo thefts. While federal resources do not permit the investigation or prosecution of each minor individual theft, when a pattern of thefts is evident or can be demonstrated an investigative effort by the FBI, which may also involve state or local law enforcement agents, should be considered. This would be especially appropriate where security officials of the carrier are willing to assist in the investigation.

Where cargo theft is perceived as a significant problem in the district, the U.S. Attorney is encouraged to have his/her Law Enforcement Coordinating Committee address the issue. If the district has an area-wide cargo security committee composed of persons in the private sector and law enforcement officials concerned about preventing cargo thefts in their geographical area, the U.S. Attorney is encouraged to participate in such voluntary effort.

9-61.340 Discussion of Offense

9-61.341 General

18 U.S.C. §659 proscribes the embezzlement of, theft of, or unlawful taking of, from certain listed facilities, including pipelines, railroad cars, motor trucks, depots, aircraft, aircraft terminals, vessels and wharves, goods or chattels which are moving as, are part of or constitute an interstate or foreign shipment. Similar acts with regard to the baggage in the possession of a common carrier for interstate or foreign transportation or of any property of a passenger in interstate or foreign transportation are also prohibited by the section. 18 U.S.C. §659 also prohibits the buying, receiving, or possession of such goods or chattels by a person knowing them to have been embezzled or stolen.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The term "goods or chattels" covers all forms of personal property. The interstate or foreign shipment can be by a carrier or by the owner of the goods. See United States v. Gollin, 166 F.2d 123 (3d Cir. 1948); Marifian v. United States, 82 F.2d 628 (8th Cir. 1936). The carrier does not have to be licensed and a transfer between one carrier to another carrier does not terminate the shipment.

A penalty of not more than ten years imprisonment or fine of not more than $5,000 of both is specified. Where, however, the value of the goods does not exceed $100 the theft is punishable as a misdemeanor (i.e., a fine of up to $1,000 and/or imprisonment of one year.) As to offenses occurring on or after January 1, 1985, the possible fine for the felony was increased to $250,000 and the possible fine for the misdemeanor was increased to $100,000. See 18 U.S.C. §3623 (Alternative fines).

9-61.342 State Prosecution a Bar

18 U.S.C. §659 provides that a judgment of conviction or acquittal on the merits under the laws of any state shall be a bar to any federal prosecution under the section for the same act or acts.

9-61.343 Interstate or Foreign Commerce Aspect of Shipment

The interstate or foreign commerce aspect of 18 U.S.C. §659 relates to the time of theft, not to the time of the defendant's receipt or possession of stolen property. See United States v. Tyers, 487 F.2d 828 (2d Cir. 1973). Actual knowledge by the defendant of the interstate or foreign commerce character of the stolen goods is not required as that is only a jurisdictional requirement. See United States v. Zarattine, 552 F.2d 753 (7th Cir. 1977); United States v. Houle, 490 F.2d 167 (2d Cir. 1973); United States v. Tyers, supra.

18 U.S.C. §659 states three ways in which the commerce requirement can be met: the goods can (1) be moving as an interstate or foreign shipment, (2) be part of an interstate or foreign shipment, or (3) constitute an interstate or foreign shipment. The use of the conjunction "or" between these clauses suggests that the criteria are disjunctive rather than conjunctive. See United States v. Astolas, 487 F.2d 275 (2d Cir. 1973). The test for determining whether a shipment is in interstate or foreign commerce is a practical one, and depends upon the relationship between the sender, the receiver, and the carrier, the indicia of interstate or foreign commerce (i.e., waybills, shipping documents, etc.), at the time the theft occurs, and preservation of Congressional intent. No single factor is conclusive in the determination. See United States v.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Wills, 593 F.2d 285 (7th Cir. 1979); United States v. Gates, 528 F.2d 1045 (5th Cir. 1976). Shipments begin, continue, and eventually terminate. A shipment which is being sent from one place in a state to another place in the same state can be an interstate shipment if during its travel it will pass or does pass through another state before it reaches its destination. See Yohn v. United States, 28 F. 511 (2d Cir. 1922); United States v. Moynihan, 258 F. 529 (3d Cir. 1919).

An interstate or foreign shipment basically commences when the shipper identifies the goods to be shipped, separates them from his/her other inventory, and has them ready for shipment. Often the goods are loaded into a trailer or railroad car, or affixed with shipping labels. See United States v. Wills, supra; United States v. Astolas, supra; United States v. Parent, 484 F.2d 726 (7th Cir. 1973); United States v. Sherman, 171 F.2d 619 (2d Cir. 1948); United States v. Gollin, 166 F.2d 123 (3d Cir. 1948). Once the shipment begins, its interstate or foreign character remains during the transfer to an intrastate carrier, to an interstate carrier, and back again to an intrastate carrier. The necessary commerce character continues until the shipment reaches its destination and is delivered to the receiver (i.e., consignee) and the receiver accepts and takes complete dominion and control over the goods. See United States v. Luman, 622 F.2d 490 (10th Cir. 1980); United States v. Gates, supra; United States v. Astalos, supra; Winer v. United States, 228 F.2d 944 (6th Cir. 1956); Chapman v. United States, 151 F.2d 740 (8th Cir. 1945); O'Kelly v. United States, 116 F.2d 966 (8th Cir. 1941). If the carrier is the actual owner of the goods, the arrival and delivery to the destination site, regardless of an actual acceptance by the owner's destination agents, may terminate the shipment for purposes of 18 U.S.C. §659. See United States v. Marshall, 501 F. Supp. 348 (N.D. Ga. 1980).

9-61.344 Retention of Stolen Character

During a receipt or possession offense the stolen goods or chattels must still be in a stolen status. Full recovery by the owner or his/her agents, including law enforcement officials, will terminate the stolen character. On the other hand, if the stolen property is not in the sole possession and control of the owner or law enforcement agents and is only under their "surveillance" the stolen character remains. See United States v. Muzii, 676 F.2d 19 (2d Cir. 1982); United States v. Dove, 629 F.2d 325 (4th Cir. 1980).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-61.350 Venue

18 U.S.C. §659 provides that the offense shall be deemed to have been committed not only in the district where the violation first occurred, but also in any district in which the defendant may have taken or been in possession of the goods.

9-61.360 Evidence

9-61.361 Proof of Shipment

The statute provides that to establish the interstate or foreign commerce character of a shipment the waybill or other shipping document of such shipment shall be prima facie evidence of the place from which and to which the shipment was made. Additionally, the removal of property from a pipeline system which extends interstate shall be prima facie evidence on the interstate character of the shipment of the property.

9-61.362 Proof of Value

In order to establish a felony under 18 U.S.C. §659, it must be proven that the value of the stolen goods, chattels, money or baggage exceeds $100. While normally the proof of the value of the stolen property can be readily established by the shipper, at times the value of certain stolen goods or chattels (e.g., the blanks of money orders, checks, stock certificates, etc.) may be more difficult. In these situations the thieves' market value is often used to show their value. See United States v. Jackson 576 F.2d 749 (8th Cir. 1978); United States v. Moore, 571 F.2d 154 (3d Cir. 1978); United States v. Tyers, supra, United States v. Ditata, 469 F.2d 1270 (7th Cir. 1972); Churder v. United States, 387 F.2d 825 (8th Cir. 1968); United States v. Kramer, 289 F.2d 909 (2d Cir. 1961).

9-61.370 Drafting Indictments

9-61.371 Facility from Which the Goods Were Taken

A split in the circuits exists on the issue of whether the indictment must specifically allege the facility from which the goods were taken. The court in United States v. Manuszak, 234 F.2d 421 (3d Cir. 1956) held that an indictment which does not specify the facility from which the merchandise was taken is fatally defective. Other courts have disagreed reasoning that the purpose of the statute is to protect every conceivable instrumentality of interstate transportation thus obviating a need to specify the particular facility involved. See United States v. Wora, 246 F.2d 283 (2d Cir. 1957); United States v. Spivey, 448 F.2d 390 (4th Cir. 1971); Dunson v. United States, 404 F.2d 447 (9th Cir. 1968). To avoid appellate issues, indictments should allege the facility from which the goods were taken.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-61.372 Election Required Between Theft and Possession

The literal terms of 18 U.S.C. §659 proscribe as separate offenses theft and possession or receipt of stolen goods. Judicial construction of similar offenses under the federal bank robbery and theft of government property statutes prohibits conviction of both theft and receipt or possession of the same goods. See Gaddis v. United States, 424 U.S. 544 (1976); Milanovich v. United States, 365 U.S. 551 (1961). It is the Department's view that the rationale of these cases is equally applicable to 18 U.S.C. §659 thus requiring an election between theft and receipt or possession under the statute.

cultivated to provide information about fencing operations. The use of court-authorized electronic surveillance may often be necessary in such investigations. See 18 U.S.C. §2516(c). Where appropriate, consideration should be given to the use of the RICO statute (18 U.S.C. §1961 et seq.) where the fence operates through a legitimate business.

9-61.430 Indictment

When preparing indictments against subjects involved in the redistribution of stolen property particular attention should be given to the provisions of 18 U.S.C. §§659, 2312, 2313, 2314, 2315, 2320, and 1961 et seq. Other statutes may, of course, be relevant.

9-61.500 SWITCHBLADE KNIFE ACT: 15 U.S.C. §§1241-1244; 18 U.S.C. §1716(h)

9-61.510 Investigative Jurisdiction

Violations arising under the mailing provisions of the Switchblade Knife Act (18 U.S.C. §1716(h)) are investigated by the Postal Service. Violations arising under the commerce provisions of the Act (15 U.S.C. §1242) are investigated by the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

9-61.520 Supervisory Section

Questions regarding the Switchblade Knife Act should be directed to the General Litigation and Legal Advice Section of the Criminal Division.

9-61.530 Discussion of the Offense

The Switchblade Knife Act prohibits the introduction, transportation, or distribution in interstate commerce of any switchblade knife. The term "switchblade knife" includes any knife having a blade which opens automatically by hand pressure applied to a button or other device in the handle of the knife or by operation of inertia, gravity, or both. Manufacture, sale, or possession of switchblade knives within the special and maritime jurisdiction of the United States as well as within Indian Country is also prohibited. Exempted from the operation of the Act are common carriers which handle switchblade knives in the ordinary course of business, members of the Armed Forces acting in the performance of their duty, sale to the Armed Forces pursuant to contract, and one-armed individuals.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The Act also amends 18 U.S.C. §1716 so as to add switchblade knives to its declaration of non-mailable articles. The Act does, however, permit the mailing of such knives to the Armed Forces or procurement officers of state and local governments pursuant to postal regulations.

9-61.600 BANK ROBBERY

9-61.601 Disclosure of Information

It is requested that Department of Justice personnel not release information revealing amounts of monies taken in any bank robbery until it becomes a matter of public record by virtue of indictment.

Bankers have indicated that such news releases tend to advertise the movement of replacement monies designated for victim banks and the funds routinely kept on hand at such institutions. Likewise they indicate that this tends to promote the branch as a repeater victim. Additionally, such news releases appear to suggest that bank robberies may be a successful and lucrative venture.

The amounts of money taken should not be volunteered in news releases at any time, and should be made only in response to a specific question after indictment. Accordingly, statements revealing the amounts taken should be connected with the indictment and apprehension of the offender so as to reflect the unsuccessful character of the robbery. In any event, the amount taken should be played down to avoid misunderstanding.

9-61.610 Investigative Jurisdiction

Investigative jurisdiction is vested in the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-61.630 Prosecutive Policy

Through their Law Enforcement Coordinating Committees, U.S. Attorneys and FBI SAC's should meet with their state and local counterparts to arrive at a proper allocation of investigative and prosecutive resources. It is the present policy of the Department to lessen federal involvement in the bank robbery area, and make deliberate progress toward maximum feasible deferral of the bank robbery matters to those state and local law enforcement agencies which are prepared to handle them. However, no case should be deferred in favor of state investigation or prosecution where the state will not adequately handle it.

9-61.640 Special Considerations

A recurring problem in bank robbery prosecutions concerns transactions involving coin roll artists, short change schemes, and misrepresentations of identity. This type of problem can be expected to occur more frequently as a result of computer related crimes directed at banking institutions.

Until recently, there had been a split in the circuits on the issue of whether the federal bank theft statute, 18 U.S.C. §2113(b), applied only to the offense of larceny as that crime is defined at common law, or whether the statute also encompassed the taking of bank funds by false pretenses. A taking by false pretenses is not a form of common law larceny, as is larceny by trick. False pretenses is characterized by false representations to induce a willing transfer of possession and title, whereas larceny by trick induces only a willing transfer of possession but not title.

This split in authority appears to have been resolved by the Supreme Court in Bell v. United States, 462 U.S. 356 (1983). In Bell, the defendant forged an indorsement on an apparently stolen check and deposited it into his account at a Federal Savings and Loan Association. Bell later withdrew the entire sum from his account, and he subsequently was convicted of violating the bank theft statute, 18 U.S.C. §2113(b). In affirming the conviction, the Supreme Court held that 18 U.S.C. §2113(b) is not limited to common law larceny, but that it also applies to cases of obtaining bank property by false pretenses so long as there is a taking and carrying away.

The opinion of the Court in Bell, however, expressly states that 18 U.S.C. §2113(b) may not cover the full range of theft offenses and that it does not apply to a case of false pretenses in which there is not a taking and carrying away. This qualifying language creates some uncertainty as to the precise scope of the statute. Clearly, the statute covers an obtaining by false pretenses where, as in Bell, the defendant appears at the bank in person, and takes and carries away the money. There is, however, at least some question as to whether the statute would apply in a situation in which the defendant did not personally appear at the bank and where the taking occurred by means of a negotiable instrument or electronic funds transfer. We note, however, that there is at least one reported case which resulted in a conviction under 18 U.S.C. §2113(b) based on the taking of bank funds which occurred by means of negotiable instruments and where the defendant apparently did not appear personally at the bank. United States v. Posner, 408 F. Supp. 1145 (D. Md. 1976), aff'd without opinion, 551 F.2d 310 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 837 (1977).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-61.641 Aggravated Bank Robbery, 18 U.S.C. §2113(d)

18 U.S.C. §2113(d) provides:

Whoever, in committing, or in attempting to commit, any offense defined in subsections (a) and (b) of this section, assaults any person, or puts in jeopardy the life of any person by the use of a dangerous weapon or device, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than twenty-five years, or both.

Although subsection (d) commonly is referred to as armed bank robbery, there had been some question as to whether the words "use of a dangerous weapon or device," modified the words "assaults any person," as well as the words "puts in jeopardy the life of any person." In dictum, the Supreme Court apparently has adopted the view that the phrase "by use of a dangerous weapon or device" must be read, regardless of punctuation, as modifying both the assault provision and the putting in jeopardy provision. Simpson v. United States, 435 U.S. 6, 11 n.6 (1976). In view of this language in Simpson, a bank robbery involving an assault and battery resulting in serious injury, but where no dangerous weapon or device is used, apparently could not be prosecuted successfully under 18 U.S.C. §2113(d).

In addition, there is uncertainty as to what constitutes putting life in jeopardy by use of a dangerous weapon or device under 18 U.S.C. §2113(d). There seems to be no question that the use of a loaded, operable firearm amounts to putting life in jeopardy. However, considerable confusion arises where, for example, the dangerous weapon or device turns out to be a toy gun, a simulated bomb, an unloaded or inoperable firearm, or where law enforcement officers fail to recover the weapons.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

It would appear that the intent of Congress was that 18 U.S.C. §2113(d) cover instances in which simulated weapons are employed in the commission of a robbery. Section 2113(d) was amended in 1934 to ensure the inclusion of such situations after the following debate:

MR. DOCKWEILER. May I say that a man might go into a bank with intent to rob and use a gas bomb, which would not in itself be dangerous.

MR. BLANTON. Yes; or he may use one of those new kind of Indian six shooters carved out of a piece of wood with a pocket knife.

* * * *

MR. SUMNERS of Texas. The committee is perfectly willing to have inserted in line 6 page 3, after the word "weapon," the words "or device."

MR. BLANTON. I believe that would help the situation.

MR. DOCKWEILER. I can conceive of a lot of devices which are not dangerous. I would suggest the use of words indicating something intended to instill fear.

MR. SUMNERS of Texas. What would the gentlemen suggest adding?

MR. DOCKWEILER. I would suggest adding "device or such instrumentality intended to instill fear."

MR. BLANTON. "Device" would cover the situation.

73 Cong. Rec. 8123 (1934)

In opposing the petition for certiorari in Cooper v. United States, 462 F.2d 1343 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 409 U.S. 1009 (1972), the Department expressed the view that since subsection (a) of 18 U.S.C. §2113 defines the offense of bank robbery as a taking by "force and violence" or by "intimidation," aggravated bank robbery under subsection (d) requires something more. The additional element of subsection (d) is satisfied when the assault is accompanied "by the use of a dangerous weapon or device" (18 U.S.C. §2113(d)). The use of any such device, whether actually lethal or not, creates a sense of grave peril which aggravates the robbery and reasonably distinguishes it from a simple robbery accomplished by force, violence, or intimidation (18 U.S.C. §2113(a)).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

On the question of putting life in jeopardy by use of a dangerous weapon or device, the circuits are in disarray. Some circuits have fashioned an objective test while other circuits apply a subjective test.

Under the more restrictive objective test, the question essentially is whether the victim's life actually was placed in jeopardy by use of a dangerous weapon or device, not merely that the victim thought he/she was in danger. See United States v. Marshall, 427 F.2d 434 (2d Cir. 1970); United States v. Roach, 321 F.2d 1 (3d Cir. 1963); United States v. Thomas, 521 F.2d 76 (8th Cir. 1975); Smith v. United States, 309 F.2d 165 (9th Cir. 1962). In circuits applying the subjective test, however, the government need not prove that the weapon or device was capable of putting lives in actual, as opposed to apparent, jeopardy. See United States v. Bennet, 675 F.2d 596 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 456 U.S. 1011 (1982); United States v. Beasley, 438 F.2d 1279 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 404 U.S. 866 (1971); United States v. Shannahan, 605 F.2d 539 (10th Cir. 1979).

Even circuits applying the objective test have not required direct evidence that a firearm was operable and loaded to establish a violation of subsection (d). These courts will permit the fact finder to infer from circumstantial evidence that a gun is loaded and/or operable. See United States v. McAvoy, 574 F.2d 718 (2d Cir. 1978); Morrow v. United States, 408 F.2d 1390 (8th Cir. 1969). Moreover, some circuits, which purport to apply the objective test, apparently would uphold convictions under 18 U.S.C. §2113(d) in situations where the weapon was an unloaded firearm or a simulated explosive device. See Baker v. United States, 412 F.2d 1069 (5th Cir. 1969); United States v. Cooper, 462 F.2d 1343 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 409 U.S. 109 (1972); United States v. Richardson, 562 F.2d 476 (7th Cir. 1977). See generally What Constitutes "Puts In Jeopardy" Within Enhanced Penalty Provisions of Federal Bank Robbery Act, R.J. Davis, 32 A.L.R. Fed. 279.

9-61.642 Federally Protected Financial Institutions

It is essential to allege and prove the federal character of the victim financial institution. The terms "bank," "savings and loan association," and "credit union" are defined in 18 U.S.C. §2113(f), (g), and (h).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

It has been held that a reference to 18 U.S.C. §2113 in an indictment is sufficient to charge that a savings and loan association is federally insured because the statutory definition of savings and loan association includes institutions covered by the FSLIC. See United States v. Coleman, 656 F.2d 509 (9th Cir. 1981). Nevertheless, it is preferable to specifically allege in the indictment the federally insured nature of the victim financial institution.

We note that there is some authority for the proposition that judicial notice may be taken of the federal character of a bank which carries the word "National" in its name. See King v. United States, 426 F.2d 278 (9th Cir. 1970); United States v. Mavro, 501 F.2d 45 (2d Cir. 1974). Clearly, however, the prudent course of action would be to establish the federal character of the financial institution by appropriate documentary and testimonial evidence.

Many, if not most, bank robbery prosecutions are predicated on the federally insured status of the victim institutions. Proof of such status can be adequately established by the certificate of insurance, the cancelled check representing payment of the insurance premium, and testimony of an appropriate bank official to authenticate these documents. See United States v. Hadley, 671 F.2d 1112 (8th Cir. 1982).

9-61.650 Merger and Separate Offenses

Prosecutors should be aware of two particular problem areas relative to the use of this statute: (1) merger of offenses; and (2) the separate offense status of possession offenses.

9-61.651 Merger

With the exception of 18 U.S.C. §2113(c) (receiving or possessing the proceeds of a bank robbery), and the second and third portions of 18 U.S.C. §2113(e) (killing or kidnapping in avoiding apprehension or confinement for bank robbery) the various subsections of the federal bank robbery statute simply state different degrees of the crime of bank theft/robbery. In the eyes of the sentencing judge, the defendant is ultimately guilty of only one of these violations, even where two or more are charged, because the less aggravated offense merges into the more aggravated offense when the evidence establishes the latter. See Prince v. United States, 352 U.S. 332 (1957); see also United States v. Gaddis, 424 U.S. 544 (1976).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

A single count, even where two or more could be charged, may be appropriate as long as the violation charged is the greatest (in terms of aggravation and penalty) which can be established by the evidence. See USAM 9-61.652, infra, for further discussion of 18 U.S.C. §2113(c) (possession offenses).

Where separate counts seem more appropriate, care should be exercised that the sentence is imposed only on the greatest offense. If a concurrent sentence is imposed on two or more of these counts, the sentence is illegal under Prince, supra. Consequently, where separate counts of subsections (a), (b), or (d) are charged under 18 U.S.C. §2113, it is recommended that a jury instruction be requested which mandates initial consideration of the greatest offense charged. If the jury finds the defendant guilty on the most serious charge, no verdict would be necessary on the less serious counts. This approach was outlined in O'Clair v. United States, 470 F.2d 1199 (1st Cir. 1972). 18 U.S.C. §2113(e) prohibits killing and kidnapping in three bank robbery related situations:

- A. In the commission of any offense defined in 18 U.S.C. §2113;
- B. In avoiding or attempting to avoid apprehension for the commission of such an offense; and
- C. In freeing oneself or attempting to free oneself from arrest or confinement for such offense. The penalty is a minimum term of imprisonment of ten years.

A killing or kidnapping in the commission of any offense defined in 18 U.S.C. §2113 is not a separate offense. The less aggravated forms of bank robbery merge into the killing or kidnapping offense. See United States v. Atkins, 558 F.2d 133 (3d Cir. 1977), and cases cited therein. In United States v. Faleafine, 492 F.2d 18 (9th Cir. 1974), the Ninth Circuit indicated that the proper way to charge such violations is in a single count under 18 U.S.C. §2113(e) which fixes the penalty.

With regard to situations involving (B) and (C), above, there is a conflict in the circuits as to whether a killing or kidnapping to avoid apprehension or confinement constitutes a separate offense from the underlying bank robbery. Four circuits have held that only a single offense exists. See United States v. Rossi, 552 F.2d 381 (1st Cir. 1977); Sullivan v. United States, 485 F.2d 1352 (5th Cir. 1973); United States v. Moore, 688 F.2d 433 (6th Cir. 1982); United States v. Pietras, 501 F.2d 182 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 1071 (1974). This approach does not permit separate penalties.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

For the proposition that a separate offense is committed, see Crawford v. United States, 519 F.2d 347 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 1057 (1976); United States v. Fleming, 594 F.2d 598 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 442 U.S. 931 (1979). Gilmore v. United States, 124 F.2d 537 (10th Cir.), cert. denied, 316 U.S. 661 (1942).

It is suggested that separate counts be charged where separate offenses are recognized by circuit case law.

It should be noted that the offense of conspiracy to rob a bank (see 18 U.S.C. §371) and the offense of robbing the same bank are not merged into a single substantive crime. See United States v. Vasquez, 504 F.2d 555 (5th Cir. 1974). Therefore, a defendant may be separately charged, convicted, and sentenced for both conspiracy and the substantive offense.

Since passage of the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984, a defendant charged with armed bank robbery, under 18 U.S.C. §2113(a) and (d), may also be charged and subjected to enhanced punishment under 18 U.S.C. §924(c), which prohibits using or carrying a firearm during and in relation to a federal crime of violence. Prior to the 1984 amendment of Section 924(c), a defendant convicted and sentenced for armed bank robbery could not receive an additional consecutive sentence under §924(c). See Simpson v. United States, 435 U.S. 6 (1977).

9-61.652 Possession Offenses

18 U.S.C. §2113(c) prohibits receiving, possession, etc., of property or money taken from a federally insured bank, savings and loan association, or credit union in violation of 18 U.S.C. §2113(b) larceny. In view of the fact that larceny merges into 18 U.S.C. §2113(a) robbery and 18 U.S.C. §2113(d) robbery by assault or with jeopardy, 18 U.S.C. §2113(c) refers implicitly to 18 U.S.C. §2113(a) and (d) also.

The Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984 amended subsection (c) to reduce substantially the scienter requirement for conviction of receiving money or other property stolen from a bank. Under the former 18 U.S.C. §2113(c), the government had to prove that the accused received stolen bank property "knowing the same to have been taken from a bank, credit union, or a savings and loan association, in violation of subsection (b) of this section. . ." Under the revised subsection 2113(c), the government need only prove the accused knew the money was stolen. Thus, an accused cannot escape culpability for knowing possession of stolen property on the grounds that the evidence fails to show that he/she knew it was stolen from a federally insured financial institution.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

In Heflin v. United States, 358 U.S. 415 (1959), the Supreme Court interpreted the legislative history of 18 U.S.C. §2113 as creating a separate offense "for those who receive the loot from the robber." Heflin, supra, at 419. Since the class of persons envisioned in the creation of 18 U.S.C. §2113(c) is different from those who participate in the robbery-related offenses, Congress was not authorizing the imposition of further punishment for the robbers. Thus, a defendant may be charged with, but not convicted of, both the robbery-related offense, 18 U.S.C. §2113(a), (b), or (d), and possession of the stolen money or property 18 U.S.C. §2113(c).

The Supreme Court, in United States v. Gaddis, 424 U.S. 544 (1976), reviewed a decision of the Fifth Circuit reversing a defendant's conviction for entering a federally insured bank with intent to rob (count One); robbing the bank by force and violence (count Two); possession of stolen bank funds (count Three); and armed bank robbery (counts Four-Eight); all in violation of 18 U.S.C. §2113(a)(c)(d).

The Supreme Court agreed with the appellate court that it was improper to convict the defendant of 18 U.S.C. §2113(c) in addition to 18 U.S.C. §2113(a), (b), (d), see United States v. Gaddis, supra, at 544, citing Heflin v. United States, 358 U.S. 415, 419. 18 U.S.C. §2113(c) did not merge with the latter offenses since it was not a lesser included offense thereof. However, the court of appeals was mistaken in ordering a new trial to correct the error, since there was no evidence adduced at trial that defendant possessed or received the funds aside from his/her participation in the robbery itself. Therefore, the trial judge's error in not dismissing sua sponte the possession count was remediable by simply vacating the conviction and sentence thereunder. Cf. Milanovich v. United States, 365 U.S. 551 (1961).

The Supreme Court also vacated the concurrent sentences imposed under counts one and two of the indictment, since entering with intent to rob a bank and robbery merged with armed robbery upon completion of the latter; Gaddis, supra; see Prince v. United States, 352 U.S. 322 (1957).

Finally, the Supreme Court recognized that both 18 U.S.C. §2113(c) and 18 U.S.C. §2113(a), (b), or (d) can be charged in an indictment and considered by a jury if sufficient evidence exists on both counts; Gaddis, supra. In such a case, however, conviction on both counts is not proper, and the jury must be instructed not to consider the possession (or receipt) count unless it finds insufficient the proof that defendant participated in the robbery.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-61.660 Imposition of Concurrent Sentences for Multiple Simultaneous Violations of Various Subsections of 18 U.S.C. §2113 Is Improper

The courts of appeals have vacated sentences under the Federal Bank Robbery Act where the trial court had imposed separate sentences on counts charging simultaneous violations of subsections (a), (b) and (d) of 18 U.S.C. §2113. These multiple sentences were vacated even though they were made to run concurrently with each other on the basis that a multiplicity of sentences may adversely affect a prisoner's opportunities for parole or pardon. See Bayless v. United States, 347 F.2d 354 (9th Cir. 1965); United States v. Machibroda, 338 F.2d 947 (6th Cir. 1964); Holland v. United States, 384 F.2d 370 (5th Cir. 1967); Cf. Benton v. Maryland, 395 U.S. 784, 790 (1969).

In United States v. White, 440 F.2d 978 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 404 U.S. 839 (1971), the defendant was convicted on two counts of an indictment charging him/her with violations of 18 U.S.C. §2113(a) and (b) and he/she received concurrent sentences of ten years on each count. Although upholding this conviction, the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals reemphasized the basic proposition established in Prince v. United States, 352 U.S. 322 (1956), that the subsections (a), (b) and (d) of 18 U.S.C. §2113 simply set forth various types of aggravated forms of a single offense. Accordingly, the Fifth Circuit held it was improper to impose separate sentences for violations of subsections (a) and (b) of 18 U.S.C. §2113 even though they were made to run concurrently with each other.

Other cases which have held similarly are: United States v. Spencer, 684 F.2d 220 (2d Cir. 1982); United States v. Foster, 440 F.2d 390 (7th Cir. 1971); Cruz v. United States, 439 F.2d 155 (9th Cir. 1971); United States v. Keel, 585 F.2d 110 (5th Cir. 1978).

In view of these holdings, care should be taken to make sure that district judges impose sentence on only one count where the defendant is found guilty of simultaneous violations of subsections (a), (b) and (d) of 18 U.S.C. §2113.

9-61.670 Lesser Included Offenses--Guilty Pleas

There is at least a question as to whether a defendant can enter a guilty plea to simple bank robbery (see 18 U.S.C. §2113(a) when charged in a one count indictment with armed bank robbery (see 18 U.S.C. §2113(d)). We are unable to find any case in the federal appellate courts raising this specific issue, however, it is our view that a defendant may enter a plea of guilty to the lesser included offense of simple bank robbery provided the court and the prosecutor agree to accept the plea. See Rule

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

11, Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. It should be noted, however, that in United States v. Rocco, 397 F. Supp. 655 (D. Mass. 1975), the court indicated that if the government wanted to foreclose defendant's option to plead guilty to simple bank robbery, it could have done so by fashioning a single count indictment charging the aggravated offense.

Most appeals involving guilty pleas deal with failure of the court to allow a defendant to withdraw such a plea, or with failure of the court to comply with Rule 11, Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. In one such case, McCarthy v. United States, 394 U.S. 459-469 (1969), involving Rule 11, Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, the Supreme Court apparently recognizes that a defendant may wish to "...limit his guilty plea only to a lesser included offense . . ." Consequently, the best approach may be to file an information on the lesser included offense, have defendant plead guilty to it and then move to dismiss the indictment.

9-61.671 Rule 30, Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure--Instructions.
Rule 31(c), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure--Verdict, Conviction of Less Offense.

In affirming a bank robbery (18 U.S.C. §2113(d)) conviction, a panel of the Eighth Circuit stated that a lesser included offense instruction is mandated when requested, provided the lesser offense is necessarily included in the offense charged (see Rule 30, 31(c)), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, provided also that the proof of the element differentiating the two crimes is sufficiently in doubt so that the jury may consistently find the defendant innocent of the greater and guilty of the lesser included offense. The trial court had submitted the lesser offense of robbery (18 U.S.C. §2113(a)) but refused to give a lesser included offense instruction on the crime of bank larceny (18 U.S.C. §2113(b)). Defense did not object to the failure of the court to give the instruction. The court of appeals stated that absent an objection the defect is waived unless it may be found to be plain error under Rule 52(b), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedures, and held that upon the evidence adduced in this case it was not plain error to refuse to give a lesser included offense instruction on the crime of bank larceny. The conviction was affirmed; United States v. Cady, 495 F.2d 742 (8th Cir. 1974).

9-61.680 Problems with Robberies of

9-61.681 Bank Messengers Armored Truck Services

In addition to thefts and robberies committed on bank premises, the federal bank robbery statute also may encompass thefts and robberies of bank messengers and armored truck services. The key factor in determining whether a violation of 18 U.S.C. §2113 has occurred in such circumstances is whether or not the stolen money belonged to or was in the care, custody, control, management, or possession of a protected financial institution.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

In United States v. Marzano, 537 F.2d 257 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 1037 (1976), defendants stole over three million dollars from the vaults of Purolator Security Inc., which was involved in the business of transporting money between banks and business establishments. Because the evidence established that the money in Purolator's custody actually belonged to various F.D.I.C. insured banks, defendants properly were convicted of six counts of bank larceny under 18 U.S.C. §2113(b). If, however, a theft from an armored truck service resulted in the taking of funds belonging to a business establishment other than a protected bank, there would be no violation of 18 U.S.C. §2113. See Lubin v. United States, 313 F.2d 419 (9th Cir. 1963).

U.S. Attorneys should request an immediate FBI investigation in cases of this nature in order to determine whether the funds or securities taken belonged to or were in the care, custody, control, management, or possession of a federally protected financial institution. Cases in this category also may involve violations of 18 U.S.C. §659 if the money or other property taken constituted an interstate or foreign shipment which had not reached its destination. Accordingly, the investigation should encompass not only the facts surrounding the robbery, but should ascertain the contractual relationship between the bank and the messenger service and the duties and functions of such service, particularly with reference to the money or other property taken.

9-61.682 Night Depositories

In United States v. Lankford, 573 F.2d 1051 (8th Cir. 1978), the defendants were convicted of attempting to enter a night depository located in a recessed entry way leading to the main entrance of the bank in violation of the second paragraph of 18 U.S.C. §2113(a). In affirming the convictions, the Eighth Circuit noted that the words of the statute "such bank, . . . or building, or part thereof, so used" reflect a Congressional intent to proscribe the entry of any part of a bank building with intent to steal. Here the depository chute was located inside the outer wall of the bank and the safe which receives the night deposits was located inside the inner wall of the bank. The court also rejected as immaterial an argument that title to the tendered deposits had not passed to the bank.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

It should be noted that a completed theft from a night depository could, alternatively, be charged under 18 U.S.C. §2113(b).

9-61.683 Automated Teller Machines (Off Premises)

Because these machines usually are unattended, the first paragraph of 18 U.S.C. §2113(a) (robbery) would not apply. However, a break-in or attempted break-in of an automated teller machine would violate the second paragraph of 18 U.S.C. §2113(a) (burglary). Further, if money or other things of value are actually carried away, 18 U.S.C. §2113(b) (larceny) would be violated. See Pinckeney v. United States, 380 F.2d 882 (5th Cir. cert. denied, 390 U.S. 908 (1968)).

If money or other thing of value is obtained from an automatic teller machine the fraudulent use of a credit card, there would be a violation of 18 U.S.C. §2113(b) in view of the recent Supreme Court decision in Bell v. United States, ___ U.S. ___, 103 S.Ct. 2398 (1983). See USAM 9-61.640, supra.

9-61.690 Hobbs Act Problems

9-61.691 Extortion--Applicability of the Hobbs Act (18 U.S.C. §1951) to Extortionate Demands Made upon Banks and Airlines

Many extortion attempts directed at banking institutions are not prosecutable under federal extortion statutes, 18 U.S.C. §875 (interstate communications) and 18 U.S.C. §876 (mailing threatening communications). In addition, there is still a question as to whether the federal bank robbery statute, 18 U.S.C. §2113, adequately applies to all extortions and attempted extortions directed at banking institutions.

The typical bank extortion arises where, by telephone call or other means of communication, an extortionist conveys a threat to a bank official, and instructs the official to deliver bank funds to a specified "drop site," away from bank premises. Usually the extortion scheme contemplates that the extortionist will pick up the money after the bank official has departed from the "drop site" area. Thus, there usually is no contemplated face to face confrontation between the extortionist and the victim bank official.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The bank robbery statute, 18 U.S.C. §2113(a), requires a taking or attempted taking of bank property by force and violence or intimidation "from the person or presence of another." In the past, the Criminal Division took the position that many "drop site" extortion cases could not be prosecuted as bank robberies under 18 U.S.C. §2113(a) because, in the Criminal Division's view, the statute required a taking or attempted taking directly "from the person or presence of another," and did not apply to a situation in which the victim bank official might be miles away from the "drop site" when the actual taking occurred. Using this rationale, an extortionist who actually picked up bank funds at the "drop site" could still be prosecuted for the theft under 18 U.S.C. §2113(b), but the threats of violence would go unpunished. Moreover, an extortionist who did not pick up the bank funds at the "drop site" could not be charged with attempted theft under 18 U.S.C. §2113(b) because that subsection contains no attempt provision.

To remedy what was perceived to be a loophole in the coverage of the bank robbery statute, Criminal Division policy had been to utilize the Hobbs Act (18 U.S.C. §1951) in these "drop site" extortion cases. Thus, an extortionist who failed to pick up the money at the "drop site" would have been charged with attempted extortion under the Hobbs Act. If the extortionist succeeded in picking up the money, he/she would have been charged with one count of extortion under the Hobbs Act (18 U.S.C. §1951) and one count of bank theft (18 U.S.C. §2113(b)).

The Hobbs Act provides:

Whoever in any way or degree obstructs, delays, or affects commerce or the movement of any article or commodity in commerce, by robbery or extortion or attempts or conspires so to do, or commits or threatens physical violence to any person or property in furtherance of a plan or purpose to do anything in violation of this section shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than twenty years, or both.

Under the Hobbs Act, federal jurisdiction depends on whether the extortionist's threat might in any way obstruct, delay, or affect commerce, and it does not depend upon the use of any instrument of commerce to convey the threat. Even a minimal interference with commerce is prohibited under the Hobbs Act. See Stirone v. United States, 361 U.S. 212, 215 (1960), United States v. Culbert, 435 U.S. 371 (1978), United States v. Tropiano, 418 F.2d 1069, 1076 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 397 U.S.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

1021 (1970). Cf. United States v. Piranno, 385 F.2d 387 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 390 U.S. 944 (1968). See USAM 9-131.000 et seq., for additional cases and information.

However, contrary to the Criminal Division's position, the Solicitor General's office has taken the view that the bank robbery statute, 18 U.S.C. §2113, fully applies to "drop site" extortion cases, even if there is no taking or attempted taking directly "from the person or presence of [the victim bank official]." It should be noted, however, that the Supreme Court expressed no view concerning the validity of the Criminal Division's interpretation of 18 U.S.C. §2113(a). See United States v. Culbert, 435 U.S. 371, n. 1 (1978). The Solicitor General's position and hence the Department's position now is that we should follow Brinkley v. United States, 560 F.2d 871 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 941 (1977).

In Brinkley, supra, a bank manager received a telephone call demanding $75,000 or a bomb would go off in his/her home. Pursuant to the caller's instructions, the bank manager threw a sack of money over a viaduct. The extortionist, however, never picked up the money. These facts gave rise to Brinkley's conviction for aiding and abetting an attempted bank robbery, 18 U.S.C. §§2113(a) and 2. Brinkley argued that since no one confronted the bank manager, there was no taking or attempted taking "from the person or presence of another as required by 18 U.S.C. §2113(a). The Eighth Circuit, however, concluded that the telephone call to the bank manager was as much a personal confrontation as if Brinkley had entered the bank with a gun and demanded the manager hand over the money. The court further concluded that there was a taking from the person of the bank manager at the time he/she threw the money over the viaduct, and that the money was then in the constructive possession of the extortionist. Therefore, under Brinkley, supra, nearly all extortions and attempted extortions from federally protected banking institutions would come within the scope of 18 U.S.C. §2113. See also United States v. Hackett, 623 F.2d 343 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 902 (1980); United States v. Alessandrello, 637 F.2d 131 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 451 U.S. 949 (1981); but see United States v. Wickham, 474 F. Supp. 113 (C.D. Cal. 1979).

Nevertheless, it continues to be our view that the Hobbs Act is fully applicable to robberies, extortions and attempts and conspiracies to rob and extort from federally protected banking institutions. United States v. Culbert, supra. The Sixth Circuit has held that the bank robbery statute is intended to be the exclusive remedy for conduct fully within its coverage. See United States v. Beck, 511 F.2d 997 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 836 (1975). However, the Ninth Circuit, which had held that the Hobbs Act could not be applied to bank extortions (United States v. Small, 550 F.2d 518 (9th Cir. 1977)), has reversed its position in light of Culbert, supra. See United States v. LaBinia, 614 F.2d 1207 (9th Cir. 1980). The Ninth Circuit has rejected the Brinkley rationale and held that 18 U.S.C. §2113(a) is inapplicable where money is left at a drop site. See United States v. Toole, 610 F.2d 823 (9th Cir. 1979). We note that the Eighth Circuit has held that where the crime of bank robbery is committed by extortionate means it is appropriate to convict under both the bank robbery statute and the Hobbs Act, but that the Double Jeopardy clause precluded sentencing under both statutes. See United States v. Golay, 560 F.2d 866 (8th Cir. 1977).

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-61.692 Interstate Commerce

Whether the extortion constitutes "effect upon interstate commerce" is determined as follows. The trial court is the arbiter of what constitutes interstate commerce and what obstructs, delays, or affects it. See United States v. Hyde, 448 F.2d 815 (8th Cir. 1971). The standard by which such effects are judged is not very demanding, since the statute itself prohibits acts which "in any way or degree" affects commerce. See also Stirone v. United States, 361 U.S. 212, 215 (1960); United States v. Howe, 353 F. Supp. 419 (W.D. Mo. 1973); United States v. Mitchell, 463 F.2d 187 (8th Cir. 1972); United States v. DeMot, 486 F.2d 816 (7th Cir. 1973). Indeed, a potential effect on commerce delivered by means of a threat was held sufficient to constitute an effect prohibited. See United States v. Mitchell, supra; United States v. Howe, supra.

9-61.700 LIVESTOCK OFFENSES

9-61.701 Overview

Federal livestock crimes are defined and punished in three separate sections of Title 18, United States Code. 18 U.S.C. §667 deals with the theft and fraud in transactions involving the marketing of livestock in interstate commerce; 18 U.S.C. §2316 deals with the transportation of stolen livestock in interstate commerce and 18 U.S.C. §2317 deals with the sale and receipt of stolen livestock moving in interstate commerce. Federal jurisdiction should be exercised only in cases involving substantial violations of these sections. See S. Rep. No. 225, 98th Cong., 1st Sess. 385 (1983).

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-61.702 Investigative Jurisdiction

The agency having investigatory responsibility for this statute is the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

9-61.703 Supervisory Jurisdiction

Supervisory jurisdiction is exercised by the General Litigation and Legal Advice Section, 724-6971.

9-61.710 Definitions

9-61.711 Livestock

The term "livestock," used in all three sections, although not defined in 18 U.S.C. §2311, carries its ordinary dictionary meaning of domestic animals raised for home use or profit. This includes but is not limited to such animals as cattle, horses, sheep, pigs and goats. See S. Rep. No. 225 on S. 1762, 98th Cong., 2d Sess. 384 (1983).

Originally, 18 U.S.C. §§2316 and 2317 were limited to cattle only. Cattle, as defined in 18 U.S.C. §2311, includes the carcasses of dead cows, bulls, etc. Inasmuch as Congress intended to expand the scope of 18 U.S.C. §§2316 and 2317 when it substituted "livestock" for "cattle," S. Rep. No. 225, at 384, it is the position of the Criminal Division that "livestock," for purposes of 18 U.S.C. §§2316 and 2317, at least, includes the carcasses of dead "livestock." The carcasses of cattle are clearly covered because cattle is certainly included within the term livestock. And since the Congress retained the definition for cattle in 18 U.S.C. §2311, it clearly indicates Congress' intent to continue coverage over the carcasses of cattle. It is also logical that Congress intended to include the carcasses of other "livestock." There is certainly no intent displayed by Congress to exclude them.

9-61.712 Stolen

The term "stolen" is to be construed broadly to cover all felonious takings regardless of whether they were in the nature of larceny, embezzlement, or false pretenses. See United States v. Turley, 352 U.S. 407 (1957); see also S. Rep. No. 225, at 384.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-61.713 Obtains or Uses

The term "obtains or uses" includes any type of theft, stealing, larceny, embezzlement, misapplication, fraud, deception or any other conduct similar in nature. S. Rep. No. 225, at 385.

9-61.714 With Intent to Deprive the Other of a Right to the Property

This term is not restricted to the common law concept of intent to cause a permanent deprivation. Instead, it includes an intent to cause any deprivation, even if only temporary. S. Rep. No. 225, at 385.

9-61.720 Jurisdiction

18 U.S.C. §667 is applicable only to crimes involving a value of at least $10,000. This statutory requirement is intended to confine federal jurisdiction to substantial violations. While neither 18 U.S.C. §§2316 nor 2317 requires a minimum value for the livestock, minor violations should be left for state and local prosecution.

9-61.830 Prosecutive Policy

Since 18 U.S.C. §511 expands considerably federal criminal jurisdiction over non-federal securities that are counterfeited and forged, its constitutional basis will doubtless be vigorously challenged. Accordingly, for constitutional and policy reasons, several factors should be present before federal jurisdiction is exercised under this new provision.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

First, the extent of the criminal activity should be sizeable and involve significant past or future interstate activity. The forging of an endorsement on one corporate check should normally not be sufficient in itself to warrant federal prosecution. Second, in regard to the counterfeiting of state securities, there should clearly be an interstate aspect. (E.g., counterfeiting of State of California checks in California should be handled by California authorities. However, the counterfeiting of California checks or motor vehicle titles in Nebraska, or the use of counterfeit California securities in another state, may warrant federal involvement.) Third, common sense must be used, not only to sustain the constitutionality of this important provision, but also to control the number of cases filed in federal courts. The general prosecution policies set forth in USAM 9-61.230, supra, relating to cases under the National Stolen Property Act should be applied to 18 U.S.C. §511 offenses. Finally, as to the "implement" provision in subsection 511(b), such implements should bear some connection to state or corporate securities.

In short, the major responsibility for dealing with counterfeit and forged state and corporate securities should lie with state and local governments. However, when because of its size and geographical scope a case warrants federal involvement, federal prosecutions should be undertaken. In utilizing 18 U.S.C. §511, the government will be in the best position to defend against constitutional challenges if the statute is applied only to fact patterns clearly showing large-scale organized interstate criminal activity. Because of the potential constitutional and policy issues, attorneys for the government may wish to consult with the Criminal Division (724-7526 or 724-6971) before seeking an indictment under 18 U.S.C. §511. In addition, each U.S. Attorney should develop prosecutive understandings concerning the counterfeiting and forgery of state and corporate securities with state and local authorities through the district's Law Enforcement Coordinating Committee.

9-61.840 Discussion of the Offense

9-61.841 General

18 U.S.C. §511 was created by Part D of Chapter XI of the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-473, October 12, 1984. (It should be noted that the Motor Vehicle Theft Law Enforcement Act of 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-547, October 25, 1984, also created a section

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

511 in Title 18, United States Code, entitled "Altering or removing motor vehicle identification numbers." It is anticipated that the duplication of section numbers will be corrected by technical amendments to Title 18 early in the 99th Congress.)

18 U.S.C. §511 (Securities of the States and private entities) is an expansive new criminal provision intended by the Congress to help the federal government assist the states in fighting white collar crime relating to the counterfeiting and the forgery of securities issued by the states and by private organizations.

18 U.S.C. §511 covers the making, uttering, or possession of any such counterfeit or forged security. It covers not only marketable securities, such as stocks, bonds, and debentures, but also includes common securities, such as checks, money orders, and travelers' checks. In addition, it includes other commercial instruments. In enacting 18 U.S.C. §511 the Congress clearly intended to utilize the commerce power to nearly its outer limit. 18 U.S.C. §511 may prove effective in prosecuting those traffickers in counterfeit and forged securities who were previously difficult to reach under federal law because of some of the elements in the counterfeit and forgery provisions of 18 U.S.C. §2314 and §2315.

It is anticipated that the major challenge to the new statute will relate to the constitutional authority of Congress to extend federal jurisdiction to the degree reflected in 18 U.S.C. §511. The legal arguments in support of the statute's validity are that such counterfeit and forged securities plainly affect interstate and foreign commerce, and that fraudulent schemes using these securities commonly reach beyond state and even national boundaries. As a result, state law enforcement authorities frequently are unable to cope with them. Congress was aware that it was expanding federal jurisdiction, but found such expansion necessary and proper to protect this particularly important aspect of interstate and foreign commerce. See S. Rep. No. 225, 98th Cong., 2d Sess. 371; see also USAM 9-61.850, infra.

To understand the elements of 18 U.S.C. §511, it may be beneficial to consult the discussion of comparable provisions relating to the interstate transportation of counterfeit and forged securities under the National Stolen Property Act in USAM 9-61.200, supra. In particular, the following sections should be reviewed:

- USAM 9-61.230 - Policy Concerning Prosecution
- USAM 9-61.244 - Securities
- USAM 9-61.249 - Falsely Made, Forged, Altered, and Counterfeited
- USAM 9-61.250 - Forged Indorsements

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

USAM 9-61.263 - Third Paragraph of 18 U.S.C. §2314
USAM 9-61.264 - Fourth Paragraph of 18 U.S.C. §2314
USAM 9-61.265 - Fifth Paragraph of 18 U.S.C. §2314
USAM 9-61.267 - Second Paragraph of 18 U.S.C. §2315
USAM 9-61.268 - Third Paragraph of 18 U.S.C. §2315

It should be noted that 18 U.S.C. §511 does not require proof of certain elements required under 18 U.S.C. §2314 and §2315 (e.g., there is no need to prove actual interstate transportation of the security; forged indorsement of a state or corporate check is expressly covered.)

9-61.842 Offenses

Subsection (a) of 18 U.S.C. §511 makes it a federal crime to make, utter, or possess a counterfeit security of a state (or a political subdivision thereof) or an organization. It also makes it a crime to make, utter or possess such a forged security with intent to deceive another person, organization, or government. A forged security includes one which has a forged indorsement on it. The penalty is a fine of up to $250,000 and imprisonment for up to ten years.

Subsection (b) makes it a federal crime for anyone to make, receive, possess, sell, or otherwise transfer an implement designed for, or particularly suited for, making a counterfeit or forged security, with the intent that it be so used. The penalty is a fine of up to $250,000 and imprisonment for up to 10 years. In a prosecution under this subsection, it may be necessary to show that the implement is designed for, or particularly suited for, the making of a counterfeit or forged security of a state or corporation, although the express language of the subsection does not provide this limiting requirement, and the available legislative history throws no light on this point.

18 U.S.C. §511 does not cover personal checks or United States governmental securities. Nor does it cover securities issued by foreign governments. The counterfeiting and forgery of United States and foreign governmental securities is covered by offenses in chapter 25 of Title 18, United States Code (e.g., 18 U.S.C. §471, §472, §473, §478 and §479). Counterfeiting and forging of the securities of a foreign corporation including a foreign bank, are, however, covered by 18 U.S.C. §511. 18 U.S.C. §511 is not a predicate offense for a violation of the RICO statute, 18 U.S.C. §1961 et seq. (Violations of 18 U.S.C. §2314 and §2315 involving the interstate or foreign transportation of counterfeit securities are, however, predicate offenses for the RICO statute.)

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-61.843 Definitions

The terms "counterfeited," "forged," "security," "organization," and "State" are defined in subsection 511(c). "Counterfeited" means a document that purports to be genuine but is not, because it has been falsely made or manufactured in its entirety. "Forged" means a document that purports to be genuine but is not because it has been falsely altered, completed, signed, or endorsed, or contains a false addition thereto or insertion therein.

"Utter," which is not expressly defined in 18 U.S.C. §511, has been previously defined to mean "to issue, authenticate, transfer, publish, sell, pledge, deliver, transmit, present, display, use, certify, or otherwise give currency to." (Proposed 18 U.S.C. §1747(h), S. 1630, 97th Congress, 1st Sess.). Further, the judicial construction given the word "utter" in the context of other federal statutes will likely be applied to this statute. See, e.g., 18 U.S.C. §§493, 494, and 495.

The terms "counterfeit" and "forged" refer to the making of the security. Did the person have the authority to issue or make the document or writing? If not, it is counterfeit or forged. 18 U.S.C. §511(a) does not encompass the genuine making of a security which contains false or misleading statements (e.g., true name check for which there is insufficient funds in the account to cover it). The purpose of this provision is the protection of the integrity of the security and not the punishment of fraudulent conduct in general.

The term "security" is defined broadly to encompass all the securities covered under the National Stolen Property Act (18 U.S.C. §§2311, 2314, and 2315) plus others. Besides stocks and bonds it covers common securities such as checks, money orders, and travelers' checks. It also covers letters of credit, warehouse receipts, and negotiable bills of lading. Because it encompasses "an instrument evidencing ownership of goods, wares, or merchandise," it covers motor vehicle titles issued by state departments of motor vehicles.

The term "security" also covers "debit instruments" as defined in section 916(c) of the Electronic Fund Transfer Act (15 U.S.C. §1693n(c)) (i.e., "any card, code, or other device other than a check, draft, or similar paper instrument, by the use of which a person may initiate an electronic fund transfer."). Accordingly, as to the counterfeiting and forging of debit instruments, new section 511 may overlap and expand upon some of the criminal activity prohibited by new 18 U.S.C. §1029 (Pub. L. No. 98-473, Title II, Chapter XVI--Credit Card Fund). It would appear that possession of one counterfeit debit card is covered under 18 U.S.C. §511. 18 U.S.C. §1029(a)(3), on the other hand, requires possession of fifteen or more of such counterfeit devices.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The definition of security also includes the blank forms of any of the categories of securities covered by the statute.

The definition of "state" includes the 50 states, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, Guam, the Virgin Islands and any other territory or possession of the United States. 18 U.S.C. §511 covers the securities of municipal and state agencies.

The term "organization" is defined to mean a legal entity, other than a government, established or organized for any purpose. This definition is broad enough to cover all organized business entities as well as any other association of persons which operates in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce.

9-61.850 Legislative History

It is anticipated that the major challenge to the new section will relate to the constitutional authority for Congress to extend federal jurisdiction to the degree reflected in 18 U.S.C. §511. 18 U.S.C. §511 is an outgrowth of Congress' attempt since the early 1970's to deal with the use by organized crime of stolen and counterfeit marketable securities (i.e., equity and debt type securities such as stocks and bonds). See Organized Crime; Securities Thefts and Frauds, Hearings before the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations of the Committee on Government Operations, United States Senate, 93rd Cong., 1st Sess., Part I, pp. 123-136. Separate bills were introduced in past Congresses to deal with the problem (S. 2221, 94th Cong., 1st Sess.; S. 2323, 95th Cong.; 1st Sess.; S. 1380, 96th Cong., 1st Sess.). The substance of these bills was incorporated into the Senate's effort to enact a new criminal code. (See S. 1630, 97th Cong., 1st Sess.; Criminal Code Reform Act of 1981, Report of the Committee on the Judiciary, United States Senate, Report No. 97-307, pp. 722-23, 780-781.) By 1981 the counterfeiting aspect relating to marketable securities was contained in proposed section 1741(c)(2)(E) of Title 18, U.S.C., in S. 1630, 97th Cong., 1st Sess. (i.e., the counterfeiting of a security "that is a note, stock certificate, treasury stock certificate, bond, treasury bond, debenture, certificate of deposit, interest coupon, or any form of debt instrument bearing interest made or issued by an organization or by a state or local government").

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

However, when introduced as part of S. 1762, 98th Cong., 1st Sess. the State and organizational securities covered were broadened to include all types of securities, not just the equity and debt type covered by proposed section 1741(c)(2)(E) in S. 1630, 97th Cong. The legal arguments remain the same, however, namely that such counterfeit and forged securities affect interstate and foreign commerce and that fraudulent schemes using these securities frequently reach beyond state and even national boundaries, and thus state law enforcement authorities are generally unable to cope with them. The Congress was aware of its expansion of federal jurisdiction and deemed such expansion necessary and proper to adequately guard the stream of interstate and foreign commerce from the pollution of counterfeit and forged state and corporate securities.

9-61.900 MOTOR VEHICLE THEFT LAW ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 1984

9-61.901 Summary

Enactment of the Motor Vehicle Theft Law Enforcement Act, Pub. L. No. 98-547, 98 Stat. 2754 (1984), culminated a six-year effort by Congress to respond to the growing professionalization of motor vehicle theft during the past two decades. The Act's primary thrust is directed at professional "chop shops" which cause the theft of motor vehicles in order to obtain replacement parts for other vehicles damaged in accidents. As these "crash" parts (i.e., fenders, doors, hoods, etc.) do not bear identification numbers, they are nearly impossible to identify as stolen once separated from the stolen vehicle.

The Motor Vehicle Theft Law Enforcement Act of 1984 contains three titles. Title I, relating to identification of motor vehicle components, gives the Secretary of Transportation authority to require that manufacturers and importers of new passenger car models that are frequent theft targets ("high theft lines") mark the major components of such vehicles with an identification number in order to help prevent their theft for "chop shop" operations. The Secretary of Transportation is also authorized to issue a voluntary component identification standard for "low theft" passenger car lines and all other "road" motor vehicles (i.e., trucks, vans, motorcycles, etc.). The Secretary of Transportation is not given any authority over "off-highway" mobile equipment (i.e., bulldozers, farm tractors, etc.) by this Act.

Title II, which relates to the fencing of stolen motor vehicles and parts, amends Title 18, United States Code, to: (1) provide criminal penalties for removing or falsifying road motor vehicle and road motor vehicle component identification numbers; (2) permit seizure and forfeiture of vehicles or components with falsified or removed identification numbers; (3) make it a federal crime to traffic in road motor vehicles or their components which have removed or falsified identification numbers; and (4) make violations of 18 U.S.C. §2312 and §2313 (as modified by the Act), and trafficking in certain motor vehicles or motor vehicle parts, predicate offenses under the RICO statute.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Title III, relating to importation and exportation measures, amends Title 18, United States Code, to create a new offense within the investigative authority of the United States Customs Service of importing or exporting any of a wide variety of motor vehicles, vessels, or aircraft that have been stolen or that have had their identification numbers falsified or removed. Title III also authorizes the Customs Service to establish a regulation requiring that the exporter of a used motor vehicle, or used off-highway mobile equipment, submit to the Customs Service before exportation a document evidencing his/her ownership and containing the identification number of the vehicle or equipment.

9-61.910 Investigative Jurisdiction

The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA) of the United States Department of Transportation (DOT) has investigative jurisdiction over the criminal and civil penalty provisions of Title I of the Act relating to the manufacturer's or importer's failure to comply with the Act's regulatory requirements. The Federal Bureau of Investigation has investigative jurisdiction over the criminal provisions contained in Title II of the Act. The United States Customs Service has jurisdiction over the criminal, civil, and regulatory provisions contained in Title III of the Act. The Customs Service also assists the NHTSA in the enforcement of the regulatory provisions applicable to importers of foreign manufactured vehicles.

The Motor Vehicle Information and Cost Savings Act (15 U.S.C. §1901 et seq.) has been amended by the addition of a new Title VI concerning theft prevention.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-61.931 Mandatory Theft Prevention Standard

Under the new provisions, the Secretary of Transportation is required to promulgate a theft prevention standard for high theft passenger car lines. The standard will cover the major parts as well as replacement parts for the major parts. High theft passenger car lines are those found to be above the median theft rate in the two years immediately preceding the year in which the standard is promulgated.

For the first year, no more than 14 passenger car lines of any one manufacturer will be subject to the mandatory component identification standard. No manufacturer, except General Motors, has more than 14 high theft passenger car lines; based upon data for 1983, General Motors would have had 21 passenger car lines above the median theft rate. Also, no more than 14 parts for any one passenger car can be required to be numbered. The failure to include all high theft lines of a manufacturer (e.g., GM) may create enforcement difficulties relating to that manufacturer's vehicles.

9-61.932 Voluntary Theft Prevention Standard

Besides the mandatory component identification standard for high theft passenger car lines, the Secretary of Transportation is authorized to promulgate a voluntary component identification standard for the manufacturers and owners of all road motor vehicles not subject to the mandatory standard (e.g., vans, trucks, motorcycles, pick-ups, and low theft passenger car lines). Compliance with the voluntary standard affords the components coverage under the criminal provisions of Title II of the Act. It is the hope of the Criminal Division that the manufacturers will make judicious use of the voluntary standard in order to plug the various loopholes created by the legislative compromise that covers only high theft passenger car lines instead of all passenger car lines. The major law enforcement concern is the interchangeability of parts (i.e., some parts on a low theft line which do not have to be marked may be interchangeable with those on a high theft line). Once such a part is separated from its vehicle, it is extremely difficult to tell whether it came from the high theft or low theft line.

9-61.933 Required Records and Reports

The Secretary of Transportation may require manufacturers to maintain records to demonstrate compliance with the mandatory standard, and may

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

designate officers to inspect manufacturers' reports and facilities for compliance. The manufacturer must furnish a certification to the first purchaser stating that the vehicle conforms to the mandatory theft prevention standard.

9-61.934 Insurance Reports

Insurance companies are required to report to the Secretary of Transportation vehicle theft and recovery data, and rating data used to establish insurance premiums for motor vehicles.

9-61.935 Vehicle Theft Studies

The Secretary of Transportation is directed to submit to Congress three reports, prepared in consultation with the Attorney General, relating to the provisions of the Act. The first report, which is to be furnished by October 15, 1985, will deal with security devices and systems designed to deter individuals from entering and stealing a locked motor vehicle. The second report, due by October 25, 1987, will recommend whether the mandatory component identification standard should be expanded to cover other vehicles. The third report, due five years after the promulgation of the component identification standards, will provide information relating to: (1) the costs of complying with the standards; (2) the experience of law enforcement officials under the Act; (3) the effect of the standards on insurance premium rates; and (4) the effect an extension of the standards would have on thefts and recovery rates.

9-61.940 Title II--Anti-Fencing Measures

Title 18, United States Code, was amended by creating three new sections (§§511, 512, 2320) and by expanding the coverage of two others (§§2311 and 2313).

9-61.941 18 U.S.C. §511--Altering or Removing Motor Vehicles
Identification Numbers

New 18 U.S.C. §511(a) makes it a felony knowingly to remove, obliterate, tamper with, or alter an identification number for a road motor vehicle or a road motor vehicle part. The maximum penalty is a fine

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

of $10,000 and imprisonment for five years. Under the provisions of the Criminal Fine Enforcement Act of 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-596, 98 Stat. 3134 (1984), however, a fine up to $250,000 may be imposed for violations occurring on or after January 1, 1985. See new 18 U.S.C. §3623 (Alternative fines).

18 U.S.C. §511(b) creates exceptions for certain persons who engage in lawful conduct that may result in removal or alteration of an identification number. The legislative history is abundantly clear that subsection (b) is not intended to create a loophole for the operators of "chop shops." See H.R. Rep. No. 1087 on H.R. 6257, 98th Congress, 2d Sess. 23-25 (1984).

18 U.S.C. §511(c) contains the definitions for "identification number," "motor vehicle," "motor vehicle demolisher," and "motor vehicle scrap processor." The term "identification number" means a number or symbol that is inscribed or affixed for purposes of identification under either the National Traffic and Motor Vehicle Safety Act of 1966 (see Federal Motor Vehicle Safety Standard No. 115--Vehicle Identification Number, 49 C.F.R. §§571.115 and 565.1-561.5) or the Motor Vehicle Information and Cost Savings Act (15 U.S.C. §1901 et seq.), for which the mandatory and voluntary component identification standards have yet to be issued). The term "motor vehicle" covers any vehicle driven or drawn by mechanical power manufactured primarily for use on the public streets, roads, and highways. See 15 U.S.C. §1901(15). It does not include self-propelled construction and farming equipment (i.e., bulldozers, farm tractors, etc.).

For a suggested form indictment for 18 U.S.C. §511 and a discussion of the indictment and the proof required therefor, consult USAM 9-61.991 and 9-61.992, infra.

It should be noted that there are now two sections 511 in Title 18. The first, created by Chapter XI of the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984, deals with the counterfeiting and forging of securities of states and private organizations. The second, added by Pub. L. No. 98-547, 98 Stat. 2754 (1984), relates to altering or removing motor vehicle identification numbers. It is anticipated that the duplication of section numbers will be corrected by appropriate technical amendments to Title 18 early in the 99th Congress.

9-61.942 18 U.S.C. §512--Forfeiture of Certain Motor Vehicles and Motor Vehicle Parts

New 18 U.S.C. §512 provides that, with certain exceptions, a motor vehicle or motor vehicle part that has a falsified or removed identification number is subject to seizure and forfeiture. The forfeiture provisions in the customs law (19 U.S.C. §1581 et seq.) are made applicable to seizures and forfeitures under 18 U.S.C. §512. For guidance on the statutory forfeiture provisions of 18 U.S.C. §512, contact the Asset Forfeiture Office (272-6423, 272-6424, or 272-6425).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-61.943 18 U.S.C. §2320--Trafficking in Certain Motor Vehicles or Motor Vehicle Parts

New 18 U.S.C. §2320 makes it an offense to deal in motor vehicles or motor vehicle components knowing that the identification numbers have been falsified or removed. There is no need to prove that such vehicles or parts have been transported in interstate or foreign commerce. The maximum penalty specified in the section is a fine of $20,000 and imprisonment for ten years. Under new 18 U.S.C. §3623 (Alternative fines) a fine up to $250,000 is possible for offenses occurring on or after January 1, 1985. Neither 18 U.S.C. §2320 nor §511 cover the simple possession of a vehicle or component with a falsified or removed identification number. 18 U.S.C. §511 is limited to the person who removes or falsifies the identification number or who aids or abets such conduct. 18 U.S.C. §2320 covers the trafficker of such vehicles or components, not a mere possessor.

18 U.S.C. §2320 should be of immediate assistance in dealing with the various salvage switch schemes (sometimes referred to as "retagging" or "replating") where the VIN of a salvage motor vehicle and its "papers" (i.e., title) are transferred to a stolen motor vehicle of the same make and model. In executing this motor vehicle theft scheme, the defendant purchases or acquires a salvage vehicle at an insurance auction. He/she then steals or has stolen a vehicle of similar make and model year and then transfers the VIN of the salvage vehicle to the stolen vehicle. He/she then disposes of the stolen vehicle under its new identity. Since passenger cars of model years 1970 to date have been required to have a Department of Transportation (DOT) VIN, 18 U.S.C. §2320 is applicable to "salvage switches" involving passenger cars occurring after October 25, 1984. The VINs of most other road vehicles are covered from model years 1981 to date. See USAM 9-61.960 (Effective Dates), infra.

For a suggested form indictment for 18 U.S.C. §2320 and a discussion of the indictment and the proof required therefore, consult USAM 9-61.993 and 9-61.994, infra.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

It should be noted that Chapter XV of the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-473, 98 Stat. 2178 (1984), also created a section 2320 in Title 18, United States Code, entitled "Trafficking in counterfeit goods or services." It is anticipated that the duplication of section numbers will be corrected by technical amendments to Title 18 early in the 99th Congress.

9-61.944 18 U.S.C. §2311--Motor Vehicle Titles as "Securities"

The definition of the term "securities" in 18 U.S.C. §2311 has been broadened to specifically include a "valid or blank motor vehicle title." One consequence of this change is that a RICO prosecution under 18 U.S.C. §1961 et seq., can now be predicated on the interstate transportation of a blank counterfeited motor vehicle title as well as on the interstate transportation of a completed counterfeit motor vehicle title.

The precise meaning of "valid" is not clear. Earlier versions of the bill would have kept a motor vehicle title as a security until it was cancelled by the state of issuance. The earlier versions were intended to get around the problem created by United States v. Teresa, 420 F.2d 13 (4th Cir. 1969), where a cancelled security was held to no longer be a "security." However, the earlier bills' language was dropped in last minute floor action which was described as representing only technical amendments made by the House Judiciary Committee. See 130 Cong. Rec. H10470-10471 (daily ed. October 1, 1984). Regardless of the meaning of "valid," the change in the definition of security in 18 U.S.C. §2311, however, is rendered basically insignificant by the creation of the new 18 U.S.C. §511, recently added by Part D of Chapter XI of the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984, which makes the counterfeiting or forging of state securities (including their blank forms) a federal crime. Since the definition of "security" in that section incorporates the definition of "securities" in former 18 U.S.C. §2311, it is now a federal offense to counterfeit or forge a motor vehicle title or a blank form thereof. No interstate transportation of the counterfeit or forged motor vehicle title is required. See USAM 9-61.800, supra, for the discussion of these new counterfeiting provisions. It should be noted, however, that 18 U.S.C. §511 is not a predicate offense for a RICO prosecution, while 18 U.S.C. §§2314 and 2315 are.

9-61.945 18 U.S.C. §2313--Sale or Receipt of Stolen Motor Vehicles

18 U.S.C. §2313 has been amended by adding the word "possesses" after the word "receives" and by striking out "moving as, or which is a part of,

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

or which constitutes interstate or foreign commerce" and inserting instead "which has crossed a State or United States boundary after being stolen." The effect of these changes is to retain federal criminal jurisdiction over a stolen motor vehicle once it crosses a state line even after it ceases to be a part of interstate commerce. There is no longer a necessity to prove a continuing commerce nexus in regard to a stolen motor vehicle taken across a state line after October 25, 1984. For further discussion of new 18 U.S.C. §2313, and a form indictment therefor, see USAM 9-61.153, supra.

9-61.946 18 U.S.C §1961(1)--Racketeering Activity

The Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations statute (RICO) (18 U.S.C. §1961, et seq.) has been amended by adding to the definition of "racketeering activity" in 18 U.S.C. §1961(1) violations of 18 U.S.C. §§2312 and 2313 (relating to interstate transportation of stolen vehicles) and 18 U.S.C. §2320 (relating to trafficking in certain motor vehicles or motor vehicle parts). The use of the RICO provisions against professional theft rings utilizing legitimate businesses to engage in their illegal activities could have a major impact in reducing motor vehicle theft activity. For guidance on RICO prosecutions involving stolen motor vehicles and related offenses, contact the Organized Crime and Racketeering Section (633-3594).

9-61.950 Title III--Importation and Exportation Measures

New criminal and civil provisions have been added to Titles 18 and 19 of the United States Code to penalize the importation and exportation of stolen conveyances and related conduct.

9-61.951 18 U.S.C. §553--Importation or Exportation of Stolen Motor Vehicles, Off-Highway Mobile Equipment, Vessels, or Aircraft

18 U.S.C. §553(a) makes it a federal crime to knowingly import or export, or attempt to import or export: (1) any motor vehicle, off-highway mobile equipment, vessel, or aircraft, or a part thereof, knowing it to have been stolen; or (2) any motor vehicle or off-highway mobile equipment, or a part thereof, knowing that the identification number has been removed, obliterated, tampered with, or altered.

18 U.S.C. §553(b) provides that subsection (a)(2) does not apply if the vehicle identification number has been removed, obliterated, tampered

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

with, or altered by a collision or fire, or in a manner that does not violate new 18 U.S.C. §511.

18 U.S.C. §553(c) contains the definitions of "motor vehicle," "off-highway mobile equipment," "vessel," "aircraft," and "identification number." The term "motor vehicle" only covers those vehicles intended to be driven or pulled on the public roads. (See 18 U.S.C. §511(c)(2) and 15 U.S.C. §1901(15).) The term "off-highway mobile equipment" covers self-propelled construction and farming equipment.

The penalty for a violation of this section is a fine of $15,000 and imprisonment for five years. Under new 18 U.S.C. §3623 (Alternative fines) a fine up to $250,000 is possible for any offense occurring on or after January 1, 1985.

For suggested form indictments for 18 U.S.C. §553 and a discussion of such indictments and the proof required therefor, consult USAM 9-61.995, USAM 9-61.996, and USAM 9-61.997, infra.

9-61.952 19 U.S.C. §1627--Unlawful Importation or Exportation of Certain Vehicles and Equipment

Section 302 of the Motor Vehicle Theft Law Enforcement Assistance Act amended the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. §1581, et seq.) to create a new section 627 in the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. §1627) dealing with unlawful importation or exportation of certain vehicles and equipment. 19 U.S.C. §1627(a) creates a civil penalty of $10,000 for the same conduct that has been made criminal under the new 18 U.S.C. §553.

19 U.S.C. §1627(b) gives the Secretary of the Treasury authority to prescribe a regulation requiring that any person, before exporting a used motor vehicle or used off-highway mobile equipment, present to the appropriate customs officer both the vehicle or equipment and a document describing such vehicle or equipment that includes the identification number. Failure to comply with this requirement carries a civil penalty of $500 for each violation.

19 U.S.C. §1627(c) contains the definitions of "motor vehicle," "off-highway mobile equipment," "aircraft," "used," "ultimate purchaser," and "identification number." Once again, the term "motor vehicle" only covers road vehicles.

19 U.S.C. §1627(d) permits customs officers to exchange information concerning activities covered by 19 U.S.C. §1627 with other law enforcement agencies and with organizations engaged in theft prevention activities (e.g., the National Automobile Theft Bureau) designated by the Secretary of the Treasury.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

It should be noted that section 205 of the Trade and Tariff Act of 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-573, 98 Stat. 2948 (1984), also created another section 627 in the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. §1627). Section 205 of the Trade and Tariff Act of 1984 is actually an earlier legislative version of section 302 of the Motor Vehicle Theft Law Enforcement Act of 1984 as this provision was working its way through different congressional committees. In implementing its new authority, the United States Customs Service intends to use both new sections 1627 of Title 19, United States Code, unless there is an irreconcilable contradiction between the two, in which case under general maxims of legislative interpretation section 205 would control as it is the more recently enacted. While section 205 and section 302 are very similar there are a few differences:

A. Section 205 refers to "self-propelled vehicle" while section 302 divided such vehicles into "motor vehicles" and "off-highway mobile equipment." Because "motor vehicle" and "off-highway mobile equipment" were then also defined more specifically for section 302, section 205 may be minimally broader than section 302 in the types of vehicles it covers.

B. A significant difference between section 205 and section 302 is the meaning of "identification number." In section 205 "identification number" is not defined and hence it would mean the identification number placed upon the self-propelled vehicle or any of its parts by the manufacturer (see, e.g., 18 U.S.C. §553(b)(5)(B).) Under section 302 "identification number" had been defined differently for motor vehicles and for off-highway mobile equipment. As to off-highway mobile equipment, it would be the number assigned by the manufacturer (which is the same as section 205). But as to motor vehicles (i.e., road vehicles) the term refers to the number inscribed or affixed for purposes of identification under the National Traffic and Motor Vehicle Safety Act of 1966 or the Motor Vehicle Information and Cost Savings Act (in other words, the number required by the Department of Transportation (DOT)). (See 18 U.S.C. §511(c)(1).) The practical effect of this difference is that section 302 would not have covered the identification numbers on motor vehicle parts until the Secretary of Transportation issued his/her component identification standards. But, as section 205 is also applicable, identification numbers of motor vehicle parts (since they are parts of self-propelled vehicles) are covered under 19 U.S.C. §1627(a) as of October 30, 1984.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

C. Finally, section 302 specifically exempted from the concept of "removal" those accidental and legal removals that may occur (see, e.g., 18 U.S.C. §511(b) and §512(a)(3); see also 18 U.S.C. §553(b)). Section 205, on the other hand, does not expressly provide for these exceptions. In the Criminal Division's judgment, however, such exceptions should be implied as 19 U.S.C. §1627(a) is in no way intended to apply to the exportation or importation of a self-propelled vehicle by its lawful owner. See 125 Cong. Rec. 12245 (1979), where Senators Biden and Percy, who were two of the original sponsors of this legislation, stated, when referring to what became 19 U.S.C. §1627(a), "that this section would likewise not be applicable to the importation or exportation of the conveyance or part by the lawful owner or his agent."

9-61.960 Effective Dates

The Motor Vehicle Theft Law Enforcement Act of 1984 was signed by the President on October 25, 1984. All of its criminal provisions are effective as of that date.

It is anticipated that the Secretary of Transportation's mandatory and voluntary component identification standards will first become effective for 1987 model year vehicles. Before becoming effective they will have to pass through the necessary rule-making process. The Criminal Division intends to monitor the development of the standards in order to ensure final standards that are conducive to effective law enforcement.

While the component identification numbers will not be covered under the new criminal provisions (i.e., 18 U.S.C. §511, §512, §2320) for a few years, such is not the case with the actual vehicle identification number (VIN). While all "road" motor vehicles are now required by Federal Motor Vehicle Safety Standard 115 (49 C.F.R. 511.115 and 565.1-561.5) to have a VIN, this requirement was phased in over several years. Starting on January 1, 1969, all passenger cars manufactured in the United States or manufactured overseas on or after January 1, 1969, and subsequently imported into the United States were required to have a VIN. See 33 Fed. Reg. 10207, July 17, 1968. As a practical rule of thumb, this means that every passenger car from model year 1970 to date has been required by the Department of Transportation (DOT) to have a VIN. Until January 1, 1980, the VIN's characteristics (i.e., its length, the types and kinds of information encoded within particular positions or sections of the VIN, etc.) for passenger cars could be determined by each manufacturer.

Effective September 1, 1980, the VIN requirement was expanded to multipurpose passenger vehicles, trucks, buses, trailers, and motorcycles

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

manufactured in the United States on or after September 1, 1980, and such vehicles manufactured overseas after September 1, 1980, and subsequently imported into the United States. Hence, for non-passenger motor vehicles a VIN has been required for model years 1981 to date. See 43 Fed. Reg. 36448, August 17, 1978. The September 1, 1980, date was extended, however, to January 1, 1981, for two manufacturers (Fruehauf Corporation and Rolls-Royce Motors International) see 45 Fed. Reg. 12255, February 25, 1980. January 1, 1981, reflects the date used by those two manufacturers to start their 1981 model years. The September 1, 1980, date was the changeover date in the 1981 model year for most other manufacturers. VINs are also now required to follow a 17 character format. See 49 C.F.R. §§511.115 and 565.1-561.5. The 17 character VIN format was applicable to passenger cars as of January 1, 1980 and as to other vehicles as of September 1, 1980 (except for those vehicles manufactured by Fruehauf Corporation and Rolls-Royce Motors International in which case the effective date was January 1, 1981). See 43 Fed. Reg. 36448, August 17, 1978 and 45 F.R. 12255, February 25, 1980.

Accordingly, after October 25, 1984, the falsification or removal of any VIN required by the DOT on a motor vehicle is a federal crime under 18 U.S.C. §511. Motor vehicles which have had their DOT required VINs falsified or removed after October 24, 1984, are subject to seizure and forfeiture under 18 U.S.C. §512. Persons trafficking in motor vehicles with DOT required VINs that have been falsified or removed after October 24, 1984, are subject to prosecution under 18 U.S.C. §2320. See 130 Cong. Rec. S13584 (daily ed. October 4, 1984); see also H.R. Rep. No. 1456 on H.R. 4178, 96th Congress, 2d Sess. 25-26 (1980); and 125 Cong. Rec. 12244 (1979). In proving that the falsification or removal occurred after October 24, 1984, the fact that the theft date of the motor vehicle occurred after that date should be telling.

The RICO provisions are also now in force. All RICO prosecutions, however, must be submitted to the Organized Crime and Racketeering Section for review and authorization. See USAM 9-110.100 - 9-110.413.

9-61.970 Policy Considerations

Violations of the new criminal provisions in Titles II and III of the Motor Vehicle Theft Law Enforcement Act of 1984 are to be governed by the Department's prosecutive policy under the Dyer Act (18 U.S.C. §§2311-2313). See USAM 9-61.130 - 9-61.134. Each U.S. Attorney should develop prosecutive understandings on these new criminal offenses with state and local authorities through the district's Law Enforcement Coordinating Committee.

9-61.980 Legislative History

The Motor Vehicle Theft Law Enforcement Assistance Act of 1984 culminated a legislative process that started in September 1978 when the Department of Justice submitted the original bill to the 95th Congress. The legislation was reintroduced in the 96th Congress. (See S. 1214, 125 Cong. Rec. 12242-12246 (1979), and again in the 97th and 98th Congresses.) During the long legislative process it underwent several modifications. The modifications were primarily in what ended up as Title I, the additional anti-theft authority for the Secretary of Transportation. The original proposal in 1978 tried to acquire for the Secretary of Transportation additional anti-theft authority to identify components of all road motor vehicles and to require better "locking" devices on all road motor vehicles. The proposed additional "locking" authority was dropped during the 96th Congress. In the 98th Congress a compromise was reached with the motor vehicle manufacturers to limit the mandatory "numbering" authority to high theft passenger car lines.

The criminal provisions of the bill underwent only minor changes during the six year process. The key legislative report is H.R. Rep. No. 1087 on H.R. 6257, 98th Cong., 2d Sess., (September 26, 1984). H.R. 6257, introduced on September 17, 1984, was the result of a compromise effort headed by Congressman Dingell, Chairman, Committee on Energy and Commerce, House of Representatives. H.R. 6257 passed the House on October 1, 1984, with some minor technical changes required by the House Judiciary Committee. See 130 Cong. Rec. H10462-10474 (daily ed. October 1, 1984). It passed the Senate without amendment on October 4, 1984. See 130 Cong. Rec. S13582-13586 (daily ed. October 4, 1984). It was signed by the President on October 25, 1984. During this six year effort the measure's chief sponsor in the Senate was then Senator Percy of Illinois, and in the House it was Representative William Green of New York.

A. During the legislative process, four relevant congressional reports were prepared. They were:

1. H.R. Rep. No. 1087 on H.R. 6257, 98th Congress 2d Sess. (September 26, 1984).
2. S. Rep. No. 478 on S. 1400, 98th Congress 2d Sess. (May 23, 1984).
3. H.R. Rep. No. 267 on H.R. 3398, 98th Congress, 1st Sess. (June 24, 1983). (This report relates primarily to tariff matters

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

but it does contain on pages 32-33 material on what has become Section 627 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. §1627).)

4. H.R. Rep. No. 1456 on H.R. 4178, 96th Congress, 2d Sess. (October 8, 1980).

B. Also, during this legislative process numerous congressional hearings were held concerning aspects of this legislation. Such hearings included:

1. Hearing on S. 1400 before the Subcommittee on Surface Transportation of the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation, 98th Cong., 1st Sess. (July 19, 1983), Serial No. 98-32.

2. Hearings on Certain Tariff and Trade Bills, before the Subcommittee on Trade of the House Ways and Means Committee, 98th Cong., 1st Sess. (April 27 and May 5, 10, 1983) (see pages 542-569, 742-745), Serial No. 98-17.

3. Hearing on H.R. 4325 (Motor Vehicle Theft Law Enforcement Act) before the Subcommittee on Telecommunications, Consumer Protection, and Finance of the House Committee on Energy and Commerce, 97th Cong., 2d Sess. (February 4, 1982), Serial No. 97-109.

4. Joint Hearings on H.R. 4178 (Motor Vehicle Theft Prevention Act) before the Subcommittee on Consumer Protection and Finance of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and the Subcommittee on Inter-American Affairs of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, 96th Cong., 2d Sess. (June 2, 10, and 12, 1980), Serial No. 96-179.

5. Hearing on S. 1214 (Automobile Theft Prevention Act of 1979) before the Subcommittee on Criminal Justice of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, 96th Cong., 2d Sess. (April 14, 1980), Serial No. 96-76.

6. Hearings before the Senate Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations on Professional Motor Vehicle Theft and Chop Shops, 96th Cong., 1st Sess. (November 27, 28, 29, 30, and December 4, 1979).

