Assistant Attorney General
Criminal Division

RE: Authorization for Negotiated Concessions in Organized Crime Cases

NOTE: 1. This is issued pursuant to USAM 1-1.550.
2. Distribute to Holders of Title 9.
3. Insert at end of USAM Title 9.

AFFECTS: USAM 9-1.177

PURPOSE: Bluesheet USAM 9-1.177 changes the prior approval requirement to cover negotiations which take place prior to an indictment in Organized Crime Cases.

The following material should be substituted for the third paragraph in USAM 9-1.177.

9-1.177 Authorization to Proceed With Prosecutions

Either before or after initiation of a prosecution, any reduction or forbearance of charges or any other negotiated concessions, specifically including agreements under Rule 11, Federal Rules of Procedure, and any agreements involving sentencing, custody, parole recommendations or any other consideration to a defendant in an organized crime case must be approved by the Assistant Attorney General, Criminal Division.
This power may be exercised by the Chief of the Organized Crime and Racketeering Section and by Deputy Chiefs of that Section in routine cases. In cases which factually are of major significance, which present substantial policy considerations, or which are foreseeably controversial, the Chief of the Organized Crime and Racketeering Section shall refer proposed dispositions to the Assistant Attorney General or his/her Deputy.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-1.000 THE CRIMINAL DIVISION

The United States Department of Justice, from its inception in 1870 until the post-World War I period, was organized into Offices of Assistant Attorneys General on a non-specialized basis. Responsibility for supervising the enforcement of federal criminal laws was entrusted to the several Assistant Attorneys General on an ad hoc basis. An examination of the Department's Register for the years 1915, 1917, and 1918 reveals that the names of the attorneys handling criminal matters were listed under the Offices of four Assistant Attorneys General. This procedure continued until the Criminal Division, referred to as early as 1919, was formally established in June, 1933.

The jurisdiction of the Criminal Division has been altered since 1933 by the establishment or dissolution of other Divisions or by transfers of jurisdiction between divisions. Tax matters were within the jurisdiction of the Criminal Division until the Tax Division was created in December, 1933. Enforcement of civil rights statutes was transferred from the Criminal Division to the Civil Rights Division in December, 1957. The internal security functions of the Criminal Division were removed to the Internal Security Division in July, 1954, but were returned to the Criminal Division in March, 1973.

Today the Criminal Division supervises the enforcement of all federal criminal laws except those that are specifically assigned to other divisions. However, the scope of the Criminal Division's jurisdiction is not limited to criminal matters but extends to civil matters as well. The statutes currently administered by the Criminal Division are set forth at USAM 9-1.200 et seq. A summary of civil responsibilities within the Division may be located at USAM 9-1.400 et seq.

The Criminal Division will provide assistance to a U.S. Attorney in any matter within the jurisdiction of the Division. The Division will also attempt to assist a U.S. Attorney in any matter related to the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure (see USAM 9-1.231), or Speedy Trial problems (see USAM 9-1.200). Finally, the Division will serve as a conduit for a U.S. Attorney to a higher authority within or without the Department on matters within its jurisdiction.

9-1.100 ORGANIZATION

The Criminal Division is presently organized into seven Sections and seven Offices (see USAM 9-1.103) which specialize in the enforcement of particular statutes (see USAM 9-1.200 et seq.), the resolution of particular problems, or the management of particular projects. The organizational structure is altered to respond to changing needs and priorities. An organizational chart is located at USAM 9-1.101.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

The Division is headed by an Assistant Attorney General. See USAM 9-1.110. Each Section is headed by a Section Chief, and each Office is headed by an Office Director. See USAM 9-1.130. The Division is staffed by attorneys, and the Associate Attorney General exercises the power and authority vested in the Attorney General to take final action in matters pertaining to their employment, separation, and general administration. (Order No. 998-83).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-1.103 Description of Sections and Offices

A. Appellate Section

The function of the Appellate Section is to secure judicial decisions favorable to the government in cases on review in the courts of appeals and the Supreme Court. The primary duties of the Section attorneys are to:

1. Prepare draft briefs, certiorari petitions and jurisdictional statements for the Solicitor General for filing in the Supreme Court;
2. Review adverse decisions in the district courts and courts of appeals and recommend to the Solicitor General whether further review is warranted;
3. Prepare briefs and argue cases in the courts of appeals;
4. Assist the U.S. Attorneys and other sections and offices in the Criminal Division in preparing briefs in the courts of appeals;
5. Give advice on legal questions to the Assistant Attorney General, to other sections and offices in the Criminal Division, and to the U.S. Attorneys;
6. Give advice on Speedy Trial Act problems; and
7. Give advice on issues generally within the jurisdiction of the Criminal Division to other components of the Department of Justice.

B. Fraud Section

The Fraud Section is charged with leading the federal law enforcement effort against fraud and white collar crime. It fashions and implements white collar crime policy and provides support to the Criminal Division, the Department, and other federal agencies on white collar crime issues. It supports the U.S. Attorneys with legal and investigative guidance, and, when required, because of local lack of expertise or resources, provides staffing for U.S. Attorney-originated criminal fraud cases. It initiates, staffs, and conducts grand jury investigations and trials involving types of criminal activity which require centralized treatment because of the complexity of the scheme, the multi-district nature of the criminal activity, the sensitivity of the issues, or the necessity of demonstrating with model prosecutions the viability of a particular statute, theory, or technique. The Section also provides training to and sharing of information with other members of the federal, state, and local law enforcement community in order to enhance the federal government's overall effort to combat white collar crime.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

Organizationally, the work of the Section is divided by substantive subject matter into four major areas:

1. Government Program and Procurement Fraud--Focused exclusively on fraud, waste, and abuse in connection with federal government programs and contracts;
2. Consumer and Institutional Fraud--Directed at fraud committed against individuals, businesses, and private institutions;
3. Government Regulatory Fraud--Focused on criminal cases arising within the jurisdiction of various federal regulatory agencies, e.g., the Securities and Exchange Commission, Federal Trade Commission, and Department of Energy; and
4. Multinational Fraud--Focused on cases involving significant overseas and off-shore connections.

On policy and case-related matters, the Section works closely with the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the Offices of the Inspectors General in federal departments and agencies and with other major federal investigative agencies having jurisdiction over fraud-related matters. The Section actively supports efforts to identify emerging or recurring problems and to devise new practices and procedures to reduce the incidence of white collar crimes. The Section's management participates in numerous Department and interagency groups affecting law enforcement policy and operations. These groups include but are not limited to: the Department's Undercover Review Committee, the Department's Economic Crime Council, the Department's Executive Working Group of federal, state, and local prosecutors, the Criminal Division's Law Enforcement Coordinating Committee Review Panel, the President's Council on Integrity and Efficiency, and a large number of interagency task forces on government fraud, waste, and abuse. In addition, the Section's management team and the senior prosecution staff are actively involved in providing training and in arranging opportunities for program attorneys to give and receive training. The Section also assists the Criminal Division's Office of Legislation in evaluating pending legislation and making appropriate comment on adverse court opinions.

C. General Litigation and Legal Advice Section

The General Litigation and Legal Advice Section has broad criminal jurisdiction which encompasses approximately 75% of all federal criminal statutes. It also has a variety of civil responsibilities. The Section's jurisdiction is divisible into five major areas:

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

1. Crimes Against Government Operations--This includes the following statutory areas: attacks on federal officials (including the President, Vice President, Members of Congress, Cabinet Officers, Supreme Court justices, designated federal agency personnel, and candidates for federal office), attacks on foreign officials and official guests of the United States, violations of the Selective Service Act, theft or destruction of government property, counterfeiting, postal depredations, obstruction of justice, perjury, prison offenses, false personation, escape, and customs and immigration offenses;

2. Crimes Against the Public--This includes the following statutory areas: kidnapping, extortion, bank robbery, riot, explosives and weapons violations, fugitive felons, arson, copyright, obscenity, illegal electronic surveillance, false identification, motor vehicle theft, interstate transportation of stolen property, aircraft piracy, and offenses on federal or Indian reservations or the high seas;

3. Regulatory Enforcement--This area relates to violations of statutes and regulations which pertain to the protection of health, safety, and welfare in mining and other occupations, nuclear materials handling, marketing of agricultural products, and disposition of hazardous and toxic wastes;

4. Special Civil Matters--This area includes the defense of civil actions to obtain information on or to interfere with criminal justice and national security operations;

5. Prison/Parole Matters--This area includes the defense of suits challenging actions by or procedures of the Bureau of Prisons or the United States Parole Commission. It also encompasses the administering of federal statutes pertaining to juveniles, youth offenders, mental competence, sentencing, prisoner transfer treaties, and detainees.

The Section's functions are equally broad as indicated by the following summary of discrete responsibilities:

a. It serves as an enforcement section in certain key areas where special requirements dictate centralization. In these areas, the Section is directly involved in case development and litigation;

b. The Section performs a general litigation function, handling litigation under any of its vast range of statutes when appropriate due to recusal, lack of resources, or pertinent expertise in a particular U.S. Attorney's office, etc.; and

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

C. It provides legal advice on any of its statutes, or issues emanating from action taken thereunder, to U.S. Attorneys' offices as well as to investigative and client agencies.

Further, attorneys in the Section provide coordination of prosecutions on both policy and operational levels with other divisions, departments, and agencies, respond to Congressional and private inquiries, and initiate or review recommendations for proposed legislation relating to the assigned areas of statutory responsibility. They also advise and assist U.S. Attorneys and other federal attorneys on Departmental policy matters and make prosecutive determinations.

D. Internal Security Section

The Internal Security Section handles matters relating to the Nation's internal security, including the prosecution of cases involving treason, espionage, sedition, sabotage, and violations of the Neutrality, Trading With the Enemy, Export Administration, Arms Export Control, and Atomic Energy Acts. The Section also administers and enforces the following statutes:

1. The Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938, as amended (22 U.S.C. §611 et seq.);
2. Registration of certain persons trained in foreign espionage systems (see 50 U.S.C. §851);
3. The Voorhis Act (see 18 U.S.C. §2386);
4. The Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act (see 2 U.S.C. §261);
5. Employment of persons to appear before Congress or governmental agency (see 46 U.S.C. §1225); and
6. Prohibition against government employees acting as agents of foreign principals (see 18 U.S.C. §219); and prohibition against political contributions by a foreign national (see 2 U.S.C. §441(e)).

The Section also provides the Executive Secretary and staff of the Interdepartmental Committee on Internal Security (ICIS).

Organizationally, the work of the Internal Security Section is divided into three units, the Statutory Unit, the Export Control Unit, and the Registration Unit. Statutory Unit attorneys supervise the investigation and prosecution of violations involving treason, sabotage, espionage, and neutrality statutes. Export Control Unit attorneys supervise the investigation and prosecution of violations of the Arms Export Control Act (see 22 U.S.C. §2778), the Export Administration Act (See 50 U.S.C. Appellate §2401 et seq.), and other statutes that contain export control provisions. Both units work closely with the U.S. Attorneys in all such cases. Section attorneys involved in these and other internal security cases may be called upon to take part directly in grand jury, trial, or appellate work. Criminal violations and the civil aspects of the registration statutes are handled by personnel of the Registration Unit, who also conduct inspections and field conferences designed to facilitate the effective enforcement of the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938, as amended.

E. Narcotic and Dangerous Drug Section

The Narcotic and Dangerous Drug Section supervises cases and matters relating to the Controlled Substance Act (21 U.S.C. §801 et seq.), the Controlled Substance Import and Export Act (21 U.S.C. §951 et seq.), and certain other statutes such as the Narcotic Addict Rehabilitation Act of 1966. The Section's mission can generally be described as supervision of litigation, both criminal and civil, arising under federal laws relating to narcotics and controlled substances.

The Section primarily services the U.S. Attorneys and the Drug Enforcement Administration, and also maintains a close working relationship with the United States Customs Service, United States Coast Guard, Federal Bureau of Investigation, Internal Revenue Service, Immigration and Naturalization Service, and the Departments of State and Treasury.

The Section also supervises the implementation of Department policies in the area of drug prosecution.

In addition to maintaining a litigation support capability to assist U.S. Attorneys' offices, the Section assumes direct litigation responsibilities in major multi-district and international conspiracy cases, reviews electronic surveillance requests, secures witnesses from foreign jurisdictions, and publishes a monthly Narcotic Newsletter. It also maintains task force operations in the Southern District of Florida, San Juan, Puerto Rico, and the Northern District of Illinois to conduct grand jury investigations and prosecute money launderers facilitating major drug trafficking organizations.

The Section reviews all adverse decisions to the government in the drug area and makes recommendations on whether the cases should be reviewed by higher courts. The Section also reviews proposed legislation on drug abuse and makes recommendations as to its effectiveness and prepares proposals for new legislation in areas appropriate to effective drug law enforcement.

F. Organized Crime and Racketeering Section

The Organized Crime and Racketeering Section supervises the Department's prosecutive efforts against racketeers and syndicated criminal operations, and approves all indictments under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations statutes. The Section also supervises all violations involving organized crime figures. In addition, the Section has supervisory responsibility for enforcement of the extortionate credit transaction provisions of the Consumers Credit Protection Act of 1968, the Gambling Devices Act of 1962, and laws pertaining to gambling, extortion, infiltration of legitimate business, prostitution, and liquor and cigarette violations.

Most of the attorneys in the Section are assigned to one of the Organized Crime Strike Forces or Field Offices that are maintained in major metropolitan areas throughout the country. Since 1967, when it was first initiated, the Strike Force concept has been used to bring together the efforts of various federal investigative agencies under the legal guidance of U.S. Attorneys and Section attorneys. The result is a team approach to the challenge of organized crime in a particular area. (See USAM 9-1.170, infra.)

The Section supervises and directly participates in the enforcement of federal criminal statutes relating to employee-employer relationships and the internal operations of labor unions, including statutes prohibiting interference with interstate commerce by extortion, embezzlement of union assets, improper payments by employers to union officials, embezzlement of the assets of pension and welfare funds, and the payment of kickbacks to influence the acts of trustees or agents of pension or welfare funds. The Section also has jurisdiction of offenses involving the use of explosives in connection with labor disputes and violations of the reporting requirements of the Welfare and Pension Plans Disclosure Act and the Labor Management Reporting and Disclosure Act. Labor activities are coordinated by the Labor Management Unit of the Strike Force in Washington, D.C.

Section attorneys work closely with the Federal Bureau of Investigation; Drug Enforcement Administration; Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, and Firearms; United States Secret Service; United States Customs Service; Internal Revenue Service; the Strike Force Unit of the U.S. Attorney's office in the Southern District of New York; and with state and local law enforcement officers. The attorneys prepare for and conduct grand jury proceedings, give continuing legal advice to agents working organized crime cases, prepare for and conduct Title III electronic surveillance, and litigate cases resulting from these activities. The Section maintains close liaison with both the Bureau of Prisons and the United States Parole Commission in matters concerning organized crime inmates.

G. Public Integrity Section

The Public Integrity Section is responsible for overseeing the investigation and prosecution of federal crimes involving abuse of the public trust by elected or appointed public officials at all levels of government and election crimes. Included within the Section are two formally established units, the Election Crimes Branch and the Conflicts of Interest Crimes Branch. The Section prosecutes selected cases against federal, state, and local officials and is available as a source of advice and expertise to law enforcement officials and prosecutors at all levels of government. It provides the resources both of a team of litigators trained to prosecute cases under the criminal statutes that govern the conduct of public officials, and of a center for planning, coordination, and implementation of nationwide programs focused against public corruption.

The Section is responsible for reviewing and processing all matters arising under the Special Prosecutor's Act, see 28 U.S.C. §591 et seq. Because of the sensitivity of many of these cases and the extremely strict time limitations built into the legislation, the Section should be notified immediately should an allegation against an individual covered by the Act be received.

Most of the Section's resources are devoted to operational responsibility for litigation and providing support, advice, and assistance to the U.S. Attorneys. The Section may be called upon for assistance in the following situations:

1. Recusals--Most government corruption cases are both sensitive and of intense public interest. It is particularly important that the appearance of fairness and impartiality always be present in the conduct of such investigations. In situations where the local U.S. Attorney has had a significant business, social, political, or other relationship with any subject or principal witness in a corruption case, it is generally inappropriate for that U.S. Attorney to conduct the investigation and prosecution. Where the conflict is substantial, such cases are frequently transferred to the Public Integrity Section for prosecution or direct supervision. For example, all cases involving federal judges pose obvious conflict of interest problems for the U.S. Attorney, and should be referred to the Public Integrity Section for investigation;

2. Provision of Manpower and Expertise--In situations where the available manpower or expertise in a U.S. Attorney's office is insufficient to undertake a significant corruption case, the Public Integrity Section often provides attorneys to serve as either lead counsel or co-counsel. Section attorneys are also available to provide advice on substantive questions, investigatory methods, indictment drafting, and motions;

3. Sensitive or Multi-District Cases--In addition to formal recusals and cases where manpower is requested or needed, the Public Integrity Section will become involved in sensitive matters and in matters which extend over district lines. Sensitive cases would include those which, because of their importance, require close coordination with high Departmental officials, require a significant amount of coordination with other federal agencies in Washington, D.C., involve classified materials, or are so politically controversial on a local level that they are more appropriately handled from Washington, D.C. The Section also is involved when an investigation crosses district lines. In such cases, the Public Integrity Section can provide coordination among various U.S. Attorneys' offices, or, where appropriate, can assume operational responsibility for the entire investigation; and

4. Authorization for Election and Corruption Cases Under the Hobbs Act—Statutory schemes governing the conduct of public officials and candidates for public office are often complex and sometimes very broad. In order to achieve some degree of national control and uniformity, the Section reviews investigations and indictments in such cases as directed by the Assistant Attorney General. At present, authorization from the Section is required in all election-related cases and in corruption cases brought under the Hobbs Act.