9-61.990 Form Indictments for 18 U.S.C. §§511, 2320, and 553 and Discussions of Such Indictments

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-61.991 Form Indictment for 18 U.S.C. §511

On or about _____ (date) in the _____ District of _____, the defendant, _____, did knowingly and unlawfully tamper with and alter the vehicle identification number (VIN) for a motor vehicle, to wit, (describe the vehicle, e.g., a 1983 Cadillac Eldorado having altered its VIN to read as 1G6AL5782DE628027).

9-61.992 Discussion of an Indictment for 18 U.S.C. §511

It is not necessary to allege in the indictment the absence of the exceptions contained in subsection 18 U.S.C. §511(b). See USAM 9-12.325 (Negating Statutory Exceptions). The use of the term "unlawfully" excludes the coverage of the lawful removal or destruction of a number. A reason why you may wish to specifically describe the altered VIN is to establish with some specificity the actual motor vehicle which is the subject matter of the indictment.

To prove a violation of section 511, it must be established that:

- A. The defendant knowingly removed, obliterated, tampered with, or altered an identification number on a road motor vehicle (or component);
- B. The identification number was one required by the United States Department of Transportation (DOT); and
- C. Such conduct was not done lawfully (e.g., defendant knew the vehicle was stolen and was trying to conceal its identity).

The gist of the offense is to show a removal, obliteration, tampering with, or alteration by the defendant. Eye witness testimony is the best evidence to prove that defendant removed or falsified the number. Proof of a removal of a number should be easily accomplished by persons familiar with what numbers should be present on a motor vehicle or part.

Proof of the falsification of a VIN will require in most cases expert testimony. Law enforcement experts may be able to detect "concealed" numbers placed by the manufacturer on the motor vehicle. From such information, the original VIN can be reconstructed. If you know the make and model year of the motor vehicle in question, analysis of what the VIN characters for such a vehicle should have been will help establish a falsification.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

In regard to the present 17 character VINs, each character or group of characters has meaning. The falsification of a number can be established by experts from the law enforcement community, the National Automobile Theft Bureau (NATB), and the manufacturers. The meaning of the various characteristics of the VIN for a particular vehicle can be explained by these experts.

The manufacturer's production records will reflect whether a vehicle having a certain VIN was ever manufactured for that model year. If the criminal has duplicated an existing VIN from another vehicle, the manufacturer's records along with the VIN will reveal the particular characteristics of the vehicle having the original (i.e., authentic) VIN, thus permitting a comparison of the physical attributes of the two vehicles to determine to which vehicle the VIN was actually originally assigned by the manufacturer.

In most prosecutable cases, your expert witnesses will be able to establish the identity of the original VIN. However, if that is not possible, a successful prosecution should still be possible by showing that the vehicle was manufactured by a particular manufacturer, that such manufacturer always certified compliance with the DOT standard(s) (which compliance meant the vehicle had the required VIN (or component numbers)) and that the VIN (or component numbers) on the vehicle (or part) was not one the manufacturer assigned to any of its vehicles (or parts).

The evidence must establish an unlawful removal or falsification. The lawful removals can be found in 18 U.S.C. §511(b) and §512(a)(3). They include injury to a number caused by: (a) collision or fire (18 U.S.C. §512(a)(3)); (b) destruction of the number when the vehicle or part is crushed during the recycling process (18 U.S.C. §511(b)(2)(A)); (c) repair of a vehicle or part where the removal, obliteration, tampering, or alteration is reasonably necessary for the repair (18 U.S.C. §511(b)(2)(B)); and (d) restoration of a number when done in accordance with applicable state law (18 U.S.C. §511(b)(2)(C)). Under subsection 511(b), these lawful exceptions do not apply if the person knows that the motor vehicle or part is stolen. Except for the area of "repair," these exceptions should cause no significant enforcement problem. The relevant portion of H.R. Rep. No. 1089 on H.R. 6257, 98th Cong., 2d Sess. 23-25 (1984), makes clear that the "repair" exception is intended for the protection of the honest body shop operator who while fixing a part does some injury to its identification number. The exception "is not intended to apply to the operators of 'chop shops,' who remove such parts--not repairing or recycling them for lawful purposes." Most of the states that are parties to the interstate compact which created the Vehicle Equipment Safety Commission (VESC) have established under their respective state laws procedures for the restoration and replacement of missing identification numbers. See Regulation VESC--18, Standardized Replacement Vehicle Identification Number System.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

For a further discussion of 18 U.S.C. §511, consult USAM 9-61.941, supra.

9-61.993 Form Indictment for 18 U.S.C. §2320

On or about _____ (date) in the _____ District of _____, the defendant, _____, did knowingly buy, receive, possess, and obtain control of, with intent to sell and otherwise dispose of, a motor vehicle, to wit, (describe the vehicle adequately) knowing that the vehicle identification number (VIN) of said vehicle had been unlawfully removed, obliterated, tampered with, and altered.

9-61.994 Discussion of Indictment for 18 U.S.C. §2320

18 U.S.C. §2320 is a trafficking offense. The previous discussion relating to an indictment for 18 U.S.C. §511 should be consulted (see USAM 9-61.992, supra). In the indictment for 18 U.S.C. §2320 you may wish to use the false or altered VIN actually on the motor vehicle in order to help specify the motor vehicle which is the subject matter of the charge.

To establish a violation of 18 U.S.C. §2320 the government must establish:

A. The defendant acquired or possessed a road motor vehicle (or component), the vehicle identification number (VIN) (or component identification number after the component standard becomes effective) of which had been removed, obliterated, tampered with, or altered;

B. The identification number was one required by the United States Department of Transportation;

C. Such removal, obliteration, tampering with, or alteration was done unlawfully;

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

D. That the defendant was aware of the unlawful removal, obliteration, tampering with, or alteration; and

E. That defendant had an intent to sell or otherwise dispose of the motor vehicle (or component part).

In most cases proof of the defendant's awareness of the stolen nature of the motor vehicle (or component) will satisfy the knowledge requirements. Also, the presence on the defendant's premises of several vehicles or numerous components lacking the proper numbers should help satisfy the knowledge and intent requirements.

For a further discussion of 18 U.S.C. §2320, consult USAM 9-61.943, supra.

9-61.995 Form Indictment for 18 U.S.C. §553(a)(1)

On or about _____ (date) _____ in the _____ District of _____, the defendant, _____, did knowingly and unlawfully export and attempt to export a motor vehicle, to wit, (describe the vehicle e.g., a 1983 Cadillac Eldorado having VIN 1G6AL5782DE628027), knowing the same to have been stolen.

9-61.996 Form Indictment for 18 U.S.C. §553(a)(2)

On or about _____ (date) _____ in the _____ District of _____, the defendant, _____, did knowingly and unlawfully import and attempt to import a motor vehicle, to wit, (describe the vehicle, e.g., a 1983 Mercedes Benz 380 SL having on it the altered vehicle identification number WDBBA45A9DB005423), knowing that the vehicle identification number of said vehicle had been tampered with and altered.

9-61.997 Discussion of an Indictment for 18 U.S.C. §553

The term "stolen" in 18 U.S.C. §553 is to be construed broadly to cover all felonious takings regardless of whether they were in the nature of larceny, embezzlement, or false pretenses. See United States v. Turley, 352 U.S. 407 (1957); see also USAM 9-61.142 and 9-61.248, supra. In regard to falsified or removed identification numbers, consult the previous discussions on the indictments for 18 U.S.C. §511 and §2320 in USAM 9-61.992 and USAM 9-61.994, respectively, supra.

For a general discussion of 18 U.S.C. §553, consult USAM 9-61.951, supra.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-63.000 PROTECTION OF PUBLIC ORDER, SAFETY, HEALTH AND WELFARE

9-63.100 AIRCRAFT PIRACY AND RELATED OFFENSES

9-63.101 General

49 U.S.C. App. §§1472(i) through (n) set forth the offenses of aircraft piracy and attempted piracy within or outside the special aircraft jurisdiction of the United States, interference with flight crew members or flight attendants, carrying weapons or explosives aboard an aircraft, conveyance of false information or threats regarding certain offenses prohibited by 49 U.S.C. App. §1472, and certain common law offenses. A brief discussion of each of the operative subsections is contained below.

Definitions of terms used in 49 U.S.C. App. §1472, such as "aircraft," "air commerce," "air transportation," "special aircraft jurisdiction," etc., are found in 49 U.S.C. App. §1301.

The destruction or damaging of aircraft or aircraft facilities is prohibited by 18 U.S.C. §32, and bomb hoaxes directed toward aircraft or aircraft facilities are prohibited by 18 U.S.C. §35. A discussion of these statutes may be found in USAM 9-63.200, infra.

9-63.102 Investigative Jurisdiction

Criminal violations of the aircraft piracy and related offense provisions are within the investigative jurisdiction of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. The Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) also has administrative responsibility to prevent and, where warranted, to punish such offenses by civil penalties.

9-63.104 Summary of Changes Made to Aircraft Piracy and Related Offenses by the Aircraft Sabotage Act

Part B of chapter XX of the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984 (Pub. L. No. 98-473, October 12, 1984), contains the Aircraft Sabotage

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Act. The purpose of the Aircraft Sabotage Act was to implement fully the Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts Against the Safety of Civil Aviation (also known as the Montreal Convention). See Treaties and Other International Acts Series, No. 7570 (T.I.A.S. 7570); United States Treaties and Other International Agreements, Vol. 24, at 564 (24 U.S.T. 564). While the Aircraft Sabotage Act made several changes to 18 U.S.C. §32 (Destruction of aircraft and related facilities) (see USAM 9-63.232, infra), the Act also made several significant changes to various provisions of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958, as amended. These changes were effective on October 12, 1984 and consist of the following:

A. A new civil penalty of up to $10,000 was created in 49 U.S.C. App. §1471(c) for conveying false information, knowing the information to be false and under circumstances in which such information may reasonably be believed, concerning a violation of subsections (i), (j), (k), or (l) of 49 U.S.C. App. §1472.

B. A new civil penalty of up to $10,000 was created in 49 U.S.C. App. §1471(d) for persons who carry weapons or have weapons accessible to them on a flight or while boarding an aircraft.

C. The misdemeanor fine penalty for violating 49 U.S.C. App. §1472(1)(1) was increased to $10,000. Also, the felony fine for violating 49 U.S.C. App. §1472(1)(2) was increased to $25,000. These sections relate to carrying weapons or explosives aboard an aircraft. There are now felony, misdemeanor, and civil penalties for aircraft weapons offenses under 49 U.S.C. App. §1472(1)(2), §1472(1)(1), and §1471(c), respectively.

D. The misdemeanor false information provision in 49 U.S.C. App. §1472(m)(1) was repealed. The old felony provision in section 1472(m)(2) was renumbered as (m)(1), and the phrase "knowing the information to be false and under circumstances in which such information may reasonably be believed" was added to it.

E. A new threat offenses was created in 49 U.S.C. App. §1472(m)(2). It covers any threat to do an act which would be a felony under subsections (i), (j), (k), or (l) of section 1472. The new offense is punishable by a fine of $25,000 and imprisonment for five years.

F. Finally, the definition of "special aircraft jurisdiction of the United States" (49 U.S.C. App. §1301 (38)) was amended to include any aircraft outside of the United States upon which an offense as defined in paragraphs (1)(d) (destroying or damaging air navigation facilities or interfering with their operation, if such act is likely to endanger the safety of aircraft in flight) or (e) (knowingly communicating false information thereby endangering the safety of an aircraft in flight) of Article 1 of the Montreal Convention was committed and the aircraft lands in the United States with the alleged offender still on board.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

It should be noted that for all felony offenses occurring on or after January 1, 1985, the maximum possible fine has been increased to at least $250,000. The maximum possible fine for any misdemeanor offense not resulting in death and punishable by imprisonment for more than six months has also been increased to at least $100,000. See new 18 U.S.C. §3623 (Alternative fines) created by the Criminal Fine Enforcement Act of 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-596 (October 30, 1984).

The legislative history for the Aircraft Sabotage Act can be found at pages 13-18 of the Message from the President of the United States Transmitting Four Drafts of Proposed Legislation to Attack the Pressing and Urgent Problem of International Terrorism, H.R. Doc. No. 211, 98th Congress, 2d Sess.; in S. Rep. No. 619 on S. 2623, the Aircraft Sabotage Act, 98th Congress, 2d Sess.; and 130 Cong. Rec. E 4567-E 4568 (daily ed. November 14, 1984).

9-63.110 Special Aircraft Jurisdiction of the United States

In 1970 the President signed into law legislation (Pub. L. No. 449) which implemented the Convention on Offenses and Certain Acts Committed on Board Aircraft, the Tokyo Convention (20 U.S.T. 2941), thereby creating the special aircraft jurisdiction of the United States. The effect of the legislation was to give the state of registration of an aircraft jurisdiction over crimes committed aboard that aircraft while in flight anywhere in the world. The Antihijacking Act of 1974 (Pub. L. No. 366) fully implemented the Convention for the Suppression of the Unlawful Seizure of Aircraft, the Hague Convention (22 U.S.T. 1641), and redefined and expanded the special aircraft jurisdiction of the United States which is defined in 49 U.S.C. App. §1301(38). The Aircraft Sabotage Act (Part B of chapter XX of the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984) (Pub. L. No. 473, October 12, 1984) further expanded the definition of special aircraft jurisdiction of the United States to include a foreign civil aircraft that lands in the United States having on board that aircraft an individual who has committed an offense as defined in paragraphs 1(d) or (e) of Article I of the Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts Against the Safety of Civil Aviation (so called Montreal Convention). The special aircraft jurisdiction is a jurisdictional requirement for all offenses proscribed by 49 U.S.C. App. §1472 except carrying weapons aboard an aircraft (49 U.S.C. App. §1472(1)), imparting false information (49 U.S.C. App. §1472(m)(1)) and conveying threats (49 U.S.C. App. §1472(m)(2)).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Included in the special aircraft jurisdiction of the United States is any civil aircraft of the United States; any aircraft of the United States defense forces; any aircraft within the United States; any foreign aircraft outside the United States which has its next scheduled destination or last point of departure in the United States if the foreign aircraft does, in fact, land in the United States; any foreign civil aircraft outside the United States which lands in the United States having on board that foreign aircraft an individual who has committed on that aircraft either an offense under 49 U.S.C. App. §1472 which is covered by the Hague Convention or an offense under 18 U.S.C. §32(a) which is covered by paragraphs 1(d) (destroying or damaging air navigational facilities or interfering with their operation, if such act is likely to endanger the safety of aircraft in flight) or (e) (knowingly communicating false information thereby endangering the safety of an aircraft in flight) of Article 1 of the Montreal Convention; and any aircraft leased without a crew to a lessee who has his/her principal place of business in the United States, or, if he/she has no such business, has his/her permanent residence in the United States. Such an aircraft is in the special aircraft jurisdiction of the United States only while the aircraft is in flight.

The 1974 Act also broadened the concept of "in flight" which is now defined as from the moment when all external doors are closed following embarkation until the moment when one such door is opened for disembarkation, or in the case of a forced landing, until competent authorities take responsibility for the aircraft.

The "special aircraft jurisdiction" defined in 49 U.S.C. App. §1301(38) must be distinguished from the aircraft jurisdiction defined in subsection(5) of 18 U.S.C. §7 (special maritime and territorial jurisdiction). See USAM 9-20.130, supra.

9-63.120 Venue

Venue provisions for the criminal offenses enumerated in 49 U.S.C. App. §1472 are specified in 49 U.S.C. App. §1473(a) and embody substantially the same venue requirements applicable to violations of Title 18, United States Code, contained in 18 U.S.C. §§3237-3238 and Rule 18 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. It should be noted that such non-continuing offenses as assault (49 U.S.C. App. §1472(k)), or a brief interference with a crew member (49 U.S.C. App. §1472(j)) must be tried in the district over which the aircraft was flying at the time the offense was committed. Consequently, it will be necessary to ascertain from the airline exactly where the offense occurred if venue is an issue in a case brought under 49 U.S.C. App. §§1472(j) and (k).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-63.130 Aircraft Piracy (49 U.S.C. App. §1472(i))

As Congress intended, this offense is unique, and to be distinguished from 18 U.S.C. §1651 where the term "piracy" is defined by the law of nations. The elements of 49 U.S.C. App. §1472(i) are specifically stated in the statute. The "wrongful intent" element of the offense has been held to be not more than general criminal intent to seize or exercise control of an aircraft without any legal right to do so. See United States v. Basic, 592 F.2d 13, 21 (2d Cir. 1978); United States v. Bohle, 445 F.2d 54 (7th Cir. 1971).

9-63.131 Attempts

The Antihijacking Act of 1974 (Pub. L. No. 93-366) amended subsection (i) to specifically include a provision dealing with attempts to hijack aircraft not yet "in flight" in order to avoid the jurisdictional problem encountered in United States v. Pliskow, 480 F.2d 927 (6th Cir. 1973). Thus, an attempt to seize control of an aircraft is punishable whether the aircraft is actually in flight, is moving on the ground, or is parked so long as the aircraft would have been in the special aircraft jurisdiction of the United States if the air piracy had been completed.

9-63.132 Indictment

An air piracy indictment may be returned in the district where the hijacking offense was begun, continued or terminated (49 U.S.C. App. §1473(a)).

The courts have held in United States v. Basic, 592 F.2d 13 (2d Cir. 1978), United States v. Remling, 547 F.2d 1274 (6th Cir. 1977), and United States v. Ortiz, 480 F.2d 175 (9th Cir. 1973), that the twenty-year penalty for aircraft piracy where there is no loss of life is not a mandatory penalty and hence the perpetrator, in the discretion of the court, may be eligible for probation or parole. Accordingly, contrary to earlier Department policy, any indictment for air piracy may charge other serious offenses, such as kidnapping and interference with a flight crew, arising out of the same transaction.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-63.133 Death Penalty

A death which results from an aircraft piracy need not have occurred within the special area of federal jurisdiction encompassing the underlying offense. All that is required is that the death be proximately caused by the perpetrator's efforts to implement the hijacking. See United States v. Basic, 592 F.2d 13 (2d Cir. 1978).

As a result of the decision in Furman v. Georgia, 408 U.S. 238 (1972), and United States v. Bohie, 346 F. Supp. 577 (N.D.N.Y. 1972), striking down the death penalty provision of the air piracy statute, Congress enacted a mandatory death penalty for hijackers which the Department believes complies with the mandate of the Furman decision. Under the new law contained in 49 U.S.C. App. §1473(c), the convicted aircraft hijacker is to be given a sentencing hearing at which the judge or a jury must return a special verdict setting forth its findings as to the existence or nonexistence of certain aggravating and mitigating factors. A finding of one or more aggravating factors and no mitigating factors will result in a mandatory sentence of death. A finding of no aggravating factors or one or more mitigating factors precludes a sentence of death.

The death penalty shall not be recommended without the approval of the Attorney General. See USAM 9-2.151; USAM 9-10.020; and see generally USAM 9-10.000 (capital crimes).

9-63.134 Negotiated Pleas

The Department continues to advocate severe penalties for aircraft hijackers as a deterrent to future acts of piracy. Consequently, authorization from the Criminal Division must be obtained by the U.S. Attorney before he/she enters into any agreement to forego an air piracy prosecution under 49 U.S.C. App. §1472(i) in favor of a guilty plea to lesser offense, or decides otherwise not to prosecute fully an act of air piracy. The U.S. Attorney should obtain the views of the FAA on a proposed settlement that does not include a plea to a 49 U.S.C. App. §1472(i) violation. After obtaining the FAA's views, the U.S. Attorney should contact the General Litigation and Legal Advice Section for the necessary approval.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-63.140 Interference with Flight Crew Members or Flight Attendants (49 U.S.C. App. §1472(j))

One who assaults, threatens, or intimidates a flight crew member or attendant while aboard an aircraft in the special aircraft jurisdiction of the United States, and thereby interferes with the performance of that crew member's duties or lessens the ability of that crew member to perform his/her duties is punishable under this subsection. See United States v. Meeker, 527 F.2d 12 (9th Cir. 1975). Although an assault within the special aircraft jurisdiction is prohibited under 49 U.S.C. App. §1472(k)(1), Congress provided increased penalties in this subsection for assaults on flight crew members which actually interfere with the performance of the flight personnel. Still greater punishment may be imposed when the use of a deadly or dangerous weapon is used to effect such interference. What constitutes a "deadly or dangerous weapon" is discussed in USAM 9-63.162, infra.

9-63.150 Certain Crimes Aboard Aircraft in Flight (49 U.S.C. App. §1472(k))

Acts which would be punishable if they occurred in the special maritime and territorial jurisdiction of the United States, pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §7(5) are made criminal under 49 U.S.C. App. §1472(k)(1) if they occur within the special aircraft jurisdiction of the United States. The proscribed acts are assault (18 U.S.C. §113), maiming (18 U.S.C. §114), embezzlement and theft (18 U.S.C. §661), receiving stolen property (18 U.S.C. §62), murder (18 U.S.C. §1111), manslaughter (18 U.S.C. §1112), attempted murder or manslaughter (18 U.S.C. §1113), rape (18 U.S.C. §2031), carnal knowledge of a female under sixteen years of age (18 U.S.C. §2032), and robbery (18 U.S.C. §2111). The punishment for each offense is as stated in the operative section regardless of whether the jurisdictional basis is 18 U.S.C. §7(5) or 49 U.S.C. App. §1472(k)(1). It should be noted that the ten offenses set forth above are punishable regardless of any connection they may have with aircraft piracy or attempted piracy. See H.R. Rep. No. 958, 87th Congress, pp. 10-11 (Reprinted also at 1961 U.S. Code Cong. & Adm. News 2571).

Additionally, the commission within the special aircraft jurisdiction of the United States of an act which, if committed in the District of Columbia, would be a violation of Title 22, District of Columbia Code, section 1112 (indecent exposure), is made criminal by 49 U.S.C. App. §1472(k)(2). Only general criminal intent must be proven, and the indecent exposure need not be directed toward any particular person to constitute a violation of this provision. See Peyton v. District of Columbia, 100 A. 2d 36 (D.C. 1953). An indecent exposure committed only in the presence of the one person who had solicited the act was held not to be a violation of the statute. See Rittenour v. United States, 163 A. 2d 558 (1960).

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-63.160 Carrying Weapons or Explosives Aboard Aircraft (49 U.S.C. App. §1472(1))

In 1980 Congress modified 49 U.S.C. App. §1472(1) (Section 502, Pub. L. No. 96-193, Feb. 18, 1980, 94 Stat. 59). The revised subsection of 49 U.S.C. App. §1472(1) contains misdemeanor penalties for: (1) boarding, or attempting to board an aircraft in, or intended for operation in, air transportation or intrastate air transportation by a person possessing, on or about his/her person or property, a concealed deadly or dangerous weapon which is, or would be, accessible to him/her in flight and (2) placing or attempting to place aboard any such aircraft any bomb or similar explosive or incendiary device. Added to subsection (1)(1) of 49 U.S.C. App. §1472 was the placing or attempting to place aboard any such aircraft a loaded firearm in the baggage or other property not accessible to passengers in flight. 49 U.S.C. App. §1472(1)(2) makes it a felony for anyone who willfully and without regard for the safety of human life commits an act prohibited by 49 U.S.C. App. §1472 (1)(1). The 1980 amendment also modified 49 U.S.C. App. §1472(1)(3) so that 49 U.S.C. App. §1472(1) does not apply to any officer or employee of the federal government who is authorized or required in his/her official capacity to carry arms. Prior to 1980, the exemption was limited to federal law enforcement officers authorized to carry arms. However, an exempted person still must comply with FAA regulations concerning disclosure to the airline of the fact that he/she has a weapon upon his/her person. See 14 C.F.R. §108.11(a).

The Aircraft Sabotage Act increased the fine for a violation of 49 U.S.C. App. §1472(1)(1) to $10,000 and for a violation of 49 U.S.C. App. §1742(1)(2) to $25,000. For violations of such subsections occurring on or after January 1, 1985, the possible fines are at least $100,000 and $250,000, respectively. See new 18 U.S.C. 3623 (Alternative fines) (Criminal Fines Enforcement Act of 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-596 (October 30, 1984)).

9-63.161 Attempts

In order to prove an attempt to violate 49 U.S.C. App. §1472(1), the government must show that the defendant intended to board the aircraft.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Such intent has been demonstrated when an individual has surrendered his/her ticket to an airline employee and entered a departure area, United States v. Brown, 305 F. Supp. 415 (W.D. Tex. 1969), proceeded as a ticketed passenger into a sterile concourse, United States v. Flum, 518 F.2d 39 (8th Cir. 1975), or stood in a boarding line when the ticket was to be purchased aboard a shuttle flight, United States v. Edwards, 498 F.2d 496 (2d Cir. 1974).

9-63.162 Deadly or Dangerous

What constitutes a "deadly or dangerous weapon" is left to the general definition of that term as found in the law by the courts. See 107 Cong. Rec. 14366-67; H. Rep. No. 958, 87th Cong., 1st Sess. (1961), p.15. Courts have held that unloaded pistols, United States v. Cook, 446 F.2d 50 (9th Cir. 1971), a knife with a 3 1/4" blade, United States v. Margraf, 483 F.2d 708 (3d Cir. 1973), vacated and remanded on other grounds, 414 U.S. 1106 (1973), and a tear gas gun, United States v. Brown, 508 F.2d 427 (8th Cir. 1974), are "deadly and dangerous weapons" for purposes of this statute. Further, in consideration of the purposes of this statute, it should be noted that aircraft have been hijacked with the following devices: an unloaded air-operated BB gun, razors or razor blades, a tear gas pen, a broken bottle, a fire axe, and the threat of starting a fire with gasoline or a similar flammable liquid.

9-63.163 Specific Intent

With respect to the misdemeanor provision, it is not necessary that the defendant know that the weapon he/she is carrying is a "deadly or dangerous weapon," nor that he/she specifically intends to carry a weapon which is "deadly or dangerous." The language of the misdemeanor statute contains no knowledge or specific intent requirement, and courts have refused to read such a requirement into the statute. See United States v. Margraf, supra; United States v. Flum, 518 F.2d 39 (8th Cir. 1975); United States v. Dishman, 486 F.2d 727 (9th Cir. 1973).

9-63.164 Concealment

The government must prove that the defendant concealed the weapon, but need not prove that the defendant intended to conceal the weapon. If the weapon is hidden from view, it is concealed for purposes of this statute. See United States v. Flum, supra, in which the Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit, sitting en banc, expressly overruled the decision of an Eighth Circuit panel in United States v. Brown, supra, which had held that a weapon carried in hand-held luggage which the defendant opened to airport security officials for inspection was not a concealed weapon.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-63.165 Prosecution Policy

The Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) pre-board screening procedures have done much to curb aircraft hijacking incidents. These procedures have also resulted in the detection of relatively large numbers of passengers and other individuals who have attempted to board carrier aircraft with deadly or dangerous weapons concealed on the individual's person or contained in accessible property.

In the overwhelming number of cases involving this offense, the violators have an excellent prior record and the circumstances surrounding the offense are usually quite extenuating. Often, the concealed weapon is a knife, the possession of which does not constitute a violation of a federal or local statute, or the weapon may only marginally constitute a "deadly or dangerous weapon" for purposes of this statute. Also, individuals other than law enforcement officers have been issued permits by state or local governments to carry firearms because of the nature of their occupation, or for other good reason, but are not exempted from the enforcement of this statute. As a matter of policy, criminal prosecution of these types of offenders would be inappropriately severe, and an unproductive use of limited prosecutive resources.

Therefore, to achieve uniform application of 49 U.S.C. App. §1472(1) while continuing to have an effective deterrent to this type of offense, the following guidelines should be considered in determining how an offense will be investigated and prosecuted.

A. Aggravated cases should be vigorously investigated and criminally prosecuted under 49 U.S.C. App. §1472(1). Such aggravated cases include, but are not limited to, the following examples:

1. The individual has endeavored by obvious and deliberate measures to preclude detection of a concealed weapon on his/her person or in his/her carry-on baggage;
2. Evidence available indicates that the subject intended to use the weapon in the commission of an offense; and

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

3. The weapon is any type of explosive or incendiary device.

B. Federal criminal prosecution can be declined for those offenses involving the following mitigating factors:

1. Individuals who are not law enforcement officers, but who nevertheless possess valid permits to carry a weapon;

2. Individuals who have no serious criminal records, and the circumstances surrounding the offense are clearly extenuating in nature; and

3. Individuals who possess items which are normally and acceptably used for a noncriminal purpose and which are only marginally of a deadly or dangerous character.

All such unaggravated weapons violations will continue to be initially referred to state and local authorities for disposition. Where the state or local authorities are unwilling or unable to prosecute a weapon offense involving a firearm, a civil penalty for instances on or prior to October 12, 1984, will be sought pursuant to Section 901(a) of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958, as amended (49 U.S.C. App. §1471(a)) for the violations of Section 107.21 of the Federal Aviation Regulations (14 C.F.R. §107.21) which provides:

a. Except as provided in paragraph (b) of this section, no person may have a firearm, an explosive, or an incendiary device on or about the individual's person or accessible property:

(1) When performance has begun of the inspection of the individual's person or accessible property before entering a sterile area; and

(2) When entering or in a sterile area.

b. The provisions of this section with respect to firearms do not apply to the following:

(1) Law enforcement officers required to carry a firearm by this part while on duty at the airport.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

(2) Persons authorized to carry a firearm in accordance with §108.11 or §129.27.

(3) Persons authorized to carry a firearm in a sterile area under an approved security program or a security program used in accordance with §129.25.

For instances occurring after October 12, 1984, a civil penalty may also be sought pursuant to 49 U.S.C. App. §1471(c).

Explosive or incendiary devices, including containers of gasoline or similar flammable liquids, although subject to this regulation will in all cases be criminally prosecuted under 49 U.S.C. App. §1472(1). Additionally, those rare, unaggravated instances where an individual possesses a deadly or dangerous weapon while aboard an aircraft constitutes a violation of FAA regulation 14 C.F.R. §108.11(a). Any person violating either of these above mentioned regulations is subject to civil penalty not to exceed $1,000 for such violation. However, for such incidents occurring after October 12, 1984, involving the possession of a deadly or dangerous weapon, civil penalty of up to $10,000 is possible under 49 U.S.C. App. §1471(d).

A U.S. Attorney electing to seek such a civil penalty under FAA regulations should have the FBI (or other investigative agency detecting such a violation) refer the violation to the nearest FAA Civil Aviation Security Field Office (CASFO) for appropriate civil action. If a civil penalty is deemed appropriate by the FAA, the U.S. Attorney should provide whatever litigation assistance is necessary to enforce the civil penalty.

9-63.170 False Information and Threats (49 U.S.C. App. §1472(m))

9-63.171 Discussion of Former False Information Offense

The language of former 49 U.S.C. App. §1472(m) was substantially the same as that in 18 U.S.C. §35, the "bomb hoax" statute, except that it prohibited hoaxes concerning air piracy and related offenses. See the discussion of the "bomb hoax" statute in USAM 9-63.280, infra. The former misdemeanor provision, 49 U.S.C. App. §1472 (m)(1), prohibited the imparting of false information, knowing such information to be false, concerning an alleged violation of 49 U.S.C. App. §1472(i), (j), (k), or (l). The former felony provision, 49 U.S.C. App. §1472(m)(2), was identical to the misdemeanor provision except that the defendant must have acted willfully and maliciously, or with reckless disregard for the safety of human life.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

To constitute a violation under former 49 U.S.C. App. §1472(m), the false statement need not be a positive assertion and it need not be made to airport authorities. The provision covers pranksters as well as individuals acting out of malice. The false information, however, must pose a clear and present danger of interference with air commerce and safety. The provision is concerned not solely with preventing actual destruction or hijacking of the aircraft, but also with the disruption of air service and the jeopardy to the safety of aircraft passengers and personnel. See United States v. Irving, 509 F.2d 1325 (5th Cir. 1975). The question, "Is this the plane we are going to hijack?," made to third persons generally was prohibited by this section. See Taylor v. United States 358 F. Supp. 384 (S.D. Fla. 1973). It should also be noted that former 49 U.S.C. App. §1472(m) did not proscribe threats per se, although threats may constitute false information which would give rise to prosecution under this section. Nevertheless, extortion threats, whether or not they are within the proscriptions of former 49 U.S.C. App. §1472(m), may be violations of the Hobbs Act, 18 U.S.C. §1951, the Interstate Communications statute, 18 U.S.C. §875(b), (c), or (d), or the Mailing of Threatening Communications statute, 18 U.S.C. §§876-877.

9-63.172 Discussion of New False Information Offense

Effective October 12, 1984, the only false information offense in the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 is a felony (49 U.S.C. App. §1472(m)(1)). Subsection (m)(1) makes it a crime for anyone to:

[W]illfully and maliciously, or with reckless disregard for the safety of human life, imparts or conveys or cause to be imparted or conveyed false information, knowing the information to be false and under circumstances in which such information may reasonably be believed, concerning an attempt or alleged attempt being made or to be made, to do any act which would be a felony prohibited by subsection (i), (j), (k), or (l) of this section....

While the language of new subsection 1472(m)(1) differs somewhat from that in former subsection 1472(m)(2), there is no material difference in their state of mind requirements. See 130 Cong. Rec. E 4568 (daily ed. Nov. 14, 1984).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-63.173 Prosecution Policy

As in violations of the weapons offense, 49 U.S.C. App. §1472(1), most violators of former 49 U.S.C. App. §1472(m)(1) had no prior criminal record and the circumstances surrounding the offense were often extenuating in nature. Violations usually occurred during the preboarding screening process by a passenger who had presented, or was about to present, his/her hand-carried luggage to the airline employee for inspection. The most frequent false statement was to the effect that there was a weapon in the bag to be inspected. Generally, the false statement was a poor attempt at humor, and was suspected to be such by the airline employee involved. Nevertheless, the individual making such a statement did not have a valid defense to a prosecution brought under the former section unless the statement was made under circumstances which rendered it inherently unbelievable to the recipient.

However, prosecutions under the former section could result in injustice to the defendants involved depending upon the circumstances of each case. Therefore, to achieve uniform application of former 49 U.S.C. App. §1472(m)(1), the following guidelines were to be considered in determining whether an offense was investigated and prosecuted:

A. Aggravated cases were to be fully investigated and prosecuted. Such aggravated cases include, but were not limited to, the following examples:

1. A hijacking hoax made by a person reporting the act attributable to another; and
2. False information not readily disclosed as such, resulting in delay of the flight or inconvenience to airport employees and passengers.

B. Offenses arising under former 49 U.S.C. App. §1472(m)(1) should not have been prosecuted in the following instances:

1. False statements made in the vicinity of the inspection point as a poor attempt at humor, and suspected to be such by the individual to whom the statement is directed;
2. Statements made by individuals who have good prior records under circumstances that are clearly extenuating in nature; and

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

3. Consistent with the considerations discussed above, cases in which the airlines do not deem the conduct of the individual to be of such seriousness as to warrant his/her removal from a flight or delay his/her travel schedule.

Effective October 12, 1984, there is no longer any misdemeanor offense for such incidents occurring on or after that date. In the absence of evidence warranting a felony prosecution for such incident, seeking an appropriate civil penalty should be considered.

9-63.174 Discussion of New Threat Offense (49 U.S.C. App. §1472(m)(2))

The Aircraft Sabotage Act created a new felony offense for anyone imparting or conveying or causing to be imparted or conveyed any threat to do an act which would be a felony prohibited by 49 U.S.C. App. §1472(i), (j), (k), or (l) with an apparent determination and will to carry the threat into execution. As with the new 18 U.S.C. §32(c) (see USAM 9-63.260, infra), the defendant must have exhibited an apparent determination and will to carry the threat into execution. New subsection (m)(2) does not specify the state of mind required for conviction of the offense. Since this offense is not merely regulatory, but rather malum in se, the generally applicable rule for criminal offenses, that a general mens rea is required, is applicable. See 130 Cong. Rec. E 4568 (daily ed. Nov. 14, 1984). See also H.R. Rep. No. 1396, accompanying H.R. 6915, the Criminal Code Revision Act of 1980, 96th Cong., 2d. Sess., at 31, 34-35 (1980).

New 49 U.S.C. App. §1472(m)(2) does not require any demand for a thing of value. If an extortive demand is made, there may be violations of the Hobbs Act, 18 U.S.C. §1951, the Interstate Communications statute, 18 U.S.C. §875(b), (c), or (d), or the Mailing of Threatening Communications statute, 18 U.S.C. §§876-877.

9-63.180 Aircraft Piracy Outside the Special Aircraft Jurisdiction of the United States (49 U.S.C. App. §1472(n))

The Antihijacking Act of 1974 (Pub. L. No. 93-366) in order to fully implement the Hague Convention, created a new provision (49 U.S.C. App. §1472(n)) whereby persons who commit acts of air piracy outside the special aircraft jurisdiction of the United States may be punished pursuant to 49 U.S.C. App. §1472(n) if they are subsequently found in the United States. The only limitation to this provision is that the place of take-off or actual landing of the aircraft on which the prohibited act was committed must have been outside the territory of the state of registration of that aircraft. The effect of the limitation is to exclude prosecution in the United States of a hijacker who should more properly be prosecuted in the country of the aircraft's registration. Before indictments are returned alleging this offense, authorization shall be obtained from the Assistant Attorney General of the Criminal Division. Once an approved indictment is returned, any disposition thereof shall be governed by the same criteria as that for a 49 U.S.C. App. §1472(i) offense. See USAM 9-63.134, supra.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-63.190 Search and Seizure

On January 5, 1973, the Federal Aviation Administrator ordered that inspections by metal detection devices or consent searches of all passengers, and searches of all carry-on baggage, be conducted as part of routine pre-boarding security measures at all airports. DOT Press Release No. 103-73, Dec. 5, 1972; FAA Telegram of Dec. 5, 1972. These inspections have been held proper under the Fourth Amendment by several United States Courts of Appeals.

This 100% passenger screening replaced an earlier system that used a profile to identify passengers for metal detector or consent frisk screening. Screening is done by airline employees or agents. The passenger is required to walk through a metal detector and his/her carry-on items are passed through an X-ray screening device. Law enforcement officers do not ordinarily participate until they are called upon to either provide expert assistance to the airline or, where a crime is suspected, to act in their official capacity. Under FAA approved procedures, when an airline is unable to identify the source of a metal detector alarm, the airline may choose to call upon the law enforcement officer to assist in searching a limited area of the passenger's person, identified by a hand-held metal detector, for the sole purpose of finding the source of the alarm. The airline may also choose to ask assistance in evaluating an unfamiliar object found during screening. In neither of these cases do the airline screening programs contemplate a full frisk by the law enforcement officer. He/she is not expected, however, to put aside his/her own professional judgment as to whether the total circumstances call for a lawful full frisk or a search incident to an arrest.

Whenever an airline agent or employee discovers a weapon, explosives, or incendiary device, the screening program requires that the airline notify the law enforcement officer on duty who is expected to take custody of the item, and determine the proper law enforcement disposition of the matter.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Airline security programs also provide for implementation of extraordinary procedures when a heightened security threat is perceived. Such procedures were implemented in 1983 in certain high risk areas to combat the threat from nonmetallic weapons such as gasoline. They involve the identification of certain individuals by profile for a consent "pat down" of their person and a hand search of their carry-on items. This additional screening is done regardless of whether the metal detector is alarmed or a suspicious object is found on X-ray screening.

9-63.191 Metal Detectors--Consent

The Ninth Circuit in United States v. Davis, 482 F.2d 893 (9th Cir. 1973), held that searches by a metal detector alone of all passengers and carry-on baggage were a reasonable exception to the warrant requirements of the Fourth Amendment. In applying a series of Supreme Court cases relating to "administrative" searches, the court reasoned that such preboarding searches are part of a general regulatory scheme to deter aircraft hijacking, rather than as part of a criminal investigation to secure evidence of a crime, and that consent of the passenger to the search can be proved by the fact of clear warnings and announcements at airports that all passengers are subject to search prior to boarding the flight. To avoid the search, which must be not more intrusive than necessary to accomplish its goal, the passenger may elect simply not to board the airplane. Supporting the Davis case in dictum, United States v. Dalpiaz, 494 F.2d 374 (6th Cir. 1974), held that implied consent by passengers to boarding area searches is inferred from the wide-spread publicity of their existence and the passenger's right not to board an aircraft rather than submit to the inspection. Shortly after its decision in the Davis case, the Ninth Circuit decided that the presence of metal detectors at airports was sufficiently publicized through prominently posted signs or public announcements concerning the pre-flight screenings to support a finding of implied consent to the inspection by all passengers. See United States v. Doran, 482 F.2d 929 (9th Cir. 1973).

In United States v. Edwards, 498 F.2d 496 (2d Cir. 1974), the Second Circuit reached the same conclusion as to the constitutionality of the pre-boarding security search at airports as did the Davis and Doran decisions. However, the Edwards opinion held that the danger of possible hijackings alone made searches by metal detectors of passengers and carry-on baggage reasonable, provided that the inspection was made in good faith, was reasonable in scope, and the passenger was warned previously of his/her liability to search so that he/she could have avoided it by electing not to travel by air. The Edwards opinion noted that the prominently displayed sign reading "passengers and baggage subject to search" and loudspeaker warnings which announce the liability to search of passengers put the passenger on notice of the search.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

While a number of court decisions do rely on a theory of consent or implied consent in upholding searches which have occurred in the screening process, at least one commentator argues that such an approach is basically unsound if established standards of voluntary consent are followed. See LaFave, W., Search and Seizure, a Treatise on the Fourth Amendment, (West Publishing Co., 1978), §10.6 Airport Searches. Without relying heavily on a consent theory, other cases have held that airport searches meet the test of reasonableness because of the great danger to human lives and property from hijacking, and the inherent exigent circumstances. See United States v. Moreno, 475 F.2d 44 (5th Cir. 1973).

David and later cases turned away from supporting airport screening searches with a stop-and-frisk analysis basis on Terry v. Ohio, 392 U.S. 1 (1968). Such an analysis was not pertinent to the 100% passenger screening which had replaced the previous system that used a hijacker profile to select passengers for further screening. However, a Terry analysis, such as that used in United States v. Lopez, 328 F. Supp. 1077 (E.D.N.Y. 1071), may be useful again in view of a recent introduction of profile screening, in certain high risk areas, to combat the threat from nonmetallic weapons such as gasoline. A discussion of the Terry approach used in early cases may be found in LaFave, W., Search and Seizure, a Treatise on the Fourth Amendment (West Publishing Co., 1978), §10.6 Airport Searches.

9-63.192 Search is Governmental

Since a pre-boarding search of passengers and baggage is conducted pursuant to Federal Aviation Regulations, the search is governmental in nature under the Fourth Amendment, and it is irrelevant whether the search was performed by a private airline or airport authority or a public official. See United States v. Davis, supra, 482 F.2d at 904. Further, although the search must be limited in scope, the fact that an item is not metal does not mean that the item cannot be searched. See United States v. Edwards, supra, 498 F.2d at 501. (Sky marshal searched a box of tampons inside the beachbag of the accused to reveal heroin packets after metal detector alert was not satisfactorily explained by passenger.) See Accord, United States v. Albarado, 495 F.2d 799 (2d Cir. 1974).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-63.193 Frisking

The ability of a law enforcement officer to frisk suspicious persons even prior to the metal detector screening has been upheld as constitutional. See United States v. Moreno, 475 F.2d 44 (5th Cir. 1973). The scope and purpose of the police officer's frisk of the individual in these situations is to protect other passengers and flight crew by a deterrent measure designed to neutralize a threat before the suspicious person boards the airplane.

Since the advent of a 100% passenger screening in 1973, routine screening has been done by airline employees or agents, not by law enforcement officers. An airline employee may call upon the law enforcement officer to assist in identifying the source of a metal detector alarm by searching a limited area of the passenger's person or to evaluate an object found during screening. In such a case the officer is viewed as only giving expert advice; however, the officer may conduct a Terry frisk when "stop and frisk" criteria would make such a search appropriate. Whenever an airline agent or employee discovers a weapon, explosive, or incendiary device, he/she is required to notify the law enforcement officer on duty who will take custody of, and determine the proper law enforcement disposition of, the item. At this point circumstances may justify a Terry search or an appropriate search commensurate with an arrest.

9-63.194 Checked Baggage

Although the above cited cases avoid the issue of searches of checked baggage, an air carrier has the private right to control what it carries, and can randomly or systematically search checked baggage pursuant to the tariff agreement between the carrier and the person who ships the goods. See United States v. Issod, 508 F.2d 990 (9th Cir. 1974). Contraband or weapons so discovered by private searches are admissible in federal courts without regard to the Fourth Amendment where no "state action" initiated the search. See United States v. Ogden, 785 F.2d 536 (9th Cir. 1973). Thus, absent any federal regulation which requires the airline to search checked baggage, or any other search request by federal or state authorities which may constitute the air carrier an agent of the government, a weapon or other contraband discovered by private action is admissible notwithstanding Fourth Amendment requirements. See United States v. Ogden, supra.

9-63.195 Protection of Confidentiality of Security Procedures

It may be necessary for the Federal Aviation Administration to request a U.S. Attorney's office to intervene in a civil or criminal case on behalf of the FAA in order to obtain court protection of the confidentiality of the FAA's hijacker profile and certain aspects of airline security programs.

A civil or criminal suit in which discovery is sought of these aspects of the FAA's security program is a suit in which the United States has an interest under 28 U.S.C. §517. The purpose of intervention is to protect testimony and other material from unnecessary disclosure to the public. It has been the FAA's experience that cases involving the FAA program to combat air piracy attract more than the usual press coverage. Because the effectiveness of the hijacker profile and some aspects of airline security programs would be seriously compromised by publication, it is imperative that all documents and testimony containing information on FAA recommended or required security procedures, especially the elements of the hijacker profile, be kept under seal and not available for public viewing. It is also essential that all parties and their attorneys be ordered by the court not to reveal such information to any other person except the court in camera. The FAA is prepared to provide whatever testimony is necessary to establish the danger of disclosure of such information.

9-63.210 Investigative Jurisdiction

The Federal Bureau of Investigation exercises investigative jurisdiction relative to incidents involving possible violations of Chapter 2 of Title 18, United States Code. Offenses included within this chapter are: (1) 18 U.S.C. §32 (Destruction of aircraft or aircraft facilities); (2) 18 U.S.C. §33 (Destruction of motor vehicles or motor vehicle facilities); and (3) 18 U.S.C. §35 (Imparting or conveying false information) (bomb hoax).

9-63.231 Definitions

The special definitions for Chapter 2 of Title 18, United States Code, are set forth in 18 U.S.C. §31. Section 31 incorporates by reference the definitions of "aircraft engine," "air navigation facility," "appliance," "civil aircraft," "foreign air commerce," "interstate air commerce," "landing area," "propeller," "special aircraft jurisdiction of the United States," and "spare part" as found in the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 (49 U.S.C. App. §1301). 18 U.S.C. §31 specifically defines "motor vehicle," "destructive substance," "used for commercial purposes," "in flight" and "in service." As amended by Part I of Chapter X of the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984 (Pub. L. No. 98-473, October 12, 1984) the definition of "motor vehicle" has been expanded to include commercial trucks. "Motor vehicle" presently means "every description of carriage or other contrivance propelled or drawn by mechanical power and used for commercial purposes on the highways in the transportation of passengers and property, or property, or cargo."

9-63.232 Summary of Changes Made to 18 U.S.C. §32 by the Aircraft Sabotage Act

Part B of Chapter XX of the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-473, October 12, 1984) contains the Aircraft Sabotage Act. The purpose of the Aircraft Sabotage Act was to implement fully the Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Act Against the Safety of Civil Aviation (also known as the Montreal Convention). See Treaties and Other International Acts Series, No. 7570 (T.I.A.S. 7570); United States Treaties and Other International Agreements, Vol. 24, at 564 (24 U.S.T. 564). While the Aircraft Sabotage Act made several changes to provisions of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 (see USAM 9-63.104, supra), the Act also made significant changes to 18 U.S.C. §32. These changes were effective on October 12, 1984, and consist of the following:

A. The first paragraph of 18 U.S.C. §32 was expanded to cover any aircraft in the special aircraft jurisdiction of the United States. The practical significance of this change is that the section (now designated as subsection (a)) now covers military and governmental aircraft. Formerly, it covered only "civil aircraft."

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

B. The "with intent to damage" requirement of former paragraphs two and three of 18 U.S.C. §32 was changed to "likely to endanger the safety of any such aircraft."

C. The fifth paragraph of 18 U.S.C. §32 was expanded to cover an act of violence against any person on the aircraft if such act is likely to endanger the safety of such aircraft. The former paragraph covered only crew members.

D. Paragraph (6) of 18 U.S.C. §32(a) added a new offense of communicating false information which endangers the safety of an aircraft.

E. The maximum fine for any violation of subsection of 18 U.S.C. §32(a) was raised from $10,000 to $100,000. (The maximum term of imprisonment remains twenty years.)

F. New 18 U.S.C. §32(b) implemented the Convention obligation to prosecute an offender who destroys a foreign civil aircraft outside of the United States and who is subsequently found in the United States. (See paragraph 2, Article 5 of the Convention).

G. New subsection (c) made it an offense to threaten to commit a violation of subsections (a) or (b). The penalty is a fine up to $25,000 and imprisonment for up to five years.

It should be noted that for all felony offenses occurring on or after January 1, 1985, the maximum possible fine has been increased to at least $250,000. The maximum possible fine for any misdemeanor offense not resulting in death and punishable by imprisonment for more than six months has also been increased to at least $100,000. See new 18 U.S.C. §3623 (Alternative fines) created by the Criminal Fine Enforcement Act of 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-596, October 30, 1984.

The legislative history for the Aircraft Sabotage Act can be found at pages 13-18 of the Message from the President of the United States Transmitting Four Drafts of Proposed Legislation to Attack the Pressing and Urgent Problem of International Terrorism, H.R. Doc. No. 211, 98th Congress, 2d Sess.; in S. Rep. No. 619 on S. 2623, the Aircraft Sabotage Act, 98th Congress, 2d Sess.; and at 130 Cong. Rec. E 4567-E 4568 (daily ed. Nov. 14, 1984).

9-63.233 Death Penalty

In the judgment of the Criminal Division that portion of 18 U.S.C. §34 establishing a death penalty for a person convicted of a crime under

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Chapter 2 which resulted in the death of any person is inoperative as the provision does not contain sufficient procedures to pass constitutional requirements. (For a constitutional death penalty, see 49 U.S.C. App. §1473(c), USAM 9-63.133, supra.)

9-63.240 Destruction of Aircraft--18 U.S.C. §32(a)

Former section 32 of Title 18 of the United States Code made criminal certain acts of destruction of aircraft and aircraft facilities. The purpose of the new section 32(a) is the same. Those acts that cause destruction of aircraft and related facilities and parts, and thus endanger the safety of that aircraft, are made criminal.

New section 32(a) carries forward former law and, consistent with the requirements of the Montreal Convention, somewhat expands the kinds of acts it covers and the jurisdictional scope of former section 32. The state of mind necessary for conviction of an individual under section 32(a) remains the same. The defendant must perform the prohibited acts "willfully." The 1984 amendment made no change in the former law's interpretation of this term. "An act is done 'wilfully' if it is done voluntarily and intentionally...with the bad purpose to disobey or disregard the law." E. Devitt & C. Blackmar. Federal Jury Practice and Instructions §16.13 (2d ed. 1970). See generally An Analysis of the Term "Willful" in Federal Criminal Statutes, 51 Notre Dame Law. 786 (1976).

New subsection 32(a)(1) makes clear that jurisdiction over acts relating to the destruction of aircraft or aircraft facilities extends to "any aircraft in the special aircraft jurisdiction of the United States." The 1984 amendment expanded the reach of section 32 beyond the former law's jurisdictional base (i.e., "any civil aircraft used, operated, or employed in interstate, overseas, or foreign air commerce"). "Special aircraft jurisdiction of the United States" is defined in section 101(38) of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 (49 U.S.C. App. §1301(38)). The practical significance of this change is that subsection 32(a)(1) now covers military and governmental aircraft in flight. Formerly, it covered only "civil aircraft."

It is implicit in the kind of conduct prohibited by paragraph (1) of both former section 32 and new section 32(a)(1) that such acts are likely to endanger the safety of the aircraft. Thus, following the practice of the former law, new section 32(a)(1) does not state this requirement explicitly. However, the acts described in paragraph (1) can have no other result.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Because the acts prohibited by paragraphs (2) through (6), of new section 32(a) might have other results, the Congress believed it necessary to state explicitly that these paragraphs criminalize only that conduct that threatens the safety of the aircraft. Thus, paragraphs (2), (3), and (5) prohibit certain conduct that is "likely to endanger the safety of any such aircraft." Paragraph (4) requires that the defendant act "with the intent to damage, destroy, or disable" such aircraft. Paragraph (6), relating to the communication of false information, requires that the communication actually endanger the aircraft's safety.

The description of conduct proscribed by section 32 has, in some cases, been somewhat consolidated for the sake of clarity and brevity. But the kind of conduct covered--that which will threaten the safety of the aircraft--has not changed. For example, while the prohibition of any interference with the operation of an air navigation facility could be interpreted to prohibit work stoppages by unionized airline employees, new paragraph (3) covers only interference "by force or violence." The former type of conduct may not endanger the safety of the aircraft, while the latter would.

There are three other significant additions to the type of conduct prohibited by former section 32. First, paragraph (5) of former section 32 criminalized the willful incapacitation of any crew member of an aircraft. Paragraph (5) of new section 32(a) extends this coverage to acts of violence against or incapacitation of any individual on board the aircraft. Thus, both passengers and crew are protected.

Second, new section 32(a)(6) prohibits the communication of false information if the communication endangers the safety of the aircraft (e.g., forced to make an unscheduled landing). The defendant must know that the information is false. Consistent with current law, the communication must take place under circumstances which would lead a reasonable person to believe it. Cf. Watts v. United States, 394 U.S. 705, 707 (1969); United States v. Portillo, 431 F.2d 293 (4th Cir. 1970), aff'd en banc, 438 F.2d 13 (1971).

Third, new paragraph (7) of section 32(a) prohibits attempts to do any of the acts proscribed by paragraphs (1) through (6). Former law did not proscribe attempts. Of course, aiding or abetting any act proscribed by section 32(a) is prohibited by 18 U.S.C. §2. Solicitation to commit a violation of 18 U.S.C. §32(a) would be covered by new 18 U.S.C. §373, (Solicitation to commit a crime of violence).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Finally, it should be noted that the definition of "special aircraft jurisdiction of the United States" (49 U.S.C. App. §1301(38)) was amended to include any aircraft outside of the United States upon which an offense as defined in paragraphs (1)(d) (destroying or damaging air navigation facilities or interfering with their operation, if such act is likely to endanger the safety of aircraft in flight) or (e) (knowingly communicating false information thereby endangering the safety of an aircraft in flight) of Article 1 of the Montreal Convention was committed and the aircraft lands in the United States with the alleged offender still on board.

Consistent with the seriousness of the conduct prohibited by new section 2 (a), the penalty for a violation of that section is a $100,000 fine, 20 years in prison, or both. Former section 32 authorized the imposition of the same term of imprisonment, but the authorized fine was only $10,000. It should be noted that effective for offenses occurring on or after January 1, 1985, the maximum possible fine has been increased to at least $250,000. See new 18 U.S.C. §3623 (Alternative fines).

9-63.250 Extraterritorial Destruction of a Non-United States Civil Aircraft--18 U.S.C. §32(b)

Subsection (b) of new section 32 implements paragraph 2 of Article 5 of the Montreal Convention which requires that each party establish jurisdiction over the offenses mentioned in Article 1, paragraphs (1)(a) (performing an act of violence against a person on board an aircraft in flight if that act is likely to endanger the safety of that aircraft), (b) (destroying an aircraft in service or causing damage to such an aircraft which renders it incapable of flight or which is likely to endanger its safety in flight), or (c) (placing or causing to be placed on an aircraft in service, by any means whatsoever, a device or substance which is likely to destroy that aircraft, or cause damage to it which renders it incapable of flight, or to cause damage to it which is likely to endanger its safety in flight) in the case where the alleged offender is present in its territory and it does not extradite him/her. This extraterritorial jurisdiction of 18 U.S.C. §32(b) is comparable to that required by other recent international conventions (e.g., 49 U.S.C. App. §1472(n) (aircraft piracy outside special aircraft jurisdiction of the United States) and 18 U.S.C. §1116(c) (murder of internationally protected persons).

Ordinarily, the United States is reluctant to exercise its jurisdiction when all of the conduct comprising the offense was committed in another country, and the defendant entered the United States at a later point in time. In this case, however, the authorization of extraterritorial jurisdiction is appropriate because of the serious nature of the proscribed conduct and because the exercise of such jurisdiction is recognized under principles of international law and is required by the

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Convention. The universality principle of international law permits the exercise of jurisdiction in this instance. Application of the universality principle depends on which nation has custody of the individual. The universality principle is generally accepted in the case of internationally recognized crimes. See Extraterritorial Jurisdiction--Criminal Law, 13 Harv. Int'l. L.J. 346-47, n.1 (1972). In this context, the Convention provides this international recognition.

As with subsection (a) of new section 32, the conduct proscribed by subsection (b) must be likely to endanger the aircraft's safety or to render it incapable of flight, and is punishable by a $100,000 fine, 20 years in prison, or both. Beginning January 1, 1985, the maximum fine increased to at least $250,000. See new 18 U.S.C. §3623 (Alternative fines).

9-63.251 Prosecutive Policy for 18 U.S.C. §32(b)

Before an indictment is returned alleging a violation of 18 U.S.C. §32(b), authorization shall be obtained from the Assistant Attorney General of the Criminal Division. This is consistent with the policy for 49 U.S.C. App. §1475(n). See USAM 9-63.190, supra.

9-63.260 Threats to Destroy Aircraft--18 U.S.C. §32(c)

Subsection (c) of new section 32 prohibits the willful imparting or conveying of threats to do any act which would violate paragraphs (1) through (5) of subsection (a) or paragraphs (1) through (3) of subsection (b). Consistent with current law, the threat must be issued "with an apparent determination and will to carry the threat into execution."

As with the offense of communicating false information, (see USAM 9-63.170, supra), if there is no reason to believe that the individual has the motivation or ability to carry out the threat, there is no reason to expend the resources of the federal government in criminally prosecuting such an individual. (See the discussion of new section 32(a)(6) in USAM 9-62.240, supra.) If, however, the threat is issued under circumstances where a reasonable person would believe that it would be carried out, the disruption of a flight or other action that would endanger the safety of the aircraft is likely. Such conduct should, therefore, be punished more severely. New subsection (c) thus authorizes the imposition of a $25,000 fine, 5 years in prison or both. It should be noted that beginning January 1, 1985, the maximum fine increased to at least $250,000. See new 18 U.S.C. §3623 (Alternative fines).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-63.270 Destruction of Motor Vehicles--18 U.S.C. §33

Section 33 makes it a federal crime willfully with intent to endanger the safety of any person on board or anyone he/she believes may be on board, to disable, destroy, tamper with, or place or cause to be placed any explosive or other destructive substance in, upon, or in proximity to any motor vehicle which is used, operated, or employed in interstate or foreign commerce, or its cargo or material used or intended to be used in connection with its operation. The motor vehicle must be one used for commercial purposes to transport persons and/or property on the highways. Prior to October 12, 1984, trucks carrying only cargo were not covered, but they now are. (See Part I of Chapter X of the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-473, October 12, 1984.)

9-63.271 Prosecutive Policy for 18 U.S.C. §33

18 U.S.C. §33 is not intended to "federalize" every attack upon a commercial motor vehicle. Damaging a motor vehicle with the intent of injuring the driver or any passenger on board would violate a number of state laws. It is the intent of the Congress that state authorities continue to play the principal role in this area. See S. Rep. No. 225, at 324. Understandings should be reached with state and local authorities, through the Law Enforcement Coordinating Committees, reflecting the limited nature of the federal role. Questions concerning this statute should be directed to the General Litigation and Legal Advice Section (724-6971), except for questions concerning its application in labor-management disputes, which should be directed to the Labor-Management Unit of the Organized Crime and Racketeering Section (633-3666).

9-63.280 Imparting or Conveying False Information (Bomb Hoax)--18 U.S.C. §35

9-63.281 General

18 U.S.C. §35 provides civil and felony provisions for the conveyance of false information regarding attempts or alleged attempts to destroy, damage, or disable aircraft, aircraft related facilities, motor vehicles and their related facilities. The statute is frequently referred to as the "bomb hoax" statute. The statute contains a civil penalty provision, 18 U.S.C. §35(a), for nonmalicious false reports, and a felony provision, 18 U.S.C. §35(b), which prescribes maximum penalties of $5,000 and five years imprisonment for conveying or imparting of false information willfully and maliciously or with reckless disregard for the safety of human life. Statements which impart or convey false information regarding attempts to place or the placing of explosives aboard aircraft (but not in aircraft facilities such as airports) may also be punishable under 49 U.S.C. App. §1472(m)(1) which provides for a felony penalty and under 49 U.S.C. App. §1472(c) which provides for a civil penalty.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-63.282 Civil Provision (18 U.S.C. §35(a))

The Department believes that civil penalties are an effective punishment for the disruption caused by pranksters and jesters who falsely report the presence of bombs or explosives aboard aircraft. Under 18 U.S.C. §35(a) willfulness need not be shown, and the penalty will be recoverable even if the false report was the result of a poor attempt at humor, irritation or fatigue. See United States v. Rutherford, 332 F.2d 444 (2d Cir. 1964), cert. denied, 377 U.S. 994 (1964); United States v. Sullivan, 329 F.2d 755 (2d Cir. 1964), cert. denied, 377 U.S. 1005 (1964).

The essence of the "impart or convey information" element will continue to be the impression created in the minds of those who hear the remark and observe the person making it. These impressions should be tested under the objective standard of what reasonable persons would conclude from the words actually spoken, and from the conduct and demeanor of the speaker. In general, the civil penalty should not be sought where the words amounted to an inquiry, conjecture or speculation, as distinguished from an affirmative imparting of information. Also, if an action is to be initiated, the statement should not be inherently unbelievable and the speaker's conduct and deportment should be consistent with his/her words. However, even if the speaker follows his/her false report with an immediate disclaimer of malevolent intent, he/she has aroused suspicion or doubt which, in the interest of the travelling public's safety, cannot be ignored. See H.R. Rep. No. 263, 89th Cong., 1 Sess., pp. 1-2 (1965). As a matter of practice the maximum penalty under the statute should be sought.

9-63.283 Venue

Under 28 U.S.C. §1355, the federal district courts have jurisdiction of actions for the recovery of any penalties incurred under acts of Congress, and a civil action for the recovery of a pecuniary penalty may, subject to the process provisions of Rule 4, Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, be brought either in the district in which it accrues or in the one in which the defendant is found. See 28 U.S.C. §1395(a). Since the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure govern actions brought pursuant to Pub. L. No. 89-64 (see Rules 1 and 81(a), Fed. R. Civ. P.; Rule 54(b)(5), Fed. R. Crim. P.; Reviser's Note, par. 4, under 28 U.S.C. §2462), U.S. Attorneys should insure that civil complaints and summonses instead of information and warrants of arrest are employed in these cases. See Rules 3 and 4, Fed. R. Civ. P.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

28 U.S.C. §1395(a) provides that a civil action for the recovery of a pecuniary penalty may be brought either in the district in which it accrues or in the one in which the defendant is found. Despite the language of this provision, the cases indicate that the process limitations contained in Rule 4, Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, will govern the choice of forum in civil penalty "bomb hoax" cases just as in ordinary litigation. As the Supreme Court said in Georgia v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 324 U.S. 439, 467 (1944), "Apart from specific exceptions created by Congress the jurisdiction of the district courts is territorial." See Rule 4(f), Fed. R. Civ. P.; Ahrens v. Clark, 335 U.S. 188, 190 (1948); see also United States v. Congress Construction Co., 222 U.S. 199 (1911); Robertson v. Labor Board, 268 U.S. 619 (1924). Under rule 4(e), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, in certain instances state "long-arm" statutes might permit the commencement of a civil penalty suit in the district of the offense. However, since only a few states have enacted such statutes, the interest in uniformity requires that all civil penalty actions under 18 U.S.C. §35(a) be brought in the district in which the defendant resides. This policy comports with the general practice followed by other Divisions when enforcing civil sanctions.

9-63.284 Subpoenas in Civil Cases

Rule 45(e), Fed. R. Civ. P., provides in part:

At the request of any party subpoenas for attendance at a ... trial shall be issued by the clerk of the district court for the district in which the ... trial is held. A subpoena requiring the attendance of a witness at a ... trial may be served at any place within the district, or at any place without the district that is within 100 miles of the place of the ... trial specified in the subpoena; and, when a statute of the United States provides therefor, the court, upon proper application and cause shown may authorize the service of a subpoena at any other place.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Inasmuch as no statute allows for special service of trial subpoenas in civil penalty "bomb hoax" cases, the takings and use of depositions will be necessary in many instances.

If the defendant shows an intention to contest the action, notices of deposition for witnesses residing beyond the limits of Rule 45(e)(1), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, should be mailed from the district where the action is filed. Reasonable notice in writing to every other party to the action should be given, see Rule (30a) Fed. R. Civ. P. When the defendant is apprised that he/she will at least have to employ counsel in one or more other districts in order to fully protect his/her interests, he/she may desire not to contest the action rather than assume the costs of a defense. While the taking of written interrogatories under Rule 31, Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, might prove less expensive to the government, notifying the defendant of an intention to proceed by depositions will increase the likelihood that he/she will agree to a consent judgment.

If the defendant persists in his/her defense and one or more witnesses are reluctant to be deposed, their examination can be compelled in the following manner: The district court clerk in the district of the reluctant witness will issue a subpoena on the basis of proof that the witness has previously ignored the prior notice to take his/her deposition. The witness must allow his/her deposition to be taken in the county in which he/she resides, is employed or transacts business in person, or at another convenient place fixed by court order. A non-resident of the district must attend only in the county in which he/she is served with the subpoena, or within 40 miles from the place of service or at another convenient place fixed by court order. See Rule 45(d)(1)(2), Fed. R. Civ. P. The U.S. Attorney for the district in which the witness resides can be requested to apply for the issuance of a subpoena and to make arrangements for the taking of the deposition.

Under Rule 26(d)(3), Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, depositions may be introduced at civil penalty bomb hoax trials on a showing by the government that the deponent is more than 100 miles from the place of trial or out of the United States.

9-63.285 Compromise of Civil Penalty

Since there is doubt whether a civil penalty may be compromised in the absence of express statutory authority, and since no such authority exists with respect to the civil penalty prescribed by 18 U.S.C. §35(a),

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

consent judgments should be used for disposition of the case without trial.

9-63.286 Jury Trial in Civil Action

Defendants in civil actions under 18 U.S.C. §35(a) are entitled to trials by jury. See Hepner v. United States, 213 U.S. 103, 115 (1909) (dictum); Orenstein v. United States, 191 F.2d 184 (1st Cir. 1951). But where undisputed testimony in a civil penalty case shows the defendant committed the offense, the court may direct a verdict in the government's favor. See Hepner v. United States, supra, 213 U.S. at 105-15; cf. United States v. Grannis, 172 F.2d 507, 513 (4th Cir. 1949). The same rule will operate in behalf of the defendant where the testimony clearly absolves him/her of the charge. See Hepner v. United States, supra, at 112 (dictum). If the jury returns a verdict for the government, the judge will fix the amount of the penalty. See Missouri, K. & T. Ry. v. United States, 231 U.S. 112, 119-20 (1913) (penalty as "deterrent not compensation"). For a discussion of some constitutional considerations that may be involved in civil penalty cases, see Kennedy v. Mendoza-Martinez, 372 U.S. 144, 167-70 (1963).

9-63.300 ANTI-RIOT ACT [RESERVED]

9-63.400 OBSCENE OR HARASSING TELEPHONE CALLS (47 U.S.C. §223)

9-63.410 Description

47 U.S.C. §223 makes it a federal offense for any person, by means of telephone in the District of Columbia or in interstate or foreign communication, to:

- A. Make any obscene remark;
- B. Make an anonymous telephone call with intent to annoy, abuse, threaten, or harass;
- C. Make the telephone of another ring continuously or repeatedly, with intent to harass;
- D. Make repeated telephone calls, during which conversation ensues, with intent to harass; or

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

E. Knowingly make any obscene or indecent communication for commercial purposes to any person under eighteen years of age or to any nonconsenting adult, regardless of whether the maker of such communication placed the call.

It is also a violation of 47 U.S.C. §223 for any person to knowingly permit his/her telephone to be used for any of these purposes.

9-63.420 Jurisdictional Requirement of the Statute

This section applies only to interstate or international telephone calls and to calls made within the District of Columbia. See United States v. Lampley, 573 F.2d 783 (3d Cir. 1978).

9-63.430 Investigative Jurisdiction

The FBI is the investigative agency with primary jurisdiction to investigate alleged violations of this statute.

9-63.440 Supervisory Jurisdiction

Supervisory jurisdiction for this statute is vested in the General Litigation and Legal Advice Section of the Criminal Division, FTS 724-6948.

9-63.450 Special Considerations

Past experience has indicated that approximately one-third of offending callers are mentally ill. U.S. Attorneys presented with cases involving such individuals should explore with defense counsel the possibility of voluntary submission to psychiatric treatment by the accused. If he/she does agree to undergo such treatment, a stern warning and declination of prosecution may be considered. Another third of all calls are juvenile pranksters. Cases involving juveniles may, in the discretion of U.S. Attorneys and in conformity with the Federal Juvenile Delinquency Act (see 18 U.S.C. §5031 et seq.), be appropriately handled under diversion programs. As a practical matter, almost all matters referred to the U.S. Attorneys involve repeated calls; therefore, it is recommended that when a violation of this statute is alleged, the defendant should be charged under 47 U.S.C. §223 1(d) rather than 47

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

U.S.C. §223 1(a) (obscene phone calls), because of the substantial legal problems involved in obscenity prosecutions.

U.S. Attorneys can expect to receive occasional complaints from citizens who have received annoying and harassing telephone calls. If such a call is received it is suggested that:

A. The citizen be informed of the jurisdictional requirements of the statute;

B. The citizen be referred to the telephone company for possible verification of the calling number and notification of federal authorities by the telephone company if a violation of a federal law has occurred; and

C. The citizen be advised that the telephone company may protect him/her from receiving harassing calls either by changing the telephone number or by intercepting and identifying all persons attempting to call his/her present number.

9-63.460 Obscene Communications for Commercial Purposes

Paragraph (b) of 47 U.S.C. §223 makes it a crime to knowingly make by means of an interstate, international, or District of Columbia telephone call, any obscene or indecent communication to any person under eighteen years of age, or to any nonconsenting adult, regardless of who placed the call. This provision was added to 47 U.S.C. §223 by Pub. L. No. 92-214, which was enacted on December 8, 1983. 47 U.S.C. §223(b), which also creates civil and injunctive remedies that may be used against such communications, was intended to provide effective remedies against, inter alia, the "Dial-A-Porn" services, by which a person can make a telephone call and receive a recorded obscene message.

Subparagraph (2) of 47 U.S.C. §223(b) provides that it is a defense to prosecution that the defendant restricted access to the prohibited communications to persons eighteen years of age or older in accordance with procedures the Federal Communications Commission shall proscribe by regulation. The Department has concluded that 47 U.S.C. §223(b) cannot be enforced until such regulations are adopted by the Commission. See USAM 9-75.090--9-75.091, which require consultation with the General Litigation and Legal Advice Section prior to initiating action under 47 U.S.C. §223 for obscene telephone calls.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-63.470 Right to Jury Trial

The December 8, 1983, amendment to 47 U.S.C. §223 raised the maximum fine upon conviction from $500 to $50,000. As a result, the offense defined by 47 U.S.C. §223 is now a misdemeanor, whereas it was formerly a petty offense. See 18 U.S.C. §1. Consequently, a defendant charged with violating 47 U.S.C. §223, may be entitled to a jury trial unless it is stipulated that upon conviction the defendant's sentence will not exceed six months' imprisonment, or a fine of $500, or both.

9-63.480 Threatening or Extortionate Telephone Calls

If an interstate telephone communication includes a demand for ransom for release of a kidnapped person, or a threat to kidnap any person or to injure any person, property, or the reputation of any person, the caller may be charged with a felony under 18 U.S.C. §875. See USAM 9-60.300.

9-63.490 Bomb Threats

If a telephone communication contains a threat or a malicious conveyance of false information concerning an alleged or actual attempt to injure any person or property by means of an explosive, the caller may be charged with a felony under 18 U.S.C. §844. See USAM 9-63.900, infra.

9-63.500 FIREARMS CONTROL: THE 1968 ACTS (18 U.S.C. §§921-928; 18 U.S.C. App. §§1201-1203; 26 U.S.C. §§5801-5872)

9-63.501 Introduction

In 1968 Congress enacted three separate and distinct firearms statutes. These three statutes govern the possession, transfer and manufacture of various types of firearms and destructive devices. The first firearms statute is Title I and is codified at 18 U.S.C. §§921-928. The second firearms statute is Title II and is codified at 26 U.S.C. §§5801-5872. The third firearms statute is Title VII of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968; Title VII is codified at 18 U.S.C. App. §§1201-1203.

Title I replaces part of the old Federal Firearms Act. Title I deals primarily with the transfer and transportation of virtually all firearms and destructive devices, and with the licensing of importers, manufacturers, dealers and collectors of firearms and destructive devices.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Title II completely revises part of the old Federal Firearms Act in accordance with the problems raised by the Supreme Courts' decision in Haynes v. United States, 390 U.S. 85 (1968). Title II creates a tax and registration scheme for so-called "gangster" type weapons and destructive devices. Unlike Title I, Title II does not include within its coverage most handguns, rifles and shotguns.

Title VII makes unlawful the receipt, possession or transportation, in commerce, of firearms and destructive devices by specific categories of persons. Congress has determined that the categories of persons specified in this statute should not be allowed to possess firearms because the possession of firearms by these persons constitutes a burden on interstate and foreign commerce impeding enforcement of federal law.

There is considerable overlap in the three firearms statutes. Given the complexity inherent in administering these overlapping statute, USAM 9-63.500 et seq., will succinctly describe the statutes, will indicate the recurring problems which arise in their enforcement, and will set forth the Criminal Division's policy regarding prosecutions under them.

9-63.510 Title I (18 U.S.C. §§921-928)

Title I revises and expands the licensing requirements for those engaged in the firearms business, requirements first established in the old Federal Firearms Act. 18 U.S.C. §923(a) requires all persons "engag[ing] in business as a firearms or ammunition importer, manufacturer or dealer" to secure a license from the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary of the Treasury has delegated to the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms enforcement responsibility for Title I. The licensing requirements of Title I differ significantly from the licensing requirements of the old Federal Firearms Act, which only covered those businesses which shipped or received firearms in interstate or foreign commerce. In contradistinction, the scope of 18 U.S.C. §923(a) extends to all who "engage in business." The licensing provisions of 18 U.S.C. §923(a) apply with equal force to both interstate and intrastate businesses.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

18 U.S.C. §923(b) creates a new license classification for collectors who acquire, hold or dispose of firearms or ammunition as curios or relics. This classification was created to clarify an ambiguity in the old Federal Firearms Act as to whether activities of this nature required hobbyists to become licensed dealers.

Except for certain limited exceptions (see USAM 9-63.511, infra), Title I prohibits all commercial transactions or shipments of firearms and ammunition in interstate or foreign commerce between persons who are not federal licensees. Title I forbids licensed dealers, manufacturers, importers or collectors to sell, deliver or transport firearms or ammunition to unlicensed persons residing in states other than those in which they conduct their businesses. See 18 U.S.C. §§922(a)(3) and (a)(5).

Title I also prohibits a federal licensee from shipping or transporting firearms or ammunition to anyone other than a fellow licensee. See 18 U.S.C. §922(a)(2). 18 U.S.C. §922(a)(2) prohibits the interstate mail order shipments of firearms or ammunition. Exceptions arise only when a licensee has repaired or replaced a damaged weapon, or where a weapon has been sent to an individual authorized to receive one through the mail pursuant to the "mailability" provisions of 18 U.S.C. §1715.

9-63.511 Exceptions

The most significant exception to the prohibitions of Title I is the so-called "contiguous state" exception. This exception authorizes a licensee to sell a firearm to an unlicensed purchaser who is a resident of a state contiguous to the state in which the licensee's business is located. See 18 U.S.C. §922(b)(3)(A). It is important to note, however, that the exception is applicable only "if the purchaser's state of residence permits such sale or delivery by law." The Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms has interpreted this language to mean that the purchaser's state of residence must have enacted specific enabling legislation before such sales may be consummated legally. See 26 C.F.R. §198.96. Other exceptions are afforded to "out of state" transfers where the firearm is acquired through bequest or intestate succession (see 18 U.S.C. §922(a)(3)(A)); where the firearm is loaned or rented temporarily for sporting purposes (see §922(b)(3)(A)); or where a non-resident engaged in sport shooting purchases a firearm to replace a lost, stolen or inoperative weapon (see 18 U.S.C. §922(b)(3)(C)).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-63.512 Sales to Certain Purchasers

Title I places a number of regulatory controls upon firearms transactions involving certain purchasers. A federal licensee is prohibited from selling or delivering weapons or ammunition to an individual who he/she knows or has reasonable cause to believe is less than eighteen years of age. See 18 U.S.C. §922(b)(1). In addition, no weapon other than a rifle or a shotgun may be sold to an individual under the age of twenty-one. See 18 U.S.C. §922(b)(1). Title I places an absolute prohibition upon the sale of firearms or ammunition by a licensee when the licensee knows, or has reasonable cause to believe that the purchaser is a convicted felon, is under indictment for a felony, is a fugitive from justice, is a narcotics addict or user, or is a person who has been adjudicated mentally defective or who has been committed to a mental institution. See 18 U.S.C. §922(d). Moreover, Title I prohibits a licensee from selling firearms or ammunition unless he/she has reason to believe that the purchase or possession of the articles sold is in conformity with state or local law at the place of sale or delivery. See 18 U.S.C. §922(b)(2).

9-63.513 Recordkeeping

Title I subjects licensees to rigorous recordkeeping requirements with respect to the importation, production, receipt or disposition of weapons or ammunition in a licensee's inventory. The Secretary of the Treasury has broad authority to enter a licensee's business premises during normal business hours in order to inspect or examine records or inventory. See 18 U.S.C. §923(g). Title I makes it a crime for a licensee "knowingly to make any false entry in, to fail to make appropriate entry in, or to fail to properly maintain any record which he/she is required to keep pursuant to [18 U.S.C. §923] or regulations promulgated thereunder." See 18 U.S.C. §922(m). All information contained in a licensee's records concerning a purchaser's identity is available to local authorities on request to the Department of the Treasury. Since Title I does not place the purchaser under any compulsion to provide a licensee with such information, disclosure of the information does not give rise to a valid claim of privilege by the purchaser should such information be used against him/her in a subsequent criminal proceeding.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Title I places further restrictions on sales which are not consummated at the licensee's place of business. See 18 U.S.C. §922(c). 18 U.S.C. §922(c) is directed at intrastate mail order and freight sales--sales not covered by 18 U.S.C. §922(a)(1)--and at "contiguous state" transactions. See 18 U.S.C. §922(b)(3)(A). With respect to these transactions 18 U.S.C. §922(c) provides that a licensee may transfer weapons or ammunition only if the following conditions have been met: first, that the transferee has executed a sworn affidavit which states that he/she is not prohibited by federal or state law from receiving or possessing a weapon; second, that the transferor has given notice of the contemplated sale to the chief law enforcement officer of the transferee's place of residence; and third, that the transferor has delayed shipment or delivery for at least seven days following the law enforcement official's receipt of the required notice. 18 U.S.C. §922(c) also requires the licensee to retain copies of these documents as part of his/her permanent records.

9-63.514 Transportation of Firearms

Title I does more than simply regulate commercial transactions in firearms and ammunition; it also establishes restrictions and controls on the transportation of firearms or ammunition in interstate or foreign commerce. 18 U.S.C. §§922(g) and (h) make it unlawful for convicted felons, persons indicted on felony charges, fugitives from justice, drug addicts and users, and persons who have been adjudicated as mental defectives or who have been committed to a mental institution to ship, transport, or receive firearms or ammunition in interstate or foreign commerce. In Barrett v. United States, 423 U.S. 212 (1976), the Supreme Court held that 18 U.S.C. §922(h), which, inter alia, makes it unlawful for a convicted felon "to receive any firearm or ammunition which has been shipped or transported in interstate or foreign commerce", applied to a convicted felon's intrastate purchase of a firearm that previously, but independently of the convicted felon's receipt, had been transported in interstate commerce. In Barrett, the firearm had been shipped from the manufacturer to a distributor, who then shipped it to a licensee. Thus, Barrett stands for the proposition that the government is not required to prove that the defendant participated in any interstate activity involving a firearm either before or after its purchase.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The only intent necessary for a violation of section 922 is the intent to accomplish the act of transportation across a state line while unlawfully in possession of a firearm, or the intent to unlawfully receive a firearm which has been transported across state lines. See, e.g., Lambert v. United States, 600 F.2d 476 (5th Cir. 1979); United States v. Haddad, 558 F.2d 968 (9th Cir. 1977); United States v. Butler, 541 F.2d 730 (8th Cir. 1976).

Subsection (i) of 18 U.S.C. §922 makes it unlawful for any person to transport or ship firearms or ammunition in interstate or foreign commerce, knowing or having reasonable cause to believe that the firearms or ammunition have been stolen. Subsection (j) of 18 U.S.C. §922 makes it unlawful for any person to receive or dispose of any stolen firearm or ammunition which is moving in or which is part of interstate or foreign commerce, knowing or having reasonable cause to believe that the firearm or ammunition was stolen. Subsection (k) of 18 U.S.C. §922 makes it unlawful to transport, ship or receive a firearm which has had its serial number removed, obliterated or altered. It should be pointed out that 18 U.S.C. §923(i) requires all licensed importers and manufacturers to identify each weapon imported or manufactured by means of a serial number engraved or cast into the receiver or frame.

Title I restrictions on the transportation of firearms or ammunition also encompass such shipments in interstate or foreign commerce through a common or contract carrier. Subsection (e) of 18 U.S.C. §922 requires the person shipping firearms or ammunition in interstate or foreign commerce to serve written notice on the carrier. It should be noted that the Ninth Circuit in United States v. Flores, No. 82-1445, slip op. (9th Cir., May 3, 1983) (amended opinion filed by panel on October 24, 1983) reversed a conviction for violation of 18 U.S.C. §922(e) holding that compliance with 18 U.S.C. §922(e) violated the defendant's Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination. A petition for rehearing en banc is pending. In United States v. Wilson, No. 83-5002, slip op. (4th Cir., Nov. 4, 1983) the Fourth Circuit affirmed the defendant's conviction, explicitly rejecting the Ninth Circuit's interpretation of 18 U.S.C. §922(e) in Flores. In Wilson the Fourth Circuit held that the notice provision of 18 U.S.C. §922(e) does not raise a specter of a substantial hazard of self-incrimination for two reasons: first, because the common carrier is the only party required to be given notice; and second, because the carrier may simply refuse to transport the firearms or ammunition brought to it for shipment. While subsection (f) of 18 U.S.C. §922 makes it unlawful for a carrier to transport or deliver firearms or ammunition with knowledge or cause to believe that the shipment or receipt thereof violates Title I, 18 U.S.C. §922(f) does not place the carrier under any legal obligation to inform the government that a particular shipment violates Title I.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

It should be noted that Title I imposes special restrictions upon the limited class of weapons, "gangster-type weapons", primarily regulated by Title II (26 U.S.C. §§5801-5872). See USAM 9-63.520-9-63.525, infra, which discusses Title II. All sales or deliveries of Title II weapons, including transfers to licensees, must be specifically authorized by the Secretary of the Treasury. See 18 U.S.C. §922(b)(4). Also authorization must be obtained before an unlicensed person may transport a Title II weapon in interstate or foreign commerce. See 18 U.S.C. §922(a)(4).

9-63.515 Military Exemptions and Relief from Disabilities

18 U.S.C. §925 affords limited exemptions from Title I for firearms or ammunition delivered to certain persons and groups pursuant to 10 U.S.C. §4308, and to firearms transactions by members of the armed forces outside the United States. See 18 U.S.C. §925(a). Also, upon application, the Secretary of the Treasury may relieve an individual from all disabilities imposed under the federal firearms statutes as a result of a conviction for a crime punishable by imprisonment for more than one year, unless the crime involved a violation of the federal firearms statute, where it is established that the applicant is unlikely to act in a manner dangerous to the public safety. See 18 U.S.C. §925(c).

9-63.516 Importation Provisions

Title I places comprehensive restrictions on the importation of firearms and ammunition. See 18 U.S.C. §925(d). The words "firearm" and "ammunition" are broadly defined. See 18 U.S.C. §§921(3) and (17). Title I imposes a complete embargo upon firearms or ammunition which do not fall within one of the four categories specified in 18 U.S.C. §925(d). This provision states that the Secretary of the Treasury may authorize importation if the person seeking permission to import establishes that the firearm or ammunition:

- (1) is being imported for scientific or research purposes, or is for use in connection with military competition, or training pursuant to chapter 401 of title 10;

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

- (2) is an unserviceable firearm other than a machine-gun as defined in [26 U.S.C. §5845(b)] (not readily restorable to firing condition) imported or brought in as a curio or museum piece;
- (3) is a type that does not fall within the definition of a firearm as defined in [26 U.S.C. §5845(a)] and is generally recognized as particularly suitable for, or readily adaptable to sporting purposes, excluding surplus military firearms; or
- (4) was previously taken out of the United States or a possession by the person who is bringing in the firearm or ammunition.

It should be noted that 18 U.S.C. §925(d) states that "[t]he Secretary may . . . permit the conditional importation or bringing in of a firearm or ammunition for examination and testing in connection with the making of a determination as to whether the importation or bringing in of such firearm or ammunition will be allowed under this subsection." It is important to note that 18 U.S.C. §925(d)(3) specifically prohibits the importation of all surplus military firearms.

Title I also makes it unlawful for any person knowingly to import or to bring into the United States any firearm or ammunition except as provided in 18 U.S.C. §925(d). See 18 U.S.C. §922(1). In addition, 18 U.S.C. §922(1) prohibits the knowing receipt of any firearm or ammunition which has been unlawfully imported. As to both these proscriptions, scienter is required.

9-63.517 Penalties

18 U.S.C. §924(a) imposes a maximum penalty of five years imprisonment, or $5,000 fine, or both, for violation of any provision of Title I, or for making a false statement or representation with respect to information required to be kept in the records of licensees, or in connection with an application for any license or exemption. See USAM 9-63.519, infra, which discusses United States v. Batchelder, 442 U.S. 114 (1979).

Title I creates new penalties where firearms are used in the commission of a crime. See 18 U.S.C. §§924(b) and (c). 18 U.S.C. §924(b) makes unlawful the shipment, transportation or receipt of firearms or ammunition in interstate or foreign commerce with the intent to use one or the other in the commission of a federal or state offense punishable by imprisonment for a term exceeding one year, or with knowledge or cause to believe that the firearms or ammunition will be used in an unlawful manner. Violation of 18 U.S.C. §924(b) subjects a person to a maximum penalty of ten years imprisonment, or $10,000 fine, or both. 18 U.S.C. §924(c) makes unlawful the use of a firearm during the commission of a felony prosecutable in federal court, or the carrying of a firearm during the perpetration of such an offense. Violation of 18 U.S.C. §924(c) subjects a person to a sentence of from one to ten years imprisonment for the first offense, and to a sentence of from five to twenty-five years imprisonment for a subsequent offense. In the case of a subsequent conviction, the court is precluded from suspending sentence or giving a probationary sentence.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-63.518 The Supreme Court's Analysis of the Enhanced Penalty Provision of Title I

In Simpson v. United States, 435 U.S. 6 (1978), the Supreme Court examined the relationship between the enhanced penalty provision of the federal bank robbery statute (18 U.S.C. §2113(d)), and the enhanced penalty provision of Title I (18 U.S.C. §924(c)). The Supreme Court held that when Congress enacted the enhanced penalty provision of Title I it did not intend to authorize the imposition of an additional penalty for the commission of a bank robbery with a firearm, since bank robbery with a firearm already is subject to enhanced punishment under the bank robbery statute.

In Busic v. United States, 446 U.S. 398 (1980), the Supreme Court considered the relationship between a statute prohibiting assaults on federal officers (18 U.S.C. §111) and the enhanced penalty provision of Title I (18 U.S.C. §922(c)). The Supreme Court held that Title I's enhanced penalty provision could not be applied to a defendant who used a firearm in the course of a felony proscribed by a statute which itself authorizes enhancement if a dangerous weapon is used. Because the statute prohibiting assaults on federal officers authorized enhancement, the defendant could only be sentenced pursuant to the enhanced penalty provision of the federal assault statute and not the enhanced penalty provision of Title I.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-63.519 The Supreme Court's Analysis of the Relationship Between the Sentencing Provision of Title I and the Sentencing Provision of Title VII

In United States v. Batchelder, 442 U.S. 114 (1979), the Supreme Court held that a defendant convicted of violating Title I is properly sentenced under Title I even though the defendant's conduct also violates Title VII (18 U.S.C. App. §§1201-1203). In Batchelder the defendant was convicted of violating 18 U.S.C. §922(h), which prohibits a previously convicted felon from receiving a firearm that has travelled in interstate commerce. Pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §922(a), Batchelder was sentenced to five years imprisonment. In the Supreme Court Batchelder contended that because the substantive elements of 18 U.S.C. §922(h) (Title I) and 18 U.S.C. App. §1202(a) (Title VII) were identical as applied to a convicted felon who unlawfully received a firearm, he/she could be sentenced to no more than the two year maximum sentence provided by 18 U.S.C. App. §1202(a) (Title VII). In rejecting Batchelder's contention the Supreme Court noted that Titles I and VII each had its own sentencing provision, each of which operated independently of the other. Each title, said the Court, unambiguously specified the penalties available to enforce its substantive proscriptions, and that Congress, in enacting Titles I and VII, enacted two independent firearms statutes, each fully enforceable on its own terms. That Title VII provided a different penalty than Title I for essentially the same conduct, said the Court, is no justification for taking liberties with unequivocal statutory language.

9-63.520 Title II (26 U.S.C. §§5801-5872)

Title II deals with a relatively limited class of weapons, often referred to as "gangster-type" weapons. Title II coverage extends to machine guns, sawed-off and short-barreled shotguns and rifles, mufflers, silencers, machine gun frames and receivers, combinations of machine gun parts, smooth-bore pistols and revolvers capable of firing shotgun shells, concealable weapons such as tear gas guns or "zip" guns designed to fire a projectile, and certain weapons with combination shotgun and rifle barrels. See 26 U.S.C. §§5845(a),(b),(c),(d), and (e). In addition, Title II includes within its coverage "destructive device[s]," which the title broadly defines as explosives, incendiary or poisonous gas bombs, grenades, rockets with a propellant charge of at least four ounces, missiles having an explosive or incendiary charge in excess of one quarter ounce, mines and similar devices--molotov cocktails and other "homemade" incendiary or explosive devices--weapons with a bore of at least one-half inch such as mortars, antitank guns and artillery pieces, and any combination of parts either designed or intended for use in converting a device into one of the foregoing weapons. See 26 U.S.C. §5845(f).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Title II exempts from coverage antique firearms and devices which are primarily collector's items and which are unlikely to be used as weapons. The statute also exempts devices which are neither designed nor redesigned for use as weapons, and any devices which the Secretary of the Treasury finds are not likely to be used as weapons, or are antiques or are rifles which the owners intend to use solely for sporting purposes. See 26 U.S.C. §§5845(a) and (f).

9-63.521 Businesses Regulated

Title II imposes a series of restrictions upon those businesses which deal in "gangster type" weapons, weapons listed in the previous section of this Manual. Title II imposes a special occupational tax on importers, manufacturers and dealers in firearms. See 26 U.S.C. §5801. Title II broadly defines "importers," "manufacturers" and "dealers." See 26 U.S.C. §§5845(k), (l) and (m). All businesses or enterprises dealing in "gangster-type" weapons must register in each internal revenue district in which they conduct business, and must obtain approval from the Secretary of the Treasury prior to commencing business operations at a new location or under a new trade name. See 26 U.S.C. §5861(a). This requirement is in addition to the licensing requirements contained in Title I.

Title II requires importers, manufacturers, and dealers to maintain careful business records concerning the manufacture, receipt and disposition of all firearms that come within their purview. See 26 U.S.C. §5843. Falsification of these business records, or any other documents required by Title II, is prohibited. See 26 U.S.C. §5861. Any falsification of records or documents should be prosecuted under this provision, rather than under 18 U.S.C. §1001 (false statements statute), given the stringent penalties provided by Title II. See USAM 9-63.525, infra.

9-63.522 Importation and Transfer Restrictions

Title II generally prohibits the importation of "gangster-type" weapons. See 26 U.S.C. §5844. These types of weapons may be brought into the United States only if one of the following conditions is met: that the weapons will be used by a federal or state agency, or that the weapons will be used for scientific or research purposes, or will be used for testing by a licensed manufacturer, or will be used as a sample by a registered importer or dealer. See 26 U.S.C. §5844. Title II makes it unlawful for any person to receive or possess a firearm which has been imported in violation of 26 U.S.C. §5844. See 26 U.S.C. §5861(k).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Title II imposes a tax on the transfer of a firearm. See 26 U.S.C. §5811(a). This levy is imposed upon transfers or dispositions of every nature, and is payable by the transferor. See 26 U.S.C. §5811(b). The term "transfer" is defined to include "selling, assigning, pledging, leasing, loaning, giving away, or otherwise disposing of." See 26 U.S.C. §5845(j). Title II makes it incumbent upon the transferor to file an application, receive the Secretary of the Treasury's approval and pay the applicable tax prior to executing the transfer. See 26 U.S.C. §5812. An application will be denied if the transfer, receipt or possession of the firearm would constitute a violation of any law. See 26 U.S.C. §5812. 26 U.S.C. §§5861(b) and (e) makes it unlawful for any person to transfer a firearm in violation of Title II, or to receive or possess a firearm so transferred. It should be noted that Title I (18 U.S.C. §922) also is applicable to many transfers of Title II weapons.

9-63.523 Manufacture

Title II imposes a tax upon the "making" of a firearm, and requires the Secretary of the Treasury's ratification of an application and the payment of the tax as a condition precedent to the lawful production of a firearm. See 26 U.S.C. §§5821 and 5822. Persons "making" firearms for the use of the federal government, and manufacturers who have paid the special occupational tax are exempt from the payment of this tax. See 26 U.S.C. §5852(b). Production of a firearm in violation of the making provisions, or receipt or possession of an unlawfully made firearm is unlawful. See 26 U.S.C. §§5861(c) and (f). 26 U.S.C. §5861 requires that each firearm manufactured, made or imported be marked for identification in a manner prescribed by regulation; this section also proscribes the obliteration or alteration of the identification marking on a firearm, or the receipt or possession of a firearm which has been so altered or which has no serial number at all.

9-63.524 Registration

Title II establishes a central registry for "gangster-type" weapons. The title restructures the registration procedures in light of the Supreme Court's decision in Haynes v. United States, 390 U.S. 85 (1968), a decision striking down as violative of the Fifth Amendment's self-incrimination clause the registration procedure of Title II's predecessor. Cf. United States v. Freed, 401 U.S. 601 (1971) (registration procedures of Title II do not violate Fifth Amendment's self-incrimination clause). The registry is maintained by the Department of the Treasury and includes information about each registered firearm and the identity of its owner.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Title II imposes upon every manufacturer, importer or maker of firearms a legal obligation to register each and every weapon produced or imported. See 26 U.S.C. §5841. 26 U.S.C. §5841 also provides that each firearm transferred must be registered by the transferor, and each firearm transferred must be registered to the transferee by the transferor; in addition this section provides that when a manufacturer produces a firearm and notifies the Secretary of the Treasury of the firearm's production, such notice constitutes registration. Title II also makes it unlawful for any person to receive or possess a firearm which is not registered to him/her, or to transport, deliver or receive an unregistered firearm in commerce. See 26 U.S.C. §5861.

Unlike its predecessor, Title II mandates the registration of every weapon within its coverage, despite the owner's compliance with Title II's "making," transfer or importation provisions. Thus, Title II's registration requirements--unlike the registration requirements of its predecessor which were struck down in Haynes v. United States, supra--are not directed at persons inherently suspected of violating the statute. By specifically providing that registration information may not be directly or indirectly used against a registrant in a criminal proceeding for an offense occurring prior to, or concurrent with, his/her registration (see 26 U.S.C. §5848), Title II surmounts the constitutional disabilities of its predecessor. See United States v. Freed, supra. Because Title II was specifically drafted to protect a registrant from subjecting himself/herself to criminal prosecution by his/her act of registration, it follows that registration information cannot be used in a federal or state prosecution for illegal acquisition of a registered firearm, in a federal or state prosecution for a past crime involving the use of a registered firearm, or in a federal or state prosecution for previous, or concurrent, illegal possession of a registered firearm. See 26 U.S.C. §5848. It should be noted that 26 U.S.C. §5848 does not provide immunity from prosecution for Title II violations if independent evidence of the offense is discovered. Furthermore, this provision does not preclude the use of any such information or evidence in prosecution for furnishing false information.

9-63.525 Penalties

The maximum penalty for a violation of Title II is ten years imprisonment, a $10,000 fine or both. See 26 U.S.C. §5871. In addition, 26 U.S.C. §5871 mandates the seizure and forfeiture of all firearms involved in violations of Title II. See USAM 9-63.731, infra, for a discussion of forfeiture policy.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-63.530 Title VII (18 U.S.C. App §§1201-1203)

Despite the fact that Title VII was a last minute amendment to the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968, an amendment which was hastily passed with little discussion, no legislative hearings and no committee reports (see Bass v. United States, 404 U.S. 336 (1971)), the fact remains that its coverage is sweeping.

9-63.531 Persons Covered

Title VII (18 U.S.C. §1202(a)) makes it unlawful for any person in any of the following five categories to receive, possess or transport, in interstate or foreign commerce, any firearm or destructive device: first, persons who have been convicted of a felony in any federal court, or court of any state or political subdivision thereof; second, persons who have been discharged under dishonorable conditions, that is, pursuant to a general court martial; third, persons who have been adjudicated mentally incompetent by a federal court or court of any state or political subdivision thereof; fourth, persons who, having been citizens of the United States, have renounced that citizenship; and fifth, persons who, being aliens, are illegally in the United States.

Title VII exempts from its coverage two categories of persons: first, prisoners who, by reason of duties connected with law enforcement policy, have been expressly entrusted with a firearm by competent authority of the prison; second, persons who have been pardoned by the President of the United States, or by the chief executive of a state, and, who have been expressly authorized by either the President, or the chief executive officer, to receive, possess or transport a firearm in interstate or foreign commerce. See 18 U.S.C. §1203.

It should be noted that the definition of firearm in Title VII is essentially the same as the definition of firearm in Title I. The definition of firearm in Title VII is not limited to "gangster-type" weapons covered by Title II, for the definition includes handguns, shotguns and rifles.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-63.532 Offenses

A violation of Title VII occurs whenever a person belonging to one of the five proscribed categories knowingly receives or possesses a firearm, or knowingly transports a firearm in interstate or foreign commerce. No other intent is necessary. See United States v. Locke, 542 F.2d 800 (9th Cir. 1976); United States v. Goodie, 524 F.2d 515 (5th Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 425 U.S. 905 (1976); United States v. Powell, 513 F.2d 1249 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 853 (1975).

It should be noted that the transportation of a firearm in commerce by a person in one of the five proscribed categories not only constitutes a violation of Title VII but also of Title I. Cf. 18 U.S.C. §922(g). To the extent that both Title I and Title VII cover a given factual situation, it is the policy of the Criminal Division to proceed under Title I. See USAM 9-63.610, infra.

9-63.533 Pen Guns

Pen guns and similar small caliber weapons are firearms within the purview of Titles I, II and VII. As long as these small caliber weapons are readily convertible into weapons which expel projectiles by means of explosives they are within the coverage of the firearms statutes. See 18 U.S.C. §921(a)(3)(A); 26 U.S.C. §5845(e); 18 U.S.C. App. §1202(c)(3). When pen guns or similar weapons are transported by the United States Postal Service, consideration should be given to proceeding pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §1715 since such a weapon would constitute a nonmailable firearm.

9-63.600 FIREARMS ISSUES

9-63.610 Prosecutive Policy

The federal firearms statutes are not substitutes for state criminal statutes. In enacting Titles I, II and VII, Congress intended that they supplement state firearms statutes, not supplant them.

Title VII should not be utilized when Title I or Title II are also applicable. Title VII should not be utilized in this situation because of the significant amount of case law dealing with Titles I and II and their statutory predecessors, and because of the most stringent penalties imposed by Titles I and II.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-63.620 Investigative Jurisdiction

The Department of the Treasury's Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms has primary investigative jurisdiction over possible violations of the federal firearms statutes. The Federal Bureau of Investigation, United States Postal Service and the Immigration and Naturalization Service may exercise investigative jurisdiction over violations of the federal firearms statutes when such violations are ancillary to investigations within their primary jurisdiction.

9-63.630 Criminal Division Assistance

The General Litigation and Legal Advice Section is entrusted with supervision of the federal firearms statutes. Attorneys familiar with these statutes may be reached by calling FTS 724-6971 or 724-7526.

9-63.640 Proving the Minimal Nexus Requirement of Title VII

In Scarborough v. United States, 431 U.S. 563 (1977), the question before the Court was whether proof that a possessed firearm had previously travelled in interstate commerce was sufficient to satisfy the statutorily required nexus (see United States v. Bass, 404 U.S. 336 (1971)) between possession of a firearm by a convicted felon and interstate commerce. In answering this question in the affirmative the Supreme Court stated that there was no indication whatever that Congress intended to require any more than a minimal nexus between a person's possession of a firearm and the firearm's movement, at some time, in interstate commerce. The Court noted the lack of basis for contending that a weapon acquired after a conviction affected commerce differently than one acquired before conviction and then retained.

Proof that a firearm has moved in interstate commerce can be accomplished by a variety of means. One way to do this is through the use of a dealer's records and testimony. When direct testimony as to the firearm's interstate movement is not available, the easiest and most convenient mode of proof is the use of a dealer's records and testimony to show that the firearm in question was purchased by the dealer out-of-state. If the dealer did not purchase the firearm out-of-state, the investigative agency must trace the history of the firearm until its interstate movement can be established.

Another way of demonstrating the movement of a firearm in interstate commerce is through the manufacturer's records. Often the name of the manufacturer, whose name is imprinted on the firearm, will be the only way to establish that the firearm, at some time, moved in interstate commerce. The manufacturer's records are admissible into evidence under the Federal Records Act (28 U.S.C. §1732). While the Federal Records Act obviates the hearsay problems of a business entry, it is still necessary to call as a witness an employee of the manufacturer to lay a foundation for the admission of the business record.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Yet another way of proving the movement of a firearm in interstate commerce is through the use of expert testimony in connection with the markings on the firearm. The federal firearms statutes require that a serial number, the name of the manufacturer or the manufacturer's symbol and the place of manufacture be placed on all firearms. Firearms experts from the regional offices of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms may be called upon to identify a particular firearm, to determine the place where the firearm was manufactured and to determine the authenticity of the manufacturer's markings. In those instances in which a firearm is devoid of markings, a firearms expert from the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms may be able to identify the firearm by its characteristics and determine precisely its place of manufacture. The U.S. Attorney should consult with regional officials of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms to establish procedures as to the availability and use of expert witnesses.

Finally, it should be noted that if investigative reports clearly indicate that the movement of the firearm in interstate commerce can be proven by one of the means previously discussed, defense counsel may be willing to enter into a stipulation of expected testimony thus avoiding the necessity of calling out-of-state witnesses. This possibility should always be explored by government attorneys, especially where the calling of out-of-state manufacturers or dealers is contemplated.

9-63.641 A Felon May Not Possess a Firearm Even Though the Predicate Felony May Be Subject to Collateral Attack on Constitutional Grounds

In Lewis v. United States, 445 U.S. 55 (1980), the Supreme Court held that Title VII (18 U.S.C. §1202(a)(1)) prohibits a felon from possessing a firearm despite the fact that the predicate felony may be subject to collateral attack on constitutional grounds. Examining the phraseology of 18 U.S.C. §1202(a)(1), the Court noted the provision's sweeping language and concluded that a felony conviction imposes a firearm disability until the conviction is vacated or the felon is relieved of his/her disability by some affirmative action provided for in the federal firearms statutes. Examining the legislative history of 18 U.S.C. §1202(a)(1), the Court found nothing to suggest that Congress was willing to allow a defendant to question the validity of his/her prior conviction as a defense to a charge under 18 U.S.C. §1202(a)(1). Indeed, said the Court, what little relevant legislative history there is reflects an intent to impose a firearm disability on a felon based on nothing more than the simple fact of conviction. Finally, the Court noted that a convicted felon is not without relief (see 18 U.S.C. §1203(3)), and that such a remedy suggests that Congress intended that the felon clear his/her status before being able to obtain a firearm. Also, the Court noted that with regard to the issue before it, there is little difference between Title I and Title VII. Thus, the Lewis rationale is applicable not only to prosecutions under Title VII, but also to prosecutions under Title I.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-63.642 Receipt of a Firearm by a Convicted Felon Must Be in the District of Prosecution for Proper Venue

Prosecution of a substantive firearm count must be in the district where the alleged receipt of the firearm took place. See Fed. R. Crim. P. 18; United States v. Black Cloud, 590 F.2d 270 (8th Cir. 1979) (Title I prosecution); United States v. Haley, 500 F.2d 302 (8th Cir. 1974) (Title VII prosecution).

9-63.643 Prosecutorial Policy Regarding Title VII

A Title VII prosecution should not be undertaken if a person's felony conviction occurred in the distant past and did not involve violence, or if the person's background contains no extensive course of criminal conduct. Most of these types of cases may be adequately handled by local prosecution or by administrative forfeiture of the firearm.

9-63.650 Charging Possessory Offenses Under Title II

As noted previously (see USAM 9-63.524, supra) the Supreme Court in United States v. Freed, 401 U.S. 601 (1971), held that Title II cured the constitutional defects of its predecessor as applied to possessors of unregistered "gangster-type" weapons. See 26 U.S.C. §5861(d). The rationale in Freed extends to Title II's transfer and making provisions. See 26 U.S.C. §§5861(e) and (f). Also, the Court in Freed noted that the government need only allege and prove that the possessor of the weapon was aware of its nature and knowingly possessed it, and that the government did not need to allege or prove that the possessor was aware of the registration requirement.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

In light of the Freed decision it is recommended that Title II possessory offenses be charged under 26 U.S.C. §5861(d) rather than 26 U.S.C. §§5861(b) or (c), since 26 U.S.C. §5861(d) specifically makes it "unlawful for any person . . . to receive or possess a firearm which is not registered to him in the National Registration and Transfer Record." [emphasis added]. See Gott v. United States, 432 F.2d 45 (9th Cir. 1970) (conviction for possessing a firearm which had been unlawfully made reversed because government failed to prove that the firearm was made subsequent to the passage of Title II).

9-63.660 Dual Prosecution Policy

As noted elsewhere in this Manual (see USAM 9-2.142) the Department's dual prosecution policy precludes the initiation or continuation of a federal prosecution following a state prosecution based upon substantially the same act or acts unless there is a compelling federal interest supporting the dual prosecution. Because many acts that violate the federal firearms statutes also violate state firearms statutes, care should be taken that no federal firearms prosecution be undertaken subsequent to a state prosecution for the same act or acts without written authorization from the Assistant Attorney General of the Criminal Division. All requests for dual prosecution authorization for firearms offenses should be sent to the Criminal Division's General Litigation and Legal Advice Section.

9-63.670 Affidavits for Search Warrants

The Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, in conjunction with the Criminal Division, has produced a suggested form for affidavits supporting applications for search warrants in firearms cases. These forms are available from the regional offices of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms.

9-63.680 Dickerson v. New Banner Institute, Inc., and State Expungement Statutes

In Dickerson v. New Banner Institute, Inc., ___ U.S. ___ (1983), the Supreme Court held that a corporate executive's plea of guilty to a state charge of carrying a concealed handgun was a conviction within the meaning of Title I (18 U.S.C. §§922 (g)(1) and (h)(1)), despite the state court's "deferred" entry of a formal judgment and its subsequent placement of the corporate executive on probation. More importantly, for purposes of this section of the Manual, was the Court's holding that the firearms disabilities imposed by 18 U.S.C. §§922(g)(1) and (h)(1) were applicable to the corporate executive and were not removed by the expunction of the record of his/her guilty plea to the concealed weapon charge. So far as the language of Title I is concerned, said the Court, expunction under state law does not alter the historical fact of the conviction, for the expunction in no way signifies that the defendant was innocent of the crime to which he/she pleaded guilty. Examining the language of Titles I and VII the Court pointed out that various provisions in these titles supported its holding that expunction of a state conviction was not intended by Congress to automatically remove a federal firearms disability. Examining the legislative history of Titles I and VII the Court noted there was nothing in the legislative histories to suggest, even remotely, that a state expunction was intended to automatically remove a federal firearms disability. In concluding, the Court observed that a rule that would give effect to expunctions under varying state statutes would seriously hamper effective enforcement of the federal firearms statutes. Such a rule would hamper enforcement, said the Court, because state expunction statutes differ in almost every particular, and provide nothing less than a "national patchwork." To allow this "patchwork" to override the clear language of the federal firearms statutes would be intolerable. Thus, for a convicted felon to obtain relief from a federal firearms disability, the felon must rely on 18 U.S.C. §925(c) (Title I) or 18 U.S.C. §1203 (Title VII) where Congress has set forth specific procedures for obtaining relief.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-63.681 Effect of Pre-1968 Pardons on Convicted Felon Status

In United States v. Matassini, 565 F.2d 1297 (5th Cir. 1978), the issue before the Court of Appeals was whether a person who had been convicted of a state felony in 1950, but who had been given a "full and complete pardon . . . restoring him to full and complete civil rights" by the governor in 1955, had to comply with the provisions in either 18 U.S.C. §925(c) (Title I) or 18 U.S.C. §1203 (Title VII), provisions dealing with the obtaining of relief from federal firearms disabilities. The Court of Appeals held that a pre-1968 "full pardon" exempted the pardonee from the firearms disabilities contained in Titles I and VII. See also, Decker v. Gibson Products Company of Albany, 679 F.2d 212 (11th Cir. 1982) (dictum asserting the continuing validity of the Matassini holding). It should be noted that the Matassini holding is contrary to the holdings in United States v. Sutton, 521 F.2d 1385 (7th Cir. 1975), and Thrall v. Wolfe, 503 F.2d 313 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 420 U.S. 922 (1974).

U.S. Attorneys in all circuits, other than the Fifth and Eleventh, should follow the holdings in Sutton and Thrall. All U.S. Attorneys should be mindful that Matassini is applicable only to pre-1968 pardons, and has no applicability whatever to pardons received after 1968.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-63.682 Effect of the Federal Youth Corrections Act on Convicted Felon Status

The Federal Youth Corrections Act (see 18 U.S.C. §5021) provides that the conviction of a youth offender be automatically set aside when the Parole Commission unconditionally discharges the youth offender prior to the expiration of his/her maximum sentence. The Act also provides that the conviction of a youth offender be set aside when a court, which has placed a youth offender on probation, unconditionally discharges him/her from probation prior to the expiration of the period of probation. Offenders who have received the benefits of the Federal Youth Corrections Act should not be prosecuted under the federal firearms statutes on the basis of a felony conviction to which the Act is applicable.

9-63.690 Proof of Non-Registration of Firearms in Title II Prosecutions

Obviously, time and money are wasted if officials from the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms are unnecessarily called to testify as to the unregistered status of a Title II firearm. The preferable practice in Title II cases is to introduce a certificate from the custodian of the National Firearms Registration and Transfer Record stating that he/she has made a diligent search of the records and has found no record of the firearm in question being registered to the defendant in question. See Fed. R. Crim. P. 27; Fed. R. Civ. P. 44; Robbins v. United States, 476 F.2d 26 (10th Cir. 1973). Non-registration certificates may be obtained from the regional offices of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms.

A certificate from the National Firearms and Transfer Record also can be used to establish that no approved application for transfer or making of the firearm is on file as required by Title II (26 U.S.C. §§5812(a)(6) and 5822(e)). However, it should be noted that only approved applications to make and transfer firearms are recorded in the National Firearms and Transfer Record. Thus, the custodian of the National Firearms and Transfer Record is incompetent to testify as to whether an application has been filed or a tax paid. A non-registration certificate from the National Firearms and Transfer Record is of no use whatever in determining whether an application has been filed or a tax paid. See United States v. Stout, 667 F.2d 1347 (11th Cir. 1982). While some National Firearms and Transfer Record non-registration certificates currently in use may contain representations that no record was found with respect to whether an application was filed or a tax paid, these certificates are not to be relied upon. Allegations that no application has been filed, or that no tax has been paid, should not be included in indictments unless other evidence is available to support them.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-63.700 FIREARMS: INSPECTION OF LICENSEES' RECORDS, FIREARMS AND AMMUNITION

9-63.710 Warrantless Inspections

In light of the Supreme Court's decision in Colonnade Catering Corp. v. United States, 397 U.S. 72 (1970) (federal liquor statutes do not authorize agents to forcibly enter occupational taxpayer's business premises without a warrant to conduct statutory inspection), the question arises as to the appropriate course of action to be taken by special investigators of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms when a licensee refuses to permit them to conduct a statutorily authorized inspection and examination of the licensee's records, firearms and ammunition. Also, the question arises as to the proper course of action where it is anticipated that the licensee will refuse such permission.

Title I (18 U.S.C. §923(g)) requires all licensees to maintain such records as prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury in connection with their engaging in, manufacturing, importing or collecting firearms. 18 U.S.C. 923(g) also provides:

The Secretary may enter during business hours the premises (including places of storage) of any firearms or ammunition importer, manufacturer, dealer or collector for the purpose of inspecting or examining (1) any records or documents required to be kept by such importer, manufacturer, dealer or collector under the provisions of this chapter or regulations issued under this chapter, and (2) any firearms or ammunition kept or stored by such importer, manufacturer, dealer, or collector at such premises.

If a licensee refuses to permit agents from the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms to inspect his/her records or to examine or to examine his/her stock of firearms and ammunition, there are two statutorily sanctioned courses of action. First, the licensee's license is subject to revocation pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §§923(e) and (f); second, the licensee is subject to prosecution pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §924(a) for violating §923(g).

In Colonnade Catering Corp. v. United States, supra, the Supreme Court dealt with a similar inspection scheme authorized by the federal liquor statutes. The issue before the Court was whether these statutes authorized federal agents to forcibly enter an occupational taxpayer's business premises without a warrant to conduct a statutory inspection of the taxpayer's records and stock of liquor. Holding that the statutory provision did not authorize forcible entry the Court stated:

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

[T]his Nation's traditions are strongly opposed to using force without definite authority to break down doors . . . . Under the existing statutes, Congress selected a standard that does not include forcible entries without a warrant. It resolved the issue not by authorizing forcible, warrantless entries, but by making it an offense for a licensee to refuse admission to the inspector. Id. at 77.

Since the refusal of a licensee to comply with a request for an inspection pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §923(g) subjects the licensee to possible license revocation, criminal prosecution or both, the Court's rationale in Colonnade would seem to preclude forcible warrantless entries, pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §923(g), to inspect a licensee's records and stock of firearms.

However, the Court's rationale in Colonnade does not preclude all warrantless inspections of a licensee's records and stock of firearms. In United States v. Biswell, 406 U.S. 311 (1972), the Court upheld the warrantless search of a locked storeroom during business hours as part of an inspection procedure authorized by 18 U.S.C. §923(g). The Court did so first, because the federal agents used no unauthorized force, and second, because the agents merely asserted their statutory right, and the licensee, submitting to lawful authority, permitted the inspection rather than face criminal prosecution.

9-63.720 Inspection Warrants

In Camara v. Municipal Court, 387 U.S. 523 (1967), the Court recognized that a statute which creates inspection powers provides the probable cause for the issuance of an inspection warrant, so long as reasonable legislative and administrative standards for conducting such an inspection are satisfied. See Donovan, Secretary of Labor v. Dewey, 452 U.S. 594 (1981); See v. City of Seattle, 387 U.S. 541 (1967). It is the Department's position that 18 U.S.C. §923(g), and the regulations issued pursuant to it, provide the necessary legislative and administrative standards for conducting inspections and examinations, and thus, that 18 U.S.C. §923(g), and its accompanying regulations, establish the requisite probable cause for the issuance of an inspection and examination warrant under the Gun Control Act of 1968.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

In the vast majority of instances, licensees will voluntarily comply with the inspection and examination requests of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms. In these instances of voluntary compliance no warrant is necessary. See United States v. Biswell, supra; United States v. Golden, 413 F.2d 1010 (4th Cir. 1969). In those situations in which a licensee refuses to comply with a statutable request, it generally will be preferable to institute administrative proceedings to revoke the licensee's license rather than to seek an inspection and examination warrant, or to institute criminal proceedings based on the licensee's refusal to permit inspection or examination.

In those situations in which it is desirable to conduct a statutable inspection and examination, and the investigators have reason to believe they will be refused permission to conduct the inspection and examination --even though the licensee has not actually refused permission investigators should contact the appropriate U.S. Attorney for assistance in obtaining an inspection and examination warrant. This approach also is applicable when the investigators are unexpectedly refused permission to conduct a statutable inspection and examination. Also, when it is anticipated that the impending inspection will reveal significant criminal violations by the licensee, consideration should be given to the prior obtaining of a warrant as a precaution against the possible refusal of the licensee to permit the inspection.

9-63.730 Prosecution of Licensed Dealers and Forfeiture of Firearms

Licensed firearms dealers are required by law to maintain a license for each place of business, and to keep and maintain records of importation, production, shipment, receipt, sale or other disposition of firearms and ammunition. Also, dealers are prohibited from knowingly selling firearms to convicted felons and other prohibited classes of persons, and to residents of other states with the exception of rifles and shotguns sold to persons residing in contiguous states and whose states have enacted appropriate legislation. A dealer who violates these prohibitions subjects himself/herself to criminal prosecution, license revocation and forfeiture of all firearms involved in any violation.

9-63.731 Forfeiture Policy

In matters referred to the U.S. Attorney by the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms for forfeiture action, the U.S. Attorney should promptly move to forfeit any firearms involved in any violation. In cases involving serious violations the government, in effect, can shut down the violator's business by forfeiting all or most of the firearms in the dealer's stock. In those cases in which a dealer has made numerous false entries or omissions in his/her records, the government, with complete justification, can forfeit the entire stock pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §924(d). The Department of Justice has requested that all agents of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms consult with their regional offices and the appropriate U.S. Attorney before seizing the entire stock of a dealer. Where the dealer has made only a few false entries or omissions, only those firearms falsely recorded or not recorded should be seized.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-63.732 Revocation of License

With respect to the revocation or non-renewal of dealers' licenses, authority is vested solely in the Secretary of the Treasury by 18 U.S.C. §§923(d) and (e). Coordination between the U.S. Attorney and the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms in the early stages of the matter will be helpful in exploring the possibility of using administrative action as an alternative to criminal prosecution. The Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms is authorized to forfeit firearms and revoke licenses for violations of the statute and its attendant regulations, even though the violator is not criminally prosecuted. Dealers whose licenses have been revoked may apply for new ones. Pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §925(b) persons indicted for violations of the statute have a statutable right to continue in business until the conviction becomes final. When a conviction becomes final the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to revoke the dealer's license, and to permanently bar the former licensee from engaging in the firearms business.

Cooperation between U.S. Attorneys and the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms is essential. U.S. Attorneys should not enter into plea agreements with firearms dealers without first obtaining the concurrence of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms. It should not be forgotten that the sole authority to revoke licenses and to forfeit firearms in appropriate cases is with the Secretary of the Treasury and not with the Attorney General. The Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms should be consulted in those cases in which criminal prosecution is contemplated. Consultation is necessary in these circumstances to protect the dealer's statutable right to remain in business until his/her conviction becomes final. Without such consultation the dealer's right might be compromised by administrative action on the part of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms.

In summary, U.S. Attorneys should consult the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms in all cases involving firearms dealers so that the criminal and administrative aspects of the case may be sorted out. Given the multi-agency interest in firearms violations, deferral of prosecutions of firearms dealers should not be agreed to without the concurrence of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-63.800 FIREARMS: FORMS FOR INDICTMENT

9-63.801 Firearms Indictments; Deletion of the Term "Willfully"

The offenses proscribed by the federal firearms statutes are regulatory offenses requiring proof of only general intent, that is, knowledge of the facts constituting the offense. See United States v. Freed, 401 U.S. 601 (1971). The model firearms indictments issued by the Criminal Division in 1969 charged firearms violations in terms of "willfully and knowingly." Because some district courts interpret the term "willfully" as requiring proof of specific intent, indictments for firearms violations should charge only that the defendant "knowingly" committed the alleged offense.

9-63.900 THE FEDERAL EXPLOSIVES STATUTE (18 U.S.C. §§841 et seq.)

9-63.910 Description

The federal explosives statute is both regulatory and criminal. The regulatory provisions establish federal controls over the interstate or foreign commerce in explosives. These provisions are designed to assist the states to more effectively regulate the manufacture, sale, transfer and storage of explosives within their borders. The statute establishes a system of federal licenses for importers, manufacturers and dealers in explosives, and a system of federal permits for users who wish to buy or transport explosives in interstate or foreign commerce. It prohibits the distribution of explosives by licensees to persons under twenty-one years of age, unlawful users of drugs, mental defectives, fugitives from justice, and persons who are under indictment or who have been convicted of felonies. The statute also requires the keeping of certain records in connection with transactions in explosives, and creates sanctions for false statements or the otherwise improper keeping of these records. Licensing authority is vested in the Secretary of the Treasury, and the responsibility for the enforcement of the regulatory provisions is in the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms (BATF).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The federal explosives statute strengthened federal law with its prohibitions on the illegal use, transportation or possession of explosives. The statute's coverage includes malicious damage or destruction by explosives to federal premises or other federal property, as well as to the premises and property of institutions or organizations receiving federal financial assistance. The statute proscribes the malicious damage or destruction by explosives of real or personal property used in interstate or foreign commerce, or in any activity affecting such commerce. In addition, it proscribes the possession of explosives in a federally owned or occupied building, or the interstate transportation of stolen explosive materials. Finally, the statute proscribes the making of bomb threats and the malicious conveying of false information concerning an attempted or alleged attempted bombing.

The federal explosives statute was amended in October 1982. Subsections (e), (f), (h), (l) and (i) of 18 U.S.C. §844 were amended to cover crimes by means of "fire" as well as by means of an explosive. Primarily, the statute was amended to facilitate the continued use of 18 U.S.C. §844 in arson fires started by gasoline that result in the destruction of a building used in or affecting interstate commerce.

9-63.920 Investigative Guidelines

Three investigative agencies have potential primary jurisdiction to investigate violations under the federal explosives law: the Federal Bureau of Investigation; the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms; and the Postal Inspection Service. The Postal Inspection Service has primary jurisdiction to investigate violations of 18 U.S.C. §844 which are directed at United States Postal Service property or functions. The Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms has primary jurisdiction to investigate regulatory violations of the explosives statute (18 U.S.C. §842); offenses against property used in commerce or affecting commerce (18 U.S.C. §844(i)); violations directed at Treasury buildings or functions (18 U.S.C. §844 generally); and, unless the explosives are mailed, interstate transportation of explosives with unlawful intent (18 U.S.C. §844(d)). The Federal Bureau of Investigation has primary jurisdiction to investigate all other violations of 18 U.S.C. §844, except those involving the use of explosives or the carrying of explosives in commission of a felony (18 U.S.C. §844(h)), which will be investigated by the agency having jurisdiction over the underlying felony. Unless otherwise directed by the Department of Justice, the Federal Bureau of Investigation is responsible for exercising primary jurisdiction over all 18 U.S.C. §844 violations perpetrated by terrorist or revolutionary groups or individuals carrying out terrorist or revolutionary activities. In addition, the Federal Bureau of Investigation has primary jurisdiction over all 18 U.S.C. §844 violations affecting colleges and universities.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-63.930 Special Considerations

The provisions of 18 U.S.C. §844(e) should not be used unless a substantial federal interest is involved. For example, 18 U.S.C. §844(e) should not be used in a situation involving a bomb threat by a student against the school he/she is attending, or by an employee of an organization other than the federal government. These types of cases should be deferred to state or local authorities whenever possible. The Federal Bureau of Investigation has been instructed to decline investigation of 18 U.S.C. §844(e) violations unless the identity of the offender is readily ascertainable or known, or a pattern or plan of these offenses appears to exist.

Note should be taken of 18 U.S.C. §848 which the Criminal Division views as expressing Congressional intent that the federal government, absent a specific federal interest, not become involved in bombing matters that can be adequately investigated and prosecuted by local authorities. During the Congressional hearings which led to passage of the federal explosives statute, Administration witnesses testified that federal jurisdiction would be exercised only upon a determination by the Attorney General or his/her designee that a federal prosecution is in the public interest. The members of the Congressional committees were explicitly assured that the Department of Justice would not displace the efforts of state and local officials in bombing matters.

No expansion of the efforts of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms to investigate arson fires is anticipated as a result of the October 1982 amendment to the federal firearms statute. State and local authorities still have primary responsibility for the investigation and prosecution of most arson fires.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-63.1000 DESTRUCTION OF ENERGY FACILITIES

9-63.1001 Overview

Section 1365 of Title 18, United States Code, defines and punishes intentionally damaging the property of a non-nuclear energy facility. The penalty established is commensurate with the amount of damage caused. For damage exceeding $100,000 or which significantly interrupts or impairs the facility's functions, subsection (a) provides for a penalty of up to a $50,000 fine and/or up to ten years imprisonment. For damage exceeding $5,000, subsection (b) provides for a penalty of up to a $25,000 fine and/or up to five years imprisonment.

Although damage to utility facilities has historically been a matter of state and local concern, recent acts of violence and sabotage have strained state and local law enforcement capabilities. The intent of Congress is to provide federal resources to assist in the investigation and prosecution of particularly serious crimes against energy facilities. See S. Rep. No. 98-225, 98th Cong., 1st Sess. 325(1983). Since federal action is intended, not as a substitute for state and local law enforcement, but rather as a supplement to state and local law efforts when those efforts are hampered due to the extent of the damage to the facility, federal involvement should be on a selective, case-by-case basis with federal jurisdiction being exercised sparingly.

9-63.1002 Investigative Jurisdiction

The agency having investigatory responsibility for this statute is the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

9-63.1003 Supervisory Jurisdiction

Supervisory jurisdiction is exercised by the General Litigation and Legal Advice Section, 724-6971.

9-63.1010 Elements

9-63.1011 Intent

Both subsection (a) and (b) require that the destructive act be "knowing" and "willful." It is the Department's view that the requirements of knowledge and willfulness apply only to the destructive act, and that the actor need not also know that the property being damaged belongs to an energy facility.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Although the words "knowingly and willfully" precede the entire phrase "damages the property of an energy facility in an amount...", the fact that the property belongs to an energy facility is simply the factor that confers federal jurisdiction. The destruction of any other property would not be a federal crime. It is the destruction of energy facility property that Congress intended to proscribe. See S. Rep. No. 98-225, at 325. Therefore, since "the existence of the fact that confers federal jurisdiction need not be one in the mind of the actor at the time he perpetrates the act made criminal by the federal statute," United States v. Feola, 420 U.S. 671, 67-77, n.9 (1975), the actor need not be aware that the property belongs to an energy facility in order to come within the statute.

9-63.1012 Act

To come within the statute, the actor must commit an act which causes damage.

9-63.1013 Jurisdiction

A. Property of an Energy Facility--The fact that the damaged property belongs to an energy facility confers federal jurisdiction. In subsection (c), the term "energy facility" is defined as a facility involved in the "production, storage, transmission or distribution of electricity, fuel, or another form or source of energy," as well as a research, development, or demonstration facility relating to fuel and energy. Plants not yet in operation are also covered. Facilities subject to the jurisdiction of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission have been excepted, however, since damaging such facilities is already proscribed by 42 U.S.C. §2284.

B. Amount--Subsection (a) requires that the damage be significant, either of a value exceeding $100,000 or that "causes a significant interruption or impairment of a function of an energy facility." Subsection (b) requires that the damage be of a value exceeding $5,000.

The $5,000 amount is jurisdictional as is the alternative "significant interruption or impairment." Congress did not intend that federal authorities become involved in investigating or prosecuting cases

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

unless the amount of damage exceeds the $5,000 base line amount, or causes a major disruption of service. See S. Rep. No. 98-225, at 326.

C. Significant Interruption or Impairment--No definition is provided, either in the statute or its legislative history, for the term "significant interruption or impairment of a function of an energy facility." Congress obviously intended, however, as evidenced by the severity of the penalty, that the term only include major disruptions of service to consumers in an extended area for several hours. S. Rep. No. 98-225, at 326.

9-63.1100 TAMPERING WITH CONSUMER PRODUCTS--18 U.S.C. §1365

9-63.1110 Investigative Jurisdiction

The Federal Bureau of Investigation has investigative responsibility for violations of 18 U.S.C. §1365. The Food and Drug Administration (FDA) and the Department of Agriculture also have investigative responsibilities for various aspects of this offense. The Department of Agriculture's responsibility is in the area of meat, poultry, and eggs. The FDA's responsibility covers other food items, drugs, devices, and cosmetics. Investigative understandings between the FBI, FDA, and Agriculture have been developed. The FBI's primary focus will be on those matters involving life endangering tamperings, threatened tamperings, tamperings accompanied by extortion demands, and paintings intended to cause, and false claims resulting in, serious injury to a product's reputation.

9-63.1120 Supervising Section

General Litigation and Legal Advice Section

9-63.1130 Prosecutive Policy--18 U.S.C. §1365

As in the past, state and local authorities will continue to play a large and significant role in the investigation and prosecution of alleged tampering. The Federal Anti-Tampering Act does not preempt prosecution by state and local authorities for conduct which would be in violation of 18 U.S.C. §1365. Hence, referral to such authorities is appropriate when no significant federal interest requires vindication (e.g., in an isolated instance, when there is no serious impact upon commerce, when the wrongdoer has been identified and state or local authorities are prepared to handle the case, etc.).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-63.1140 Discussion of the Offense

9-63.1141 General

The Federal Anti-Tampering Act, Pub. L. No. 98-127, 97 Stat. 831, October 13, 1983, created a new section 1365 of Title 18, United States Code, which makes it an offense to tamper with consumer products or to engage in related conduct. It was enacted in response to the Tylenol poisoning deaths in the Chicago area in the fall of 1982. (It should be noted that part J of chapter X of the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-473, October 12, 1984, also created a section 1365 in Title 18 entitled "Destruction of an energy facility." It is anticipated that the duplication of section numbers will be corrected by appropriate technical amendments to Title 18 which will be sought early in the 99th Congress.)

9-63.1142 Offenses

Subsection (a) of 18 U.S.C. §1365 prohibits tampering or attempted tampering with any consumer product that affects interstate or foreign commerce, or with the labeling of, or the container for, such a product. The tampering must be of such a nature that it creates a risk of death or bodily injury. Furthermore, the tampering must be done with reckless disregard for, and under circumstances manifesting extreme indifference to, such risk. The product "affects" interstate or foreign commerce while it is being manufactured, being distributed, being held for sale, or--if once removed from the retail process--being readied to be put back into the retail process. The statute is not intended to reach malicious tampering with a product once it has been purchased at retail and brought into the home for use. See S. Rep. No. 69 on S. 216, 98th Congress, 1st Sess., at 9, and H.R. Rep. No. 93 on H.R. 2174, 98th Congress, 1st Sess., at 4.

Subsection (b) of 18 U.S.C. §1365 makes it an offense to taint a consumer product which affects interstate or foreign commerce, or to render materially false or misleading the labeling of, or the container for, such a product, with intent to cause serious injury to the business of any person (i.e., cause commercial harm to a business). The term "taints" is not defined in the Act but is meant to be broader than

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

"tamperers." S. Rep. No. 69 defines "to taint" as meaning "to modify with a trace of something offensive or deleterious, or infect, contaminate, or corrupt. Such an 'offensive' or 'contaminating' result would be the addition of an unsightly or nauseating substance, as well as a dangerous substance."

Subsection (c) of 18 U.S.C. §1365 prohibits the knowing communication of false information that a consumer product has been tainted if the product or the results of the communication affect interstate or foreign commerce, and if the falsely alleged tainting, had it in fact occurred, would have created a risk of death or bodily injury to another person. The use of the phrase "results of such communication affect interstate or foreign commerce" is intended to assert federal jurisdiction in situations in which the product itself may no longer "affect" interstate or foreign commerce, but in which the false communication causes actions to be taken which affect interstate or foreign commerce (e.g., recall).

Subsection (d) of 18 U.S.C. §1365 prohibits credible threats to tamper. It does not require a demand for money or other consideration. If money is demanded, there may also be a violation of the Hobbs Act, 18 U.S.C. §1951, or the extortion statutes, 18 U.S.C. §§875-877.

Subsection (e) of 18 U.S.C. §1365 prohibits conspiracies to tamper with consumer products.

9-63.1143 Penalties

Under 18 U.S.C. §1365(a), tampering with a consumer product that results in death is punishable by a fine of $100,000 and imprisonment for any term of years or for life. If serious bodily injury results, the maximum penalties are a fine in the same amount and imprisonment for 20 years. Otherwise, tampering may be punished by a $50,000 fine and a ten year prison term. The maximum penalty for attempted tampering is a $25,000 fine and a ten year prison term.

Subsection (b) of 18 U.S.C. §1365 permits the imposition of a fine of $10,000 and a prison term of three years on a person who taints a consumer product or falsifies the label or container thereof.

Subsections (c) and (d) of 18 U.S.C. §1365 provides $25,000 fines and five year terms of imprisonment for communicating false information that a consumer product has been tainted, and for threatening to taint a consumer product, respectively.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Finally, under subsection (e) of 18 U.S.C. §1365, a conspiracy to commit an offense under subsection (a) is punishable by a fine of $10,000 and imprisonment for ten years.

It should be noted that under the new 18 U.S.C. §3623 (Alternative fines) that a fine up to $250,000 is possible for any federal felony committed on or after January 1, 1985. See Criminal Fine Enforcement Act of 1985, Pub. L. No. 98-596, October 30, 1984.

9-63.1144 Definitions

18 U.S.C. §1365(g) defines "consumer product," "labeling," "serious bodily injury," and "bodily injury." "Consumer product" is defined to include "food," "drug," "device," and "cosmetic" as such terms are respectively defined in section 201 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. §321). The term also includes any other "household product" that is consumed by individuals or used for purposes of personal care or in the performance of services rendered within the household, and that is designed to be consumed or expended in the course of such consumption or use. Thus, it covers such household products as waxes, detergents, air fresheners, toilet paper, etc., but it does not include durable products such as vacuum cleaners, brooms, brushes, or similar items since these products are not intended to be used up, though, of course, they do wear out.

The term "labeling" includes not only the label (see 21 U.S.C. §321(k)) on the immediate container of the product, but any other written material accompanying the product.

9-63.1150 Legislative History

Although 18 U.S.C. §1365 differs from either of the bills addressed by S. Rep. No. 69 on S. 216, 98th Congress, 1st Sess., or H.R. Rep. No. 93 on H.R. 2174, 98th Congress, 1st Sess., which bills were passed by the Senate and the House respectively, on May 9, 1983, the legislative history of these two bills is important to an understanding of the new statute. In addition, it may be helpful to consult the floor remarks concerning the two bills. See 129 Con. Rec. S 6311-S 6315, H 2703-H 2707, and H 2711 (May 9, 1983); H 7694-H 7698 (September 29, 1983); and §§13331-13334 (September 30, 1983).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-64.000 PROTECTION OF GOVERNMENT FUNCTIONS

9-64.100 COUNTERFEITING

9-64.110 Validity of Use of Penny Script (18 U.S.C. §336)

18 U.S.C. §336 does not prohibit the use of privately issued penny script redeemable only in merchandise and only at outlets of the issuing business. According to the Court in United States v. Van Auken, 96 U.S. 366 (1877), only the obligation for the payment of money fell within the predecessor of 18 U.S.C. §336, and the Revisers' Note (18 U.S.C. §336) indicates that Van Auken should control the interpretation of the current statute.

9-64.120 Coins and Currency in the Likeness or Similitude of Genuine Currency

18 U.S.C. §489 prohibits the making of any token, disc, or device in the likeness or similitude of coins of the United States, except under the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury. 18 U.S.C. §475 prohibits the making, distribution, or use of any business card, notice, placard, handbill, or advertisement in the likeness or similitude of an obligation or security of the United States. Neither statute should be confused with counterfeiting statutes. The counterfeiting of coins is proscribed by 18 U.S.C. §485 while the counterfeiting of currency is proscribed by 18 U.S.C. §471. Rather, 18 U.S.C. §489 and §475 relate to reproductions made in the general design of coins or currency but which vary sufficiently in detail that they have no serious potential for use in place of genuine money. Both statutes are misdemeanors punishable solely by fines, as contrasted with the two counterfeiting statutes, 18 U.S.C. §485 and §471, both of which are felonies punishable by imprisonment of up to 15 years.

18 U.S.C. §489 and §475 are, in essence, copyright statutes. However, in the past the Department has sought to limit their application so as to avoid a multitude of prosecutions for picayune violations. Prosecution under 18 U.S.C. §489 has been limited to those instances where the token or device in question has some potential for being mistaken for a genuine coin by the ignorant or unwary of society. In this regard, it has been agreed between the Department and Secret Service that no prosecution should be undertaken under 18 U.S.C. §489 for a token or device which is more than twice the size of a silver dollar or less than half the size of a dime. In gauging whether a token or device which is more than half the size of a dime but less than twice the size of a silver dollar is appropriate for prosecution the additional factors of color and design should be closely scrutinized.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-64.130 Counterfeiting of Foreign Obligations or Securities (18 U.S.C. §478)

18 U.S.C. §478 has been deemed applicable only to obligations of securities of currently existing governments. United States v. Gertz, 249 F.2d 622 (9th Cir. 1957). Further, the statute has only questionable application to demonetized obligations and securities of currently existing governments. Generally, when a demonetized obligation or security is counterfeited the purpose of such act is not to have the counterfeit item circulate as currency but rather to defraud philatelists or numismatists. Where the impact of the fraudulent item is solely on collectors, prosecution can generally be deferred in favor of civil action by defrauded collectors.

9-64.140 Forged Endorsements on Government Obligations and Securities are to be Charged Under 18 U.S.C. §495

18 U.S.C. §471 proscribes the counterfeiting or forgery of any obligation or security of the United States, while 18 U.S.C. §472 and §473 prohibit the uttering and dealing in such counterfeit or forged obligations or securities. Those statutes relate to the counterfeiting or forgery of the instrument itself. A forged endorsement on an otherwise valid government obligation does not render such obligation a forgery within the meaning of 18 U.S.C. §§471-473. United States v. Sebastian, 562 F.2d 211 (2d Cir. 1977); Roberts v. United States, 331 F.2d 502 (9th Cir. 1964). (For a discussion of the legislative history of the counterfeiting statutes, see Prussian v. United States, 282 U.S. 675 (1931)). Accordingly, forged endorsements on government obligations or securities must be charged under 18 U.S.C. §495.

9-64.141 Prosecutive Policy on Forged Treasury Checks (18 U.S.C. §495)

The primary thrust of the Department's enforcement program under 18 U.S.C. §495 is aimed at the organized rings of check forgers and at the professional forger who engages in multiple and repeated violations. Efforts should be made to obtain state or local prosecution of persons who engage in a relatively small number of forgeries and who have no prior history of this type of criminal conduct. To the extent that federal prosecution is pursued under 18 U.S.C. §495, consideration should be given to the use of pre-trial diversion for first offenders who meet the requirements of that program. (See USAM 1-12.000).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-64.142 Elements of the Offense of Forgery (18 U.S.C. §495)

The first three paragraphs of 18 U.S.C. §495 set forth three separate offenses: forgery, uttering a forged instrument, and presentation of a false writing to an officer of the United States in support of a claim against the government. The second and third paragraphs specifically contain "intent to defraud the United States" as an element of those offenses. However, the forgery provision, 18 U.S.C. §495(1), makes no mention of "intent to defraud the United States." Nevertheless, the courts have interpreted the word "forgery" as used in the statute to embody the concept of forgery that existed at common law. See Gilbert v. United States, 370 U.S. 650 (1961); United States v. Hill, 579 F.2d 480 (8th Cir. 1978). Under common law forgery, it was incumbent on the prosecution to establish an intent to defraud. Accordingly, in prosecutions initiated under 18 U.S.C. §495, the government must prove that the defendant possessed the requisite intent to defraud the United States. See United States v. Jones, 648 F.2d 215 (5th Cir. 1981); United States v. Hester, 598 F.2d 247 (D.C. Cir. 1979).

9-64.143 Prosecutive Policy on Interspousal Forgery of Government Checks

It is the general policy of the Department not to prosecute for the interspousal forgery of government checks, for the reason that this type of forgery usually emanates from a domestic dispute and is better resolved through either state prosecution or civil litigation. In addition, in many of these cases the government cannot prove that the violating spouse possessed the requisite intent to defraud the United States, as such intent does not exist where the spouse who endorsed both names either had authority to endorse the other spouse's name or believed he or she had such authority. See USAM 9-64.142, supra.

An exception to the general rule against federal prosecution exists where there is independent evidence of intent to defraud, e.g., a court order prohibiting negotiation of a Treasury check, or where there are aggravating circumstances present.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-64.150 Postal Money Orders (18 U.S.C. §500)

The scope of 18 U.S.C. §500 includes the theft, embezzlement, or wrongful possession and use of blank postal money orders as well as those machines, tools or instruments used for filling in such money orders. As a corollary to the blank money order provisions, 18 U.S.C. §500 specifically covers those machines and other instruments essential to the thief if he/she is to complete the blank money orders for subsequent negotiation.

9-64.211 Supervising Section

General Litigation and Legal Advice Section.

9-64.212 Policy Governing Prosecution

18 U.S.C. §2114 prohibits assaulting with intent to rob "any person having lawful charge, control, or custody of any mail matter or of any money or other property of the United States . . ." and the robbing of such a person. In Hanahan v. United States, 414 U.S. 807 (1973), a case involving the robbery of an Internal Revenue Service officer, the Solicitor General confessed error, stating that the statute's legislative history "plainly shows that the statute was intended to apply only to postal crimes." Garcia v. United States, 53 U.S.L.W. 4016, 4021 (U.S. Dec. 10, 1984) (Stevens, J., dissenting).

On December 10, 1984, the Supreme Court, at the urging of the government, held that 18 U.S.C. §2114 "penalized assaults or robberies of anyone who is a custodian of 'any money or other property of the United States.'" Garcia v. United States, supra, 53 U.S.L.W. at 4018. In light of the holding in Garcia, U.S. Attorneys may now seek indictments of persons who rob United States officials although no Postal Service nexus exists.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-64.220 Use of U.S. Magistrate to Reduce Postal and Forgery Violation Caseload

Federal Magistrates provide an effective avenue for disposition of many postal violations at considerable savings in prosecutive and judicial resources. Since sentences for first offenders with little or no prior record and lack of extensive involvement in postal depredations generally fall within punishment which could be imposed by a Magistrate for a minor

1984 USAM (superseded)

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

offense, serious thought should be given in such cases to accepting pleas to misdemeanors before Magistrates instead of proceeding with the cases and felonies. More attorney, grand jury, and court time would then become available permitting more time to be allotted to major violators. Additionally, the immediacy of disposition made possible will, in the Department's view, enhance the prophylactic and deterrent effect of the law both specifically and generally.

No ironclad rules in this area are feasible. Generally, burglary of a post office (18 U.S.C. §2115) and robbery of the mails (18 U.S.C. §2114) are so grave as to require felony treatment. On the other hand, many thefts (18 U.S.C. §§1708, 1709) would not require such severe disposition. The vital consideration is the question of expected sentence rather than fixation of a particular label on the defendant's misconduct. Factors which would tend to indicate felony prosecution are the lengthy prior criminal record of a defendant (i.e. whether his/her depredations are extensive and involve a substantial amount of money or other property) and the degree to which his/her activities and that of others created a substantial interference with functioning of the postal system. Bearing especially on the latter consideration are existence and extent of any conspiracy and presence of collusion or internal corruption.

9-64.221 Misdemeanor to be Considered

Among the misdemeanor dispositions available are: 18 U.S.C. §1701 (obstruction of mails generally); 18 U.S.C. §1703(b) (opening, destroying, or detaining mail without authority; 18 U.S.C. §1707 (theft of property used by postal service); and 18 U.S.C. §1711 (misappropriation of postal funds). When the initial charge might best lie under 18 U.S.C. §1705 (destruction of letter boxes or mail) or 18 U.S.C. §1706 (injury to mail bags) and in other appropriate circumstances, an applicable misdemeanor may be found in 18 U.S.C. §641 (theft of government property, or 18 U.S.C. §1361 (destruction of government property).

9-64.230 Libelous Matter on Wrappers or Envelopes - 18 U.S.C. §1718

9-64.231 Description

This section prohibits the mailing of any postal cards, packages or envelopes which have any language of a libelous, scurrilous, defamatory or threatening character written upon them. The statute is of primary importance in the area of bill collection; its effect is prophylactic, to prevent overly threatening dunning notices being sent on post cards. The statute provides for a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment of not more than one year or both for whoever knowingly takes the same from mails for the purpose of circulating or disposing of the nonmailable matter.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-64.232 Investigative Jurisdiction

The Postal Inspection Service is the investigative agency with primary jurisdiction to investigate violations under 18 U.S.C. §1718.

9-64.233 Special Considerations

Two particular cases, Tollett v. United States, 485 F.2d 1087 (8th Cir. 1973), and United States v. Handler, 383 F. Supp. 1267 (D. Md. 1974), present obstacles to successful prosecution under 18 U.S.C. §1718 based upon first amendment grounds. Therefore, any future prosecutions under this section should only be attempted after a careful examination of the factual situation. For example, a "dunning notice" situation or similar harassing techniques should lay a basis for a factually sound prosecution. It is doubted that the courts would sanction such form or harassment-for-profit or, in any event, would be less likely to strike down the statute based upon constitutional infirmities.

9-64.240 Forgeries

Only rarely do forgeries of Treasury checks (18 U.S.C. §495) occur in the absence of a concomitant theft of mail or theft of the check from other United States custody. Often the record and conduct of the forger or passer will not merit more severe punishment than a Magistrate can assess. Usually, such a defendant will, in fact, have had the requisite knowledge of the character of the instrument as stolen from the mails or the United States, or other appropriate circumstances will exist, permitting misdemeanor disposition. U.S. Attorney programs established in accord with the policy expressed herein should include provision for such disposition of appropriate cases which may initially only present a forgery aspect.

9-64.250 Addicts

Not uncommonly, narcotics addiction lies at the root of a mail theft or forgery of a stolen check. In such instances, resort to Magistrate

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

disposition will not suffice unless accompanied by arrangements with a view to rehabilitation. When satisfactory solution of the narcotics aspect is not possible through resources available locally, U.S. Attorneys should still consider permitting misdemeanor disposition before a district court in conjunction with commitment under 18 U.S.C. §4253.

9-64.251 Admission of Guilt

Although the foregoing policies will normally find their greatest utility in the course of plea bargaining, and the willingness to admit guilt and accept punishment is a weighty factor in ascertaining the degree of punishment the interests of public justice require in any particular case, consent to trial by Magistrate, even on a plea of not guilty, offers considerable advantage to the United States. Accordingly, U.S. Attorneys should not foreclose resort to misdemeanor disposition solely because the defendant declines to plead guilty.

9-64.300 FALSE PERSONATION

9-64.310 Statute

18 U.S.C. §912 provides:

Whoever falsely assumes or pretends to be an officer or employee acting under the authority of the United States or any department, agency or officer thereof, and acts as such, or in such pretended character demands or obtains any money, paper, document, or thing of value, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than three years, or both.

Act of June 25, 1948, Ch. 645, 62 Stat. 742."

9-64.311 Legislative History

In 1883, an appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, H.R. 7482, 47th Cong., 2d Sess. (1883), was being considered by the Senate. 14 Cong. Rec. 3214 (1883). An amendment to that bill was proposed which read as follows:

Any person who falsely represents himself to be an officer, agent, or employee of the Pension Bureau of the Interior Department, or in such assumed character

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

pretends or assumes to act and perform or does perform it such assumed character any duty or act belonging to such officer, agent, or employee so falsely personated, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in a sum not exceeding $1,000, or be imprisoned for a period not more than two years, or both, in the discretion of the court.

14 Cong. Rec. 3238 (1883).

The amendment was stricken following an objection by Senator Edmunds that it was legislation on an appropriations bill. Senator Edmunds asserted that such a bill should be much broader in scope. Senator Edmunds said "[n]ow, there ought to be a law punishing every person who falsely personates any officer or employee of the United States for the purpose of committing any wrong or fraud upon anybody; that is plain enough." 14 Cong. Rec. 3238 (1883).

In apparent agreement with Senator Edmunds' opinion, Senator Blair of Vermont introduced a bill on February 24, 1883, to prohibit abuses under the pension law. The bill was referred to the Committee on Pensions. Subsequently, the Senate Committee on the Judiciary assumed jurisdiction of the subject in its wider sense and reported a bill which covered not only pension cases but all cases of like abuse. 14 Cong. Rec. 3263-4 (1883).

The bill, S. 2507, 47th Cong., 2d Sess. (1883), was reported by Senator Garland of Arkansas who, in explaining its purpose, said:

. . . Section 5435 of the Revised Statutes makes provision against persons falsely representing themselves to be entitled to certain annuities, dividends, pensions, prize-money, & c., from the Government, and Section 5448 makes provision for punishing persons who represent themselves as revenue officers. There the statutes stop. This bill provides for punishing persons who represent themselves as officials or employees or agents of the United States in any respect whatever.

14 Cong. Rec. 3263 (1883).

Although the bill passed the Senate, 14 Cong. Rec. 3264 (1883), it failed to become law in the 47th Congress. It was reported again in the next Congress by Senator Garland. 15 Cong. Rec. 1285-6 (1884). The Senate passed the bill without debate in its original form except that the words "or any officer" were inserted after "Department" in two places. 15 Cong. Rec. 1286 (1884).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

In the House of Representatives, Mr. Browne of Indiana reported from the House Committee on the Judiciary a bill, H.R. 4993, 48th Cong., 1st Sess. (1884), which was identical to the original Senate bill.

The bill passed the House, 15 Cong. Rec. 2256 (1884), and was reported to the Senate where it was amended to conform to the second Senate bill and passed. 15 Cong. Rec. 2676 (1884).

As finally enacted the bill provided:

That every person who with intent to defraud either the United States or any person falsely assumes or pretends to be an officer or employee acting under the authority of the United States, or any Department or any office of the Government thereof, and who shall take upon himself to act as such, or who shall in such pretended character demand or obtain from any person or from the United States, or any Department or any officer of the Government thereof, any money, paper, document, or other valuable thing, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment not longer than three years, or both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

Act of Apr. 18, 1884, Ch. 26, 23 Stat. 11.

The statute was carried forward in the Criminal Code of 1909 without significant change. See S. Rep. No. 10, 60th Cong., 1st Sess. 14-15 (1908); Act of March 4, 1909, Ch. 321, §32, 35 Stat. 1095. By the Act of February 28, 1938, Ch. 37, 52 Stat. 83, the statute was amended to include pretending to be an officer or employee of "any corporation owned or controlled by the United States." In the 1948 revision of the code the reference to corporations was omitted and the word "agency" as defined in 18 U.S.C §6 was inserted. See Revisor's Note, 18 U.S.C. §912 (1948). Changes were also made in phraseology, Ibid; but the only substantial difference between the present statute and its predecessors is that the words "with intent to defraud the United States or any person" are omitted. The statute now appears as 18 U.S.C. §912.

9-64.312 Purpose of the Statute

The legislative history indicates a Congressional intent to punish persons who falsely represent themselves as officers or employees of the United States. From what was initially conceived in 1883 as a statute to prohibit abuses under the then existing pension law, a much broader, far more comprehensive false personation statute developed.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

In construing 18 U.S.C. §912 and its predecessors, the courts generally have ascribed a twofold purpose to the statute: to protect innocent persons against fraud and to preserve the dignity and good repute of the federal service. See United States v. Lepowitch, 318 U.S. 702, 704 (1943); United States v. Barnow, 239 U.S. 74, 80 (1915). Honea v. United States, 344 F.2d 798, 803 (5th Cir. 1965). The gist of the offense, however, is the false personation of federal officers. See Lamar v. United States, 240 U.S. 60, 65 (1916); United States v. Barnow, 239 U.S. 74, 78 (1915); United States v. Robbins, 613 F.2d 688 (8th Cir. 1979). The statute is within the power of Congress to enact because a spirit of good will and respect for officers of the United States is necessary for the efficient operation of the government and would be impaired if unauthorized and unscrupulous persons were permitted to go about the country falsely assuming for fraudulent purposes to be entitled to the respect and credit due a federal officer. United States v. Barnow, supra.

9-64.320 18 U.S.C. §912 Offenses Defined

The statute defines two separate and distinct offenses. United States v. Lepowitch, 318 U.S. 702, 704-705 (1943); United States v. Rosser, 528 F.2d 652 (D.C. Cir. 1976); United States v. Mitman, 459 F.2d 451, 453 (9th Cir. 1972); United States v. Milton, 421 F.2d 586, 587 (10th Cir. 1970); United States v. Guthrie, 387 F.2d 569, 570 (4th Cir. 1967).

9-64.321 Elements of the Offenses

False personation of an officer or employee of the United States is an element of both offenses. See Lamar v. United States, 241 U.S. 103, 114-16 (1916); United States v. Barnow, 239 U.S. 74, 77 (1915); United States v. York, 202 F. Supp. 275, 276-77 (E.D. Va. 1962); Graham v. Squier, 53 F. Supp. 881, 882-83 (W.D. Wash.), aff'd, 145 F.2d 348 (9th Cir. 1944). The impersonation must be of a federal officer; see Massengale v. United States, 240 F.2d 781, 782 (6th Cir. 1957); Dickson v. United States, 182 F.2d 131, 132 (10th Cir. 1950); and may be effected by verbal declarations as well as by the exhibition of a counterfeited badge or a false certificate of authority. Pierce v. United States, 86 F.2d 949, 951 (6th Cir. 1936). Government officials are impersonated by any persons who assume to act in the pretended character; United States v.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

Lepowitch, supra, and thus action alone may amount to a false pretense of federal authority. See Heskett v. United States, 58 F.2d 897, 902 (9th Cir. 1932) (by inquiring about passports, defendants pretended to be federal immigration officers).

The most general allegations of impersonation of a government official sufficiently charges this element of the offense; United States v. Lepowitch, supra; and the omission of the word "falsely" is harmless error. Ferguson v. United States, 293 F. 361, 363 (8th Cir. 1923). Although an employee of one department of the government may be guilty of impersonating an officer of another department; Russell v. United States, 271 F. 684, 685 (9th Cir. 1921); one who in fact holds the office he/she claims cannot be convicted under the statute, except as an aider and abettor. Haggerty v. United States, 5 F.2d 224, 224-25 (7th Cir. 1925). Thus failure to prove that the representation of federal authority was false is reversible error. United States v. McNaugh, 42 F.2d 835, 836-37 (2d Cir. 1930). Proof of the falsity of the representation can be made under Fed. R. Crim. P. 27 and Fed. R. Civ. P. 44 by a properly authenticated affidavit of the person having custody of the personnel records of the office assumed reciting that a diligent search reveals no record of defendant's employment. T'Kach v. United States, 242 F.2d 937, 937-38 (5th Cir. 1957). The absence of any indicia of federal authority at the time of arrest four days after the offense and the failure of the defendant to produce any evidence of the defendant's authority at the trial have been held sufficient to prove lack of authority. Scala v. United States, 54 F.2d 608, 609-610 (7th Cir. 1931). If the government's case survives a motion for a judgment of acquittal and the defendant takes the stand and fails to testify to his/her authority; Haggerty v. United States, supra; or testifies that he/she has none; T'Kach v. United States, supra; his/her conviction will be sustained on appeal.

It has been held that evidence of reliance by the intended victim is admissible because reliance is an essential element of the offense. Haid v. United States, 157 F.2d 630, 632 (9th Cir. 1946). This conclusion seems to originate from a misinterpretation of United States v. Barnow, supra, in which the Supreme Court said: "It is the aim of the section not merely to protect innocent persons from actual loss through reliance upon false assumptions of Federal authority, but to maintain the general good repute and dignity of the service itself." Barnow, supra, at 80. Obviously, in cases under 18 U.S.C. §912(2) in which a thing of value has been obtained, reliance by the victim is almost always provable. It is the view of the Criminal Division, however, that there is no such reliance requirement inherent in the statute. See Levine v. United States, 261 F.2d 747, 751 (D.C. Dir. 1957).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-64.322 Falsely Defined

"Falsely" is sometimes used to imply scienter and the the word has been construed to mean something designedly untrue or deceitful, and as involving an intention to perpetrate some fraud; in a sense it means perfidiously or treacherously. 35 C.J.S. Falsely, 789, 790. "Falsely" is defined as "in a false manner, erroneously, not truly, peridiously or treacherously." Black's Law Dictionary 726 (Rev. 4th ed. 1968).

9-64.323 Intent to Defraud

Before the 1948 revision, the statute made an "intent to defraud" an essential element of both offenses. Honea v. United States, 344 F.2d 798, 803 (5th Cir. 1965); see United States v. Barnow, 239 U.S. 74, 75 (1915); Kane v. United States, 120 F.2d 990, 992 (8th Cir. 1941). The words are omitted from the present statute because it was thought the decision in United States v. Lepowitch, supra, rendered them "meaningless." Reviser's Note, 18 U.S.C. §912 (1948). Only the first offense was directly considered in Lepowitch, which held that "intent to defraud" did "not require more than the defendants have, by artifice and deceit, sought to cause the deceived person to follow some course he would not have pursued but for the deceitful conduct." The court said of the second offense, however, that "more than a mere deceitful attempt to affect the course of action or another is required" because that clause of the statute "speaks of an intent to obtain a 'valuable thing'." One court of appeals now doubts that Lepowitch renders the requirement of fraudulent intent meaningless and holds that it continues to be an essential element of the second offense where it means "an intent to wrongfully deprive another of property." See Honea v. United States, supra, at 802-803.

Furthermore, United States v. Randolph, 460 F.2d 367, 370 (5th Cir. 1972), held that "intent to defraud" is an essential element of prosecution under Part I of 18 U.S.C. §912. Contrary views have been expressed in United States v. Cord, 654 F.2d 490 (7th Cir. 1981); United States v. Rosser, 528 F.2d 654 (D.C. Cir. 1976); United States v. Rose, 500 F.2d 12 (2d Cir. 1974), vacated on other grounds, 422 U.S. 1031 (1975); United States v. Mitman, 459 F.2d 451 (9th Cir. 1972); United States v. Guthrie, 387 F.2d 569 (4th Cir. 1967).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-64.324 Acts as Such

The distinguishing element of the first offense is acting as the officer impersonated. United States v. Lepowitch, supra; Lamar v. United States, 241 U.S. 103, 114 (1916); United States v. Barnow, supra. This element requires something more than a mere false pretense. The act that completes a violation of this section must be something more than merely an act in keeping with the falsely assumed character. United States v. Rosser, supra; United States v. Hamilton, 276 F.2d 96, 98 (7th Cir. 1960). For the indictment to be sufficient, the act charged must be something more than mere repetition of the pretense. See Ekberg v. United States, 167 F.2d 380 (1st Cir. 1948); Baas v. United States, 25 F.2d 294 (5th Cir. 1928); United States v. Larson, 125 F. Supp. 360 (D. Alaska 1954). Hence, an indictment alleging that a defendant as the officer impersonated by representing that he/she was an FBI agent engaged in the investigation of a criminal violation has been held to not state an offense in United States v. Larson, supra. But an allegation that a defendant acted as such by representing himself/herself to be an IRS agent engaged in locating the whereabouts of a named person who was a recent tenant of the person to whom the statement was addressed, has been held sufficient. United States v. Harth, 280 F. Supp. 425 (W.D. Okla. 1968). It is not necessary that the act be one which the pretended officer would have authority to perform if he/she were in fact the officer he/she represents himself/herself to be. Lamar v. United States, supra; United States v. Hamilton, supra. It is not necessary that there in fact be such an officer as the defendant pretends to be. United States v. Barnow, supra; Caruso v. United States, 414 F.2d 225, 227 (5th Cir. 1969).

Several acts which have been held to satisfy the "acting as the officer impersonated" requirement include attempting to elicit from another the whereabouts of a witness against the accused in a state proceeding, United States v. Sheker, 618 F.2d 607 (9th Cir. 1980); wearing firearms, United States v. Hamilton, supra; attempting to stay an execution, Thomas v. United States, 213 F.2d 30, 31 (9th Cir. 1954); and eliciting state secrets for information or for political advantage, United States v. Sheker, supra (dictum).

9-64.325 Demanding or Obtaining a Thing of Value

The distinguishing element of the second offense is demanding or obtaining a thing of value. Lamar v. United States, supra; Honea v. United States. This element is not limited in its application to things having commercial value. Even something as intangible as information has been held sufficient. United States v. Sheker, supra. Within the second offense, some courts further distinguish two separate violations, demanding on the one hand and obtaining on the other. Ekberg v. United States, supra; see Elliott v. Hudspeth, 110 F.2d 389, 390 (10th Cir. 1940); United States v. York, 202 F. Supp. 275, 276, 277 (E.D. Va. 1962). One district court, however, has held that it is proper to allege demand and obtain conjunctively in a single count, and that proof of either will sustain the charge. United States v. Ballard, 118 F. 757, 759 (W.D. Mo. 1902). Form 9 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure also approves conjoining the two allegations in the same count.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

It has been held that demanding and obtaining are merely modes of committing the first offense and therefore are lesser offenses included in the more general offense of acting. Consequently, if the only act committed by the accused is the demanding or obtaining of a thing of value, he/she cannot be convicted both of acting as an officer of the United States and of demanding and/or obtaining a thing of value. See Ekberg v. United States, supra, at 384-87. The implication is that such facts would support a conviction under either the acting clause or the demanding and obtaining clause, but some courts hold that an allegation of demanding and obtaining appearing in the same count with an allegation of acting renders the count bad for duplicity. See United States v. Leggett, 312 F.2d 566, 568 (4th Cir. 1962).

9-64.326 Acting Under the Authority of the United States

Two district courts hold that, to be guilty of the second offense, the defendant must pretend not only that he is an employee of the United States, but also that the property is demanded or obtained under the authorization of the United States or for the United States. United States v. Grewe, 242 F. Supp. 826 (W.D. Mo. 1965) (cashing personal checks not an offense); United States v. York, supra (obtaining personal credit not an offense).

To save the phrase "acting under the authority of the United States" from being read out of the statute, the court in York finds it necessary to interpret it to mean acting "for the United States" or in a way "authorized by the United States."

9-64.330 Forms of Indictment

A recommended form for indictments which are drafted under 18 U.S.C. §912 (Part 1) is as follows:

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

A. On or about the _____ day of _____, 19____, in the _____ District of _____, [defendant] did falsely pretend to be an officer and employee of the United States acting under the authority thereof, that is, an agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and did falsely take upon himself/herself to act as such, in that he/she falsely stated to _____ that he/she was a special agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation engaged in pursuit of a person charged with an offense against the United States, and interviewed _____.

The indictment must allege that the defendant acted as the officer impersonated; Baas v. United States, supra; United States v. Carr, 194 F. Supp. 144, 146 (W.D. Cal. 1961); but it is not essential that the particular act be described. See Ekberg v. United States, supra, at 387; United States v. Larson, supra. An allegation in the language of the statute is sufficient. See United States v. Cohen, 631 F.2d 1223 (5th Cir. 1980); United States v. Sheker, supra; United States v. Leggett, supra, at 569-70. If the statutory language alone is used, however, the defendant may be entitled to a bill of particulars as to the act. See Ekberg v. United States, supra. Any prejudice that may result from the denial of a bill of particulars is cured by the court's offer of a continuance at the close of the government's evidence. United States v. Hamilton, supra, at 99.

An intent to defraud was not alleged in the preceding form. Despite United States v. Randolph, supra, which held that failure to allege an intent to defraud in an indictment drawn under the first part of 18 U.S.C. §912 was reversible error, the Criminal Division subscribes to the views of the Second, Fourth, Seventh, Ninth and District of Columbia Circuits that the failure to allege intent to defraud is not fatal. United States v. Cord, supra; United States v. Rosser, supra; United States v. Rose, supra; United States v. Mitman, supra; United States v. Guthrie, supra. Thus, in districts outside of the Fifth Circuit we believe that it is unnecessary to allege an intent to defraud under the first part of 18 U.S. S. §912 and advise against it.

A recommended form for indictments which are drafted under 18 U.S.C. §912 (Part 2) is as follows:

B. On or about the _____ day of _____, 19____, in the _____ District of _____ [defendant], with intent to defraud _____, did falsely assume and pretend to be an officer and employee of the United States acting under the authority thereof, in that he/she falsely stated to _____ that he/she was a special agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and is such assumed and pretended character [defendant] did gain entrance to _____ Street, _____, without paying the admission charge.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The recommended form includes an allegation of "intent to defraud." The language of the statute contains no such element. But see, Honea v. United States, supra. In Honea, the defendant was convicted for impersonation of a federal employee and obtaining property. In setting aside Honea's conviction, the Fifth Circuit decided that an intent to defraud or an intent to wrongfully deprive another of property is an essential element of the offense and that the indictment was fatally defective for failure to include such an allegation. Id., at 801-803.

In Honea, the defendant by a timely pretrial motion to dismiss, Fed. R. Crim. P. 12(b) (2), urged that the indictment was "fatally defective" because it failed "to allege that the defendant did the acts with intent to defraud either the United States or any person." The motion was denied at trial. The Fifth Circuit held this to be error, saying "[i]t is often said that an indictment must (a) apprise the defendant of what he will have to meet and (b) protect him from double jeopardy. This indictment is sufficient as to (b), but . . . insufficient as to (a)." Id., at 804. The Honea court concluded that the indictment was sufficient to protect the defendant from double jeopardy but insufficient to enable the defendant to prepare an adequate defense.