H. Office of Administration

The mission of the Office of Administration is to provide effective and efficient administrative and management support services to the Division's senior officials, sections, offices, and field offices. Coordinated through the Office of the Director, the following operational units perform the delivery of those services: Personnel Unit; Fiscal Unit; Mail, File and Records Service Unit; Procurement, Security, Safety and Space Unit; and the Statistical Unit.

This office provides the following services, among others:

1. Develops administrative policies;
2. Formulates annual and supplemental appropriation budget estimates and authorization requests;
3. Establishes and executes fiscal operating plans;

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

4. Manages and controls funds;
5. Administers programs regarding federal records, files, and correspondence;
6. Coordinates personnel actions;
7. Operates ADP systems for caseload/resource management and for direct support to investigations and litigation;
8. Maintains and procures supplies and equipment;
9. Processes requests for office space, renovations, modifications, repairs, and telephones;
10. Administers travel support services including authorizations, funds obligation, advances, vouchers, reimbursements, and relocations;
11. Administers programs for parking permits, credentials, and identification cards;
12. Administers duplicating services, and printing and distributing of handbooks and manuals;
13. Administers security programs for documents, files, work space, and personnel;
14. Inspects workspace for OSHA compliance;
15. Approves and processes requests for litigation support services such as court reporters, interpreters, physician witnesses, etc.; and
16. Approves and implements word processing services.

The variety of administrative support services handled by this office requires close liaison with all of the Division's components, the Justice Management Division, the General Services Administration, and contractor personnel associated with the Criminal Division.

I. Asset Forfeiture Office

The Asset Forfeiture Office is a focal point of the Department's efforts to make more effective use of civil and criminal forfeiture proceedings to deprive criminals of the proceeds of their crimes.

The office participates directly in major forfeiture cases, either alone or with attorneys from a U.S. Attorney's office or from another section or office of the Criminal Division.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

The office provides legal advice and training to Department attorneys and law enforcement agents on such questions as how to determine when to pursue a forfeiture case, how to identify and locate forfeitable property, how to protect the government's interest in forfeitable property pending completion of forfeiture proceedings, what litigation strategy might be most effective, and what steps should be taken to improve management of seized property and disposition of forfeited property. These questions are handled through responses to individual legal questions, preparation of manuals concerning forfeiture issues, and dissemination of model briefs and pleadings and of information concerning important forfeiture decisions and effective innovative case strategies.

The office is also responsible for deciding petitions for remission or litigation of judicial forfeitures pursuant to Part 9 of Title 28, Code of Federal Regulations.

The office coordinates the collection of criminal fines and bond forfeiture judgments by the U.S. Attorneys' offices, including assisting in the location of judgment debtors for such fines and forfeitures. See USAM 9-120.000, 9-121.000, and 9-122.000.

Finally, the U.S. Attorneys are required to consult with the office before accepting an offer in compromise in a forfeiture case in which the difference between the amount of the offer and the amount of the original claim is between $60,000 and $750,000 and before closing or dismissing a forfeiture case in which the amount of the original claim is between $60,000 and $750,000.

J. Office of Enforcement Operations

The Office of Enforcement Operations oversees, within the constraints of law and Departmental policy, the effective use of the most sophisticated investigative tools at the Department's disposal - including electronic surveillance, the witness immunity statute, hypnosis in the interrogation of federal witnesses, and witness relocation. The office continuously monitors each of these, and serves as liaison to investigative agencies, prosecutors, the United States Marshals Service, the Bureau of Prisons, and others involved in the implementation of these investigative tools. It also provides various components of the Criminal Division with a wide range of services related to litigative assistance and prosecutive support which entails close liaison with all of the federal investigative agencies, the U.S. Attorneys' offices, the Executive Office for U.S. Attorneys and the administrative staff of the Division and the Department.

The duties and responsibilities of the Office are as follows:

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

1. Supervises all aspects of the Witness Security Program for the Criminal Division and responds to Congressional, White House, press, and public inquiries regarding the Witness Security Program. See USAM 9-21.000;

2. Receives and adjudicates all applications for electronic surveillance under Chapter 119 of Title 18 of the United States Code, and oversees all electronic and consensual monitoring efforts being pursued within the federal justice system and the loan of Federal Bureau of Investigation electronic surveillance equipment, and prepares special analyses and evaluation reports relating to such activities. See USAM 9-7.000;

3. Receives and approves requests for authorization to use hypnosis. See USAM 9-4.000;

4. Reviews and processes all requests for authorization to compel testimony (immunities) in federal prosecutions and Congressional inquiries or to prosecute formerly immunized witnesses, and makes the final recommendations to the Assistant Attorney General on granting or denying such requests. See USAM 1-11.000;

5. Reviews and approves requests to resubpoena contumacious witnesses before a successive grand jury. See USAM 9-11.255;

6. Reviews and processes certain requests made to the Internal Revenue Service for access to tax returns or taxpayer return information pursuant to 26 U.S.C. §6103(i), and makes final recommendations to the Assistant Attorney General on whether such requests to the Internal Revenue Service should be made, or where required, whether court orders should be authorized. See USAM 9-4-900;

7. Receives and processes all requests to interrogate, arrest, indict, or subpoena members of the news media. See USAM 9-2.164 and USAM 1-5.410;

8. Responds to requests made pursuant to 28 C.F.R. §16.21 for authorization of Departmental personnel to testify at federal, state, and local civil and criminal proceedings, and makes final recommendations, where appropriate, to the Assistant Attorney General on granting or denying such requests. See USAM 1-7.000;

9. Reviews and processes requests for searches for documentary materials held by third parties, pursuant to 28 C.F.R. §59.1 et seq. See USAM 1-15.000;

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

10. Reviews and processes requests for authorization to close judicial proceedings to members of the press and public pursuant to 28 C.F.R. §50.9. See USAM 1-5.600;

11. Receives, processes, and adjudicates all requests received from the public for access to Criminal Division records pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act and the Privacy Act, and other matters relating to these Acts within the Criminal Division. See USAM 1-5.000;

12. Processes requests for, and conducts, all inquiries made to the several federal investigative agencies on the occurrence of electronic surveillance of specific defendants and their attorneys pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §3504. See USAM 9-7.000;

13. Processes requests from U.S. Attorneys for access to information filed with the Secretary of the Treasury under the Currency and Foreign Transactions Act, pursuant to 31 U.S.C. §1061. See USAM 9-79.260;

14. Compiles, indexes, and maintains the Criminal Division Brief/Memo Bank containing Division legal briefs and memoranda and other related materials that involve policy matters or extensive legal research, making these resources available to Division and other Department attorneys, as well as U.S. Attorneys, for research purposes. See USAM 9-1.501;

15. Prepares a complete legislative history of all legislation enacted by Congress that affects the responsibilities of the Criminal Division, maintains the existing legislative history library, and makes these resources available to Division and Department attorneys for research purposes. See USAM 9-1.503;

16. Responds to all correspondence submitted on general criminal matters, whether sent by individual citizens to the Department or referred to the Department by the White House or by members of Congress;

17. Coordinates, in conjunction with other Division components, the preparation of the Criminal Division's portion of the United States Attorneys' Manual, including periodic revisions and updates;

18. Coordinates the Criminal Division's contributions to the United States Attorneys' Bulletin and prepares notes on significant cases dealing with the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure and Evidence for publication therein;

19. Prepares grand jury authorization letters authorizing Division attorneys to conduct and attend grand jury sessions. See USAM 9-1.171;

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

20. Prepares letters authorizing attorneys outside of the Department to assist Department attorneys in the conduct of grand jury or trial proceedings as special attorneys. See USAM 9-2.162;

21. Collects and prepares the monthly report of significant criminal cases and matters of the Division components and the U.S. Attorneys, collects briefing matters and reports of significant criminal matters for the Attorney General, and prepares the Division's portion of the annual report submitted by the Attorney General;

22. Receives and reviews reports filed pursuant to the Pre-Trial Diversion Program and handles inquiries relating to that Program. See USAM 9-2.022 and 1-12.000;

23. Implements the registration provisions of the Gambling Devices Act, 15 U.S.C. §1171 et seq.;

24. Responds to questions that arise with respect to the Privacy Protection Act of 1980. See USAM 1-15.000; and

25. Supervises and enforces the Right to Financial Privacy Act of 1978, 92 Stat. 3697 (12 U.S.C. §§3401-3422). See USAM 9-4.800.

K. Office of International Affairs

The Office of International Affairs supports the Division in the formulation and execution of international criminal justice enforcement policies and procedures. Its functions include: participating in the negotiation of international agreements and treaties on subjects relating to criminal law enforcement such as extradition, mutual assistance in criminal matters, and the transfer of prisoners; representing the Division in Executive Branch policy planning sessions in the consideration of issues of international criminal justice; implementing, and overseeing the implementation of extradition, judicial assistance, and prisoner transfer treaties and agreements, processing and litigating, or supervising the litigation of, requests for extradition by foreign countries before federal courts; preparing requests for international extradition and obtaining evidence from foreign countries in criminal matters; providing advice to U.S. Attorneys, state attorneys general; and district attorneys on preparing extradition requests and on foreign criminal practice and procedure; coordinating and reviewing requests to and from foreign countries to obtain evidence in connection with criminal investigations and prosecutions in the United States and foreign countries, drafting legislation in its areas of responsibility; and developing Division policy on those aspects of federal criminal law enforcement having transnational aspects.

L. Office of Legislation

The Office of Legislation is responsible for development and support of the Criminal Division's legislative program. In fulfilling its mission, the Office of Legislation develops legislative proposals, legal memorandum, and testimony to be presented to the Congress and drafts responses to requests from Congressional committees and government agencies for Division comment upon pending and proposed legislation. The office also maintains liaison with members of Congress and Congressional staff to track legislative activities and to provide the Congress with information relating to criminal justice issues.

The office provides legal support to the Assistant Attorney General in the discharge of his/her duties as a member of the Advisory Committee on Criminal Rules of the Judicial Conference which develops proposed amendments to the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. The office also prepares legal memoranda and assists in development of guidelines and operating manuals relating to the implementation of recently enacted statutes.

Because of its activities, the Office of Legislation is able to furnish information to U.S. Attorneys' offices regarding the status and substance of legislation affecting the federal criminal justice system and can respond to questions that arise with respect to the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure and grand jury matters.

M. Office of Policy and Management Analysis

The Office of Policy and Management Analysis is responsible for analyzing and recommending positions on policy and management issues of concern to top-level decision makers in the Division and the Department. It also assists Division managers in dealing with various management issues, including budget policy, personnel development, and information systems. Most of the office's work is concentrated in the areas of organized crime, government program fraud, and drug trafficking.

The major functions performed by this office are as follows:

1. Analyzes and develops responses to significant policy issues affecting the roles, functions, and missions of the Division;
2. Advises the Assistant Attorney General on the establishment of priorities and objectives for the Division and for federal law enforcement generally;
3. Develops plans for enforcement programs in conjunction with the Division's litigating sections;

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

4. Conducts systematic evaluations of existing law enforcement programs and policies;
5. Advises the Assistant Attorney General on issues of budget policy and resource allocation;
6. Evaluates and develops improvements in the Division's management systems and practices; and
7. Provides for the exchange of information and the coordination of policies, programs, and research with other public agencies and private institutions in the field of law enforcement.

The office uses an interdisciplinary approach to decision making and problem solving. Its professional staff includes attorneys, program analysts, and management analysts with expertise in public administration, economics, organization behavior, program evaluation, data processing, financial analysis, and operations research.

Examples of projects in which the office has played a major role include the preparation of a major study of law enforcement-related asset seizure and forfeiture operations, the development of essays on strategy for the Department's priority enforcement areas for use by the U.S. Attorneys in developing their law enforcement plans, the design of a review process to assist Organized Crime and Racketeering Section managers in assessing the nature and extent of organized crime and the impact of Strike Force offices, the implementation of a case management information system for the Division's cases, the development of national priorities for the investigation and prosecution of white collar crime, and the development of a government-wide information system to track referrals made to the Department by the Inspectors General.

N. Office of Special Investigations

The mission of the Office of Special Investigations is to investigate and prosecute cases seeking denaturalization, deportation, or other legal action against alleged Nazi war criminals in the United States. The office investigates allegations against Nazi war criminals--more accurately defined as those who took part in, assisted, incited, or encouraged persecution of innocent people based on race, religion, national origin, or political belief in collaboration with the Nazi regimes of Europe from 1933 to 1945--to determine if the allegations are well-founded and if the individuals entered the United States (or obtained United States citizenship) illegally or fraudulently. Upon approval by the Assistant Attorney General, the Office of Special Investigations files a denaturalization action in district court (see 8 U.S.C. §1451(a)), deportation proceedings before an immigration judge, or other proceedings as necessary.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

9-1.110 Assistant Attorney General

The Assistant Attorney General is appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate to assist the Attorney General in the performance of his/her duties. 28 U.S.C. §506. Subject to the general supervision of the Attorney General and under the direction of the Associate Attorney General, the Assistant Attorney General is assigned the responsibility of conducting, handling, or supervising the following:

A. Prosecutions for federal crimes not otherwise specifically assigned. See 28 C.F.R. §0.55(a).

B. Cases involving criminal frauds against the United States except cases assigned to the Antitrust Division (28 C.F.R. §0.40(a)) involving conspiracy to defraud the federal government by violation of the antitrust laws, and tax fraud cases assigned to the Tax Division (28 C.F.R. §§0.70 and 0.71). See 28 C.F.R. §0.55(b).

C. All criminal and civil litigation under the Controlled Substances Act, 84 Stat. 1242, and the Controlled Substances Import and Export Act, 84 Stat. 1285 (Titles II and III of the Comprehensive Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Act of 1970). See 28 C.F.R. §0.55(c).

D. TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

BB. Criminal matters arising under the Military Selective Service Act of 1967. See 28 C.F.R. §0.61(i).

9-1.111 Authority

The Assistant Attorney General acts in the stead of the Attorney General in all matters assigned to him/her and in such matters exercises all the powers of the Attorney General which are expressly delegated where express delegation is required by law or which are delegated by implication where express delegation is not required by law and delegation has not been specifically withheld. As head of the Criminal Division, the Assistant Attorney General has the authority to structure the Division to enable him/her to best conduct, handle, or supervise matters for which he/she is responsible. See 28 C.F.R. §0.190.

The Assistant Attorney General's authority to act is delegable in part and non-delegable in part. Delegability may depend on the availability of the Assistant Attorney General or on the statutory terminology granting authority. See United States v. Giordano, 416 U.S. 505, 512-514 (1973); United States v. Agrusa, 520 F.2d 370 (8th Cir. 1975); United States v. Cuomo, 525 F.2d 1285 (5th Cir. 1976). Delegability may be distinguished from devolution of authority, and it may be that non-delegable authority can be exercised by an official properly acting in the place of the Assistant Attorney General. Cf. United States v. Bledsoe, 674 F.2d 647, 669-70 (8th Cir. 1982) (holding that an Acting Assistant Attorney General can properly make applications under 26 U.S.C. §6103(i)(1)).

Under certain conditions the authority of the Assistant Attorney General can be exercised by a deputy designated to act in his/her stead. Thus, 28 C.F.R. §0.132(e) provides that:

The [Assistant Attorney General] is authorized, in case of absence from office or disability, to designate the ranking deputy (or an equivalent official) in the [Criminal Division] who is available to act as head. If there is no deputy available to act, any other official in [the Criminal Division] may be so designated.

9-1.112 Special Responsibilities

The Assistant Attorney General is authorized to do the following:

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

A. To exercise the authority of the Attorney General under 28 U.S.C. §515(a) to designate Department attorneys to conduct any legal proceeding, civil or criminal, including grand jury proceedings and proceedings before committing magistrates, in cases assigned to, conducted, handled, or supervised by the Assistant Attorney General, and to redelegate to Section Chiefs [or Office Directors] this authority, except designation of Department attorneys to conduct grand jury proceedings. See 28 C.F.R. §0.13(a) and (b).

B. To determine administratively whether the federal government has exclusive or concurrent jurisdiction over offenses committed upon lands acquired by the United States, and to consider problems arising therefrom. See 28 C.F.R. §0.56.

C. To exercise the power and authority vested in the Attorney General by 18 U.S.C. §5032 and §5036 relating to criminal proceedings against juveniles, and to redelegate any function delegated to him/her under this section to U.S. Attorneys and to the Chief of the Section which supervises the implementation of the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act (18 U.S.C. §5031 et seq.). See 28 C.F.R. §0.57.

D. To exercise or perform any of the functions or duties conferred upon the Attorney General by the Act to Compensate Law Enforcement Officers not Employed by the United States Killed or Injured While Apprehending Persons Suspected of Committing Federal Crimes (5 U.S.C. §§8191-8193), and to redelegate any function delegated to him/her under this section to the Chief of the Section which supervises the implementation of this Act. See 28 C.F.R. §0.58.

E. To exercise or perform the functions or duties conferred upon the Attorney General by 18 U.S.C. §3331 to certify that in his/her judgment a special grand jury is necessary in any judicial district of the United States because of criminal activity within such district. See 28 C.F.R. §0.59(a).

F. To exercise or perform the functions or duties conferred upon the Attorney General by 18 U.S.C. §3503 to certify that the legal proceeding, in which a motion to take testimony by deposition is made, is against a person who is believed to have participated in an organized criminal activity, where the subject matter is within the cognizance of the Criminal Division pursuant to 28 C.F.R. §0.55, or is not within the cognizance of the Civil Rights Division. See 28 C.F.R. §0.59(b).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

G. To be a member and serve as Chairman of the committee which represents the Department of Justice in the development and implementation of plans for exchanging visits between the Iron Curtain countries and the United States and to designate an alternate to serve on such committee. See 28 C.F.R. §0.62(a).

H. To provide Department of Justice representation on the Interdepartmental Committee on Internal Security. See 28 C.F.R. §0.62(b).

I. To exercise the power and authority vested in the Attorney General by section 7 of the Central Intelligence Agency Act of 1949, as amended (50 U.S.C. §403h), with respect to entry of certain aliens into the United States for permanent residence. See 28 C.F.R. §0.63.

J. To exercise or perform the functions or duties conferred upon the Attorney General by 18 U.S.C. §3503 to certify that the legal proceeding, in which a motion to take testimony by deposition is made, is against a person who is believed to have participated in an organized criminal activity, where the subject matter of the case or proceeding is within the cognizance of the Criminal Division pursuant to 28 C.F.R. §0.61. See 28 C.F.R. §0.64.

K. To have the authority and perform the functions of the "Central Authority" or "Competent Authority" (or like designation) under treaties between the United States of America and other countries on mutual assistance in criminal matters which designate the Attorney General or the Department of Justice as such authority, and to redelegate this authority to his/her Deputy Assistant Attorneys General and to the Director, Office of International Affairs. See 28 C.F.R. §0.64-1.

L. To exercise all of the power and authority vested in the Attorney General under 18 U.S.C. §4102, which has not been delegated to the Director of the Bureau of Prisons under 28 C.F.R. §0.96b, including specifically the authority to find the transfer of offenders to or from a foreign country under a treaty as referred to in Pub. L. 95-44 appropriate or inappropriate, and to redelegate this authority to his/her Deputy Assistant Attorneys General and appropriate Office Directors and Section Chiefs. See 28 C.F.R. §0.64-2.

M. To accept offers in compromise of claims on behalf of the United States in all cases in which the difference between the gross amount of the original claim and the proposed settlement does not exceed $750,000 or 10 percent of the original claim, whichever is greater; accept offers in compromise of, or settle administratively, claims against the United States in all cases where the principal amount of the proposed settlement does not exceed $750,000, with respect to matters assigned to the Criminal Division, except those which must be referred to the Deputy Attorney General pursuant to 28 C.F.R. §0.160(c)(1) and (2), and to redelegate to subordinate division officials and U.S. Attorneys any of this authority, except that when a disagreement between a U.S. Attorney or other Department Attorney and a client agency over the terms of a proposed settlement cannot be resolved below the Assistant Attorney General level, the settlement must be presented to the Assistant Attorney General for approval. See 28 C.F.R. §0.160(a); 28 C.F.R. §0.168; Order No. 1034-83.

N. To reject offers in compromise of any claims in behalf of the United States, or, in compromises or administrative actions to settle, against the United States, with respect to matters assigned to the Criminal Division, except in those cases which come under 28 C.F.R. §0.160(c)(2), and to redelegate to subordinate division officials and U.S. Attorneys any of this authority, except that when a disagreement between a U.S. Attorney or other Department attorney and a client agency over the terms of a proposed settlement cannot be resolved below the Assistant Attorney General level, the settlement must be presented to the Assistant Attorney General for approval. See 28 C.F.R. §0.162; 28 C.F.R. §0.168; Order No. 1034-83.

O. To close (other than by compromise or by entry of judgment) civil claims asserted by the government in all cases in which the gross amount of the original claim does not exceed $750,000, except when for any reason, the closing will control or adversely influence the disposition of other claims, the total gross amounts of which exceed $750,000, or except when the Assistant Attorney General is of the opinion the proposed closing should receive the personal attention of the Deputy Attorney General or the Attorney General, with respect to matters assigned to the Criminal Division, and to redelegate to subordinate division officials and U.S. Attorneys any of this authority, except that when a disagreement between a U.S. Attorney or other Department attorney and a client agency over the terms of a proposed settlement cannot be resolved below the Assistant Attorney General level, the settlement must be presented to the Assistant Attorney General for approval. See 28 C.F.R. §0.164; 28 C.F.R. §0.168; Order No. 1034-83.

P. To conduct, handle, or supervise such litigation or other actions as may be appropriate to accomplish the satisfaction, collection, or recovery, as the case may be, of judgments, fines, penalties, and forfeitures (including bailbond forfeitures) arising in connection with cases under his/her jurisdiction, and to designate an individual or unit in the Criminal Division to be responsible for the performance of each of those functions. See 28 C.F.R. §0.171(a); Order No. 1034-83.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

Q. To exercise the authority vested in the Attorney General by 18 U.S.C. §6003, to approve the application of a U.S. Attorney to a federal court for an order compelling testimony or the production of information by a witness in any proceeding before or ancillary to a court or grand jury of the United States, and the authority vested in the Attorney General by 18 U.S.C. §6004, to approve the issuance by an agency of the United States of an order compelling testimony or the production of information by a witness in a proceeding before the agency, when the subject matter of the case or proceeding is either within the cognizance of the Criminal Division or is not within the cognizance of the Antitrust, Civil, Civil Rights, Land and Natural Resources, and Tax Division, or the Drug Enforcement Administration, and to redelegate this authority to his/her respective Deputy Assistant Attorneys General to be exercised solely during his/her absence from the City of Washington. See 28 C.F.R. §0.175(a); and 28 C.F.R. §0.178(a). (The practice in the Criminal Division is to have the ranking available Deputy Assistant Attorney General, in the capacity of Acting Assistant Attorney General pursuant to 28 C.F.R. §0.132(d), exercise this authority.)

R. To exercise the power and authority vested in the Attorney General by 18 U.S.C. §6005 to apply to a district court of the United States to defer the issuance of an order compelling the testimony of a witness or the production of information in a proceeding before either House of Congress, or any committee or subcommittee of either House, or any joint committee of the two Houses, and to redelegate this authority to his/her respective Deputy Assistant Attorneys General to be exercised solely during his/her absence from the City of Washington. See 28 C.F.R. §0.176(b); and 28 C.F.R. §0.178(a).

S. To exercise the authority vested in the Attorney General by section 514 of the Comprehensive Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Act of 1970, 84 Stat. 1276, to approve the application of a U.S. Attorney to a federal court for an order compelling testimony or the production of information in any proceeding before a court or grand jury of the United States, and to indicate his/her concurrence in agency proceedings under that Act, and to redelegate this authority to his/her respective Deputy Assistant Attorneys General to be exercised solely during his/her absence from the City of Washington. See 28 C.F.R. §0.177; and 28 C.F.R. §0.178(a).

T. To conduct prosecution of obstruction of justice, perjury, fraud or false statement charges, as described in 28 C.F.R §0.179, including the appointment of special attorneys to present evidence to grand juries, in matters under the supervisory jurisdiction of the Criminal Division, and to determine appropriate supervisory jurisdiction in such matters. See 28 C.F.R. §0.179a. (Insofar as such "special attorneys" are not Department of Justice employees and are to appear before a grand jury, the normal appointment process requires the approval of the Deputy Attorney General or his/her designee.)

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

U. To exercise the power and authority of and to perform the functions vested in the Attorney General by the Act of January 2, 1951, 64 Stat. 1134, as amended by the Gambling Devices Act of 1962, 76 Stat. 1075, 15 U.S.C. §1171 et seq. See 28 C.F.R. §3.2.

V. To authorize remission or mitigation of seizure or forfeiture of gambling devices under the Act of January 2, 1951, 64 Stat. 1134, as amended by the Gambling Devices Act of 1962, 76 Stat. 1075, 15 U.S.C. §1171 et seq. See 28 C.F.R. §3.6. Order No. 1034-83.

W. To prescribe forms, in addition to or in lieu of those specified in 28 C.F.R. §5.1-5.801 as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of those sections, which relate to the administration and enforcement of the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938, as amended. See 28 C.F.R. §5.1(b).

X. To take final action under 18 U.S.C. §2513 on claims for award of compensation to an informer. See 28 C.F.R. §8.2. Order No. 1034-83.

Y. To assign petitions for remission or mitigation of forfeiture and the report thereon, which are forwarded to him/her by U.S. Attorneys, to the Asset Forfeiture Office of the Criminal Division for preparation of a report based upon the allegations of the petition and the report of the seizing agency. See 28 C.F.R. §9.3(c). Order No. 1034-83.

Z. To reject a petition for remission or mitigation of forfeiture in any case in which a similar petition has been administratively denied by the seizing agency prior to the referral of the case to the U.S. Attorney for the institution of forfeiture proceedings. See 28 C.F.R. §9.3(g).

AA. To accept, for consideration by the Director, Asset Forfeiture Office, petitions submitted in judicial forfeiture proceedings under the Internal Revenue liquor laws only prior to the time a decree of forfeiture is entered. See 28 C.F.R. §9.3(h). Order No. 1034-83.

BB. To accept, for consideration by the Director, Asset Forfeiture Office, petitions in all other forfeiture cases not specified in 28 C.F.R. §9.3(g) and (h), until the property is sold or placed in official use or otherwise disposed of according to law. See 28 C.F.R. §9.3(i). Order No. 1034-83.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

CC. To receive, within 20 days from the date of the notice of the denial of a petition for remission or mitigation of forfeiture, a request for reconsideration of the denial, based on evidence recently developed or not previously considered, and to refer to the Director, Asset Forfeiture Office. See 28 C.F.R. §9.3(j). Order No. 1034-83.

DD. To advise the U.S. Attorney of action taken on a request for reconsideration of the denial of a petition for remission or mitigation of forfeiture by the Director, Asset Forfeiture Office. See 28 C.F.R. §9.3(k). Order No. 1034-83.

EE. To take final action under 18 U.S.C. §1955(d) on claims for award of compensation to informers, offers in compromise, and matters relating to bonds or other security. See 28 C.F.R. §9a.2.

FF. To perform the duties comparable to those of the Administrator of the Drug Enforcement Administration imposed under 28 C.F.R. §9.4 with respect to petitions for the remission or mitigation of administrative forfeiture of property of an appraised value of $10,000 or less resulting from the application of 18 U.S.C. §1955(d). See 28 C.F.R. §9a.7. Order No. 1034-83.

GG. To grant or deny any request for a record of the Criminal Division under the Freedom of Information Act, 5 U.S.C. §552, and to name a designee to perform certain functions. See 28 C.F.R. §16.4(b) et seq. Order No. 1055-84.

HH. To approve requests for production or disclosure of information in federal and state proceedings pursuant to 28 C.F.R. §16.21 et seq., and to delegate certain authority to subordinate division officials or U.S. Attorneys. See 28 C.F.R. §16.23 et seq. 28 C.F.R. §16.29.

II. To grant or deny a request for access to a record of the Criminal Division under the Privacy Act of 1974, 5 U.S.C. §552a, and to name a designee to perform certain functions. See 28 C.F.R. §16.42(b) et seq. Order No. 1055-84.

JJ. To exercise responsibility with respect to national security information pursuant to 28 C.F.R. §17.1 et seq., and to delegate a lesser level of classification authority. See 28 C.F.R. §17.1 et seq.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

KK. To determine, after investigation, that a former official or employee is believed to have violated 18 U.S.C. §207(j), and to designate one or more officers or employees to present the evidence and perform other functions incident to the proceedings. See 28 C.F.R. §45.735-7a(a) and (e).

LL. To review financial statements required by his/her subordinates pursuant to 28 C.F.R. §45.735-22 and §45.735-23 and to issue supplemental and implementing regulations. See 28 C.F.R. §45.735-24 and §45.735-25.

MM. To nominate an individual to be designated by the Designated Agency Ethics Official as a Deputy Designated Agency Ethics Official for the Criminal Division. See 28 C.F.R. §45.735-26. Order No. 1045-84.

NN. To review public financial disclosure reports required by Title II of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978 by certain persons pursuant to 28 C.F.R. §45.735-27(a), and to delegate this function to an assistant head of a division. See 28 C.F.R. §45.735-27(1)(vi) and (2).

OO. To designate officials to issue requests for financial records pursuant to the Right to Financial Privacy Act of 1978, 12 U.S.C. §3408. See 28 C.F.R. §47.3(c).

PP. To authorize subpoenas to a member of the news media, if the member of the news media agrees to provide the material sought and if that material has already been published or broadcast. See 28 C.F.R. §50.10(e).

QQ. To sign Foreign Corrupt Practices Act review letters, and to delegate this authority. See 28 C.F.R. §50.18(j).

RR. To approve or deny motions for recusal or disqualification, and to delegate this authority to Deputy Assistant Attorneys General or officials in equivalent positions. See 28 C.F.R. §50.19.

SS. To determine whether disposition of a matter before a magistrate is appropriate. See 28 C.F.R. §52.01 and §52.02.

TT. To authorize application for a search warrant to obtain documentary material held by third parties pursuant to 28 C.F.R. §59.1 et seq. See 28 C.F.R. §59.5.

See Order No. 851-79.

S. To review and evaluate requests to conduct television surveillance for law enforcement purposes within the Department of Justice. See Order No. 985-82.

9-1.130 Section Chiefs

Section Chiefs and Office Directors are selected by an Assistant Attorney General to assist him/her in the performance of his/her duties. See 5 C.F.R. §9.1-9.5. The Assistant Attorney General assigns to each Section Chief and Office Director the responsibility of conducting, handling or supervising the Division's business in an area designated by the Assistant Attorney General. Current statutory assignments are listed at USAM 9-1.200 et seq. Each Section Chief and Office Director operates under the general supervision of a Deputy Assistant Attorney General. See USAM 9-1.120. Section Chiefs and Office Directors are subject to removal pursuant to the provisions of 5 C.F.R. Part 752 and DOJ Order 1752.1a and supplements thereto.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

9-1.131 Authority

Each Section Chief and Office Director acts in the stead of the Assistant Attorney General in all matters assigned to him/her and exercises all the powers of the Assistant Attorney General which are expressly delegated where express delegation is required by law or which are delegated by implication where express delegation is not required by law and delegation has not been specifically withheld. See USAM 9-1.111; 28 C.F.R. §0.132(e).

The following responsibilities have been delegated to Section Chiefs and Office Directors:

A. Authorization of investigations and prosecutions by Departmental attorneys.

B. Authority to perform functions set forth in 28 C.F.R. §§0.160, 0.162, 0.164, and 0.171 not falling within the limitations of paragraph (a) of Directive 116, except that relating to conducting, handling, or supervising civil and criminal forfeiture litigation (other than bail bond forfeiture) including acceptance or denial of petitions for remission or mitigation of forfeiture, and matters described in paragraph (c) of Directive 116 which should receive the personal attention of a Deputy Assistant Attorney General or the Assistant Attorney General because they involve questions of law or policy, and matters which must be resolved by the Assistant Attorney General because the agency or agencies involved have objected in writing to proposed closing or dismissal of a case or acceptance or rejection of an offer in compromise, when the matter cannot be resolved below that level. See Order No. 1034-83. Directive No. 116.

C. Authority to issue formal written requests for financial records pursuant to 12 U.S.C. §3408. See 28 C.F.R. §47.3(c). Directive No. 59.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-1.140 Special Assistants

Special Assistants are selected by the Assistant Attorney General to assist him/her personally in the performance of his/her duties.

9-1.150 Senior Counsel

Senior Counsel are selected by the Assistant Attorney General to perform functions in the areas assigned to them. The Criminal Division has four Senior Counsel: two Senior Counsel for Litigation; a Senior Appellate Counsel; and a Senior Counsel, Office of Law Enforcement Coordination.

9-1.160 Division Attorneys

Attorneys of the Division assist the Assistant Attorney General by conducting, handling, or supervising the Division's routine business under the direction and general supervision of a particular Section Chief or Office Director or his/her designate (e.g., Deputy Chief, Associate Director, or Unit Chief). With the exception of Strike Force attorneys, see USAM 9-1.170, infra, Division attorneys are primarily responsible for providing litigation support to U.S. Attorneys by rendering advice and counsel with reference to questions of law and procedure concerning investigations, grand jury proceedings, and the preparation of indictments and other pleadings. Division attorneys may participate directly in case litigation in the following instances:

A. Where the U.S. Attorney has requested assistance in litigating a case for which his/her office will maintain primary responsibility;

B. Where the U.S. Attorney has requested that the Division assume primary litigation responsibility for a case;

C. Where the U.S. Attorney has requested that the Division assume sole litigation responsibility for a case;

D. Where the Assistant Attorney General has assigned primary litigation responsibility for a certain category of cases to a particular Section or Office; and

E. Where the Assistant Attorney General has removed litigation responsibility for a particular case from the U.S. Attorney and assigned that responsibility to a Division attorney.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

In all cases where a Division attorney will appear before a grand jury, that attorney must obtain a grand jury authorization letter from the Assistant Attorney General or a Deputy Assistant Attorney General, see 28 C.F.R. §0.13(a), prior to such appearance, see USAM 9-1.161, infra. In all cases where a Division attorney will assume primary litigation responsibility, that attorney will obtain specific authorization from the Assistant Attorney General prior to assuming that responsibility.