Had the defendant in Honea chosen not to object at trial to the failure of the indictment to allege intent to defraud, the indictment's sufficiency as a basis for enabling the defendant to prepare his defense would no longer have been a dominant consideration. See Kane v. United States, 120 F.2d 990, 992 (8th Cir. 1941). Under such circumstances, the indictment should be examined on appeal to determine whether it constituted a sufficient foundation for a judgment and whether it protected the defendant against another prosecution for the same offense. "In testing the sufficiency of the indictment for these purposes, there is no sound reason why all the facts and elements of the crime should be required to be stated directly. When this stage of the inquiry is reached, reasonable inferences and clear implications from the allegations made are a legitimate aid to the indictment." Id., at 992, citing, Wishart v. United States, 29 F.2d 103 (8th Cir. 1928).

In view of Honea, care should be taken to allege intent to defraud in indictments for the second offense under 18 U.S.C. §912. In a given case,

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

if such an allegation is not made and the defendant fails to raise the issue at trial but subsequently raises it on appeal, then it can be argued for the government that reasonable inferences and clear implications from the language of the indictment were sufficient to enable the defendant to prepare his/her defense as evidenced by his/her failure to object at trial.

9-64.331 Duplicity

As was previously discussed under USAM 9-64.325, supra, (Demanding or Obtaining a Thing of Value), some courts have held that an allegation of acts as such appearing in the same count with an allegation of demanding and obtaining renders the count bad for duplicity. See United States v. Leggett, supra; Shepherd v. United States, 191 F.2d 682 (10th Cir. 1951). Thus, in drafting indictments, care should be exercised to avoid joining "acts as such" with "demanding and obtaining."

9-64.340 Prosecution of 18 U.S.C. §912 Violations - Criminal Division's Recommendation

The Division's recommendation is that generally in situations which involve the impersonation of a federal officer or employee, coupled with an application for credit, registration for lodging, cashing of a personal check or some other similar act, prosecution should not be initiated under the second part of 18 U.S.C. §912 unless the subject has also pretended to under color of federal authority or expressly or implicitly suggested that the valuable thing demanded or obtained was necessary for the performance of his official duty. The basic procedure to follow when deciding whether to prosecute such cases under the second part of 18 U.S.C. §912 is to determine whether the benefit is purported to run to the federal government or to the federal employee in his/her capacity as a private citizen. If the latter, when there should be no prosecution under the second part of 18 U.S.C. §912. See United States v. Grewe, supra; United States v. York, supra. his/her

The foregoing obviously does not foreclose all possibility of prosecution of such cases. The alternatives of prosecution under the first part of 18 U.S.C. §912, prosecution under 18 U.S.C. §§701, 702, and action by state and local authorities, remain to be considered. Where these alternatives are appropriate they should be utilized.

In deciding whether a false personation case warrants prosecution under the first part of 18 U.S.C. §912, it should be noted that the distinctive element of the offense under the first part of 18 U.S.C. §912 is acting as the officer impersonated. This element requires something more than a mere false pretense; there must be some additional overt act in keeping with the pretense. For an example of what acts have been held to satisfy this requirement, see USAM 9-64.324, supra.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Absent an overt act which is distinguishable from the pretense, prosecution under the first part of 18 U.S.C. §912 should not be undertaken.

Therefore, when presented with a situation in which a subject has pretended to be a federal officer or employee but has not performed an overt act which is distinguishable from the pretense itself, or has demanded or obtained credit, lodging or some similar benefit but has not pretended to be acting under color of federal authority and has not expressly or implicitly suggested that the valuable thing demanded or obtained was necessary for the performance of his/her official duty, consideration should be given to referring the matter to state and local authorities for their action, rather than initiating a 18 U.S.C. §912 prosecution.

9-64.400 FALSE IDENTIFICATION CRIME CONTROL ACT OF 1982

9-64.401 Overview

The False Identification Crime Control Act of 1982 (FICCA), Public Law 97-398, 96 Stat. 2009 (approved December 31, 1982) was the culmination of a ten-year legislative process to improve federal criminal statutes relating to the false identification problem. It is an outgrowth of a comprehensive study on the criminal use of false identification made by the Justice Department sponsored Federal Advisory Committee on False Identification (FACFI) in the mid-1970's. The Act implements one of the Committee's major recommendations. The Department of Justice strongly supported the legislative effort and believes this Act will have a significant impact upon all aspects of the complex false identification problem.

FICCA is the combination and reworking of four bills introduced in the 97th Congress (H.R. 352, H.R. 6105, S. 1924, and S. 2043). H.R. 352 and S. 1924 were basically identical and were the predecessors of the newly created 18 U.S.C. §1028, entitled "Fraud and related activity in connection with identification documents." This section defines offenses involving the counterfeiting of identification documents issued by the United States and other governmental entities, both foreign and domestic, and the trafficking in and the illegal use of counterfeit or stolen governmental identification documents. H.R. 6105 and S. 2043, which were intended to help fight the youthful driver aspect of the drunk-driving problem, were the predecessors of the newly created 18 U.S.C. §1738, entitled "Mailing private identification documents without a disclaimer."

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

After H.R. 6946 was introduced as a substitute for H.R. 352 by the Chairperson of the Subcommittee on Crime of the House Committee on the Judiciary, 18 U.S.C. §1028 was expanded by the full House Judiciary Committee. The Senate further expanded and clarified certain aspects of 18 U.S.C. §1028. (Most of the expansion of the section was in the area of the possession offenses.) As a result of the Conference between the House and Senate, 18 U.S.C. §1028 retained most of the Senate amendments.

The House Judiciary Subcommittee on Crime originally rejected H.R. 6105 (a bill "attacking the youthful driver aspect of the drunk-driving problem") since it felt that most of its proposed coverage was incorporated within new 18 U.S.C. §1028 insofar as the identification documents were, or appeared to be, issued by a governmental agency. The Senate, however, included a modified version of S. 2043 when it passed H.R. 6946. In Conference, an agreement was reached to narrow the new 18 U.S.C. §1738 to private identification documents which bore a birth date or indicated the age of a person and which were manufactured by an entity in the business of selling identification documents through the mails or in interstate or foreign commerce. If the document contained such information, the document had to carry the disclaimer clause "NOT A GOVERNMENT DOCUMENT" on its front and back in a specified type size. As so modified, the Congress passed H.R. 6946 and the President signed it into law on December 31, 1982. Hence, as a practical matter, FICCA was fully effective as of the beginning of 1983. 18 U.S.C. §§1028 and 1738 will be discussed separately at USAM 9-64.610-64.790 and 9-64.810-64.910, infra, respectively.

The FICCA does not supplant or replace any existing criminal provision which may be applicable to a particular identification document. However, because of FICCA's broad coverage and realistic penalties, it will normally be the vehicle by which most false identification violations are pursued in the future. Of course, depending upon the particular and unique circumstances of an individual situation, other provisions of applicable federal statutes may be utilized where the prosecutor believes that to be warranted.

9-64.410 18 U.S.C. §1028 - Fraud and Related Activity in Connection with Identification Documents

9-64.420 Purpose

18 U.S.C. §1028 is intended to give the federal prosecutor an effective tool with reasonable penalties to deal with the federal aspects of the false identification problem involving governmental identification documents and certain implements used in manufacturing those documents. Different provisions of the section may be applicable to crimes involving terrorism, illegal immigration, organized crime, narcotic trafficking, welfare fraud, white collar crime, smuggling, firearms violations, and fugitives from justice, to name a few. 18 U.S.C. §1028 is limited to governmental identification documents, but it is very broad because it covers all those issued by federal, state, local, foreign, international and quasi-international governmental entities.

Of extreme importance is the fact that 18 U.S.C. §1028 is written in the statutory format of the proposed revision to the federal Criminal Code which has been developing during the past decade. As such, this requires that an indictment be drafted to describe properly (1) the prohibited act, (2) the federal jurisdictional circumstances, and (3) the facts necessary for a determination of the appropriate penalty. Copies of draft indictments/informations for the basic fourteen types of different factual situations which may arise under 18 U.S.C. §1028(a) are provided at USAM 9-64.670 - 9-64.713, infra.

9-64.430 Terminology

It is essential to understand certain terminology used in 18 U.S.C. §1028. The terms have been divided into eight separate groupings to facilitate discussion. (All references to the House Judiciary Committee Report, House Report No. 97-802, 97th Congress, 2d Sess., are indicated as "H. Rep." This report is reprinted in the 1982 U.S. Code Cong. & Ad. News, at p. 3519.)

9-64.431 Covered Instruments

A. Identification Document This term is defined in 18 U.S.C. §1028(d)(1) to mean:

[A] document made or issued by or under the authority of . . . [a governmental entity] which, when completed with information concerning a particular individual, is of a type intended or commonly accepted for the purpose of identification of individuals.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The document must be issued by a government agency. It must identify a particular person. (Hence, the term does not cover certificates of title or registration for motor vehicles since such documents identify vehicles, not persons.) The term includes blank documents. That is the intention of the phrase "which, when completed with information." H. Rep., p. 9. The description of an identification document will normally include such identifying elements as an individual's name, address, date or place of birth, physical description, photograph, fingerprints, employer, profession, occupation, or any unique number assigned to an individual by a governmental entity. H. Rep., p. 9. Whether a document is "intended" to identify an individual is determinable by looking at the purpose for which the governmental agency issued it. Examples of such would be passports, alien registration cards, Justice Department credentials, etc. The term "commonly accepted" is intended to cover identification documents which may not have been intended to serve as an identification document in common usage. Examples would be birth certificates, driver's licenses, social security cards, etc. However, "commonly accepted" does not require that the document be accepted for identification purposes under any and it is accepted in situations where a document of that nature would reasonably be accepted for identification purposes. H. Rep., p. 9. Of course, an identification document can be both "intended" and "commonly accepted."

While an identification document is usually made of paper or plastic, the term may also include badges for law enforcement officers if such a badge has a unique number on it which is assigned to a particular officer for the purpose of identifying such officer. The term refers to a tangible document and not merely the information contained on such a document (e.g., a Social Security number by itself is not an identification document under 18 U.S.C. §1028. However, the use of someone else's Social Security number, or a false one, with intent to deceive any person for the purpose of obtaining anything of value from such person may be in violation of 42 U.S.C. §408(g)(2).)

B. Document-Making Implement This term is defined in 18 U.S.C. §1028(d)(3) to mean:

. . . any implement or impression specially designed or primarily used for making an identification document, a false identification document, or another document-making implement.

It obviously includes plates, dyes, stamps, and molds and other "tools" used to make identification documents. Another example of a document-making implement could be a device specially designed or primarily used to produce a small photograph and assemble laminated identification cards. The term may also include any official seal or signature, or text in a distinctive typeface and layout that when reproduced are part of an identification document. In cases in which specialized paper or ink or other materials are used in the production of an identification document, those items would be document-making implements. The term does not, however, include office photocopying machines because such machines are designed for more general purposes (i.e., not "specially designed or primarily used for" making identification and false identification documents). H. Rep., p. 11. However, persons who use such machines to manufacture false identification documents or who provide them to another for the same purpose could be guilty of other offenses under 18 U.S.C. §1028.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-64.432 Governmental Issuers

While 18 U.S.C. §1028 does not use the term "governmental entity," this term is an aid to understanding the scope of 18 U.S.C. §1028. It is clear that the Congressional intent was to cover all governmental identification documents regardless of which governmental body in the world issued them. And it is clear that 18 U.S.C. §1028 does not cover identification documents issued by private parties such as private and parochial schools, non-governmental employers, etc. Thus, it does not cover credit cards, bank cards, insurance coverage cards issued by a private insurer, membership cards of private associations, private clubs, or private citizen's groups, personal name cards, retail business check cashing cards, etc. It would, however, cover the identification documents of the employees of government contractors if such documents were issued by or under the authority of a government agency.

The concept of "governmental entity" is set forth in the definition of "identification document" in 18 U.S.C. §1028(d)(1) and includes:

. . . the United States Government, a State, political subdivision of a State, a foreign government, political subdivision of a foreign government, an international governmental or an international quasi-governmental organization . . . .

This expansive definition should be read to include multi-state governmental bodies established pursuant to interstate compacts. While these entities are not explicitly mentioned, they are certainly intended to be covered and are implicitly incorporated within the concepts of "State" or "political subdivision of a State." H. Rep., pp. 5,8. ("The

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Committee desired to protect all government issued documents directly" (emphasis supplied.) Interstate compact entities often operate certain facilities, such as those for water storage or public transportation, which may be prime targets of terrorist endeavors.

There follows a description of the specified governmental entities. Because of the jurisdictional circumstance requirement, it is convenient to divide the issuers into two groups: (A) United States Government and (B) Other governments.

A. United States Government - This term is not defined in 18 U.S.C. §1028 and, hence, it should be construed as broadly as is possible under title 18. It includes all three branches of the federal government (executive, judicial, and legislative). It covers all federal departments, agencies, offices, commissions, administrations, institutions, corporations, services, boards, etc., and any component thereof. See 18 U.S.C. §6; United States v. Bramblett, 348 U.S. 503 (1955). It does not, however, include the governments of the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, or other territories or possessions of the United States as these entities are to be considered as "States."

B. Other Governments - For the sake of convenience, the expression "non-federal" will often be used to refer to governments other than the United States Government.

1. State - This term is defined in 18 U.S.C. §1028(d)(5) to include:

. . . any State of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and any other possession or territory of the United States.

As noted above, multi-state governmental bodies are covered.

2. Political Subdivision of a State - This term is not specifically defined. It is intended to cover all cities, towns, counties, water districts, school districts, etc. It covers all agencies and departments of such governmental bodies, including public schools, public universities, public libraries, public museums (i.e., owned by a government agency), voting districts, etc.

3. Foreign Government - This term is not defined in 18 U.S.C. §1028 and, hence, its definition is that found in 18 U.S.C. §11:

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The term "foreign government", as used in this title except in sections 112, 878, 970, 1116, and 1201, includes any government, faction, or body or insurgents within a country with; which the United States is at peace, irrespective of recognition by the United States.

4. Political Subdivision of a Foreign Government - This term is not defined in 18 U.S.C. §1028 but is clearly intended to cover all the subordinate governmental bodies in foreign countries regardless of nomenclature. It therefore covers provinces, cities, districts, states, towns, villages, counties, departments, or whatever structure is used in the foreign country to divide governmental responsibility, however labelled. It also covers the agencies and departments of such governmental bodies.

5. International Governmental or Quasi-Governmental Organization This term is not defined in 18 U.S.C. §1028 but includes such bodies as the United Nations (UN), North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO), European Economic Community (EEC), Organization of American States (OAS), the World Bank, the Inter-American Development Bank, etc., and other public international organizations designated as such pursuant to section 1 of the International Organizations Immunities Act (22 U.S.C. §288), (See, generally, chapter 7 of title 22, United States Code, H. Rep., p. 8).

9-64.433 Types of Identification Documents

Identification documents will fall into two categories: (A) "genuine" or (B) "false." Neither type is defined in 18 U.S.C. §1028. The types may even overlap at times.

A. Genuine Documents - The term "genuine" is not used in 18 U.S.C. §1028 but is used here to refer to those authentic identification documents actually made or issued under the authority of a governmental entity. It includes genuine blank documents (i.e., blank forms not yet filled in). H. Rep., p.9.

B. False Documents - The term "false identification document" is used throughout 18 U.S.C. §1028. It is not, however, defined in the section., The term is intended to include counterfeit, forged, or altered identification documents as well as apparent identification documents which seem to have been issued by a government authority, even though that authority may not issue an identification document of that particular type. (See H. Rep., p. 9 - "Such document could be found to be a 'false identification document' for purposes of the Act because it appears to be a government-issued document, even though it may not be a counterfeit of a document actually issued by that state.") This concept would also apply when all identification document purports to be issued by a governmental entity, which in fact does not actually exist. See Pines v. United States, 123 F.2d 825 (8th Cir. 1941). Documents purportedly issued by non-existing governmental entities might be called "spurious" for the want of a better term. "Counterfeit" implies an unauthorized reproduction of an original document, which would include a bank. "Altered" would be the unauthorized changing of a material fact contained in the document. "Forged" would relate to the unauthorized execution of the document (e.g., filling in a genuine blank identification document without authority). "Spurious" could be the creation of a completely fictitious government entity. It is possible for a document to be "genuine" and "false" at the same time (e.g., a genuine driver's license is stolen and the driver's name is altered; a genuine birth certificate blank form is stolen and is filled in without authorization).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-64.434 Specifically Mentioned Identification Documents

18 U.S.C. §1028 singles out three special non-federal identification documents and gives them preferred treatment. This is so because these three documents, in the absence of a national identity card, are the prime means by which an individual establishes his/her identity in the United States. The three documents are: (A) birth certificate; (B) driver's license; and (C) personal identification card.

A. Birth Certificate - This term is not defined in 18 U.S.C. §1028 as is is self-explanatory. This document is issued by different agencies in different states and foreign countries. Nevertheless, it represents the official governmental statement by the proper government agency that a person having such a name was born on a particular date in a particular place of specific parentage. Obviously, a birth certificate is not intended to actually identify the person who claims such a document pertains to him/her. There are few physical characteristics that remain the same as those at the time of birth. Nevertheless, the birth certificate has become "commonly accepted" as an identification document in this country.

B. Driver's License - This term is not defined in 18 U.S.C. §1028. This governmentally issued document's original purpose was to state that a particular person was authorized to operate a vehicle upon the public roadways. It was not intended to establish one's identity. Because of the absence of a better document, however, the driver's license eventually has become "commonly accepted" as the "national identity card." 18 U.S.C. §1028 covers both domestic as well as foreign governmentally issued driver's licenses.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

C. Personal Identification Card - This term is defined in 18 U.S.C. §1028(d)(4) to mean -

. . . an identification document issued by a State or local government solely for the purpose of identification . . .

This definition would appear to limit such documents to those issued by domestic (i.e., within the United States) governmental entities in contrast to the first two (birth certificates and driver's licenses). This document is normally issued by state departments of motor vehicles to provide an identification document for those persons who do not for some reason obtain a driver's license. In 1979, the National Committee on Uniform Traffic Laws and Ordinances, authors of the Uniform Vehicle Code (UVC), provided for the issuance of identification cards for non-drivers and restrictions on the unlawful use of such cards. The UVC, which serves as the model state code for vehicular matters, defines a "personal identification card" as "a document issued by the department [of motor vehicles] for the sole purpose of identifying the bearer and not authorized for use as driver's license." (UVC §1-144.1) As of 1978, approximately 35 state jurisdictions issued such cards. In 32 of these states, they were issued by the motor vehicle department. H. Rep., p.12,

9-64.435 Operative Terms

18 U.S.C. §1028 has three basic operative offenses. They are to "produce," "transfer," or "possess." With the exception of simple possession of a United States identification document which was stolen or produced without lawful authority which is prohibited by 18 U.S.C. §1028(a)(6), possession is always coupled with the purpose to "use unlawfully," "transfer unlawfully" or "use to defraud the United States." Hence, it is necessary to understand the scope of the words "produce," "transfer," "possess," "use," and "defraud the United States."

A. Produce - This term is defined in 18 U.S.C. §1028(d)(2) to include "alter, authenticate, or assemble." Obviously, since the word "include" is used in the definition, the term is not limited to these three concepts but also encompasses all forms of counterfeiting, forging, making, manufacturing, issuing, and publishing. A government employee whose duty is to simply issue identification documents (i.e., he/she does not manufacture or assemble the documents) is, by issuing the document, authenticating it. If such an employee were to authenticate such documents without lawful authority, it would constitute an offense under 18 U.S.C. §1028(a)(1). H. Rep., p. 9.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

B. Transfer - This term is not defined in 18 U.S.C. §1028 but is intended to reach those persons who "traffic" in stolen and false identification. It includes the acts of selling, pledging, distributing, giving, loaning or otherwise transferring. It does not require any exchange of "consideration" (i.e., thing of value) for the transfer. To transfer "unlawfully" means the transfer of an identification document in a manner forbidden by federal, state, or local law. H. Rep., pp. 10, 11.

C. Possess - This term is not defined in 18 U.S.C. §1028 but is to be construed broadly. It includes the concept of "receipt" but is not limited thereto. H. Rep., p. 10. Constructive possession would also be included.

D. Use - This term is not defined in 18 U.S.C. §1028 but is to be broadly construed and includes presenting, displaying, certifying, or otherwise giving currency to an identification document so that it would be accepted as an identification document in any manner. To use "unlawfully" means that the document was used in a manner that violates a federal, state or local law, or is part of a misrepresentation that violates a law. For example, 18 U.S.C. §1028(a)(3) would be violated if the possessor intended to use the five or more documents to make representations in any matter within the jurisdiction of any department or agency of the United States in violation of 18 U.S.C. §1001. H. Rep., p. 10.

E. Defraud the United States - This term is not defined in 18 U.S.C. §1028 but it is not intended to be limited to misrepresentations related to financial fraud but would also include the misrepresentative use of false identification to obstruct functions of the government (e.g., display to government investigator a false pilot's license or someone else's driver's license for the purpose of trying to deceive or mislead such investigator). H. Rep., p.11.

9-64.436 Culpable States of Mind

There are three different terms used in 18 U.S.C. §1028 to connote the culpable state of mind requirement for an offense. They are: (A)

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

"knowingly"; (B) "knowing"; and (C) "with the intent." The first two are, for all practicable purposes, the same.

A. Knowingly - The first five subsections of 18 U.S.C. §1028(a) all start with this term. (Its absence from subsection 18 U.S.C. §1028 (a)(6) may be explainable on grounds of redundancy.) A knowing state of mind with respect to an element of the offense is (1) an awareness of the nature of one's conduct, and (2) an awareness of or a firm belief in the existence of a relevant circumstance, such as the "stolen," the "produced without lawful authority," or "false" nature of the identification document. The knowing state of mind requirement may be satisfied by proof that the actor was aware of a high probability of the existence of the circumstance (e.g., stolen or false nature of the document), although a defense should succeed if it is proven that the actor actually believed that the circumstance did not exist after taking reasonable steps to ensure that such belief was warranted. 18 U.S.C. §1028 follows the approach of the Model Penal Code (§2.02(7)) in dealing with what has been called "willful blindness," the situation where the actor, aware of the probable existence of a material fact, does not take steps to ascertain that it does not exist. Willful blindness would require an awareness of a high probability of the existence of the circumstance. United States v. Jewell. 532 F.2d 697, 700 n.7 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 426 U.S. 951 (1976)(H. Rep., pp. 9-10).

B. Knowing - This term appears in 18 U.S.C. §1028 U.S.C. §1028(a)(2) and (a)(6). As such, it applies to a knowledge of a relevant circumstance (e.g., the character of the document as "stolen" or "produced without lawful authority"). The above discussion of "knowingly" is equally applicable to "knowing". H. Rep., pp 9-10.

C. With the Intent - This term which appears in 18 U.S.C. §§1028(a)(3), (a)(4), and (a)(5), is intended to mean the same culpable state of mind as that described by the term "purpose" in the Model Penal Code (§2.02). The distinction between "with the intent" (i.e., "purpose") and a "knowing state of mind" was recently restated by Justice Rehnquist:

As we pointed out in United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 438 U.S. 422, 445 (1978), a person who causes a particular result is said to act purposefully if 'he consciously desires that result, whatever the likelihood of that result happening from his conduct,' while he is said to act knowingly if he is aware 'that the result is practically certain to follow from his conduct, whatever his desire may be as to that result.'

United States v. Bailey, 444 U.S. 394, 404 (1980), quoted in, H. Rep., p. 10.

9-64.437 Relevant Circumstances

There are seven non-jurisdictional circumstances in 18 U.S.C. §1028(a). They are (A) "false"; (B) "stolen"; (C) "lawful authority"; (D) "produced without lawful authority"; (E) "produced without authority"; (F) "issued lawfully for the use of the possessor"; and (G) "used in the production."

A. False - The concept of a false identification document has been fully discussed at USAM 9-64.633, supra.

B. Stolen - This term is not defined in 18 U.S.C. §1028 but it is intended to cover identification documents "obtained by fraudulent means, as well as theft." H. Rep., p. 10. Hence, it covers all forms of unlawful takings and is not limited to common law larceny. See generally Bell v. United States, 103 S. Ct. 2398 (1983); United States v. Turley, 352 U.S. 407 (1957). It would appear that a genuine identification document obtained by fraud from a government agency could be considered as "stolen" under two subsections of 18 U.S.C. §1028(a)(2) and (a)(6). Of course, under 18 U.S.C. §1028(a)(2) the gist of the offense is not the acquisition of an identification document by false information, but rather the transfer of such a "stolen" identification document, while under 18 U.S.C. §1028(a)(6) the gist of the offense is the possession of such a "stolen" (i.e., falsely acquired) identification document of the United States.

C. Lawful Authority - This term is not defined in 18 U.S.C. §1028. It refers to the authority to manufacture, prepare or issue identification documents by statute or regulation, or by contract pursuant to such authority. A person, such as clerk, who is authorized to issue identification documents upon the satisfaction of certain requirements, could be acting without lawful authority if he/she issued an identification document knowing that the requirements had not been fulfilled. Similarly, a party printing identification documents under an authorized contract could be producing without lawful authority if he/she intended to deliver an identification document to any party other than an authorized recipient. H. Rep., p. 10.

D. Produced Without Lawful Authority - This term, which is not defined in 18 U.S.C. §1028, appears in 18 U.S.C. §1028(a)(2). That subsection precludes the transfer of such a document. Producing without lawful authority goes to the legality of the execution of the document. If the issuer had the lawful authority to issue the document, it was produced with lawful authority even if the recipient was not entitled to it, provided the issuer did not know that the recipient was not entitled to it.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

1. Example:

A state hunting license requires that the applicant be a resident of the state and be 18 years of age. An applicant, who is a resident of the state, claims he/she is 18 years of age but in reality is only 16 years of age. The government clerk believes him/her and issues him/her a hunting license. (Note. This document, however, while genuine, was not "issued lawfully" under 18 U.S.C. §1028(a)(3) and (a)(4) because the conditions for lawful issuance were not present (i.e., person was not 18 years of age).)

E. Produced Without Authority - This term, which is not defined in 18 U.S.C. §1028, appears in 18 U.S.C. §1028(a)(6). There is no easily discernible reason why the term "lawful" was omitted except to note that 18 U.S.C. §1028(a)(6) was added as a result of a Senate amendment which did not necessarily follow the drafting terminology of the preceding five subsections which were authored by the House. Since the absence of "lawful" may cause some defendants to claim that the documents were produced by some authority, albeit illegal (i.e., the owner of the counterfeit print shop instructed them to produce the documents) it is probably best to treat the word "lawful" as being understood. This can be justified because 18 U.S.C. §1028(a)(6)'s antecedent is obviously 18 U.S.C. §1028(a)(1) and there is no indication that Congress intended these two terms to have any difference in meaning in these two subsections.

F. Issued Lawfully for the Use of the Possessor - This term is not defined in 18 U.S.C. §1028 nor is it discussed in the House Judiciary Committee Report. It excludes genuine documents issued lawfully by a government agency to the possessor. It does not exempt such a document if it is turned over to another person for his/her use (e.g., impersonation of the original recipient). The phrase "issued lawfully" is ambiguous. Is a genuine document issued by clerical mistake issued lawfully? Is a genuine document issued as a result of a submission of false information to the government agency issued lawfully? This is unclear and probably may only be resolved through litigation. Obviously, there is no problem when the identification document is truly "false" as this phrase only applies to "genuine" identification documents. However, when it is genuine (i.e., actually issued by a government agency) the meaning of the phrase is uncertain and legislative history is not helpful. Nevertheless, we believe that a strong argument can be made that the term means "issued in accordance with all legal requirements," so that if the recipient was not legally entitled to it, it was not issued lawfully (although it was produced with lawful authority).

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Accordingly, in the Criminal Division's judgment, the phrase "issued lawfully for the use of the possessor" refers to those genuine documents issued by the proper governmental authorities to which the applicant is legally entitled, i.e., the applicant met all the material criteria for obtaining the identification document. Hence, an individual who applies for a hunting license which requires a minimum age of 18 and who is actually only 16 and who misrepresents his/her age, has not received an identification document "issued lawfully for the use of the possessor" even though the document is genuine and is in his/her true name. Likewise, a document applied for in a fictitious name would not be considered as "issued lawfully" if the true name of the individual was a material aspect of the issuance of the document by the government agency. Furthermore, an identification document that was lost by the original recipient, stolen from the original recipient or turned over by the original recipient to another person who now happens to be in possession of the document was not issued lawfully for the use of the current possessor.

The term "other than issued lawfully for the use of the possessor" comes into play only under 18 U.S.C. §1028(a)(3) and (a)(4). Under 18 U.S.C. §1028(a)(3), the relevant prohibited conduct involving this term would be the possession with the purpose of using or transferring unlawfully five or more genuine identification documents to which the possessor was not entitled. Hence, if a subject has five or more such genuine documents and there is evidence to show a purpose to use or transfer unlawfully these genuine documents, such conduct can be reached under 18 U.S.C. §1028(a)(3). Under this subsection, most violations involving this term will be limited to situations involving perpetrators who have purposely created multiple identities for themselves.

18 U.S.C. §1028(a)(4), on the other hand, can involve a greater number of potential violators because under this subsection only one document is necessary for a violation. 18 U.S.C. §1028(a)(4) prohibits the knowing possession of a genuine identification document (other than one issued lawfully for the use of the possessor) with the purpose of such document being used to defraud the United States. Consequently, this subsection could involve genuine documents which were not actually issued to the possessor (e.g., stolen from person or lost by the person to whom originally issued or "turned-over" by original recipient to some "friend" and genuine documents still in the possession of the original recipient which he/she was not legally entitled to receive in the first place.)

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

G. Used in the Production - This term is utilized in 18 U.S.C. §1028(a)(5) and relates to the improper purpose for which a document-making implement is intended to be used. It appears to be self-evident. It implicitly recognizes that document-making implements also serve a lawful purpose and may be legally possessed or transferred.

9-64.440 Prohibited Acts

While there are six subsections to 18 U.S.C. §1028(a), they can be viewed as chiefly covering these ten different prohibited acts:

A. Producing without lawful authority an identification document or a false identification document (18 U.S.C. §1028(a)(1));

B. Transferring an identification document or a false identification document knowing that such document was stolen or produced without lawful authority (18 U.S.C. §1028(a)(2));

C. Possessing with intent to use unlawfully five or more identification documents (other than those issued lawfully for the use of the possessor) or false identification documents (18 U.S.C. §1028(a)(3));

D. Possessing with intent to transfer unlawfully five or more identification documents (other than those issued lawfully for the use of the possessor) or false identification documents (18 U.S.C. §1028(a)(3));

E. Possessing an identification document (other than one issued lawfully for the use of the possessor) or a false identification document with the intent such document be used to defraud the United States (18 U.S.C. §1028(a)(4));

F. Possessing an identification document that is an identification document of the United States which is stolen knowing that such document was stolen (18 U.S.C. §1028(a)(6));

G. Possessing an identification document that appears to be an identification document of the United States which was produced without authority knowing that such document was produced without authority (18 U.S.C. §1028(a)(6));

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

H. Producing, transferring, or possessing a document-making implement with the intent that such document-making implement will be used in the production of a false identification document (18 U.S.C. §1028(a)(5));

I. Producing, transferring, or possessing a document-making implement with the intent that such document-making implement will be used in the production of another document-making implement which will be used in the production of a false identification document (18 U.S.C. §1028(a)(5)); and

J. Attempting to do any of the above (18 U.S.C. §1028(a)).

9-64.450 Federal Jurisdictional Circumstances

There are five different bases for federal jurisdiction over the offense under 18 U.S.C. §1028(c). They are: (1) the presence of a United States identification document; (2) the presence of a United States document-making implement; (3) the possession of the identification document is with the intent to defraud the United States; (4) the prohibited production, transfer, or possession of the identification document or document-making implement "is in or affects interstate or foreign commerce"; and (5) the identification document or document-making implement is "transported in the mail in the course of the production, transfer, or possession." The presence of any one circumstance grants federal jurisdiction. There is no need for the prosecution to prove the defendant's state of mind with respect to the jurisdictional circumstance. H. Rep., p. 13. See generally United States v. Feola, 420 U.S. 671 (1975). However, it should be noted that the same circumstance which provides federal jurisdiction may also be a circumstance of the offense itself, e.g., "intent to defraud the United States" under 18 U.S.C. §1038 (a)(4). As a practical matter, therefore, it may be only the "commerce" and "mail" jurisdictional bases for which no proof of the state of mind of the defendant will be required.

9-64.451 United States Identification Document

This concept is self-explanatory. As stated in 18 U.S.C. §1028(c)(1), it covers both genuine and false identification documents which are issued or appear to be issued under the authority of the United States. There is extraterritorial jurisdiction over offenses involving United States identification documents under the generally recognized "protective principle" of international law. H. Rep., p. 14.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-64.452 United States Document-Making Implement

This concept is described in 18 U.S.C. §1028(c)(1) and covers a document-making implement, as defined in 18 U.S.C. §1028(d)(3), which is designed or suited for making a United States identification document or a false United States identification document. (This would cover the photograph/lamination machine, even though it is also suited for producing non-federal identification documents.)

9-64.453 Possession With the Intent to Defraud the United States

This concept applies to any identification document possessed for such purpose unless the document was issued lawfully for the use of the possessor. It is found in 18 U.S.C. §1028(c)(2).

9-64.454 Is in or Affects Interstate or Foreign Commerce

This term, found in 18 U.S.C. §1028(c)(3), requires that the prohibited production, transfer, or possession have no more than a minimal nexus with interstate or foreign commerce. Scarborough v. United States, 431 U.S. 563, 575 (1977). The prohibited act need not be contemporaneous with the movement in or the effect upon interstate or foreign commerce. Nor is it necessary that the purpose of the prohibited act be to use or affect interstate or foreign commerce. United States v. Daley, 564 F.2d 645, 649 (2d Cir. 1977). For instance, a showing that a false identification document in the possession of the defendant traveled at some time in interstate or foreign commerce would be sufficient. H. Rep., p. 14. Moreover, a production or transfer of identification documents which are intended to be distributed in interstate or foreign commerce would be covered. This is so because under 1 U.S.C. §1 "words used in the present tense include the future as well as the present". Hence, the term "affects" includes "will affect." Furthermore, since 18 U.S.C. §1028 has an attempt provision, the commerce aspect need not be completed in order to vest federal jurisdiction. However, in the absence of evidence showing that interstate or foreign commerce was affected the prosecutor will have to prove there was an intent to do acts which, if completed, would have affected interstate or foreign commerce. Because this is a jurisdictional circumstance, there will not have to be proof that each participant in the scheme was aware of the future effect upon commerce but only that the full extent of the scheme, if successful, would have had such results. See also McElroy v. United States, 455 U.S. 642 (1982), as to when interstate commerce begins.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-64.455 Transported in the Mail

The concept, which is found in 18 U.S.C. §1028(c)(3), provides there is federal jurisdiction if, in the course of the prohibited production, transfer, or possession, the identification document, false identification document, or document-making implement is transported in the United States mail. As a practical matter, this concept expands coverage to include intrastate mailings since interstate mailings are also covered by the "commerce" basis.

9-64.460 Penalties

In addition to prescribing the elements of the prohibited acts and federal jurisdictional circumstances, 18 U.S.C. §1028 provides a three-tier level of penalties depending upon the nature of the prohibited act and the type of document involved.

9-64.461 18 U.S.C. §1028(b)(1)

This subsection contains the most serious penalty provision and is aimed at the most dangerous producers of and traffickers in false identification. It establishes a fine of not more than $25,000 and/or imprisonment for not more than five years if the offense involves:

A. The production or transfer of an identification document or false identification document that is or appears to be

1. A United States identification document; or
2. A birth certificate, driver's license, or personal identification card;

B. The production or transfer of more than five identification documents or false identification documents; or

C. The production, transferring or possession of a document-making implement under 18 U.S.C. §1028(a)(5).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-64.462 18 U.S.C. §1028(b)(2)

This subsection creates an intermediate penalty for the other producers and traffickers consisting of a fine of not more than $15,000 and/ or imprisonment for not more than three years if the offense involves:

A. Any production or transfer of an identification document or false identification document other than that penalized by 18 U.S.C. §1028(b)(1); or

B. The possession with the intent to use unlawfully or transfer unlawfully five or more identification documents (other than those issued lawfully for the use of the possessor) or false identification documents under 18 U.S.C. §1028(a)(3).

9-64.463 18 U.S.C. §1028(b)(3)

This subsection provides that for any offense not covered by 18 U.S.C. §1028(b)(1) or (b)(2), there is a fine of not more than $5,000 and/or imprisonment for not more than one year. This covers offenses under 18 U.S.C. §1028(a)(4) and (a)(6).

While it may be argued that the penalty provision for an attempt is unclear under 18 U.S.C. §1028 (e.g., does the word "production" encompass also an attempt to produce or is an attempt to be treated as "any other case" under 18 U.S.C. §1028(b)(3)?), the legislative history conclusively indicates that the Congress intended attempts to be punished at the same level as the completed offense. See H. Rep., pp. 12-13. Federal prosecutors should therefore urge the higher penalty for attempt. Of course, attempts to violate 18 U.S.C. §1028(a)(4) and (a)(6) would be misdemeanors because such offenses are themselves misdemeanors.

9-64.470 Draft Indictments/Informations

9-64.471 Production - 18 U.S.C. §1028(a)(1)

9-64.472 Form #1A - Production of a United States Government Identification Document

On or about the _____ day of _____, 198__, in the _____ District of _____, the defendant, _____,

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

knowingly and with lawful authority, did [attempt to] (1) produce [(a) United States identification document(s)], (2) [(a) false United States identification document(s)], (3) to wit [describe the identification document(s)]. (4)(5)(6)

Notes to Form #1A:

- (1) The attempt provision is to be punished at the same level as the actual offense. See House Report No. 97-802, 97th Congress, 2d Sess., pp. 12-13.
- (2) You should use the term "United States identification document" in the rare situation where the production was done within the government itself but was not authorized, e.g., government clerk supplies false information to the issuing department causing a genuine document to be issued by a federal agency to a person not entitled to it.
- (3) The term "false United States identification document" is used when the document produced is not genuine but is counterfeit, altered, or spurious. This will be in the majority of cases. See House Report No. 97-802, 97th Congress, 2d Sess., p. 9.
- (4) The description of the United States identification document will clearly establish the necessary federal jurisdiction under 18 U.S.C. §1028(c)(1).
- (5) The production of a United States identification document is punishable by imprisonment of not more than five years and/or a fine of not more than $25,000 pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §1028(b)(1)(A)(i).
- (6) In selecting the number of counts for such production, common sense should be used. If the defendant produced 50 identification documents at the same time, it should be alleged as one count for the entire "run" of 50. However, if he/she produced 25 on Monday, 30 on Thursday, and one more on Saturday, you could allege three separate counts. Also, since the production of different kinds of identification documents requires a change in the manufacturing process, the production of different types of identification documents may be charged as separate counts. For example, if he/she produced on the same day a social security card, an alien registration card, and a United States passport, these acts should be charged as three separate offenses. Of course, multiple "runs" of the same document at the same time should be treated as one "production" for the same type document.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-64.473 Form #1B - Production of a Birth Certificate, Driver's License or Personal Identification Card

On or about the _____ day of _____, 198__, in the _____ District of _____, the defendant, _____, knowingly and without lawful authority did [attempt to] (1) produce [, in and affecting interstate (and foreign) commerce,] (2) [and transported in the mail] (3) [a] [birth certificate(s)] [driver's license(s)] [personal identification card(s)] (4)(5) [false birth certificate(s)] [false driver's license(s)] [false personal identification card(s)] (6) to wit [describe the identification document(s)]. (7)

- (1) See note (1) to Form #1A on p. 37.
- (2) For non-federal government identification documents, you must allege a separate federal jurisdictional basis. If the mails were not used in the production, transfer, or possession, then the production, transfer, or possession must be "in or affecting interstate or foreign commerce" for there to be federal jurisdiction. This requires only a minimal commerce nexus, meaning that the document's production, transfer, or possession has had to have some effect upon interstate or foreign commerce. See generally Scarborough v. United States, 431 U.S. 563, 575 (1977), and United States v. Daley, 564 F.2d 645, 649 (2d Cir. 1977). If foreign commerce is not involved, you should not allege it in the indictment.
- (3) The use of mails during the production may give rise to federal jurisdiction authority.
- (4) The production of one birth certificate, driver's license, or personal identification card is punishable by imprisonment of not more than five years and/or a fine of not more than $25,000 pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §1028(b)(1)(A)(ii).
- (5) You should use the term "birth certificate," "driver's license," or "personal identifications card" in the rare situation where the production of such document was done within the government itself but was not authorized, e.g., the government clerk knows that the person is not lawfully entitled to the document but issues it anyway.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

(6) You should use the term "false birth certificate," "false driver's license," or "false personal identification card" when the document produced is not genuine but is counterfeit, altered, or spurious. This will be in the majority of cases. See House Report No. 97-802, 97th Congress, 2d Session, p. 9.

(7) See note (6) to Form #1A on p. 37.

9-64.474 Form #1C - Production of Five or More Non-Federal Identification Documents (Other than Birth Certificates, Driver's Licenses and Personal Identification Cards)

On or about the _____ day of _____, 198__, in the _____ District of _____, the defendant, _____, knowingly and without lawful authority did [attempt to] (1) produce [, in and affecting interstate (and foreign) commerce,] (2) [and transported in the mail] (3) five [or more] (4) [identification documents] (5) [false identification documents] (6) to wit [describe the documents]. (7)

9-64.481 Transfer - 18 U.S.C. §1028(a)(2)

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-64.482 Form #2A - Transfer of a United States Government Identification Document

On or about the _____ day of _____, 198__, in the _____ District of _____, the defendant, _____, did knowingly [attempt to] (1) transfer [(a) United States identification document(s)] (2) [(a) false United States identification document(s)], (3) to wit [describe the document(s)], (4) knowing that such document(s) [(was) (were)] [stolen] (5) [and] (6) [produced without lawful authority]. (7)(8)(9)

Notes to Form #2A:

- (1) See note #1 to Form #1A on p. 37.
- (2) You should use the term "United States identification document" when the transfer involves a genuine document, which was actually issued by the government agency. It would also include a genuine document which is still blank (not filled in as yet). See also note #2 to Form #1A on p. 37.
- (3) The term "false United States identification document" is used when the document being transferred is not genuine and was not actually issued by a government agency, or if issued it has been altered. Hence, the document is counterfeit, altered, or spurious. A stolen blank document which has not yet been filled out should be treated as genuine. A document stolen in blank which has been filled in, can also be treated as "false."
- (4) See note #4 to Form #1A on p. 37.
- (5) The term "stolen" is to be construed to include all forms of unlawful takings including those by means of false pretenses. It thus includes all forms of theft and is not limited to larceny as defined by common law. See House Report No. 97-802, 97th Congress, 2d Sess., p. 10. See generally Bell v. United States, 103 S. Ct. 2398 (1983); United States v. Turley, 352 U.S. 407 (1957). The unlawful taking would normally be from the person to whom the document was issued by the government agency. However, there is the intriguing possibility that where the document is genuine but was obtained by fraud from the government agency, it can be considered as "stolen" from the agency.
- (6) The term "and" will normally not be necessary as the prosecutor will normally know whether the document is genuine or false. If genuine, it will normally be treated as "stolen." If false, it will be treated as

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

"produced without lawful authority." However, at times the prosecutor may not have evidence to select which knowledge the defendant had and may be able to prove only that the defendant knew the document was "phony." In these rare situations the use of "and" may be appropriate. Moreover, since a genuine document or blank document can be stolen and subsequently altered or forged, the use of "and" may be warranted at times.

(7) The term "produced without lawful authority" obviously covers identification documents which are false (i.e., counterfeit, altered, and spurious). See also notes #2 and #3 to Form #1A on p. 37.

(8) The transfer of a United States government identification document is punishable by imprisonment of not more than five years and/or a fine of not more than $25,000 pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §1028(b)(1)(A)(i).

(9) In selecting the number of counts for such transfers, common sense should be used. If the defendant transfers five United States government identification documents at the same time, it is one count since the gist of the offense is the "transfer." If he/she transfers at the same time non-federal identification documents, such activities may be charged as separate counts for pleading purposes, but they will undoubtedly merge at the time of sentencing since the act of transferring covered both types of documents. The defendant should be charged in separate counts to ensure that upon conviction, he/she can be sentenced to the highest penalty allowed by 18 U.S.C. §1028(b). At times, you may have combined into one count the United States government identification documents and the non-federal identification documents in order to reach the required number of documents. If such was done, you must also allege the proper jurisdictional circumstance for the non-federal identification documents.

9-64.483 Form #2B - Transfer of a Birth Certificate, Driver's License or Personal Identification Card

On or about the _____ day of _____, 198____, in the _____ District of _____, the defendant, _____, did knowingly [attempt to] (1) transfer [, in and affecting interstate (and foreign) commerce,] (2) [and transported in the mail] (3) [a] [birth certificate(s)] [driver's license(s)] [personal identification card(s)] (4)(5) [false birth certificate(s)] [false driver's license(s)] [false personal identification card(s)], (6) to wit [describe the identification document(s)], knowing that such [birth certificate(s)] [driver's license(s)] [personal identification card(s)] [(was) (were) [stolen] (7) [and] (8) [produced without lawful authority]. UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Notes to Form #3A:

- (1) See note #1 to Form #1A on p. 37.
- (2) The term "with intent to use unlawfully" means the intent to use (i.e., present, display, certify, or otherwise give currency to) the identification document in any manner so that it would be accepted as identification in a manner that violates a federal, state, or local law, or is part of the making of a misrepresentation that violates a law. See House Report No. 97-802, 97th Congress, 2d Sess., pp. 10-11.
- (3) The term "with intent to transfer unlawfully" means the intent to sell, pledge, distribute, give, loan, or otherwise transfer an identification document in a manner forbidden by federal, state, or local law. See House Report No. 97-802, 97th Congress, 2d Sess., p. 11.
- (4) The possession of five identification documents with the intent to unlawfully use or transfer is punishable by imprisonment of not more than three years and/or a fine of not more than $15,000 under 18 U.S.C. §1028(b)(2)(B).
- (5) See notes #2 to Form #1A on p. 37, and #2 to Form #2A on p. 41. When genuine identification documents are involved, you will have to allege and prove that such documents were not issued lawfully for the use of the defendant.
- (6) See notes #3 to Form #1A on p. 37, and #3 to Form #2A on p. 41.
- (7) See note #4 to Form #1A on p. 37.
- (8) Since possession is a continuing offense, there should usually be only one count in an indictment for any violation of 18 U.S.C. §1028(a)(3). See also the discussion in note #9 to Form #2A on p. 42, when some other identification documents in addition to United States identification documents are being possessed.
- (9) It is possible to meet the five documents minimum by proving the possession of false identifications and genuine identification documents which the defendant was not lawfully entitled to possess so long as there are at least five documents. See also the discussion in note #9 to Form #2A on p. 42, when some other governmental identification documents in addition to United States identification documents are being possessed.

9-64.494 Form #3C - Possession with Intent to Defraud the United States

On or about the _____ day of _____, 198__, in the District of _____, the defendant, _____, did knowingly [attempt to] (1) possess [(an) identification document(s) (other than one(s) issued lawfully for the use of the (defendant))] (2)(3) [(a) false identification document(s)], (4) to wit [describe the identification document(s)], with the intent that such document(s) be used to defraud the United States. (5)(6)(7)

Notes to Form #3C:

- (1) See note #1 to Form #1A on p. 37.
- (2) This provision applies to any type of identification document regardless of which government issued it.
- (3) See note #5 to Form #3A on p. 46.
- (4) See notes #3 to Form #1A on p. 37, and #3 to Form #2A on p. 37.
- (5) The term "defraud" is to be construed broadly to cover not only "misrepresentations" but also to include the use of false identification to obstruct functions of the government. See House Report No. 97-802, 97th Congress, 2d Sess., p. 11.
- (6) The possession of an identification document with the intent to defraud the United States is a misdemeanor and is punishable by imprisonment of not more than one year and/or a fine of not more than $5,000 pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §1028(b)(3).

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION which document(s) [(was) (were)] [stolen] (5) [and] (6) [produced without authority], (7) knowing that such document(s) [(was) (were)] [stolen] (8) [and] (9) [produced without authority]. (10)(11)(12)

Notes to Form #3D:

(1) See note #1 to Form #1A.

(2) The term "was" or "were" should be used when the documents are "genuine," i.e., actually issued by a federal agency or would be in the case of a genuine blank document. Hence, in most cases, it will be used with "stolen" identification documents. It should be remembered that "stolen" covers documents acquired by fraud. Hence, this offense also applies to the possession of a genuine United States identification document which was acquired by fraud.

(3) The term "appeared to be" should be used where it is a "false" identification document. Genuine identification documents which have been altered should be considered as "false." See also notes #3 in Form #1A on p. 37 and #3 in Form #2A on p. 41.

(4) See note #4 in Form #1A on p. 37.

(5) See note #5 in Form #2A on p. 41.

(6) See note #6 in Form #2A on p. 41.

(7) See note #7 in Form #2A on p. 42. (Note: the absence of the word "lawful" appears to have no readily legislatively specified purpose.)

(8) Same as note #5 in Form #3C on p. 48.

(9) Same as note #6 in Form #3C on p. 48.

(10) Same as note #7 in Form #3C on p. 48.

(11) The possession of a stolen or unauthorizedly produced United States identification document is a misdemeanor and is punishable by imprisonment of not more than one year and/or a fine of not more than $5,000 pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §1028(b)(3).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-64.520 Venue

Generally, venue is appropriate in whatever district the prohibited act of production, transfer, or possession was performed. Offenses begun in one district and continued or completed in another district may be prosecuted in any district (18 U.S.C. §3237). Likewise, any offense involving the transportation in the mail or in interstate commerce can be prosecuted in any district from, through or into which the commerce or the mail moved (18 U.S.C. §3237). The venue for extraterritorial offenses involving the counterfeiting of United States identification documents outside of the United States is governed by 18 U.S.C. §3238.

9-64.530 Selection of Counts

Since the gist of the offense is either the production, transfer, or possession, it will often be necessary to combine numerous documents into a single count. Common sense should be used. Prohibited acts of production and transfer done at separate times and/or places can be treated as separate offenses. Since possession is generally a continuing offense, however, the proper number of counts for the entire duration of such possession under any one provision of 18 U.S.C. §1028(a) should normally be one. Production of different types of identification documents should be treated as separate counts since different tools were necessary to produce the documents. In regard to transfer and possession offenses, such activity may often involve both United States government identification documents and non-federal identification documents. To the extent that separate counts are factually provable, charge these offenses in separate counts. However, since the gist of the offense is the transfer or possession, the separate counts will probably be held to merge into the offense carrying the highest penalty permitted under 18 U.S.C. §1028(b). At times it may be necessary to combine United States government identification documents and non-federal identification documents in the same count to reach the required number of documents (e.g., a violation of 18 U.S.C. §1028(a)(3)). If such is necessary, you must allege the proper jurisdictional circumstance for the non-federal identification documents.

9-64.540 Other Federal Criminal Statutes

18 U.S.C. §1028 neither replaces nor supplants any existing federal statute relating to false identification crimes. For a listing of some such offenses, see House Judiciary Committee Report, H. Rep., pp. 3-4, n.l.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

See also Appendix E3 entitled "Federal Statutes Relating to the Use of False Identification" to "The Report of the Federal Advisory Committee on False Identification" (FACFI), "The Criminal Use of False Identification," United States Department of Justice, November 1976. The use of prior statutes may be warranted in certain situations, such as in plea bargaining or in the case where felony treatment is desired for fraudulently acquiring a United States identification document (see, e.g., 18 U.S.C. §1542 (false statement in application and use of passport)).

9-64.550 Investigative Responsibility

18 U.S.C. §1028 does not specifically assign investigative jurisdiction. The Department has developed investigative responsibility guidelines for the federal investigative agencies. Because of the extreme breadth of 18 U.S.C. §1028, both with respect to the types of documents and types of criminal activity in which such documents can be utilized, the drawing of crystal clear lines of responsibility was impossible. However, an effort has been made to ensure that agencies with current authority over false identification violations (i.e., as issuer of the identification document or the victim of its misuse) obtain the same jurisdiction under 18 U.S.C. §1028. Also, where the false identification is used in the commission of crime over which an agency has investigative responsibility, it is given ancillary jurisdiction under 18 U.S.C. §1028 over the use of the false identification in the commission of such offense. (Of course, any federal agency whose documents were used should be notified.) 18 U.S.C. §1028 will provide an excellent opportunity for cooperative investigative activity by federal agencies which are already, in most cases, being overtaxed. The major new area of federal crime under 18 U.S.C. §1028 relates to state and foreign government identification documents. Primary investigative authority for such state and foreign government identification documents is assigned to the Secret Service. The next page shows a chart reflecting investigative responsibility.

9-64.560 Exceptions for Law Enforcement Activities

18 U.S.C. §1028(e) provides that 18 U.S.C. §1028:

. . . does not prohibit any lawfully authorized investigative, protective, or intelligence activity of a law enforcement agency of the United States, a State, or a political subdivision of a State, or of an intelligence agency of the United States, or any activity authorized under title V of the Organized Crime Control Act of 1970 (18 U.S.C. note prec. 3481).

Title V is the basis of the Federal Witness Security Program administered by the U.S. Marshals Service in which persons who have cooperated with federal prosecutors and investigators, and who may be the subject of retaliation by the defendant or his/her confederates, are enabled to relocate and establish new identities for themselves and their families. The authorized production and transfer of identification documents by United States employees to protected persons and undercover personnel would be excluded from 18 U.S.C. §1028 as would the lawful use of these documents by the protected person, his/her family, and the undercover personnel. This subsection is intended to provide immunity analogous to that afforded in 21 U.S.C. §885(d), H. Rep., pp. 14-15. The term "lawfully authorized" describes functions approved in accordance with an agency's rules and practices. It does not excuse conduct by a law enforcement officer who has gone on a lark of his/her own.

9-64.570 Legislative History

There follows a chronology of legislative events which occurred in the 97th Congress which resulted in the enactment of 18 U.S.C. §1028:

A. January 5, 1981 - Congressman Hyde introduced H.R. 352 which was the descendant of the false identification bill recommended in the Federal Advisory Committee on False Identification report in 1976;

B. December 9, 1981 - Senator DeConcini introduced S. 1924 which for all practical purposes was identical to H.R. 352;

C. February 2, 1982 - Senator Humphrey introduced S. 2043 which was aimed at the youthful driver aspect of the drunk-driving problem. S. 2043 ultimately evolved into new 18 U.S.C. §1738.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

D. April 6, 1982 - Congressman Sawyer introduced H.R. 6105 which was a slightly modified version of S. 2043;

E. May 5, 1982 - The Subcommittee on Crime of the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives held a hearing on H.R. 352 and H.R. 6105. Deputy Assistant Attorney General John C. Keeney of the Criminal Division testified on behalf of the Department in support, with some modifications, of these bills;

F. June 16, 1982 - The Subcommittee on Criminal Law of the Committee on the Judiciary of the United States Senate held a hearing on S. 1924 and S. 2043. Deputy Assistant Attorney General Mark Richard of the Criminal Division testified on behalf of the Department in support, with some modifications, of these bills;

G. August 5, 1982 - The House Subcommittee on Crime introduces H.R. 6946 as a clean bill as a result of its mark-up of H.R. 352 and H.R. 6105;

H. September 10, 1982 - The full House Judiciary Committee passed H.R. 6946, expanded it to include present 18 U.S.C. §1028(a)(3) and (a)(4) and ordered House Report No. 97-802, 97th Congress, 2d Sess., to be printed. (This report is reprinted in the 1982 U.S. Code Cong. & Ad. News, starting at p. 3519);

I. September 14, 1982 - The full House passed H.R. 6946 as modified by the full Judiciary Committee and sent it to the Senate. See Cong. Rec., H 6940 - H 6943, (September 14, 1982);

J. October 1, 1982 - The full Senate added several provisions by floor amendments to 18 U.S.C. §1028 and included a modified version of S. 2043 in the version it passed of H.R. 6946. The House objected to H.R. 6946 as passed by the Senate and a Conference Committee was established. See Cong. Rec., S 13018, S 13019, H 8459, (October 1, 1982);

K. December 17, 1982 - The House agreed to the Conference Report on H.R. 6946. (H. Rep. No. 97-975, 97th Congress, 2d Sess.) (See Cong. Rec., H 10168, H 10169, (December 17, 1982.)) The Conference Report contains the new 18 U.S.C. §1738;

L. December 19, 1982 - The Senate agreed to the Conference Report and H.R. 6946 was sent to the President;

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

M. December 31, 1982 - The President signed H.R. 6946 and it became Pub. Law 97-398, 96 Stat. 2009 (December 31, 1982). It was effective at the time of signing.

The following changes were made to the original house version of 18 U.S.C. §1028 by agreement to the Conference Report:

1. 18 U.S.C. §1028(a)(6) was added;
2. In the definition of "identification document" in 18 U.S.C. §1028(d)(1), the concept of local government was relabeled as "political subdivision of a State," the term "political subdivision of a foreign government" was included, and the words "intended or" were inserted after "type";
3. In the definition of "State" in 18 U.S.C. §1028(d)(5), the phrase "any State of the United States" was added;
4. In 18 U.S.C. §1028(e), the word "political" was inserted before the word "subdivision."

9-64.600 FALSE IDENTIFICATION CRIME CONTROL ACT OF 1982 (CONT'D)

9-64.610 18 U.S.C. §1738 - Mailing Private Identification Documents
Without a Disclaimer

9-64.620 Purpose

18 U.S.C. §1738 is intended to allow the federal government to assist state and local authorities in dealing with the youthful driver aspect of the drunk-driving problem. It is aimed only at private identification documents, that is, those identification documents not issued by a government agency. To the extent, however, that a private entity issues identification documents which appear to be "governmental," the applicability of 18 U.S.C. §1028 should be considered, as Congress clearly intended to reach apparent governmental identification documents under 18 U.S.C. §1028. See H. Rep., pp. 6-7. 18 U.S.C. §1738 is a compromise reached in Conference between the Senate and the House on how far the federal government should regulate the issuance of private identification documents. 18 U.S.C. §1738 should be viewed primarily as a prophylactic statute. To the extent, however, that a violator has habitually violated or continues to violate this section, vigorous prosecution should be pursued.

9-64.630 Elements of the Offense

18 U.S.C. §1738 has these elements:

A. It applies only to those entities which are in the business of furnishing identification documents for valuable consideration. Hence, the entity must either sell or exchange the private identification document for money or other valuable consideration.

B. The identification document must be of the type that bears a birth date or age purported to be that of the person named in the identification document.

C. If the identification document bears a birth date or age purported to be that of the person named therein, it must fail to carry the disclaimer "NOT A GOVERNMENT DOCUMENT" printed clearly and indelibly on both the front and back of the document in not less than twelve point type (i.e., pica-approximately 1/6 inch-type); and

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

D. Such a document must, in the furtherance of such business activity, be transported or deposited into the mails or be caused to be transported in interstate or foreign commerce.

Hence, 18 U.S.C. §1738 would not apply to identification documents issued at walk-in photographic studios so long as they are picked up at such site or within the same state, provided, of course, that at no time are they sent in the mail. Nor would it apply to any identification document lacking the age or date of birth of the recipient.

9-64.640 Penalty

18 U.S.C. §1738 is a misdemeanor and carries a fine of not more than $1,000 and/or imprisonment not more than one year for each offense. The gist of the offense is that mailing or causing the transportation in interstate or foreign commerce of such an identification document without the proper disclaimer. Hence, if the printer sends two such documents in the same mailing, it is one offense. Separate mailings to different individuals, however, result in separate offenses, thereby permitting the charging of several counts and multiple penalties.

9-64.650 Draft Indictment/Information for 18 U.S.C. §1738

On or about _____ (date) in the _____ District of _____, (the defendant), being in the business of furnishing identification documents for valuable consideration and in the furtherance of that business, knowingly [used the mail for the mailing, carriage in the mails, and delivery of] (1) [caused to be transported in interstate (and foreign) commerce from _____ to _____] (2) an identification document which bore the [birth date] [age] (3) purported to be that of [name of person identified in the document], the person named in such identification document, knowing that such document failed to carry diagonally printed clearly and indelibly on both the front and back the words "NOT A GOVERNMENT DOCUMENT" in capital letters in not less than twelve point type.

Notes to Draft Indictments/Information for 18 U.S.C. §1738:

(1) To be used if transported by use of the U.S. mails (Note: there does not have to be any interstate transportation; intrastate transportation is covered if the mails are used).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

(2) To be used when the U.S. mails were not utilized. there must be an interstate or foreign transportation. This would cover the situation where some entity such as "Federal Express," "United Parcel Service," etc. was actually used to deliver the identification document. You should only allege "foreign" if such commerce was involved.

(3) Normally, the document will only specify a date of birth or an age. Most of the time it will be the date of birth, since a person's age continues to increase after the day of the issuance of the particular identification document and the document thereby loses its precision.

9-64.660 Venue

Venue is governed by the provisions of 18 U.S.C. §3237. Hence, violations may be prosecuted in any district where the mailing or transportation was initiated, continued, or concluded.

9-64.670 Investigative Responsibility

The U.S. Postal Inspection Service has investigative jurisdiction for an offense under 18 U.S.C. §1738 when the private identification document was transported through the United States mails. If some entity other than the United States mails (e.g., Federal Express, United Parcel Service, etc.) is used to transport the document in interstate or foreign commerce, investigative jurisdiction is with the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI).

The primary statutes relevant to protection of the President and other Secret Service protectees are as follows: 18 U.S.C. §871 - Threats Against the President; 18 U.S.C. §879 - Threats Against Former Presidents and Certain Other Persons Protected by the Secret Service; 18 U.S.C. §1751 - Presidential and Presidential Staff Assassination, Kidnapping, and Assault; 18 U.S.C. §1752 - Protection of Temporary Residences and Offices of the President and Others; 18 U.S.C. §3056(b) - Interference with Secret Service Agents.

9-65.120 Supervising Section

Supervisory authority over the above statutes rests with the General Litigation and Legal Advice Section of the Criminal Division. Attorneys responsible for the enforcement of these statutes can be reached at FTS 724-7144. Such attorneys should be telephonically notified immediately upon the initiation of any investigation under 18 U.S.C. §1751.

9-65.130 Investigative Jurisdiction

Investigative jurisdiction for violations of 18 U.S.C. §§871, 879, and 1752 rests with Secret Service while the FBI has jurisdiction over 18 U.S.C. §1751. Steps should be taken to insure that the FBI maintains close liaison with Secret Service throughout the conduct of investigations under 18 U.S.C. §1751.

9-65.140 Publicity: The "Contagion Hypothesis"

The "contagion hypothesis" is the theory that media attention given to certain kinds of criminal activity spawns further criminal activity. This theory appears to be substantiated where threats against the President are concerned. The U.S. Secret Service reported significant increases in the number of threats investigated following the attacks on President Ford by Lynette Fromme and Sara Jane Moore and the March 30, 1981, attack on President Reagan.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

To avoid possible adverse effects caused by the publicity concerning threats against the President, attorneys should be sensitive to this problem and exercise caution when considering the release of information concerning such threats. This exercise of caution should extend to secondary sources of press information as well (search warrants, affidavits, etc.), and the use of tools such as sealed affidavits should be considered.

(See also: USAM 1-5.545 Publicity Concerning Threats Against Government Officials.)

9-65.200 THREATS AGAINST THE PRESIDENT AND SUCCESSORS TO THE PRESIDENCY:
18 U.S.C. §871

Several decisions have cast new light on the scope of 18 U.S.C. §871 and the requisite intent which must be proved in prosecutions thereunder. Proof that threatening words were uttered in a context such that a reasonable person would interpret them as mere political hyperbole, idle talk, or jest indicates that the words do not constitute a threat within the scope of the statute. However, it is the view of the Department that an actual intent to carry out a threat is not a requisite to violation of the statute.

9-65.210 True Threats

In Watts v. United States, 394 U.S. 705 (1969), the Supreme Court limited the applicability of 18 U.S.C. §871 to situations involving the communication of a "true threat." At a political rally Watts had said, "If they ever make me carry a rifle the first man I want to get in my sight is L.B.J." This, the court held, taken in context amounted to mere indulgence in political hyperbole, and such speech is within the protection of the First Amendment.

Following the principle announced in Watts, the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, in Alexander v. United States, 418 F.2d 1203 (D.C. Cir. 1969), reversed a conviction under 18 U.S.C. §871 on the ground of instructional error, holding that neither idle talk nor mere jest qualify as a true threat. The court did not, however, criticize that portion of the instructions which indicated that the government need not prove that the defendant actually intended to carry out the alleged threat, an apparent determination to do so being sufficient. The Supreme Court in Watts had expressed grave doubt on the correctness of such instructions.

9-65.220 Intent To Carry Out Threat

In Roy v. United States, 416 F.2d 874 (9th Cir. 1969), the court dealt expressly with the issue of intent and held "...the statute to require only that the defendant intentionally make a statement, written or oral, in a context or under such circumstances wherein a reasonable person would foresee that the statement would be interpreted by those to whom the maker communicates the statement as a serious expression of an intention to inflict bodily harm upon or take the life of the President, and that the statement not be the result of mistake, duress, or coercion." The court noted the doubt expressed in Watts on this issue, but concluded that one purpose of the statute was to prevent hindrance of the President's movements, necessitated by the receipt of apparently serious threats against the President. This harmful interference is bound to ensue when the objective circumstances indicate need to take action for the protection of the President, regardless of the defendant's subjective intention. Thus the defendants claim in Roy that, on the eve of a Presidential visit, he called in a threat to a local telephone operator only as a joke and later so informed the operator, did not establish a defense. The operator had every reason to take the initial call seriously and the later explanation of the matter as a joke did not necessarily eliminate the mischief created. See also, United States v. Vincent, 681 F.2d 462 (6th Cir. 1982); USAM 9-65.260 (Threats Against Former Presidents and Certain Other Secret Service Protectees) infra.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-65.230 Conditional Threat

That an alleged threat was conditional does not ipso facto remove it from the purview of 18 U.S.C. §871. So much of the discussion of this question as appears in the lower court's opinion in Watts v. United States, supra, still appears sound. However, the use of conditional language is pertinent in evaluating the "threat" content of a statement. Such evaluation must take the full context of an alleged threat into consideration. Alexander v. United States, supra. Motive of the defendant may well be germane to the inquiry if communicated so as to become a part of the context. In a recent incident a state prisoner dispatched a threat letter with the motive of triggering his transfer to federal custody for violation of 18 U.S.C. §871. The prisoner's intent was to violate the statute and he succeeded though he will not obtain transfer. Had the prisoner made his motive known in advance to the persons from whom the prisoner expected responsive action, such knowledge could well, though not necessarily, negate interpretation of the statement as a serious expression of an intent to inflict harm. Other factors for consideration would include such matters as a audience reaction, intoxication, a history of mental illness unaccompanied by dangerous propensities, and capability of or preparations by the defendant to act upon his/her words.

To summarize, Watts, supra does somewhat narrow the application of 18 U.S.C. §871, but U.S. Attorneys should not decline prosecution on the ground of a lack of a defendant's subjective intent to carry out a threat. If a prospective defendant's conduct reasonably appears to amount to a serious expression of intent to inflict harm, action to prosecute should follow immediately. The need for prompt action in this type of case indicates use of complaint procedure unless some special circumstances requires direct resort to the grand jury.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-65.240 Competency Determination - Federal Facility

See USAM 9-65.463, infra.

9-65.250 Jury Instructions

Future jury instructions in trial of a violation of 18 U.S.C. §871 should include the substance of the quoted paragraph from Roy, supra. This same standard and the teaching of Watts, supra, should govern prosecutive determinations under the statute. As great caution must be taken in matters relating to the security of the persons protected by 18 U.S.C. §871, U.S. Attorneys are encouraged to consult with the Department when they have doubts on the prosecutive merit of a case. For the same reason, dismissal of complaints under 18 U.S.C. §871, when the defendant is in custody under the Mental Incompetency Statutes (18 U.S.C. §§4244, 4246), requires approval from the General Litigation and Legal Advice Section of the Criminal Division.

9-65.260 Threats Against Former Presidents, and Certain Other Secret Service Protectees

Public Law 97-297 (October 12, 1982) added a new section 879 to Title 18 U.S.C., which prohibits knowing and willful threats to kill, kidnap, or inflict bodily harm against the following categories of persons, all of whom are authorized to be protected by the United States Secret Service:

- A. Members of the immediate family of the President
- B. Members of the immediate family of the Vice President
- C. Former Presidents
- D. Wives, widows, and minor children of former Presidents
- E. Major candidates for the Office of President and Vice President

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

- F. Spouses of major candidates for the Office of President and Vice President
- G. Immediate families of the President-elect and Vice President-elect

The purpose of this statute is to prohibit threats against former Presidents and other Secret Service protectees not covered by the Presidential threat statute, 18 U.S.C. §871, or the protection of foreign officials statute, 18 U.S.C. §112. The U.S. Secret Service now has a legal basis for investigating and prosecuting threats against all categories of persons authorized to be protected under 18 U.S.C. §3056 and Public Law 90-331, 82 Stat. 170, as amended.

The legislative history notes that the term "knowingly and willfully," as used in 18 U.S.C. §871, has not been uniformly construed by the courts. Accordingly, an effort was made to clarify the term.

With regard to section 879, the Committee recognizes the need to protect the safety of protectees of the Secret Service and their ability to function free of fear. Moreover, the Committee recognizes the fundamental interests shared by all Americans in free and uninhibited speech, especially where public figures are concerned. Therefore, the Committee construes a threat that is "knowingly and willfully" made as one which the maker intends to be perceived as a threat regardless of whether he or she intends to carry it out. A prosecution under this section would not only require proof that the statement could reasonably be perceived as a threat but would also require some evidence that the maker intended the statement to be a threat.

Objective circumstances would bear upon the proof of both subjective intent and objective perceptions. For example, if a person were serving a term of life imprisonment without the possibility of parole and therefore objectively could not be perceived as presently able to effect a threat to kill a protectee next week, this circumstance should bear upon whether a communication by the person would be considered as "knowingly and willfully" made. In other words, objective circumstances can bear upon the question of subjective intent, as in a situation where a threatened act would be patently infeasible.

H. Rep. No. 725, 97th Cong., 2d Sess. 4 (1982) (footnotes omitted).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-65.300 PRESIDENTIAL AND PRESIDENTIAL STAFF ASSASSINATION
STATUTE - 18 U.S.C. §1751

9-65.301 Constitutionality

The constitutionality of 18 U.S.C. §1751 rests on the power of Congress to suspend the enforcement of state laws which interfere with the protection of a dominant federal interest in the same subject. Cf. Pennsylvania v. Nelson, 350 U.S. 497, 504-505 (1956). Conflicts of jurisdiction resulting from the commission of an independent state offense such as the wounding of the Governor, incidental to an offense against the President, are to be resolved on a case-by-case basis.

The provision does not diminish the existing authority and responsibility of the Secret Service for the protection of the President or for making arrests for violations of the act. 111 Cong. Rec. (1965). Thus, the Secret Service will continue to investigate all threats against the President (18 U.S.C. §871), but the Bureau will investigate all types of assaults and all actual kidnappings and killings. In addition, the Bureau will investigate conspiracies and attempts to kill or kidnap the President. Threats against the President involving two or more persons by a single individual will be investigated by the Bureau as conspiracies or attempts, respectively, if accompanied by any overt act, such as obtaining the instruments or means, to accomplish the threat.

9-65.302 Investigation; 18 U.S.C. §1751(i)

This section provides that:

Violations of this section shall be investigated by the Federal Bureau of Investigation. Assistance may be requested from any federal, state, or local agency, including the Army, Navy, Air Force any statute, rule, or regulation to the contrary notwithstanding.

9-65.310 Killing the President; President Elect, Vice President, Members of Presidential Staff - 18 U.S.C. §1751(a)

This section provides:

(a) Whoever kills (1) any individual who is the

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

President of the United States, the President-elect, the Vice President, or, if there is no Vice President, the next in the order of succession to the Office of the President of the United States, the Vice President-elect or any person who is acting as President under the Constitution and laws of the United States, or (2) any person appointed under section 105(a)(2)(A) of Title 3 employed in the Executive Office of the President or appointed under section 106(a)(1)(A) of Title 3 employed in the Office of the Vice President, shall be punished as provided by sections 1111 and 1112 of this title.

Public Law 97-285 (October 6, 1982) expanded the coverage of 18 U.S.C. §1751 to include senior members of the Presidential and Vice Presidential staffs, defined to include persons appointed under 3 U.S.C. §105 (a)(2)(A) and 3 U.S.C. §106 (a)(1)(A). The number of appointees in these positions is limited to a total of 30 persons. See H.R. Rep. 97-803, 97th Cong., 2d Sess. 4 (1982). In addition, the 1982 amendment provided that in a prosecution under this section, the government need not prove that the defendant knew the victim of the offense was an official protected by this section. Further, the amendment specifically provided for extraterritorial jurisdiction.

9-65.311 Murder - Definition And Degrees

18 U.S.C. §1751(a) incorporates by reference 18 U.S.C. §§1111 and 1112. 18 U.S.C. §1111 defines murder as the unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought, and divides it into two degrees. Murder perpetrated by poison, lying in wait, or any other kind of willful, deliberate, malicious, and premeditated killing, or committed in the perpetration of, or attempt to perpetrate any arson, rape, burglary, or robbery, or perpetrated from a premeditated design unlawfully and maliciously to effect the death of any human being other than him/her who is killed, is murder in the first degree, and is punishable by death unless the jury qualifies its verdict, in which event the punishment is life imprisonment. But see, Furman v. United States, 408 U.S. 238 (1972). Any other kind of murder is murder in the second degree and is punishable by any term of imprisonment including life.

9-65.312 Manslaughter Defined

18 U.S.C. §1112 defines manslaughter as the unlawful killing of a human being without malice. Manslaughter is of two kinds: voluntary, upon a sudden quarrel or heat of passion, and involuntary, in the commission of an unlawful act not amounting to a felony, or in the commission in an unlawful manner, or without due caution and circumspection, of a lawful act which might produce death. Voluntary manslaughter is punishable by imprisonment for not more than ten years, and involuntary manslaughter is punishable by a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than three years or both.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-65.320 Kidnapping The President; 18 U.S.C. §1751(b)

This section provides that:

Whoever kidnaps any individual designated in subsection (a) of this section shall be punished (1) by imprisonment for any term of years or for life, or (2) by death or imprisonment for any term of years or for life, if death results to such individual.

There has never been an attempt to kidnap a President, but it was felt that the full range of offenses against the President should be directly covered by federal statute.

9-65.321 Elements

18 U.S.C. §1751(b) does not define kidnapping nor does the Federal Kidnapping Act (18 U.S.C. §1201). However, it appears that the essential elements of the offense are the involuntary nature of the seizure and detention; Chatwin v. United States, 326 U.S. 455, 464 (1964). 18 U.S.C. §1751(b), like 18 U.S.C. §1201(a)(4) (kidnapping of protected foreign officials), does not incorporate transportation across a state line as an element of the offense. Rather, the jurisdictional basis for this statute is founded in the substantial relation which exists between the denounced acts and the execution of the powers of the executive branch of the United States government. Under the Incidental Powers granted to Congress by the "necessary and proper" clause, Art. I, Sec. 8, cl. 18, of the Constitution, it is universally conceded that Congress has the power to create, define, and punish crimes whenever necessary to effectuate the objects of the federal government.

The penalty for kidnapping the President is imprisonment for any term of years or for life. Without the kidnapping provision, federal prosecutive jurisdiction over the kidnapping of the President would be limited to the assault necessarily committed in seizing him/her. The maximum penalty for assaulting the President is imprisonment for ten years and a fine of $10,000. 18 U.S.C. §1751(e).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-65.330 Attempting to Kill Or Kidnap The President; 18 U.S.C §1751(c)

18 U.S.C. §1751(c) provides that:

Whoever attempts to kill or kidnap any individual designated in subsection (a) of this section shall be punished by imprisonment for any term of years or for life.

The proposed bill sought to punish "endeavors or attempts." The two terms were distinguished from each other: "[W]hile successful prosecution for an attempted killing would require proof of a preparation which came so reasonable close to consummation of the crime that it would have been executed had nothing interfered to prevent the further continuation of the activity, an endeavor is prosecutable as soon as an essay or effort has been expended to accomplish the killing." (Emphasis supplied.) The term "endeavor" was considered as meaning "to exert physical and intellectual strength towards the attainment of an object . . ." (emphasis supplied.) This definition was evaluated with a proposed penalty of up to fifteen years imprisonment as contrasted to a proposed penalty of ten years imprisonment for manslaughter. On the other hand, the term "attempt" was thought to have been so defined at common law as to have an acceptable definition. The term "endeavors" was deleted and this section of the legislation restricted to criminal attempts H. Rep P. No. 488, 89th Cong., 1st Sess. 1-2, 4 (1965).

Two concepts of criminal attempts have emanated from the Supreme Court:

To attempt to do an act does not, either in law or in common parlance, imply a completion of the act, or any definite progress toward it; any effort or endeavor to effect it will satisfy the terms of the law.

United States v. Quincy, 31 U.S. 445, 464 (1832) (dictum); cf. Giles v. United States, 157 F.2d 588, 590 (9th Cir. 1946); United States v. Ford, 34 Fed. 26, 27 (W.D. N.C. 1888).

(C)ombination, intention and overt act may all be present without amounting to a criminal attempt--as if all that were done should be an agreement to murder a man fifty miles away and the purchase of a pistol for the purpose. There must be dangerous proximity to success. But when that exists the overt act is the essence of the offensep Hyde v. United States, 225

Hyde v. United States, 225 U.S. 347, 384, 387-88 (1912) (dissenting opinion); cf. Swift & Co. v. United States, 196 U.S. 375, 402 (1905).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

Under the first formulation, soliciting another to sabotage machinery was held to be an attempt to cause sabotage, United States v. DeBolt, 253 F. 78 (S.D. Ohio 1918), and sending a letter to a contact in a foreign country inquiring whether the contact had any narcotics was held to be an attempt to import narcotics into the United States; United States v. Rebles, 185 F. Supp. 82, 85 (N.D. Cal. 1960). An evolution in the doctrine of attempt is suggested by comparing Robles, supra, with United States v. Stephens, 12 Fed. 52 (C.C. D. Ore. 1882), holding that sending a letter to a liquor dealer ordering 100 gallons of liquor was not attempt to introduce liquor into Alaska.

In cases applying the dangerous proximity doctrine, meeting a foreign agent with classified documents was held to be an attempt to deliver defense information; United States v. Coplon, 185 F.2d 629, 633 (2d Cir. 1950), and beginning a journey with a cargo of liquor was held to be an attempt to transport liquor into a dry state a hundred and fifty miles away, Gregg v. United States, 113 F.2d 687 (8th Cir. 1940); accord, Daniel v. United States; United States v. Duane, 66 F. Supp. 459 (D. Neb. 1946).

Without reference to either test, telling a bank clerk to hand over the money and there will not be any trouble, was held to be an attempt to take money by intimidation, United States v. Baker, 129 F. Supp. 684 (S.D. Cal. 1955). Also, arranging to purchase narcotics and going to the delivery point was said to be an attempt to purchase narcotics, United States v. Butler, 204 F. Supp. 339, 344 (S.D. N.Y. 1962)(dictum).

Under the Alaska attempt statute, which punishes any person who "attempts to commit any crime, and in such attempt does any act toward the commission of such crime, but fails, or is prevented or intercepted in the perpetration thereof," signing fraudulent vouchers and giving them to a confederate to present for payment was held to be an attempt to obtain money by false pretense. Lemke v. United States, 211 F.2d 53 (9th Cir. 1954), and sending another to collect a shipment of narcotics was held to be an attempt to possess narcotics, Simpson v. United States, 195 F.2d 721 (9th Cir. 1952).

The holdings, if not always the reasoning, of the more recent federal decisions, reflect the modern tendency to analyze attempts in terms of what has already been done rather than what remains to be done, in order to minimize the risk of substantive harm. See generally Model Penal Code, Art. 5 comment (Tent. Draft No. 10, 1960).

The American Law Institute, in drafting the Model Penal Code, rejected as too restrictive, the dangerous proximity doctrine, the physical proximity doctrine, the indispensable element test, the probable desistence test, the abnormal step test, and the res ipso loquitur test, and has proposed instead that:

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

A person is guilty of an attempt to commit a crime, if acting with the kind of culpability otherwise required for commission of the crime, he:

purposely does or omits to do anything which, under the circumstances as he believes them to be, is an act or omission constituting a substantial step in a course of conduct planned to culminate in his commission of the crime.

Model Penal Code, Art. 5, §5.01 (Proposed Official Draft 1962)

The direction of the development of statutory, if not case law also, is indicated by the discussion in S. Rep. No. 94-00, 94th Cong., 1st Sess (1975) (Committee on the Judiciary), of proposed section 1001 of the Criminal Justice Reform Act of 1975 (S.1) at pp. 171-172. The requirement would be proof of ". . . conduct that, in fact, amounts to more than mere preparation for, and indicates . . . intent to complete, the commission of the crime." Id. 171.

9-65.340 Conspiring To Kill Or Kidnap The President; 18 U.S.C. §1751(d)

This section provides that:

If two or more persons conspire to kill or kidnap any individual designated in subsection (a) of this section and one or more of such persons do any act to effect the object of the conspiracy, each shall be punished (1) by imprisonment for any term of years or for life, or (2) by death or imprisonment for any term of years or for life, if death results to such individual.

The conspiracy section is identical to the general conspiracy statute (18 U.S.C. §371) except that it is limited to the two objects of killing or kidnapping the President. This section does not preclude prosecution under the general conspiracy statute, but merely provides an increased penalty where the object of the conspiracy is to kill or kidnap the President. Cf. United States v. Bazzell, 187 F.2d 878, 885 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 342 U.S. 849 (1951). Conspiracy to kill or kidnap the President is punishable by imprisonment for any term of years or life, or by death if death results to the victim. The maximum penalty under the general conspiracy statute is imprisonment for five years and a fine of $10,000.

9-65.350 Assault; 18 U.S.C. §1751(e)

This section provides:

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

(e) Whoever assaults any person designated in subsection (a) (1) shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both. Whoever assaults any person designated in subsection (a) (2) shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than one year, or both; and if personal injury results, shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both.

There are several federal assault statutes (e.g., 7 U.S.C. §§60, 86; 18 U.S.C. §§111, 112, 113, 1153, 1501, 2113, 3242; 46 U.S.C. §§324, 701), but only in the Uniform Code of Military Justice has Congress undertaken to define the offense. Article 128 of the Uniform Code of Military Justice (10 U.S.C. §928) provides that any person who "attempts or offers with unlawful force or violence to do bodily harm to another person, whether or not the attempt or offer is consummated, is guilty of assault." The Committee which considered the present act contemplated that the term "assault" would be understood according to its established meaning in the criminal law. Hearings, supra, at. 35. The Supreme Court has said, in construing a criminal assault statute, that "an assault is ordinarily held to be committed merely by putting another in apprehension of harm whether or not the actor intends to inflict or is capable of inflicting that harm." Ladner v. United States, 358 U.S. 169, 177 (1958).

9-65.360 Definitions; 18 U.S.C. §1751(f)

This section provides that:

The terms "President-elect" and "Vice President-elect" as used in this section shall mean such persons as are the apparent successful candidates for the offices of President and Vice President, respectively, as ascertained from the results of the general elections held to determine the electors of President and Vice President in accordance with Title 3, United States Code, sections 1 and 2.