9-1.161 Requests for Grand Jury Authorization Letters for Division Attorneys

Requests for grand jury authorization letters for Division attorneys should be in the form of a memorandum from the Section Chief or Office Director to the Assistant Attorney General.

To promote uniformity in the format of requests for grand jury authorizations, and to ensure that all such requests contain the necessary information, it is requested that the following formats be used in making requests for grand jury authorizations.

For authorizations needed in connection with specific cases or matters:

It is requested that (full name of attorney), an attorney with the (name of Section or Office) of the Criminal Division, be authorized to conduct grand jury proceedings in the _____ District of _____. This authorization is required in connection with an investigation of (subject matter, case name, or names of prospective defendants), focusing primarily on, but not limited to, alleged violations of (statutory citations). This authorization is needed by (date).

The United States Attorney for the above district [(has requested) or (concur in)] the granting of this grand jury authorization.

For authorizations required in connection with new assignments to Strike Forces:

It is requested that (full name of attorney) be authorized to conduct grand jury proceedings in the _____ District of _____. [(Mr.) (Ms.)] (last name of attorney) is [(newly assigned) (temporarily assigned) (being reassigned)] to the _____ Strike Force, and will require this authorization in connection with investigations [(he) (she)] has been assigned in the above district. This authorization is needed by (date).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The United States Attorney for the above district [(has requested) (concur in)] the granting of this grand jury authorization.

Requests should be addressed to the Assistant Attorney General, but sent to the Office of Enforcement Operations, Federal Triangle Building, Room 303, for processing, and should be made as soon as the need is known to allow adequate time for approval. Failure to provide necessary information may result in a delay. The Office of Enforcement Operations will prepare a grand jury authorization letter to the attorney from the Assistant Attorney General, Criminal Division. Letters of authorization are usually signed by Deputy Assistant Attorneys General pursuant to Order No. 725-77, dated May 12, 1977.

9-1.170 Strike Forces

Strike Forces from the Criminal Division have been established in various districts to combat organized crime. The interrelationship between Strike Forces and U.S. Attorneys' Offices is regulated by the Guidelines established by the Attorney General in Orders No. 672-76 and 754-77. The Guidelines provide:

9-1.171 Purpose

Organized crime is a serious national problem requiring special concentration and coordination of federal investigative and prosecutive activities in geographic areas where the problem is most severe. Federal efforts against organized crime are supervised and directed by the Criminal Division and carried out by Strike Forces. The major purpose of the Strike Force is to conduct extensive investigations of organized crime activities within their areas.

Strike Forces, being task oriented, are organized and deployed as organized crime conditions in an area require. To the extent possible, the configuration and operation of a Strike Force shall be adapted to the particular conditions, needs, and priorities in the districts it serves. As the need in an area subsides or ends, the Strike Force's activity may be appropriately altered, including the recall or redeployment of the Strike Force for other tasks or duties.

Ch. 1, p. 46

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-1.172 Definition of Organized Crime

The term "organized crime," for purposes of the USAM, includes all illegal activities engaged in by members of the criminal syndicates operative within the United States.

9-1.173 General Responsibilities--Executive Committee--Personnel

The Strike Force assigned to a particular geographic area by the Criminal Division shall be responsible for supervising all federal investigations of organized crime matters within such area, and for coordinating such investigations with state and local efforts against organized crime. However, the U.S. Attorney shall supervise federal investigations of illegal drug enterprises, in coordination with the Narcotic and Dangerous Drug Section of the Criminal Division, unless there is direct and substantial control of the illegal drug operation by major organized crime figures, or the operation is integrally interrelated to other criminal conduct under investigation by a Strike Force pursuant to these guidelines. The Chief of the Strike Force and the U.S. Attorney in such area shall have the responsibility of keeping each other fully advised of all organized criminal matters. See USAM 9-1.175, infra. The Chief of the Strike Force shall on a continuing basis advise the U.S. Attorney of all investigations being conducted of which he/she has knowledge.

Where the area assigned to the Strike Force encompasses more than one judicial district, the Chief of the Strike Force shall work with each U.S. Attorney having jurisdiction of a portion of such assigned area.

An attorney shall be appointed as Chief of each Strike Force by the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Criminal Division with the advice of the U.S. Attorney of the district where the Strike Force is located.

There shall be established at each Strike Force an Executive Committee composed of the following persons or representatives:

- A. The U.S. Attorney for the district where the Strike Force is headquartered, who shall serve as Chairperson;
- B. The Attorney-in-Charge of the Strike Force;
- C. The Special-Agent-in-Charge, Federal Bureau of Investigation, local Field Office;
- D. District Chief of Intelligence, Internal Revenue Service;

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

- E. District Chief of Audit, Internal Revenue Service;
- F. District Senior ATF Enforcement Officer (either Area Supervisor or Chief Special Investigator), Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms; and
- G. The principal enforcement officer (Resident Special Agent, Special Agent-in-Charge, or Director of the New York Metro Region) of the Office of Inspector General, Department of Labor.

The Executive Committee shall meet at least semi-annually. The meetings shall be called and chaired by the U.S. Attorney. The members of the Committee shall review the progress of the organized crime program in the District and at the request of any member address any problems in cooperation or coordination which have arisen among the agencies involved in that program. In addition, the Committee may propose local organized crime problems which the members believe of sufficient impact for inclusion in the organized crime program in that District as a local priority. Such proposals shall be made in writing to the Assistant Attorney General, Criminal Division, or his/her designee. Nothing in this paragraph shall relieve the Attorney-in-Charge of the Strike Force of his/her obligation to keep the U.S. Attorney fully advised of organized crime matters and investigations.

9-1.174 Investigative Matters

The federal investigative agencies operating within the judicial district shall submit to the U.S. Attorney all cases concerning violations of federal law except those concerning an organized crime subject or activity which require extensive investigation or utilization of significant resources and facilities of the Strike Force. In cases of the latter sort, the investigative agency, including the Tax Division of the Department of Justice, shall submit the matter in the first instance to the Strike Force. However, supervisory jurisdiction of tax cases will remain in the Tax Division. In the event that either the U.S. Attorneys' Office or the Strike Force receives an investigative report of a matter of primary concern to the other, a prompt referral shall be made so that the case may proceed without delay.

In the case of a difference of opinion between the U.S. Attorney and the Chief of the Strike Force as to the assignment of an investigative matter, the U.S. Attorney shall make the initial assignment, but the Chief of the Strike Force may refer the matter to the Chief of the Organized Crime and Racketeering Section (OCRS) of the Criminal Division who will review the decision of the U.S. Attorney. In the event the Chief, OCRS, disagrees with the determination of the U.S. Attorney, the matter shall be referred to the Assistant Attorney General, Criminal Division, to make a determination which shall be final. All concerned investigative agencies shall be advised of the assignment made with regard to an investigative matter.

The chain of command for pre-indictment investigative efforts within the field of organized crime shall be from the Attorney General, to the Assistant Attorney General, Criminal Division, to the Chief of the Strike Force, to the investigatory personnel assigned to the Strike Force. U.S. Attorneys shall be kept fully advised of organized crime developments within their districts. When a specific investigation has progressed to the point where there is to be a presentation for an indictment or any court proceeding, the Chief of the Strike Force shall then for this purpose operate under the direction of the U.S. Attorney who shall oversee the judicial phase of the development of the case. The matter shall be handled by an attorney or attorneys designated by the U.S. Attorney, at least one of whom shall be a Strike Force attorney. In the event of a difference of opinion between the U.S. Attorney and the Chief of the Strike Force as to the assignment of an attorney to handle litigation, the Chief of the Strike Force may refer the matter to the Chief, OCRS, for determination. If the Chief, OCRS, disagrees with the determination of the U.S. Attorney, the matter shall be referred to the Assistant Attorney General, Criminal Division, for final determination.

Arrest warrants and search warrants sought in connection with a matter assigned to the Strike Force shall be sought with the concurrence of the U.S. Attorney.

9-1.175 Case Initiation Reports

No investigation shall be opened by a Strike Force without the submission of a case initiation report. Moreover, within a reasonable time, a report should be completed and forwarded as to each pending investigation which was opened prior to the issuance of the requirement to submit case initiation reports.

The form of the report is as follows:

To:

Chief, OCRS

cc: _____, United States Attorney

The Case Initiation Report is designed to be a one-page description of an investigative or prosecutive matter which, in the judgment of the

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Attorney-in-Charge, merits the attention of the Strike Force and the assignment of attorney personnel resources. Investigations which are being conducted by agencies without any participation by Strike Force attorneys need not be reported thereon.

The subject of the report should be the name of the principal prospective defendant and should set forth that person's identifying information in the form of date of birth, FBI, Social Security, and police department numbers. Additional possible subjects may be listed in the space provided and should be listed in subsequent supplemental reports if they become known thereafter. Possible violations may be listed by name and, preferably, title and section of the United States Code. The summary of facts should be brief but sufficient for the reader to determine the basis upon which the investigation is being undertaken. The organized crime connection should reflect the careful judgment of the Attorney-in-Charge as to why the Strike Force is concerned with the investigation. The source of the information establishing the connection is, of course, related to the preceding item, but is intended to set out somewhat more precisely the actual source (without identifying particular informants). The objective could also be called the investigative or prosecutive goal and is not normally to be answered "Conviction of Defendant." Rather, it should set forth what goal is intended to be achieved by this particular investigative or prosecutive effort. The last item is designed to be a key to open the appropriate Profile or, if already open, to record the additional data, e.g., attorney assignment. It should be answered by a yes and a date or no.

Upon completion, a copy of this report should be sent immediately to the Organized Crime and Racketeering Section and the appropriate U.S. Attorney, as indicated. The routing of this report in the Organized Crime and Racketeering Section will be to the Chief and the appropriate Deputy Chief.

9-1.176 Requests for Authorization for Electronic Surveillance Applications

Requests to the Criminal Division for authorization to apply to a court for an electronic surveillance order pursuant to 18 U.S.C. Chapter 119, Title III of Pub. L. 90-351, June 19, 1968, in the course of an investigation assigned to the Strike Force, shall be made by the Chief of the Strike Force with the concurrence of the U.S. Attorney. If the U.S. Attorney concurs in the request initiated by the Chief of the Strike Force, the request shall be forwarded to the Criminal Division for a final decision as to whether the request should be submitted to the Assistant

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Attorney General for his/her approval. If the U.S. Attorney does not concur in the request of the Chief of the Strike Force, the Chief of the Strike Force shall be advised of the reasons for not concurring. The Chief of the Strike Force, upon receipt of the U.S. Attorney's reasons for not concurring, may elect either to accede to the views of the U.S. Attorney or to submit the question to the Chief, OCRS, Criminal Division, who shall review the matter and make a decision as to whether the request should be submitted to the Assistant Attorney General for his/her approval. Any difference between the Chief, OCRS, and the U.S. Attorney shall be submitted to the Assistant Attorney General for final resolution.

A Strike Force attorney whose request for an electronic surveillance application has been approved by the Assistant Attorney General shall be authorized to present the application to the appropriate court. The Strike Force attorneys shall advise the U.S. Attorney when the application will be presented to the court in order that the U.S. Attorney may be present if so desired.

9-1.177 Authorizations to Proceed With Prosecutions

Where the Chief of the Strike Force concludes that indictment is warranted on a matter assigned to the Strike Force, he/she shall set forth his/her recommendation in a prosecution memorandum to the U.S. Attorney. If the U.S. Attorney agrees with the recommendation, the matter shall be submitted to the Criminal Division for review prior to indictment. If the U.S. Attorney disagrees with the recommendation, the Chief of the Strike Force shall be advised of the reasons for disagreement. The Chief of the Strike Force, upon receipt of the U.S. Attorney's reasons for disagreement, may elect either to accede to the views of the U.S. Attorney or to submit the question to the Chief, OCRS, who shall review the matter and make a determination.

All indictments and informations shall be signed by the U.S. Attorney.

After indictment, any reduction of charges or other negotiated concessions to a defendant in an organized crime case must be approved by the Assistant Attorney General, Criminal Division.

If at any time during the pendency of a criminal matter it appears that an organized crime figure is involved as a subject or a potential subject, but the potential charge does not and will not require extensive investigation or utilization of significant resources and facilities of the Strike Force, the matter shall be promptly transferred to the U.S.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Attorney for processing by the U.S. Attorney, the U.S. Attorney to keep the Strike Force informed of the progress of the case or matter.

9-1.178 Litigation

The chain of command in all proceedings shall be from the Attorney General to the Associate Attorney General to the Assistant Attorney General, Criminal Division, to the U.S. Attorney, to the Chief of the Strike Force. The composition and duties of the litigation team shall be the responsibility of the U.S. Attorney.

The U.S. Attorney shall compile, supervise, and dispose of all court calendar listings of Strike Force cases, including hearings, arraignments, trials, sentences, arguments, convenings of the grand jury, and any other proceeding or hearing, directed by the court. The U.S. Attorney shall consult with the Chief of the Strike Force for the purpose of assigning appropriate priority in the scheduling of such Strike Force cases as are mutually agreed upon between them.

In all Strike Force cases, documents which are to be filed with a clerk of a court, with a court, or with a United States Magistrate or Commissioner--including subpoenas, briefs, motions, legal memoranda, points for charge, stipulations, and petitions -- shall be signed by both the U.S. Attorney and a Strike Force attorney in the following manner:

_____
(Typed Name)
United States Attorney

(Signature)
_____
(Typed Name)
Special Attorney

9-1.179 Files And Exhibits

The principal files and exhibits involving Strike Force matters shall be maintained by the Strike Force in its offices. The function of maintaining traditional status cards, mark-sense cards, and cards on organized crime cases, shall remain with the U.S. Attorney. The U.S. Attorney and the Chief of the Strike Force shall adopt appropriate administrative procedures to maintain records of organized crime matters in keeping with normal Department of Justice practices applicable to matters other than organized crime matters.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

9-1.181 Sentence Recommendations

If the Chief of a Strike Force believes that a recommendation should be made to a court in regard to a sentence for an organized crime offender, he/she shall submit his/her views in a memorandum to the U.S. Attorney. If the U.S. Attorney disagrees with those views, the Chief of the Strike Force shall be advised of the reasons for disagreement. The Chief of the Strike Force, upon receipt of the U.S. Attorney's reasons for disagreement, may elect either to accede to the views of the U.S. Attorney or to submit the question to the Chief, OCRS, who shall review the matter and make a determination. If the Chief, OCRS, disagrees with the determination of the U.S. Attorney, the matter shall be referred to the Assistant Attorney General, Criminal Division, for final determination.

9-1.182 Publicity Releases and Public Statements

Because the efforts against organized crime are national in scope and require national support, and because premature publicity releases or public statements can severely damage enforcement efforts, all publicity releases and public statements on the subject of organized crime by persons assigned to the Strike Force shall first be submitted for clearance to the Department's Office of Public Information and shall in all respects conform to the requirements of 28 C.F.R. §50.2. See USAM 9-2.211. In these matters, as in other matters involving public relations, the U.S. Attorney shall act as principal representative of the Department of Justice in the district, and publicity releases authorized by the Office of Public Information to be issued locally shall generally be issued in the name of the U.S. Attorney. The Office of Public Information has been directed to make special effort to give appropriate credit in approved releases to the individuals or agencies involved.

9-1.183 Supplementary Procedures

Supplementary procedures which are not inconsistent with those contained herein may be adopted in any district upon the mutual agreement of the Chief of the Strike Force and the U.S. Attorney.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-1.200 STATUTES ASSIGNED BY CITATION

The statutes currently administered by the Criminal Division have been assigned to the following Sections and Offices:

Asset Forfeiture Office	AFO
Fraud	Fraud
General Litigation and Legal Advice	GenL
Public Integrity	PInt
Internal Security	ISec
Organized Crime and Racketeering	OC&R
Organized Crime and Racketeering (Labor Unit)	OC&R(L)
Narcotic and Dangerous Drug	N&DD
Office of Enforcement Operations	OEO
Office of International Affairs	OIA
Office of Legislation	Leg

The Statutes are arranged by the United States Code titles. Listed under each title is: (1) the statutory designation in the left column, (2) the administering Section, as abbreviated above, with a telephone number in the center column, and (3) the investigating agency in the right column. Where no particular Section has primary responsibility for a statute, the designation "All" will appear. Whenever a single asterisk (*) appears after the statutory designation, consultation with the Criminal Division is required in accordance with USAM 9-2.120, 9-2.133, and 9-2.134. Whenever a double asterisk (**) appears after the statutory designation, special approval from the Criminal Division must be obtained in accordance with USAM 9-2.132, 9-2.135.

A. The Section to be contacted with respect to the violation of a particular statute will be that Section listed except in the following cases:

1. Whenever it is determined that known organized crime figures are involved in any case, supervision of such case is assigned to the Organized Crime and Racketeering Section regardless of the statute involved.

2. Whenever it is determined that a public official is involved in any case, involving misuse of office, supervision of such case is assigned to the Public Integrity Section regardless of the statute involved.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

3. Whenever any case involves a criminal activity affecting national defense or foreign relations, the Internal Security Section must be consulted regardless of the statute involved.

4. Whenever any case involves a statute in the jurisdiction of the Criminal Division that authorizes civil or criminal forfeiture, questions concerning forfeiture should be referred to the Asset Forfeiture Office (272-6420), while questions concerning the underlying substantive offense should be referred to the Section with responsibility for the criminal statute.

B. The Appellate Section should be contacted with respect to questions or problems concerning the Speedy Trial Act (633-2611).

C. The Office of Legislation should be contacted with respect to questions or problems concerning the following:

1. Bail (633-3949);
2. The grand jury (633-3119).

D. The Office of Enforcement Operations should be contacted with respect to questions or problems concerning the following:

1. Grand jury and special attorney authorizations (724-7184);
2. Pre-trial diversion (633-5541);
3. Witness immunity (633-5541);
4. Subpoenas issued to Department of Justice employees under 28 C.F.R. §16.21 (724-6672);
5. Closure of judicial proceedings under 28 C.F.R. §509;
6. Subpoenas issued to members of the news media under 28 C.F.R. §50.10 (724-6672);
7. Processing of tax disclosure requests under 26 U.S.C. §6103 (724-6672);
8. Authorization of electronic surveillance (633-3684);
9. Witness protection (633-3684);
10. Rule 6(e)(3)(C)(iv) disclosures (724-6672);

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

11. Right to Financial Privacy under 12 U.S.C. §3401-3422 (724-6672);

12. Searches for documentary evidence held by disinterested third parties, e.g., lawyers, doctors, clergymen, under 28 C.F.R. part 59 (724-6672); and

13. Electronic surveillance checks under 18 U.S.C. §3504 (724-6672).

E. The Office of International Affairs (724-7600) must be contacted:

1. Before contacting any foreign or State Department official in matters relating to criminal investigations or prosecutions;

a. Except when notifying a foreign consul of the arrest of a national of the consul's country;

2. Before any proposed contact with persons, other than United States investigative agents, in a foreign country;

3. Before attempting to do any act in Switzerland or other continental European countries relating to a criminal investigation or prosecution, including contacting a witness by telephone or mail;

4. Before issuing any subpoena to obtain records located in a foreign country, and before seeking the enforcement of any such subpoena; and

5. Before serving a subpoena on an officer of, or attorney for, a foreign bank or corporation, who is temporarily in, or passing through the United States, when the testimony sought relates to the officers or attorney's duties in connection with the operation of the bank or corporation.

9-1.300 [RESERVED: STATUTES ASSIGNED BY SUBJECT MATTER]

9-1.400 CIVIL RESPONSIBILITIES

The Criminal Division, in addition to supervising the enforcement of federal criminal laws, has the following civil responsibilities, listed by section in USAM 9-1.401 through 9-1.406, infra.

9-1.401 Asset Forfeiture Office

The Asset Forfeiture Office has responsibility for all civil forfeiture proceedings assigned to the Criminal Division. See Criminal Division Directive No. 116 (1983). This responsibility includes advice and assistance in the handling of forfeiture cases and deciding petitions for remission or mitigation of forfeiture. In addition, U.S. Attorneys are required to consult with the Asset Forfeiture Office before accepting an offer in compromise in a forfeiture case in which the difference between the amount offered and the original amount claimed is between $60,000 and $750,000. Similarly, U.S. Attorneys are required to consult with the Asset Forfeiture Office before closing or dismissing a forfeiture case in which the amount of the original claim is between $60,000 and $750,000. See id. Acceptance of offers in compromise and decisions to close or dismiss larger forfeiture cases are in the jurisdiction of the Associate Attorney General. 28 CFR §0.161(b), as amended in 1983.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The civil forfeiture statutes assigned to the Asset Forfeiture Office are listed in USAM 9-1.200, supra.

9-1.402 Fraud Section

The Fraud Section is responsible for all civil injunction actions against domestic concerns as defined in the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act of 1977, 15 U.S.C. §78dd-2(c) to (d).

9-1.403 General Litigation and Legal Advice Section

The General Litigation and Legal Advice Section is responsible for miscellaneous motions and civil litigation in eighteen areas:

A. Suits primarily seeking to enjoin government officers and employees from engaging in criminal investigative or national security intelligence gathering activity taken by them in connection with their employment, which acts are alleged to be in violation of the United States Constitution or prohibited by statute or regulation (e.g., allegedly illegal searches, seizures, physical surveillance, photographing, and monitoring of the activities of organizations and individuals; improper use of informants; wrongful maintenance of files and reports; unlawful inspection of records; harassment by investigating agents; abuse of the grand jury process; malicious prosecution; improper communications to unauthorized personnel of the results of investigations; improper dissemination to other investigative agencies of information from government files and records; and violations of the postal laws in the course of a criminal investigation).

B. Suits primarily seeking injunctive relief to test the constitutionality of an established federal security program, either facially or as applied to a particular applicant for government employment, etc. These suits usually involve the denial of security clearances for access to classified defense information or atomic secrets; the denial of appointment to sensitive federal or federally funded positions; the denial of access to restricted areas, such as military or naval bases, the White House, or port areas; the denial of passports and visas; and the denial of Treasury licenses for the transfer of blocked funds. Among the programs involved in this area are the Department of Defense Industrial Security Clearance Program (ISCRO), the Federal Employees Loyalty and Security Program administered by the United States Office of Personnel Management, the Coast Guard Port Security Program, the protective activities of the United States Secret Service, and the Foreign Assets Control Program.

C. Suits seeking to quash grand jury subpoenas or to enjoin grand jury proceedings, or which appear to have been filed in an attempt to use the broader and more liberal civil discovery rules during a criminal trial to obtain information denied criminal defendants under the more restrictive rules of criminal discovery. These suits are limited to those directly related to pending criminal proceedings and involve substantially the same matters as those contained in motions normally filed in a criminal proceeding.

D. Suits primarily seeking to enjoin prosecutions involving statutes assigned to the Criminal Division.

E. Suits primarily seeking declaratory or mandamus relief in connection with law enforcement or national security activity under the jurisdiction of the Criminal Division.

F. Suits seeking coram nobis relief.

G. All motions under 18 U.S.C. §3504 for the disclosure and suppression of allegedly illegally intercepted wire and oral communications obtained from national security electronic surveillances.

H. All requests under Rule 6(e), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, for disclosure of grand jury matters or materials.

I. All motions or actions seeking the expungement or sealing of arrest and conviction records.

J. All motions under Rule 41(e), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, or civil suits seeking the return of property seized as evidence.

K. The coordination of all litigation in which Criminal Division personnel are involved as witnesses or defendants.

L. Suits to stay discovery to prevent interference with ongoing law enforcement or national security investigations or prosecutions under the jurisdiction of the Criminal Division.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

M. The coordination of all Freedom of Information Act/Privacy Act litigation involving the files and records of the Criminal Division.

N. Suits to enforce compliance with administrative subpoenas or other orders of administrative officials in matters under the jurisdiction of the Criminal Division (such as compliance with an administrative order requiring the respondent to allow inspection of his/her books and records).

O. Civil contempt.

P. Coordinating and supporting the activities of U.S. Attorneys in the defense of civil actions brought against Bureau of Prisons or Parole Commission officials which attack the Bureau's or Commission's rules, policies, administrative decisions, or conditions of confinement. (Some of the actions involving money damages for constitutional deprivations are defended by the Civil Division).

Q. Injunction actions under the Jenkins Tobacco Act, 15 U.S.C. §378, and the postal laws relating to sexually oriented advertisements, 39 U.S.C. §3011.

R. Civil penalties under all Criminal Division statutes not assigned to other components of the Criminal Division.

9-1.404 Internal Security Section

The Internal Security Section is responsible for the Foreign Agents Registration Act, 22 U.S.C. §611 et seq., and the regulations thereunder, 28 C.F.R. §§5.1-5.801. As a result of certain amendments to the Act in 1966, the civil injunctive remedy was added to what had been a purely criminal statute. This remedy is available whenever, in the judgment of the Attorney General, any person is engaged in or about to engage in any acts which constitute or will constitute a violation of any provision of the Act or regulations thereunder. The district court shall have jurisdiction and authorization to issue a temporary or permanent injunction, restraining order, or other order which it may deem proper. The proceedings shall be made a preferred cause and expedited in every way.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-1.405 Narcotic and Dangerous Drug Section

The following areas are those in which the Narcotic and Dangerous Drug Section exercises civil responsibility. When private persons under Section 507 of the Controlled Substances Act, 21 U.S.C. §877, seek judicial review of various administrative actions taken by the Drug Enforcement Administration, see 28 C.F.R. §0.100, the Section is responsible for representing the government's interests, e.g., responding to motions, writing briefs. The types of Drug Enforcement Administration action in which judicial review is ordinarily sought are: placement of drugs in controlled substance schedules, 21 U.S.C. §811; denial, revocation, or suspension of registrations, 21 U.S.C. §824; and establishment of production quotas, 21 U.S.C. §826. The Section also acts in a civil capacity when it seeks civil penalties for minor violations of the Controlled Substances Act, e.g., negligent record keeping by pharmacists, 21 U.S.C. §842(c). The Section also has jurisdiction over injunctive actions to restrain violations of the Controlled Substances Act, e.g., improper distribution of controlled substances by pharmacists, 21 U.S.C. §882. Jurisdiction over forfeiture litigation under 21 U.S.C. §881 has been formally transferred to the Asset Forfeiture Office.

9-1.406 Organized Crime and Racketeering Section

The Organized Crime and Racketeering Section has responsibility for the following civil statutes, except that the Asset Forfeiture Office has responsibility for the remission and mitigation of any forfeitures adjudicated under these statutes:

A. 18 U.S.C. §1083(b) (Transportation of passengers between shore and gambling ships);

B. 18 U.S.C. §1964 (Civil remedies in relation to racketeer influenced and corrupt organizations);

C. Penalties under 26 U.S.C. Subtitle F, relative to the collection of taxes related to gambling or liquor; and

D. Penalties under 26 U.S.C. Subtitle E, Chapter 51, Subchapter J, relating to taxes on liquor, wine, and beer.

9-1.500 RESOURCES AVAILABLE IN CRIMINAL DIVISION

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-1.501 Criminal Division Brief/Memo Bank

The Criminal Division Brief/Memo Bank is a document storage and retrieval system which is designed to offer convenient access to a valuable body of previously prepared legal memoranda and briefs to Division personnel, U.S. Attorneys and their staffs, and other Department personnel dealing with criminal matters. These materials can be of great help in avoiding needless duplication of work efforts, and in permitting legal research to be performed more thoroughly and expeditiously. The types of materials which are collected, indexed, and filed in this system include:

- A. Supreme Court and Court of Appeals briefs;
- B. Legal memoranda or letters to U.S. Attorneys and others prepared by Division attorneys bearing on statutory interpretations, criminal procedural and constitutional issues, or Division policy;
- C. Department and Division orders and directives;
- D. Speeches or Congressional testimony;
- E. Solicitor General appeal memoranda;
- F. Division communications or agreements with other government agencies; and
- G. Miscellaneous materials prepared by U.S. Attorneys and attorneys in other agencies.

A topical indexing system specially developed for the Criminal Division Brief/Memo Bank is currently in use. In addition to this topical index, separate indices maintained by statutory (U.S.C.) citation, regulatory (C.F.R.) citation, and Federal Rule numbers permit access to documents bearing on these subjects. Finally, a separate index is maintained to cover statements of internal policies and procedures.

The Brief/Memo Bank is maintained by the Legal Reference Unit of the Office of Enforcement Operations, FTS 724-7184. All requests for information contained in this system should be directed to that office. The requester should define as clearly and specifically as possible the legal question or issue to be addressed, so as to enable the personnel in the Legal Reference Unit to check all possible index locations for the information.

Whenever a U.S. Attorney, or other attorney in the Department, prepares a definitive memorandum on a novel legal question or issue in the area of criminal law, it would be appreciated if a copy of the memorandum is forwarded to the Office of Enforcement Operations, Room 302, Federal Triangle Building, 315 9th Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20530. With full cooperation from all U.S. Attorneys, Division personnel, and other Department attorneys, the Brief/Memo Bank will be of more assistance to all who wish to use it.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

The Legal Reference Unit also maintains a partial list of Department numbered memoranda, which were issued prior to the 1977 version of the USAM. This list indicates memoranda which have been cancelled, and includes references to the superseding USAM provisions, as well as those that are obsolete and not contained in the USAM. Memoranda not contained on this list remain effective. See USAM 1-1.200.

9-1.502 Case Citations

Personnel of the Legal Reference Unit, Office of Enforcement Operations, will check case citations through JURIS for those U.S. Attorneys' offices not having their own JURIS facilities. For this service, contact the Legal Reference Unit at FTS 724-7184.

9-1.503 Legislative Histories

Legislative histories of statutes assigned to the Criminal Division are maintained by the Legislative Reference Unit, Office of Enforcement Operations. Information concerning legislative histories may be obtained by writing to the Office of Enforcement Operations or by calling FTS 724-6657. When requesting a specific legislative history, considerable time will be saved by referring to the Public Law as it is set forth in the following list which includes the legislative history of each statute assigned to the Criminal Division since 1946 and many enacted prior thereto.

PURPOSE: This bluesheet is an extension of the policy that cases involving internal security, the national security, or foreign relations shall not be instituted without the express authorization of the Criminal Division or higher authority.

The following should be substituted for the material at USAM 9-2.132:

9-2.132 Internal Security Matters

A. Statutory Violations - Consultation Requirements

Prosecution of a case involving internal security, the national security or foreign relations shall not be instituted without the express authorization of the Criminal Division or higher authority.

Such authorization is required if the offense involves a violation of the following:

1. Advocacy of Violent Overthrow of Government (18 U.S.C. §2385); and related statutes (18 U.S.C. Chapter 115), see USAM 9-90.910;
2. Atomic Energy Act (42 U.S.C. §§2274-2278 and §2284, and certain violations of 42 U.S.C. §§2011-2273 and §§2280-2283) [AG approval is required for prosecutions brought pursuant to 42 U.S.C. §§2273-2276], see USAM 9-90.100 et seq.;
3. Espionage (18 U.S.C. §§792-799, and 50 U.S.C. §783), see USAM 9-90.300 et seq.;

19. Seditious Conspiracy (18 U.S.C. §2384), see USAM 9-90.860.

Prior authorization is required if any of the above statutes are incidentally involved as, for example, where the violation is being an accessory after the fact, harboring, jumping bail, or obstructing justice.

B. Classified Information Procedures Act (CIPA)

The Internal Security Section is responsible for the implementation of the Classified Information Procedures Act (18 U.S.C. App. (Supp. V. 1981)), and is to be consulted in any case in which there is a possibility that classified information will be disclosed in litigation or will play a role in any prosecutive decision. PURPOSE: This bluesheet implements a new investigative and prosecutive policy regarding violations of federal criminal law outside of the United States by terrorists.

The following is a new section:

9-2.136 Investigative and Prosecutive Policy for International Terrorism Matters

Faced with the growing threat of international terrorism and in order to implement this nation's obligations under various international conventions designed to prevent and punish acts of terrorism, Congress has enacted significant new legislation to expand the jurisdiction of the United States to investigate and prosecute terrorist activities occurring outside the territorial jurisdiction of the United States. In view of the greatly expanding federal criminal jurisdiction over international terrorist incidents and the obvious need to ensure a well-coordinated federal response to such incidents, the following policy is established in regard to terrorist acts committed outside the territorial jurisdiction of the United States over which federal criminal jurisdiction exists. No United States Attorney is to initiate a criminal investigation, commence grand jury proceedings, file an information or complaint, or seek the return of an indictment in matters involving overseas terrorism without the express authorization of the Assistant Attorney General of the Criminal Division. Overseas terrorist situations will undoubtedly entail coordination with one or more foreign governments and such coordination is best accomplished by and through the Department in consultation with the Department of State. Moreover, the uncertainty of venue for federal crimes committed overseas (see 18 U.S.C. 3238) requires a coordinated prosecutive response.

Communications from the U.S. Attorney requesting the necessary authorization for international terrorism matters shall be directed to the General Litigation and Legal Advice Section (FTS 724-6948 or 724-7083). After business hours, the Chief of the Section, Lawrence Lippe, can be reached by calling the main Department of Justice operator at FTS 633-2000 and asking that he be paged. If there is any question about whether the matter involves international terrorism, all doubt should be resolved in favor of consultation with the General Litigation and Legal Advice Section. If the substantive offense is within the area of responsibility of another Section of the Criminal Division (e.g., Murder for Hire - Organized Crime Section; Arms Export Control Act - Internal Security Section), the General Litigation and Legal Advice Section will coordinate the matter with that Section.

Listed below are the key statutes which represent the intent of Congress to expand the jurisdiction of the United States to investigate and prosecute terrorist activities outside the territory of the United States and describe the various federal criminal offenses (including conspiracy, 18 U.S.C. 371, 1117) that overseas terrorists may commit:

1. Aircraft Piracy and Related Offenses (49 U.S.C. App. 1472 (i-n)): Pursuant to The Hague Convention, the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 prohibits the seizure, by force or violence, of any aircraft within the special aircraft jurisdiction of the United States, 1/ interference with flight crew members while aboard such aircraft, the carrying of concealed weapons or explosives aboard such aircraft, and the commission of certain crimes, including murder (18 U.S.C. 1111), manslaughter (18 U.S.C. 1112), maiming (18 U.S.C. 114), rape (18 U.S.C. 2031), assault (18 U.S.C. 113) and robbery (18 U.S.C. 2111), while aboard such aircraft. The Act also empowers the United States to prosecute aircraft piracy outside the special aircraft jurisdiction of the United States if the foreign civil aircraft was in flight at the time of its hijacking and if the hijacker is subsequently found in the United States after the air piracy. The Federal Aviation Act authorizes the Government to seek the death penalty if the death of another person results from aircraft piracy as defined in this statute. Aircraft piracy is currently the only federal offense for which there is a constitutional mechanism for imposing the death penalty. See 49 U.S.C. App. 1473(c). See also, USAM 9-63.100, infra.