9-65.370 Rewards; 18 U.S.C. §1751(g)

This section provides:

The Attorney General of the United States, in his discretion, is authorized to pay an amount not to exceed $100,000 for information and services concerning a violation of subsection (a)(1). Any officer or employee of the United States or of any State or local government

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

who furnishes information or renders service in the performance of his official duties shall not be eligible for payment under this subsection.

One purpose of the rewards provision was to increase the amount payable for assistance in investigating offenses against the President. The general rewards statute (18 U.S.C. §3059) limits the amount payable for any violation to $25,000, whereas the Attorney General may pay up to $100,000 in rewards under the present statute.

The other object of the section was to make rewards immediately payable during the investigative stage of the case without waiting until arrest and conviction. As introduced, the bill authorized rewards "for information leading to the detection of any person for a violation of this section." As passed, the act authorizes rewards "for information and services concerning a violation of this section." The amendment was intended to make the reward authorization consonant with other statutory reward authority. H. Rep. No. 488, 89th Cong., 1st Sess. 5 (1965). The present statute actually conforms only to 39 U.S.C. §509, which authorizes "rewards for information and services in connection with violations of the postal laws" and is cast in broader terms than similar provisions. Compare 18 U.S.C. §3056 (services or information looking toward the apprehension of criminals); 18 U.S.C. §3056 (capture or information leading to arrest); 26 U.S.C. §7623 (detecting and bringing to trial and punishment).

Unlike other reward statutes, the present statute prohibits the payment of rewards to "[a]ny officer or employee of the United States or of any state or local government who furnishes information or renders service in the performance of his official duties."

9-65.380 Suspension Of State And Local Jurisdiction; 18 U.S.C. §1751(h)

This section provides that:

If federal investigation or prosecutive jurisdiction is asserted shall suspend the exercise of jurisdiction by a state or local law, until federal action is terminated.

The original bill provided that the assertion of federal jurisdiction "shall preclude the exercise of jurisdiction by a state or local authority . . . to such extent as the Attorney General of the United States shall direct." The purpose of this language was to invest the Attorney General with authority to preempt jurisdiction of offenses against the President when, and insofar as, he/she deemed it necessary to facilitate federal investigation and prosecution.

Before passage, the bill was amended to provide that the assertion of federal jurisdiction "shall suspend the exercise of jurisdiction by a state or local authority . . . until Federal action is terminated." The purpose of the amendment was to make it clear that there is no final preclusion of state jurisdiction but only a suspension which will terminate when federal investigative or prosecutive jurisdiction is terminated. 111 Cong. Rec. 18035 (1965). The suspension of jurisdiction does not prevent the states from cooperating with federal authorities in an investigation of violations of the act. S. Rep. No. 498, 89th Cong., 1st Sess. 2 (1965).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The original bill contemplated that federal jurisdiction would be asserted through a conscious and deliberate decision by the Attorney General expressly dealing with the matter. See Hearings, supra, at 74. The present act specifies state jurisdiction is suspended by the assertion of either investigative or prosecutive jurisdiction.

9-65.400 PROTECTION OF TEMPORARY RESIDENCES AND OFFICES OF THE PRESIDENT
AND OTHER SECRET SERVICE PROTECTEES - 18 U.S.C. §1752

18 U.S.C §1752 provides for the exercise of federal jurisdiction over disorders and misconduct in relation to Presidential residences, offices, and areas which are designated by the Secretary of the Treasury and restricted by regulations because the President may be or is located there for some period of time, however brief in duration, or in the absence of such a designation, notice is given by posting of signs or cordoning of the area.

Public Law 97-308 (October 14, 1982) expanded the scope of 18 U.S.C §1752 by extending criminal sanctions to violations of similar zones of protection established for the protection of other persons protected by the U.S. Secret Service. Those other persons are defined in 18 U.S.C. §3056 and Public Law 90-331, 82 Stat. 170 as amended (Major Presidential and Vice Presidential candidates and spouses). Violations of 18 U.S.C. §1752 and attempts and conspiracies to violate the section are punishable by a fine not to exceed $500 or imprisonment not exceeding six months or both. In addition, a knowing and willful interference with a Secret Service agent (without the element of force required by 18 U.S.C. §111) engaged in protective duties authorized by 18 U.S.C. §1752, may be prosecuted under 18 U.S.C. §3056, which now provides for a fine of $500 or imprisonment for not more than a year or both.

9-65.401 Constitutionality

Constitutional attacks on 18 U.S.C. §1752 would most likely fall in two categories that it is overbroad or vague or that it is in violation of the First Amendment.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

A defendant might try to argue that the section has a "chilling effect" on an individual seeking to demonstrate thereby impinging upon the free exercise of First Amendment rights, because there would be no way of predicting whether one's activities were actually violating the law or not. It is believed that the question of vagueness is overcome by the formal designation of the buildings and grounds that are subject of the regulations published in the Federal Register.

In addition to appropriate signs, giving notice of a temporary residence or of a restricted area, we understand that to meet the special problems of notice in merely restricted areas, the Secret Service will endeavor to post personnel in appropriate locations to give verbal notification to persons seeking to enter without authority or otherwise act in violation of the statute. It will still be possible to assemble peacefully wherever the President or the President's office is located. No longer, however, will Presidential security depend upon differing local ordinances.

The basic legal theory underlying the provisions of this statute is that of trespass. 18 U.S.C. §1752(a)(1), concerned with the right to enter and remain in certain areas, might be attacked by defendants contending that a conviction under this subsection would deprive them of their rights of free speech, assembly, petition, and due process of law and equal protection of the law. The government has the right to control presence on government property, and physical presence on the designated grounds is clearly covered by regulations. See Adderley v. Florida, 385 U.S. 39 (1966), which upheld the validity of the Florida trespass statute as it was applied to a demonstration on a non-public jail driveway and adjacent county jail premises. It is well established that because demonstrations involve conduct, they are subject to reasonable regulations when necessary to protect other legitimate government interests. See Cox v. Louisiana, 379 U.S. 559 (1965). In Edwards v. South Carolina, 372 U.S. 229 (1963), the Supreme Court held invalid a conviction of demonstrators under a breach of the peace statute because of the indefinite, loose, and broad nature of the statute. The Court pointed out, however:

We do not review in this case criminal convictions resulting from even handed application of a precise and narrowly drawn regulatory statute evincing a legislative judgment that certain specific conduct be limited or proscribed.

Edwards, supra, at 236.

18 U.S.C. §1752 is aimed at specific categories of conduct denounced in terms of reasonable specificity, that is knowingly and willfully. Indeed,

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

18 U.S.C. §1752(a)(1) is far more circumscribed than the general trespass statute upheld in Adderly, supra. The language of the Court in Adderly, supra, is applicable here:

The Florida trespass statute under which these petitioners were charged cannot be challenged on [vagueness grounds]. It is aimed at conduct of one limited kind, that is, for one person to trespass upon the property of another with a malicious and mischievous intent. There is no lack of notice in this law, nothing to entrap or fool the unwary.

Adderley, supra, at 42.

It is anticipated that First Amendment objections may well be raised as to the validity of 18 U.S.C. §1752(a)(2) which outlaws the intentional disruption of government business at designated residences and offices. It should be emphasized again that 18 U.S.C. §1752(a)(2) is not aimed at suppression of peaceful and orderly protests and does not apply where there is no disturbance of others and no disruption of government activities. See, United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 376 (1968), the dissent of Justice Douglas in Adderley, supra, and the opinion of the Court in Cox v. Louisiana, supra, discussing a Louisiana statute prohibiting picketing near a courthouse with the intent to obstruct justice. The Court stated:

We hold that this statute on its face is a valid law dealing with conduct subject to regulation so as to vindicate important interests of society and that the fact that free speech is intermingled with such conduct does not bring with it constitutional protection.

Cox, supra, at 564.

18 U.S.C. §1752(a)(2) might also be attacked with the argument that the phrase "within such proximity to" makes the statute unconstitutionally vague. However, the Court in Cox v. Louisiana, supra, upheld the language "near," in a statute prohibiting picketing "near" a courthouse, and stated that although it was clear there was some lack of specificity, the statute gave administrators a narrow discretion to construe the term and that demonstrators would rely on the administrative interpretation. The court stated it has recognized this type of narrow discretion as the proper role of responsible officials in making determinations concerning the time, place, duration, and manner of demonstrations.

18 U.S.C. §1752(a)(3) outlaws any intentional interference with ingress or egress to or from any of the buildings, grounds or areas specified in 18 U.S.C. §1752(a)(1). The Supreme Court upheld the Mississippi Anti-Picketing law which prohibits "picketing . . . in such a manner as to obstruct or unreasonably interfere with free ingress or egress to and from any country . . . courthouses . . .," in Cameron v. Johnson, 390 U.S. 611 (1968). Similarly, the Court held, in Schneider v. State, 308 U.S. 147, 161 (1939), that prohibition of conduct which has the effect of interfering with ingress or egress does not abridge constitutional liberty "since such activity bears no necessary relationship on the freedom to . . . distribute information or opinion."

TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-65.402 Investigative Responsibility

The Secret Service will conduct investigations of alleged violations of 18 U.S.C. §1752 and forward copies of all investigative reports to the U.S. Attorney and to the Criminal Division.

9-65.410 Protected Premises

9-65.411 Designation of Protected Premises

The statute authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to designate, by notice-type publication, buildings and grounds which constitute the temporary residences of the President and other Secret Service protectees, and the temporary offices of the President, his/her staff, and other Secret Service protectees, and to prescribe regulations governing ingress or egress to such buildings and grounds and to posted, cordoned off, or otherwise restricted areas where the President is or will be temporarily visiting. These designations and regulations are published in the Federal Register. Cf. 31 C.F.R. §§408.1 to 408.3. Information on the latest updating of the temporary residence regulations can be obtained from the Secret Service General's office (202-634-5771).

The statute makes it a misdemeanor for a person or group of persons to willfully and knowingly engage in certain conduct in violation of the statute or regulations issued thereunder.

9-65.412 Prohibited Acts - Designated Premises

18 U.S.C. §1752 prohibits the following acts:

With respect to buildings or grounds designated by the Secretary (31 C.F.R. §408.2) as a temporary Presidential residence or as a temporary office of the President and his staff-

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

- (1) willfully and knowingly entering or remaining therein violation of the Secretary's regulations;
- (2) willfully and knowingly obstructing or impeding ingress to or from the premises;
- (3) willfully and knowingly engaging in any act of physical violence against any person or property;
- (4) engaging in disorderly or disruptive conduct with the intent to disrupt or impede the orderly conduct of government business or official functions if such interference, in fact, occurs (proximity to, as distinguished from presence in, the designated premises is sufficient if each of the other elements is present).

9-65.413 Prohibited Acts - Other Premises

With respect to posted, cordoned off or otherwise restricted areas where the President is or will be temporarily visiting, in the absence of a notice-type publication, such posting, etc. must take place a substantial time in advance of the temporary visit, (see USAM 9-65.412(1), (2) and (3) supra).

9-65.420 Penalties, Venue, Effect On Other Laws

18 U.S.C. §1752 further provides: (1) maximum punishment of $500 or six months imprisonment, or both, for violation and attempt or conspiracy to violate the section; (2) for venue in the federal district court having jurisdiction of the place where the offense occurred; and (3) that none of the existing federal or local laws are superseded by the Act.

9-65.430 Local Law Enforcement

18 U.S.C. §1752 does not supersede any existing state (or federal) laws regarding the maintenance of order and the protection of persons and property in any jurisdiction. Local law enforcement agencies continue to have the responsibility to assist in providing protection to the President while the President is visiting their localities, to conduct criminal investigations involving violations of state and local statutes which result from a Presidential visit, and to furnish police officers in adequate numbers to control demonstrations and other disturbances occurring in close proximity to places where the President is visiting. S. Rep. No. 91-1252, 91st Cong., 2d Sess. 10-11 (1976).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Difficulties in proof of the elements of guilty knowledge or scienter required for violation of the statute may well leave local action as the only effective recourse in many instances, unless a previous ejection, other encounter, or special circumstances are present and will serve to prove the defendant acted willfully and with knowledge.

9-65.440 Sectional Analysis

9-65.441 Willfully and Knowingly

In 18 U.S.C. §1752(a)(1), (3) and (4) the phrase "willfully" and "knowingly" precedes description of activities prohibited thereunder. This clearly limits the reach of those provisions to acts of entering, remaining (18 U.S.C. §1752(a)(1)), obstructing, impeding (18 U.S.C. §1752(a)(3)), or engaging in physical violence (18 U.S.C. §1752(a)(4)), resulting from deliberate informed decision of the defendant to enter, etc. Accordingly, we find it difficult to conclude that proof of less than notice in fact of the designation or restriction of a place will suffice to establish a violation of these three subsections. Given an entry under sufficiently aggravated conditions, we might well test these issues by concurring in prosecution, despite inability to prove actual notice. However, as a practical matter, we suggest that U.S. Attorneys decline prosecution when the circumstances indicate the subject's honest ignorance of the fact of designation or restriction. Regulations designating places of temporary residence and governing ingress and egress thereto and to restricted areas have been published in the Federal Register as aforementioned. By obtaining judicial notice of such publication the benefit of certain presumptions follows, and publication is a fact tending to prove scienter but is probably not conclusive on the issue. See 44 U.S.C. §1507. References in the legislative history to such publication appear to address themselves more to the utility of publication in avoidance of a chilling effect on free speech and possible problems of vagueness than to provision of some form of constructive notice of knowledge. Publication enables those who would address the President by way of a demonstration to inform themselves in advance of applicable regulations and of places where demonstrating may involve risk of violating 18 U.S.C. §1752.

The decision of the Supreme Court in the case of United States v. International Minerals and Chemical Corporation, 402 U.S. 558, affords some guidance on the scienter issues discussed above. In that case the Department took the position that proof that one has knowingly violated regulations in the transportation of hazardous and dangerous materials did not require proof of actual knowledge of the regulations and specific intent to violate them. The court held that the word "knowingly" in the statute pertains to knowledge of facts and, where dangerous products are involved, the probability of regulation is so great that anyone who is aware that he/she is in possession of or dealing with them must be presumed to be aware of the regulation.

9-65.442 Other Elements

Aside from questions as to scienter, 18 U.S.C. §1752(a)(1) is essentially a "no trespassing" or "unlawful entry" provision, concerned with the right to enter and remain in certain areas. It reaches one who, in violation of regulations governing ingress or egress to places designated or enumerated in 18 U.S.C. §1752(a)(1)(i) and (ii), willfully and knowingly enters or remains in such a place. It is similar to a District of Columbia Code, Section 22-3102, which 40 U.S.C. §101 makes applicable to all public buildings and grounds belonging to the United States within the District of Columbia. It is also similar to 40 U.S.C. §193(f)(b)(1-3) dealing with unlawful entry on the United States Capitol grounds or in its buildings. There is no question as to the government's right to control such presence. Addeley v. Florida, supra.

9-65.443 Designated Temporary Residences Or Offices

The first places to which 18 U.S.C. §1752(a) applies is the buildings or grounds designated by the Secretary of the Treasury as temporary residences of the President or temporary offices of the President or (his) staff (31 C.F.R. §408.2). The places so designated are places utilized by the President with some repetition or for substantial or indefinite periods of time, thus making feasible an advance, formal notice-type publication of the fact of designation. Cross references in 18 U.S.C. §1752(a)(2) (disruptive conduct), 18 U.S.C. §1752(a)(3) (impending ingress and egress), and 18 U.S.C. §1752(a)(4) (physical violence) makes those subsections also applicable to such designated places.

9-65.444 Posted, Cordoned Off Or Restricted Area - Presidential Visit

In the second category of places is any posted, cordoned off, or otherwise restricted area where the President is or will be temporary visiting. This makes provision for protection of the President during his/her travels without requirement for advance formal designation. Again, cross reference in 18 U.S.C. §1752(a)(3) (impending ingress and egress) and 18 U.S.C. §1752(a)(4) (physical violence) makes those subsections applicable to restricted areas. However, 18 U.S.C. §1752(a)(2), (disruptive conduct) does not apply to temporary visit areas. See S. Rep. No. 91-1252, 91st Cong., 2d Sess. 2,9,11 (1976). The reason for exempting 18 U.S.C. §1752(a)(2) is not apparent from the legislative history. It appears to reflect at an accommodation to First Amendment considerations. Need for protection of a place of temporary visit from a disruptive demonstration is not so great as in the case of temporary residence or office and protection of the latter places imposes restriction on only a few places as opposed to the many places involved, albeit relatively fleetingly, in temporary visits.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-65.445 Disruption Of Government Business

18 U.S.C. §1752(a)(2) outlaws the intentional disruption of government business at designated residences or offices. This subsection is designed to require both an intent to impede or disrupt as well as an actual impedance or disruption. The intent requirement is not necessarily specific intent; a showing of reckless disregard of consequences would suffice. S. Rep. No. 91-1252, supra, at 11. Also, intent to disrupt one government function which in fact disrupts other government business would fall within the area proscribed by this subsection. The proscribed actions are, however, limited to disruptive or disorderly conduct. "Government business or official functions" does not include purely "political party" type business or functions. Of course, demonstrations at any temporary office of the President remain subject to state and local nuisance, unlawful entry and trespass laws. A count under this subsection requires allegation and proof of the fact of designation, but we see no basis for a requirement of proof of knowledge with respect thereto under this subsection.

9-65.446 Interference With Ingress And Egress

18 U.S.C. §1752(a)(3) outlaws any intentional interference with ingress or egress to or from any of the buildings, grounds or areas referred to in 18 U.S.C. §1752(a). 18 U.S.C. §1752(a)(3) is designed to assure the orderly flow of personnel and material. This provision is similar to 40 U.S.C. §193f (5)(6) dealing with the United States Capitol and buildings and grounds. There is no question as to the government's right to regulate crowds to preserve free ingress and egress to buildings. Similar "obstruction" statutes have been upheld by the Supreme Court. See, Cameron v. Johnson, 390 U.S. 611 (1968) and Cox v. Louisiana, 379 U.S. 536 (1965) and cases cited therein.

9-65.447 Violence Within Premises

18 U.S.C. §1752(a)(4) outlaws any intentional act of physical violence against any person or property within the buildings, grounds, or areas specified in 18 U.S.C. §1752(a)(1). The underlying concept of "violence" is force, and the word is frequently defined as meaning force, an abuse of force, physical force, force unlawfully exercised. It implies external physical contact. The statutory term "physical violence" therefore encompasses physical assaults on the person of another but not circumstances denoting only an intention of using force against a person.

9-65.448 Penalty And Venue

18 U.S.C. §1752(b) sets forth the penalty for a violation, and attempts or conspiracies to commit such violations.

18 U.S.C §1752(C) provides that violations will be prosecuted by the U.S. Attorney in the federal district court where the offense occurs.

9-65.449 Authority To Designate

18 U.S.C. §1752(d) authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to prescribe regulations designating buildings and grounds constituting temporary Presidential residences and regulations governing ingress or egress to such buildings or grounds or to areas where the President or certain other Secret Service protectees will be temporarily visiting.

9-65.450 Sectional Analysis (cont'd.)

9-65.451 Effect on Other Laws

18 U.S.C. §1752(e) specifically provides that the section does not supersede any of the laws of the United States or the District of Columbia. This is in accord with the intent of this section to provide a uniform minimum of Presidential protection in certain specified situations, and still rely upon other federal, state and local laws and ordinances for other forms of Presidential security. S. Rep. No. 91-1252, supra, at 14.

9-65.460 Other Considerations

9-65.461 General Services Administration

If the buildings constituting temporary offices of the President or the President's staff, or if a building the President is temporarily visiting is federal property under the charge and control of the General Services Administration, and disruptive conduct occurs on such property, violators may also be prosecuted for violation of General Services Regulations promulgated pursuant to 40 U.S.C. §318, found in Section 101-19.3 of Title 41, Code of Federal Regulations. These regulations have been held constitutional against attacks that they violate the First Amendment and are vague and overbroad in United States v. Akeson, 290 F. Supp. 212 (D. Colo, 1968); United States v. Sroka, 307 F. Supp. 400 (E.D. Wis. 1969); United States v. Cassiagnol, 420 F.2d 868 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 397 U.S. 1044 (1970).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-65.462 Executive Protective Service

Department Attorneys should also be aware of 3 U.S.C. Chap. 3 relating to the Executive Protective Service. The direction of the Executive Protection Service is a responsibility of the Director of the Secret Service and it performs such duties as the Director of the Secret Service may prescribe, including protection of any building in which Presidential offices are located. While the Executive Protection Service could therefore be utilized anywhere Presidential offices are situated, the Secret Service has indicated its primary responsibility will be to insure adequate protection from demonstrations and other large disturbances occurring in the Washington, D.C. area, particularly near foreign diplomatic missions.

9-65.463 Competency - Utilization Of Federal Facility

Because it is of the utmost importance that the President be fully protected at all times against the isolated deranged individual, if the mental competency of a violator of this section is in question, commitment to the Federal Medical Center, Springfield, Missouri, is recommended as an exception to the policy favoring utilization of the services of the local or nearest available psychiatrist or hospital.

9-65.464 Presidential Visit - U.S. Attorney's Responsibility

When a Presidential visit or sojourn is scheduled, the U.S. Attorney should be alert to indications of plans by individuals or groups which may result in activity in violation of 18 U.S.C. §1752. If such activity is anticipated, the U.S. Attorney should, after consultation with the appropriate office of the Secret Service, consider whether preventive measures such as a temporary restraining order would be useful and whether the U.S. Attorney should be present at the scene. The U.S. Attorney should also advise the Department of Justice in Washington, D.C., as early as practicable of the anticipated activity so that background information on the individuals or groups concerned which is available to the Department, may be furnished to the appropriate offices and agencies.

Although state and local ordinances differ as to the exact extent of their coverage, almost everything proscribed in 18 U.S.C. §1752 is presently outlawed in some form or other at the state or local level. 18 U.S.C. §1752 makes these activities a federal offense so that the Secret Service also has the authority to prevent such activities.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-65.500 INTERFERENCE OR OBSTRUCTION OF SECRET SERVICE - 18 U.S.C.
§3056(d)

18 U.S.C. §3056(d) (formerly 18 U.S.C. §3056(b), see Pub. L. No. 98-587, 98 Stat. 3110 (1984)), prohibits knowingly and willfully obstructing, resisting, or interfering with a Secret Service agent who is engaged in protective functions. This provision does not apply to interference with other federal officials, such as members of the Executive Protective Service, who might also be engaged in protective functions at Presidential offices or residences. It is presently a felony under 18 U.S.C. §111 forcibly to assault, resist, oppose, impede, intimidate, or interfere with federal law enforcement officers, including Secret Service agents, in the performance of their duties. Unlike 18 U.S.C. §111, 18 U.S.C. §3056(d) appears to require proof of knowledge of the victim's official status. Compare the similar distinction drawn between 18 U.S.C. §111 and 26 U.S.C. §7212 in United States v. Rybicki, 403 F.2d 599 (6th Cir. 1968). In prosecutions under 18 U.S.C. §3056, a showing of utilization of force by the defendant would not be necessary. It would suffice to show that the defendant's willful action constituted an obstruction or resistance to, or interference with, the performance of the protective duties of a Secret Service agent. See S. Rep. No. 1252, 91st Cong. 2d Sess. 14 (1970). This offense provides the authority for Secret Service agents to arrest persons who engage in activities which could nullify or reduce the effectiveness of security precautions taken by the Secret Service, without the necessity of establishing that such interference was forcible or aggressive in character.

18 U.S.C. §3056(d) applies only to those protective functions enumerated therein.

9-65.501 Investigative Responsibility

The Secret Service will conduct investigations of alleged violations of 18 U.S.C. §3056(d) and forward copies of all investigative reports to the U.S. Attorney and to the Criminal Division.

9-65.502 Supervising Section

The General Litigation and Legal Advice Section has supervisory responsibility over 18 U.S.C. §3056(d).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-65.600 ASSAULTS ON AND KIDNAPING OF FEDERAL OFFICERS

9-65.601 Supervisory Jurisdiction

Supervisory jurisdiction over the statutes relating to assaults on, kidnaping of, and murder of federal officers rests with the General Litigation and Legal Advice Section of the Criminal Division. Attorneys responsible for these statutes can be reached at FTS 724-7144.

9-65.602 Investigative Jurisdiction

All assaults on, kidnapings of, and murders of federal officers will be investigated exclusively by the FBI except:

A. The FBI does not, at the request of the Treasury Department, investigate assaults on, kidnapings of, or murders of any Treasury Department personnel. This includes Secret Service, ATF, IRS, and Customs. However, if the Bureau believes that its absence from a case is materially affecting the interests of justice, it is to call this to the attention of the Attorney General.

B. In accordance with the April 20, 1968, agreement between the Postal Service and Justice Department, investigative jurisdiction of offenses in Postal Service buildings against postal laws, or involving, among other things, offenses committed by postal employees, is with the Postal Service inspectors. In addition, inspectors also have investigative jurisdiction with respect to offenses involving the custody of the mails and personal property of postal employees. Thus, the responsibility for investigating the large majority of cases involving postal employees that can be expected to arise under 18 U.S.C. §111 will be with the postal inspectors. FBI investigation of assaults on, kidnapings of, and murders of Postal Service employees is limited to the following three situations: (1) assaults, kidnapings, or homicides of postal employees which are incidental to some other crime which is within the investigative jurisdiction of the FBI; (2) assaults, kidnapings, or homicides of Postal Inspectors believed to have been committed by persons who are not employees of the Postal Service; (3) in any other situation where the FBI is directed by the Department of Justice to investigate. All other assaults on, kidnapings of, or murders of postal employees are investigated by the Postal Service.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-65.610 Assaults In General

The primary statutes governing assaults and murder of federal officers are 18 U.S.C. §111 and §1114. However, the following additional statutes are applicable to specific categories of interference with or assaults on federal officers: 18 U.S.C. §245(b)(1)(C) (Forcible interference against a federal officer because of his/her official duties); 18 U.S.C. §372 (Conspiracy to Impede or Injure a Federal Officer); 18 U.S.C. §1859 (Criminal Interference with Surveyors of Public Land); 18 U.S.C. §3056 (Interference with a Secret Service Agent); 19 U.S.C. §70 (Obstruction of Revenue Officers by Masters of Ships); 21 U.S.C. §461(c) (Assaults on Poultry Inspectors); 26 U.S.C. §7212(a) (Assaults on IRS Agents); and 29 U.S.C. §629 (Interference with Department of Labor Compliance Personnel). The kidnaping of a federal officer named in 18 U.S.C. §1114 or designated by regulations issued by the Attorney General for coverage under 18 U.S.C. §1114 is a violation of 18 U.S.C. §1201(a)(5). (See USAM 9-65.630, infra.) The assaulting, kidnaping, or murder of a family member of certain federal officials is covered by 18 U.S.C. §115. (See USAM 9-65.900, infra.)

9-65.611 Requirement Under 18 U.S.C. §111 That the Act in Opposition of the Federal Officer be Forcible: Application of Statute to Threats

Section 111, Title 18 of the United States Code, punishes anyone who "forcibly assaults, resists, opposes, impedes, intimidates or interferes with any person designated in Section 1114 of Title 18 while engaged in or on account of the performance of his/her official duties." Judge Parker in Long v. United States, 199 F.2d 717 (4th Cir. 1952) said, "Congress has not left the matter in doubt but has specifically prescribed the use of force as an essential element of the crime."

Whether the element of force, as required by the statutes, is present in a particular case is a question of fact to be determined from all of the circumstances. The Long case indicates that a threat of force will satisfy the statute. Such a threat which reasonably causes a federal officer to anticipate bodily harm while in the performance of his/her duties constitutes a "forcible assault" within the meaning of 18 U.S.C. §111. See also Gornick v. United States, 320 F.2d 325 (10th Cir. 1963). Thus, a threat uttered with the apparent present ability to execute it, or with menacing gestures, or in hostile company or threatening surroundings, may, in the proper case, be considered sufficient force for a violation of 18 U.S.C. §111. These judicial decisions suggest a similar construction of the statutory words "resists, opposes, impedes, intimidates or interferes with."

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-65.612 Knowledge of Victim's Status as a Federal Officer in Prosecution Under 18 U.S.C. §111 and §1114

Under 18 U.S.C. §111 and §1114, knowledge by the accused of the official capacity of the victim is not an element of either offense. Of course, the government must prove the official capacity of the victim as a jurisdictional element, but is not necessary to prove that the accused had knowledge of such capacity. The necessity of proving the official capacity of the victim was not eliminated by the deletion through part K of chapter X of the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-473, 98 Stat. 2142 (1984), of the phrase "while engaged in the performance of his official duties," which had appeared three quarters of the way down section 1114's list of protected persons. This was only a technical correction since the phrase appears at the end of section 1114 and applies to all the listed persons. See S. Rep. No. 225, 98th Cong., 1st Sess. 328-29 (1983). Similarly, in prosecutions brought under 18 U.S.C. §371 for conspiracy to assault a federal officer, there is no requirement that the government establish knowledge by the defendant of the potential victim's official capacity. See United States v. Feola, 420 U.S. 671 (1975).

9-65.613 Applicability of 18 U.S.C. §111 and §1114 to Assault Upon and Killing of Informants

A typical informant, including a so-called "special employee," is not covered by 18 U.S.C. §§111 and 1114. 18 U.S.C. §§1512 and 1513 may be utilized for investigating and punishing most attacks on informants.

9-65.614 General Prosecutive Policy Under 18 U.S.C. §111

Through 18 U.S.C. §1114, the protection of 18 U.S.C. §111 is afforded to a diverse collection of federal government personnel. The primary focus of the department's enforcement program is on those employees who have law enforcement duties which regularly expose them to the public (e.g., agents of the FBI, DEA, ATF, Secret Service, IRS, Customs, Postal Inspectors, etc.) and on staff members of federal correctional institutions (see USAM 9-64.121). Without protection from assaults and other forms of forcible resistance, such persons can hardly be expected to perform their required functions effectively. Accordingly, forcible acts against this type of federal employee should be prosecuted vigorously. By contrast, offenses against other types of federal employees should be referred to the local prosecutor unless the offense is particularly aggravated or there are other unusual factors present justifying federal action.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-65.620 Assaults On Specific Officials

The federal officials protected from assault and murder include not only those enumerated in 18 U.S.C. §1114, but also any additional officials designated for coverage under 18 U.S.C. §1114 by regulations issued pursuant to the authority granted to the Attorney General by part K of chapter X of the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-473, 98 Stat. 2142 (1984). Such a regulation is to be included in Title 28 of the Code of Federal Regulations.

9-65.621 Assaults on Staff Members of Federal Penal and Correctional Institutions

U.S. Attorneys in those districts where federal penal and correctional institutions are located should give special prosecutive attention to cases involving assaults on staff members. Assaults by inmates upon federal officers are considered most serious offenses. In order to deter such acts, to show support for the federal employees working in these hazardous assignments, and thereby to strengthen the operation of the correctional segment of the department's criminal justice program, prompt and vigorous prosecution of cases involving inmate assaults upon employees should be pursued.

The foregoing policy does not eliminate the necessity of reviewing a prospective defendant's file and consulting with institution authorities to rule out the existence of factors which would tend to favor declination of prosecution under 18 U.S.C. §111 for such an incident. Such factors would include; amount of good time subject to forfeiture, possible vacation of any suspension of sentence, effort of the incident on parole eligibility, and local conditions tending to mitigate or extenuate culpability. In some cases prosecution under 18 U.S.C. §751 and §1791 may prove a useful adjunct or alternative to prosecution under 18 U.S.C. §111

9-65.622 Assaults on Postal Employees

The Department of Justice did not support the amendment of 18 U.S.C. §1114, which brought all Postal Service employees within the protection afforded in 18 U.S.C. §111. The amendment creates federal jurisdiction over a substantial number of offenses which do not normally call for federal prosecution under the general guidelines discussed above. Accordingly, some special attention needs to be given to the processing of offenses in this area.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Consideration must be given to the selection of those investigations which will be presented to the U.S. Attorneys for their prosecutive determination. The Post Office inspectors will benefit from some guidance in this regard, for their reports are prepared differently depending upon whether presentation will be made to a U.S. Attorney or, as an alternative, to a local prosecutor. In addition, the presentment to and declination by a U.S. Attorney of prosecution in an investigation tends to lessen the ardor of a local prosecutor who is subsequently presented with the same investigation.

Care must be taken to distinguish the three different types of violations of 18 U.S.C. §111 relating to postal employees. These types are: (1) those assaults involving postal inspectors; (2) those involving assaults on non-inspector postal employees by members of the public; and (3) those involving an assault by one postal employee upon another postal employee.

Postal inspectors are engaged in the investigation of cases and because of the importance of their investigative role all potential violations of 18 U.S.C. §111 involving postal inspectors should be presented to the U.S. Attorney's office rather than to a local prosecutor. The efficient operations of postal inspectors can be significantly impaired by forcible assaults or obstructions. Consequently, such instances should be considered high priority cases for prosecution.

With regard to the other two classes of assaults involving postal employees, it does not appear necessary that all of these possible cases be presented to a U.S. Attorney for evaluation. Well under half of the total incidents occurring in these classes involve physical abuse. It should be noted from the legislative history of the statute that the sponsor of the original legislation stated that the "chief thrust" of the legislation "is to give protection against forcible assault." It would appear that incidents which do not involve physical abuse could best be handled by local courts as either civil or criminal proceedings or by the administrative remedies of the Post Office Department. Accordingly, we have asked the Chief Postal Inspector's office not to present to the U.S. Attorney's office for evaluation those matters which do not involve a physical injury which is of such substantial character that the extent of the injury can be demonstrated and conveyed to a jury in a trial in the event that such case is accepted for prosecution.

Even as to demonstrable physical assaults by members of the public on postal employees, the local courts may well afford a sufficient remedy. It is requested that the U.S. Attorney's office evaluate and compare the capability of both the local and federal courts to render an appropriate and expeditious remedy and such cases be accepted or declined for federal prosecution according to that evaluation. It is not intended that the U.S. Attorney's office accept for prosecution such physical abuse cases unless some significant deficiency in the local court remedy is apparent.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-65.623 Assaults Between Postal Employees

Turning to those physical assaults between postal employees, it is requested that prosecutive consideration be given only to those incidents which originate from and continue in such a manner as to involve job-related disputes without significant fault of the victim. Those physical assaults originating from or substantially involving personal matters not related to their employment or which involved significant fault on the part of the victim should be referred to the local prosecutor or handled administratively by the Post Office Department.

9-65.624 Assaults Upon Internal Revenue Service Personnel

Prosecutions of assaults upon Internal Revenue Service personnel can be instituted under either 18 U.S.C. §111 or 26 U.S.C. §7212(a). The latter statute provides a particularly helpful alternative in cases where there is simply an offer of violence unaccompanied by the potential for imminent use of physical force. In contrast to 18 U.S.C. §111 where it is necessary to establish that the defendant forcibly assaulted, resisted, opposed, impeded, intimidated, or interfered with the federal officer under 26 U.S.C. §7212(a) a mere threat of force, including a threat conveyed by letter, is sufficient to constitute an offense. However, to constitute a violation of this statute, the statement must be a true threat as opposed to simply a coarse statement of opposition to the practices of the IRS and its agents. See Watts v. United States, 394 U.S. 705, 708 (1969). Further, unlike 18 U.S.C. §111, 26 U.S.C. §7212(a) requires that the government establish knowledge by the defendant of the IRS agent's official capacity. United States v. Johnson, 462 F.2d 423 (3d Cir. 1972), cert. denied, 410 U.S. 937; United States v. Rybicki, 403 F.2d 599 (6th Cir. 1968). Normally, prosecutions should be instituted under this statute only when the nature and gravity of the threat is sufficient to impede operations of the IRS. Prosecutions should generally not be undertaken in instances of picayune threats in which the only purpose to be served is to shield IRS agents with a special inviolability not accorded other federal investigative agents.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-65.630 Kidnaping of Federal Officers

9-65.631 Kidnaping In General

Kidnaping of federal officers was added to 18 U.S.C. §1201(a)(5) by part F of chapter X of the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984 (Pub. L. No. 98-473 98 Stat. 2139 (1984)). The Congress determined that the kidnaping of any of the federal officers and employees listed in or designated under 18 U.S.C. §1114 should be a federal crime. Such persons are generally engaged in law enforcement or similar work which can bring them into hostile encounters with the public solely because of their work as federal employees. Moreover, their status could make them targets for a hostage taking by a terrorist or subversive group. See S. Rep. No. 225, 98th Cong., 1st Sess. 318 (1983). (For discussions on kidnaping in general and the crime of hostage taking in particular, see USAM 9-60.100 and 9-60.700, respectively.)

9-65.632 Offense

Section 18 U.S.C. §1201(a)(5) provides:

Whoever unlawfully seizes, confines, inveigles, decoys, kidnaps, abducts, or carries away and holds for ransom or reward or otherwise any person, except in the case of a minor by the parent thereof, when . . . (5) the person is among those officers and employees designated in section 1114 of this title and any such act against the person is done while the person is engaged in, or on account of, the performance of his official duties. . . .

The gist of the offense is the kidnaping of a designated federal official which is done while the federal officer is engaged in, or on account of, the performance of his/her official duties. Unlike 18 U.S.C. §1201(a)(4) relating to the kidnaping of internationally protected persons (see USAM 9-65.830, infra), there is no attempt provision for 18 U.S.C. §1201(a)(5).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-65.633 Applicability of Case Law Under 18 U.S.C. §1111 and §1114

The term "engaged in or on account of the performance of official duties" is a limitation which is identical to that contained in 18 U.S.C. §1111 and 18 U.S.C. §1114, which proscribe assaults on federal officers and murder of federal officers, respectively. The Congress expressly intends that the body of law that has developed concerning the meaning of that term in reference to these two statutes apply here. See S. Rep. No. 225, 98th Cong., 1st Sess. 318 (1983).

9-65.634 Penalty

The penalty for a violation of 18 U.S.C. §1201(a)(5) is imprisonment for any term of years or life. For any offense committed after December 31, 1984, a fine up to $250,000 is also possible. (See 18 U.S.C. §3623 (Alternative fines) (Criminal Fine Enforcement Act of 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-596, 98 Stat. 3134 (1984)).

9-65.700 CONGRESSIONAL, CABINET, AND SUPREME COURT ASSASSINATION, KIDNAPING, AND ASSAULT (18 U.S.C. §351)

9-65.701 Supervisory Jurisdiction

Supervisory jurisdiction for this statute rests with the General Litigation and Legal Advice Section of the Criminal Division. Attorneys responsible for the enforcement of the statute can be reached at FTS 724-7144. Such attorneys should be notified telephonically immediately upon the initiation of an investigation under this statute.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-65.702 Investigative Responsibility; 18 U.S.C. §351(g)

18 U.S.C. §351(g) assigns investigative jurisdiction to the FBI and further provides that the FBI may request investigative assistance from any federal, state, or local agency including the Army, Navy, and Air Force. This latter provision overcomes the effect of 18 U.S.C. §1385, which generally prohibits use of any part of the Army or Air Force as a pos commitatus or otherwise to execute the law.

9-65.703 Background

The Omnibus Crime Control Act of 1970, Pub. L. No. 91-644, 84 Stat. 1891 (1971), established a new section §351 of Title 18 U.S.C. which prohibited killings, kidnappings, and assaults of Members of Congress or Members of Congress-elect. The scope of the statute was expanded by Pub. L. No. 97-285, 96 Stat. 1219 (1982), to include the following categories:

A. Cabinet officer defined as a member of the executive branch of government who is the head of a department listed in 5 U.S.C. §101, nominees to such positions, and the second ranking official in such departments.

B. Director of Central Intelligence or nominee to be Director of Central Intelligence, and the Deputy Director of Central Intelligence.

C. Justices of the United Supreme Court and persons formally nominated to fill a vacancy on the Court.

18 U.S.C. §351 makes it a federal offense to kill or kidnap any individual within the above listed categories, to attempt or conspire to commit such offenses, or to assault any such individual.

In enacting this legislation, the Congress acted well within its constitutional powers. There is a strong federal interest in vindicating crimes of violence directed at members of Congress, Cabinet members and Justices of the Supreme Court. Under the incidental powers granted to Congress by the "necessary and proper" clause, Art. I, Sec. 8, cl. 18 of the Constitution, it is clear that Congress has the power to create, define and punish crimes and offenses whenever necessary to effectuate the objects of the federal government. See, United States v. Calderon, 655 F.2d 1037 (10th Cir. 1981).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The 1982 amendment to 18 U.S.C. §351 added a new subsection (h) which provides that in a prosecution under this section, the government need not prove that the defendant knew the victim was an official protected by this section. In addition, a new subsection (i) of 18 U.S.C. §351 specifically provides for extraterritorial jurisdiction over the conduct prohibited by this section. Prior to this amendment, extraterritorial jurisdiction was assumed. United States v. Layton, 509 F. Supp 212 (N.D. Cal.), appeal dismissed, 645 F.2d 681, cert. denied, 452 U.S. 972 (1981).

9-65.710 Killing Individuals Designated in 18 U.S.C. §351(a)

The killing of an individual designated by 18 U.S.C. §351(a) is punishable as provided in 18 U.S.C. §1111 and §1112. These sections must be consulted for definitions of the substantive homicide offenses and the applicable penalties.

9-65.711 Member Of Congress - Defined

A Member of Congress has been defined as "one who is a component part of the Senate or House of Representatives . . . one who is sharing the responsibilities and privileges of membership." United States v. Dietrich, 126 F. 676, 681 (8th Cir. 1904). It is Criminal Division's view that the membership of Congress includes not only the presently constituted membership of one hundred Senators and four hundred thirty-five Representatives, but also those representatives or delegates for special geographical divisions who are extended the privileges of membership, such as the Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico and the Non-Voting Delegate from the District of Columbia. See, Act of September 1970, Public Law 91-405, Title II, section 202(a), 84 Stat. 845 (Non-Voting Delegate from the District of Columbia to have privileges granted to Representative).

Note: Also, in Criminal Division's view the Vice President would be classed as a Member of Congress. However, any prosecutions for incidents involving this official should be pursued under 18 U.S.C. §1751, the Presidential assassination statute, so as to allow use of the more liberal assault provisions and reward provision contained in the statute.

9-65.712 Member Of Congress-Elect - Defined

A Member of Congress-Elect is one who has been certified by the usual

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

state, or local, certifying official, as having been elected to one of the offices discussed above. This term does not encompass a Senator appointed under the 17th Amendment, pending his/her entry upon the office, though, of course, thereafter he/she is a member.

Unlike 18 U.S.C. §1114 (protection of officers and employees of the United States) these provisions do not require that the attack occur while the victim is engaged in, or be on account of the performance of his/her official duties. Therefore, any incident involving a Member of Congress or Member of Congress-Elect, would be within these provisions regardless of the timing or motive of the attack in question.

As with 18 U.S.C. §1114 and §1751, the official status of the victim is merely the basis upon which federal jurisdiction is asserted. Knowledge of the official status of the victim is not an element of the offense itself. See, United States v. Feola, 420 U.S. 671 (1975); Hearings on H.R. 6097 Before a Subcomm. of the House Comm. on the Judiciary, 89th Cong., 1st Sess. 33 (1965).

9-65.713 Executive Branch Members

By its terms, the statute applies to "a member of the executive branch of the government who is the head, or a person nominated to be head during the pendency of such nomination, of a department listed in section 101 of Title 5, or the second ranking official in such department."

In addition, the statute applies to the Director of Central Intelligence, a person nominated to be Director during pendency of such nomination, or the Deputy Director of Central Intelligence.

9-65.714 Justices of the United States

The 1982 amendment expressly includes Supreme Court Justices and nominees to the Court within the coverage of 18 U.S.C. §351. This provision was deemed necessary because of the uncertainty as to whether a Supreme Court Justice is considered a "judge of the United States" within the meaning of 18 U.S.C. §114. See 28 U.S.C. §451.

9-65.720 Kidnapping: 18 U.S.C. §351(b)

Whoever kidnaps any individual designated in subsection (a) of this section shall be punished (1) by imprisonment for any term of years or for life, or (2) by death or imprisonment for any term of years or for life, if death results to such individual.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

As with the Federal Kidnapping Act (18 U.S.C. §1201) this statute does not attempt to define the term "kidnap." However, it appears that the essential elements of the offense are the involuntary nature of the seizure and detention. Chatwin v. United States, 326 U.S. 455, 464 (1964). To the extent that transportation is deemed to be an element of kidnapping under this statute, any significant transportation should suffice, Cf. 2 Bish. Criminal Law, section 750 (9th Ed.). Analogizing this statute to 18 U.S.C. §1201(a)(4) (kidnapping of protected foreign officials), it does not appear that transportation across a state line is an element of the offense. Rather, the jurisdictional basis for this statute is founded in the substantial relation which exists between the denounced acts and the execution of the powers of Congress. In any event, the term is used in its generic sense in this statute and to fulfill the purpose intended by Congress, protection of its members, it should be given a broad scope and should not be limited by geographical considerations beyond the possible element of "carry away" the victim.

Although 18 U.S.C. §351(b) provides that the death penalty may be imposed if death results to the victim, it is the Department's position that the death penalty cannot be legally obtained in light of Furman v. Georgia, 408 U.S. 238 (1973).

9-65.730 Attempts to Kill or Kidnap: 18 U.S.C. §351(c)

Whoever attempts to kill or kidnap any individual designated in subsection (a) of this section shall be punished by imprisonment for any term of years or for life.

Refer to USAM 9-65.330 supra, for a discussion of the term "attempt".

9-65.731 Dangerous Proximity Test

The dangerous proximity test adopted by Judge Learned Hand in a case in which the defendant was arrested before passing classified government documents, which were in the defendant's purse, to her paramour.

[P]reparation is not attempt. But some preparations may amount to an attempt. It is a question of degree. If the preparation comes very near to the accomplishment of the act, the intent to complete it renders the crime so probable that the act will be a misdemeanor, although there is still a locus poenitentiae, in the need of a further exertion of the will to complete the crime.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

United States v. Coplon, 185 G.2d 629, 633 (2d Cir. 1950), (quoting Holmes, J., in Commonwealth v. Peaslee, 177 Mass. 267, 272 (1901)), cert. denied., 342 U.S. 920 (1952)).

9-65.732 Any Act Or Endeavor Test

This test, a more recent development, can be found in a case in which a defendant was charged with using communication facilities in attempting to commit the crime of illegally importing narcotic drugs, having mailed a letter to a Mexican manufacturer of heroin in which the defendant asked to purchase some. The court said:

To attempt to do an act does not imply a completion of the act, or in fact any definite progress toward it. Any effort or endeavor to effect the act will satisfy the terms of the law. United States v. Robles, 185 F. Supp. 82, 85 (N.D. Cal., 1960).

This position must be examined with an eye to those cases which have striven to distinguish the terms "attempt" and "endeavor", thereby forcing a definition of the former term in much the same terms as under the dangerous proximity test. See, Osborn v. United States, 385 U.S. 322, 333, reh'g denied, 386 U.S. 938 (1966). The gravity of the violations encompassed by the statute would indicate the propriety of prosecution as an attempt for conduct which might as to other violations be considered mere preparation or endeavor.

Inasmuch as the assault provision of this statute, 18 U.S.C. §351(e), makes no provision for aggravated assaults (i.e., assault by use of a deadly or dangerous weapon) and since the penalty for assaults not resulting in personal injury is so light, consideration should be given to prosecuting as an attempted killing, when a deadly or dangerous weapon is involved in an incident where no injury results.

9-65.740 Conspiracy To Kill Or Kidnap - 18 U.S.C. §351(d)

If two or more persons conspire to kill or kidnap any individual designated in subsection (a) of this section and one or more of such persons do any act to effect the object of the conspiracy, each shall be punished (1) by imprisonment for any term of years or for life, or (2) by death or imprisonment for any term of years or for life, if death results to such individual.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

This provision tracks the general conspiracy statute (18 U.S.C. §371) except that it is limited to the two objects of killing or kidnapping a Member of Congress. 18 U.S.C. §351(d) does not preclude prosecution under the general conspiracy statute, but merely provides an increased penalty where the object of the conspiracy is to kill or kidnap a Member of Congress. See, United States v. Bazzell, 187 F.2d 878, 885 (7th Cir.), cert. denied., 342 U.S. 849 (1951). Conspiracy to kill or kidnap a Member of Congress is punishable by imprisonment for any term of years or life, or by death if death results to the victim, while the maximum penalty under 18 U.S.C. §371 would be a $10,000 fine and five years imprisonment. But see, Furman v. Georgia, 408 U.S. 238 (1972).

9-65.750 Assault: 18 U.S.C. §351(e)

Whoever assaults any person designated in subsection (a) of this section shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than one year, or both; and if personal injury results, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both.

Absent a statutory definition of assault, the courts have looked to the common law and have concluded that an "assault" is:

An attempt with force or violence to do a corporal injury to another; may consist of any act tending to such corporal injury, accompanied with such circumstances as denotes at the time an intention, coupled with present ability, of using actual violence against the person.

Guarro v. United States, 237 F.2D 578, 580 (D.C. Cir. 1956).

But, of course, an assault can also be committed "merely by putting another in apprehension of harm whether or not the actor actually intends to inflict, or is capable of inflicting that harm." Ladner v. United States, 358 U.S. 169, 177 (1958). Proof of this form of assault requires establishment of a reasonable apprehension of the immediate application of force to the victim. In a recent case brought under 18 U.S.C. §111, the court properly granted a judgment of acquittal where the evidence showed only a confrontation between the victim and defendant which was ended by the defendant's saying in effect "you've had your warning, we'll get you." While there was a background of previous violence in the case from which an implication of force could be found, absent some additional circumstance the words alone carry insufficient connotation of force. In addition the force, if any, was for application in the future, not immediately. Accordingly, at best the defendant's acts were a mere threat, conduct not generally covered by federal law (but see, e.g., 18 U.S.C §§372, 876). Note also that a condition in an offer of violence may negate the element of apprehension.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

For an excellent discussion of this concept see Watts v. United States, 402 F.2d 878 (D.C. Cir. 1968), reversed on other grounds, 194 U.S. 705 (1969).

Unlike 18 U.S.C. §1751, the assault provision of 18 U.S.C. §351(e) divides assaults into two categories, those that result in personal injury, and all others. If personal injury occurs, then the penalty is a maximum of ten years imprisonment and a fine of $10,000. In all other cases the maximum penalty is one year imprisonment and a fine of $5,000. Undoubtedly, the injury cited would have to be to the Member of Congress and not to a third party who may be the unfortunate recipient of a blow aimed at a Member of Congress.

From the debate on the Senate floor, it is apparent that Senator's Ervin's motion to amend this section in this matter was prompted by his desire to exclude simple assaults from the higher penalty provision. 116 Cong. Rec., 35655 (1970). Senator Ervin suggested that if a person strikes at a Member of Congress with his/her fist without landing the blow, or does strike the Member of Congress with his/her open hand then he/she should be guilty of the lesser offense. 116 Cong. Rec., supra. Of course, if a Member of Congress is injured by the open hand, more than just momentary pain, then the high penalty could be sought in that case.

As the statute does not provide for aggravated assaults, involving use of deadly or dangerous weapons without inflicting personal injury, applicability or the attempted homicide provision should be considered in those cases wherein the penalty for simple assault appears unsuitable.

9-65.760 Federal Investigative And Prosecutive Jurisdiction; 18 U.S.C. §351(f) - Effect On State And Local Authority

If federal investigative or prosecutive jurisdiction is asserted for a violation of this section, such assertion shall suspend the exercise of jurisdiction by a State or local authority, under any applicable State or local law, until Federal action is terminated.

When and if federal investigative or prosecutive jurisdiction is asserted, this provision suspends state or local jurisdiction in cases of possible violation of 18 U.S.C. §351, until all federal action is terminated. This is within the powers delegated to Congress under the Constitution, as it has long been established that the enforcement of state laws which interfere with the protection of a dominant federal interest in the same subject, as we have here, can be suspended by federal law. See, Pennsylvania v. Nelson, 350 U.S. 497, 504-505 (1956).

Although this section suspends state action, it does not prevent the states from cooperating with federal authorities in an investigation of violations of the act. See 18 U.S.C. §351(g). In addition, state action is only suspended until the federal action is terminated.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

Conflicts of jurisdiction resulting from the commission of an independent state offense, such as the wounding of a state official, incidental to an offense against a Member of Congress, are to be resolved on a case-by-case basis.

9-65.770 Authorization For Interception Of Wire Or Oral Communications; —
18 U.S.C. §2516(1)(c)

Section 16 of the Act adds 18 U.S.C. §351 as one of the statutory offenses under 18 U.S.C. §2516(1)(c) which can be investigated by use of properly authorized interception of wire or oral communications, when such interception may provide evidence of such a violation. Of course, the FBI, the agency charged with investigative responsibility, will be the agency making use of this provision.

9-65.780 Venue

As this statute contains no special venue requirements, normally venue will lie in that district wherein the violation occurred. However, Chapter 211, Title 18, United States Code, should be consulted to answer such questions as may arise in cases involving: offenses begun in one district and completed another (18 U.S.C. §3237); offenses not committed in any district (18 U.S.C. §3238); murder or manslaughter (18 U.S.C. §3236); or capital cases in general (18 U.S.C. §3235).

9-65.800 PROTECTION OF FOREIGN OFFICIALS (18 U.S.C. §§112, 878, 970
1116, 1117 and 1201)

On October 8, 1976, the President approved Public Law No. 94-467, an act for protection of Internationally Protected Persons. The primary purpose of the bill was to implement the United Nations (UN) "Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of Crimes Against Internationally Protect Persons, Including Diplomatic Agents," and the Organization of American States (OAS) "Convention to Prevent and Punish the Acts of Terrorism Taking the Form of Crimes Against Persons and Related Extortion that Are of International Significance," In line with the 1972 Act for protecting foreign officials and official guests, P.L. 94-467 expressly recognizes and preserves existing local jurisdiction to punish criminal conduct directed against foreign officials, official guests, and internationally protected persons.

The Act gives courts of the United States jurisdiction over offenders who have committed crimes against internationally protected persons whether or not the offense occurred within the United States, when the offenders are found within the jurisdiction of the United States. Crimes for which there is extraterritorial jurisdiction are murder (18 U.S.C. §1116(c)), kidnapping (18 U.S.C. §1201(e)), assault (18 U.S.C. §112(e)), and threats (18 U.S.C. §878(d)).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

President Ford identified the evil to be remedied by the conventions and the legislation when he transmitted a copy of the United Nations Convention to the Senate:

The effective conduct of international relations depends in large part on the ability of diplomatic agents to travel and live freely and securely while representing the interests of their respective countries. We have witnessed in recent years an unprecedented increase in acts of violence directed against diplomatic agents and other internationally protected persons.

Because the conventions were designed to protect the "effective conduct of international relations," they are surely "subjects that properly pertain to our foreign relations . . ." Santovincenzo v. Egan, 284 U.S. 30, 40 (1931); see Asakura v. Seattle, 265 U.S. 332, 341 (1924); and are properly within the treaty-making power found in Art. 2, §2 of the constitution. Since the conventions were a proper exercise of the treaty power, the authority to effect the agreements is conclusively determined by Missouri v. Holland, 252 U.S. 416 (1920).

An alternate constitutional underpinning is the power to "define and punish...offenses against the law of nations." Art. I, §8, cl. 10. The OAS and UN Conventions evidence international law. Cf. The Paquete Habana, 175 U.S. 677, 700 (1900); Banco Nacional de Cuba v. Sabbatino, 307 F.2d 845, 860 (2d Cir. 1962), rev'd on other grounds, 376 U.S. 398 (1964). Consequently, Congress can legislate to effect that law. Cf. In Re Yamashita, 327 U.S. 1, 7 (1946). In addition to the conventions, the assertion of jurisdiction based upon the nationality or national character of the victim (passive personality principle) or injury to the national interest (protective principle) is recognized in international law. See e.g., Working Papers of the National Commission on Reform of Federal Criminal Laws 72-73 (1970); Rivard v. United States, 375 F.2d 882, 885 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 389 U.S. 884 (1967).

9-65.801 Investigative Jurisdiction

Responsibility for the federal investigation of all violations of the act has been assigned to the FBI.

9-65.802 Responsibilities of Treasury

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The assignment of sole federal jurisdiction to the FBI to investigate violations of the protection of foreign officials provisions takes cognizance of the protective responsibilities of the Department of Treasury under 3 U.S.C. §202 and 18 U.S.C. §3056 and, thus, does not limit or interfere with the power of the Secretary of the Treasury in the discharge of his/her statutory protective responsibilities. Only a few foreign officials within the United States will at any one time be exposed to sufficient hazard or planned, deliberate attack or conspiracy (18 U.S.C. §371) to warrant provision of protective services, but U.S. Attorneys should immediately furnish information indicating the existence of such a hazard to the FBI field office for FBI dissemination to the U.S. Secret Service, Department of State, and other interested persons and agencies. Likewise, U.S. Attorneys should continue to assist the U.S. Secret Service in coordinating and obtaining the support of local agencies in the provision of protective services.

It should be noted that Public Law 97-308 (October 14, 1982) amended 18 U.S.C. §1752 by providing criminal sanctions for violations of zones of protection established for the protection of persons being protected by the U.S. Secret Service. (See USAM 9-65.400, 9-65.400, supra).

9-65.803 Authority To Initiate Prosecution

U.S. Attorneys may initiate prosecution without consultation with the Criminal Division.

9-65.804 Preference For Local Disposition

Both the 1976 Act and its predecessor include specific provisions precluding the preemption of local law. This reflects the statutory recognition of the traditional primary responsibility of local law enforcement agencies for handling common crimes. As noted in the prior Act in 1972, the purpose of the Act was to create in the "... United States jurisdiction, concurrent with that of the States, to proceed against only those acts committed against foreign officials which interfere with its conduct of foreign affairs." H.R. Rep. No. 1268, 92d Cong., 2d Sess. 13 (1972).

9-65.805 Supervisory Jurisdiction

Supervisory jurisdiction over the protection of foreign officials statutes rests with the General Litigation and Legal Advice Section of the Criminal Division. Attorneys responsible for these statutes can be reached at FTS 724-7144.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-65.806 Offenses Against Officials of the Coordination Council for North American Affairs (Taiwan)

In the opinion of the Criminal Division, appropriate officials of Taiwan's Coordination Council for North American Affairs (CCNAA) come within the definition of the term "foreign official" as used in 18 U.S.C. §1116(b)(3)(B), by virtue of the Taiwan Relations Act, 22 U.S.C. §3301 et seq., and Executive Order 12143 at Section 1-204, 44 Fed. Reg. 37191. Thus the following sections of Title 18 prohibit offenses against CCNAA officials: 18 U.S.C. §112 (assault), 18 U.S.C. §878 (threat), 18 U.S.C. §970 (destruction of property), 18 U.S.C. §1201 (kidnapping), 18 U.S.C. §1116 (murder), and 18 U.S.C. §1117 (conspiracy to murder).

A. Elements for "Foreign Official" Status

Under 18 U.S.C. §1116(b)(3)(B), a person is a "foreign official" if he/she (1) is "of foreign nationality," (2) is "duly notified to the United States as an officer or employee of a foreign government" and (3) is in the United States on official business.

For the purposes of 18 U.S.C. §1116, it should not be difficult to prove that a CCNAA victim, who is not a United States national employed by the CCNAA, is treated as a foreign national in the United States on official business. Although the CCNAA is an unofficial instrumentality established by Taiwan and not a governmental entity, its employees sent from Taiwan are on official business of the CCNAA, which is the instrumentality provided for in sections 10(a) and 10(c) of the Taiwan Relations Act (22 U.S.C. §3309(a) and §3309(c)) and section 1-204 of Executive Order 12143.

Proving that the CCNAA is "duly notified . . . as officer or employee of a foreign government" requires resort to the Taiwan Relations Act.

B. "Officer or Employee of a Foreign Government"

After the President terminated governmental relations with the Republic of China, Congress passed the Taiwan Relations Act, 22 U.S.C. §3301 et. seq. The Act provides that "the laws of the United States shall apply with respect to Taiwan in the manner that the laws of the United States applied to Taiwan" prior to the termination of relations. 22 U.S.C. §3303(a). Specifically, 22 U.S.C. §3303(b)(1) provides that "[w]henver the laws of the United States refer to foreign countries, nations, states, governments, or similar entities, such terms shall apply with respect to Taiwan." Thus, for the purposes of 18 U.S.C. §1116(b)(3)(B), Taiwan may be considered a "foreign government."

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Under 22 U.S.C. §3309(a), whenever the President and agencies of the United States government are authorized or required by United States law to engage in activities with respect to Taiwan, these activities shall be conducted, in the manner and to the extent directed by the President, through an "instrumentality established by Taiwan which [has the authority] . . . to provide assurances and take other actions on behalf of Taiwan . . . ." The President designated the Coordination Council for North American Affairs as such "instrumentality." Executive Order No. 12143 at section 1-204, 44 Fed. Reg. 37191.

Thus officers and employees of the CCNAA should be treated as officers and employees of a "foreign government" for the purposes of 18 U.S.C. §1116(b)(3)(B). Cf., United States v. Irick, 497 F.2d 1369 (5th Cir. 1974), cert. denied, 420 U.S. 945 (1975); United States v. Lopez, 586 F.2d 978 (2d Cir. 1978), cert. denied, 440 U.S. 923 (1979).

C. "Duly Notified"

The notification procedure for CCNAA officials is not the same as the procedure for accreditation. Cf., United States v. Dizdar, 581 F.2d 1031, 1033-34 (2d Cir. 1978). Thus, whether CCNAA officials are "duly notified" calls for the judgment of the Chief of Protocol in the Department of State. 22 C.F.R. §2.3(b). Although such officials are not diplomatic or consular agents accredited to the United States government, the Chief of Protocol has received a roster of CCNAA officials and is prepared to certify that such persons are "duly notified" within the meaning of 18 U.S.C. §1116(b)(3)(B) (i.e. that they are notified to the American Institute in Taiwan to receive, in part, the functional privileges and immunities authorized by section 10(c) of the Taiwan Relations Act (22 U.S.C. §3309(c) and that a copy of a list of appropriate CCNAA officials and employees is sent to the Office of Protocol which confirms such listing for law enforcement or other appropriate purposes if called upon to do so).

D. Indictments and Pleadings

The Department of State believes that indictments and pleadings which are not precisely drawn to reflect the unofficial nature or relations with Taiwan may have an adverse impact on foreign affairs. The Department of Justice is prepared to accommodate the concerns of the Department of State unless a prosecution would be jeopardized. Consequently, all matters involving offenses against CCNAA officials should, absent emergency circumstances, be brought to the attention of the Criminal Division prior to federal arrest and should in all cases be brought to the attention of the Criminal Division prior to indictment.

The Criminal Division recommends that indictments describe, in part,

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

the offense in the following manner: "X did willfully and unlawfully [assault, threaten, etc.] Y, who is a 'foreign official' within the meaning of section 1116 of title 18, United States Code, by operation of the Taiwan Relations Act." Any difficulties which are anticipated as a result of this language must be brought to the attention of the Criminal Division prior to indictment.

9-65.810 Murder (18 U.S.C. §1116)

18 U.S.C. §1116 prohibits the killing or attempted killing of foreign officials, official guests, or internationally protected persons. The penalty provisions of 18 U.S.C. §§1111, 1112, and 1113 are made applicable except that the penalty for first degree murder is imprisonment for life. The penalty for attempted murder, not more than twenty years, parallels that for assault with intent to commit murder (18 U.S.C. §113) because it is more appropriate than the three year penalty otherwise applicable under 18 U.S.C. §1113. 18 U.S.C. §1116(b) contains the definition of key terms used in 18 U.S.C. §1116 and in the sections on kidnapping, threats, assault, and protection of property.

9-65.811 Foreign Official

"Foreign official" (18 U.S.C. §1116(b)(3)) includes two distinct categories. In the first group are heads of state (Chief of State or political equivalent, President, Vice President, Prime Minister), foreign ministers, ambassadors, and other officers of cabinet rank or above of a foreign government, chief executive officers of international organizations, persons who have formerly served in such capacities, and members of their families. "Political equivalent" refers to the top official of a country, who in some instances may not be a country's formally designated "Chief of State." H. R. Rep. No. 1268, 92d Cong. 2d Sess. 8 (1972). The added clause "while in the United States" serves as a territorial limitation (see 18 U.S.C. §5) as to all of the violations directed against this category of persons, but the purpose of the victim's presence is immaterial. As indicated in H. R. Rep. No. 1268, supra, at 2: ". . . the term 'officer of cabinet rank or above' is intended to include, without being limited to, a member of the government of any nation who is the head of an executive department, the presiding officer of a nation legislative body, or member of a nation's highest judicial tribunal."

In the second category (18 U.S.C. §1116(b)(3)(B)) are persons of foreign nationality who are duly notified to the United States as officers or employees of a foreign government or international organization but only if the person's presence in the United States is attributable to official business. Procedures for foreign governments to make "notification" to the United States (as well as for "designation" as an official guest) have been published as an amendment to 22 C.F.R. §2.3. To obtain information whether a person has been "duly notified" or received "designation", contact the Office of the Chief of Protocol, Department of State, Washington, D.C. 20520. As proof of status that office will furnish on request a certificate in proper form admissible in evidence under Fed. R. Evid. 902(1). "The category of officers and employees of foreign governments includes those at embassies and consulates, those at missions of their governments to international organizations, and those at trade or commercial offices of foreign government." H. Rep. No. 1268, supra, at 2, 8, 11. The definition also includes any member of the family of a foreign official in this second category, but unlike the first category, a family member's presence in the United States must be in connection with the presence in the United States of the related foreign official.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-65.812 Foreign Government

"Foreign government" means the government of a foreign country, irrespective of recognition by the United States.

Unlike 18 U.S.C. §11, 18 U.S.C. §1116(b)(2) defines the term "foreign government" without a limitation to countries "with which the United States is at peace" and excludes from that term "a faction or body of insurgents within a country." As in 18 U.S.C. §11, recognition by the United States is not a factor.

9-65.813 International Organization

"International organization" means a public international organization designed as such pursuant to section 1 of the International Organization Immunity Act (22 U.S.C. §288).

Reference in 18 U.S.C. §1116(b)(5) to section 1 of the International Organization Immunities Act (22 U.S.C. §288) serves in the definition of "international organizations" to provide in effect a specific list of such organizations. The list appears in the note following 22 U.S.C. §288. It currently includes organizations whose activities are well known, e.g., the United Nations, as well as a number of relatively obscure organizations involved in rather esoteric activity such as the Coffee Study Group. U.S. Attorneys may check for last minute changes and obtain the Federal Register citation to any new Executive orders by inquiry of the Bureau of International Organization Affairs, Department of State.

9-54.814 Family

"Family" is defined in 18 U.S.C. §1116(b)(1) to include spouse, parent, brother or sister, child or person to whom a "foreign official" or "internationally protected person" stands in loco parentis and any other person living in his/her household and related to him/her by blood or marriage. The terms "foreign official" and "internationally protected persons" are underlined to emphasize that the protection of these statutory provisions does not extend to the families of "official guests." However, when appropriate, family members may be designated "official guests" in their own right.

9-65.815 Official Guest

"Official guest" means a citizen or national of a foreign country present in the United States as an official guest of the government of the United States pursuant to designation as such by the Secretary of State.

This category ("official guests") was added in the course of Senate action in response to the monstrous attack on the Israeli Olympic Team in Munich, Germany. See S. Rep. 93-1105, 92d Cong., 2d Sess. 9 (1972). 18 U.S.C. §1116(b)(6) defines "official guest" as a citizen or national of a foreign country present in the United States as an official guest of the government of the United States pursuant to designation as such by the Secretary of State. As with notification, the Chief of Protocol of the Department of State will be the source of certificates of designation.

9-65.816 Internationally Protected Person

18 U.S.C. §1116(b)(4) defines "internationally protected person" as a Chief of State or the political equivalent, a Head of Government, or a Foreign minister outside his/her own country, as well as any member of his/her family accompanying him/her. The definition also encompasses any other representative, officer, employee, or agent of the United States government, a foreign government, or international organization who is entitled pursuant to international law to special protection as well as members of his/her family, then forming part of his/her household. The definition is meant to parallel that found in the United Nations Convention definition of "internationally protected person":

(a) a Head of State, including any member of a collegial body performing the functions of a Head of State under the constitution of the state concerned, a Head of Government or a Minister for Foreign Affairs, whenever any such person is in a foreign state, as well as members of his family who accompany him;

(b) any representative or official of a state or any official or other agent of an international organization of an intergovernmental character who, at the time when and in the place where a crime against him, his official premises, his private accommodation or his means of transport is committed, is entitled pursuant to international law to special protection from attack on his person, freedom, or dignity, as well as members of his family forming part of his household . . . .

The term "internationally protected person" overlaps significantly with the term "foreign official." The former term is needed, however, to define precisely those persons in whose favor operate the extraterritorial jurisdiction provisions of the statute.

9-65.820 Conspiracy To Murder (18 U.S.C. §1117)

18 U.S.C. §1117. (Conspiracy to Murder) provides:

If two or more persons conspire to violate section 1111, 1114, or 1116 of this title, and one or more of such persons do any overt act to effect the object of the conspiracy, each shall be punished by imprisonment for any term of years or for life.

In 18 U.S.C §1117 conspiracy to murder is specially denounced. Conspiracy to violate existing 18 U.S.C. §1111 (Murder within the special and maritime jurisdiction of the United States), 18 U.S.C §1114 (Protection of officers and employees of the United States), and 18 U.S.C. §1116 is made punishable by imprisonment for any term of years or for life. This parallels the existing special conspiracy provision for kidnapping. See 18 U.S.C. §1201(c).

Because of the extraterritorial provision in 18 U.S.C §1116(c), a conspiracy within the United States to murder an internationally protected person outside the jurisdiction of the United States is prohibited.

9-65.830 Kidnapping (18 U.S.C. §1201)

The act of kidnapping a "foreign official", "internationally protected person", or "official guest" is punishable without regard to interstate transportation of the victim. The permissible punishment is imprisonment for any term of years or for life, but no statutory proof of harm to the victim is required to support any sentence which may be adjudged. Any harm to the victim of course remains fair matter for consideration by the court in imposing a sentence.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

Because of the extraterritorial reach of 18 U.S.C. §1201(e), a conspiracy within the United States to kidnap an internationally protected person outside the jurisdiction of the United States is prohibited.

9-65.840 Assault (18 U.S.C. §112)

18 U.S.C. §112(a) covers one who assaults, strikes, wounds, imprisons, or offers violence to a foreign official, official guest, or internationally protected person or who makes a violent attack upon the official premises, private accommodation, or means of transport of such person. The provision also covers attempts. 18 U.S.C. §112(b) makes it a misdemeanor to willfully intimidate, coerce, threaten, or harass a foreign official or an official guest or willfully obstruct a foreign official in the performance of his/her duties. This subsection against obstruction extends only to a foreign official who must be engaged in the performance of his/her duties as a foreign official at the time of the violation.

Because of the extraterritorial reach of 18 U.S.C. §112(e), a conspiracy (18 U.S.C. §371) to commit a violent act against an internationally protected person outside the jurisdiction of the United States is prohibited.

9-65.841 Legislative History

In Senate Report No. 93-1105, supra, at 18, the following acts are listed as illustrative of the misconduct intended to be covered in 18 U.S.C. §112(b) if done "with intent to intimidate, alarm, or persecute a foreign official or an official guest."

(1) Following him [foreign official or official guest] about in public place or places after being request not to do so.

(2) Engaging in a course of conduct, including the use of abusive language, or repeatedly committing acts which alarm, intimidate or persecute him which serve no legitimate purpose; or

(3) Communicating with him anonymously by telephone, telegraph, or otherwise in a manner likely to cause annoyance or alarm, or making repeated telephone calls

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

to him whether or not conversation ensues, with no purpose of legitimate communication.

The list is not all-inclusive (ibid., p. 19) and other ways of violation, either more sophisticated or crude, will no doubt occur to one bent on harassment, etc. The Senate Report, supra, at 19, cites the comparable provisions in New York Penal Code, section 240.25, 240.30. Other state and federal law of more general applicability will also reach most, if not all of such activity. Note particularly in federal law: 18 U.S.C. §875, 876, concerning threatening communications and 47 U.S.C. §223, concerning harassing telephone calls.

Unlike 18 U.S.C. §111, the word "forcibly" does not appear in relation to "obstructs" in 18 U.S.C. §112(b). See Lonzo v. United States, 119 F.2d 717 (4th Cir. 1952), but compare District of Columbia v. Little, 339 U.S. 1 (1950), (reading an element of force into a similar provision to avoid conflict with a constitutional right of a person). Whether a completely passive refusal to act will constitute an obstruction, e.g., refusing to unlock a door, is a subject to question, and the decision could well turn on the existence of a legal duty to perform the act or general privilege to so refuse. See in this connection the discussion and cases cited on resistance or interference with an officer in 48 A.L.R. 746 et seq.

9-65.842 First Amendment

18 U.S.C. §112(d) provides against any construction or application of 18 U.S.C. §112 " . . . so as to abridge the exercise of rights guaranteed under the first amendment to the Constitution of the United States." In large part the comparative specificity of the section and limited radius of application go far to avoid any such abridgement. H.R. Rep. No. 1268, supra, at 9, and 8. The constitutionality of the comparable D.C. Code provision was upheld against a defense predicated on the first amendment in Frend v. United States, 100 F.2d 691 (D.C. Cir. 1938), cert. denied, 306 U.S. 640, and the validity of Frend, supra, was reaffirmed in Zaimi v. United States, 261 F.2d 233 (D.C. Ct. App. 1970) rev'd on construction issue, 476 F.2d 511 (D.C. Cir. 1973), Jews for Urban Justice v. Wilson, 311 F. Supp. 1158 (D.D.C. 1970), and United States v. Travers, Crim. No. U.S. 42935-69 (D.C. Ct. Gen. Sess. 1970) (unreported opinion). The opinion in Frend, supra, contained the following comment:

As in war the bearers of flags of truce are sacred, or else wars would be interminable, so in peace ambassadors, public ministers, and consuls charged with friendly national intercourse, are objects of special respect and protection, each according to the rights belonging to his rank and station. The law of nations, therefore, requires every government to take all reasonable precautions to prevent the doing of the things which the [D.C. statute protecting embassies] makes unlawful. The rule arises out of the necessity of the protection of nations in their intercourse with each other, and imposes on the Government of the United States responsibility to foreign nations for all violations by the United States of their international obligations. United States v. Arjona, 120 U.S. 479, 483-485 . . . . This responsibility includes the duty of protecting the residence of an ambassador or minister against invasion as well as against any other act tending to disturb the peace or dignity of the mission or of the member of the mission (Footnotes omitted).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Frend, supra, at 693.

Thus, the general power of the United States to protect its foreign relations includes the specific power to limit demonstrations by enactment of 18 U.S.C. §112(c).

9-65.850 Threats and Extortion (18 U.S.C §878)

18 U.S.C. §878 prohibits threats and extortion directed against foreign officials, official guests, or internationally protected persons.

9-65.860 Protection of Temporary Residences and Offices - 18 U.S.C. §1752

See discussion at USAM 9-65.400, supra.

9-65.870 Destruction Of Property (18 U.S.C. §1970)

Rounding out the protection afforded activities of foreign officials and official guest, 18 U.S.C. §970 provides for a fine of up to $10,000 and imprisonment for up to five years for one who ". . . willfully injures, damages, or destroys . . . any property, real or personal, located within the United States and belonging to or utilized or occupied by any foreign government or international organization, by a foreign official or official guest . . . ." Attempts are also covered. Except for the use of foreign entities as a jurisdictional base, this section is little different in nature and scope from the various provisions against malicious mischief in 18 U.S.C. Chap. 65. Bombing attacks not clearly covered in 18 U.S.C. §844(i) would clearly fall within the provisions of this section. In addition to covering embassies, consulates, missions to international organizations, the places of residence of foreign officials and official guests, trade or commercial offices of foreign governments and premises and property of international organizations, this section also covers automobiles and other vehicles and personal property, under the requisite ownership, use or possession, whether the property is used for official or unofficial purposes. S. Rep. No. 93-1105, supra, at 19. Note that only property within the United States is covered but 18 U.S.C. §956 covers conspiracy in the United States to injure properties of foreign governments abroad.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

18 U.S.C. §970(b) prohibits the forcible thrusting of a person or object within a premises occupied by foreign governments and prohibits remaining in foreign premises after receiving a proper request to depart.

9-65.880 Demonstrations

Normally the violations under consideration occur in the course of demonstrations involving a sizable number of persons. When this is so, U.S. Attorneys should look to the local police to maintain order and to make any necessary arrests. However that alone does not relieve federal officials of responsibilities in the matter. Those responsibilities commence with participation in and coordination of appropriate exchange of intelligence information on potential disturbances likely to affect a foreign facility and arrangements for needed law enforcement response.

As pre-planned or immediately upon notification of a demonstration likely to result in a disturbance, an Assistant U.S. Attorney should be assigned to monitor the activity on the basis of spot reports from FBI observers at the scene. Presumably the local police will make arrests as the occasion and their judgment dictate. Generally conduct in violation of the Act will also violate local law, but if only a federal violation appears and arrest is indicated then that is what should occur without the need for any request or prior authorization from the Criminal Division. Of course, local police should immediately notify the U.S. Attorney's office of any such arrest so that appropriate assistance can be provided in the initial appearance and complaint procedure.

Some suggestion has been made that the FBI observers should make such arrests, but this would not only defeat their purpose as observers but also, because they do not operate in uniform, would be a most ill-advised enforcement effort, inviting the very resistance a uniform is designed to aid in dispelling. This does not mean that an agent on the scene would stand idly by while a mission member entering or leaving the premises was attacked in his/her immediate vicinity. But absent some such exceptional circumstances, any necessary protective measures for protected foreign officials, including arrests for attacks made on their persons should be taken by uniformed officers.

The General Litigation and Legal Advice Section of the Criminal

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

Division has general responsibility for those matters which are of federal interest. U.S. Attorneys should be alert for indications of militant political motivation, international in scope with subversive overtones, in reported violations and insure that the presence of any such features or other factors, which may highlight the federal interest as well as affect the prosecutive merit of a possible violation, are reflected in the FBI's report.

9-65.881 Procedures

Upon receipt of information indicating a violation or potential violation of the Act, the FBI, after notifying the Department of State and consulting with the appropriate U.S. Attorney, will initiate such investigation as is deemed necessary if it is determined that federal presence is warranted. The State Department Operations Center (FIS 203-633-1512) can quickly locate and have the appropriate State Department officials contact the U.S. Attorney in cases wherein the U.S. Attorney is uncertain as to whether the incident will adversely affect the foreign relations of the United States.

The determination made and action initiated, if any, will be reported by the FBI to the Criminal Division, U.S. Attorney concerned, U.S. Secret Service, and Department of State without delay. The Bureau will bring to the attention of the Criminal Division for conclusion any unresolved difference of opinion among the Bureau, Secret Service, Department of State, and U.S. Attorney concerning action or lack thereof by any of them. If a U.S. Attorney's office receives a complaint of violation of the Act, the complainant should be referred to the FBI field office concerned, with advice that, as indicated in the Department of State communication, most conduct in possible violation of the Act is more appropriate for disposition under local law, but the FBI will report the complaint to the appropriate United States authorities for consideration of possible federal disposition.

Where the offense is of a nature that merits federal prosecution, an investigation should be pursued without regard for whether the pertinent foreign officials will agree to appear as witnesses at an ensuing trial. Once a subject has been identified and sufficient evidence has been developed to form the basis for federal charges, a determination should be sought as to whether the relevant foreign officials will agree to testify.

In instances where there is a federal interest sufficient to proceed under one of the protection of foreign officials statutes, it may still be advantageous to defer to a local prosecution. This is particularly true where there is a local statute which better fits the crime than does the federal statute. However, in such cases, the U.S. Attorney's office should insure that the FBI monitors the progress of the local prosecution. Should local efforts be dropped prior to a trial, the matter should be reevaluated by the U.S. Attorneys office and a new prosecutive determination should be rendered.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-65.882 Opinions by U.S. Attorneys

Our experience indicates that most demonstrating groups are careful to follow the requirements and instructions of the local police officers and that, when FBI agents have explained the federal statutes to them, the demonstrators have attempted to comply with its provisions. If the activity is clearly objectionable (obstructing the entranceway to the building using public address systems), the U.S. Attorney may wish to ask the FBI to conduct an investigation in addition to the normal procedure of maintaining contact with local officials and keeping informed. The availability and willingness to act of local law enforcement officials, who have the resources and the traditional responsibility to protect people and property, are prime factors to weigh when considering federal involvement. Another factor to consider is the potential adverse effect upon the conduct of our foreign relations which the activity might have. In making this determination, U.S. Attorneys may wish to contact the U.S. Department of State to discuss the potential impact upon United State's foreign relations. The State Department Operations Center (FTS 633-1521) can speedily locate the proper officials in the State Department who can give such advice. The obstruction of ingress and egress to and from public buildings and/or the use of public address systems or other sound amplification systems usually violates one or more local law statutes or ordinances. Normally, we would expect state and local law enforcement officials to enforce such local laws and that federal officers will act after the activity has terminated or in those isolated instances wherein local officials fail to carry out their responsibilities or cannot because of limited statutory authority, or wherein federal action is deemed necessary.

9-65.900 PROTECTION OF A MEMBER OF FEDERAL OFFICIAL'S FAMILY

9-65.901 General

Part G of chapter X of the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-473, 98 Stat. 2140 (1984), included a new criminal code enactment, appearing at 18 U.S.C. §115, which makes it a federal crime to assault, kidnap, or murder a family member of certain federal officials. It also covers attempts and threats to assault, kidnap, or murder such family members. The purpose of this provision is to provide comprehensive protection against attempts to impede, intimidate, or interfere with certain federal officials' performance of their duties by the commission of crimes against members of the officials' immediate families.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-65.902 Family Members Protected

18 U.S.C. §115 protects immediate family members of the President, Vice President, members of Congress, cabinet officers, federal judges, officials listed or designated under 18 U.S.C. §1114, and "federal law enforcement officers" defined in subsection 115(c) to include any officer, agent or employee of the United States authorized by law or by a government agency to engage in or supervise the prevention, detection, investigation or prosecution of any federal criminal law.

"Immediate family member" is defined in subsection 115(c) to include the official's spouse, parent, brother, sister, child, or person to whom he/she stands in loco parentis, or any other person living in his/her household and related to him/her by blood or marriage.

9-65.903 Investigative Jurisdiction

The agency which would have investigative jurisdiction over an assault or murder of a particular federal official will have corresponding investigative jurisdiction over an assault or murder of a member of that federal official's family. See USAM 9-65.602, supra.

9-65.904 Policy Considerations

The Senate Judiciary Committee Report regarding 18 U.S.C. §115 stated that it was not the intent of this provision to make federal jurisdiction over the enumerated crimes exclusive, but to reflect the federal interest in responding to terrorists and other criminals who would seek to influence the making of federal policies and interfere with the administration of justice by attacking close relatives of those entrusted with those tasks, S. Rep. No. 225, 98th Cong., 1st Sess. 320 (1983). In many instances, a crime against a family member of a federal official, even if prompted by a defendant's opposition to policies implemented by the official can be adequately handled by state and local authorities without federal involvement.

9-65.905 Supervising Section

The General Litigation and Legal Advice Section has supervisory responsibility over 18 U.S.C. §115(d).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-66.000 PROTECTION OF GOVERNMENT PROPERTY

One of the principle responsibilities of the federal criminal law is the protection of government property. The property holdings of the United States, its departments and agencies are extensive and include both real and personal property in this country and abroad. In order for the federal government to perform the wide range of duties assigned to it by law, it must have ready access to these properties and resources. Therefore it is very important that these properties be protected from any theft, misuse or misappropriation.