1/ The definition of "special aircraft jurisdiction of the United States" is found at 49 U.S.C. App. 1301 (38). To be within the "special aircraft jurisdiction of the United States" the aircraft must be "in flight." Among the aircraft covered are all United States civilian and military aircraft (anywhere in the world as long as they are "in flight"), foreign aircraft within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States, and certain foreign civil aircraft that land in the United States after certain crimes have been committed aboard the aircraft while it was in flight outside of the United States.

2. Aircraft Sabotage (18 U.S.C. 32): Amendments to 18 U.S.C. 32 enacted in 1984 expand United States jurisdiction over aircraft sabotage to include destruction of any aircraft in the special aircraft jurisdiction of the United States or any civil aircraft used, operated or employed in interstate, overseas, or foreign air commerce. This statute now also makes it a federal offense to commit an act of violence against any person on the aircraft, not simply crew members, if the act is likely to endanger the safety of the aircraft. In addition, the United States is now obliged under the statute to prosecute any person who destroys a foreign civil aircraft outside of the United States if the offender is later found in the United States. See USAM 9-63.200, infra.
3. Crimes Against Immediate Family of a High Ranking Federal Official (18 U.S.C. 115): The United States now has jurisdiction to prosecute the murder, kidnaping or assault of a member of the immediate family of certain federal officials where such crimes are committed with the intent to interfere with those federal officials in the performance of their duties or are committed to retaliate against those officials for the performance of their duties. The immediate family members of the President, Vice President, Members of Congress, all federal judges, the heads of Executive agencies, the Director of the CIA and federal law enforcement officials are covered by this statute. See USAM 9-65.900, infra.
4. Crimes Against Internationally Protected Persons (18 U.S.C. 112, 878, 1116, 1201(a)(4)): Enacted to implement United States treaty obligations under two international conventions concerning terrorist acts that threaten the maintenance of normal international relations, federal statutes specifically protect any Chief of State, head of government or Foreign Minister and their families when they are out of their own country. As a general rule, they also protect diplomatic personnel protected by the Vienna Conventions while they are out of their own country. Whoever murders, kidnaps, assaults or threatens internationally protected persons can be prosecuted by the United States, whether or not the offense was committed in the United States and regardless of the nationality of either the victim or the offender, if the United States is able to obtain personal jurisdiction over the offender. See USAM 9-65.800, infra.

5. Crimes Against Select United States Officials (18 U.S.C. 111, 351, 1114, 1201(a)(5), 1751): The United States has jurisdiction to prosecute the murder, kidnaping or assault of its major Government officials: the President and his staff, the Vice President and his staff (§ 1751), Members of Congress, Supreme Court Justices, the heads of Executive Departments and their second in command, the Director and Deputy Director of the CIA (§ 351), and designated law enforcement officials (§§ 111, 1114, 1201). In 1984, 18 U.S.C. 1114 was amended to expand the group of protected federal officials to include intelligence officials and additional law enforcement personnel. The Attorney General was also empowered by this amendment to promulgate regulations to add other federal employees to the group of protected employees. See USAM 9-65.100, .300, .600, and .700, infra.
6. Crimes Committed Within the Special Maritime Jurisdiction of the United States (18 U.S.C. 7, 113, 114, 1111, 1112, 1201, 2031, 2111): The "special maritime and territorial jurisdiction of the United States" has been expanded to include any place outside the jurisdiction of any nation when the offense is committed by or against a national of the United States (see 18 U.S.C. 7(7)). Among the offenses within the special maritime and territorial jurisdiction of the United States are the crimes of murder, manslaughter, maiming, kidnapping, rape, assault, and robbery. Pursuant to 18 U.S.C. 7(1) there is also jurisdiction over such offenses when they are committed on the high seas or any other waters within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States that is out of the jurisdiction of any particular state. Arguably, this prosecutive authority exists regardless of the nationality of the person committing the enumerated crimes on the high seas if the crimes are committed against United States citizens or are committed on United States civil or military vessels. See USAM 9-200.100, infra.

7. Hostage Taking (18 U.S.C. 1203): In 1984, Congress enacted the hostage taking statute to implement the International Convention Against the Taking of Hostages. The statute became effective on January 6, 1985. Hostage taking is defined as the seizing or detention of an individual coupled with a threat to kill, injure or continue to detain such individual in order to compel a third person or governmental organization to take some action. The United States has jurisdiction over the taking of hostages outside the United States (a) if the perpetrator or a hostage is a United States national, (b) if the perpetrator is found in the United States regardless of his nationality, or (c) if the United States is the Government coerced by the hostage taker. See USAM 9-60.700, infra.
8. International Traffic in Arms Regulations: Under the authority of the Arms Export Control Act (22 U.S.C. 2778), the United States has long required under the International Traffic in Arms Regulations (ITAR) (22 C.F.R. Part 120 - Part 130) that a license be obtained from the Department of State to export any item on the Munitions List (22 C.F.R. 121.1 - .15) (i.e., certain firearms, military aircraft, military explosives, etc.). Since January 1, 1985, however, the ITAR has been modified to require a license for anyone in the United States to train any foreign national (who is not a permanent resident alien of the United States) in the use, maintenance, repair or construction of an item on the Munitions List. Moreover, if the service relating to an item on the Munitions List is to be provided overseas, an American national is likewise required to obtain a license before providing any training to foreign nationals regarding such item or before actually operating, repairing, or constructing such item on behalf of any foreign entity. See USAM 9-90.520, infra.
9. Murder for Hire (18 U.S.C. 1952A): The United States may now prosecute anyone who travels or uses facilities in foreign commerce with the intent to murder for pecuniary compensation. See USAM 9-110.800, infra.
10. Piracy (18 U.S.C. 1651): Since 1819, the United States has had jurisdiction to prosecute anyone who commits the crime of piracy, as defined by the law of nations, on the high seas and is later brought to or found in the United States.

The following is to be added at the end of section 9-2.136.

(11) Terrorist Acts Abroad Against United States Nationals

On August <sup>27</sup>28, 1986, the President signed Pub.L. 99-399, the Omnibus Diplomatic Security and Antiterrorism Act of 1986. Section 1202 of the Act created a new section 2331 of title 18, U.S.C. that makes it a federal crime for a terrorist overseas to kill a United States national, attempt to murder a United States national, conspire to murder a United States national, or to engage in physical violence with the intent to cause serious bodily injury to a United States national or with the result that serious bodily injury is caused to a United States national. Prosecution for any offense under section 2331 requires the written certification of the Attorney General or the highest ranking subordinate of the Attorney General with responsibility for criminal prosecutions.

PURPOSE: This bluesheet establishes the policy of requiring Assistant United States Attorneys and Departmental Attorneys working on matters within the jurisdiction of the offices of International Affairs to notify and consult with that office before contacting foreign authorities.

9-2.151 International Matters

The Criminal Division's Office of International Affairs (724-7600) should be consulted before contacting any foreign or State Department official in matters relating to extradition of a fugitive or the obtaining of evidence in a criminal investigation or prosecution.

Any proposed contact with persons, other than United States investigative agents, in a foreign country for the purpose of obtaining the extradition of a fugitive or evidence should first be discussed with the Office of International Affairs, Criminal Division. See USAM 9-4.540.

Before attempting to do any act in Switzerland or other continental European countries relating to a criminal investigation or prosecution, including contacting a witness by telephone or mail, prior approval should be obtained from the Office of International Affairs. See USAM 9-4.541.

Before issuing any subpoena to obtain records located in a foreign country, and before seeking the enforcement of any such subpoena, approval must be obtained from the Office of International Affairs. See USAM 9-4.543. Similarly, prior approval from the Office of International Affairs must be obtained with respect to serving a subpoena on an officer of, or attorney for, a foreign bank or corporation, who is temporarily in, or passing through the United States, when the testimony sought relates to the officer's or attorney's duties in connection with the operation of the bank or corporation.

9-2.161(a) Policy With Regard to the Issuance of Grand Jury or Trial Subpoenas to Attorneys for Information Relating to the Representation of Clients.

Because of the potential effects upon an attorney-client relationship that may result from the issuance of a subpoena to an attorney for information relating to the representation of a client, it is important that the Department exercise close control over the issuance of such subpoenas. Therefore, the following guidelines shall be adhered to by all members of the Department in any matter involving a grand jury or trial subpoena:

A. In determining whether to issue a subpoena in any matter to an attorney for information relating to the representation of a client, the approach must be to strike the proper balance between the public's interest in the fair administration of justice and effective law enforcement and individual's right to the effective assistance of counsel.

B. All reasonable attempts shall be made to obtain information from alternative sources before issuing a subpoena to an attorney for information relating to the representation of a client, unless such efforts would compromise a criminal investigation or prosecution or would impair the ability to obtain such information from an attorney if such attempts prove unsuccessful.

C. All reasonable attempts shall be made to voluntarily obtain information from an attorney before issuing a subpoena to an attorney for information relating to the representation of a client, unless such efforts would compromise a criminal investigation or prosecution or would impair the ability to subpoena such information from the attorney if such attempts prove unsuccessful.

D. No subpoena may be issued in any matter to an attorney for information relating to the representation of a client without the express authorization of the Assistant Attorney General of the Criminal Division.

<sup>E</sup> F. In approving the issuance of a subpoena in any matter to an attorney for information relating to the representation of a client, the Assistant Attorney General of the Criminal Division shall apply the following principles:

- (1) In a criminal investigation or prosecution, there must be reasonable grounds to believe that a crime has been or is being committed and that the information sought is reasonably needed for the successful completion of the investigation or prosecution. The subpoena must not be used to obtain peripheral or speculative information;
- (2) In a civil case, there must be reasonable grounds to believe that the information sought is reasonably necessary to the successful completion of the litigation.

- (3) All reasonable attempts to obtain the information from alternative sources shall have proved to be unsuccessful;
- (4) The reasonable need for the information must outweigh the potential adverse effects upon the attorney-client relationship. In particular, the need for the information must outweigh the risk that the attorney will be disqualified from representation of the client as a result of having to testify against the client;
- (5) Subpoenas shall be narrowly drawn and directed at material information regarding a limited subject matter and shall cover a reasonably limited period of time; and
- (6) The information sought shall not be protected by a valid claim of privilege.

These guidelines on the issuance of grand jury or trial subpoenas to attorneys for information relating to the representation of clients are set forth solely for the purpose of internal Department of Justice guidance. They are not intended to, do not, and may not be relied upon to create any rights, substantive or procedural, enforceable at law by any party in any matter, civil or criminal, nor do they place any limitations on otherwise lawful investigative or litigative prerogatives of the Department of Justice.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-2.000 AUTHORITY OF U.S. ATTORNEY IN CRIMINAL DIVISION MATTERS

The U.S. Attorney, within his/her district, has plenary authority with regard to federal criminal matters. This authority is exercised under the supervision and direction of the Attorney General and his/her delegates.

The statutory duty to prosecute for all offenses against the United States carries with it the authority necessary to perform this duty. The U.S. Attorney is invested by statute and delegation from the Attorney General with the broadest discretion in the exercise of such authority.

The authority, discretionary power, and responsibilities of the U.S. Attorney with relation to criminal matters encompass without limitation by enumeration the following:

A. Investigating suspected or alleged offenses against the United States, see USAM 9-2.010, infra;

B. Causing investigations to be conducted by the appropriate federal law enforcement agencies, see id.;

C. Declining prosecution, see USAM 9-2.020, infra;

D. Authorizing prosecution, see USAM 9-2.030, infra;

E. Determining the manner of prosecuting and deciding trial related questions;

F. Recommending to appeal or not to appeal from an adverse ruling or decision, see USAM 9-2.171, infra;

G. Dismissing prosecutions, see USAM 9-2.050, infra; and

H. Handling civil matters related thereto which are under the supervision of the Criminal Division. See also USAM 9-27.000.

9-2.010 Investigations

The U.S. Attorney, as the chief federal law enforcement officer in his/her district, is authorized to request the appropriate federal investigative agency to investigate alleged or suspected violations of federal law. The federal investigators operate under the hierarchical supervision of their bureau or agency and consequently are not ordinarily subject to direct supervision by the U.S. Attorney. If the U.S. Attorney requests an investigation and does not receive a timely preliminary report, he/she may wish to consider requesting the assistance of the Criminal Division.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

In certain matters the U.S. Attorney may wish to request the formation of a team of agents representing the agencies having investigative jurisdiction of the suspected violations.

The grand jury may be utilized by the U.S. Attorney to investigate alleged or suspected violations of federal law. Unless circumstances dictate otherwise, a grand jury investigation should not be opened without consultation with the investigative agency or agencies having investigative jurisdiction of the alleged or suspected offense. See also USAM 9-17.200.

9-2.020 Declining Prosecution

The U.S. Attorney is authorized to decline prosecution in any case referred directly to him/her by an agency unless a statute provides otherwise. See USAM 9-2.111, infra. Whenever a case is closed without prosecution, the U.S. Attorney's files should reflect the action taken and the reason for it. See also USAM 9-27.000.

9-2.021 Armed Forces Enlistment as an Alternative to Federal Prosecution

Present regulations of the Armed Services prohibit the enlistment of an individual against whom criminal or juvenile charges are pending or against whom the charges have been dismissed to facilitate the individual's enlistment. This policy is based, in part, on the premise that the individual who enlists under such conditions is not properly motivated to become an effective member of the Armed Forces.

Determination as to whether prosecution should be instituted or pending criminal charges dismissed in any case should be made on the basis of whether the public interest would thereby best be served and without reference to possible military service on the part of the subject. The Armed Forces are not to be regarded as correctional institutions and U.S. Attorneys are urged to give full cooperation to the Department of Defense in the latter's efforts to ensure a highly motivated all-volunteer Armed Forces and to bolster public confidence in military service as a respectable and honorable profession.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

There may be exceptional cases in which imminent military service, together with other factors, may be considered in deciding to decline prosecution if the offense is trivial or insubstantial, the offender is generally of good character, has no record or habits of anti-social behavior, and does not require rehabilitation through existing criminal institutional methods, and failure to prosecute will not seriously impair observance of the law in question or respect for law generally. In no case, however, should the U.S. Attorney be a party to, or encourage, an agreement respecting foregoing criminal prosecution in exchange for enlistment in the Armed Services.

9-2.022 Pre-trial Diversion as an Alternative to Federal Prosecution

A U.S. Attorney may consider Pre-trial Diversion as an alternative to federal criminal prosecution. Details of the operation of the Pre-trial Diversion program are set forth at USAM 1-12.000. Authorization from the Criminal Division is required to utilize Pre-trial Diversion if the offense is one listed in USAM 1-12.100.

9-2.023 Controlled Substance Prosecution--Referral to State or Local Prosecutors

General guidelines for prosecuting Controlled Substance violations have been established. See USAM 9-101.400.

9-2.024 Prosecution Under 18 U.S.C. §641 for Theft of Government Information

18 U.S.C. §641 prohibits theft of government information as well as theft of the documents which contain the information. See United States v. Girard, 601 F.2d 69 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 871 (1979); United States v. DiGilio, 538 F.2d 972 (3d Cir. 1976), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 1038 (1977). Nevertheless, for the reasons set forth below, the Criminal Division believes that it is inappropriate to bring a prosecution under 18 U.S.C. §641 when:

A. The subject of the theft is intangible property, i.e., government information owned by, or under the care, custody, or control of the United States;

B. The defendant obtained or used the property primarily for the purpose of disseminating it to the public; and

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

C. The property was not obtained as a result of wiretapping, 18 U.S.C. §2511, interception of correspondence, 18 U.S.C. §§1702, 1708, criminal entry, or criminal or civil trespass.

There are two reasons for the policy. First, it protects "whistle-blowers." Thus, under this policy, a government employee who, for the primary purpose of public exposure of the material, reveals a government document to which he/she gained access lawfully or by non-trespassory means would not be subject to criminal prosecution for the theft. Second, the policy is designed to protect members of the press from the threat of being prosecuted for theft or receipt of stolen property when, motivated primarily by the interest in public dissemination thereof, they publish information owned by or under the custody of the government after they obtained such information by other than trespassory means.

The Criminal Division does not intend, in promulgating this policy, to prevent or discourage prosecutions under any other applicable statutes, such as those prohibiting the unauthorized dissemination or possession of government information, e.g., 18 U.S.C. §§793, 794, 1905, or 50 U.S.C. §783. Instead, the Division's purpose is to require that, in the circumstances enumerated above, such cases are prosecuted under these other applicable statutes rather than under 18 U.S.C. §641.

The adoption of this policy does not alter the responsibility of government employees to maintain the confidentiality of sensitive government information disclosed to them in the course of their employment.