The criminal law serves an important function as the vehicle for protection of federal property. Congress has enacted a series of laws which prohibit the wrongful taking or misuse of land, personal property and other resources belonging to the United States. The purpose of the following sections is to outline these laws and describe their scope as an aid to their vigorous enforcement.

9-66.010 Investigative Jurisdiction

It can be fairly stated that the scope of the federal government's property holdings is rivaled only by the number of agencies with investigative jurisdiction over crimes involving that property. Because a number of distinct agencies possess jurisdiction to investigate crimes against government property it is impossible to provide any simple rules which in all cases define investigative responsibility. In some cases the jurisdiction of these competing agencies is set by statute. In other instances investigative authority is defined by memorandum of understanding between the affected agencies.

Of course, the principle law enforcement agency in this area is the Federal Bureau of Investigation. By statute and by regulation the FBI has broad jurisdiction over offenses involving government property. See 28 U.S.C. §533; 28 C.F.R. §0.85. A number of other agencies, however, possess investigative jurisdiction over crimes involving specific federal properties. Some of the most significant of these agencies are described below:

A. The Department of the Interior is authorized by 16 U.S.C. §1a-6 to designate certain officers "who shall maintain law and order and protect persons and property within the areas of the National Park System." These officers may make arrests, with and without warrants, conduct investigations and carry firearms. See 16 U.S.C. §1a-6(1)-(3).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

B. The General Services Administration, as part of its statutory mandate to administer government properties, is authorized to appoint uniformed guards as "special policemen." See 40 U.S.C. §318. These special policemen are empowered "to enforce the laws enacted for the protection of persons and property, . . . to prevent breaches of the peace, to suppress affrays or unlawful assemblies, and to enforce any rules and regulations made and promulgated by the Administrator [of General Services] . . . ." See 40 U.S.C. §318.

C. The Inspector General Act of 1978, 5 U.S.C. App. §1 et seq., creates within several government agencies independent Offices of Inspector General. See 5 U.S.C. App. §2(1). The duties of these Inspectors General include the detection of fraud and abuse in government programs. See 5 U.S.C. App. §2(2). Thus, the Act gives these Inspectors General investigative jurisdiction over some crimes involving government property. Under the Act, Inspectors General are required to report to the Attorney General any information which provides them with "reasonable grounds to believe that there has been a violation of federal criminal law." See 5 U.S.C. App. §4(d).

D. The United States Postal Service has jurisdiction to investigate postal offenses. See 39 U.S.C. §404(a)(7). In practice, many crimes involving postal service property and personnel are investigated by law enforcement officers from the Postal Service.

E. Finally, many crimes involving the theft or misuse of property belonging to the armed services will be investigated at the outset by military police. This is particularly true of offenses committed by military personnel.

9-66.020 Supervisory Responsibility

Supervisory responsibility for prosecutions involving crimes against government property rests with the General Litigation and Legal Advice Section of the Criminal Division. Prior authorization of the Criminal Division is not required for instituting these prosecutions. U.S. Attorneys with questions regarding the application of these laws are encouraged, however, to contact the General Litigation and Legal Advice Section for assistance.

9-66.100 PROTECTION OF GOVERNMENT PROPERTY--REAL PROPERTY

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-66.110 Jurisdiction over Federal Land and the Federal Enclave Statute, 18 U.S.C. §7

The federal government is the single largest holder of real estate in the United States. Federal custody and control over this property brings with it a host of responsibilities, including in some cases federal criminal jurisdiction.

Yet it is clear that federal criminal jurisdiction does not exist over real property simply because the United States owns it. See Adams v. United States, 319 U.S. 312 (1943). For purposes of federal criminal jurisdiction, government property can be categorized in three ways. First, certain lands fall within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States. As this term implies, on these lands federal criminal law applies to the exclusion of state law. Other properties acquired by the United States fall within the concurrent criminal jurisdiction of the state and federal governments. Finally, the United States may acquire property without accepting any special criminal jurisdiction over it. In this situation the United States simply retains proprietary jurisdiction over the property.

The jurisdictional status of property acquired by the United States is important because it triggers the application of a series of federal laws, known as federal enclave statutes. These statutes apply to lands within the "special maritime and territorial jurisdiction of the United States," a term which includes "[a]ny lands reserved or acquired for the use of the United States, and under the exclusive or concurrent jurisdiction thereof . . ." See 18 U.S.C. §7(3). Therefore any property under the exclusive or concurrent jurisdiction of the United States is subject to these federal enclave laws.

The federal enclave laws provide two forms of protection to property found on federal land. At the outset these laws specifically forbid certain property crimes. For example, arson, theft, receiving stolen goods, destruction of property and robbery are all prohibited within the special maritime and territorial jurisdiction of the United States. See 18 U.S.C. §§81 (arson), 661 (theft), 662 (receiving stolen goods), 1363 (destruction of property), 2111 (robbery). In addition, 18 U.S.C. §13 incorporates state law into the law of the federal enclave. Thus, property offenses which violate state law but are not otherwise punishable under federal law become federal crimes when committed on a federal enclave within the state.

Through these two means the federal enclave statutes add significantly to the body of law protecting government property. While these laws are not expressly limited to crimes involving government property, much of the property crime occurring in a federal enclave will involve property belonging to the United States. Therefore, U.S. Attorneys should be aware of the jurisdictional status of all federal property within their respective districts.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

There are three methods by which the United States obtains exclusive or concurrent jurisdiction over federal lands in a state: (1) a statute consenting to the purchase of land by the United States for the purposes enumerated in Article I, Section 8, Clause 17, of the Constitution of the United States; (2) a state cession statute; and (3) a reservation of federal jurisdiction upon the admission of a state into the Union. See Collins v. Yosemite Park Co., 304 U.S. 518 (1938). Since February 1, 1940, the United States acquires no jurisdiction over federal lands in a state until the head or other authorized officer of the department or agency which has custody of the lands formally accepts the jurisdiction offered by state law. See 40 U.S.C. §255; Adams v. United States, 319 U.S. 312 (1943). Prior to February 1, 1940, acceptance of jurisdiction had been presumed in the absence of evidence of a contrary intent on the part of the acquiring agency or Congress. See Mason Co. v. Tax Commission, 302 U.S. 186 (1937). See also USAM. §9-20.000 et seq., for a discussion of federal enclave jurisdiction.

9-66.120 Protection of Federal Real Property - Other Laws

The assumption of concurrent or exclusive federal criminal jurisdiction is not the only means by which the United States protects real property under its charge or control. Congress has enacted a series of laws aimed at protecting various federal properties without regard for their jurisdictional status. Moreover, the departments and agencies which administer federal properties are empowered to regulate conduct on these lands. The regulations established by these departments are enforced through criminal penalties. Enforcement of these regulatory offenses does not rest on exclusive or concurrent federal criminal jurisdiction.

These statutes and regulations have been developed to protect several broad classes of federal property. The types of property protected and the scope of that protection are set forth below.

9-66.121 National Parks and Forests

Much of the property held by the United States is made available for the use and enjoyment of the public as part of our national park system. This system consists of hundreds of parks, forests, recreation areas, game preserves and historic sites located throughout the United States.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The national park system is jointly administered by the Department of Interior, the Department of Agriculture and the Department of the Army. By law, the secretaries of these three departments are empowered to make regulations governing the use and maintenance of park lands under their charge. See 16 U.S.C. §3 (Interior); 16 U.S.C. §9a (Army); 16 U.S.C. §551 (Agriculture). Violations of these regulations may subject individuals to penalties ranging from three months imprisonment, a $100 fine, or both, see 16 U.S.C. §9a; to 6 months imprisonment, a $500 fine, or both, see 16 U.S.C. §§3 and 551. The regulations prescribed pursuant to these statutes may be found in Title 36 of the Code of Federal Regulations.

Conduct in national parks is not controlled exclusively by regulation. Congress has also enacted a series of statutes which proscribe certain activities in such parks. For example, 16 U.S.C. §26 prohibits unauthorized hunting and fishing on park lands. Similarly, 16 U.S.C. §§413 and 414 proscribe willful destruction of property or trespassing on military parks. In addition 16 U.S.C. §433 forbids the destruction of any historic or prehistoric ruins or any other article of antiquity found in a national park.

Finally there are a large number of statutes which apply to specific national parks and prohibit certain activities within those parks. These statutes are set out, in summary fashion below:

16 U.S.C. §§45e, 60 and 63	Sequoia and Yosemite National Parks
16 U.S.C. §§92 and 98	Mount Ranier National Park
16 U.S.C. §§114 and 117e-d	Mesa Verde National Park

16 U.S.C. §426i	Stones River National Battlefield
16 U.S.C. §428i	Fort Donelson National Battlefield
16 U.S.C. §430g	Monocacy National Battlefield
16 U.S.C. §430v	Kennesaw Mountain National Battlefield

All U.S. Attorneys should be familiar with the rules and regulations applicable to park lands in their districts.

9-66.122 National Resources

Federally-owned property provides the public with a host of natural resources, including timber, minerals, grazing lands and, in arid parts of this country, potable water. The wise management of these resources requires that the federal government carefully regulate the extent of their use. One form of this regulation consists of criminal penalties for the exploitation or misuse of these resources.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Currently there are several statutes which protect the natural resources found on federal land. For example, 18 U.S.C. §1852 prohibits the unauthorized mining or removal of coal from lands owned by or reserved for the United States. Timber found on federal land, in turn, is protected by 18 U.S.C. §§1851-56. These sections prohibit the unlawful cutting, injuring, removing or transporting of timber found on public lands. See 18 U.S.C. §§1852 (removing or transporting); 1853 (cutting or injuring). Also prohibited is the processing of timber belonging to the United States for the purpose of making pitch or turpentine. See 18 U.S.C. §1854. These sections further protect federal woodlands by prohibiting the willful starting of unauthorized fires, 18 U.S.C. §1855, and by penalizing those who leave fires unattended or unextinguished, see 18 U.S.C. §1856. It should be noted that section 1856, which deals with unattended fires, applies not only to fires on public lands but also to fires dangerously near public lands. See United States v. Alford, 224 U.S. 264 (1927). Finally 16 U.S.C. §§604 and 605 authorize the Secretary of the Interior to regulate the cutting of timber on public land. Violation of these regulations is a criminal offense, punishable by 6 months imprisonment and a $500 fine. See 16 U.S.C. §606.

Federally-owned livestock grazing lands are another natural resource which is protected both by regulation and by statute. Under 43 U.S.C. §315a the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to "make provision for the protection, administration, regulation and improvement" of livestock grazing areas. Violations of these regulations are punishable by a $500 fine. In addition, 43 U.S.C. §1061 prohibits unauthorized inclosure or occupancy of these public lands. See 43 U.S.C. §1061. This provision is complemented by 43 U.S.C. §1063, which forbids obstruction of lawful settlement or free transit through these lands. Violations of these sections are punishable by one (1) year imprisonment, a $1,000 fine, or both. See 43 U.S.C. §1064. Finally, 18 U.S.C. §1857 proscribes the destruction of fences erected by the United States on grazing lands or the unauthorized entry of livestock onto these lands. Individuals who violate this section are subject to one (1) year imprisonment, a $500 fine, or both.

In arid lands, the Secretary of the Interior is empowered to develop on federal property springs, streams and water holes. In order to make these water holes accessible to the public, the Secretary is also authorized to erect signs and monuments designating their locations, see 43 U.S.C. §361. Willful or malicious injury to these signs or monuments and the willful or malicious fouling of water holes violate 43 U.S.C. §362 and are punishable by one (1) year imprisonment, a $1,000 fine, or both.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-66.123 Military Bases

18 U.S.C. §1382 forbids trespassing on military bases. Two distinct offenses are embraced by this section. First, 18 U.S.C. §1382 prohibits any person from entering any military installation for any purpose prohibited by law. In addition this section precludes individuals who have been removed from bases and instructed not to reenter from reentering without permission.

The intent required for these two offenses differs. In order to violate the first paragraph of 18 U.S.C. §1382 an individual must enter for some "purpose prohibited by law or lawful regulation." Thus, this offense is a specific intent crime. Note, however, that in military installations where the public is forbidden entry by law or regulations, the simple intent to enter will be sufficient to trigger this section.

The second paragraph of this section forbids reentry onto a military base after one has been removed from that base and told not to return. Given the nature of this offense it has been suggested that a distinct criminal intent need not be shown. See Holdridge v. United States, 282 F.2d 302, 309 (8th Cir. 1960). The mere presence of the individual on the base after his/her exclusion is sufficient to violate the law.

This section applies to any military, naval, or coast guard reservation, post, fort, arsenal, yard, station or installation over which the United States has exclusive possession. See Holdridge v. United States, supra. Persons violating this section are subject to 6 months imprisonment, a $500 fine, or both.

Of course, property offenses occurring on military bases may also violate 18 U.S.C. §1361 or, where federal jurisdiction exists, the applicable federal enclave statutes.

9-66.124 Other Federal Buildings and Offices

The Administrator of the General Services Administration is responsible for the maintenance and operation of federal offices and buildings throughout the United States. See 40 U.S.C. §301 et seq. One of the duties of the administrator is to protect all of the property under his/her control. In order to fulfill this responsibility the administrator is authorized to make rules and regulations for this property. See 40 U.S.C. §318a. Violations of these regulations are criminal offenses, punishable by thirty (30) days imprisonment, a $50 fine, or both. See 40 U.S.C. §318c. The GSA regulations promulgated pursuant to 40 U.S.C. §318a can be found in Title 41 of the Code of Federal Regulations.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

In addition there are several statutes which apply to specific federal office buildings. For example, 2 U.S.C. §§167a-g prohibits soliciting, malicious property damage, possession of firearms and fireworks, speeches or parades in the Library of Congress. A similar set of prohibitions, applicable to the Capital Building and grounds, can be found at 40 U.S.C. §1936 et seq.

Finally, statutes of general application, such as 18 U.S.C. §1361, would also extend to federal office buildings. Moreover, where the jurisdictional prerequisites had been met, offenses committed within these buildings may also violate the federal enclave laws. See USAM 9-66.110, supra.

9-66.200 PROTECTION OF GOVERNMENT PROPERTY--PERSONALTY

18 U.S.C. §641 can be seen as an attempt to rationalize the then existing common law of property crime. At common law, offenses involving the loss of property were categorized on the basis of the nature of the taking; the relationship between the defendant and the property owner at the time of the taking. This method of defining property crime inevitably led to many fine distinctions in the law. The subtle distinctions developed in the common law in turn created significant enforcement problems. These distinctions demanded extreme care in the drafting of indictments, were difficult to prove at trial and placed unreasonable burdens on the prosecution.

18 U.S.C. §641 eliminated many of these problems by defining the crime of taking government property in the broadest terms. Thus 18 U.S.C. §641 attempts to reach all possible offenses involving the loss or misuse of government property. As the Supreme Court noted in Morrisette v. United States, 342 U.S. 246, 271 (1952):

What has concerned codifiers of [18 U.S.C. §641] is that gaps or crevices have separated particular crimes of this general class and guilty men have escaped through the breaches. The books contain a surfeit of cases drawing fine distinctions between slightly different circumstances under which one may obtain wrongful advantages from another's property. The codifiers wanted to reach all such instances.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

18 U.S.C. §641 is the principal statutory weapon aimed at the protection of government property. The following sections outline the offenses encompassed by 18 U.S.C. §641, their elements and their proof.

9-66.210 Acts Prohibited by 18 U.S.C. §641

As noted above, 18 U.S.C. §641 was drafted broadly to encompass a full range of offenses relating to government property. This section now provides that, "[w]hoever embezzles, steals, purloins, or knowingly converts to his use or the use of another, or without authority, sells, conveys, or disposes of [government property]; or . . . receives, conceals, or retains the same with intent to convert it to his use or gain, knowing it to have been embezzled, stolen, purloined or converted," commits a federal offense. This language incorporates several distinct common law property offenses along with other property offenses not known in the common law. These separate offenses, and their elements, are discussed below.

9-66.211 Embezzlement

In Moore v. United States, 160 U.S. 268, 269 (1895), the Supreme Court defined embezzlement in the following terms:

Embezzlement is the fraudulent appropriation of property by a person to whom such property has been entrusted, or into whose hands it has lawfully come. It differs from larceny in the fact that the original taking was lawful, or with the consent of the owner, while in larceny the felonious intent must have existed at the time of the taking.

There are six elements to the crime of embezzlement, as defined in 18 U.S.C. §641. These are:

A. A trust or fiduciary relationship between the defendant and the property owner;

B. The property taken falls within the statute; i.e., it must be government property. See USAM 9-66.220, infra, for a discussion of the types of property which fall within this section;

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

C. The property came into the possession or care of the defendant by virtue of his/her employment;

D. The property belonged to another, in this case the United States;

E. The defendant's dealings with the property constituted a fraudulent conversion or appropriation of it to his/her own use; and

F. The defendant acted with the intent to deprive the owner of the use of this property.

See United States v. Powell, 294 F. Supp. 1353, 1355 (E.D. Va.), aff'd, 413 F.2d 1037 (4th Cir. 1968); United States v. Dupee, 569 F. 2d 1061 (9th Cir. 1978).

The requirement that the defendant act with the intent to deprive the owner of his/her property makes embezzlement a specific intent crime. See United States v. May, 625 F.2d 186, 189-90 (8th Cir. 1980). It should be noted, however, that the intent required to violate the law is not an intent to deprive another of his/her property permanently. Therefore even if an individual intends to return the property his/her actions are still criminal. In short, restitution is no defense to embezzlement. See United States v. Powell, supra at 1355.

9-66.212 To Steal or Purloin

The terms to steal or to purloin have no established meaning in the common law. See United States v. Maloney, 607 F.2d 222, 229 (9th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 445 U.S. 918 (1980) (purloin); Crabb v. Zerbst, 99 F.2d 562, 565 (5th Cir. 1938) (steal). Instead, these terms refer generally to the crime of larceny and were developed in modern pleading to broaden larceny beyond its strict common law definition. See United States v. Maloney, supra; United States v. Archambault, 441 F.2d 281, 282-83 (10th Cir.), cert. denied, 404 U.S. 843 (1971).

Larceny, under 18 U.S.C. §641, requires proof of the following four elements:

A. The wrongful taking and carrying away (asportation);

B. Of personal property belonging to another, in this case property of the United States;

C. Without the consent of the owner; and

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

D. With the intent to deprive the owner of his/her property.

See United States v. Barlow, 480 F.2d 1245, 1251 (D.C. Cir. 1972). Larceny, like embezzlement, is a specific intent crime. However, in contrast to embezzlement, larceny requires an intent to permanently deprive another of his/her property. See Ailsworth v. United States, 448 F.2d 439, 442 (9th Cir. 1971).

This language in 18 U.S.C. §641 encompasses all forms of larceny, including larceny by trick. See United States v. Crutchley, 502 F.2d 1195 (3d Cir. 1975). It also includes closely related property offenses, such as theft by false pretenses. See Morgan v. United States, 380 F.2d 686 (9th Cir. 1967).

9-66.213 Knowing Conversion

Knowing conversion completes the picture of 18 U.S.C. §641 by prohibiting all other deliberate wrongful uses of government property. In Morissette v. United States, 342 U.S. at 271-72, the Supreme Court aptly described the breadth of this provision:

Probably every stealing is a conversion, but certainly not every knowing conversion is a stealing. To steal means to take away from one in lawful possession without right with the intention to keep wrongfully . . . Conversion, however, may be consummated without any intent to keep and without any wrongful taking, where the initial possession by the converter was entirely lawful. Conversion may include misuse or abuse of property. It may reach use in an unauthorized manner as to an unauthorized extent of property placed in one's custody for limited use. Money rightfully taken into one's custody may be converted without any intent to keep or embezzle it merely by commingling it with the custodian's own, if he was under a duty to keep it separate and intact. It is not difficult to think of intentional and knowing abuses and unauthorized uses of government property that might be knowing conversions but which could not be reached as embezzlement, stealing or purloining. Knowing conversion adds significantly to the range of protection of government property without interpreting it to punish unwitting conversions.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Thus, where the misuse of government property does not fall within any of the existing classes of common law crime, it may still be reached by 18 U.S.C. §641 under the theory that the defendant's actions constituted a knowing conversion.

9-66.214 Sell, Convey or Dispose of Government Property Without Authority

The offense of selling, conveying or disposing of government property without authority can be seen simply as one form of knowing conversion. 18 U.S.C. §641, however, contains a separate prohibition against this conduct. To prove a violation of this prohibition the United States must show:

- A. That the defendant sold, conveyed or disposed of;
- B. Property belonging to the United States;
- C. Without authority to do so; and
- D. With knowledge that he/she did not have authority to do do.

See, e.g., United States v. Denmon, 483 F.2d 1093 (8th Cir. 1973); United States v. Sher, 418 F.2d 914 (9th Cir. 1969); United States v. Souza, 304 F.2d 274 (9th Cir. 1962).

It is not necessary, however, for the government to prove that the defendant knew the property belonged to the United States as part of the prosecution under this section. See United States v. Denmon, supra at 1095. Nor must the government show that the property was stolen from the United States. The government is not required to show how a defendant obtained possession of this property in a prosecution for sale of government property. See United States v. Sher, supra at 915.

9-66.215 Receiving, Concealing or Retaining Stolen Property

18 U.S.C. §641 also prohibits receipt of stolen government property. There are five elements to the offense described by this language. They are:

- A. The defendant must receive, conceal or retain;
- B. Stolen property;

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

C. Belonging to the United States;

D. Knowing that property to have been embezzled, stolen, purloined or converted; and

E. With the intent to convert that property to his/her own use or gain.

See United States v. Fench, 470 F.2d 1234 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 410 U.S. 909 (1972); Teel v. United States, 407 F.2d 604 (8th Cir. 1969).

At the outset, it should be noted that the conduct proscribed by this section is set forth in the disjunctive. Thus, a defendant violates the law when he/she either "receives," "conceals" or "retains" stolen property. None of these words are terms of art and they should be given their normal construction.

The intent requirement of this section presents more serious problems. Prosecutions for receiving stolen property require proof of a compound state of mind. At the outset, the defendant must know that the property he/she has received, concealed or retained is stolen. Note, however, that the defendant need not know that the property was stolen from the United States. See Baker v. United States, 429 F.2d 1278 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 957 (1970). Ownership of the property by the United States is simply a jurisdictional requirement. It is not relevant to the criminal intent needed to violate the law.

Moreover, the defendant must act with the intent to convert the property to his/her own use. Thus, this offense is a specific intent crime. Proof of this intent, however, does not require evidence showing that the defendant actually derived some benefit from the property. This element is satisfied merely by showing that the defendant intended to convert some property to his/her personal gain. See United States v. Hinds, 662 F.2d 362, 369 n.15 (5th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 1022 (1982).

9-66.220 Property Protected by 18 U.S.C. §641

The property encompassed by 18 U.S.C. §641 is also defined in broad terms. This section protects "any record, voucher, money, or thing of value of the United States or any department or agency thereof, or any property made or being made under contract for the United States or any department or agency thereof."

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Generally, jurisdiction under 18 U.S.C. §641 turns on the nature of the government's interest in the property which has been stolen. If that interest is sufficient, federal jurisdiction attaches; if it is not sufficient, the prosecution must be deferred to the state or local authorities. The question of whether the United States has sufficient interest in some property to trigger jurisdiction under 18 U.S.C. §641 arises in a wide variety of factual contexts. Some of the most common situations involving this issue are described below.

9-66.221 Title in the United States

Actual title in the United States is sufficient to confer jurisdiction, regardless of whether title coincides with physical possession. Determining when the United States holds title to some property in the possession of a third party frequently turns on the facts of the individual case. The following situations have presented the most difficulty in the past.

9-66.222 State and Local Programs Financed by the Federal Government

The federal government disburses funds to state and local organizations in a variety of ways. In some cases federal funding takes the form of an unconditional grant of aid. In other cases funding is received through grants conditioned on compliance with certain federal regulations. In still other instances federal assistance is provided through cost reimbursement contracts. These variations can create problems for the prosecutor in determining when funds lose their "federal character."

In some instances the funding program itself defines when title to the funds passes from federal to local authorities. For example, in many unconditional grants, a letter of credit upon which the program may draw is issued to a bank. When the letter of credit is issued, title to the funds passes to the program, Kings County v. Seattle School District, 263 U.S. 361 (1923), and 18 U.S.C. §641 would not be applicable. In some cost reimbursement contracts the agreement itself will specifically provide for the passing of title. See United States v. Echevaria, 262 F. Supp. 373 (D. P.R. 1967).

In other cases the point at which title passes will not be as clear. In these instances the courts have looked to the degree of control which the federal government retains over the funds to determine whether jurisdiction exists under 18 U.S.C. §641. See United States v. Smith, 596

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

F.2d 662 (5th Cir. 1979) (federally funded student loan money, held property of the United States); United States v. Johnson, 596 F.2d 842 (9th Cir. 1979) (money provided by federal government to local redevelopment authority was property of the United States). In any event once these funds are spent by the local authority they lose their "federal character," see generally United States v. Owen, 536 F.2d 340 (10th Cir. 1976), and jurisdiction no longer exists under 18 U.S.C. §641.

Finally, it must be remembered that many federal programs have specific statutory provisions relating to theft or embezzlement of funds or property. A listing of these more specific statutes can be found at USAM 9-66-330, infra.

9-66.223 Nonappropriated Funds

The Department has in the past successfully maintained the position that money and property of nonappropriated fund activities such as armed services post exchanges are within the scope of 18 U.S.C. §641. See United States v. Cotten, 471 F.2d 744 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 411 U.S. 936 (1973). This position rests on the fact that employees of these activities are employees of the United States under 5 U.S.C. §2105(c) and on the fact that these entities have been considered federal agencies for a number of purposes. See, e.g., Jaeger v. United States, 394 F.2d 944 (D.C. Cir. 1968); Brethauer v. United States, 333 F.2d 307 (8th Cir. 1964); United States v. Holcomb, 277 F.2d 143 (4th Cir. 1960).

9-66.224 National Guard Property

Under 32 U.S.C. §710(a), "all military property issued by the United States to the National Guard remains the property of the United States." The term "military property" should be broadly construed to include all manner of property used or consumed by the military and not simply "military-type" items. See 32 U.S.C. §105. See also 32 U.S.C. 101(13); Northern Pacific Railway Company v. United States, 330 U.S. 248, 254 (1947). In cases involving property in the possession of the National Guard under 32 U.S.C. §702 or a similar provision, in which case it would come under 18 U.S.C. §641, or whether it was purchased by the National Guard with its own funds, in which case it would be the property of the state.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-66.225 Civil Air Patrol Property

The Civil Air Patrol is officially an auxiliary of the United States Air Force, but is actually no more than a private corporation chartered by act of Congress and operating without any federal funds. Senate Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations, S. Rep. No. 40, 86th Cong., 1st Sess., 11-12 (1959). See also Pearl v. United States, 230 F.2d 243, 245 (10th Cir. 1956). Therefore as a general rule a theft of C.A.P. property could not be covered by 18 U.S.C. §641. However, close attention must be directed to the manner in which local C.A.P. auxiliaries acquire surplus government property to determine whether specific goods constitute property of the United States.

9-66.226 Goods in Transit

When the United States as the seller is shipping property to a buyer or when the United States has property shipped to it for purchase, the status of the property in transit is determined by the contract and the application of the Uniform Commercial Code. Cf. Heath v. United States, 209 F.2d 318 (9th Cir. 1954); Clark v. United States, 258 F. 437 (3d Cir. 1919). It should be noted, however, that section 641 also protects property "made or being made under contract for the United States." See USAM 9-66.330, infra. Therefore, theft of property made under contract for the United States is punishable under this section without regard for title or custody.

9-66.227 United States Government Checks

A government check remains government property as long as the paying officer has the power to recall it. See England v. United States, 174 F.2d 466 (5th Cir. 1949); Clark v. United States, 268 F. 329, 333 (6th Cir. 1920). Therefore, 18 U.S.C. §641 applies to the theft of a government check until that check is delivered to the payee. See United States v. Forcellati, 610 F.2d 25 (1st Cir. 1978), cert. denied, 445 U.S. 944 (1980); United States v. Edwards, 473 F. Supp. 81 (D. Mass. 1979); see United States v. Lee, 454 F.2d 190 (9th Cir. 1972). Theft of a check from the mail or from a mailbox may also violate 18 U.S.C. §§1702 and 1708. See Whiteside v. United States, 346 F.2d 500 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 389 U.S. 1023 (1965). Once a check is delivered to its payee 18 U.S.C. §641 no longer applies. A theft of the check in any subsequent mailings would be covered only by 18 U.S.C. §§1702 and 1708. See 31 U.S.C. §528(b)(1). Of course, false endorsement of a government check or the possession of a government check bearing a false endorsement may also violate 18 U.S.C. §§495 and 510.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-66.228 Seized Property

Property seized by the United States is protected by 18 U.S.C. §641. See United States v. Gordon, 638 F.2d 886 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 452 U.S. 909 (1981). If the property has been seized but not removed, 18 U.S.C. §641 still applies under the theory that forfeiture actually occurred at the time the criminal act was committed. See Roma v. United States, 53 F.2d 1007 (7th Cir. 1931). Contra, Patmore v. United States, 1 F.2d 8 (6th Cir. 1924). Once the property has been taken into the custody of the United States "possession is sufficient evidence of title." See United States v. Gardner, 42 F. 829, 832 (N.D.N.Y. 1890). In the case of property seized under a revenue law, "a forcible retaking of property out of the hands of officers of the law who have it in legal custody" would also be a violation of 18 U.S.C. §2233. See also United States v. Ford, 33 F. 861, 863 (W.D.N.C. 1887). See also 26 U.S.C. §7212(a) and (b). Causing injury to or removing property in order to prevent seizure under a revenue law would be a violation of 18 U.S.C. §2232. See also 10 U.S.C. §7678.

9-66.229 Intangible Property Interests

The inclusion of the phrase "thing of value" in 18 U.S.C. §641 creates a problem regarding whether the theft of intangible property is covered by this section. At least one case has adopted the view that 18 U.S.C. §641 applied only to "corporeal or tangible property" and refused to extend that section to the theft of services. See Chappel v. United States, 270 F.2d 274, 277 (9th Cir. 1959); but see Burnett v. United States, 222 F.2d 426 (6th Cir. 1955) (affirming a 18 U.S.C. §641 conviction involving the theft of services).

A number of recent decisions, however, have suggested that this section includes intangible, as well as tangible losses. See United States v. Girard, 601 F.2d 69, 71 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 871 (1979) (theft of information stored in government computer); United States v. DiGilio, 538 F.2d 972 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 1038 (1976) (theft by photocopying government records).

These later decisions appear to express the better view on this issue. The extension of 18 U.S.C. §641 to intangible property interests is consistent with both the plain language of the statute and the judicial construction of that language. The term "thing of value" is certainly broad enough to encompass both tangible and intangible properties and, in fact, has been construed to cover intangibles. See United States v.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Girard, supra at 71 (collecting cases). Moreover, such a construction is in accord with the interpretation given 18 U.S.C. §641 by the Supreme Court in Morissette v. United States, 342 U.S. 246 (1952). In Morissette, the Court indicated that 18 U.S.C. §641 was drafted broadly to reach all misuse of government property. Id. at 271. A construction of this section which extends it to tangible and intangible government property is consistent with this objective.

9-66.230 Custody in the United States

The ownership interest necessary to trigger jurisdiction under 18 U.S.C. §641 is not confined to exclusively legal title. Custodial interests which fall short of actual title may also provide a basis for the assertion of federal jurisdiction. See Fowler v. United States, 273 F. 15, 17 (9th Cir. 1921). This custodial interest may take the form of a bailment, Fowler v. United States, supra; a fiduciary relationship, Loewe v. United States, 135 F.2d 622 (9th Cir. 1943); a leasehold interest, United States v. Bridle, 443 F. 2d 443 (8th Cir. 1971), or simply the quantity of control the United States exercises over the property or funds, Arbuckle v. United States, 146 F.2d 657, 659 (D.C. Cir. 1944).

9-66.231 "Or Any Property Made or Being Made Under Contract for the United States or Any Department of Agency Thereof"

This phrase results in a significant extension of the scope of 18 U.S.C. §641 in that it applies to property in which the United States holds neither title nor a custodial interest. The scope of this section is illustrated by United States v. Anderson, 45 F. Supp. 943 (S.D. Cal. 1942). In Anderson the defendants were convicted of stealing aluminum used in the manufacture of aircraft for the War Department. In sustaining these convictions the court noted that:

What the Congress sought, by the section (a predecessor to section 641), was to protect the rights of the Government in property which had either been completed or was being held for delivery for the United States, or property as well as materials which were in the process of being made, manufactured or constructed into parts for completed objects under contract with the Navy or War Departments of the United States . . . not only the finished object, but also the raw material which is held available for its construction, is within the designation of "property."

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

See United States v. Anderson, supra at 949. This extension of jurisdiction is rarely used because in most cases a theft from a government contractor will be a matter of concern primarily to local law enforcement officials. However, situations arise in which the federal interest will predominate and for which prosecution under 18 U.S.C. §641 should be considered; for example, the theft of property being used in a high priority federal program, the theft of property from an ordinary contractor but on such a large scale that completion of the contract is impaired, or the theft of military weapons, explosives or ammunition.

9-66.240 Intent

Proof of criminal intent is part of every prosecution under 18 U.S.C. §641. See Morissette v. United States, 342 U.S. at 273. However, there is no single intent requirement for the offenses included under 18 U.S.C. §641. As we have noted, this section incorporated several distinct property crimes into one statute. These distinct offenses, many of which were originally developed at common law, each required proof of a different mental state. In fact several of these offenses, such as receipt of stolen property, call for proof of a compound state of mind. These offenses, and their elements, are described at USAM 9-66.210, supra. Prosecutors with questions regarding the state of mind which must be proven as part of a prosecution under 18 U.S.C. §641 should refer to the appropriate section of the Manual for advice.

There are several recurring common questions of intent which arise in 18 U.S.C. §641 prosecutions. The first question involves whether temporary misappropriation of government property falls within the sanctions of this section. The answer to this question turns on the nature of the offense charged. 18 U.S.C. §641 incorporates several distinct offenses. One of these offenses, larceny, requires an intent to permanently deprive another of his/her property. See Ailsworth v. United States, 448 F.2d 439, 442 (9th Cir. 1971). In contrast several other offenses encompassed by this section, such as embezzlement and knowing conversion of property, simply require temporary misappropriation of property. See Morissette v. United States, supra at 246 (knowing conversion); United States v. Powell, 294 F. Supp. 1353 (E.D. Va.), aff'd, 413 F.2d 1037 (4th Cir. 1968) (embezzlement). Therefore, 18 U.S.C. §641 can reach temporary misappropriation of government property under either an embezzlement or knowing conversion theory of prosecution.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

A second recurring question involves whether the intent requirement of 18 U.S.C. §641 demands that a defendant know that the property belongs to the United States. While the United States Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit at one time held that knowledge of government ownership was an element of this offense; see Findley v. United States, 362 F.2d 921 (10th Cir. 1966), it has since abandoned this position. See United States v. Speir, 564 F.2d 934, 938 (10th Cir. 1977) (en banc). Other circuits have adopted this view and held that a defendant need not know that it is government property which he/she is taking. See, e.g., United States v. Crutchley, 502 F.2d 1195 (3d Cir. 1974); United States v. Boyd, 446 F.2d 1267 (5th Cir. 1971); Baker v. United States, 429 F.2d 1278 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 957 (1970); United States v. Howey, 427 F.2d 1017 (9th Cir. 1970).

9-66.250 Value

The value of the stolen property is an element of the offense and proof of value must be introduced at trial. See United States v. Wislon, 284 F.2d 407, 408 (4th Cir. 1960); Cartwright v. United States, 146 F.2d 133, 135 (5th Cir. 1944). 18 U.S.C. §641 defines value as "face, par, or market value, or cost price, either wholesale or retail, whichever is greater." The face value can be virtually nothing, as in Keller v. United States, 168 F. 697 (7th Cir. 1909), where the stolen property consisted of six blank checks worth one cent each. The market value is not limited to the legitimate resale price of the property but may also be the price fences might pay on the "thieves' market." See Churder v. United States, 387 F.2d 825 (8th Cir. 1968); Jalbert v. United States, 375 F.2d 125 (5th Cir. 1967); United States v. Ciongoli, 358 F.2d 439 (3d Cir. 1966). Unless the thefts were part of a common scheme or plan the value of property taken in separate larcenies cannot be aggregated to reach the $100 felony minimum, See United States v. DiGilio, supra; Cartwright, supra, at 135, but it may be shown that the aggregate value of property taken in a single offense exceeds $100. See Jalbert, supra, at 116. The "whichever is greater" rule is applicable regardless of the disparity between the retail cost price and the market value. See O'Malley v. United States, 227 F.2d 332, 336 (1st Cir. 1955), cert. denied, 350 U.S. 966 (1956). In Fulks v. United States, 283 F.2d 259 (9th Cir. 1960), cert. denied, 365 U.S. 812 (1961), the court upheld a felony conviction based on the theft of eight gyro horizon indicators with a cost price of $205 each but a scrap value of only $.76 each. Finally, the prosecution does not have to prove the exact or approximate value of the stolen property but merely has to show that it is in excess of $100. See Jalbert, supra, at 126.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

In some situations where valuation problems exist or where realty is involved, consideration should be given to instituting a prosecution under 18 U.S.C. §1361 in place of or in addition to a prosecution under 18 U.S.C. §641. In cases involving fixtures or other attached property, the removal of which necessitates some injury, it is possible to institute a prosecution under 18 U.S.C. §1361. This is useful because a felony conviction can be sustained if "damage" which can be measured by the cost of repair, see Brunette v. United States, 378 F.2d 18 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 389 U.S. 961 (1967), to such property exceeds $100. Occasionally, the value of items removed might not exceed $100, but the cost of repair would. See Edwards v. United States, 361 F.2d 732 (8th Cir. 1966).

One additional question involving value concerns the meaning and application of the term "cost price." In most cases this poses no problem since "cost price" to the government is established by reference to catalogues or other records, kept in the regular course of business by the government, which reflect the price paid by the government for the item. These records, after proper identification and authentication, can be introduced to establish the "cost price."

However, what measure of value can be used when the government makes the items itself? Frequently, items made by government employees are of special nature for which there is no readily ascertainable market value, and even when a market value can be approximated, it may not adequately reflect the value of the item. Thus, the issue arises whether "cost price" can be construed as "cost to the government" in those situations where the government has produced the item itself. As yet, there are no reported decisions on this point.

In general usage "cost price" to the government would mean the price paid by the government in purchasing an item. However, in this unusual situation involving the "internal purchase" of products, the Department feels it would not be unreasonable to argue that "cost price" means cost to the government. Thus it should be possible to introduce evidence as to the costs incurred in making an item.

The question of value relates only to punishment and not to guilt. If a properly instructed jury finds that a defendant is guilty but that the property has a value of $100 or less, it may convict him/her for a misdemeanor despite the fact that he/she was indicted for a felony. See Giorgoli, supra; Robinson v. United States, 333 F.2d 323 (8th Cir. 1964); Larson v. United States, 296 F.2d 80 (10th Cir. 1961); United States v. Marpes, 198 F.2d 186 (3d Cir. 1952).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

When the case involves the embezzlement of funds over a period of time, it is possible to allege the loss of a single sum of money even though the embezzlement may have consisted of a series of conversions occurring at different times. See O'Malley v. United States, 378 F.2d 401 (1st Cir.), cert. denied, 389 U.S. 1008 (1967); Hansberry v. United States, 295 F.2d 800 (9th Cir. 1961). Thus, when small sums of money (less than $100) are embezzled over a period of time, it should be possible to aggregate these amounts (when these embezzlements follow a pattern or reveal a single sustained criminal intent), and allege the loss of a single sum thereby sustaining a felony conviction.

9-66.260 Problems of Proof in Section 641 Prosecutions

Prosecutions under 18 U.S.C. §641 encounter several recurring problems of proof. For example, in some cases the property which is alleged to have been taken either no longer exists or cannot be found. In these instances, proving government ownership of the property can present significant difficulties.

At the outset, it is clear that "[t]o prove the corpus delicti it is not required to identify the recovered property as stolen or even to recover the stolen property." See Mora v. United States, 190 F.2d 749, 750 (5th Cir. 1951). Thus, proof of government ownership of stolen property can rest entirely on circumstantial evidence as in United States v. Donato, 269 F. Supp. 921 (E.D. Pa.), aff'd, 379 F.2d 288 (3d Cir. 1967). See Teel v. United States, 407 F.2d 604 (8th Cir. 1969). The situation where the corpus delicti must be proved by circumstantial evidence is rare and presents far greater problems than the situation where the only issue is the defendant's participation in the offense. The latter situation is typical of theft of government property cases and the courts of appeals have generally upheld convictions based only on circumstantial evidence. See O'Malley v. United States, supra; United States v. Parks, 384 F.2d 714 (4th Cir. 1967).

Receiving stolen property cases also frequently share a common problem of proof. In many instances, the government's proof consists largely of evidence showing that the defendant had in his possession goods which were recently stolen.

The evidentiary impact of possession of recently stolen property, as a practical matter, is obvious, but the technical label for this impact has been stated in various ways. A good statement of the current status of the "rule" is as follows:

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

According to the more recent decisions, the possession of recently stolen property does not give rise to a presumption that the possessor knew the property was stolen but only gives rise to a permissive inference from which the jury may infer under all of the facts and circumstances in evidence that the possessor had guilty knowledge of the stolen characteristics of the property unless the possessor comes up with a reasonable and believable explanation of his possession.

In applying the rule respecting possession of recently stolen property the length or possession along with all the other facts and circumstances must be considered, as the type and kind of property, the amount or volume thereof, the ease or difficulty with which it may be assimilated into legitimate trade channels, including the circumstances under which the property is alleged to have been acquired.

See Aaron v. United States, 382 F.2d 965, 971 (9th Cir. 1967). See United States v. Fench, 470 F.2d 1234 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 410 U.S. 909 (1972). Thus, possession of recently stolen goods is a factor from which a jury may infer that the defendant has knowingly received stolen property.

In embezzlement cases certain types of circumstantial proof are admissible to establish a wrongful taking of property entrusted to the defendant. In fact, Congress has, by statute, prescribed some forms of circumstantial proof in these cases.

Under 18 U.S.C. §3487, a refusal to pay the General Accounting Office by a person charged with the safe-keeping of public money is prima facie evidence of embezzlement. The effect of this statute is merely to restate the principle that the corpus delicti may be proved by circumstantial evidence, and it does not relieve the prosecution of the burden of proving criminal intent. See Shaw v. United States, 357 F.2d 949, 958 (Ct. Cl. 1966). The necessity of proving a formal demand for an accounting and a refusal to account is eliminated when the time for payment of the money was fixed and the payment was not made within that time. See Taylor v. United States, 320 F.2d 843, 850 (9th Cir. 1963), cert. denied, 376 U.S. 916 (1964). A transcript from the books and proceedings of the General Accounting Office is prima facie evidence of a balance against a person charged with embezzling public funds. See 18 U.S.C. §3497.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Another common method of proof in embezzlement cases is the net worth or cost of living technique in which the defendant's admitted income is compared with his assets and expenditures: "clearly, evidence of large expenditures or the acquisition of large unexplained sums of money, during the time charged as that which the embezzlement took place, is some evidence of such embezzlement." See Hansberry v. United States, 295 F.2d 800, 807 (9th Cir. 1961).

9-66.270 Jurisdiction and Venue

Much of the property owned by the United States is located outside the territorial limits of this country. The presence of American military and diplomatic personnel overseas necessarily requires the presence of government property abroad as well. In order to protect this property, section 641 has been construed to have extraterritorial effect. See United States v. Cotten, 471 F.2d 744, 749-50 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 411 U.S. 936 (1973). Therefore, the theft of United States government property in foreign countries violates 18 U.S.C. §641.

Venue for violations of 18 U.S.C. §641 committed abroad is defined by 18 U.S.C. §3238, which provides that the trial of such offenses shall be brought in the district "in which the offender, or any one of two or more joint offenders, is arrested or is first brought; but if such offender or offenders are not so arrested or brought into any district, an indictment or information may be filed in the district of the last known residence of the offender or of any one of two or more joint offenders, or if no such residence is known the indictment or information may be filed in the District of Columbia." See 18 U.S.C. §3238. See United States v. Cotten, supra.

9-66.300 OTHER EMBEZZLEMENT PROVISIONS

Title 18, United States Code, Chapter 31, contains several rarely used theft of government property statutes. See 18 U.S.C. §§643-654. These sections are somewhat narrower in their application than 18 U.S.C. §641 and cover two specific situations.

9-66.310 Embezzlement by Court Officers

First, three of these sections apply to misuse of funds by court officers. See 18 U.S.C. §§645, 646, 647. At the outset 18 U.S.C. §645 provides that:

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

- A. Any United States Marshal, clerk, receiver, referee, trustee or other officer or employee of a United States court who;
- B. Retains or converts to his/her use or the use of another;
- C. Any money coming into his/her hands by virtue of his/her official duties; or
- D. Refuses to return such money after a demand by the party entitled to it, violates the law.

18 U.S.C. §646, in turn, forbids court officers from failing to promptly deposit, or from retaining or converting moneys belonging to the registry of the court. 18 U.S.C. §646 is complemented by 18 U.S.C. §647 which prohibits knowing receipt from a court officer of moneys belonging to the registry of the court.

The penalties for violations of these three sections are tied to the amount of the funds taken. If that amount is $100 or less, the defendant is subject to one year imprisonment, a $1,000 fine, or both. If that amount exceeds $100, the defendant may be sentenced to ten years imprisonment, a fine equal to the amount embezzled, or both.

9-66.320 Embezzlement of Public Funds

In addition, there are a series of sections prohibiting misuse or theft of public funds. See 18 U.S.C. §§643, 644, 648, 649, 650, 651, 652, and 653. These sections are described, in summary fashion, below:

A. 18 U.S.C. §643 provides that any officer, employee or agent of the United States who receives money which he/she is not authorized to retain as salary and fails to account for it as provided by law is guilty of embezzlement.

B. 18 U.S.C. §644 prohibits persons who are not authorized depositaries of public money from knowingly receiving any such money or using, transferring, converting, appropriating or applying such money for any purpose not prescribed by law.

C. 18 U.S.C. §648 forbids custodians of public funds from loaning, using, or converting those funds, or depositing or exchanging them, except as authorized by law.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

D. 18 U.S.C. §649 provides that any person who possesses or controls money belonging to the United States and fails to deposit it when required to do so is guilty of embezzlement.

E. 18 U.S.C. §650 applies to the Treasurer of the United States or any public depository and provides that if these officials fail to keep safely all money deposited with them, they violate the law. One case has suggested that this section is violated when a depository of government money negligently loses these funds. See Shaw v. United States, 357 F.2d 949, 957-58 (Ct. Cl. 1966). The better view on this question, however, seems to be that some criminal intent must be proven as part of a prosecution under this section. See Morrisette v. United States, supra, at 266-67 (1922).

F. 18 U.S.C. §651 relates to the disbursement of public funds and prohibits disbursing officers from falsely certifying full payment of government obligations.

G. 18 U.S.C. §652 also relates to the disbursement of government funds. This section prohibits disbursing officers from disbursing a sum less than that required by law.

H. 18 U.S.C. §653 prohibits any other misuse of government funds by disbursing officers including: (1) converting, loaning or depositing these moneys except as authorized by law; and (2) withdrawing, transferring or applying these funds without authority.

I. Finally, 18 U.S.C. §654 forbids government employees from wrongfully converting the property of others which they receive in the course of their employment.

Penalties for violations of these sections are similar to the penalties prescribed under 18 U.S.C. §§654-47. If the value of the property is $100 or less, a defendant is subject to one year imprisonment, a $1,000 fine, or both. When the value of the property exceeds $100, the defendant may be sentenced to ten (10) years imprisonment, a fine equal to the amount of the property taken, or both. In the case of a violation of 18 U.S.C. §§651 or 652, the maximum fine may equal twice the value of the property taken.

Most of these sections involve situations in which 18 U.S.C. §641 would be equally applicable. Note, however, that the penalties provided by 18 U.S.C. §641 differ from the penalties provided for in 18 U.S.C. §§643 through 654. Violations of 18 U.S.C. §641 are punishable by ten years imprisonment and/or a $10,000 fine. In contrast, 18 U.S.C. §§643 through 654 provide for a maximum penalty of ten years imprisonment and/or a fine equal to the amount taken, or double that amount. Thus, in a given case, the defendant could be subject to a greater or lesser fine, depending upon the statute used. Because of this difference in the penalties provided by these statutes, defendants who fall within these specific sections generally should be prosecuted under the specific statute rather than 18 U.S.C. §641.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-66.330 Miscellaneous Theft of Government Property Statutes

The following chart lists the statutory provision applicable to the property and funds of specific departments and agencies.

Agency or Program	Statute	Offense
Bankruptcy Act (Title 11, U.S.C.)	18 U.S.C. §153	Embezzlement by a trustee, receiver, custodian, United States Marshal, or other officer of the court of any property in his/her charge belonging to the estate of a bankrupt.

Misappropriation by a fiduciary of money paid under any of the laws of the Veterans Administration for the benefit of any minor, incompetent, or other beneficiary. See United States v. Hall, 98 U.S. 343 (1878); United States v. Summers, 19 F.2d 627 (D.D. Va. 1927).

9-66.400 PROTECTION OF PUBLIC RECORDS AND DOCUMENTS

The taking of a public record or document is prohibited by 18 U.S.C. §641. The destruction of such records may be reached under 18 U.S.C. §1361. In both instances, however, proving a $100 loss, the prerequisite to a felony conviction, may be difficult. Thus neither of these statutes adequately protects government records.

That necessary measure of protection for government documents and records is provided by 18 U.S.C. §2971. 18 U.S.C. §2071(a) contains a broad prohibition against destruction of government records or attempts to destroy such records. This section provides that whoever:

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

- A. Willfully and unlawfully;
- B. Conceals, removes, mutilates, obliterates or destroys;
- C. Or attempts to conceal, remove, mutilate, obliterate or destroy; or
- D. Carries away with intent to conceal, remove, mutilate, obliterate or destroy; and
- E. Any record, proceeding, map, book, paper, document or other thing deposited in any public office may be punished by imprisonment for three years, a $2,000 fine, or both.

There are several important aspects to this offense. First, it is a specific intent crime. This means that the defendant must act intentionally with knowledge that he/she is violating the law. See United States v. Simpson, 460 F.2d 515, 518 (9th Cir. 1972). Moreover, one case has suggested that this specific intent requires that the defendant know that the documents involved are public records. See United States v. DeGrout, 30 F. 764, 765 (E.D. Mich. 1887).

The acts proscribed by this section are defined broadly. Essentially three types of conduct are prohibited by 18 U.S.C. §2071(a). These are: (1) concealment, removal, mutilation, obliteration or destruction of records; (2) any attempt to commit these proscribed acts; and (3) carrying away any record with the intent to conceal, remove, mutilate or destroy it. It should be noted that all of these acts involve either misappropriation of or damage to public records. This has led one court to conclude that the mere photocopying of these records does not violate 18 U.S.C. §2071. See United States v. Rosner, 352 F. Supp. 915, 919-922 (S.D. N.Y. 1972), petition denied, 497 F.2d 919 (2d Cir. 1974).

Subsection (b) of 18 U.S.C. §2071 contains a similar prohibition specifically directed at custodians of public records. Any custodian of a public record who "willfully and unlawfully conceals, removes, mutilates, obliterates, falsifies, or destroys [any record] shall be fined not more than $2,000 or imprisoned not more than three years, or both; and shall forfeit his office and be disqualified from holding any office under the United States." While the range of acts proscribed by this subsection is somewhat narrower than subsection (a), it does provide the additional penalty of forfeiture of position with the United States.

Title 18 contains two other provisions, of somewhat narrower application, which relate to public records. 18 U.S.C. §285 prohibits the unauthorized taking, use and attempted use of any document, record or file relating to a claim against the United States for purposes of procuring payment of that claim. 18 U.S.C. §1506 prohibits the theft, alteration or falsification of any record or process in any court of the United States. Both of these sections are punishable by a $5,000 fine or imprisonment for five years.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-66.500 DESTRUCTION OF GOVERNMENT PROPERTY; 18 U.S.C. §1361

18 U.S.C. §1361 is perhaps the broadest of the federal laws protecting government property. It encompasses both real and personal property and prohibits any damage or destruction of that property. 18 U.S.C. §1361 provides as follows:

Whoever willfully injures or commits any depredation against any property of the United States, or of any department or agency thereof, or any property which has been or is being manufactured or constructed for the United States, or any department or agency thereof [commits a federal offense].

At the outset it should be noted that this section simply forbids injury or depredation of government property. "Depredation" has been characterized as the act of plundering, robbing, pillaging or laying waste. Thus, it is clear that this section requires actual damage to government property. Mere adverse possession of that property without physical harm is insufficient to violate the law. See United States v. Jenkins, 554 F.2d 783 (1977).

Moreover this injury or depredation must be willfully inflicted. Accordingly section 1361 is a specific intent crime. See United States v. Jones, 607 F.2d 269, 273-74 (9th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 1085 (1980). Under 18 U.S.C. §1361 the statutory requirement of willfulness is satisfied when the defendant acts intentionally, with knowledge that he is violating the law. See United States v. Simpson, 460 F.2d 515, 518 (9th Cir. 1972); United States v. Moylan, 417 F.2d 1002, 1004 (4th Cir. 1969), cert. denied, 397 U.S. 910 (1970).

Finally, this section applies to willful damage committed against any property of the United States or its agencies, or any property being manufactured for the United States or its agencies. By its use of the term "any property" this section extends both to realty and personalty. Moreover, 18 U.S.C. §1361 protects not only government-owned property but also private property which is being manufactured or constructed for the

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

United States. Thus, title or possession by the United States is not a necessary element of this offense, if the property in question was being made for the United States.

The penalties for violations of this section are tied to the extent of the property damage. If the damage exceeds $100, then a defendant is subject to a $10,000 fine, ten (10) years imprisonment, or both. Property damage which does not exceed $100 is punishable by a $1,000 fine, one (1) year imprisonment, or both.

9-66.510 Malicious Mischief: Communication Lines, Stations or Systems,
18 U.S.C. §1362

Another destruction of property provision, albeit of narrower scope, is 18 U.S.C. §1362. This section forbids three distinct acts. These are: (1) willfully or maliciously destroying any works, property or material of certain radio, telephone telegraph or communications systems; (2) willfully or maliciously interfering with the workings or use of such systems; or (3) willfully or maliciously obstructing, hindering or delaying communications through these systems.

A. Two types of communication facilities are protected by this section. First, 18 U.S.C. §1362 extends to communication facilities operated or controlled by the United States. This includes all government owned facilities plus the following leased facilities:

1. Private line networks. These are lines on full-time lease to the United States. They generally have terminals at government facilities, are used for government business, and may not be repaired without government permission. See Abbate v. United States, 247 F.2d 410, 413-14 (5th Cir. 1957), aff'd, 359 U.S. 187 (1959).

2. Engineered military circuits. The government pays rental for the terminating equipment and the lines to the central office of the carrier. Rental is not paid for the lines between carriers' offices until those lines are needed. The lines from the carrier to the terminating equipment would be covered by this clause; the lines between the carriers would be covered by the second clause of 18 U.S.C. §1362.

B. In addition, 18 U.S.C. §1362 protects facilities "used or intended to be used for military or civil defense functions of the United States." This clause was added in 1961 to cover those military and civil defense communications networks that were not owned by the United States or under the equivalent of a full-time lease. It includes, but is not limited to, the following systems:

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

1. Engineered military circuits not covered by the first clause;
2. The Federal Civil Agencies Communications Systems;
3. The office of Civil Defense Mobilization national warning system; and
4. "[T]he aircraft control and warning network . . . Strategic Air Command communications network, and other systems and networks necessary for weather reporting, command and logistical support . . ." See S. Rep. No. 458, 87th Cong., 1st Sess., 3 (1961).

In determining the applicability of this clause to a particular situation, the following expression of legislative intent should be noted:

This is not a problem of protecting the whole of commercial communications companies. Nor is it a question of protecting all facilities used by all agencies of the Federal Government. Rather, the amendment . . . would protect only that portion of the facilities of commercial carriers which are vital and necessary for military and civil defense functions, [emphasis added] regardless of whether the function is performed by an agency which is part of the Department of Defense or the Office of Civil Defense Mobilization. See S. Rep. No. 485, supra, at 6.

Although the coverage of the statute is broad, it does not extend to nonmilitary or noncivil defense facilities not "operated or controlled" by the United States.

9-66.511 Application of 18 U.S.C. §1362 to Commercial Radio Stations

As noted above, not all civil communications facilities are entitled to 18 U.S.C. §1362's protection. Only those facilities which are "used or intended to be used for military or civil defense functions . . ." fall within this section.

As indicated above, the Congressional intent behind the 1961 amendment to 18 U.S.C. §1362 was that the new protection it afforded for commercial communications companies would be extended only to that portion of the facilities of those companies which are vital and necessary for the military and civil defense functions of the United States. In effectuating that intent, the Department promulgated a policy which limited the circumstances under which federal jurisdiction was to be asserted to those acts perpetrated against member stations of the Emergency Broadcast System (EBS) within the Emergency Action Notification System (EANS). Protection was afforded to these stations inasmuch as they provided the President and the federal government, as well as state and local governments, with an expeditious means of communicating with the general public during an emergency action condition. The EBS, therefore, functioned in a way similar to its predecessor, the CONELRAD System, which was in existence at the time of the 1961 amendment.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

In early 1972, the Federal Communications Commission reorganized and significantly expanded the EBS by issuing EBS authorizations to nearly all existing broadcast stations. This resulted in an increase in active station participation in the EBS from 40% to over 95% of the total broadcast stations in the United States. In so reorganizing the EBS, little if any resemblance remains to the previous CONELRAD or EBS programs and, under former Departmental investigative and prosecutive guidelines, more than 8,000 stations would now be afforded the protection of section 1362 by virtue of their EBS designations.

In point of fact, however, the vast majority of these stations serve no vital or necessary military or civil defense function.

Further study of the new EBS program disclosed that, within that system there are 490 operational areas. Within each operational area, there is a key station known as a number 1 Common Program Control Station (CPCS-1). The function of CPCS-1 stations parallels that of those stations operating within the earlier EBS. There are also some 600 broadcast stations which participate in the EBS Protected Station Program, 400 of which are also CPCS-1 stations. Such protected stations are considered vital to EBS inasmuch as they maintain government owned emergency equipment in a fallout protected environment. Within the reorganized EBS, there are approximately 690 broadcast stations which, either by virtue of their CPCS-1 designation or participation in the EBS Protected Station Program, serve a function which can be described as vital and necessary to the military or civil defense functions of the United States. Therefore, in order to continue to effectuate Congressionally enacted policy and to achieve uniform application of this statute in all judicial districts, only these broadcast facilities shall now be afforded protection under 18 U.S.C. §1362.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Upon receipt of information that a broadcast facility has been the victim of willful or malicious destruction of its property, initial inquiries should be directed toward ascertaining whether the facility falls within the scope of 18 U.S.C. §1362. In many cases, the victim facility may be in a position to provide initial information on this question. Such information, however, should not be relied upon in making a determination as to whether federal jurisdiction will be asserted. Such a determination should be made only after ascertaining from the regional office of the F.C.C. whether the facility's connection to civil defense is sufficient to confer federal criminal jurisdiction.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-69.000 PROTECTION GOVERNMENT PROCESSES

9-69.100 OBSTRUCTION OF JUSTICE

This chapter on obstruction of justice covers those statutes that protect the integrity of proceedings before the federal judiciary, federal executive departments and agencies, and Congress, and individuals connected with those proceedings. This area of the law was thoroughly overhauled and revised by Section 4 of the Victim and Witness Protection Act of 1982, Pub. L. No. 97-291, §4, 96 Stat. 1248, 1249-53, which became effective October 12, 1982. The following statutes are now the chief elements of Chapter 73 of Title 18 of the United States Code, which is entitled "Obstruction of Justice:"

A. 18 U.S.C. §1503, which deals with the intimidation of and retaliation against grand and petit jurors and judicial officers and contains a catchall, or omnibus, clause proscribing the obstruction of "the due administration of justice;"

B. 18 U.S.C. §1505, which deals with the obstruction of antitrust investigations and contains an omnibus clause limited to Congressional and agency proceedings;

C. 18 U.S.C. §1510, which deals with obstruction of criminal investigations through bribery;

D. 18 U.S.C. §1512, which deals with personal intimidation or harassment aimed at affecting the presentation of evidence in official proceedings or impeding the communication of information to law enforcement officers;

E. 18 U.S.C. §1513, which deals with personal or property injury representing retaliation for participation in an official proceeding or for the communication of information to law enforcement officers;

F. 18 U.S.C. §1514, which creates a new civil action to restrain harassment of victims and witnesses in criminal cases; and

G. 18 U.S.C. §1515, which defines terms used in 18 U.S.C. §§1512 and 1513.

The statutes that form the remainder of Chapter 73, 18 U.S.C. §§1501-1502, 1504, 1506-1509, and 1511, are not dealt with in this chapter.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-69-101 Overview

Prior to the enactment of the Victim and Witness Protection Act of 1982 (VWPA), the primary objects of Chapter 73's protection were witnesses and parties in ongoing proceedings (former 18 U.S.C. §§1503, 1505) and informants (former 18 U.S.C. §1510). The VWPA transferred most of the work that had been allocated to former 18 U.S.C. §§1503, 1505, and 1510 to 18 U.S.C. §§1512 and 1513, which are new; 18 U.S.C. §§1503, 1505, and 1510 were amended to reflect that change. 18 U.S.C. §1512 and 1513 reorganized and expanded the law.

The former scheme was organized on the basis of the identification of the victim of the illegal act as either a witness or party (former 18 U.S.C. §1503 (judicial proceedings); former 18 U.S.C. §1505 (nonjudicial proceedings) or an informant (former 18 U.S.C. §1510). 18 U.S.C. §§1512 and 1513 do away with these categories and focus instead on the intent of the wrongdoer. If the illegal act was intended to affect the future conduct of any person in connection with his/her participation in federal proceedings or his/her communication of information to federal law enforcement officers, it is covered by 18 U.S.C. §1512. If, on the other hand, the illegal act was intended as a response to past conduct of that nature, it is covered by 18 U.S.C. §1513.

18 U.S.C. §1512 and §1513 also expand the purview of Chapter 73. They protect the victims of crime, as well as witnesses and informants. And they protect any person who is intimidated, harassed, or retaliated against on account of his being, or on account of his relation to, a victim, witness, or informant. Finally, they apply to acts occurring outside of the United States.

18 U.S.C. §1512 is not limited by the pending proceeding requirement of Sections 1503 and 1505 so that "an official proceeding need not be pending or about to be instituted at the time of the offense." In addition, Section 1512 proscribes misleading conduct intended to obstruct justice and thereby fills a gap in the law of those circuits that have held that such conduct is not covered by the omnibus clauses of Sections 1503 and 1505.

18 U.S.C. §1513 also fills gaps in the law by proscribing threats of retaliation and attempts to retaliate.

18 U.S.C. §1514 is entirely new and creates a federal cause of action for injunctive relief against harassment of a victim or witness in a federal criminal case or against existing or imminent violations of 18 U.S.C. §1512 or §1513.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

18 U.S.C. §1503 and §1505, having been cannibalized by 18 U.S.C. §1512 and §1513, are now statutes that deal with special situations, tampering with and retaliating against grand and petit jurors and judicial officers, and obstructing civil antitrust investigations. However, the statutes retain a significant measure of general applicability because their omnibus clauses remain intact.

18 U.S.C. §1510, is also now a specialized statute; it prohibits the obstruction of criminal investigations through bribery. Such obstruction through other means is covered by 18 U.S.C. §1512.

9-69.102 Legislative History

Former 18 U.S.C. §1503 had its genesis in an effort by Congress to curtail the power of the judiciary to summarily punish criminal contempt. In the early nineteenth century, a federal district judge, exercising the power to punish contempt granted in Section 17 of the Judiciary Act of 1789, 1 Stat. 73, 83, imprisoned and disbarred an attorney infelicitously named Lawless for publishing a criticism of one of the judge's decisions. The judge was impeached by the House of Representatives, but acquitted by the Senate. Congress then passed Chapter 99 of the Act of March 2, 1831. See generally Bloom v. Illinois, 391 U.S. 194, 202-04 (1968); Frankfurter & Landis, Power to Regulate Contempts, 37 Harv. L. Rev. 1010, 1024-27 (1924).

Section 1 of that chapter confined conduct punishable by summary contempt to misbehavior in the presence of the court or so near thereto as to obstruct the administration of justice, misbehavior of a court's officers, and disobedience to any court process or order. 4 Stat. 487-88 (1831). (The successor to Section 1 is now codified at 18 U.S.C. §401).

Section 2 of Chapter 99 of the 1831 Act was the forerunner of former Section 1503. It provided that any person who "corruptly, or by threats or force endeavour[ed] to influence, intimidate, or impede any juror, witness, or officer, in any court of the United States, in the discharge of his duty, or . . . corruptly, or by threats or force, obstruct[ed], or impede[d], or endeavour[ed] to obstruct or impede, the due administration of justice therein," was liable to prosecution by indictment and trial. 4 Stat. 488 (1831).

The net effect of the 1831 Act was that if conduct amounting to contempt of court occurred in the presence of the court the contemner could be punished summarily. But if contemptuous conduct, principally influencing or injuring officers, jurors, or witnesses, occurred away from the court, the contemner was to be dealt with by indictment. See United States v. Essex, 407 F.2d 214, 217 (6th Cir. 1969).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

In 1909, as part of a general revision of the federal penal code, Congress enacted former Section 1503, but without reference to retaliatory conduct. Act of March 4, 1909, Ch. 321, §135, 35 Stat. 1088, 1113. Proscriptions against retaliatory conduct were added in 1945. Act of June 8, 1945, Ch. 178, §159 Stat. 234, 234.

In 1940 former Section 1505, excepting its provisions on retaliatory conduct and antitrust investigations, became law. Act of January 13, 1940, Ch. 1, 54 Stat. 13. The language pertaining to retaliation was added in 1945, Act of June 8, 1945, Ch. 178, §2, 59 Stat. 234, 234, and the language pertaining to civil antitrust investigations was added in 1962, Antitrust Civil Process Act, Pub. L. No. 87-664, §6, 76 Stat. 548, 551-52.

Because it began as a contempt statute, former Section 1503 had always required proof of the pendency of a judicial proceeding. See Pettibone v. United States, 148 U.S. 197, 206-07 (1893). And this requirement was explicitly made a part of former Section 1505. As a consequence, whoever tampered with a witness before the commencement of a proceeding was beyond the reach of these two statutes.

This problem was dealt with in 1967 by the enactment of former Section 1510, Act of Nov. 3, 1967, Pub. L. No. 90-123, 81 Stat. 362, which was specifically designed to cure the problem insofar as it affected criminal investigations, H.R. Rep. No. 658 90th Cong., 1st Sess. 1-3, reprinted in 1967 U.S. Code Cong. and Ad. News 1760, 1760-62.

Still, protection for federal witnesses and informants was inadequate. What is more, federal law provided no protection for the victims of crime. In response to these concerns, Congress enacted the Victim and Witness Protection Act of 1982, Pub. L. No. 97-291, 96 Stat. 1248. Section 2(b) of the Act states:

The Congress declares that the purposes of this Act are:

- (1) to enhance and protect the necessary role of crime victims and witnesses in the criminal justice process;
- (2) to ensure that the federal government does all that is possible within limits of available resources to assist victims and witnesses of crime

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

without infringing on the constitutional rights of the defendant; and

(3) to provide a model for legislation for state and local governments.

96 Stat. 1248-49 (1982), reprinted in 18 U.S.C. §1512 note.

The Act as a whole received widespread support. Moreover, Section 4 of the Act, which substantially revised the law of obstruction of justice, was strongly backed by the Department of Justice.

9-69.103 Effective Date of the Victim and Witness Protection Act of 1982

Section 4 of the Act went into effect October 12, 1982. Offenses occurring before that date should be handled under the former law.

9-69.110 18 U.S.C. §1512--Generally

81 U.S.C. §1512 proscribes conduct intended to illegitimately affect the presentation of evidence in federal proceedings or the communication of information to federal law enforcement officers. It applies to proceedings before Congress, executive departments, and administrative agencies, and to civil and criminal judicial proceedings, including grand jury proceedings.

The statute specifically abolishes the pending-proceeding requirement of former 18 U.S.C. §1503 and §1505, the scope of which was frequently contested.

18 U.S.C. §1512 also eliminates ambiguity about the class of individuals protected. Although the former law protected witnesses, parties, and informants, it was unclear whether that law reached the intimidation of third parties (for example, the spouse of a witness) for the purpose of intimidating the principal party. 18 U.S.C. §1512 plainly covers such conduct, for it speaks of conduct directed toward "another person." See 128 Cong. Rec. H8203 (daily ed. Sept. 30, 1982). The caption for 18 U.S.C. §1512, therefore, is misleading.

18 U.S.C. §1512 embraces two kinds of tampering that had been beyond the reach of federal law. First, 18 U.S.C. §1512 covers misleading conduct (misleading conduct is defined in 18 U.S.C. §1515), which some courts of appeals have held is not proscribed by the omnibus clauses of

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

18 U.S.C. §1503 and §1505. Second, 18 U.S.C. §1512 creates a new misdemeanor for intentional harassment, which is intended to reach conduct less egregious than the corrupt, threatening, or forceful conduct required for a violation of former 18 U.S.C. §1503 and §1505.

Finally, 18 U.S.C. §1512 expands the class of informants protected by federal law.

9-69.111 Scope of 18 U.S.C. §1512

The prohibitions against tampering with witnesses and parties contained in former 18 U.S.C. §1503 and §1505, are now in paragraphs (a)(1) and (2) of 18 U.S.C. §1512. (This statement does not pertain to the omnibus clauses of 18 U.S.C. §1503 and §1505. For a discussion of those clauses, see USAM 9-69.131 to 69.133, 69.141, infra.) All forms of tampering with informants covered in former 18 U.S.C. §1510, with the exception of tampering by means of bribery, are now proscribed by 18 U.S.C. §1512(a)(2). Tampering with informants by means of bribery remains an 18 U.S.C. §1510 offense.

18 U.S.C. §1512 augments the prohibitions of the former law in several important respects. To begin with, 18 U.S.C. §1512(a)(3) sweeps more broadly than former 18 U.S.C. §1510. First, it protects individuals having information concerning a violation of a condition of probation, parole, or bail whether or not that violation constitutes a violation of any federal criminal statute. Second, it protects individuals seeking to provide information to federal judges or federal probation and pretrial services officers.

It is unclear whether 18 U.S.C. §1512(a)(3) was intended to widen the prohibition against obstructing investigations contained in former 18 U.S.C. §1510 to include investigations that are not per se criminal in nature, such as an FAA investigation of an aircraft accident, or a Senate committee investigation of the trucking industry. A comparison of the difference in phraseology between 18 U.S.C. §1510 and 18 U.S.C. §1512 (a)(3), however, indicates that those differences are differences of style, not substance, and that no such expansion was intended. 18 U.S.C. §1510 proscribes interference with "the communication of information relating to a violation of any criminal statute of the United States . . . to a [federal] criminal investigation;" 18 U.S.C. §1512(a)(3) proscribes interference with "the communication to a [federal] law enforcement officer . . . of information relating to the commission or possible commission of a federal offense." There is nothing to indicate that Congress intended to depart from the generally accepted meaning of "law enforcement" as criminal law enforcement and of "offense" as criminal violation. See 18 U.S.C. §1515(4); 128 Cong. Rec. H8203 (daily ed. Sept. 30, 1982).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Accordingly, prosecutions for interference with legislative or administrative investigations that have not taken on the character of a criminal investigation should be brought under the omnibus clause of 18 U.S.C. §1505. See USAM 9-69.141 infra.

18 U.S.C. §1512 contains two significant additions to the types of tampering barred by federal law. First, it forbids "misleading conduct," which was not covered in those circuits that narrowly construed the omnibus clauses of 18 U.S.C. §1503 and §1505 under the rule of ejusdem generis, see United States v. Metcalf, 435 F.2d 754 (9th Cir. 1970); United States v. Essex, 407 F.2d 214 (6th Cir. 1969). See generally 128 Cong. Rec. H8203 (daily ed. Sept. 30, 1982).

Second, 18 U.S.C. §1512 forbids tampering by means of intentional harassment, which is a misdemeanor. The line between this offense and the felony of knowing intimidation or threat is unclear. The Senate bill was intended to, among other things, respond to the perception that the former law "d[id] not address the most common form of intimidation--verbal [oral] harassment." S. Rep. No. 532, 97th Cong., 2d Sess. 15, reprinted in 1982 U.S. Code Cong. and Ad. News 2515, 2521. Such harassment, oral or otherwise, took the form of statements or conduct not ostensibly threatening but nevertheless conveying an underlying sinister message. Id. The Senate bill made such acts felonies. However, the Senate later amended its bill to create the misdemeanor now set out in 18 U.S.C. §1512. No explanation for the change was given. The House analysis of this offense concludes that it reaches "thinly-veiled threats" but not "mere annoyance." 128 Cong. Rec. H8469 (daily ed. Oct. 1, 1982). But see Proposed Omnibus Victims Protection Act: Hearings on S. 2420 before the Subcomm. on Criminal Law of the Senate Comm. on the Judiciary, 97th Cong., 2d Sess. 159 (1982) (statement of ABA representative) (recommendation that annoyance unaccompanied by threat be a misdemeanor).

9-69.112 "Official Proceeding" Requirement (18 U.S.C. §1512)

18 U.S.C. §1515(1) defines "official proceeding" as:

- (A) a proceeding before a judge or court of the United States, a United States magistrate, a bankruptcy judge, or a federal grand jury;

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

(B) a proceeding before the Congress; or

(C) a proceeding before a federal government agency which is authorized by law.

This is a restatement of the former law. As in the former law, "proceeding" is not defined.

A body of case law emerged from former 18 U.S.C. §1503 and §1505 on the meaning of "proceeding" or "pending proceeding." Most of the cases arose under former 18 U.S.C. §1505, see, e.g., United States v. Fruchtman, 421 F.2d 1019 (6th Cir.) (FTC investigation of steel industry), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 849 (1970). The pending-judicial proceeding requirement of 18 U.S.C. §1503 was much less contentious because the beginning of judicial proceedings was well defined and because the 18 U.S.C. §1503 requirement was, for the most part, circumvented by former 18 U.S.C. §1510. Former 18 U.S.C. §1510 did not circumvent the 18 U.S.C. §1505 pending-proceeding requirement because former 18 U.S.C. §1510 protected "criminal" investigations, a label not readily applicable to most investigations carried out by Congress and federal agencies.

18 U.S.C. §1512 does away with the pending-proceeding requirement for judicial matters and matters within the jurisdiction of Congress and federal agencies. In the words of that statute, "[A]n official proceeding need not be pending or about to be instituted at the time of the offense." 18 U.S.C. §1512(d)(1).

9-69.113 State of Mind (18 U.S.C. §1512)

18 U.S.C. §1512(a) proscribes conduct "knowingly" undertaken, and 18 U.S.C. §1512(b) proscribes conduct "intentionally" undertaken. Those terms were defined in the House version of the legislation, but the definitions were deleted by the Senate as unnecessarily explicit. 128 Cong. Rec. H8469 (daily ed. Oct. 1, 1982). Nevertheless, the final bill retained the format and conventions of the House bill with respect to state of mind, and thus the section-by-section analysis of the House bill, 128 Cong. Rec. H8202-03 (daily ed. Sept. 30, 1982), is instructive.

In short, that analysis indicates that a state of mind commonly referred to as "general intent" was prescribed by the use of the terms "knowingly" and "intentionally." General intent means that the person is aware of the nature of his conduct and those circumstances incident to his conduct that make the conduct criminal. Beyond this, the mental states referred to in 18 U.S.C. §1512(a) and (b) differ slightly.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

18 U.S.C. §1512(a) requires, in addition to general intent, a specific intent, for example, the intent to influence testimony in a federal proceeding. These requirements of specific intent are self-explanatory.

18 U.S.C. §1512(b), by contrast, prescribes not specific intent but specific results, for example, preventing a witness from testifying at a federal proceeding. However, this distinction is without a difference, and the specific results should be read as forms of specific intent. As the House bill stated, "[T]he term 'intentional,' with respect to an individual's conduct or the results of that conduct, means that engaging in such conduct or causing such result is such individual's conscious objective...." 128 Cong. Rec. H8210 (daily ed. Sept. 30, 1982). (The compound mens rea requirement of 18 U.S.C. §1512, general intent and specific intent, applies as well to 18 U.S.C. §1513, although there the specific intent is different.)

18 U.S.C. §1512(c) codifies existing case law that holds that influencing a witness is not a strict liability offense. See United States v. Johnson, 585 F.2d 119, 128 (5th Cir. 1978). One may influence a witness to tell the truth. See id. However, under 18 U.S.C. §1512(c) the burden of proving this benign intent, which is an affirmative defense, is on the defendant, and preponderance of the evidence is the standard of proof.

18 U.S.C. §1512(e) contains an important qualification of the mens rea required under the statute: it obviates the need to prove that the defendant was aware of the federal nature of the proceeding or investigation interfered with. See 128 Cong. Rec. H8204 (daily ed. Sept. 30, 1982). A reference to Congressional proceedings, however, is not contained in 18 U.S.C. §1512(e).

9-69.114 Constitutionality of 18 U.S.C. §1512(c)

One unique feature of 18 U.S.C. §1512(c) is the way in which it allocates the burden of proof on this defense to witness tampering charges. Under that section, "it is an affirmative defense, as to which the defendant has the burden of proof by a preponderance of the evidence, that the conduct consisted solely of lawful conduct and that the defendant's sole intention was to encourage, induce, or cause the other person to testify truthfully," 18 U.S.C. §1512(c). This allocation of the burden of proof to the defendant has led some individuals to question the constitutionality of this section.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Affirmative defenses, such as the one created by 18 U.S.C. §1512(c), expose a tension between two principles of constitutional law. Historically, the Supreme Court has held that it is constitutionally permissible for legislatures to establish affirmative defenses to criminal charges and place the burden of proof with respect to these defenses on the defendant. See Leland v. Oregon, 343 U.S. 790 (1952) (insanity defense). Yet the Court has also clearly held that the Constitution requires that the government prove all elements of a criminal offense beyond a reasonable doubt. In re Winship, 397 U.S. 358 (1970).

In re Winship acts as a constitutional limit on legislative discretion in this area of criminal law. Following Winship, a legislature cannot constitutionally diminish the burden of proof in a criminal case. Nor can it shift this burden from the government to the defendant. In Mullaney v. Wilbur, 421 U.S. 684 (1975), the Supreme Court suggested that Winship, might also limit the discretion of legislatures when establishing affirmative defenses. Construed broadly Mullaney, could be read to prohibit any law which assigns the burden of proof on a factual question to the defendant.

The Supreme Court has, however, subsequently resolved this constitutional question in favor of the continued exercise of legislative discretion over affirmative defenses. For example, in Patterson v. New York, 432 U.S. 197 (1977), the Supreme Court upheld the constitutionality of a New York statute which created an affirmative defense to murder. Under this statutory scheme the government initially bore the burden of proof on all elements of the offense of murder. Once the government had carried its burden with respect to these elements, the defendant could reduce the charge to manslaughter by resorting to this affirmative defense. In order to take advantage of this defense the defendant had to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that he acted "under the influence of an extreme emotional disturbance."

The Court held that this procedure was constitutionally permissible. The Court rejected the argument that In re Winship, limited legislative discretion in this area, noting that:

Long before Winship, the universal rule in this country was that the prosecution must prove guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. At the same time, the long-accepted rule was that it was constitutionally permissible to provide that various affirmative defenses were to be proved by the defendant. This did not lead to such abuses or to such widespread redefinition of crime and reduction of the prosecution's burden that a new constitutional rule was required. This was not the problem to which Winship was addressed.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

ID. at 211.

Patterson v. New York draws an important distinction between the elements of a criminal offense, which must be proven by the government, and an affirmative defense, which the defendant may be required to prove. Under Patterson, the constitutionality of a statute turns on the language used by the legislature. Due process is satisfied when the government is required to prove all of the elements of the offense, as defined by the legislature. Due process does not require that the government accept the additional burden of disproving every fact constituting an affirmative defense to the charge. Therefore, legislatures may fashion rules which place the burden of proof of affirmative defenses on the defendant. As long as the government's burden of proof on the elements of the offense remains unchanged, this affirmative defense survives constitutional scrutiny.

The affirmative defense established by 18 U.S.C. §1512(c) provides an excellent example of this principle. 18 U.S.C. §1512 generally proscribes someone from knowingly intimidating another person with the intent to influence that person's testimony. Therefore, a prosecution under 18 U.S.C. §1512 would require proof of: (1) an effort to threaten, force or intimidate another person; (2) an intent to influence that person's testimony. On both of these elements the government would bear the burden of proof beyond a reasonable doubt.

Once the government had proven both an act of intimidation and an intent to influence the testimony of another, it would be entitled to a conviction unless the defendant could take advantage of the limited affirmative defense provided by 18 U.S.C. §1512(c). This defense requires that the defendant show by a preponderance that he was engaged solely in lawful conduct and that his sole purpose was to encourage truthful testimony. This defense would only become an issue, however, after the government had carried its initial burden of proof on all of the elements of the offense. Construed in this way, 18 U.S.C. §1512(c) does not shift the burden of proof to the defendant on an essential element of the offense. Therefore, creation of this affirmative defense is a constitutionally permissible exercise of legislative discretion. See Patterson v. New York, 432 U.S. 197 (1977).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-69.120 18 U.S.C. §1513

9-69.121 Scope of 18 U.S.C. §1513

18 U.S.C. §1513 complements 18 U.S.C. §1512 by proscribing conduct amounting to retaliation for participation in federal legislative, administrative, or judicial proceedings or for the communication of information to federal law enforcement officers. The prohibitions against retaliating against witnesses, parties, and informants contained in former 18 U.S.C. §§1503, 1505, and 1510 are now in 18 U.S.C. §1513(a). (This statement does not pertain to the omnibus clauses of 18 U.S.C. §1503 and §1505. For a discussion of those clauses, see USAM 9-69.131 to 69.133, 69.141 infra.) The structure of 18 U.S.C. §1513 is similar to that of 18 U.S.C. §1512.

18 U.S.C. §1513, like 18 U.S.C. §1512, eliminates ambiguity about the class of people protected. Although the former law protected witnesses and parties, it was unclear whether that law reached retaliation against third parties (for example, the spouse of a witness) in response to the participation of the principal party in a federal proceeding. 18 U.S.C. §1513 plainly covers such conduct. See 128 Cong. Rec. H8204 (daily ed. Sept. 30, 1982). The caption for 18 U.S.C. §1513, therefore, is misleading. (Under the plain language of former 18 U.S.C. §1510, retaliation against third parties for the principal party's communication of information to a federal criminal investigator was proscribed. This proscription is carried forward in 18 U.S.C. §1513.)

18 U.S.C. §1513 embraces two types of conduct heretofore beyond the purview of federal law. First, the statute reaches threats of retaliation. Second, it reaches attempts to retaliate.

Finally, 18 U.S.C. §1513, like 18 U.S.C. §1512, expands the class of informants protected by federal law.

9-69.122 State of Mind (18 U.S.C. §1513)

18 U.S.C. §1513, like 18 U.S.C. §1512, proscribes conduct "knowingly" undertaken. As explained in USAM 9-69.113 supra, this term designates general intent. In addition to general intent, the prosecutor must prove one of the two forms of specific intent set out in the statute. Thus, 18 U.S.C. §1513, like 18 U.S.C. §1512, has a compound state-of-mind requirement.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Unlike 18 U.S.C. §1512(e), 18 U.S.C. §1513 does not excuse the prosecutor from proving that the defendant knew he was obstructing a federal proceeding or investigation. The section-by-section analysis of H.R. 7191 explains: "By the nature of the offense, the wrongdoer knows that the person retaliated against has been a party to or witness in a federal proceeding or has reported information to a federal law enforcement officer." 128 Cong. Rec. H8206 (daily ed. Sept. 30, 1982).

This explanation is flawed, for it does not allow for the possibility that the wrongdoer will not be the party aggrieved by the federal proceeding or investigation. The wrongdoer, for example, could be hired. Furthermore, it is foreseeable that the aggrieved party will know that a person has been "talking" without knowing whether the recipients of the information are federal or state authorities.

9-69.130 18 U.S.C. §1503

9-69.131 Scope of 18 U.S.C. §1503

18 U.S.C. §1503, as amended by the Victim and Witness Protection Act of 1982 (VWPA), forbids tampering with and retaliating against grand jurors, petit jurors, and officers in or of any court of the United States. Section 1503 also contains an omnibus clause prohibiting obstruction of "the due administration of justice." (The omnibus clause is discussed in USAM 9-69.131 to .133 infra.) It is not expected that existing case law under 18 U.S.C. §1503 will be affected by the VWPA.

The term "officer in or of any court of the United States" includes federal district judges, United States v. Jones, 663 F.2d 567 (5th Cir. 1981) (by implication); United States v. Glickman, 604 F.2d 625 (9th Cir. 1979) (by implication), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 1080 (1980); United States v. Fasolino, 586 F.2d 939 (2d Cir. 1978) (per curiam) (by implication); United States v. Margoles, 294 F.2d 371, 373 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 368 U.S. 930 (1961), and U.S. Attorneys, United States v. Jones, 663 F.2d 567 (5th Cir. 1981) (by implication); see United States v. Polakoff, 112 F.2d 888, 890 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 311 U.S. 653 (1940). Presumably, on the basis of that case law and in light of 18 U.S.C. §1503's purpose of protecting the integrity of federal judicial proceedings, that term also includes Supreme Court Justices, federal circuit judges, federal bankruptcy judges, federal magistrates, clerks of federal courts, law clerks to federal judges, federal court staff attorneys, federal court reporters, all federal prosecutors, and defense counsel.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Furthermore, because 18 U.S.C. §1503 applies to civil, as well as criminal, judicial proceedings, Roberts v. United States, 239 F.2d 467, 470 (9th Cir. 1956); Sneed v. United States, 298 F.2d 911, 912 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 265 U.S. 590 (1924); see Nye v. United States, 137 F.2d 73 (4th Cir.) (by implication). cert. denied, 320 U.S. 755 (1943), private attorneys also are, arguably, officers of the court.

A venireman is a "petit juror" within the meaning of section 1503. United States v. Jackson, 607 F.2d 1219, 1222 (8th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 1080 (1980); see United States v. Osborn, 415 F.2d 1021, 1024 (6th Cir. 1969) (en banc), cert. denied, 396 U.S. 1015 (1970).

9-69.132 Pending-Proceeding Requirement (18 U.S.C. §1503)

A prerequisite to prosecution under 18 U.S.C. §1503 (including the omnibus clause) is a pending judicial proceeding. see, e.g., United States v. Johnson, 605 F.2d 729, 730 (4th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 1020 (1980); United States v. Baker, 494 F.2d 1262, 1265 (6th Cir. 1974). See generally Pettibone v. United States, 148 U.S. 197, 206-07 (1893).

A grand jury investigation is such a proceeding. See, e.g., United States v. Campanale, 518 F.2d 352, 356 (9th Cir. 1975) (per curiam), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 1050 (1976). It has been held that a grand jury proceeding is pending once a "subpoena [has been] issued in furtherance of an actual grand jury investigation, i.e., to secure a presently contemplated presentation of evidence before [a regularly sitting] grand jury." United States v. Walasek, 527 F.2d 676, 678 (3d Cir. 1975). And the same court, the Third Circuit, has held that a grand jury need not be aware of the issuance of a subpoena in its name or be otherwise involved in the investigation to which the subpoena relates in order for a grand jury proceeding to be pending. United States v. Simmons, 591 F.2d 206, 210 (3d Cir. 1979). It is necessary only that the subpoena meet the Walasek standard set out above. Id. But cf. United States v. Ryan, 455 F.2d 728 (9th Cir. 1972) (grand jury subpoenas issued at request of Internal Revenue Service agents to circumvent problem with administrative subpoenas did not mark beginning of grand jury proceeding for purpose of pending-proceeding requirement.)

The pending-proceeding issue has also arisen in the context of witness tampering after conviction and the filing in the district court of a notice of appeal to the court of appeals. In United States v. Chandler, 604 F.2d 972 (5th Cir. 1979), cert. dismissed, 444 U.S. 1104 (1980), the court held that an attempt to kill the chief prosecution witness during the pendency of an appeal from a conviction to prevent him from testifying at a possible new trial was a violation of former 18 U.S.C. §1503, although the court's analysis centered on the term "witness" and not the pending-proceeding requirement. In United States v. Johnson, 605 F.2d 729 (4th Cir.1979), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 1020 (1980), the court held that "a criminal action remains pending in the district court until disposition is made of any direct appeal taken by the defendant assigning error that could result in a new trial." 605 F.2d at 731. Thus, former 18 U.S.C. §1503 embraced the defendant's effort to persuade a witness to falsely recant his trial testimony made while the appeal from the defendant's conviction was pending. Id. at 729.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Insofar as tampering with witnesses goes, the pending-proceeding requirement is now defunct. See 18 U.S.C. §1512(d)(1). Tampering with informants was not fettered to a pending-proceeding requirement under former 18 U.S.C. §1510, see USAM 9-69.150 infra, and this continues to be the case under 18 U.S.C. §1512. Tampering with jurors and court officers, however, continues to be subject to the pending-proceeding requirement.

To the extent that conduct can be characterized as retaliation, as opposed to tampering, the pending-proceeding requirement is and always has been irrelevant. See United States v. Roberts, 638 F.2d 134, 135 (9th Cir.) (per curiam) (18 U.S.C. §1510), cert. denied, 452 U.S. 909 (1981); United State v. Woodmansee, 354 F.2d 235 (2d Cir. 1965) (per curiam) (by implication) (§1503); United States v. Verra, 203 F. Supp. 87, 89 (S.D.N.Y. 1962) (§1503); S. Rep. No. 225, 79th Cong., 1st Sess. 1-2, reprinted in 1945 U.S. Code Cong. Serv. 723, 723-2. H.R. Rep. No. 658, 90th Cong., 1st Sess. 1-3, reprinted in 196 U.S. Code Cong. & Ad. News 1760, 1760-65.

9-69.133 State of Mind (18 U.S.C. §1503)

As one court dryly observed, "The state-of-mind requirement of 18 U.S.C. §1503 has long confused the courts." United States v. Neiswender, 590 F.2d 1269, 1273 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 441 U.S. 963 (1979).

18 U.S.C. §1503 proscribes certain undertakings, for example, tampering with a petit juror or obstructing the due administration of justice, from being carried out in certain ways, for example, by force. The state of mind that together with such conduct constitutes a violation of 18 U.S.C. §1503 is described in the statutory term "corruptly," which is part of both the main clause and the omnibus clause of the statute.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The great weight of authority holds that "corruptly" connotes specific intent. See United States v. Rasheed, 663 F.2d 843, 852 (9th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 1157 (1982); United States v. Ogle, 613 F.2d 233, 238 (10th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 825 (1980); United States v. Haas, 583 F.2d 216, 220 (5th Cir. 1978), cert. denied, 440 U.S. 981 (1979); United States v. Harris, 558 F.2d 366, 369 (7th Cir. 1977); United States v. White, 557 F.2d 233, 235 (10th Cir. 1977) (per curiam); United States v. Haldeman, 559 F.2d 31, 114-15 (D.C. Cir. 1976) (per curiam), cert. denied, 431 U.S. 933 (1977). See generally Pettibone v. United States, 148 U.S. 197, 207 (1893). "Corruptly" has been variously stated to mean "for an evil or wicked purpose," United States v. Ryan, 455 F.2d 728, 734 (9th Cir. 1972); "with the purpose of obstructing justice," United States v. Rasheed, 663 F.2d at 852; and "for an improper motive," United States v. Haas, 583 F.2d at 220.

Thus, in addition to proving that the defendant knowingly or deliberately committed the act in question, the government must prove that the defendant had an improper or evil purpose in mind.

"[T]his specific intent may be established by circumstantial evidence." United States v. White, 557 F.2d at 235. But the "intent may [only] be inferred from all the circumstantial evidence introduced at trial"; it "may [not] be presumed as a matter of law from the circumstances." United States v. Haldeman, 559 F.2d at 116 (emphases in original).

The specific intent requirement also entails the burden of proving that the defendant was aware of the pendency of a federal judicial proceeding and acted with the purpose of interfering with that proceeding. See Pettibone v. United States, 148 U.S. at 207; United States v. Haas, 583 F.2d at 220; United States v. White, 557 F.2d at 236; United States v. Baker, 494 F.2d 1262, 1265 (6th Cir. 1974).

The only deviation from the rule that "corruptly" connotes specific intent occurred in United States v. Neiswender, 590 F.2d 1269 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 441 U.S. 963 (1979). There, during a trial, Mr. Neiswender made an offer to the defense counsel to "guarantee" a jury acquittal. In return for the guarantee, Neiswender wanted money. Unrelated events resulted in the declaration of a mistrial.

For initiating this transaction, Neiswender was charged with violating the omnibus clause of 18 U.S.C. §1503. As a defense, the defendant argued that he intended only to defraud the defense counsel. The defendant never intended, the argument continued, to obstruct justice, to cause the defense counsel to reduce his/her efforts in reliance on the guarantee, for such reduced efforts would raise the likelihood of conviction, which in turn would expose Neiswender's scam.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The Fourth Circuit rejected Neiswender's argument, holding that although Neiswender specifically intended not to obstruct justice, the diminution of the defense counsel's efforts was a reasonably foreseeable result of his conduct, and therefore Neiswender had acted with a state of mind cognizable under 18 U.S.C. §1503: "[A] defendant who intentionally undertakes an act or attempts to effectuate an arrangement, the reasonably foreseeable consequence of which is to obstruct justice, violates 18 U.S.C. §1503 even if his hope is that the judicial machinery will not be seriously impaired." 590 F.2d at 1274.

It is worth noting that "corruptly" serves two discrete functions. The first, as just discussed, relates to the state-of-mind issue. The second function of that word is to describe some of the means by which the obstruction of justice is prohibited. Accordingly, it is possible to obstruct justice under 18 U.S.C. §1503 by means other than those specifically enumerated, namely, threats, force, and threatening letter or communication. See, e.g., United States v. Rasheed, 663 F.2d 843, 850-52 (9th Cir. 1981) (concealing documents requested by grand jury subpoena is obstructing justice corruptly), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 1157 (1982). See generally USAM 9-69.133 infra.

9-69.134 Omnibus Clause (18 U.S.C. §1503)

The omnibus clause of 18 U.S.C. §1503 provides:

Whoever...corruptly or by threats or force, or by any threatening letter or communication, influences, obstructs, or impedes, or endeavors to influence, obstruct, or impede, the due administration of justice, shall be (guilty of an offense).

In delimiting the scope of this provision, the courts have not been especially concerned with defining the conduct that constitutes the criminal object the provision proscribes--interference with the due administration of justice. Little improvement could be made on the Ninth Circuit's statement that interference with the due administration of justice is "conduct designed to interfere with the process of arriving at an appropriate judgment in a pending case and which would disturb the ordinary and proper functions of the court." Haili v. United States, 260 F.2d 744, 746 (9th Cir. 1958).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The dispute over the omnibus clause has instead been over the means used to achieve the object of interfering with the due administration of justice: What means or methods are forbidden by the omnibus clause?

By its terms, the omnibus clause covers threats, force, and threatening letters and communications. The proscription of other methods of obstructing justice must, by the phraseology of the omnibus clause, be tied to the word "corruptly."

The preferred interpretation of the omnibus clause in this respect is exemplified by United States v. Walasek, 527 F.2d 676 (3d Cir. 1975). There, the defendant was charged with violating the omnibus clause of 18 U.S.C. §1503 for knowingly destroying documents sought by a federal grand jury subpoena. The defendant argued that the rule of ejusdem generis compelled the holding that the omnibus clause proscribed only those obstructions of justice accomplished by means of coercion or intimidation. The Third Circuit rejected the argument, noting that its acceptance would make "corruptly" surplusage. 527 F.2d at 679 n.9. The court held that the destruction of documents came within "the ordinary meaning" of "corruptly . . . obstruct[ing] or impeded[ing] the due administration of justice." Id. at 681.

The Fifth Circuit likewise rejected a slightly broader ejusdem generis argument and held that the omnibus clause's purview reached an attempt to sell grand jury transcripts. United States v. Howard, 569 F.2d 1331, 1333-36 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 834 (1978). In Howard, the "defendants argue[d] that the statute's specific language limit[ed] the omnibus clause so that 'obstructing the due administration of justice' mean[t] influencing witnesses, jurors, and officials in ways other than, [but] similar to, those expressly enumerated in the first part of the section." 569 F.2d at 1333. To this argument the court replied:

We cannot agree with this reading of the statute because it renders the omnibus clause superfluous and because the most natural construction of the clause is that it prohibits acts that are similar in result, rather than manner, to the conduct described in the first part of the statute.

Id. (citation and footnote omitted). See United States v. Solow, 138 F. Supp. 812, 815 (S.D.N.Y. 1956).

By contrast, the Sixth and Ninth Circuits accepted, for a time, the ejusdem generis argument and limited the reach of the omnibus clause. See United States v. Ryan, 455 F.2d 728, 733 (9th Cir. 1972) (destruction and falsification of documents subpoenaed by federal grand jury not a violation of omnibus clause); United States v. Metcalf, 435 F.2d 754, 756-57 (9th Cir. 1970) (purchase of vehicle previously purchased with bank-robbery proceeds and therefore evidence of a crime not the kind of intimidating action to which omnibus clause is limited); United States v. Essex, 407 F.2d 214, 218 (6th Cir. 1969) (filing false affidavit with court does not alone violate omnibus clause). The holdings of the cases just cited, however, have been undermined by recent decisions in those circuits.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

In United States v. Faudman, 640 F.2d 20 (6th Cir. 1981), the Sixth Circuit rejected the eiusdem generis argument and noted its agreement with United States v. Walasek, 527 F.2d 676 (3d Cir. 1975). At issue in Faudman was the destruction and alteration of corporate records sought by a federal grand jury. The court reasoned that the disjunctive wording of the methods phrase of the omnibus clause meant that intimidating conduct was not a prerequisite for a violation of the omnibus clause. 640 F.2d at 23. The court distinguished its Essex decision by limiting it to corrupt conduct that is solely of a personal, testimonial nature, affidavits, testimony, which can be prosecuted only as perjury in the Sixth Circuit. Id.

Similarly, the Ninth Circuit departed from the prevailing understanding of its law and held that the concealment of documents subpoenaed by a federal grand jury amounted to an omnibus clause offense. United States v. Rasheed, 663 F.2d 843 (9th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 1157 (1982); see United States v. Brown, 688 F.2d 596, 598 (9th Cir. 1982). The Rasheed court read Ryan as a case turning on whether the subpoenaed documents, which were destroyed or falsified, were material to the grand jury investigation. 663 F.2d at 851. And Metcalf was viewed as a case turning on whether a judicial proceeding was pending at the time of the wrongdoing. Id. at 851-52. Statements in those cases indicating acceptance of the eiusdem generis argument were dismissed as dicta. Id. at 851. Like the Sixth Circuit in Faudman, the Rasheed court cited United States v. Walasek, 527 F.2d 676 (3d Cir. 1975) with approval. 663 F.2d at 852.

In light of these developments, it can be fairly said that the courts of appeals have uniformly given a broad reading to the omnibus clause of 18 U.S.C. §1503, whose scope is now principally limited by the pending-judicial proceeding requirement. See USAM 9-69.131 supra.

An equally broad reading was given to the less frequently litigated omnibus clause of 18 U.S.C. §1505, whose pertinent language is nearly identical to 18 U.S.C. §1503's omnibus clause, in United States v. Alo, 439 F.2d 751 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 404 U.S. 850 (1971). There, the Second Circuit held that false and evasive testimony before an SEC investigative proceeding was an omnibus clause offense, rejecting the eiusdem generis argument. 439 F.2d at 753-54. In light of the Victim and Witness Protection Act of 1982 (VWPA), the question may arise whether the omnibus clause of 18 U.S.C. §1503 still embraces witness tampering. It could be argued that witness tampering is now covered exclusively by new 18 U.S.C. §1512.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The legislative history of the VWPA, as set out below, however, compels the conclusion that the omnibus clause of 18 U.S.C. §1503 still reaches witness tampering.

As reported out of committee, 18 U.S.C. §1512 contained an omnibus clause patterned after the omnibus clauses of 18 U.S.C. §1503 and §1505. It read:

Whoever...with intent corruptly, or by threats of [sic] force, or by any threatening letter or communication, influences, obstructs, impedes, or attempts to corruptly, or by threats of [sic] force, or by threatening letter or communication, influences, obstructs, impedes the --

- (A) enforcement and prosecution of federal law;
- (B) administration of law under which an official proceeding is being or may be conducted; or
- (C) exercise of a federal legislative power of inquiry, shall be [guilty of an offense].

S. 2420, 97th Cong. 2d Sess., 128 Cong. Rec. S11430 (daily ed. Sept. 14, 1982).

The Senate Report explained:

["] The obstruction of justice statute is an outgrowth of Congressional recognition of the variety of corrupt methods by which the proper administration of justice may be impeded or thwarted, a variety limited only by the imagination of the criminally inclined. ["]

In the Committee's view, this observation leads to the conclusion that the purpose of preventing an obstruction or miscarriage of justice cannot be fully carried out by a simple enumeration of the commonly prosecuted obstruction offenses. There must also be protection against the rare type of conduct that is the product of the inventive criminal mind and which also thwarts justice.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

In order to reach such cases...the Committee determined to include subsection (a)(3). The Committee does not intend that the doctrine of ejusdem generis be applied to limit the coverage of this subsection. Instead, the analysis should be functional in nature to cover conduct the function of which is to tamper with a witness, victim, or informant in order to frustrate the ends of justice. For example, a person who induces another to remain silent or to give misleading information to a federal law enforcement officer would be guilty under subsection (a)(3), irrespective of whether he employed deception, intimidation, threat, or force as to the person.

The first branch of the proposed subsection referring to the "enforcement and prosecution of federal law" is designed to carry forward the basic coverage in 18 U.S.C. §1503. The latter two branches of the subsection, referring to the "administration of a law under which an official proceeding is being conducted" and to the "exercise of a legislative power of inquiry," are designed to continue the general scope of the final paragraphs of 18 U.S.C. §1505.

S. Rep. No. 532, 97th Cong., 2d Sess. 17-19, reprinted in 1982 U.S. Code Cong. & Ad. News 2515, 2523-25.

As the Report noted, the proposed omnibus clause in all material respects duplicated in phraseology and purpose the existing omnibus clauses of 18 U.S.C. §1503 and §1505. For this reason, and one other, the proposed omnibus clause was omitted from the final version of 18 U.S.C. §1512.

Subsection (3) of section 1512(a) of the Senate passed bill, general obstruction of justice residual clause of the intimidation section, was taken out of the bill as beyond the legitimate scope of this witness protection measure. It also is probably duplicative of abstrusion [sic] of justice statutes already in the books.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

128 Cong. Rec. S13063 (daily ed. Oct. 1, 1982) (remarks of Senator Heinz).

Congress, as the Senate Report reflects, plainly desired that there be a federal obstruction of justice statute as spacious as "the imagination of the criminally inclined." Such a statute was not part of the VWPA, however, but only because (1) it may have been nongermane to the Act and (2) it would have "probably duplicat[ed]" existing law. From this one must conclude that Congress did not intend to contract the purview of the omnibus clause of 18 U.S.C. §1503.

Moreover, the pertinent legislative history of the VWPA evinces no sentiment for the contraction of any obstruction of justice statute. See S. Rep. No. 532, 97th Cong., 2d Sess. 14-22, 27-29, reprinted in 1982 U.S. Code Cong. & Ad. News 2515, 2520-28, 2533-35; 128 Cong. Rec. H8203-05 (daily ed. Sept. 30, 1982) (Section-by-Section Analysis of H.R. 7191); 128 Cong. Rec. H8469 (daily ed. Oct. 1, 1982) (House analysis of Senate amendments to House-passed bill); 128 Cong. Rec. X13064 (daily ed. Oct. 1, 1982) (statement of Sen. Laxalt) ("S. 2420 deals with th[e] problem [of victim/witness intimidation] by broadening and rewriting the intimidation sections of our federal criminal law.") (Emphasis added).

It is against this backdrop that the following statement of Senator Heinz on the relation between 18 U.S.C. §1512 and §1503 must be read:

As mentioned above, 18 U.S.C. 1503 already provides some witness protections—but only as to witnesses under subpoena [sic] in active cases. The Senate-passed bill allowed a slight overlap between old section 1503 and new sections 1512 and 1513. The House version amends section 1503 so it will make no mention of, and provide no protection to, subpoenaed [sic] witnesses. The compromise accepts the House position. By amending section 1503 in this way, the proposal will contribute to a clearer and less duplicative law.

128 Cong. Rec. S13063 (daily ed. Oct. 1, 1982).

The assertion that "section 1503 [as amended]...will provide no protection to...witnesses" cannot be construed as a comment about the omnibus clause of 18 U.S.C. §1503. The elimination of 18 U.S.C. §1503's references to witnesses was intended only to avoid an overlap between 18

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

U.S.C. §1512 and §1503, not to diminish the omnibus clause. This is clear from the legislative history set out and discussed above and from the following statement taken from the House analysis of the bill that became the VWPA:

Section 3(c) [which later became section 4(c)] of the legislation makes technical amendments to 18 U.S.C. §1503, which deals with tampering with federal witnesses, jurors, and court officers. The amendments delete language from section 1503 pertaining to witness intimidation and retaliation because the conduct dealt with by that language is covered in new sections 1512 and 1513.

128 Cong. Rec. H8295 (daily ed. Sept. 30, 1982) (emphasis added).

Convictions under the omnibus clause of 18 U.S.C. §1503 have been based on the following conduct:

A. Endeavoring to suborn perjury, United States v. Partin, 552 F.2d 621 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 903 (1977); Falk v. United States, 370 F.2d 472 (9th Cir. 1966), cert. denied, 387 U.S. 926 (1967).

B. Endeavoring to influence a witness to make himself unavailable to testify, United States v. Partin, 552 F.2d 621 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 903 (1977).

C. Giving false denials of knowledge and memory, United States v. Griffin, 589 F.2d 200 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 825 (1979), or false and evasive testimony, United States v. Cohn, 452 F.2d 881 (2d Cir. 1971), cert. denied, 405 U.S. 975 (1972). But see United States v. Faudman, 640 F.2d 20 (6th Cir. 1981) (construing United States v. Essex, 407 F.2d 214 (6th Cir. 1969)) (perjury alone does not violate omnibus clause).

D. Falsifying a report likely to be submitted to a grand jury, United States v. Shoup, 608 F.2d 950 (3d Cir. 1979).

E. Destroying, altering, or concealing subpoenaed documents, United States v. Rasheed, 663 F.2d 843 (9th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 1157 (1982); United States v. Faudman, 640 F.2d 20 (6th Cir. 1981); United States v. Simmons, 591 F.2d 206 (3d Cir. 1979); United States v. Walasek, 527 F.2d 676 (3d Cir. 1975); United States v. Weiss, 491 F.2d 460 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 833 (1974).

9-69.140 18 U.S.C. §1505

9-69.141 Scope of 18 U.S.C. §1505

18 U.S.C. §1505 was changed radically by the Victim and Witness Protection Act of 1982. A prohibition against obstruction of process issued under the Antitrust Civil Process Act, 15 U.S.C. §§1311-1314, and an omnibus clause pertaining to pending proceedings before Congress and federal departments and agencies are all that remain.

Tampering with witnesses and retaliating against witnesses and parties in connection with administrative or legislative proceedings, offenses under former 18 U.S.C. §1505, are now covered by 18 U.S.C. §1512 (tampering) and §1513 (retaliation).

9-69.142 Omnibus Clause (18 U.S.C. §1505)

The omnibus clause of 18 U.S.C. §1505 parallels its counterpart in 18 U.S.C. §1503 in language and purpose, and most of the law construing the latter is applicable to the former.

The omnibus clause of 18 U.S.C. §1505 requires a corrupt state of mind. See United States v. Browning, 630 F.2d 694, 700-01 (10th Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 451 U.S. 988 (1981). See generally USAM 9-69.132 supra.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The provision is not limited by the rule of ejusdem generis. United States v. Alo, 439 F.2d 751, 753-54 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 404 U.S. 850 (1971); see United States v. Browning, Inc., 572 F.2d 720, 724-25 (10th Cir.), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 822 (1978). See generally USAM 9-69.133 supra.

But it is contrained, like its counterpart in 18 U.S.C. §1503, by the rule that the obstruction of justice in question must be material to a pending proceeding. This rule has been the focus of many of the reported decisions arising out of 18 U.S.C. §1505.

Some courts have applied the pending-proceeding requirement in a relaxed manner. In United States v. Fruchtman, 421 F.2d 1019 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 849 (1970), the Sixth Circuit rejected the "contention that the word 'proceeding' refers only to those steps before a federal agency which are juridical or administrative in nature." 421 F.2d at 1021. Instead, the court held that "'proceeding' is a term of broad scope, encompassing both the investigative and adjudicative functions of a department or agency." Id. The court concluded that the submission of falsified documents to the attorney in charge of a Federal Trade Commission investigation of the steel industry during the investigation was a 18 U.S.C. §1505 offense. See id.

A similar ruling was handed down by the Tenth Circuit in a case nvolving an investigation by the United States Customs Service of the corporate defendants' practice of importing firearms. United States v. Browning, Inc., 572 F.2d 720 (10th Cir.), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 822 (1978). While the Customs Service was undertaking "an initial or preliminary evaluation . . . which was a prelude to a criminal investigation," 572 F.2d at 724, of the matter, the individual defendant advised a foreign exporter of firearms to lie to Customs Service investigators. The court held the pending-proceeding requirement satisfied:

In sum, the term "proceeding" is not, as one might be inclined to believe, limited to something in the nature of a trial. The growth and expansion of agency activities have resulted in a meaning being given to "proceeding" which is much more inclusive and which no longer limits itself to formal activities in a court of law. Rather, the investigation or search for the true facts such as that which is described in the indictment here is not to be ruled as a non-proceeding simply because it is preliminary to indictment and trial.

Id.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Other cases, however, can be read as establishing a slightly stricter pending-proceeding requirement, one that calls for a formal act. In Rice v. United States, 356 F.2d 709 (8th Cir. 1966), a case arising under the non-omnibus portion of former section 1505, acts of witness intimidation against union members were carried out prior to the filing of a formal complaint of unfair labor practices with the National Labor Relations Board by the general counsel of the NLRB. The court noted that "(g)overnmental agency proceedings frequently embrace both investigative and adjudicative proceedings," id. at 713, and held that acts in question occurred while a proceeding was pending, id. at 715. But the court took pains to point out that the act followed the filing of unfair labor charges with the regional director of the NLRB by the individuals who were intimidated.

In United States v. Batten, 226 F. Supp. 492 (D.D.C. 1964), aff'd mem., No. 18610 (D.C. Cir. Oct. 15, 1964), cert. denied, 380 U.S. 912 (1965), the 18 U.S.C. §1505 offense involved the subornation of perjury before a Securities and Exchange Commission hearing that was part of an investigation instituted by formal order of the SEC. The court held "that the term 'proceeding' as used in 18 U.S.C. §1505, should be construed broadly enough to include any investigation directed by a formal order of the Commission, at which a designated officer takes testimony under oath." 226 F. Supp. at 494.

Investigations by the Internal Revenue Service are Section 1505 proceedings. See United States v. Lewis, 657 F.2d 44, 45 (4th Cir.) (ploy to frustrate IRS effort to collect delinquent taxes), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 1086 (1981); United States v. Vixie, 592 F.2d 1277, 1278 (9th Cir. 1976) (per curiam) (submission of false document in response to IRS subpoena); United States v. Persico, 520 F. Supp. 96, 101-02 (E.D.N.Y. 1981) (endeavor to bribe IRS agent to influence IRS's criminal investigation of individual's tax liability).

Investigations by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, on the other hand, are not. United States v. Higgins, 511 F. Supp. 453, 455-56 (W.D. Ky. 1981); cf. United States v. Scratow, 137 F. Supp. 620, 621-22 (W.D. Pa. 1956) (FBI investigation is not a §1503 "proceeding"). But cf. 18 U.S.C. §§1510, 1512(a)(3), (b)(2).

The omnibus clause of 18 U.S.C. §1505 continues to embrace witness tampering. See USAM 9-69.133, supra.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-69.150 18 U.S.C. §1510

Former 18 U.S.C. §1510 proscribed endeavors to obstruct federal criminal investigations "by means of bribery, misrepresentation, intimidation, or force or threats thereof," and it proscribed retaliation against informants. Enacted in 1967, it was intended "to plug a loophole in the protection the government [could] provide to its own witnesses and informants" as a result of the pending-proceeding requirement of Sections 1503 and 1505. H.R. Rep. No. 658, 90th Cong., 1st Sess. 2, reprinted in 1967 U.S. Code Cong. & Ad. News 1760, 1761; see United States v. San Martin, 515 F.2d 317, 320 (5th Cir. 1975).

The chief objective of the provision was the protection of the flow of information to federal investigators concerning organized crime and racketeering activities before the institution of formal judicial proceedings. See H.R. Rep. No. 658, 90th Cong., 1st Sess. 2-3, reprinted in 1967 U.S. Code Cong. & Ad. News 1760, 1761-62.

Obstructions of federal criminal investigations by all means enumerated in former 18 U.S.C. §1510 other than bribery are now covered by 18 U.S.C. §1512(a). Obstructions by bribery remain 18 U.S.C. §1510 offenses. Obstructions by intentional harassment, a new misdemeanor, is a 18 U.S.C. §1512(b) offense. Retaliation against informants is now covered by 18 U.S.C. §1513.

Although former 18 U.S.C. §1510 barred threats aimed at deterring the future communication of information to federal criminal investigators, it did not cover threats of retaliation for such past communication. See United States v. Segal, 649 F.2d 599, 602-03 (8th Cir. 1981); United States v. San Martin, 515 F.2d 317, 320-21 (5th Cir. 1975). Only acts of retaliation were within the statute's purview. See id. at 320. This flaw has been corrected by 18 U.S.C. §1513.

18 U.S.C. §1510 proscribes endeavors "willfully" undertaken. "The word 'willfully' as used here means proceeding from a conscious motion of the will. It means designedly or intentionally and does not include an accidental or involuntary act." H.R. Rep. No. 658, 90th Cong., 1st Sess. 3, reprinted in 1967 U.S. Code Cong. & Ad. News 1760, 1762. Section 1510 "require[s] proof of a specific intent to obstruct justice." United States v. Carleo, 576 F.2d 846, 849 (10th Cir.), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 850 (1978); see United States v. Lippman, 492 F.2d 314, 317 (6th Cir. 1974), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 1107 (1975). And "[i]t is required that the defendant have actual knowledge that the intended recipient of the information be a federal criminal investigator." United States v. Lippman, supra, at 317; accord United States v. Grande, 620 F.2d 1026, 1036-37 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 830, 919 (1980); United States v. Williams, 470 F.2d 1339, 1342 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 411 U.S. 936 (1973). However, the defendant need not actually know that information has been or is about to be supplied to a federal criminal investigator. Rather, it is required only that "the accused reasonably believed that information had been, or would be, supplied to [a federal] investigator." United States v. Kozak, 438 F.2d 1062, 1066 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 402 U.S. 996 (1971). See United States v. Zemek, 634 F.2d 1159, 1176 (9th Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 450 U.S. 916, 985, 452 U.S. 905 (1981). It follows that it is unnecessary to show that the victim actually intended to give information to a federal investigator. See United States v. Kozak, supra, at 1065-66. Finally, it is unnecessary to show that the victim in fact felt threatened. United States v. Carzoli, 447 F.2d 774, 777-78 (7th Cir. 1971), cert. denied, 402 U.S. 1015 (1972).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

For the statute to be violated there is no requirement that an investigation be underway; only the obstruction of a communication to a criminal investigator is required. United States v. Lippman, supra. The fact that the criminal act occurred after the institution of judicial proceedings is immaterial, and this is true whether the act was retaliatory, United States v. Roberts, 638 F.2d 134, 135 (9th Cir.) (per curiam) (offense occurred 18 days after conviction), cert. denied, 452 U.S. 909 (1981), or intended to impede the future communication of information to federal criminal investigators, United States v. Koehler, 544 F.2d 1326, 1329-30 (5th Cir. 1977) (offense occurred subsequent to indictment).

18 U.S.C. §1510 cannot be used against a person who gives false or misleading information to a criminal investigator.

The sole purpose of the [section] is to protect informants and witnesses against intimidation or injury by third parties with the purpose of preventing or discouraging the informants or witnesses from supplying or communicating information to the federal investigator. The informants or witnesses cannot themselves be subject to prosecution under this [section] on account of any information they may furnish to the investigator.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-69.160 Inchoate Obstruction of Justice Offenses

Former 18 U.S.C. §1503 and §1505 prohibited "endeavors" to tamper with witnesses. 18 U.S.C. §1503 prohibits "endeavors" to tamper with jurors and officers of the court. The omnibus clauses of 18 U.S.C. §1503 and §1505 prohibit "endeavors" to obstruct justice as well as actual obstructions of justice. 18 U.S.C. §1510 prohibits "endeavors" to obstruct criminal investigations through bribery.

Although "endeavor" might be thought of as a synonym for "attempt," the Supreme Court has concluded that "endeavor" is broader than "attempt." United States v. Russell, 255 U.S. 138 (1921). In Russell, the defendant was charged with violating former 18 U.S.C. §1503 by relating to the spouse of a venireman the suggestion that money would be forthcoming in return for the venireman's favoring an acquittal in a certain case if he was chosen to be a juror. Because the spouse, it appears, did not act on the suggestion, the defendant argued that his conduct was not an endeavor or attempt to influence a juror but was merely preparation for an endeavor or attempt. The Court rejected the argument, saying:

The word of the section is "endeavor," and by using it the section got rid of the technicalities which might be urged as besetting the word "attempt," and it describes any effort or essay to accomplish the evil purpose that the section was enacted to prevent...The section...is not directed at success in corrupting a juror but at the "endeavor" to do so. Experimental approaches to the corruption of a juror are the "endeavor" of the section.

Id. at 143. Accord Osborn v. United States, 385 U.S. 323, 333 (1966). In enacting former 18 U.S.C. §1510 in 1967, Congress clearly intended to import this case law into that provision as well:

This [section] also uses the word "endeavors." Here "endeavor" means any effort or essay to accomplish the evil purpose that this [section] is designed to prevent. The use of the word "endeavor" avoids the technical difficulties which would be involved by the use of the word "attempt." Thus, where a person's acts have not progressed far enough to amount to an attempt, under the [section] such acts would come within the scope of the word "endeavor" and thus be subject to punishment.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

H.R. Rep. No. 658, 90th Cong., 1st Sess. 3, reprinted in 1967 U.S. Code Cong. & Ad. News 1760, 1762. (For discussion of the "technical difficulties" attending the term "attempt," see United States v. Mandujano, 499 F.2d 370, 372-77 (5th Cir. 1974) cert. denied, 419 U.S. 1114 (1975), and W. LaFave & A. Scott, Handbook on Criminal Law §§59-60 (1972).)

"Attempt" and "endeavor" are points on the continuum, or axis, of actus reus, and the cases have sought to illuminate the gray area between the two points. In United States v. Tedesco, 635 F.2d 902 (1st Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 452 U.S. 962 (1981), the defendant suggested to the government witness several times after the indictment of a third party but before the trial that the third party "could do a lot" for the witness if he, the witness, would not "add any more wood to the fire" at the trial. (The witness had testified before the grand jury.) The court rejected the defendant's argument that an explicit offer of a bribe or a request for specific testimony was required for an endeavor to influence a witness under former 18 U.S.C. §1503. The court observed "that 'endeavor' connotes a somewhat lower threshold of purposeful activity than 'attempt,'" id. at 907, and remarked that "'the fact that the effort to influence was subtle or circuitous' made no difference," id. (quoting United States v. Roe, 529 F.2d 629, 632 (4th Cir. 1975)).

In United States v. Fasolino, 586 F.2d 939 (2d Cir. 1978) (per curiam), the conduct in question was the defendant's importuning of a third party to approach a federal judge, whom the third party knew, on a pending sentencing matter. The court held that the conduct was a 18 U.S.C. §1503 "endeavor," noting that the statute was "very similar to a criminal solicitation statute," id. at 940, and that an endeavor "can be committed merely by words," id. at 941. See generally Osborn v. United States, 385 U.S. 323, 332-33 (1966); United States v. Lazzarini, 611 F.2d 940, 941-42 (1st Cir. 1979); United States v. Roe, 529 F.2d 629, 631-32 (4th Cir. 1975); United States v. Rosner, 485 F.2d 1213, 1228-29 (2d Cir. 1973), cert. denied, 417 U.S. 950 (1974); United States v. Missler, 414 F.2d 1293, 1306 (4th Cir. 1969), cert. denied, 397 U.S. 913 (1970); Knight v. United States, 310 F.2d 305, 307 (5th Cir. 1962) (per curiam).

It follows that an endeavor to obstruct justice need not be successful to be criminal. See, e.g., Osborn v. United States, 385 U.S. at 333. Accordingly, the defense of factual impossibility, which arises when the defendant solicits a third party to obstruct justice and the third party is a government informant, may not be interposed. See, e.g., Osborn v. United States, 385 U.S. at 333; United States v. Rosner, 485 F.2d at 1228-29.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The Victim and Witness Protection Act of 1982 was designed to, among other things, expand the reach of federal law in relation to inchoate offenses. 18 U.S.C. §1513 "covers attempted retaliation against witnesses and informants. [The former] law [did] not cover attempted retaliation." 128 Cong. Rec. H8204 (daily ed. Sept. 30, 1982) (section-by-section analysis of H.R. 7191).

With all this in mind, then, it is disquieting to note that "attempt," not "endeavor," is the term used in Sections 1512 and 1513. This word substitution, it is submitted, was an oversight, for there was no discussion in the legislative history of the 1982 Act on this point and no hint that Congress intended to contract the purview of the obstruction of justice statutes on this or any other matter. Compare S. 1630, 97th Cong., 2d Sess. (1982) (proposed new 18 U.S.C. §§1001, 1329). Nevertheless, the government, having convinced the Supreme Court that there is an important distinction between "endeavor" and "attempt," United States v. Russell, 255 U.S. 138, 143 (1921), will, absent congressional action, be forced in some cases to argue incongruously that the term "attempt" in 18 U.S.C. §1512 and §1513 is as broad as the term "endeavor" in 18 U.S.C. §§1503, 1505 and 1510.

9-69.170 Civil Action to Enjoin the Obstruction of Justice

The Victim and Witness Protection Act of 1982 created a federal cause of action in restraint of existing harassment of criminal victims and witnesses or existing or imminent violations of 18 U.S.C. §1512 (excluding those consisting of misleading conduct) and section 1513. The cause of action, codified at 18 U.S.C. §1514, is to be prosecuted by a government attorney.

Specifically, 18 U.S.C. §1514 authorizes a federal district court to enjoin "harassment of an identified victim or witness in a Federal criminal case." ("Harassment" is defined as a course of conduct directed at a specific person that causes substantial emotional distress and serves no legitimate purpose. 18 U.S.C. §1514(c).) This equitable relief may take one of two forms: a temporary restraining order (TRO) or a protective order.

A TRO may be sought and may be issued without notice to the adverse party if it is shown that notice should not be given and that the government has "a reasonable probability" of prevailing on the merits. The standard of proof for a TRO is described as "reasonable grounds."

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The standard of proof for a TRO is described as "reasonable grounds." The life of a TRO cannot exceed 10 days, unless good cause to prolong the order is shown before its expiration, in which case a district judge may extend the order for up to 10 days (or for a longer period agreed to by the adverse party).

A protective order, by contrast, must be preceded by an adversary hearing, and the standard of proof for the government is "preponderance of the evidence." The life of a protective order cannot exceed three (3) years, but a second protective order may be sought during the last 90 days of the first.

On its face, 18 U.S.C. §1514 limits for no apparent reason the scope of equitable relief permitted, for it speaks only of TROs and protective orders "prohibiting harassment of a victim or witness in a federal criminal case." Since "'harassment' means a course of conduct directed at a specific person that...causes substantial emotional distress in such person," it could be argued that section 1514 does not comprehend third-party harassment, for example, the intimidation of a witness' friend for the purpose of dissuading the witness from testifying at a trial. The statute is, at best, needlessly ambiguous on this point. What is not ambiguous is that the statute does not cover the harassment of jurors and officers of the court.

For the legislative history of 18 U.S.C. §1514, see S. Rep. No. 532, 97th Cong., 2d Sess. 27-29, reprinted in 1982 U.S. Code Cong. & Ad. News 2515, 2533-35; and 128 Cong. Rec. H8204-05 (daily ed. Sept. 30, 1982).

9-69.175 Offenses Related to Obstruction of Justice Offenses

Conduct within the purview of the obstruction of justice statutes may also violate one or more of the following statutes:

A. 18 U.S.C. §§1111, 1111, 1112, 1114--interference with, assaults on, or killing of federal judges and prosecutors (overlap with 18 U.S.C. §1503).

B. 18 U.S.C. §201(b), (d), (f), (h)--bribery of federal public officials and witnesses (overlap with 18 U.S.C. §§1503 and 1505 (public officials) and 18 U.S.C. §1512 (witness)). (Note 18 U.S.C. §201 (k).) See United States v. DeAlessandro, 361 F.2d 694, 699-700 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 385 U.S. 842 (1966).

C. 18 U.S.C. §241--conspiracy to injure or intimidate any citizen on account of exercise or possibility of exercise of federal right (overlap with 18 U.S.C. §§1503, 1510, 1512, 1513).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

D. 18 U.S.C. §245(b)(1)(D), (2)(D), (4)(A), (5)--intimidating or retaliating against individuals on account of their serving or possibly serving as a grand or petit juror in a federal court (overlap with 18 U.S.C. §1503) (or on account of their serving or possibly serving as a grand or petit juror in a state court if the conduct is motivated by the race, color, religion, or national origin of the victim).

E. 18 U.S.C. §§371-372--conspiracies to commit any offense against the United States, or to prevent or retaliate in response to the lawful discharge of the duties of federal officers (overlap with 18 U.S.C. §§1503, 1505, 1510, 1512, 1513).

F. 18 U.S.C. §401--contempt of court (overlap with 18 U.S.C. §1503).

G. 18 U.S.C. §1001--false statements and concealment of material facts before federal departments and agencies (overlap with 18 U.S.C. §1505).

H. 18 U.S.C. §§1621-1623--perjury, subornation of perjury, and false declarations before grand juries and courts (overlap with 18 U.S.C. §§1503, 1505, 1512).

I. 26 U.S.C. §7212--interference with or endeavors to interfere with the due administration of Internal Revenue laws (overlap with 18 U.S.C. §1505).

Under 18 U.S.C. §241, it is a federal offense to conspire to injure a citizen for having exercised a federal right or to conspire to intimidate a citizen from exercising a federal right. One such right is the right to be a witness in a federal court, United States v. Thevis, 665 F.2d 616, 626 (5th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 102 S. Ct. 2300, 3489, 103 S. Ct. 57 (1982), or other federal proceeding, United States v. Smith, 623 F.2d 627, 629 (9th Cir. 1980). "So is the right to inform federal officials of violations of federal laws." Id.

Contemptuous conduct in the presence of the court is specifically covered by 18 U.S.C. §401. But such conduct may also satisfy the elements of 18 U.S.C. §1503. It has been held that in that situation a prosecutor is not confined to charging the contemner with a violation of 18 U.S.C. §401; conduct within the purview of 18 U.S.C. §1503 may be charged under 18 U.S.C. §1503 even though it occurred in the presence of the court. E.g., United States v. Jones, 663 F.2d 567, 569 (5th Cir. 1981) (threat directed at judge and prosecutor).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Simple perjury, the assertion of a false affirmative statement by an individual testifying under oath, is not, at least in one circuit, an obstruction of justice under the omnibus clause of 18 U.S.C. §1503. See United States v. Faudman, 640 F.2d 20, 23 (6th Cir. 1981); United States v. Essex, 407 F.2d 214, 218 (6th Cir. 1969). But see United States v. Griffin, 589 F.2d 200, 203, 204 (5th Cir.) (dicta), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 825 (1979); cf. Smith v. United States, 234 F.2d 385 (5th Cir. 1956) (submission of false affidavits of others violates omnibus clause).

However, if simple perjury is accompanied by other obstructive, truth-suppressing acts, an omnibus clause offense may be made out. In United States v. Alo, 439 F.2d 751 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 404 U.S. 850 (1971), the Second Circuit held that evasive testimony, a false denial of knowledge or memory, was comprehended by the omnibus clause of 18 U.S.C. §1505. The court rejected the argument that the clause proscribed only those efforts that interfered with other witnesses or documentary evidence, reasoning:

So restrictive a gloss. . . would produce the anomalous result that concealing information recorded in one's papers would constitute, as the appellant concedes, an offense under §1505, but concealing data recorded in one's memory would not. No rational basis for differentiating between these two types of evidence has been suggested to us, and without a clear statement of contrary Congressional intent we cannot attribute such an arbitrary distinction to the legislature. Like the specific provisions which precede it [e.g., §1503], §1505 deals with the deliberate frustrations through the use of corrupt or false means of an agency's attempt to gather relevant evidence. The blatantly evasive witness achieves this effect as surely by erecting a screen of feigned forgetfulness as one who burns files or induces a potential witness to absent himself.

Alo objects that such an interpretation of §1505 will open an avenue for wholesale evasion of the so-called "two-witness rule" to which perjury convictions must conform. We disagree. It is true, that to convict Alo the jury had to conclude that he was lying when he professed loss of memory, but the gist of his offense was not the falsehood of his statements, but the deliberate concealment of his knowledge.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

439 F.2d at 754 (footnote omitted). This reasoning applies as well to the omnibus clause of 18 U.S.C. §1503. United States v. Griffin, 589 F.2d 200, 203-05 (5th Cir.) (false denial of knowledge and memory before grand jury), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 825 (1979); United States v. Cohn, 452 F.2d 881, 883-84 (2d Cir. 1971) (same), cert. denied, 405 U.S. 975 (1972).

Suborning perjury, 18 U.S.C. §1622, is a 18 U.S.C. §1503 omnibus clause offense. See United States v. Griffin, 589 F.2d at 203 (construing United States v. Partin, 552 F.2d 621, 630-31 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 903 (1977)); Catrino v. United States, 176 F.2d 884, 886-87 (9th Cir. 1949). Subornation of perjury requires proof that perjury was in fact committed. E.g., United States v. Brumley, 560 F.2d 1268, 1278 n.5 (5th Cir. 1977). Because the omnibus clauses do not require that endeavors to obstruct justice be successful, they allow the prosecution of attempts to suborn perjury. See Catrino v. United States, 176 F.2d at 886-87.

9-69.180 Venue

The question of venue arises when the unlawful act occurs in a district other than the district in which the affected investigation or proceeding is pending. The lower federal courts have split on this issue, but the greater weight of authority holds that venue lies in the district of the pending investigation or proceeding. United States v. Kibler, 667 F.2d 452 (4th Cir.) (§1503), cert. denied, 102 S. Ct. 2037 (1982); United States v. Barham, 666 F.2d 521 (11th Cir.) (§1503), cert. denied, 102 S. Ct. 2015 (1982); United States v. Tedesco, 635 F.2d 902 (1st Cir. 1980) (§1503), cert. denied, 452 U.S. 962 (1981); United States v. O'Donnell, 510 F.2d 1190 (6th Cir.) (§1503), cert. denied, 421 U.S. 1001 (1975); United States v. Elliott, 446 F. Supp. 209 (W.D. Va. 1978). These decisions, however, reserved the question whether venue lies only in the district of the pending investigation or proceeding. United States v. Kibler, 667 F.2d at 455 n.2; United States v. Barham, 666 F.2d at 524 n.2; United States v. Tedesco, 635 F.2d at 906 n.5; United States v. O'Donnell, 510 F.2d at 1193.

The minority of courts hold that venue lies where the unlawful act occurred. United States v. Nadolny, 601 F.2d 940 (7th Cir. 1979) (18 U.S.C. §1510); United States v. Swann, 441 F.2d 1053 (D.C. Cir. 1971) (18 U.S.C. §1503); United States v. Bachert, 449 F. Supp. 508 (E.D. Pa. 1978) (18 U.S.C. §1503); see United States v. Brothman, 191 F.2d 70 (2d Cir. 1951) (18 U.S.C. §1503) (alternative implied holding).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-69.181 Extraterritorial Federal Jurisdiction

There is extraterritorial federal jurisdiction over offenses under 18 U.S.C. §1512 and §1513. This means that there is federal jurisdiction over an 18 U.S.C. §1512 or §1513 offense that occurs outside of the United States. See 128 Cong. Rec. H8469 (daily ed. Oct. 1, 1982); H.R. Rep. No. 1396, 96th Cong., 2d Sess. 20-22 (1980).

9-69.190 Penalties

Under the former law, the maximum penalty for an obstruction of justice offense was five (5) years' imprisonment and a $5,000 fine.

Now 18 U.S.C. §1512(a) and §1513 allow the imposition of a 10-year prison term or a $250,000 fine or both.

With respect to the enlarged incarceration sanction, a House analysis said, "this will permit the court to impose a greater penalty when sentencing someone who has committed a particularly aggravated form of the offense (such as where the offense causes the death of, or serious bodily injury to, a witness)." 128 Cong. Rec. H8469 (daily ed. Oct. 1, 1982). As for fines, another House analysis averred, "The fine levels in existing criminal provisions need to be increased because those fine levels do not provide federal courts with sufficient flexibility to impose fines that will adequately deter future criminal conduct. See House Report No. 96-1396, at 466." 128 Cong. Rec. H8203 (daily ed. Sept. 30, 1982); see id. at H8204. (The House Report cited refers to white-collar crime and corporate defendants.)

18 U.S.C. §1512(b), describing a new misdemeanor, provides a maximum penalty of one (1) year in prison and a $25,000 fine.

9-69.200 PERJURY AND FALSE DECLARATIONS BEFORE GRAND JURY OR COURT

This section will deal primarily with the two principal perjury statutes in Title 18 of the United States Code, 18 U.S.C. §1621 and §1623. Although the Code contains over 150 statutes which proscribe perjury, virtually all perjuries occurring in the course of governmental inquiries, proceedings, and the federal judicial process are prosecuted under 18 U.S.C. §1621 or §1623. A third statute, 18 U.S.C. §1622, subornation of perjury, will be dealt with in passing. For a complete list of "perjury" statutes see "Working Papers of the National Commission on Reform of Federal Criminal Laws Vol. I" (cited hereafter as "Working Papers") p. 675 et seq.

In the past, several important political figures have been charged with violating 18 U.S.C. §1001. This statute provides:

Whoever, in any matter within the jurisdiction of any department or agency of the United States knowingly and willfully falsifies, conceals or covers up by any trick, scheme, or device a material fact, or makes any false, fictitious or fraudulent statements or representations, or makes or uses any false writing or document knowing the same to contain any false, fictitious or fraudulent statement or entry, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

This section punishes what is essentially a fraud perpetrated against the government in a variety of contexts. An oath is not a prerequisite for prosecution under this section. See USAM 9-42.000.

18 U.S.C. §1621 and §1623 have been amended to reflect the enactment of 28 U.S.C. §1746, which makes unsworn declarations, under certain circumstances, subject to the penalties of perjury. Such unsworn declarations must be substantially in the language set out in the statute. Further, care should be exercised to verify that the unsworn declaration is of the nature permitted under the terms of 28 U.S.C. §1746, to be subject to the penalties of perjury.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-69.201 Perjury - 18 U.S.C. §1621

Whoever -

(1) having taken an oath before a competent tribunal, officer or person, in any case in which a law of the United States authorizes an oath to be administered, that he will testify, declare, depose, or certify truly, or that any written testimony, declaration, deposition, or certificate by him subscribed, is true, willfully and contrary to such oath states or subscribes any material matter which he does not believe to be true; or

(2) in any declaration, certificate, verification, or statement under penalty of perjury as permitted under Section 1746 of Title 28, United States Code, willfully subscribes as true any material matter which he does not believe to be true; is guilty of perjury and shall, except as otherwise expressly provided by law, be fined not more than $2,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both. This section is applicable whether the statement or subscription is made within or without the United States. As amended Oct. 18, 1976, Pub. L. 94-550, §2, 90 Stat. 2534.

9-69.202 False Declarations Before Grand Jury Or Court - 18 U.S.C. §1623

(a) Whoever under oath (or in any declaration, certificate, verification, or statement under penalty of perjury as permitted under section 1746 of title 28, United States Code) in any proceeding before or ancillary to any court or grand jury of the United States knowingly makes any false material declaration or makes or uses any other information, including any book, paper, document, record, recording, or other material, knowing the same to contain any false material declaration, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

(b) This section is applicable whether the conduct occurred within or without the United States.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

(c) An indictment or information for violation of this section alleging that, in any proceedings before or ancillary to any court or grand jury of the United States, the defendant under oath has knowingly made two or more declarations, which are inconsistent to the degree that one of them is necessarily false, need not specify which declaration is false if--

A. each declaration was material to the point in question, and

B. each declaration was made within the period of the statute of limitations for the offense charged under this section.

In any prosecution under this section, the falsity of a declaration set forth in the indictment or information shall be established sufficient for conviction by proof that the defendant while under oath made irreconcilably contradictory declarations material to the point in question in any proceeding before or ancillary to any court or grand jury. It shall be a defense to an indictment or information made pursuant to the first sentence of this subsection that the defendant at the time he made each declaration believed the declaration was true.

(d) Where, in the same continuous court or grand jury proceeding in which a declaration is made, the person making the declaration admits such declaration to be false, such admission shall bar prosecution under this section if, at the time the admission is made, the declaration has not substantially affected the proceeding, or it has not become manifest that such falsity has been or will be exposed.

(e) Proof beyond a reasonable doubt under this section is sufficient for conviction. It shall not be necessary that such proof be made by any particular number of witnesses or by documentary or other type of evidence.

18 U.S.C. §1623 became effective October 15, 1970, and was amended by Pub. L. 94-550, §6, Oct. 18, 1976.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-69.210 Elements of Perjury

While there are differences between 18 U.S.C. §1621 and §1623, the elements of each offense are substantially the same. The elements are as follows:

A. First, it is necessary that the defendant be under oath during his/her testimony, declaration, or certification (except in the case of unsworn declarations under penalty of perjury as permitted by 28 U.S.C. §1746). So long as the oath is of sufficient clarity that the defendant was aware that he was under oath and required to speak the truth, no particular form of oath is required. Holy v. United States, 278 F. 521 (7th Cir. 1921). However, it has been held that prosecutions under 18 U.S.C. §1621 require proof of who administered the oath, as well as the competency and authorization of the oath giver. United States v. Molinares, 700 F.2d 647, 651 (11th Cir. 1983). The identity of the oath giver is not an essential element under 18 U.S.C. §1623, nor is proof that such person was competent or authorized to administer the oath. Instead, 18 U.S.C. §1623 merely requires that the government prove that the maker of a knowingly false declaration be under oath at the time of the statement. Id. at 651-52. One court has stated that although it would be better practice for someone present at the grand jury proceedings during which the perjury was committed to testify to the giving of an oath, the transcript of the defendant's grand jury testimony was sufficient to prove that he testified under oath. United States v. Picketts, 655 F.2d 837, 840 (7th Cir. 1981). In addition, it is no defense that subsequent to the defendant's perjury before a grand jury, it is discovered that such grand jury had been constituted in violation of the Jury Selection and Service Act. United States v. Caron, 551 F. Supp. 662, 666 (E.D. Va. 1982). However, false swearing before a court having no jurisdiction would not be prosecutable under section 1623. United States v. Young, 113 F. Supp. 20 (D.D.C. 1953), aff'd, 212 F.2d 236 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 347 U.S. 1015 (1954); United States v. Cuddy, 39 F. 696 (S.D. Cal. 1889). See Working Papers at 664.

B. The second necessary element of perjury is that the defendant make a false statement. It is this element which is subject to the so-called two-witness rule for prosecutions under 18 U.S.C. §1621. See USAM 9-69.265. Falsity is a question of fact for the jury to decide. United States v. Sampol, 636 F.2d 621, 655 (D.C. Cir. 1980). Words clear on their face are to be understood in their common sense and usage unless it is clear in the context in which they are used that a different sense or usage was intended. Government of the Canal Zone v. Thrush, 616 F. 2d 188, 190-91 (5th Cir. 1980). In United State v. Harrison, 671 F.2d 1159 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 103 S. Ct. 104 (1982), defendants argued that the grand jurors misunderstood their slang. The court decided that "[i]t was up to the jury to decide whether [defendants'] statements were slang or lies." Id. at 1162.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

C. The false statement must be material to the proceedings. Materiality has been defined broadly to include anything "capable of influencing the tribunal on the issue before it." United States v. Cuesta, 597 F.2d 903, 920 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 964 (1979). Thus, the testimony need not actually have influenced, misled or hampered the proceeding. United States v. Harrison, supra, at 1162; United States v. Brown, 666 F.2d 1196, 1200 (8th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 457 U.S. 1108 (1982); United States v. Whimpey, 531 F.2d 768, 770 (5th Cir. 1976); United States v. Vesich, 558 F. Supp. 1192, 1199 (E.D. La. 1983). A potential interference with a line of inquiry suffices to establish materiality. United States v. Raineri, 670 F.2d 702, 718 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 103 S. Ct 446 (1982); United States v. Howard, 560 F.2d 281, 284 (7th Cir. 1977). The statement need not be material to a particular issue, but may be material to collateral matters that might influence the outcome of decisions before the grand jury. United States v. Ostertag, 671 F.2d 262, 264 (8th Cir. 1982); United States v. Cosby, 601 F.2d 754, 756 (5th Cir. 1979); United States v. Cuesta, supra at 921; United States v. Giarratano, 622 F.2d 153, 156 (5th Cir. 1980). Thus, a statement is material if it is relevant to a subsidiary issue under consideration, United States v. Percell, 526 F.2d 189, 190 (9th Cir. 1975), or if relevant to an issue of credibility, United States v. Nacrelli, 543 F. Supp. 798, 800 (E.D. Pa. 1982). It is of no consequence that the information sought would be merely cumulative or that the response was believed by the grand jury to be perjurious at the time it was uttered. United States v. Berardi, 629 F.2d 723, 728 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 995 (1980).

The issue of materiality is a question of law to be decided by the court. United States v. Ostertag, supra at 265; United States v. Raineri, supra at 718; United States v. Bell, 623 F.2d 1132, 1134 (5th Cir. 1980). It has been held that the court should decide the issue of materiality at the earliest opportunity, certainly prior to submission of the case to the petit jury. United States v. Berardi, supra at 728; United States v. Watson, 623 F.2d 1198, 1201 n.5 (7th Cir. 1980).

The government must satisfy the burden of establishing materiality, although it need not be proven beyond a reasonable doubt. United States v. Berardi, supra at 727; United States v. Watson, supra at 1202. ("As a question of law, there cannot appropriately be any evidentiary or factual burden with respect to the issue of materiality."); United States v. Ostertag, supra at 264; United States v. Giarratano, supra at 156. A finding of materiality does not depend on the admissibility of evidence received by a grand jury or possession of the power of a grand jury to indict for substantive offenses about which a witness is questioned. United States v. Epifanio, 448 F. Supp. 784 (S.D.N.Y.), aff'd, 586 F.2d 832 (2d Cir. 1978). The government may prove materiality in various ways. It may introduce a transcript of the grand jury proceedings; produce testimony from the foreperson of the grand jury; produce the testimony of the defendant before the grand jury; or produce the testimony of the prosecutor concerning the scope of the grand jury's charter, and the relationship to it of the questions which elicited the perjury. United States v. Berardi, supra at 727; United States v. Ostertag, supra at 265; United States v. Cosby, supra at 756-57 ("[W]e have generally looked with disfavor on prosecutions brought under section 1623 that have not used complete transcripts or testimony of members of the grand jury."); United States v. Bell, supra at 1135; United States v. Thompson, 637 F.2d 267, 268 (5th Cir. 1981) ("The scope of the grand jury's inquiry and the materiality of the declaration to that inquest are generally, and usually best, proved by introduction of a complete transcript of the grand jury proceedings or by testimony of the foreman or some other member of the grand jury.").

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

D. The fourth necessary element is that the defendant make the false statement with knowledge of its falsity. Perjury requires a showing of specific intent. It cannot be the result of inadvertence, honest mistake, carelessness, misunderstanding, mistaken conclusions, unjustified inferences testified to negligently, or even recklessly. United States v. Martellano, 675 F.2d 940, 942 (7th Cir. 1982); Government of the Canal Zone v. Thrush, supra at 190-91; Dale v. Bartels, 552 F. Supp. 1253, 1266 (S.D.N.Y. 1982). Actual knowledge of falsity may be proven from circumstantial evidence. United States v. Gaucci, 635 F.2d 441, 444 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 831 (1981). However, proof of an intent to commit perjury does not constitute perjury. United States v. Laikin, 583 F.2d 968, 971 (7th Cir. 1978). 18 U.S.C. §1621 states that one who "willfully...states...any material matter which he does not believe to be true, is guilty of perjury..." 18 U.S.C. §1623 punishes one who "knowingly makes any false material declaration..." There does not appear to be any effective difference between these two definitions of the mens rea of the offense. In its report on the Organized Crime Control Act, the Senate Judiciary Committee stated that in Section 1623(a), "language changes have been made in the provision as introduced to achieve economy of words..." (Senate Report No. 91-617, at 149).

There are four principal differences 18 U.S.C. §1623 and §1621. First, 18 U.S.C. §1623 applies only to perjury occurring in the course of grand jury and court proceedings. Second, under 18 U.S.C. §1623 the government's evidentiary burden is greatly reduced as 18 U.S.C. §1623(e) does away with the two-witness rule which still hampers prosecutions 18 U.S.C. §1621. See USAM 9-69.265. In addition, 18 U.S.C. §1623(c) allows a conviction for making two or more statements which are inconsistent to the degree that one of them is necessarily false; the government does not have to prove which statement is false, but it is a defense to such a prosecution that, at the time each statement was made, the defendant believed he was speaking the truth. 18 U.S.C. §1623 is also different from 18 U.S.C. §1621 in that under the former, in certain circumstances, a recantation is a bar to prosecution for perjury. 18 U.S.C. §1623(d). A detailed discussion of the recantation provision will be found at USAM 9-69.274. 18 U.S.C. §1621 and §1623 provide for maximum prison terms of five years, but the maximum fine under 18 U.S.C. §1621 is $2,000, while under 18 U.S.C. §1623 it is $10,000. For sample indictments and jury instructions, see USAM 9-69.280-.293.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-69.220 Subornation of Perjury - 18 U.S.C. §1622

Whoever procures another to commit any perjury is guilty of subornation of perjury, and shall be fined not more than $2,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

Prosecution for subornation of perjury requires that the perjury sought must have taken place. United States v. Brumley, 560 F.2d 1268, 1278 n. 5 (5th Cir. 1977); United States v. Tanner, 471 F.2d 128 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 409 U.S. 949 (1972). But a conspiracy to suborn perjury may be prosecuted whether or not perjury has been committed. Outlaw v. United States, 81 F.2d 805 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 298 U.S. 665 (1936); Williamson v. United States, 207 U.S. 425 (1908). Where perjured testimony is solicited, either by an individual or through a conspiracy, an obstruction of justice has occurred whether or not the perjured testimony has taken place. 18 U.S.C. §1503.

It is quite common to join both obstruction of justice and subornation of perjury counts in a single indictment when they arise from the same transaction. For example, see United States v. Kahn, 366 F.2d 259 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 385 U.S. 948 (1966); United States v. Root, 366 F.2d 377 (9th Cir. 1966), cert. denied, 386 U.S. 912 (1967). Because the crime of subornation of perjury is distinct from that of perjury itself, the suborner and perjurer are not accomplices. United States v. Thompson, 31 F. 331 (C.C. Ore. 1887); Segal v. United States, 246 F.2d 814 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 355 U.S. 894 (1957).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-69.221 Elements

The gravamen of the offense of subornation is the procuring of perjury with knowledge that the testimony to be given is false, and that the one testifying is aware of the falsity of his statement; Boren v. United States, 144 F. 801 (9th Cir. 1906). To establish a prima facie case for subornation of perjury a prosecutor must show:

- A. That perjury was committed;
- B. That the defendant procured the perjury corruptly, knowing, believing or having reason to believe it to be false testimony; and
- C. That the defendant knew, believed, or had reason to believe that the perjurer had knowledge of the falsity of his testimony.

The existence of the perjury must be proved under the same standards as required by the applicable perjury statute. Thus if 18 U.S.C. §1621 applies to the underlying perjury, the demands of the two-witness rule must be met; Hammer v. United States, 271 U.S. 620 (1926), see USAM 9-69.265. If 18 U.S.C. §1623 is applicable to the perjury, the two-witness rule does not apply; United States v. Gross, 375 F. Supp. 971 (D. N.J. 1974). If the charge consists only of conspiracy to suborn perjury, compliance with the two-witness rule is not necessary; Hall v. United States, 78 F.2d 168 (10th Cir. 1935).

For sample indictments and jury instructions, see USAM 9-69.282 and 69.292.

9-69.230 Investigative Responsibility

The Federal Bureau of Investigation has primary investigative responsibility for perjury violations in all cases and matters involving departments and agencies of the United States, except those arising out of a substantive matter being investigated by the Secret Service, Internal Revenue Service, Immigration and Naturalization Service, Bureau of Customs, Drug Enforcement Administration, Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, and the Postal Inspection Service.

The FBI investigates violations relating to cases and matters not involving the United States, or a department or agency thereof. For example, the FBI will investigate a perjury violation committed in connection with a civil case in a federal court to which the United

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

States, or a department or agency, is not a party. The FBI also investigates perjury violations committed in connection with any inquiry or investigation being held by either House, or by any committee of either House, or by any joint committee of the Congress on the written request of the Department.

9-69.240 Supervisory Jurisdiction

Generally, perjury is under the supervisory jurisdiction of the Division and Section of the Department having responsibility for the basic subject matter. Where such responsibility for subject matter cannot be identified, supervisory responsibility is with the General Litigation and Legal Advice Section of the Criminal Division.

9-69.250 No Prior Authorization Required

Because false declarations affect the integrity of the judicial fact-finding process, all offenders should be vigorously prosecuted. The Supreme Court has stressed that "[p]erjured testimony is an obvious and flagrant affront to the basic concepts of judicial proceedings. Effective restraints against this type of egregious offense are therefore imperative." United States v. Mandujano, 425 U.S. 564, 576 (1976). The Supreme Court has emphasized also that "perjury is not a permissible way of objecting to the Government's questions. 'Our legal system provides methods for challenging the Government's right to ask questions--lying is not one of them.'" United States v. Wong, 431 U.S. 174, 180 (1977). The U.S. Attorney in each district is authorized to direct such further investigation of any alleged false declaration as he may think necessary. Cases may be submitted to the grand jury for its consideration or an information may be filed without prior authorization from the Criminal Division, except with regard to Congressional matters. See USAM 9-69.230.

9-69.260 Special Problems

9-69.261 Prosecutorial Discretion to Indict under 18 U.S.C. §1621 or §1623

A latent problem in the area of prosecutorial discretion and 18 U.S.C. §1623 has surfaced but not yet crystalized in the case law under that section. Two decisions by different panels of the Second Circuit

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

touch upon this issue as does a decision of the Ninth Circuit. In United States v. Ruggiero, 472 F.2d 599, 606 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 412 U.S. 939 (1973), appellant argued that he was denied equal protection of the law by the prosecutor's decision to proceed against him under 18 U.S.C. §1623 rather than under 18 U.S.C. §1621 because the evidentiary burden of the prosecution is greater and the penalty less severe under the latter statute. The response of the court was to cite Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U.S. 356 (1886), for the proposition that "where criminal statutes overlap the government is entitled to choose among them provided it does not discriminate against any class of defendants." The court found no discrimination because Ruggiero had failed to demonstrate membership in a specific class of defendants.

In United States v. Kahn, 472 F.2d 272 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 411 U.S. 982 (1973), however, the specter of such a class was raised in dictum. Kahn was charged under 18 U.S.C. §1621 and claimed that, had he been charged under 18 U.S.C. §1623, his subsequent "recantation" would have barred perjury prosecution. The court failed to confront the issue directly, by holding that Kahn's subsequent "recantation" would not have barred prosecution under 18 U.S.C. §1623, because at the time it was made it had become manifest that Kahn's original falsity was exposed. However, the court said, "...we find not a little disturbing the prospect of the government employing §1621 whenever a recantation exists, and §1623 when one does not, simply to place perjury defendants in the most disadvantageous trial position." Kahn, supra, at 283. Thus, defendants charged under 18 U.S.C. §1621 whose perjury would not be prosecutable under 18 U.S.C. §1623 because of a valid "recantation," might constitute a class denied equal protection under Ruggiero.

Attorneys for Kahn also advanced the argument that a statute aimed at specific conduct (i.e., 18 U.S.C. §1623) must prevail over an otherwise applicable general statute (i.e., 18 U.S.C. §1621). See Kepner v. United States, 195 U.S. 100, 125 (1904); Shelton v. United States, 165 F.2d 241, 244 (D.C. Cir. 1947); Wechsler v. United States, 158 F. 579, 581 (2d Cir. 1907). The Second Circuit did not reach this question in Kahn. While it may be advisable to use 18 U.S.C. 1623 when it applies to a given factual setting, it is clear that "when an act violates more than one criminal statute, the Government may prosecute under either so long as it does not discriminate against any class of defendants... Whether to prosecute and what charge to file or bring before a grand jury are decisions that generally rest in the prosecutor's discretion." United States v. Batchelder, 442 U.S. 114, 123-24 (1979). Illustrative of unconstitutional selective enforcement would be the application of standards such as race, religion, or some other arbitrary classification. Id. at 125 n. 9; United States v. Andrews, 370 F. Supp. 365, 370 (D. Conn. 1974) (no class discrimination demonstrated in a case involving 18 U.S.C. §1621 and §1623). The equal protection argument in a perjury case was also rejected in United States v. Devitt, 499 F.2d 135, 139 (7th Cir. 1974), cert. denied, 421 U.S. 975 (1975), where the court stressed: "Defendant cites no case in support of the novel proposition that where conduct is proscribed by two or more separate criminal statutes, the government must elect to prosecute under the statute imposing the greatest burden of proof."

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

In United States v. Clizer, 464 F.2d 121, 125 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 409 U.S. 1086 (1972), a different approach was taken by the Ninth Circuit. Although appellant had been charged with making false statements before a grand jury, the indictment was under 18 U.S.C. §1621. The court disregarded the statutory reference in the indictment and considered it as an indictment under 18 U.S.C. §1623: "The government, despite its reference to 18 U.S.C. §1621, in fact charged Clizer with a violation of 18 U.S.C. §1623."

9-69.262 Venue

Venue for perjury actions lies in the district where the false oath was made. See United States ex rel. Starr v. Mulligan, 59 F.2d 200 (2d Cir. 1932) and Jones v. Gasch, 404 F.2d 1231 (D.C. Cir. 1967).

9-69.263 Unresponsive Answers: The Case Against Samuel Bronston

Occasionally a witness under oath will give answers to questions which, although literally true, are evasive or unresponsive in order to deceive the questioner and mislead the inquiry. Is such action perjury? In Bronston v. United States, 409 U.S. 352 (1973), the Supreme Court unanimously held that such conduct does not violate 18 U.S.C. §1621.

Bronston, the sole owner of Samuel Bronston Productions Inc., a motion picture production company, had the following colloquy with a lawyer for a creditor of the company at a bankruptcy hearing:

"Q. Do you have any bank accounts in Swiss banks, Mr. Bronston? A. No, Sir. Q. Have you ever? A. The company had an account there, for about six months, in Zurich. Q. Have you any nominees who have bank accounts in Swiss banks? A. No, sir. Q. Have you ever? A. No, Sir." 409 U.S. at 354.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

For a period of nearly five years Bronston had a personal account at a bank in Geneva, Switzerland. Although it was undisputed that Bronston's answers were literally truthful, the government prosecuted for perjury on the theory that Bronston gave an unresponsive answer to the second question--by referring to the company's assets instead of his own--in order to mislead the questioner with the implication that he had no personal Swiss bank account. In order to fulfill the historic purpose of the perjury statute, the government argued, it should be construed broadly to include Bronston's false implication.

The Chief Justice, writing for the Court, rejected this effort to expand the scope of the perjury statute, noting that "if a witness evades, it is the lawyer's responsibility to recognize the evasion and to bring the witness back to the mark, to flush out the whole truth with the tools of adversary examination." 409 U.S. 352, 358-59. Thus, ". . .any special problems arising from the literally true but unresponsive answer are to be remedied through the questioner's acuity and not by a federal perjury prosecution." 409 U.S. at 362. Gebhard v. U.S., 422 F.2d 281, 287-88 (9th Cir. 1970); U.S. v. Nicoletti, 310 F.2d 359 (7th Cir. 1962).

9-69.264 The "I Don't Remember" Syndrome

Prosecutors are often faced with witnesses who, rather than deny a fact, claim that they do not remember it. The question arises as to whether these witnesses may be prosecuted for perjury. The answer is clearly yes. In re Battaglia, 653 F.2d 419, 421 (9th Cir. 1981); Gebhard v. United States, supra; United States v. Nicoletti, supra. To prove that a witness actually remembered something it is necessary to prove both that the witness at one time knew the fact and that he must have remembered it at the time he testified.

For instance, a witness testifies that he/she does not remember having ever paid money to a police officer. The first element of proof in a perjury prosecution against him would be that he/she had, in fact, paid money to a police officer. It would then be necessary to prove that he/she must have remembered that payment when he/she testified. If the dates of the transaction and testimony are sufficiently close, memory may be inferred. Probative of his/her memory at the time of his/her testimony would be evidence that he/she mentioned such payments either before or after his/her testimony or that he/she remembered other events which occurred at the same time or earlier than the event in question.

It has been held in perjury prosecutions under 18 U.S.C. §1621, that proof that a defendant lied, when he/she stated that he/she could not remember an event, need not be by direct evidence or meet the standards of the two-witness rule. Id. These cases reason that since no direct evidence as to what defendant actually believed is possible, circumstantial evidence is sufficient.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-69.265 "Two-Witness Rule"

The so-called two-witness rule applies only to prosecutions for perjury brought under 18 U.S.C. §1621. Congress has eliminated the rule for prosecutions under §1623, and, since the rule is not of constitutional dimension, the courts have deferred to legislative judgment. Weiler v. United States, 323 U.S. 606 (1945); United States v. Jessee, 605 F.2d 430, 431 (9th Cir. 1979); United States v. Ruggiero, 472 F.2d 599, 606 (2d Cir. 1973). Thus, because 18 U.S.C. §1623 is the preferred, if not the exclusive, vehicle for prosecutions of perjury occurring before a court or grand jury, see: Prosecutorial discretion to indict under 18 U.S.C. §1621 or §1623, supra, USAM 9-69.261, the handicap of the two-witness rule is greatly ameliorated.

The "two-witness rule" is somewhat of a misnomer. It provides that the falsity of a statement alleged to be perjurious must be established either by the testimony of two independent witnesses, or by one witness and independent corroborating evidence which is inconsistent with the innocence of the accused. United States v. Forrest, 639 F.2d 1224, 1226 (5th Cir. 1981); United States v. Maultasch, 596 F.2d 19, 25 (2d Cir. 1979); Vitello v. United States, 425 F.2d 416, 419 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 822 (1970); United States v. Edmondson, 410 F.2d 670, 674 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 396 U.S. 966 (1969). Thus, the rule is satisfied by the testimony of a second witness who has given testimony independent of another which, if believed, would prove that what the accused said under oath was false. In the case of a second witness, it is immaterial whether such witness corroborates the first witness. United States v. Maultasch, supra at 25. Alternatively, the rule is satisfied by one witness and independent corroborating evidence which is inconsistent with the innocence of the accused and of a quality to assure that a guilty verdict is solidly founded. United States v. Forrest, supra at 1226; United States v. Maultasch, supra at 25 n.9. The "two-witness rule" applies only to proof that a given statement was objectively false. Circumstantial evidence may be used to establish that a perjury defendant made the false statement willfully or with knowledge of its falsity. United States v. Hagarty, 388 F.2d 713 (7th Cir. 1968).

The two-witness rule does not apply to 18 U.S.C. §1621 prosecutions where the defendant is prosecuted for falsely testifying that he was unable to remember a certain event. See USAM 9-69.264. Neither does it apply to prosecution for obstruction of justice (18 U.S.C. §§1503, 1505), even if the gravamen of the obstruction is that the defendant perjured himself. In United States v. Alo, 439 F.2d 751 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 404 U.S. 850 (1971), the court of appeals rejected appellant's contention that his prosecution for obstruction of justice, rather than for perjury, was an improper evasion of the two-witness rule.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Nevertheless, a prosecutor should utilize a prosecution for obstruction of justice as an alternative to a perjury prosecution only with great circumspection and in cases where a witness' evasions are blatant and clearly constitute an obstruction.

9-69.266 The "Use" of Material Containing False Statements

In addition to prohibiting the making of false statements, 18 U.S.C. §1623 applies to one who:

. . . under oath in any proceeding . . . makes or uses any other information, including any book, paper, document, record, recording, or other material, knowing the same to contain any false material declaration . . .

The legislative history of 18 U.S.C. §1623 is silent as to what type of conduct the "makes or uses" part of the statute is intended to apply to. In United States v. Pommerening, 500 F.2d 92 (10th Cir. 1974), convictions for violation of §1623 by "using" documents were affirmed. In that case the prosecutor subpoenaed defendants and their corporate records. The defendants altered the records, brought them to the grand jury and "relied upon these false documents in answering the U.S. Attorney's questions . . ." 500 F.2d at 98. The appellate court found such conduct to constitute "use" of the documents before the grand jury. In United States v. Dudley, 581 F.2d 1193, 1197 (5th Cir. 1978), the court held that physical delivery by the alleged user is not a necessary prerequisite to use under 18 U.S.C. §1623. It is sufficient that the testimony of the accused tended to give verity to the document.

9-69.267 False Affidavits Submitted in Federal Court Proceedings Do Not Constitute Perjury Under 18 U.S.C. §1623

In Dunn v. United States, 442 U.S. 100 (1979), the Supreme Court held that a false affidavit submitted to a federal court in support of a motion

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

to dismiss an indictment could not be prosecuted as perjury under 18 U.S.C. §1623 since such an affidavit lacked the formality required of court proceedings or depositions and therefore was not given in a "proceeding before or ancillary to any court or grand jury of the United States" as required by 18 U.S.C. §1623(a).

In refusing to extend the interpretation of the statutory language "ancillary to any court or grand jury" to include affidavits given in anticipation of their submission to a court, the Supreme Court stated:

Congress enacted §1623 as part of 1970 Organized Crime Control Act, Pub. L. 91-452, 84 Stat. 922, et seq., to facilitate perjury prosecutions and thereby enhance the reliability of testimony before federal courts and grand juries. S. Rep. No. 91-617, pp. 58-59 (1969). Invoking this broad congressional purpose, the Government argues for an expansive construction of the term ancillary proceeding. Under the Government's analysis, false swearing in an affidavit poses the same threat to the fact finding process as false testimony in open court. Thus, the Government contends that any statements made under oath for submission to a court, whether given in an attorney's office or in a local bar and grill, fall within the ambit of §1623. . . . In our judgment, the term "proceeding," which carries a somewhat more formal connotation, suggests that Congress had a narrower end in view when enacting §1623. And the legislative history of the organized Crime Control Act confirms that conclusion.

Id. at 107.

We cannot conclude here that Congress in fact intended or clearly expressed an intent that §1623 should encompass statements made in contexts less formal than a deposition. Accordingly, we hold that petitioner's September 30 declarations were not given in a proceeding ancillary to a court or grand jury within the meaning of the statute.

Id. at 113 (footnote omitted).

In United States v. Tibbs, 600 F.2d 19, 21 (6th Cir. 1979), the court described an "ancillary proceeding" for purposes of 18 U.S.C. §1623:

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

"[C]ommon experience indicates that every proceeding, including an ancillary proceeding, must incorporate certain notions of formality and convention. Consistent with these notions, an action conducted by a judicial representative or an action conducted pursuant to explicit statutory or judicial procedures may properly be considered an 'ancillary proceeding' . . . However, an impromptu conversation between an individual and an attorney in the attorney's office inherently lacks the formality and convention required. These missing elements cannot be supplied by the administration of an oath, the signing of an affidavit, or the disclosure of the affiant's rights and potential liabilities.

See also United States v. Krogh, 366 F. Supp. 1255, 1256 (D.D.C. 1973) (sworn deposition taken in Office of Assistant Attorney General was a proceeding ancillary to Watergate grand jury).

While Dunn makes it clear that false affidavits cannot be prosecuted under 18 U.S.C. §1623, it is also clear that prosecutions for false affidavits submitted in federal court proceedings can be prosecuted under 18 U.S.C. §1621. Venue for such prosecutions is in the district where the affidavit is sworn to. Thus, in those cases in which an affidavit filed in U.S. District Court in one district was sworn to in another district, the perjury prosecution under 18 U.S.C. §1621 must be brought in the latter district.

In addition to prosecutions under 18 U.S.C. §1621, false affidavits submitted in federal court proceedings may be prosecuted under the omnibus clause of 18 U.S.C. §1503 in some circuits as an endeavor to obstruct the due administration of justice. United States v. Cohn, 452 F.2d 881 (2d Cir. 1971), cert. denied, 405 U.S. 975 (1972); United States v. Griffin, 589 F.2d 200 (5th Cir. 1979). It should, however, be noted that several circuits, applying the doctrine of ejusdem generis, limit prosecutions under the omnibus clause of 18 U.S.C. §1503, to conduct described in the earlier clauses of the statute. United States v. Essex, 407 F.2d 214 (6th Cir. 1969); Haiti v. United States, 260 F.2d 744 (9th Cir. 1958); United States v. Ryan, 455 F.2d 728 (9th Cir. 1972). In these circuits, prosecutions under 18 U.S.C. §1503 would not lie for submission of false affidavits in federal judicial proceedings.