9-2.025 Prosecution Under 18 U.S.C. §1905--Trade Secrets Act

18 U.S.C. §1905 prohibits the disclosure of various forms of confidential information. There are no reported annotations dealing with prosecution under this statute and a wide divergence of views exist as to the proper scope of this section and its interface with the Freedom of Information Act. The problems have been exacerbated by the decision of the Supreme Court in Chrysler Corporation v. Brown, 441 U.S. 281 (1979), and the confusion engendered as to the propriety of releases made pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act of material that arguably could fall within the meaning of 18 U.S.C. §1905. Accordingly, it is the policy of the Criminal Division not to prosecute government employees for a violation of 18 U.S.C. §1905 if the release of information in question was made in a good faith effort to comply with the Freedom of Information Act and the appropriate applicable regulations. Prior to initiating an action involving a potential violation of 18 U.S.C. §1905, the U.S. Attorney shall consult with the Public Integrity Section as set forth in USAM 9-2.133, infra.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

9-2.030 Authorizing Prosecution

The U.S. Attorney is authorized to initiate prosecution by filing a complaint, requesting an indictment from the grand jury, and, when permitted by law, by filing an information in any case which, in his/her judgment, warrants such action, other than those instances enumerated in USAM 9-2.120, infra. See also USAM 9-27.200.

In arriving at his/her decision, the U.S. Attorney should consider the recommendations for prosecution of the specific offense involved set forth in the chapters discussing substantive offenses. See USAM 9-40.000. The recommendations are instructive only and not mandatory. Consult the index under the particular offense to locate any prosecutive recommendations.

9-2.031 Prosecution of Phencyclidine (PCP) Users

U.S. Attorneys should consider prosecuting any significant cases of illicit PCP manufacture to the full extent of available resources. Medical evidence indicates that for certain users, PCP can cause a schizophrenia-like psychosis characterized by violent behavior. The effect can last for two to three weeks and during that period patients require isolation and treatment by mental health professionals.

The problem of PCP is compounded by the ease with which it can be illicitly manufactured using the most elementary chemical processes. There is no approved human use of PCP; rather, its sole legitimate use is as a tranquilizer for large animals. There is very little diversion from this licit use; the problem is predominantly illicit manufacture. PCP is clearly dangerous to anyone who uses it and those who manufacture and sell this drug for easy profit should be prosecuted.

9-2.040 Dismissal of Complaints

The U.S. Attorney may dismiss a criminal complaint without prior authorization from the Criminal Division except in the instances enumerated in USAM 9-2.134, infra, and 9-2.145, infra. However, Rule 48(a), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, requires leave of court for dismissal of a complaint, as discussed infra. See also USAM 9-27.000.

If the person charged in a complaint has been bound over for grand jury action, the complaint may be dismissed by the U.S. Attorney only by leave of court. Leave of court may be given by a blanket authorization to dismiss complaints. If such authorization has not been given, leave of court must be obtained in each particular case.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

Whether leave of court is required to dismiss a complaint prior to the defendant being bound over for grand jury action has not been judicially settled. The U.S. Attorney must be governed by the interpretation of Fed. R. Crim. P. 48(a) by the court in his/her district. The view that leave of court is not required to dismiss a complaint prior to the person charged being bound over is supported by the control over complaints given to judicial officers by Rules 4 and 5, Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. Under those rules, a judicial officer may issue a warrant, may discharge a defendant, and may cancel an unexecuted warrant of arrest. It would seem, therefore, that the judicial officer can exercise a like control over a complaint prior to his/her decision to bind over the defendant and that leave of the court is not required.

9-2.041 Cancellation of Unexecuted Arrest Warrants

Care should be taken that the Marshal of the district is promptly informed by the U.S. Attorney of the dismissal of a complaint, whether by the court or a judicial officer, in order to facilitate cancellations of unexecuted arrest warrants as provided in Rule 4(d)(4), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. Such notification is also important when a warrant of arrest is outstanding in connection with a detainer lodged against a defendant who is confined in another district. Since the warrant will have been forwarded by the Marshal of the district where it was issued to the Marshal in the district of detention, the warrant will have to be returned to the Marshal of the issuing district for cancellation by the judicial officer after the complaint has been dismissed.

9-2.050 Dismissal of Indictments and Informations

The U.S. Attorney may move for leave of court to dismiss an indictment or information, in whole or in part, without prior authorization from the Criminal Division except in the instances enumerated in USAM 9-2.134, infra, and 9-2.145, infra. The U.S. Attorney may in any case request the views of the Criminal Division as to the dismissal of any indictment or information. Prior to dismissing an indictment the U.S. Attorney should consult with the referring department or agency, and also seek to obtain the views of the investigative agency involved in the matter.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Whenever the U.S. Attorney concludes that dismissal is warranted, he/she should take prompt action to dismiss. However, an indictment should not be dismissed merely because the defendant is a fugitive.

Rule 48(a), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, requires leave of court for dismissal of an indictment or information by the U.S. Attorney. A dismissal by the U.S. Attorney may not be filed during the trial without the consent of the defendant. See Fed. R. Crim. P. 48(a). The court may decline leave to dismiss if the manifest public interest requires it. See Rinaldi v. United States, 434 U.S. 22 (1977); United States v. Hamm, 659 F.2d 624 (5th Cir. 1981) (and cases cited therein).

In moving for leave to dismiss, the local practice should be followed. However, in cases of considerable public interest or importance where dismissal of the entire indictment or information is sought because of an inability to establish a prima facie case, a written motion for leave to dismiss should be filed explaining fully the reason for the request. The importance of the case is not to be measured simply by the punishment prescribed for the offense. If the case involves fraud against the government, bribery, or a similarly important matter, or if any other department or branch of the government is specially interested, it is recommended that the written form of motion be used. See USAM 9-2.051, infra.

Often it is desirable to dismiss actions against defendants committed to federal custody either for psychiatric examination, 18 U.S.C. §4244, or until mental competency is restored for trial, 18 U.S.C. §4246, when it appears unlikely that competency will be regained. Dismissal in such cases is made contingent upon commitment to a state mental hospital. The Bureau of Prisons and the Medical Center for Federal Prisoners, Springfield, Missouri, should be given notice well in advance of dismissal, since authority to hold the defendant in custody is based on the complaint or indictment. In cases involving dismissals of prosecution under 18 U.S.C. §871, the Secret Service should be notified.

In every case of a dismissal, the file should reflect the reasons for the dismissal.

See also USAM 9-27.000.

9-2.060 Appeals

The authority of the U.S. Attorney with relation to appeals is set forth at USAM 9-2.171, infra. See also USAM Title 2.

9-2.100 LIMITATIONS ON U.S. ATTORNEYS

Limitations on actions of the U.S. Attorney in criminal matters assigned to the Criminal Division are imposed by statutes and by policies of the Department. The statutory limitations are listed at USAM 9-2.110, infra. The policy limitations are listed at USAM 9-2.120, infra. See also USAM 9-27.000.

9-2.101 American Bar Association Standards for Criminal Justice

The American Bar Association Standards for Criminal Justice have not been adopted as official policy by the Department; however, since the courts utilize the Standards in determining issues covered by them, it is recommended that all U.S. Attorneys familiarize themselves with them. A Table of Standards cited appears in each issue of the Advance Sheets of the Federal Reporter, Second Series.

9-2.102 Omnibus and Other Pre-trial Standards

The Justice Department is committed to the nationwide and uniform procedure for the disposition of criminal cases as is provided for in the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure and applicable federal statutes. In view of this commitment, it necessarily follows that we have been and continue to be opposed to local rules, or the establishment of standards such as the ABA Omnibus Standards and other pre-trial standards, which are inconsistent with, or contrary to, the provisions of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure and applicable federal law, e.g., 18 U.S.C. §3500.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Reasons for the Department's position in these matters have been stated from time to time, most notably during the 1974-75 Congressional Hearings on the amendments to the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, and have resulted in our position being sustained. See USAM 9-2.103, infra.

Any disclosures by the executive branch in excess of those required by the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure and law are within the sole discretion of the executive. Such disclosures are exercised on a case-by-case, or individual, basis after giving due consideration to the interests of the United States protected by the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, statutes, regulations, and to the policies of the Department of Justice. In our opinion, judicial supervision of the executive branch in the exercise of such discretionary discovery is improper, not only as a legal proposition, but as a needless and impractical burden upon the already overtaxed judiciary.

In the goal of achieving speedy disposition of criminal cases in the federal system, the 1975 amendments to the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, and enactment of the 1976 amendments recently forwarded to Congress, should prove most beneficial. Rule 16, Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, was amended to eliminate or reduce the necessity of motions. Rule 11, Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, establishes for the first time a plea agreement procedure and requires an extensive record to insure the voluntariness of pleas of guilty. This procedure should significantly reduce the probability of successful habeas corpus attacks. Rule 12, Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, in providing that motions may be written or oral and in making provision for pre-trial notice of intention to use evidence, should assist in the speedy disposition of cases. The provisions for notice of alibi, Rule 12.1, Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, and notice of defense based on mental condition, Rule 12.2, Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, likewise should expedite the trial of criminal cases. In some cases the provisions of Rule 15, Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, providing for depositions in exceptional circumstances, should prove beneficial. Finally, Rule 32, Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, as amended, provides for disclosure to defendant, and reciprocal discovery to the government, of specified information contained in the presentence report, and also accords to the attorney for the government an equal opportunity for allocation.

We believe that adherence to the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure and applicable statutes provides for the balanced, expeditious, fair, orderly, and proper means for disposition of criminal cases in the federal system. Proposals for changes in the federal criminal system should be made in accordance with the federal statutory rule-making process, 18 U.S.C. §§3771-3772, and not by adoption of standards or local rules inconsistent with, or contrary to, the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure and applicable federal statutes. The Department cannot accept as appropriate or helpful a local rule establishing omnibus pre-trial procedures.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-2.103 Appendix

For example, the Department opposed pre-trial disclosure of witnesses. Senator McClellan, in explaining the Judiciary Committee's rejection of a proposed rule that would have required disclosure of witness lists, stated:

During the hearings, the committee heard vigorous testimony on both sides of this....Our proposed amendment reflects a conviction that the rules concerning the disclosure of witnesses should be stricken. Although their purpose is to enhance fairness, any minor enhancement of fairness in the criminal trial process that might flow from compulsory pretrial exchange of witness lists should not be at the expense of witnesses and victims of crime. It should be emphasized that criminal trials today are not unfair. Defendants enjoy more rights under our federal criminal justice system than defendants under the laws of any other nation. As examples, our law requires defendants to be given ample pretrial notice. The indictment itself must contain a statement of all the essential facts. Defendants may then be given bills of particulars elaborating the facts charged. Defendants can use present rule 16 to obtain their own statements and grand jury testimony, if any, as well as copies of reports of examinations and tests, and of other books, papers, documents, and tangible objects material to the case. Additional discovery is given informally by Federal prosecutors in many cases, in an effort to induce a guilty plea by acquainting the defendant and his counsel with the strength of the Government's evidence. Moreover, in the very rare situation where a defendant may properly claim unfair surprise from the calling of a particular Government witness, a continuance may be granted by the court.

In short, the case has not been made for pretrial disclosure of witnesses in the face of potential harm.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Indeed, pretrial disclosure of witness could weaken the search for truth in the criminal trial. Unscrupulous defendants would use the information obtained with respect to the identity of the government's witnesses to tailor their defenses and fabricate alibis....

The exposure of witness to intimidation and reprisals, moreover, has another aspect in terms of its predictably chilling effect on the willingness of people to come forward and testify in serious felony cases. Obtaining the public's cooperation with law enforcement is a serious problem. Anyone who has been a witness knows that it is a real sacrifice and often a terrifying experience to cooperate and testify in our criminal system, although it is a burden many witnesses are more than willing to assume.

121 Cong. Rec. S1286, 1287 (daily ed. July 17, 1975).

Finally, in presenting the conference report on the issue involving pre-trial disclosure of witnesses, Senator McClellan explained:

Mr. President, one of those issues involves pre-trial disclosures of witness lists. The conferees adopted the Senate version which deleted provisions for discovery of witness lists (rules 16(a)(1)(E) and (b)(1)(C)). As stated in the joint explanation statement of the committee of conference:

A majority of the Conferees believe it is not in the interest of the effective administration of criminal justice to require that the government or defendant be forced to reveal the names and addresses of its witnesses before trial. Discouragement of witnesses and improper contacts directed at influencing their testimony, were deemed paramount concerns in the formulation of this policy.

Although it should be obvious, I want to emphasize that the policy choice was directly presented and positively resolved in favor of affording all possible protection and encouragement to witnesses in Federal criminal cases. This includes the ability of the prosecutor to assure a reluctant or fearful witness that his identity will not be divulged to the defendant prior to appearance at trial. Although there may be unusual cases involving fundamental fairness, the congressional decision on this issue should be taken as clear disapproval of the exercise of so-called inherent power by the courts to fashion local rules or individual orders calling for discovery of witnesses, see, for example, United States v. Jackson, 508 F.2d 1001, 1006 (7th Cir. 1975) and cases cited therein, except insofar as such discovery may be required to effectuate a party's right to constitutional due process of law.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

121 Cong. Rec. S14301 (daily ed. July 30, 1975).

9-2.110 Statutory Limitations

Certain statutes impose limitations on the authority of the U.S. Attorney to decline prosecution, to prosecute, and to take certain actions relating to the prosecution of criminal cases. These are identified at USAM 9-2.111, infra.

9-2.111 Declinations

If a judge, receiver, or trustee in a case under Title 11, United States Code, has reported to the U.S. Attorney that he/she believes a violation of Chapter 9, Title 11, United States Code, or other laws of the United States relating to insolvent debtors, receiverships, or reorganization plans has been committed, or that an investigation should be had in connection therewith, 18 U.S.C. §3057(a), the U.S. Attorney, if he/she decides upon inquiry and examination that the ends of public justice do not require investigation or prosecution, must report the facts to the Attorney General for his/her direction, 18 U.S.C. §3057(b). The report of the U.S. Attorney should be sent to the Criminal Division, Fraud Section.

Although 18 U.S.C. §2101 (Riots) does not impose a limitation on the authority to decline prosecution, it does provide that, if it is the opinion of the Attorney General or of the appropriate officer of the Department of Justice charged by law or under the instructions of the Attorney General with authority to act, that a person has violated 18 U.S.C. §2101 and if prosecution is not instituted, a report in writing must be submitted to both Houses of Congress setting forth the Department's reason for not proceeding. See 18 U.S.C. §2101(d).

Only the Assistant Attorney General, Criminal Division, the Deputy Attorney General, or the Attorney General can authorize a declination of a prosecution for national security reasons. Classified Information Procedures Act, 18 U.S.C. app. (Supp. V 1981). Accordingly, the Internal Security Section, Criminal Division, is to be consulted in any case in which there is a possibility that prosecution may be declined for national security reasons.

9-2.112 Prosecutions

No prosecution of an offense described in 18 U.S.C. §245 (Federally Protected Activities) may be undertaken by the United States except upon the certification of the Attorney General or Deputy Attorney General that in his/her judgment a prosecution by the United States is in the public interest and necessary to secure substantial justice. The function of certification may not be delegated. See 18 U.S.C. §245(a)(1). The anti-riot provision, 18 U.S.C. §245(b)(3), and violations of 18 U.S.C. §245(b)(1), insofar as it relates to matters not involving discrimination or intimidation on grounds of race, color, religion, or national origin, are assigned to the Criminal Division and requests for certification relating to them should be sent to the Criminal Division.

Prosecutions under 42 U.S.C. §§2272-2276 (Atomic Energy Act) may be brought only on the express direction of the Attorney General. See 42 U.S.C. §2271(c).

Violations of 18 U.S.C. §1073 (Flight to Avoid Prosecution or Giving Testimony) may be prosecuted only upon formal approval in writing by the Attorney General or an Assistant Attorney General. Accordingly, under no circumstances should an indictment under the Act be sought, nor an information be filed, nor should criminal proceedings under Rule 40, Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, be instituted without the written approval of the Assistant Attorney General, Criminal Division. See USAM 9-69.450. No complaint should be authorized in cases involving custody disputes without the express prior approval of the Criminal Division. See USAM 9-69.421.

Prosecution for violations of 18 U.S.C. §659 (Theft from Interstate Shipments) and of 18 U.S.C. §2101 (Riots) are barred if there has been a judgment of conviction or acquittal on the merits under the law of any state for the same act or acts. See 18 U.S.C. §§659, 2101(c). That a federal prosecution for violation of 18 U.S.C. §659 was initiated prior to the commencement of the state prosecution did not prevent dismissal of the federal indictment where state trial on larceny charge resulted in acquittal before defendant was retried on the federal indictment following a remand from the Court of Appeals. See United States v. Evans (D. N.J. November 19, 1968) (D.J. 15-48-368). Solicitor General decided no appeal should be taken not because of 18 U.S.C. §659 but because of the policy against dual prosecution. See USAM 9-2.142, infra.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-2.120 Policy Limitations Generally

Department and Division policies impose limitations on the authority of the U.S. Attorney to decline prosecution, to prosecute, and to take certain actions relating to the prosecution of criminal cases. These are identified at USAM 9-2.131, infra.

With regard to policy limitations, if in the opinion of the U.S. Attorney the exigencies of the situation prevent compliance with a policy, he/she shall take the action deemed appropriate. He/she shall promptly report to the Criminal Division the deviation from policy, or if the policy is established by a higher authority, report to that authority and be guided by the instructions furnished him/her. A written report of the deviation should be promptly made. Approval of the action of the U.S. Attorney or his/her taking action as instructed shall be deemed, for all purposes, to be compliance with the policy. Among the purposes of this language is to ensure that criminals do not escape prosecution by inaction on the part of a U.S. Attorney immobilized by policy; to require a report of deviation from policy in order that the policy may be evaluated; and to express confidence in the judgment, and to reaffirm the authority, of the U.S. Attorney in such a situation.