Prosecutions should not be brought under 18 U.S.C. §1001 for false statements submitted in federal court proceedings. Morgan v. United States, 309 F.2d 234 (D.C. Cir. 1962); United States v. D'Amato, 507 F.2d 26 (2d Cir. 1974); United States v. Erhardt, 381 F.2d 173 (6th Cir. 1967); United States v. Allen, 193 F. Supp. 954 (S.D. Calif. 1961).

9-69.268 Indictments

Case law appears to give the government some discretion as to how to charge separate, but related, false statements. It has been held that all of the false declarations pertaining to a particular subject matter may be embraced in one count. United States v. Isaacs, 493 F.2d 1124, 1155 (7th Cir.), cert. denied sub nom. Kerner v. United States, 417 U.S. 976 (1974); United States v. Edmondson, 410 F.2d 670, 673 n.6 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 396 U.S. 966 (1969). In such a situation, proof of the falsity of any one statement charged will sustain the count. Id.; United States v. Dilworth, 524 F.2d 470, 471 n.1 (5th Cir. 1975). However, false statements made during one grand jury session which are separate, distinct and unrelated can be charged in multiple counts with separate sentences imposed for a conviction on each count. United States v. De La Torre, 634 F.2d 792, 794-95 (5th Cir. 1981) ("Edmondson [cited above] permits but does not require that all of the allegedly false declarations be joined in one count"). Likewise in United States v. Scott, 682 F.2d 695, 698 (8th Cir. 1982), the court held that separate and distinct false declarations which require different factual proof of falsity may be charged in separate counts even though they are all related and arise out of the same transaction.

A perjury indictment must set forth the precise falsehoods alleged and the factual basis of their falsity with sufficient clarity to permit a jury to determine their verity and to allow meaningful judicial review of the materiality of those falsehoods. United States v. Slawik, 548 F.2d 75, 83 (3d Cir. 1977). However, the materiality requirement of a perjury indictment may be satisfied by a general statement that the matter was material. United States v. Ponticelli, 622 F.2d 985, 989 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 1016 (1980); United States v. Davis, 548 F.2d 840, 845 (9th Cir. 1977).

There is no requirement that the perjury occur before the grand jury that issues the indictment. United States v. Sun Myung Moon, 532 F. Supp. 1360, 1371 (S.D.N.Y. 1982). Nor is it required that the grand jury could not have indicted for the substantive offense inquired into. A grand jury may ask questions about events outside of the statute of limitations, or about acts which otherwise would not lead to indictments. United States v. Picketts, 655 F.2d 837, 841 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 1056 (1981); United States v. Reed, 647 F.2d 849, 853 (8th Cir. 1981).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

However, the courts will strictly scrutinize for fairness any indictment and conviction for perjury before a grand jury that rests upon a defendant's responses to leading questions. United States v. Boberg, 565 F.2d 1059, 1063 (8th Cir. 1977) ("We think that a grand jury witness, particularly one who may be the target of a prosecution, ought to be given a fair opportunity to respond fully to questions and not be limited to the 'yes' or 'no' that typifies answers to leading questions.").

9-69.270 Defenses and Bars to Prosecution

9-69.271 In General

A primary defense to an indictment for perjury is that the defendant believed his statement to be true at the time he made it. Belief that a declaration was true when made is specifically a defense to prosecution under 18 U.S.C. §1623(c). The major element the government must prove under 18 U.S.C. §1621 and §1623 is that the defendant made a false statement knowing it to be false. If the government is unable to prove this element beyond a reasonable doubt the defendant is entitled to a directed verdict. Proof that a defendant believed a declaration was true defeats a charge of perjury even if the statement was in fact false. United States v. Winter, 348 F.2d 204 (2d Cir. 1965). The defense of advice of counsel usually may only be considered by the jury in determining whether the defendant willfully or knowingly gave false testimony. United States v. Becker, 203 F. Supp. 467 (E.D. Va. 1962).

A detailed discussion of additional defenses and bars to prosecution follows.

9-69.272 Collateral Estoppel

Res judicata, though sometimes used interchangeably with collateral estoppel, has a distinct meaning and refers to "the preclusion of a claim or cause of action where that claim has been fully litigated and decided in prior suit." United States v. Drevcetzki, 338 F. Supp. 403, 405 (N.D. Ill. 1972).

Collateral estoppel "means simply that when an issue of ultimate fact has once been determined by a valid and final judgment, that issue cannot again be litigated between the same parties in any future law suit." Ashe v. Swenson, 397 U.S. 436, 443 (1970). Collateral estoppel has been an established rule of federal law at least since United States v.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Oppenheimer, 242 U.S. 85 (1916) and is now viewed as an integral part of the fifth amendment ban against double jeopardy. Harris v. Washington, 404 U.S. 55 (1971).

A prosecutor encounters no double jeopardy or collateral estoppel problem when prosecuting a convicted defendant for perjury committed during his/her former trial on a substantive offense. United States v. Williams, 341 U.S. 58, 62 (1951). Nor is there any collateral estoppel problem when prosecuting a trial witness for perjury, since a witness is not a party to the suit.

The question of whether collateral estoppel bars prosecution for perjury usually arises where a defendant, who has taken the stand and perjured himself, has been acquitted of the substantive offense and is charged with perjury for testimony given at his/her trial. The collateral estoppel claim is that the jury, by acquitting the defendant, adjudicated the truthfulness of his/her testimony in his/her favor and that the government is barred from litigating that issue again.

The problem with such a claim is that, since the government must prove every element of its case beyond a reasonable doubt, and since the jury's general verdict does not indicate which element(s) it found lacking in proof, it is difficult to determine whether the jury's acquittal was based on a finding that the defendant's testimony was credible or whether, even though it disbelieved the defendant, the jury found the government's case deficient in some other respect.

Clearly, if the defendant's only testimony is a general denial of guilt, an acquittal would be a bar to a perjury prosecution. In most situations, however, an inquiry must be made into what issue(s) the jury's acquittal "necessarily" adjudicated. Sealfon v. United States, 332 U.S. 575 (1948). In Sealfon, the Supreme Court held that the determination "depends upon the facts adduced at each trial and the instructions under which the jury arrived at its verdict at the first trial."

In confirming and elucidating this point, Ashe v. Swenson, 397 U.S. at 444, held that:

The Federal decisions have made clear that the rule of collateral estoppel in criminal cases is not to be applied with the hypertechnical and archaic approach of a 19th Century pleading book, but with realism and rationality. Where a previous judgment of acquittal was based upon a general verdict, as is usually the case, this approach requires a court to examine the record of a prior proceeding, taking into account the pleadings, evidence, charge, and other relevant matter, and conclude whether a rational jury could have grounded its verdict upon an issue other than that which defendant seeks to foreclose from consideration.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Thus, the acquittal of a defendant following a trial on criminal charges does not bar his subsequent prosecution for perjury committed during the course of the trial. It is only when an issue of ultimate fact or an element essential to conviction has once been determined by a final judgment in a criminal case that the same issue cannot be relitigated. United States v. Sarno, 596 F.2d 404, 407 (9th Cir. 1979); United States v. Fayer, 573 F.2d 741, 745 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 831 (1978). In such situations, the collateral estoppel doctrine requires (1) an identification of the issues in the two actions to determine whether they are sufficiently similar and material; (2) an examination of the record of the prior case to decide whether the issue was litigated in the first case; and (3) an examination of the record of the prior proceeding to ascertain whether the issue was necessarily decided in the first case. United States v. Dipp, 581 F.2d 1323, 1325 (9th Cir. 1978), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 1071 (1979); United States v. Giarratano, 622 F.2d 153, 155 (5th Cir. 1980). Significantly, the burden is on the defendant to establish that the verdict in the prior trial necessarily determined in his/her favor the issue which he/she contends should not be considered. Id. at 156 n.4; United States v. Fayer, supra at 745.

An examination of two cases in this area reveals the type of analysis a court or prosecutor must make to determine if collateral estoppel dictates that an acquittal in a prior trial forecloses a subsequent perjury indictment.

In United States v. Haines, 485 F.2d 564 (7th Cir. 1973), the defendant, who had been acquitted of a charge of bank robbery, was later convicted of perjury for testifying during the bank robbery trial that the defendant had been in Terre Haute on the morning of the robbery, and at the time of robbery was en route to Indianapolis. The robbery took place in Laneville, Indiana.

The defendant contended that his acquittal on the bank robbery charge constituted a prior determination of the veracity of his alibi testimony. The court of appeals did not agree.

In the context of a perjury indictment relating to testimony given at a former trial on a substantive

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

charge, the doctrine of collateral estoppel does not bar the perjury prosecution unless the issues of fact central to that prosecution were necessarily determined in the former trial. (Emphasis by the court.) 485 F.2d at 565.

For the jury to have found that the defendant was not in Laneville robbing the bank, it would not necessarily have had to believe that the defendant was in Terre Haute.

Haines is typical of most situations in which the defendant takes the stand to put forth an alibi defense. See Adams v. United States, 287 F.2d 701 (5th Cir. 1961). Because one who advances an alibi defense provides facts beyond the confines of the prosecution's case, a verdict against the government on the issue of guilt does not necessarily mean that the alibi testimony was judged credible by the jury. Occasionally, however, the defendant provides an explanation for his conduct which goes no further than to counteract the contention of the prosecution and thus a verdict against the government on the issue of guilt operates as a total vindication of the defendant's testimony.

One such case is United States v. Nash, 447 F.2d 1382 (4th Cir. 1971). Another case, dismissing a perjury indictment based on collateral estoppel, is United States v. Drevetzki, 338 F. Supp. 403 (N.D. Ill. 1972). Estelle Nash, a postal employee, was charged with stealing a letter from the mails. Postal inspectors testified that they saw the defendant take, from a post office box, a letter containing $2.75, which the inspectors had previously marked with a fluorescent powder. The inspectors followed her into the ladies rest area and, after a search of her person, discovered three marked quarters. At trial Ms. Nash admitted that she went into the rest area and that she was in possession of the three marked quarters. She claimed, however, that she had obtained four quarters from a change machine.

Although the government contended that the interval between the time the inspectors saw Ms. Nash remove the envelope and the time she was searched did not allow for access to the change machine, and also provided evidence that the marked quarters she claimed to have received from the machine could not have been deposited for change, she was acquitted of the mail theft charge. In a subsequent trial for perjury, however, upon the same evidence as was introduced in mail theft trial, Estelle Nash was convicted.

The court of appeals reversed the conviction, concluding that the jury in the mail theft trial undoubtedly passed upon the credibility of

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Estelle Nash's statements under oath. "There were but two conflicting explanations of her possession to be considered. Thus, the jury 'necessarily' had to pass upon the truthfulness of her account." 447 F.2d at 1385. Accordingly the government was collaterally estopped from raising the issue again. In his concurring opinion, Judge Winter suggests that collateral estoppel is a bar only when there is no new evidence introduced at a subsequent perjury trial. Accord, United States v. Sarno, supra at 407 ("unless the subsequent perjury indictment is based upon evidence which was not available at the first trial. . . it would appear that the government would be merely trying to recover from its initial failure to convince the trier of fact of the falsity of defendant's testimony at the first trial"). While this approach has an equitable appeal, such a suggestion was explicitly rejected in Harris v. Washington, 404 U.S. 55 (1971).

Before prosecuting an acquitted defendant for perjury based upon his testimony at trial, the possibility that such a prosecution has been foreclosed should be explored fully so the government will avoid the appearance of vindictive prosecution or waste of government resources.

9-69.273 Lack of Miranda Warning

Generally an indictment for perjury before a grand jury will not be dismissed for failure to advise the witness of his right not to incriminate himself. United States v. Orta, 253 F.2d 312 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 357 U.S. 905 (1958). The issue, however, of the warnings required to be given to a grand jury witness who is a virtual or putative defendant has been the subject of considerable controversy. The Supreme Court confronted this issue in United States v. Mandujano, 425 U.S. 564 (1976).

In United States v. Mandujano, supra, the defendant was called before a grand jury several months after he had attempted to procure quantities of heroin at the behest of an undercover agent. Though he was unable to obtain any heroin for sale to the agent, Mandujano had taken $650 in front money. Before the grand jury the government attorney warned Mandujano against committing perjury, advised him he had a right not to incriminate himself and told him he could have an attorney outside the grand jury room with whom he could confer. Although Mandujano indicated he could not afford an attorney, the prosecutor did not tell him he had the right to appointed counsel or that his statements could be used against him. During questioning, Mandujano denied he had ever been approached to procure heroin and that he had ever accepted $650 front money. Mandujano was later indicted for perjury, under 18 U.S.C. §1623, and for attempting to distribute heroin, under 21 U.S.C. §846.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

In affirming the district court's suppression of Mandujano's grand jury testimony, the court of appeals held that, although a witness before a grand jury is not entitled to a Miranda warning, where the witness is a putative defendant due process requires that a Miranda warning be given. The court noted that the prosecutor knew he was putting the witness in the position of either perjuring or incriminating himself. 496 F.2d 1050 (5th Cir. 1974).

In the Court's plurality opinion reversing the Court of Appeals, the Chief Justice joined by Mr. Justice White, Mr. Justice Powell, and Mr. Justice Rehnquist concluded that Miranda warnings need not be given to a grand jury witness who is called to testify about criminal matters in which he may have played a part. Moreover, the failure to have given such witness Miranda warnings is no basis for having false statements made to the jury suppressed in a subsequent prosecution of the witness for perjury based on those statements.

Mr. Justice Brennan, joined by Mr. Justice Marshall, although concurring in the judgment, also believed that in the absence of a knowing waiver of the privilege against compulsory self-incrimination, the fifth amendment requires that testimony acquired by calling a putative defendant before a grand jury and compelling the defendant to testify regarding the suspected crime be unavailable as evidence in a later prosecution for that crime. In addition, because of the potential prejudice to a putative defendant's privilege against compulsory self-incrimination when called to the grand jury, some guidance by counsel is required.

Mr. Justice Stewart, joined by Mr. Justice Blackmun, concluded that the fifth amendment privilege against compulsory self-incrimination did not require the witness's grand jury testimony to be suppressed because that testimony was relevant only to the witness's prosecution for perjury and was not introduced in the prosecution of the witness for attempting to distribute heroin. Furthermore, this was not a case where the perjury prosecution should be prohibited because of prosecutorial misconduct that amounted to a denial of due process.

While the Supreme Court in Mandujano clearly held that a putative defendant is not entitled to full Miranda warnings before testifying before a grand jury, the plurality opinion did not address the question of whether it is necessary to advise such a witness of his fifth amendment privilege against self-incrimination. 425 U.S. at 582 n.7. Indeed, the Court has reserved for later decision the question whether a prosecutor must advise a grand jury witness of his fifth amendment rights. United States v. Washington, 431 U.S. 181, 186 (1977). However, Department of Justice guidelines require prosecutors to give grand jury witnesses warnings resembling Miranda warnings and to advise putative defendants of their status as such. See USAM 9-11.250; United States v. Jacobs, 547 F.2d 772, 774-75 (2d Cir. 1976), cert. dismissed as improvidently granted, 436 U.S. 31 (1978) (per curiam) (court may exercise supervisory power to suppress perjured testimony when prosecutor fails to advise grand jury witness of putative defendant status in accordance with practice of U.S. attorneys in circuit).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-69.274 Recantation

A. In General

18 U.S.C. §1623(d) provides that in certain limited circumstances a retraction and correction of false testimony by a witness will act as a bar to prosecution for the initial perjury. Before the enactment of 18 U.S.C. §1623, the federal law, under 18 U.S.C. §1621, was the crime of perjury was complete as soon as the false statement was made, United States v. Norris, 300 U.S. 564 (1937), and that a subsequent retraction and correction of the testimony did not have the effect of erasing the perjury, but was only relevant as an affirmative defense in showing the absence of intent to commit perjury, United States v. Kahn, 472 F.2d 272, 284 (2d Cir. 1973), cert. denied 411 U.S. 982 (1973). Thus, since recantation is a bar to prosecution under 18 U.S.C. §1623 rather than an affirmative defense, the issue of recantation is an issue of law to be decided by the court. United States v. D'Auria, 672 F.2d 1085, 1091 (2d Cir. 1982); United States v. Kahn, supra at 283 n.9; United States v. Tucker, 495 F. Supp. 607, 613 (E.D.N.Y. 1980). The defense of recantation must be raised before trial under Fed. R. Crim. P. 12(b)(2), as a jurisdictional bar to prosecution. United States v. Denison, 663 F.2d 611, 618 (5th Cir. 1981).

18 U.S.C. §1623(d) which was adopted in modified form from the New York Penal Code, Section 210.5 (see People v. Ezaugli, 141 N.E. 2d 580 (1957)), provides that:

Where, in the same continuous court or grand jury proceeding in which a declaration is made, the person making the declaration admits such declaration to be false, such admission shall bar prosecution under this section if, at the time the admission is made, the declaration has not substantially affected the proceeding, or it has not become manifest that such falsity has been or will be exposed.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

It is clear from the above that a witnesses' admission of the falsity of his declarations does not automatically bar prosecution, but that prosecution is barred only if the admission occurs at a time when the false declarations have 'not substantially affected the proceeding, or it has not become manifest that such falsity has been or will be exposed.' Thus, if either of these prerequisites has already occurred prior to the time of the witnesses' reappearance to correct (his) testimony, the recantation provisions of 18 U.S.C. §1623(d) are inapplicable and cannot be invoked to bar prosecution. Stated another way, recantation bars prosecution only when the defendant has established that neither of the conditions in 18 U.S.C. §1623(d) has occurred. United States v. Denison, supra at 615; United States v. Scrimgeour, 636 F.2d 1019, 1024 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 878 (1981); United States v. Moore, 613 F.2d 1029, 1040 (D.C. Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 446 U.S. 954 (1980). Moreover, the burden is on the defendant to show that he/she is within the protection of the recantation exemption. United States v. Scrimgeour, supra at 1024; United States v. Moore, supra at 1044. his/her

In ruling on the timeliness of claimed recantation by a witness the courts have generally interpreted the 'manifest' proviso of 18 U.S.C. §1623(d) as applying specifically to the witnesses' knowledge, derived either from independent sources or directly from the government prosecutor, that the falsity of his prior statements 'has been or will be exposed.' In the cases where the witness possesses such knowledge, the courts have consistently held that no effective recantation can thereafter be made. United States v. Del Toro, 513 F.2d 656, 666 (2d Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 826 (1975); United States v. Mitchell, 397 F. Supp. 166, 177 (D. D.C. 1974); United States v. Krogh, 366 F. Supp. 1255, 1256 (D. D.C. 1973); United States v. Crandall, 363 F. Supp. 648, 655 (W.D. Pa. 1973), aff'd, 493 F.2d 1401 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 852 (1974).

At least one case, however, appears to indicate, at least by implication, that 'manifest' can also be interpreted to mean that the falsity of the witnesses' statements has merely become known to the government or the grand jury, as opposed to the witness himself/herself. In United States v. Kahn, supra, the Second Circuit Court of Appeals held that a 18 U.S.C. §1623(d) defense was not available to defendant Kahn since at the time of his alleged recantation several other witnesses had already testified concerning the bribes that Kahn had falsely denied knowledge of during his initial grand jury appearance. There is no indication in the opinion of a finding by the court that at the time of his attempted recantation Kahn had any knowledge of the contradictory testimony heard by the grand jury. While the position taken by the Kahn court is at least arguable, such an interpretation appears to be in conflict with the legislative intent and the other case law interpreting this provision.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

There is also some question as to the standards to be applied in determining when the false declarations of a witness will be considered as having 'substantially affected the proceedings', thereby precluding an effective recantation. Certainly, a timely recantation would be precluded in any case where the grand jury has already acted. As the court stated in United States v. Krogh, supra, at 1256, in rejecting the defendant's recantation claim as untimely:

As a matter of law such a statement must be presumed to have been considered by the Grand Jury and to have substantially affected the proceedings where the Grand jury has subsequently acted. Section 1623(d) does not contemplate a detailed inquiry into the thought processes of Grand Jurors.

Further, in United States v. Crandall, supra, the court found that the defendant's false declarations had substantially affected the proceedings since the grand jury had been deprived initially of relevant testimony as to the guilt of other individuals which resulted in a several month delay in the grand jury's investigation.

While these cases offer some guidance, the determination of whether a given proceeding has been substantially affected by the witnesses' false declarations can probably only be made after a consideration of the facts and circumstances of the particular court or grand jury proceeding. It is not relevant that the grand jury had no authority to indict the defendant for the substantive offense inquired into, for statute of limitations reasons or otherwise. United States v. Doulin, 538 F.2d 466, 470 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 895 (1976). Obviously, however, by the time the defendant is indicted for perjury, the defendant has lost the ability to recant. United States v. Baldwin, 506 F. Supp. 300, 301 (M.D. Tenn. 1980).

While the statutory language of 18 U.S.C. §1623(d) indicates that a recantation will not bar prosecution if either of the two prerequisites has already occurred, the courts in rejecting defendants' recantation claims have generally made factual determinations as to both conditions. Accordingly, it is recommended that the government argue in all cases, assuming the facts of the particular case so permit, that the defendant's efforts to recant occurred only after the proceedings had been substantially affected and at a time when it had already become manifest that the falsity had been or would be exposed.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

B. Necessity of Advising a Witness of Recantation Provision of 18 U.S.C. §1623(d)

The government is not required by due process principles or otherwise to inform a grand jury witness of his/her statutory right to recant. United States v. D'Auria, supra at 1092 ("A witness who has lied remains obligated by his oath to tell the truth, without prodding."); United States v. Scrimgeour, supra at 1026; United States v. Anfield, 539 F.2d 674, 679 (9th Cir. 1976); United States v. Doulin, supra at 471 n.4. Such is the case even if the prosecutor advises the witness of the penalties of perjury. United States v. Lardieri, 497 F.2d 317 (3d Cir. 1974). In addition, there is no requirement that the government reveal to a perjurer that it has evidence of the untruthfulness of his/her statements. Nor must the government delay revealing incriminating evidence to allow the witness to reflect on his/her perjury. United States v. D'Auria, supra at 1093; United States v. Scrimgeour, supra at 1025; United States v. Denison, supra at 616-17 ("Denison would have us limit this condition to ensure that a witness who commits perjury always must have an opportunity to escape prosecution if he has a change of heart. We decline to do so. Such a holding would expand the recantation defense far beyond the purpose it is designed to serve."); United States v. Sun Myung Moon, 532 F. Supp. 1360, 1371 (S.D.N.Y. 1982).

C. Witness' Right to Recant

If a witness who has completed his/her testimony requests that he/she be allowed to reappear before the grand jury for the purpose of recantation, the prosecutor should grant the request if timely made, in keeping with the legislative intent of 18 U.S.C. §1623(d), promotion of truthful testimony. In the course of debate in the Senate on this section, Senator McClellan stated:

. . . [T]he recantation provision of Title IV establishes the right of a witness to protect himself from prosecution for perjury he has already committed, by righting the wrong before it has harmed the proceedings during which he lied. Congressional Record - Senate, June 9, 1970, S. 8656.

In order to recant the witness must, as a condition precedent to giving truthful testimony, admit that his/her perjurious testimony was false. An outright retraction and repudiation of the false testimony is essential to a recantation within the meaning of the statute; United States v. D'Auria, supra at 1091-92; United States v. Scrimgeour, supra at 1025 (defendant's lack of access to defendant's grand jury transcript until the day of defendant's reappearance is not inconsistent with purposes of 18 U.S.C. §1623(d)).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

It is clear, however, that the reappearance by the witness after it has become 'manifest' that the falsity of his/her previous testimony 'has been or will be exposed' does not preclude the government from prosecuting the witness for his/her prior false declarations before the grand jury. United States v. Del Toro, supra; United States v. Mitchell, supra; United States v. Krogh, supra; United States v. Crandall, supra.

9-69.281 Indictment (18 U.S.C. §1621)

A. On or about the _____ day of _____, 19____, in the _____ District of _____, John Doe, having duly taken an oath, before _____, a competent officer of the Securities and Exchange Commission during an investigation duly authorized by the Commission, a case in which Title _____ Section _____ authorizes an oath to be administered, that he would testify truly, did willfully and knowingly and contrary to said oath state material matter which he did not believe to be true, that is to say:

B. At the time and place aforesaid the Commission was conducting an investigation into the practices and financial conditions of the XYZ Corporation to determine whether said corporation had violated Title _____ Section _____.

C. It was material to the aforesaid investigation to determine whether John Doe had ever borrowed money from the XYZ Corporation.

D. At the time and place aforesaid in paragraph 1, John Doe appeared as a witness before the Commission, and then and there being under oath as aforesaid, testified falsely before the Commission with respect to the aforesaid material matter as follows:

"Q. Have you ever borrowed money from XYZ Corporation? A. No."

E. The aforesaid testimony of John Doe, as he then and there well knew and believed, was false in that on January 13, 1974, John Doe did in fact borrow money from the XYZ Corporation. All in violation of 18 U.S.C. §1621.

9-69.282 Indictment (18 U.S.C. §1622)

A. On the _____ day of _____, 19__ in the _____ District of _____ Richard Roe was adjudicated a bankrupt by the United States District Court for said District and said matter and proceeding was duly referred to James Smith, Referee in bankruptcy of said Court for further proceedings (Referee's No. _____).

B. From on or about the _____ day of _____, 19__, continuing thereafter up to and including the _____ day of _____, 19__, in the _____ District of _____ JOHN DOE, the defendant herein, did wilfully suborn, instigate, induce and procure one Jane Doe to duly take an oath before the said Referee in said bankruptcy proceeding that she would testify truly to material matters relative to the said proceeding concerning the goods, property and debts of the bankrupt and to wilfully and contrary to such oath, state material matter hereinafter more particularly set forth, which neither JOHN DOE nor the said Jane Doe believed to be true.

C. On the _____ day of _____, 19__, the said Jane Doe did appear as required before the said Referee as a witness, was duly sworn and took her oath as a witness in said proceeding, the oath being administered by the said Referee; the said matter and proceeding aforesaid and the hearing thereon before the said Referee as a case in which a law of the United States authorized an oath to be administered.

D. The said Jane Doe, being duly sworn as aforesaid, it did then and there become and at all times mentioned herein was a material matter in the said proceeding whether one _____ had theretofore and prior to the _____ day of _____, 19__, loaned to the said Richard Roe the sum of _____.

E. The said Jane Doe, in consequence of said wilful subornation, inducement and procurement of JOHN DOE, being under oath as aforesaid, did falsely and knowingly and contrary to said oath, testify in substance and to the following effect that the said _____ had theretofore and prior to the _____ day of _____, 19__, loaned to the said Richard Roe the sum of _____.

F. Said testimony was false and contrary to the oath taken by Jane Doe, as Jane Doe and JOHN DOE then and there well knew and believed, in that _____. All in violation of 18 U.S.C. §1622.

A. On or about the _____ day of _____, 19____, in the _____ District of _____, Richard Roe, while under oath as a witness in a criminal case then being tried before the United States District Court for said District entitled, United States v. John Doe, No. _____, did knowingly make a material declaration which was inconsistent with a prior material declaration made by RICHARD ROE while testifying in a proceeding before a duly empanelled and sworn grand jury for the United States District Court for the _____ District of _____, such material declarations being inconsistent to the degree that one of them is necessarily false, that is:

B. The said RICHARD ROE on the _____ day of _____, 19____, while under oath as a witness in United States v. John Doe, No. _____, a criminal trial in the _____ District of _____, did knowingly declare with respect to a material matter as follows:

Q. Have you ever to your knowledge received a loan of money from John Doe?

A. No.

C. The said RICHARD ROE, on the _____ day of _____, 19____, while appearing as a witness under oath before the federal grand jury in the _____ District of _____, did knowingly declare with respect to a material matter as follows:

Q. Have you ever to your knowledge received a loan of money from John Doe?

A. Yes.

D. 9-69.290 Jury Instructions

9-69.291 18 U.S.C. §1621

18 U.S.C. §1621 provides in part that:

Whoever . . . having taken an oath before a competent tribunal, officer, or person, in any case in which a law of the United States authorizes an oath to be administered, that he will testify . . . truly, . . . willfully and contrary to such oath states or subscribes any material matter which he does not believe to be true . . . is guilty of perjury, . . .

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

A. Essential Elements of Offense

Three essential elements are required to be proved in order to establish the offense charged in the indictment:

1. That the testimony was given under oath taken by the accused before the _____ "Agency, Department or Commission" as charged.

2. That the testimony so given was false in one or more of the respects charged; and

3. That the false testimony was willfully given, as charged.

As stated before, the burden is always upon the prosecution to prove beyond a reasonable doubt every essential element of the crime charged; the law never imposes upon a defendant in a criminal case the burden or duty of calling any witnesses or producing any evidence.

B. Willfully

An act is done "willfully" if done voluntarily and intentionally, and with the specific intent to do something the law forbids; that is to say, with bad purpose either to disobey or disregard the law.

C. Proof of Intent

Intent ordinarily may not be proved directly, because there is no way of fathoming or scrutinizing the operations of the human mind. But you may infer the defendant's intent from the surrounding circumstances. You may consider any statement made and done or omitted by the defendant, and all other facts and circumstances in evidence which indicate his/her state of mind. It is ordinarily reasonable to infer that a person intends the natural and probable consequences of acts knowingly done or knowingly omitted.

Section 1306 Federal Jury Practice and Instructions Devitt and Blackmar.

D. Materiality of Testimony

Whether a statement made by a witness before the grand jury of the United States District Court for the _____ District of _____ is material to the investigation then being carried on by the grand jury of the United States District Court for the _____ District of _____

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

_____ is a question of law to be decided by the trial judge, and not by the jury.

If you find beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant, _____, did testify to those matters alleged in the indictment, then I instruct you as a matter of law that such testimony was material to the investigation then being conducted by the grand jury.

E. Corroboration of Evidence of Falsity

The law requires in a case such as this that the falsity of the testimony in question be proved by the sworn testimony of at least one witness, and that the testimony as to falsity, given by such witness, be corroborated or supported by other testimony, or by documentary evidence, or by some other evidence in the case.

As to the inapplicability of "two-witness" rule to specified types of cases, see notes to 47.05, Devitt and Blackmar, Federal Jury Practice and Instructions.

9-69.292 Jury Instructions - 18 U.S.C. §1622

18 U.S.C. §1622 provides in part that "whoever procures another to commit perjury" in violation of the laws of the United States "is guilty of subornation of perjury," which is an offense against the United States.

A. Elements of the Offense

Three essential elements are required to be proved in order to establish the offense charged in the indictment, as follows:

1. That the defendant knowingly and wilfully procured _____ to testify before the referee in bankruptcy as to material matters in the bankruptcy proceeding of _____, a corporation;
2. That the defendant knew that the testimony which _____ intended to give before the referee was false in one or more of the respects charged in the indictment, and that _____ knew that it was false in one or more of these respects;
3. That _____ knowingly and wilfully testified falsely before the said referee in one or more of the respects charged.

Ch. 69, p. 69

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

As stated before, the burden is always upon the prosecution to prove beyond a reasonable doubt every essential element of the crime charged; the law never imposes upon a defendant in a criminal case the burden or duty of calling any witnesses or producing any evidence.

B. Perjury Must Be Proved

Under the law the actual commission of perjury is a necessary element of the crime of subornation of perjury, and must be established by the same degree of proof required when the alleged perjurer himself is on trial. This means that the falsity of the testimony in question must be proved by the sworn testimony of at least one witness and that the testimony as to falsity must be corroborated or supported by other testimony, or by documentary evidence, or by some other evidence in the case. The proof required for the element of suborning or inducing the perjury, however, is that of proof beyond reasonable doubt just as in the case of other crimes.

(If the perjury suborned was prosecutable under 18 U.S.C. §1623, the requirement that it be proved by "two-witnesses" is obviated. See United States v. Gross, 375 F. Supp. 971 (D. N.J., 1974)).

9-69.293 Jury Instructions - 18 U.S.C. §1623

The statute which it is alleged the defendant has violated reads in pertinent part as follows:

'Whoever under oath . . . in any proceeding before . . .
. . . any . . . grand jury of the United States knowingly makes any false material declaration . . . shall be . . .
. . . ' punished as provided by law.

A. Essential Elements of Offense

Three essential elements are required to be proved in order to establish the offense charged in the indictment:

1. That the testimony was given under oath taken by the accused before the grand jury as charged.
2. That the testimony so given was false in one or more of the respects charged.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

3. That the false testimony was knowingly given, as charged.

As stated before, the burden is always upon the prosecution to prove beyond a reasonable doubt every essential element of the crime charged; the law never imposes upon a defendant in a criminal case the burden or duty of calling any witnesses or producing any evidence.

B. Knowingly

An act is done "knowingly" if done voluntarily and intentionally, and not because of mistake or accident or other innocent reason.

C. Materiality of Testimony

Whether a statement made by a witness before the grand jury of the United States District Court for the _____ District of _____ is material to the investigation then being carried on by the grand jury of the United States District Court for the _____ District of _____ is a question of law to be decided by the trial judge, and not by the jury. If you find beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant, _____, did testify to those matters alleged in the indictment, then I instruct you as a matter of law that such testimony was material to the investigation then being conducted by the grand jury.

D. Specific Intent

The crime charged in this case required proof of specific intent before the defendant can be convicted. Specific intent, as the term implies, means more than the general intent to commit the act. To establish specific intent the government must prove that the defendant knowingly did an act which the law forbids, purposely intending to violate the law.

E. Proof of Intent

Intent ordinarily may not be proved directly, because there is no way of fathoming or scrutinizing the operations of the human mind. But you may infer the defendant's intent from the surrounding circumstances. You may consider any statement made and done or omitted by the defendant, and all other facts and circumstances in evidence which indicate his/her state of mind. It is ordinarily reasonable to infer that a person intends the natural and probable consequences of acts knowingly done or knowingly omitted.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-69.300 PRISON OFFENSES

9-69.301 Introduction

Chapter 87 of Title 18 United States Code, defines and punishes prison offenses. Specifically, those statutes are as follows:

A. 18 U.S.C. §1791(a)(1) - prohibits providing or attempting to provide any contraband item to an inmate of a federal penal or correctional facility.

B. 18 U.S.C. §1791(a)(2) - prohibits any inmate of a federal penal or correctional facility from making, possessing or procuring any contraband item or attempting to do so.

C. 18 U.S.C. §1791(b) - sets forth penalties commensurate with the dangerousness of the contraband item.

D. 18 U.S.C. §1792 - sets forth a penalty of up to ten years imprisonment and/or up to a $25,000 fine for inciting, causing or attempting to cause a riot or mutiny at any federal penal or correctional facility.

9-69.310 Elements of 18 U.S.C. §1791(a)(1)

9-69.311 Violation

The prohibited conduct under 18 U.S.C. §1791(a)(1) must violate a "statute, or a regulation, rule, or order issued pursuant thereto." This includes rules and regulations promulgated both by the Attorney General and the Bureau of Prisons.

Prior law prohibited introducing any prohibited item into or taking any prohibited item from a federal penal facility. As amended by the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984, 18 U.S.C. §1792(a)(1) prohibits providing or attempting to provide contraband. Since the new amendment eliminates the "taking or sending" language, this section probably can no longer be used to punish smuggling items out of a federal penal facility.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-69.312 Federal Penal or Correctional Facility

18 U.S.C. §1791(a)(1) only extends to activity in federal facilities. Congress intended that it apply only to inmates (whether convicted in federal or state court) in a federal penal institution. Congress did not seek to extend coverage to federal defendants incarcerated in state institutions since the primary interest in barring contraband from those institutions lies with state and local officials. S. Rep. No. 98-225, 98th Cong., 1st Sess. 382 (1984).

9-69.313 Contraband

18 U.S.C. §1791(a)(1)(A) through (1)(E) list five specific types of contraband and a residual or omnibus clause which covers "any other object." Most of the categories of contraband are either defined or are self-defining (e.g., currency). It should be noted, however, that subsection (a)(B), concerning objects which can be used as weapons or means of facilitating escapes, provides a broad, objective standard. The government need only show that the item could be used as a weapon or to aid an escape, not that it was intended for such use.

9-69.320 Elements of 18 U.S.C. §1791(a)(2)

9-69.321 Federal Penal or Correctional Facility

The same analysis applies as for 18 U.S.C. §1791(a)(1). See USAM 9-69.312, supra.

9-69.322 Possess or Provide

This subsection prohibits making, possessing, procuring, or otherwise providing oneself with contraband. Under this new language, the mere possession of contraband is punishable. It is no longer necessary to prove that the inmate conveyed the contraband from place to place within the facility.

9-69.323 Contraband

This subsection prohibits the same categories of contraband as subsection (a)(1). See USAM 9-69.313, supra.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-69.330 Elements of 18 U.S.C. §1792

9-69.331 Participation

18 U.S.C. §1792 prohibits instigating, willfully attempting to cause, assisting or conspiring to cause a mutiny or riot. Participation in a federal prison riot constitutes assisting and willfully attempting to cause such a riot. See United States v. Farries, 459 F.2d 1057 (3d Cir. 1972), cert. denied, 410 U.S. 912 (1973). Thus, mere participation is prohibited and punishable as a crime. United States v. Bryant, 563 F.2d 1227 (5th Cir. 1977), cert. denied, 435 U.S. 972 (1978).

9-69.332 Mutiny or Riot

Resisting a federal warden or subordinate officer in the free and lawful exercise of his or her authority constitutes a mutiny. See United States v. Bryson, 423 F.2d 724 (4th Cir. 1970).

9-69.333 Federal Penal or Correctional Facility

See USAM 9-69.312, supra.

When an inmate possesses a weapon and subsequently uses that weapon to commit a separate offense (e.g., assault or murder), conviction and

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

consecutive sentencing on both charges does not constitute double jeopardy because possession of contraband is not a lesser included offense of the substantive crime. See United States v. Fountain, 642 F.2d 1083 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 451 U.S. 993 (1981).

9-69.360 Knowledge of Warden

Lack of knowledge by the warden becomes an issue if the regulation being violated under 18 U.S.C. §1791 is 28 C.F.R. §6.1. 28 C.F.R. §6.1 requires that the offense occur without the knowledge of the warden.

In United States v. Berrigan, 482 F.2d 171, 188 (3d Cir. 1973), the Court of Appeals held that the warden's lack of knowledge regarding the sending and receiving of letters was an essential element of the crime. If the warden knew of the letters there could be no crime. This constituted "legal" impossibility and, therefore, was a valid defense to a charge of attempt. This analysis has not, however, been accepted by all courts of appeals. See United States v. Heng Awkak Roman, 356 F. Supp. 434 (S.D.N.Y. 1973), aff'd, 484 F.2d 1271 (2d Cir. 1973) (per Curiam), cert. denied, 415 U.S. 978 (1974); United States v. Quijada, 588 F.2d 1253 (9th Cir. 1978); United States v. Frazier, 560 F.2d 884 (8th Cir. 1977), cert. denied, 435 U.S. 968 (1978).

In contrast to the Berrigan situation, however, when the contraband is intercepted and then allowed to proceed, the attempt would be already complete prior to the interception. Therefore, subsequent knowledge of the warden does not negate the knowledge element of the offense. See United States v. York, 578 F.2d 1036 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 1005 (1978).

9-69.400 FUGITIVE FELON ACT--18 U.S.C. §1073

9-69.410 Primary Purpose of Act

Though drawn as a penal statute, and therefore permitting prosecution by the federal government for its violation, the primary purpose of the Act is to permit the federal government to assist in the location and apprehension of fugitives from state justice. Accordingly, the Fugitive Felon Act does not supersede nor is it intended to provide an alternative for state extradition proceedings. No prior Division approval is required to authorize issuance of a complaint under the Act in aid of the states. United States v. McCarthy, 249 F. Supp. 199 (E.D.N.Y. 1966); United States

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

v. Diaz, 351 F. Supp. 1050 (D. Conn. 1972). Normally the federal complaint will be dismissed when the fugitive has been apprehended and turned over to state authorities to await interstate extradition. Under an amendment passed in 1961, the Act applies to all state felonies, including crimes punishable by death, and the fact that the flight may occur prior to institution of state prosecution does not defeat the operation of the statute. Lupino v. United States, 268 F.2d 799 (8th Cir. 1959), cert. denied, 361 U.S. 834 (1959).

9-69.420 Prerequisites to Issuance of Federal Complaint in Aid of States;
Policy

No action should be taken to authorize the issuance of a complaint for violation of the Act unless there is probable cause to believe that the fugitive has fled and that his/her flight was for the purpose of avoiding prosecution and that he/she has moved or travelled in interstate or foreign commerce. The breadth of the statute as amended in 1961 requires that care be exercised to prevent its application to assist in the enforcement of any statute whose purpose is clearly discriminatory or in the discriminatory application of an otherwise lawful statute. Requests for federal assistance should be scrutinized carefully to avoid such cases. See H. Rep. No. 827, 87th Cong., 1st Sess. (1961), reprinted in (1961) U.S. Code Cong. & Adm. News, p. 3242. In doubtful instances, the advice of the General Litigation and Legal Advice Section of the Criminal Division should be sought. Attorneys familiar with the policies may be reached at 724-6893, 724-6971, and 724-7526.

The following is a new section:

9-69.342 Sentencing in Prison Contraband Cases

In order to maximize the deterrent effect of a conviction for a violation of section 1791 or 1792, the attorney for the government should seek a sentence of imprisonment which is not suspended or allowed to run concurrently with any other term of imprisonment.

BS 9.004

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

It should be clear that the state or local authorities are determined to take all necessary steps to secure the return of the fugitive, and that it is their intention to bring him/her to trial on the state charge for which he is sought. Accordingly, caution should be exercised to guard against use of the investigative services of the FBI to compel the discharge of civil obligations. Requests for federal assistance in instances of state worthless check violations or of desertion or nonsupport of a spouse or child by a spouse or parent, should be examined with particular care, and the advice of the Criminal Division should be sought in doubtful instances.

Because the primary purpose of the Act is to assist the states in locating and apprehending fugitives, a complaint should not be filed in cases in which the location of the fugitive is already known by state authorities.

State prosecution of the fugitive should have been commenced by complaint, warrant, indictment, or information. In this regard, it is suggested that U.S. Attorneys, when authorizing a federal complaint, secure a certified copy of the state warrant and have the same readily available to deliver to a U.S. Marshal for transmission to the apprehending state when the fugitive is apprehended. Commencement of a state action is theoretically not an absolutely essential prerequisite to the issuance of a federal complaint under the Act, but prior issuance of a state warrant would seem to be possible in every instance. Where a request by a state for issuance of a federal complaint does not contain satisfactory evidence of violation of the Act the state should first be requested to supply evidence of the requisite character. In particularly serious cases, the FBI may be requested to make an investigation for the purpose of establishing the jurisdictional facts of apparent flight after the commission of a state felony. If the FBI Special Agent in Charge does not concur that a case is serious enough to warrant the making of an investigation to establish the jurisdictional facts of apparent interstate flight, the U.S. Attorney should report the matter at once to the Criminal Division, General Litigation and Legal Advice Section, so that it can be discussed with FBI Headquarters.

If the fugitive was released on bond, it should be clear that the bond has been forfeited.

9-69.421 Parental Kidnapping

State requests for the filing of unlawful flight to avoid prosecution complaints in parental abduction cases are to be treated in the same

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

fashion as other requests. See section 10, Parental Kidnapping Prevention Act of 1980, Pub. L. 96-611, §10, 94 Stat. 3573, reprinted in notes to 18 U.S.C.A. §1073.

Note that the warrant of arrest does not authorize a search for the minor child or the taking of the child into custody or its removal from the state.

9-69.430 Procedure Upon Apprehension

The fugitive should remain in federal custody or on bail or other conditions of release only so long as is necessary to permit his/her commitment to the custody of authorities in the state where apprehended. Upon arrest of the fugitive under federal warrant, he/she should be taken before the U.S. Magistrate without unnecessary delay in compliance with Rule 40, Fed. R. Crim. P. Under no circumstances should a federal officer solicit or accept waiver of interstate extradition by a fugitive in federal custody or release a fugitive to state authorities for extradition or any other purpose without the approval of the magistrate.

The requesting state authority should be notified immediately and requested to institute extradition proceedings at once. By the time the fugitive is brought before the magistrate, state authorities in the state of arrest should have been contacted and it should have been ascertained whether they are ready and willing to take him into custody to await extradition. Concerning the authority of a state to arrest and hold in custody a felon fleeing from another state, see 35 C.J.S., Extradition, section 12; D.C. Code, Sections 23-701 et seq.; Uniform Criminal Extradition Act (enacted in 48 states, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands). Concerning waiver of extradition, see Uniform Criminal Extradition Act.

9-69.431 Conditions of Release--Policy

Under ordinary circumstances, no useful purpose will be served by the setting of stringent conditions of release on the federal charge. Where the asylum state authorities are ready to immediately receive the fugitive and hold him to await interstate extradition or under waiver of extradition, and the requesting state is ready and able to extradite him/her, release of the defendant on his/her own recognizance or dismissal of the federal action in the requesting state is justified to expeditiously effect his/her transfer to asylum state authorities. In this event, the U.S. Attorney in whose district the original federal complaint was filed should be contacted at once and informed of the circumstances and requested to dismiss the complaint. Prompt communication with the U.S. Attorney in the requesting state is particularly important if the magistrate refuses to release the fugitive on his/her own recognizance. This procedure can be expedited if the U.S. Attorney in the initiating district will transmit with the federal warrant an indication that he/she consents to discharge of the defendant and that he/she will seek dismissal of the federal action on the condition that custody of the fugitive will be accepted by state authorities where apprehended and that the requesting state will immediately move to extradite him/her. A simple notice to the U.S. Attorney in the initiating district will then quickly lead to termination of the federal proceedings.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

Asylum state authorities in some localities refuse to accept custody of a fugitive except upon receipt of a copy of the warrant outstanding in the requesting state. If the state warrant has not yet been received when the fugitive appears before the U.S. Magistrate, pursuant to Rule 40, Fed. R. Crim. P., for release under 18 U.S.C. §3146 pending receipt of the warrant, the U.S. Attorney should request that stringent conditions of release be imposed in light of the apparent high likelihood of flight. In these cases, it is highly desirable to forward the state warrant to the asylum state as quickly as possible. If as previously suggested, the U.S. Attorney in the initiating district has already made available to the U.S. Marshal in that district a certified copy of the state warrant, the marshal when notified of the defendant's apprehension can immediately send to the marshal in the apprehending district the federal warrant, together with the certified copy of the state warrant for presentation to asylum state authorities.

If for any reason the demanding state is unwilling to extradite, or if extradition is attempted but fails, a complete statement of all the facts should be forwarded immediately to the Criminal Division and instructions awaited before proceeding further.

9-69.440 Unlawful Flight

9-69.441 To Avoid Custody or Confinement After Conviction

This portion of the statute apparently covers inmates of jails or prisons as well as those on conditional liberty, whether probation or parole. The government must show that flight was for the purpose of avoiding custody or confinement; therefore, the evidence should indicate that the subject knew or believed that his conditional liberty was about to be revoked or was at least in jeopardy. Selective handling by U.S. Attorneys in this regard will obviate indiscriminate use of the Act to locate parolees who have simply failed to report to the parole board or failed to notify the board of a change of address.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-69.442 To Avoid Giving Testimony

No complaint should be authorized under that portion of the statute punishing flight to avoid giving testimony in criminal proceedings involving a felony until the state criminal proceeding, to which such testimony related, has actually been instituted in the state court. See Durbin v. United States, 221 F.2d 520 (D. D.C. 1954). Before authorizing the filing of a complaint, the U.S. Attorney should be satisfied that there is substantial evidence to indicate that the witness fled in order to avoid giving testimony.

The majority of states have adopted the Uniform Act to Secure the Return of Witnesses From Without the State in Criminal Cases. The state should be required to exhaust existing remedies for securing the return of the witness. If the demanding state is unable to effect the return of the fugitive witness, a complete statement of all the facts should be forwarded to the Division and instructions awaited before proceeding further.

9-69.443 To Avoid Service of Process

The Act was amended in 1970 to include unlawful flight to avoid service of lawful process "requiring the giving of testimony or the production of documentary evidence before an agency of a state empowered by the law of such state to conduct investigations of alleged criminal activities . . ."

Unlawful flight to avoid contempt proceedings for alleged disobedience of the lawful process of a state agency was also brought under 18 U.S.C. §1703 by the 1970 amendment.

9-69.450 Federal Information or Indictment; Removal--Approval Required

The 1961 amendment to the Act incorporated existing administrative practice by requiring approval by the Attorney General or Assistant Attorney General, in writing, before initiation of prosecution for unlawful flight to avoid prosecution, or custody or confinement after conviction, or to avoid giving testimony. Accordingly, under no circumstances should an indictment under the Act be sought nor an information be filed nor should removal proceedings under Rule 40, Fed. R. Crim. P., be instituted without the written approval of the Assistant Attorney General, Criminal Division. See H. Rep. No. 827, 87th Cong., 1st Sess. (1961), reprinted in (1961) U.S. Code Cong. & Adm. News, p. 3242 United States v. McCord, 695 F.2d 823 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, _____ U.S. _____, 103 S. Ct. 1533 (Apr. 4, 1983).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-69.460 Aiding and Abetting

One who aids and abets an unlawful flight made a federal offense by 18 U.S.C. §1073 also commits a federal offense, 18 U.S.C. §2. See United States v. Thurman, 687 F.2d 11 (3d Cir. 1982); Hett v. United States, 353 F.2d 761 (9th Cir. 1965).

The venue and requisite authorizations to institute a prosecution for aiding and abetting a violation of §1073 would be the same as for 18 U.S.C. §1073. United States v. Thurman, supra. See USAM 9-69.470, infra, and USAM 9-69.450, infra.

9-69.470 Venue

A violation of 18 U.S.C. §1073 may be prosecuted only in the federal judicial district in which the original crime was alleged to have been committed, or in which the person was held in custody or confinement or in which an avoidance of service of process or the contempt is alleged to have been committed.

9-69.500 ESCAPE FROM CUSTODY RESULTING FROM CONVICTION (18 U.S.C. §§751 and 752)

9-69.501 Introduction

This chapter deals with the criminal sanctions for escape or attempted escape from lawful custody or confinement following conviction, or from custody or confinement prior to conviction. Criminal sanctions are further delineated for aiding or assisting the escape or attempt to escape. The applicable sections are contained in Chapter 35 of Title 18, U.S. Code. Specifically those statutes are as follows:

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

A. 18 U.S.C. §751(a)--sets forth a penalty of up to 5 years imprisonment and/or a fine of $5,000 for escape on a felony, and one year confinement and/or a fine of $1,000 for escape on a misdemeanor;

B. 18 U.S.C. §751(b)--provides for a penalty of one year imprisonment and/or a fine of $1,000 for escape if the offense for which the person was arrested or confined was committed prior to his/her 18th birthday and said person had been confined was committed or is being or may be proceeded against as a juvenile delinquent under the Federal Juvenile Delinquency Act, 18 U.S.C. §§5031-5037;

C. 18 U.S.C. §752(a)--sets for the same penalty as provided in 18 U.S.C. §751, for a person who instigates, aids or assists the escape or attempt to escape; and

D. 18 U.S.C. §752(b)--prescribes the same penalty as under 18 U.S.C. §751(b) for a person who instigates, aids or assists the escape or attempt to escape of any person who had been committed or may be proceeded against as a juvenile delinquent under the Federal Juvenile Delinquency Act.

9-69.502 Legislative History

The prohibition against escape and the aiding, abetting and assisting thereof, was initially incorporated as sections 9 and 10 of "A Bill to Reorganize the Administration of Federal Prisons; To Authorize the Administration of Federal Prisons; To Authorize the Attorney General to Contract For The Care of United States Prisoners; To Establish Federal Jails; and For Other Purposes." S. Rep. No. 533, 71st Cong., 2d Sess. 325-327 (1930).

9-69.503 Congressional Purpose

The intent of Congress in enacting the criminal sanctions against escape was to make it unlawful for a person properly committed to the custody of the Attorney General or who is confined in a penal or correctional institution, to escape or attempt to escape said custody or confinement. It is likewise unlawful for a person to procure the escape of any person properly committed to the custody of the Attorney General or confined in any penal or correctional institution or to assist in such escape.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-69.504 Defined

Escape is a "voluntary departure" from custody which requires that the escapee have knowledge that his/her actions would result in his/her leaving physical confinement without permission. See United States v. Bailey, 444 U.S. 394 (1980); United States v. Tapio, 634 F.2d 1092 (8th Cir. 1980); United States v. Cluck, 542 F.2d 728 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 986 (1976); United States v. Nix, 501 F.2d 516 (7th Cir. 1974).

9-69.510 Elements of the Offense--Generally

There are three elements necessary to constitute the federal offense of escape; (1) an escape; (2) from the custody of the Attorney General, or confinement in an institution where the prisoner is confined by the direction of the Attorney General; (3) when such custody or confinement is pursuant to a judgment of conviction or other process issued under the laws of the United States. See United States v. Spletzer, 535 F.2d 950 (5th Cir. 1976); United States v. McCray, 468 F.2d 466 (10th Cir. 1972); United States v. Chapman, 455 F.2d 746 (5th Cir. 1972); Hardwick v. United States, 296 F.2d 24 (9th Cir. 1961).

9-69.511 Intent

As a general rule, specific intent is not an element required to be proven under the statute. United States v. Bailey, supra. See also, United States v. Tapio, supra. However, a number of cases have required a showing of specific intent pursuant to the "law of the case". See United States v. Cluck, supra; United States v. Woodring, 464 F.2d 1248 (10th Cir. 1972).

The government need not prove the existence of unlawful intent at the moment at which a prisoner or convict departs from custody. It is sufficient to sustain a conviction of escape if a person who leaves his place of confinement involuntarily or inadvertently, voluntarily forms an intent to remain at large at a later time. See United States v. Bailey, supra; United States v. Phipps, 543 F.2d 576 (5th Cir. 1976), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 110 (1977); United States v. Cluck, supra; United States v. Woodring, supra; and Chandler v. United States, 378 F.2d 906 (9th Cir. 1967).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-69.512 Attempt

In order to establish an "attempt" to escape under this section, the government must prove an intent to escape coupled with an overt act in the accomplishment thereof, United States v. McPherson, 436 F.2d 1066 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 403 U.S. 997 (1971). See also Shockley v. United States, 166 F.2d 704 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 334 U.S. 850 (1948); and Giles v. United States, 157 F.2d 588 (9th Cir. 1946), cert. denied, 331 U.S. 813 (1947).

9-69.513 Aiding and Assisting

The degree of culpability necessary to prove a violation of 18 U.S.C. §752(a), "aiding and assisting" an escape, is governed by the same principles as those under the general aiding and assisting statute, 18 U.S.C. §2. United States v. Castro, 621 F.2d 127 (5th Cir. 1980).

9-69.514 Conspiracy

Defendants may be charged with the separate offense of conspiracy to aid and assist an escape under the conspiracy statute, 18 U.S.C. §371, as well as the offense of aiding and assisting an escape under 18 U.S.C. §752(a). United States v. Bridgeman, 523 F.2d 1099 (D.C. Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 425 U.S. 961 (1976). See also United States v. Eaglin, 571 F.2d 1069 (9th Cir. 1977), cert. denied, 435 U.S. 906 (1978); United States v. Gorham, 523 F.2d 1088 (D.C. Cir. 1975); and United States v. Hobson, 519 F.2d 765 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 931 (1975).

9-69.520 Constructive Custody

Under 18 U.S.C. §751, custody need only be minimal and an escape from the "constructive custody" of the Attorney General may constitute a violation thereof. United States v. Cluck, supra.

9-69.521 Institution or Facility in Which Confined - Generally

This section is applicable to any person who escapes or attempts to escape from any institution in which he/she is confined by direction of the Attorney General. United States v. Cluck, supra.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-69.522 Legal Custody by Attorney General

The courts have held that escape from a local sheriff and the county jail where defendant was detained in custody under process issued by the United States Commissioner (now magistrate) was a violation of this section. See United States v. Stead, 528 F.2d 257 (8th Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 425 U.S. 953 (1976); Credille v. United States, 354 F.2d 652 (10th Cir. 1965).

A defendant who escaped from a federally approved prison detention center was properly charged under this section. Milhouse v. Levi, 548 F.2d 357 (D.C. Cir. 1976); United States v. Allen, 432 F.2d 939 (10th Cir. 1970). Courts have likewise held that a defendant who left a halfway house without permission, or a defendant participating in a pre-release program who willfully violated the terms of his extended confinement, committed an escape within the meaning of this section. See United States v. Tapio, supra; United States v. Jones, 569 F.2d 499 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 436 U.S. 908 (1978); United States v. Taylor, 485 F.2d 1077 (D.C. Cir. 1973); McCullough v. United States, 369 F.2d 548 (8th Cir. 1966). The escape statute does not punish an escape from state custody even though the escape took place on a federal reservation. United States v. Howard, 654 F.2d 522 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 944 (1981).

An escape may further be from a hospital in which the escapee was properly confined. See United States v. Schaffer, 664 F.2d 824 (11th Cir. 1981); United States v. Cluck, supra; United States v. Powell, 503 F.2d 195 (D.C. Cir. 1974); Frazier v. United States, 339 F.2d 745 (D.C. Cir. 1964).

An escape from incarceration pursuant to the civil contempt statute, 28 U.S.C. §1826, does not appear to constitute an offense under 18 U.S.C. §751. Where the prisoner is also serving a criminal sentence which is suspended for the term of the civil contempt confinement, the prisoner's reversionary status as a prisoner on the criminal conviction may provide a basis for an escape charge. However, no law on this issue currently exists.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-69.530 Expeditious Authorization of Magistrates Complaints and Warrants in Federal Escape Cases

9-69.531 Policy

As a result of recent decisions handed down by the United States Supreme Court, it is now clear that warrants are required to enter premises to arrest escapees from federal custody under 18 U.S.C. §751 in all cases except where consent or exigent circumstances exist. It is clear from these decisions that in some cases an arrest warrant coupled with a reasonable belief that the escapee is in the premises is sufficient for a lawful entry. As a result of these decisions, discussed more fully herein, and in order to provide federal law enforcement officers with all available legal process for the accomplishment of arrests of federal escapees, you are instructed that in all federal escape cases the issuance of a magistrate's complaint and arrest warrant should be authorized promptly upon completion of the investigation and presentation of the matter to you by the agency involved. Many local law enforcement agencies will not assist in the search for federal escapees if there is no arrest warrant for the escapee. Thus, by promptly issuing the arrest warrant, you insure the full cooperation of local law enforcement agencies in the search for and apprehension of the escapee.

The present practice in some districts (over 50 percent of U.S. Attorneys' offices) of deferring authorization of a complaint and arrest warrant until after apprehension of the escapee should be discontinued. Reevaluation of the prosecutive merit of the individual escape case in which a complaint is authorized may be made after the escapee has been apprehended. At that later time, you may determine that the case does not merit proceeding further and dismiss the complaint, or you may indict the escapee within thirty or sixty days, 18 U.S.C. §3161(b), depending on the availability of a grand jury, and proceed with the prosecution. However, by prompt authorization of the issuance of a magistrate's complaint and warrant, you will make available to the enforcement agencies legal process which will be sufficient to permit entry into private premises.

9-69.532 Case Authority

Recent decisions by the United States Supreme Court support the necessity for an arrest warrant to arrest escapees. Although, in a limited number of cases, consent or exigent circumstances may justify entries into private premises to make these arrests, in all other cases warrantless entries are prohibited. The prohibition of warrantless

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

entries in the absence of consent or exigent circumstances, long recognized by federal courts, was clearly enunciated by the United States Supreme Court in Steagald v. United States, 451 U.S. 204 (1981), and Payton v. New York, 445 U.S. 573 (1980). Thus, absent consent or exigent circumstances, "the threshold may not be reasonably crossed without a warrant."

"Exigent circumstances" justifying entries on probable cause without a warrant are narrowly drawn and strictly enforced. As a result, few entries are justified on the basis of "exigent circumstances." Following the lead of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia in Dorman v. United States, 435 F.2d 385 (D.C. Cir. 1970), numerous appellate courts have defined what constitutes exigent circumstances for probable cause to enter premises to arrest fugitives. United States v. Acevedo, 627 F.2d 68 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 1021 (1980); United States v. Prescott, 581 F.2d 1343 (9th Cir. 1978); United States v. Reed, 572 F.2d 412 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 913 (1978); United States v. Brown, 540 F.2d 1048 (10th Cir. 1976), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 1100 (1977); Salvador v. United States, 505 F.2d 1348 (8th Cir. 1974); United States v. Skye, 492 F.2d 886 (6th Cir. 1974); United States v. Davis, 461 F.2d 1026 (3d Cir. 1972); Vance v. North Carolina, 432 F.2d 984 (4th Cir. 1970). The exigent circumstances are: (1) The violent nature of the offense with which the suspect is to be charged, (2) whether the suspect is reasonably believed to be armed, (3) a "clear showing" of probable cause to believe that the suspect committed the crime, (4) "strong reason" to believe that the suspect is in the premises, (5) a likelihood that the suspect will escape if not swiftly apprehended, (6) peaceful circumstance of the entry, and (7) entry to be in the daytime. In addition, "hot pursuit" will justify a warrantless entry. United States v. Santana, 427 U.S. 38 (1976); Warden v. Hayden, 387 U.S. 294 (1947). The courts generally hold that all of these exigencies must exist to justify warrantless entry to arrest a fugitive, and in a recent case by the First Circuit Court of Appeals, the court added a further requirement stating:

While the Dorman analysis has value, it is not to be used in the way the government does, as a pass or fail checklist for determining exigency. The ultimate test is whether there is such a compelling necessity for immediate action as will not brook the delay of obtaining a warrant. United States v. Adams, 621 F.2d 41 (1st Cir. 1980).

Because the exigent circumstances exception to the warrant requirement is available in only a few cases, and because there is no certainty that consent will be given every time an entry is sought to arrest a fugitive, it is important that the investigating officers be armed with a warrant.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

In all of those cases in which officers seek to enter the escapee's own premises to arrest him/her, entry is permitted with an arrest warrant and reasonable belief that the fugitive is inside. In discussing the nature of the process necessary to justify an entry into premises to arrest a fugitive, the United States Supreme Court said in Payton v. New York, supra,

. . . It is true that an arrest warrant requirement may afford less protection than a search warrant requirement, but it will suffice to interpose the magistrate's determination of probable cause between the zealous officer and the citizen. If there is sufficient evidence of a citizen's participation in a felony to persuade a judicial officer that his arrest is justified, it is constitutionally reasonable to require him to open his door to the officer of the law. Thus, for Fourth Amendment purposes, an arrest warrant founded on probable cause implicitly carries with it the limited authority to enter a dwelling in which the suspect lives when there is reason to believe the suspect is within. 445 U.S. at 602-602.

Payton, therefore, makes clear that in those cases where the officers seek to enter the fugitive's own premises, an arrest warrant is sufficient legal process if the officer also has a reasonable belief that the suspect is inside. It is not necessary in such cases that the officer also obtain a search warrant.

When, however, entry is sought into the premises of a third party to arrest a fugitive escapee, a search warrant must be obtained. Steagald v. United States, supra.

Refusal to authorize the issuance of the arrest warrant for a federal escapee until after he/she has been apprehended denies the law enforcement agents the legal process which is recognized as sufficient for entry into the premises of the fugitive to arrest him/her. In addition, refusal to promptly issue arrest warrants for federal escapees seriously curtails the very necessary assistance of local law enforcement agencies in the search for and apprehension of federal escapees. Thus, you should authorize complaints and arrest warrants promptly upon completion of the investigation and presentation of the matter to you by the investigative agency.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

After the federal escapee has been apprehended on the arrest warrant, the U.S. Attorney may re-evaluate the case and may determine that the escape prosecution does not merit proceeding further. In such event, the complaint may be dismissed and the escapee returned to prison. If the U.S. Attorney determines that the escape prosecution should continue, he/she should obtain an indictment within thirty or sixty days pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §3161(b), depending on the availability of the grand jury in the district.

9-69.540 Venue in Furlough and "Walkaway" Cases

The "furlough" or "work release" statute, 18 U.S.C. §4082(c) and (d), provides a means of extending the limits of confinement of a federal prisoner for certain reasons consistent with the public interest and makes a failure to return to a prescribed institution or facility an escape from custody under 18 U.S.C. §751. 18 U.S.C. §4082(d) is consistent with a substantial body of case law holding that prisoners not in the actual custody of an institution can escape from the custody of the Attorney General as provided by 18 U.S.C. §751. See Murphy v. United States, 481 F.2d 57 (8th Cir. 1973) (escape from a county jail); Nace v. United States, 334 F.2d 235 (8th Cir. 1964) (failure to return to guidance center from private employment); United States v. Taylor, 485 F.2d 1077 (D.C. Cir. 1973) (failure to return to privately owned halfway house); United States v. Hollen, 393 F.2d 479 (4th Cir. 1968) (failure to return from work release program); Read v. United States, 361 F.2d 830 (10th Cir. 1966) (failure to return from speech contest at a school); and Frazier v. United States, 339 F.2d 745 (D.C. Cir. 1964) (escape from a psychiatric hospital). See also USAM 9-19.260, Legal Custody by Attorney General, supra.

The question of venue for such "furlough" or "walkaway" escape prosecutions is resolved by reliance on the well established and long standing rule that when the crime involved is failure to perform a legally required act, the place fixed for performance of the act determines the situs of the crime. See Johnston v. United States, 351 U.S. 215 (1956).

In like manner, 18 U.S.C. §4082(d) makes failure to report to the designated institution the basis for the crime. Therefore, the situs of the crime is the place where the failure to report occurred. Johnston, supra, and its progeny dictate that an inmate released to report to another institution and who fails to report as ordered must be prosecuted for that failure in the district in which he/she was to have reported. In United States v. Wray, 608 F.2d 722 (8th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 444

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

U.S. 1048 (1980), the defendant was confined by the Attorney General in the Federal Corrections Institution at Lompoc, California, and subsequently released with directions to travel by bus and report to the Community Treatment Center in Kansas City, Missouri. When the defendant failed to report, the Eighth Circuit held that venue was in the place where the prisoner failed to "return," that is, the facility to which he was to report. See also United States v. Dyson, 469 F.2d 735 (5th Cir. 1972); United States v. Clark, 468 F.2d 708 (3d Cir. 1972); United States v. Daniels, 429 F.2d 1273 (6th Cir. 1970); United States v. Scott, 424 F.2d 285 (4th Cir. 1970); Pitt v. United States, 378 F.2d 608 (8th Cir. 1967); United States v. Neill, 248 F.2d 383 (7th Cir. 1957); United States v. Turner, 244 F.2d 404 (2d Cir. 1957); and Jones v. Pescor, 169 F.2d 853 (8th Cir. 1948).

9-69.550 Prosecution of Escapes by Federal Prisoners Who Have Been Surrendered to the Temporary Custody of State Authorities Pursuant to State Court Writs of Habeas Corpus Ad Testificandum and Ad Prosequendum

In cases where federal prisoners are released to the temporary custody of a state institution and state officials on state writs of habeas corpus ad testificandum or ad prosequendum, indictments and informations for escape from such custody should be drafted to reflect that the defendant escaped from the custody of the Attorney General in a named state institution in which he/she was confined by direction of the Attorney General pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §4062(b), as discussed herein.

In the past, federal prisoners whose temporary custody was sought by state authorities on writs of habeas corpus ad testificandum and ad prosequendum were always transported to the requesting state by Deputy U.S. Marshals. Custody of these federal prisoners was not relinquished to state officials and the prisoners were housed in federally approved local jails as federal prisoners during the time they were appearing in state courts on these writs. Consequently, federal prosecutions for escapes which occurred while these federal prisoners were so held were upheld under the provision of 18 U.S.C. §751(a) which punishes escapes or attempts to escape "from any custody under or by virtue of any process issued under any law of the United States," and because actual custody of the prisoners always remained in the U.S. Marshal during this time.

The Deputy Attorney General, however, has approved the action of the United States Marshals Service (USMS) in discontinuing transportation and custody by the USMS of all federal prisoners to answer writs of habeas corpus ad prosequendum and ad testificandum for production of these federal prisoners in state courts. As a result, in most cases the transportation of federal prisoners to state courts on writs and their custody thereunder will be assumed by state officials. (The Bureau of Prisons may still refuse those transfers to state custody where the safety or parole of the inmate may be affected or where other "federal interests" may be harmed. Bureau of Prisons Memorandum No. 183-80 (5875), August 5, 1980.) This change resulted from the severe strain placed on the USMS personnel by this responsibility together with other new responsibilities undertaken by the USMS.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

This change has an impact on the manner in which federal escape prosecutions should be brought if these prisoners escape while in the custody of the state officials. There are no reported cases in which federal escape charges have been brought when a federal prisoner escapes from state custody on state-issued writs of habeas corpus ad testificandum or ad prosequendum. Existing case law regarding escapes from custody by prisoners on writs of habeas corpus ad prosequendum and ad testificandum will not be helpful because these cases involve federal process which is specifically covered in the escape statute, United States v. Bailey, 585 F.2d 1087 (D.C. Cir. 1978), rev'd on other grounds, 444 U.S. 394 (1980); United States v. Hall, 451 F.2d 347 (4th Cir. 1971); United States v. Farley, 424 F.2d 255 (4th Cir. 1970); Derengowski v. United States, 404 F.2d 778 (8th Cir. 1968), cert. denied, 394 U.S. 1024 (1969); or are cases in which federal custody was not relinquished, United States v. Viger, 530 F.2d 846 (9th Cir. 1976); United States v. Stead, 528 F.2d 257 (8th Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 425 U.S. 953 (1976). It has been necessary, therefore, to make a careful analysis of the escape statute, 18 U.S.C. §751, and related statutes to find a basis for federal prosecution in these cases.

Our analysis of the various statutory provisions relating to escape leads to the conclusion that there are, in all, six situations in which federal escape charges may be brought. Of these, two may provide a basis for escape prosecution of federal prisoners being held in state custody under writs of ad prosequendum and ad testificandum. Under 18 U.S.C. §751(a), escape prosecutions may be brought in the following situations:

A. When the escape is from the custody of the Attorney General or his authorized representative;

B. When the escape is from any institution designated by the Attorney General. This provision should be read in conjunction with 18 U.S.C. §4082(b), which authorizes the Attorney General to designate any institution or facility whether maintained by the federal government or otherwise;

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

- C. When the escape is from custody under any federal process;
- D. When the escape is from custody pursuant to a lawful arrest.

In addition, there are two other statutory provisions which provide a basis for escape prosecutions:

E. Under 18 U.S.C. §4082(c), the Attorney General may extend the limits of a place of confinement by placing a prisoner on leave or furlough not to exceed thirty days to visit a specifically designated place. The Attorney General may also permit prisoners confined in an institution to attend work-release or training programs on a daily basis. 18 U.S.C. §4082(d) makes escapes from furlough or work/training release programs prosecutable under 18 U.S.C. §751(a);

F. Under the Interstate Agreement on Detainers Act, Public Law 91-538, 18 U.S.C. Appendix, Section 2, Article V(g), any escape from temporary custody of a prisoner surrendered to a state authority pursuant to a writ ad prosequendum "may be dealt with in the same manner as an escape from the original place of imprisonment or in any other manner permitted by law."

Of these six, only the second provides a basis for federal escape prosecution in all cases where temporary custody is surrendered to states on state writs of habeas corpus ad testificandum and ad prosequendum. Thus, it is recommended that if a federal prisoner is temporarily transferred pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §4082(b) to a state institution or jail-type facility in order to respond to a state writ of habeas corpus ad testificandum or ad prosequendum, he/she may be prosecuted for his/her escape therefrom under 18 U.S.C. §751(a), which proscribes escapes from any institution designated by the Attorney General. An escape from a state facility which has been designated as a place of confinement for a federal prisoner is an escape from the custody of the Attorney General. United States v. Hobson, 519 F.2d 765, 770 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 931 (1975).

The Bureau of Prisons will process these transfers to temporary state custody on state writs as transfers pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §4082(b). Thus, if the warden of the federal institution, upon receipt of a state writ, determines pursuant to Bureau of Prisons Operations Memorandum No. 183-80 (5875), dated August 5, 1980, or pursuant to the requirements of the Interstate Agreement on Detainers, that the prisoner should be released to state custody, then the warden will take the same administrative steps to effect the transfer to the state facility as is taken to transfer any prisoner to any other institution. The Bureau of Prisons' records will reflect that the prisoner was temporarily transferred pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §4082(b) to a named state or local facility, and to the temporary custody of a named state official for transportation, until the writ is discharged and thereafter to be returned to the federal institution. The time spent in custody of the state institution counts toward the satisfaction of the federal sentence. Such a transfer pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §4082(b) will permit an escape prosecution under 18 U.S.C. §751, and venue for the prosecution will be in the federal district in which the local facility is located.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Escape indictments or informations in these cases should, therefore, be drafted to reflect that the defendant escaped or attempted to escape from the custody of the Attorney General in a named state institution or facility in which he was confined by direction of the Attorney General pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §4082(b). If the federal prisoner escapes from the designated local officer while being transported to court or otherwise, the escape is still from the custody of the Attorney General. In United States v. Hobson, supra, a federal prisoner serving federal time in a state institution escaped from state guards while he was being transported to state court. The Court of Appeals sustained the harboring conviction of Hobson, stating that the federal prisoner had escaped from the custody of the Attorney General. See also Frazier v. United States, supra, where it was held that escape from a mental hospital constituted escape from the custody of the Attorney General; Tucker v. United States, 251 F.2d 794 (9th Cir. 1958), where it was held that escape by a federal prisoner from a county hospital was an escape from the custody of the Attorney General where U.S. Marshals delivered the defendant to the county sheriff to give testimony.

In those cases in which a federal prisoner is sought on a state court writ of habeas corpus ad prosequendum under the provisions of the Interstate Agreement on Detainers, there will be an additional basis for federal escape prosecution. Article V(g) of the Agreement states that escapes "may be dealt with in the same manner as an escape from the original place of confinement or in any other manner permitted by law." This language, though somewhat ambiguous, can also be used to support federal escape prosecutions where the prisoner was obtained by the state in accordance with the Interstate Agreement on Detainers. One court of appeals has, in dicta, assumed that this language confers federal escape jurisdiction. United States v. Bailey, supra, at 1104. However, not all escapes by federal prisoners from state custody while on state writs may be justified on this ground. The Agreement does not cover any writs of habeas corpus ad testificandum, and some writs ad prosequendum will not be covered because a number of states are not parties to the Agreement.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Because Article V(g) will be available in only some of these cases, and because it has not yet been sufficiently judicially interpreted, it is recommended that in all of these escape cases, the prosecution proceed on the additional theory that the escape was from custody of the Attorney General as a result of a transfer pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §4082(b), as indicated supra.

9-69.560 Defenses - Generally

The subsequent dismissal of an indictment charging a defendant with an offense for which he/she had been arrested and imprisoned was no defense to a prosecution for escape. United States v. Cluck, supra. See also United States v. Allen, 432 F.2d 939 (10th Cir. 1970).

9-69.561 Double Jeopardy

The fact that a defendant has been administratively punished in prison for his/her attempted escape does not preclude, on double jeopardy grounds, a conviction for attempted escape, United States v. Boomer, 571 F.2d 543 (10th Cir.), cert. denied, 436 U.S. 911 (1978). See also United States v. Stead, supra; and United States v. Cluck, supra.

9-69.562 Duress

The courts have generally been unwilling to recognize duress as a defense to escape except in the most egregious of situations. As a general rule, one who escapes from a penal institution is not excused even though faced with an immediate threat of death or serious bodily harm if there is a reasonable and viable alternative to the act of escaping. See United States v. Bryan, 591 F.2d 1161 (5th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 1071 (1980); United States v. Boomer, supra; United States v. Michelson, 559 F.2d 567 (9th Cir. 1977); and United States v. Chapman, 455 F.2d 746 (5th Cir. 1972).

An indispensable element of such a defense is evidence of a bona fide effort to surrender or return to custody as soon as the claimed duress or necessity has lost its coercive force. United States v. Bailey, supra; United States v. Garza, 664 F.2d 135 (7th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 993 (1982); United States v. Trapnell, 638 F.2d 1016 (7th Cir. 1980).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-69.563 Intoxication

At least one court has been willing to recognize intoxication as a defense where the convict was so intoxicated that the convict was unable to form an intent to escape. United States v. Nix, 501 F.2d 516 (7th Cir. 1974).

9-69.564 Insanity

A defendant's acquittal by reason of insanity was not a "conviction" within 18 U.S.C. §751(a); and, therefore, escape from a mental hospital did not constitute an offense punishable thereunder. United States v. Wood, 628 F.2d 554 (D.C. Cir. 1980). See also United States v. Powell, 503 F.2d 195 (D.C. Cir. 1974). Such an escape from civil commitment may be punished, however, under 28 U.S.C. §1826(c). See USAM 9-69.600 et seq.

9-69.565 Lack of Mental Capacity

A defendant bears a heavy burden of proof to establish lack of mental capacity as a defense for escape. See United States v. Cluck, supra; United States v. Joiner, 496 F.2d 1314 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 1002 (1974); Frazier v. United States, supra; and Mills v. United States, 193 F.2d 174 (5th Cir. 1951), cert. denied, 343 U.S. 969 (1952).

9-69.566 Investigative Responsibility

It is the Department's policy that the U.S. Marshals Service shall have investigative jurisdiction over the federal escape statute. In the event that a federal escapee becomes a subject of an ongoing FBI substantive investigation, the FBI will seek the fugitive's apprehension in coordination with the U.S. Marshals Service.

9-69.600 ESCAPE FROM CUSTODY RESULTING FROM CIVIL COMMITMENT (28 U.S.C. §1826(c))

9-69.601 Introduction

Section 1826(c) of Title 28, United States Code, deals with the criminal sanctions for escape or attempted escape from lawful custody or

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

confinement following civil commitment as a recalcitrant witness or as a dangerous person who has been acquitted by reason of insanity. These sanctions are also made applicable to persons aiding or assisting the escape or attempt to escape.

9-69.602 Legislative History

The prohibition against escape from custody resulting from civil commitment and the aiding, abetting and assisting of such an escape was initially incorporated as Title X, Part L of the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984. S. Rep. No. 98-225, 98th Cong., Sess. 330-31 (1984).

9-69.603 Congressional Intent

Under prior law, a judge could order any person who, without just cause, refused to testify before a federal court or grand jury to be confined up to the life of the proceeding or term of the grand jury. Persons who escaped or attempted to escape from such confinement could not be prosecuted since the general federal escape statute, 18 U.S.C. §751, is limited to escapes from custody resulting from arrest or conviction. This section was intended to close the gap left by 18 U.S.C. §751, thus allowing criminal sanctions to be imposed for an escape from custody ordered for refusing to testify.

In addition, prior to the Comprehensive Crime Control Act, there was no provision for detention of a defendant upon a verdict of not guilty by reason of insanity. Under the Act, if the court makes a finding that due to mental disease or defect the person's release would pose a danger to another person or the community, the court must commit the person to the custody of the Attorney General. This section was intended to allow criminal sanctions to be imposed against persons who escape or attempt to escape from such confinement either before or after the hearing to determine present mental illness and dangerousness.

9-69.610 Elements of the Offense--Generally

There are three elements necessary to constitute a violation of 28 U.S.C. §1826(c): (1) an escape or attempted escape or the aiding of an escape or attempted escape; (2) from custody; (3) when such custody is pursuant to civil commitment either under 28 U.S.C. §1826 or 18 U.S.C. §4243.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-69.611 Intent

28 U.S.C. §1826(c) is drafted to parallel the provisions of 18 U.S.C. §751. Congress intended that the general scienter elements of 18 U.S.C. §751 also apply here. See USAM 9-69.511, supra.

9-69.612 Custody

A person is still in the custody of a facility or place to which he/she is confined even if only receiving treatment on an outpatient basis. See S. Rep. No. 98-225, supra at 331. In addition, as with the scienter elements, Congress intends that the cases under 18 U.S.C. §751 which hold that custody may be minimal, or even merely constructive, apply also to 28 U.S.C. §1826(c). See USAM 9-69.520, supra.

9-69.613 Commitment

The commitment must be pursuant to either the recalcitrant witness provisions of 28 U.S.C. §1826 or pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §4243. A person is subject to this escape provision from the moment the verdict of not guilty by reason of insanity is announced until that person is released after a hearing to determine present mental illness and dangerousness, taken into state custody, or unconditionally released by federal authorities.

9-69.620 Defenses--Generally

Since 28 U.S.C. §1826(c) was drafted parallel to 18 U.S.C. §§751 to incorporate the general scienter elements of 18 U.S.C. §751, the intent defenses of duress, intoxication, and lack of mental capacity are probably equally applicable here. See USAM 9-69.560, supra.

9-69.630 Investigative Responsibility

It is the Department's policy that the U.S. Marshals Service shall have investigative jurisdiction over the federal escape statutes. In the event a federal escape becomes the subject of an on-going FBI substantive investigation, the FBI will seek the fugitive's apprehension in coordination with the U.S. Marshals Service. See USAM 9-69.566, supra.

9-70.100 TWENTY-EIGHT HOUR LAW

The Office of the Solicitor of the Department of Agriculture will refer directly to the appropriate U.S. Attorneys cases involving violations of the Twenty-Eight Hour Law (45 U.S.C. §71, et seq.), except those which involve novel questions of law or policy. The referral will include a copy of each report made by Agriculture's inspectors relating to the case, one copy of each letter forwarded to and received from the carrier, and an original and two copies of a proposed form of complaint. In addition, the transmittal letter will recommend the amount of the penalty which Agriculture believes should be exacted. U.S. Attorneys may assume that the Criminal Division approves the amount recommended unless advised to the contrary. Cases involving novel questions of law or policy will be submitted to the General Litigation and Legal Advice Section.

9-70.110 Elements of an Offense

In construing the Twenty-Eight Hour Law, the courts have held that the word "knowingly" means simply "with knowledge of the facts," and that a carrier knowingly violates the statute when, with knowledge of how long animals have been confined without rest, feed, and water, it prolongs the confinement beyond the statutory limit. See St. Louis-S.F.R. Co. v. United States, 169 Fed. 69 (8th Cir. 1909); St. Joseph S.Y. Co. v. United States, 187 Fed. 105 (8th Cir. 1913); United States v. Illinois Central R. Co., 303 U.S. 239 (1938). They have construed the word "wilfully" under the Act to mean "intentionally," "purposely," or "voluntarily." See also United States v. Union Pacific R. Co., 169 Fed. 65 (8th Cir. 1909); United States v. New York C. and H.R.R. Co., 165 Fed. 833 (1st Cir. 1908); United States v. Atchison T. & S.F.R. Co., 166 Fed. 160 (7th Cir. 1908). A knowing confinement becomes wilful also, when it was due to a cause which could have been anticipated or avoided by the exercise of due diligence and foresight. See Boston & M.R.R. v. United States, 117 F.2d 428 (1st Cir. 1941); United States v. Atlantic C.L.R. Co., 173 Fed. 764 (4th Cir. 1909). The burden of proof that the overconfinement was not due to such a cause is upon the carrier. See Boston & M.R.R. v. United States, supra; New York & H.R.R. Co. v. United States, supra; United States v. Atchison T. & S.F.R. Co., supra; Chicago & N.W.R. Co. v. United States, 246 U.S. 512 (1918).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

Where animals are loaded on a train at different times, a separate penalty accrues when the statutory period for the animals first loaded expires, and separate penalties accrue as the statutory period expires with respect to the animals loaded at later periods. See Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railways Company v. United States, 220 U.S. 94 (1911).

9-70.120 Judgment

Every judgment in favor of the government must be in an amount not less than the statutory minimum penalty of $100 per violation, in addition to costs to which the government is entitled.