If the U.S. Attorney discovers that a policy of the Criminal Division or of a higher authority has not been followed because of inadvertance, he/she shall promptly notify the Criminal Division or higher authority of the deviation from policy by the most expeditious means and subsequently in writing. He/she shall be guided by the instructions furnished him/her. Approval of the action of the U.S. Attorney, or his/her taking action as instructed shall be deemed, for all purposes, to be compliance with the policy.

In the instances when the U.S. Attorney is directed to consult with the Criminal Division prior to taking an action, such consultation will typically be by an Assistant U.S. Attorney with an attorney of the section assigned responsibility for the statute or matter involved. See USAM

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-1.200. If there is a disagreement at this level, the matter should be resolved by appropriate higher authority before the disputed action is taken.

See also USAM 9-27.000.

9-2.130 Policy Limitations on Institution of Proceedings

9-2.131 Matters Assumed by Criminal Division or Higher Authority

If primary prosecutorial responsibility for a matter has been assumed by the Criminal Division or higher authority, the U.S. Attorney shall consult with the persons having primary responsibility before conducting grand jury proceedings, seeking indictment, or filing an information.

9-2.132 Internal Security Matters New

Prosecution of a case involving subversive activities shall not be instituted without the express authorization of the Criminal Division or higher authority.

Such authorization is required if the offense involves a violation of the following:

A. Advocacy of Violent Overthrow of Government, 18 U.S.C. §2385, and related statutes, 18 U.S.C. Chapter 115;

B. Atomic Energy Act, 42 U.S.C. §§2274-2277;

C. Espionage, 18 U.S.C. §793 et seq., 50 U.S.C. §783;

D. Fishing in Fishery Conservation Zone by Foreign Fishing Vessels, 16 U.S.C. §1801, et seq.;

E. Foreign Relations and Neutrality, 18 U.S.C. §§951-969;

F. Munitions Control Act, 22 U.S.C. §1934;

G. Passport matters if the individual has a subversive connection or travel to a restricted country is involved, 18 U.S.C. §§1542-1544; 8 U.S.C. §1185(b);

- K. Registration of Person Who Has Knowledge, Received Training in Espionage, etc., 50 U.S.C. §§851-857;
- L. Sabotage, 18 U.S.C. §2151 et seq., and if subversive activities involved, 18 U.S.C. §1362;
- M. Trading with the Enemy Act, 50 U.S.C. App. 5(b); and
- N. Treason, 18 U.S.C. §2381.

Prior authorization is required if any of the above listed statutes are ancillary involved as, for example, where the violation is being an accessory after the fact, harboring, jumping bail, or obstructing justice.

Witnesses subpoenaed in any case involving internal security matters shall not be released without the prior approval of the Division until the proceeding in which the witnesses have been subpoenaed has been concluded. In any procedure relating to internal security matters, U.S. Attorneys and their assistants are cautioned that they are not to interview or subpoena confidential informants of the FBI without consultation and consent of the Division.

9-2.133 Other

The U.S. Attorney shall consult, as set forth at USAM 9-2.120, supra, with the appropriate section of the Criminal Division prior to instituting grand jury proceedings, filing an information, or seeking an indictment if the violation to be charged involves any of the statutes or situations listed below.

9-2.134 Consultation in Other Situations

The U.S. Attorney shall consult (as set forth in USAM 9-2.120, supra) the designated section or office of the Criminal Division in any of the following additional situations:

A. Regarding all offers in compromise in an asset forfeiture proceeding (criminal or civil) where the difference between the offer and the value of the property exceeds $60,000 (Criminal Division Directive No. 116, 1983). (Settlements in cases involving differences exceeding $750,000 must be approved by the Deputy Attorney General (28 C.F.R. 0.161, as amended in 1983) but requests for approval must be processed through the Asset Forfeiture Office.) (See USAM 9-38.000) (Asset Forfeiture Office);

B. Regarding pre-trial diversion of certain individuals and cases involving certain statutes (see USAM 1-12.100) (Office of Enforcement Operations--Witness Records Unit);

C. Prior to dismissing a count involving, or entering into any sentence commitment or other case settlement in a case involving, one or more counts of:

9-2.135 Foreign Corrupt Practices Act Matters

No investigation or prosecution of cases involving alleged violations of Sections 103 and 104, and related violations of Section 102, of the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act of 1977 (15 U.S.C. §§78m(b), 78dd-1, and 78dd-2) shall be instituted without the express authorization of the Criminal Division. See USAM 9-47.120.

9-2.140 Policy Limitations--Prosecutorial and Other Matters

9-2.141 Addition of Counts to Superseding Indictment

When a conviction is vacated (e.g. guilty plea is set aside) and the defendant is thereafter reindicted, the superseding indictment ordinarily should not contain more counts than the original indictment without consultation with the Criminal Division. (See USAM 9-2.120, supra). See United States v. Robison, 307 F. Supp. 403, 408 (N.D. Cal. 1968).

9-2.142 Dual Prosecution and Successive Federal Prosecution Policies

The scope of the Department of Justice's dual and successive federal prosecution policies is discussed separately, infra. Following the specific substantive provisions of these two policies, procedural provisions applicable to both policies are set forth.

A. Dual Prosecution Policy

The Department of Justice's dual prosecution policy precludes the initiation or continuation of a federal prosecution following a state prosecution based on substantially the same act or acts unless there is a compelling federal interest supporting the dual prosecution. The policy is intended to regulate prosecutorial discretion in order to promote efficient utilization of the Department's resources and to protect persons charged with criminal conduct from the unfairness associated with multiple prosecutions and multiple punishments for substantially the same act or acts. See Rinaldi v. United States, 434 U.S. 22, 27 (1977).<sup>1/</sup>

In order to prevent unwarranted dual prosecutions, the policy requires that authorization be obtained from the appropriate Assistant Attorney General prior to initiating or continuing the federal prosecution. A failure to obtain prior authorization of a dual prosecution will result in a loss of any conviction through a dismissal of the charges unless it is later determined that there was in fact a compelling federal interest supporting the prosecution and a compelling reason to explain the failure to obtain prior authorization.

1. Types of Prior State Proceedings Resulting in Application of the Dual Prosecution Policy

The policy applies and authorization must be obtained from the appropriate Assistant Attorney General whenever there has been a

<sup>1/</sup> Although there is no general statutory bar to a federal prosecution where the defendant's conduct has already formed the basis for a state prosecution, Congress has expressly provided that, as to certain specific offenses, a state judgment of conviction or acquittal on the merits shall be a bar to any subsequent federal prosecution for the same act or acts. See 18 U.S.C. §§659, 660, 1992, 2101, 2117; 15 U.S.C. §§80a-36, 1282.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

prior state proceeding (including a plea bargain) resulting in (1) an acquittal, (2) a conviction, or (3) a dismissal or other termination of the case on the merits.2/

Whenever a state proceeding reaches one of the aforementioned stages, whether before or after the return of a federal indictment or the filing of a federal information, authorization from the appropriate Assistant Attorney General must be obtained before a trial may be commenced or a guilty plea accepted on federal charges based on substantially the same act or acts.3/

In order to avoid the unnecessary expenditure of federal resources whenever the initiation of a state proceeding is anticipated in a matter involving overlapping federal jurisdiction, federal prosecutors should not only coordinate their activities with their state counterparts, but also carefully consider whether there is a federal interest warranting a separate federal prosecution.

2. Relationship Between the Act(s) on Which the State Prosecution was Based and the Act(s) on Which the Proposed Prosecution Would Rest

The dual prosecution policy is intended to reach federal prosecutions based on substantially the same act or acts that were

2/ The dual prosecution policy does not apply--and thus authorization is not required--where the state proceeding did not progress to the stage at which jeopardy attached or was terminated in a manner that would not, under the Double Jeopardy Clause, preclude a further state prosecution for the same offense.

3/ Once a trial on the federal charges has commenced, however, the policy does not apply, and authorization need not be sought, even if the state proceeding terminates prior to the completion of the federal proceeding. Where the federal trial results in a mistrial, a dismissal, or a reversal on appeal, the policy applies to prevent a further federal trial after an intervening state proceeding has reached one of the three stages delineated above unless authorization is obtained from the appropriate Assistant Attorney General. Where authorization is not sought or is not granted by the appropriate Assistant Attorney General, the federal prosecutor should seek a voluntary dismissal of the charges.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

involved in a prior state prosecution.<sup>4/</sup> The application of the dual prosecution policy has posed difficult questions in cases where the proposed federal charges encompass, but are not limited to, acts that have previously been prosecuted by the states. Consistent with the Department's common sense, non-technical approach to the scope of the policy, it has been concluded that the policy does not apply where the prior state prosecution involved only a minor part of the federal offense charged. This limitation on the scope of the policy is particularly important for conspiracy prosecutions and for prosecutions under substantive statutes focusing on a continuing course or pattern of criminal conduct, such as 18 U.S.C. §1961 et seq. (Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations) and 21 U.S.C. §848 (Continuing Criminal Enterprise). A federal conspiracy indictment, for example, may allege that a defendant engaged in a number of overt acts in furtherance of the conspiracy and may set forth a number of objectives of the conspiracy. The fact that one, or even several, of the acts or objectives of the conspiracy have been the subject of previous state prosecution does not necessarily render the dual prosecution policy applicable.<sup>5/</sup> The dual prosecution policy would apply and authorization would be required where the prior state substantive prosecution(s) covered most or all of the acts of a defendant in furtherance of the conspiracy alleged in the federal indictment. Similarly, the policy does not apply and authorization would not be required for a RICO prosecution involving a single previously prosecuted extortion as one of a number of alleged acts of racketeering. However, where there would be an insufficient number of acts of racketeering to sustain the RICO charge if the previously prosecuted acts were excluded or where the proposed federal prosecution rests substantially on acts previously prosecuted by the state, the dual prosecution policy applies and authorization must be obtained.

<sup>5/</sup> The nature of the conduct involved in the state prosecution(s) and the state sentence(s) imposed would, of course, constitute important factors in determining whether, as a matter of prosecutorial discretion, a federal prosecution based in part on the previously prosecuted conduct should be brought.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

3. Factors Governing the Authorization of Dual Prosecutions

Requests for the authorization of dual prosecutions will be evaluated on a case-by-case basis by the appropriate Assistant Attorney General. Applications for authority to undertake dual prosecutions should be addressed to the factors set forth and their relative weight. The application will be analyzed to determine whether the overall factors favoring authorization of a dual prosecution outweigh the general policy against multiple prosecutions based on substantially the same act or acts.6/

A federal prosecution will not be authorized unless the state proceeding left substantial federal interests demonstrably unvindicated.7/ Even so, a dual prosecution is not warranted unless a conviction is anticipated and--if the state proceeding resulted in a conviction--normally will not be authorized unless an enhanced sentence in the federal prosecution is anticipated.8/

Where the prior state proceedings result in a conviction, a subsequent prosecution may be warranted if the defendant in the state proceeding was charged with a state offense carrying a maximum penalty substantially below the maximum penalty of the federal offense(s) with which the defendant may be charged.

6/ Where a defendant who has previously been prosecuted in a state proceeding based on the same or substantially the same criminal acts consents to a federal prosecution after being informed of the Department's policy against dual prosecutions, a subsequent federal prosecution may be warranted even if the factors set forth are not satisfied.

7/ The reference in the policy to a "compelling federal interest" or "substantial federal interests" is intended to indicate that a significant federal prosecutorial interest must be present to justify authorization of a dual prosecution. Whether such an interest is present must be evaluated on the basis of the facts and circumstances of each case. However, cases coming within priority areas of the Department--such as civil rights cases, organized crime cases, tax cases, and cases involving crimes against federal officials, witnesses or informants--are, of course, more likely to meet the compelling federal interest requirement. Any determination whether such an interest exists should include the consideration given in the previous proceeding to victim restitution. The inadequate attention to this factor is inconsistent with the rationale of the restitution provisions of the Victim and Witness Protection Act of 1982.

8/ This factor may be satisfied where the state prosecution resulted in a conviction for a misdemeanor and a conviction for a federal felony is anticipated.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

A subsequent prosecution may also be warranted where there is a substantial basis for believing that the choice by either the prosecutor or grand jury of the state charges which were filed or the state determination regarding guilt or severity of sentence was affected by any of the following factors:

- a. Infection of the state proceeding by incompetence, corruption, intimidation, or undue influence;
- b. Court or jury nullification involving an important federal interest, in blatant disregard of the evidence;
- c. The failure of the state to prove an element of the state offense which is not an element of the federal offense; or
- d. The unavailability of significant evidence in the state proceeding either because it was not timely discovered or because it was suppressed on state law grounds or on an erroneous view of the federal law.

B. Successive Federal Prosecution Policy

The Department of Justice's successive federal prosecution policy precludes the initiation or continuation of a federal prosecution following a prior federal prosecution based on the same transaction unless there is a compelling interest supporting the subsequent prosecution.

The successive federal prosecution policy is intended to regulate prosecutorial discretion in order to promote efficient utilization of the Department's resources and to protect persons charged with criminal conduct from the unfairness associated with multiple prosecutions based on the same transaction. See Rinaldi v. United States, 434 U.S. 22, 27 (1977); Petite v. United States, 361 U.S. 529 (1960).

In order to prevent unwarranted successive prosecutions, the policy requires that authorization be obtained from the appropriate Assistant Attorney General prior to initiating a subsequent prosecution. A failure to obtain prior authorization of a successive prosecution will result in a loss of any conviction through a dismissal of the charges unless it is later determined that there was in fact a compelling interest supporting the prosecution and a compelling reason to explain the failure to obtain prior authorization.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

1. Types of Prior Federal Proceedings Resulting in Application of the Successive Federal Prosecution Policy

The policy applies and authorization must be obtained from the appropriate Assistant Attorney General whenever there has been a prior proceeding (including a plea bargain) resulting in (1) an acquittal, (2) a conviction, or (3) other post-jeopardy termination of the case prior to the commencement of the second trial or the entry of a guilty plea on charges based on the same transaction.<sup>9/</sup> Thus, whenever jeopardy attached in a federal proceeding, authorization from the appropriate Assistant Attorney General must be obtained before a trial may be commenced or a guilty plea accepted on another federal indictment or information based on the same transaction.

In order to avoid the unnecessary expenditure of prosecutorial resources, federal prosecutors should make a reasonable effort to determine whether there are related federal proceedings pending before initiating criminal proceedings. Similarly, whenever a federal criminal case proceeds to trial or results in the entry of a guilty plea after another federal indictment or information has been filed, a voluntary dismissal should be entered on the indictment or information unless authorization is obtained for a successive federal prosecution. Whenever possible, prosecutorial efforts should be coordinated to alleviate the problems posed by successive federal prosecutions relating to the same transaction.

2. Relationship Between the Act(s) on Which the Prior Prosecution was Based and the Act(s) on Which the Proposed Prosecution Would Rest

The successive federal prosecution policy is intended to reach prosecutions based on an act, acts, or series of acts which were part of the same transaction. The Department has sought to apply the policy in a common sense, non-technical fashion in order to effectuate its salutary objectives. Hence, even where a prospective prosecution is, technically speaking, for an act different from the prior prosecution or requires proof of different elements, the subsequent prosecution will not generally be authorized if, as a practical matter, the two acts were part of the same transaction and there is not compelling interest supporting a subsequent federal <sup>9/</sup> The successive federal prosecution policy does not apply--and thus authorization is not required--where the prior proceeding did not progress to the stage at which jeopardy attached.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

prosecution.<sup>10/</sup> In sum, the successive federal prosecution policy does not generally permit the dividing of a single criminal transaction for separate prosecution within the same or different judicial districts.

The successive federal prosecution policy does not apply and authorization need not be obtained where the second or subsequent prosecution could not have been brought together with the initial federal prosecution of the defendant. For example, where venue restrictions preclude joining two or more offenses for trial in any single federal judicial district, the policy is not triggered even if the offenses were part of the same transaction. Similarly, the policy does not apply where the defendant opposes a single trial on charges arising out of a single transaction.<sup>11/</sup> Practical rather than legal constraints may also render the policy inapplicable. Thus, the policy does not apply if the evidence of another crime that is part of the same transaction is not obtained until after commencement of the initial federal prosecution.<sup>12/</sup>

3. Factors Governing the Authorization of Successive Federal Prosecutions

Requests for the authorization of successive federal prosecutions will be evaluated on a case-by-case basis by the

<sup>10/</sup> Thus, where multiple violations are involved, it is incumbent that prosecutorial efforts be coordinated to assure prosecutive consideration in the district where the interests of justice will best be served notwithstanding that many offenses, prosecutable in more than one district, i.e., kidnapping, or transportation of stolen motor vehicles, are usually first presented for prosecutive consideration where the body or property comes to rest.

appropriate Assistant Attorney General based upon the following factors. Applications for authority to undertake successive federal prosecutions should address the factors set forth and their relative weight. The application will be analyzed to determine whether the overall factors favoring authorization of a successive federal prosecution outweigh the general policy against multiple prosecutions based on the same underlying transaction.<sup>13/</sup>

A successive federal prosecution will not be authorized unless the prior proceeding left substantial federal interests demonstrably unvindicated.<sup>14/</sup> Even so, a successive prosecution is not warranted unless a conviction is anticipated and, if the earlier proceedings resulted in a conviction, normally will not be authorized unless an enhanced sentence in the subsequent prosecution is anticipated.<sup>15/</sup>

A subsequent prosecution may be warranted under any of the following circumstances:

- a. There is a substantial basis for believing that either the choice by the prosecutor or grand jury of the earlier charges or the prior determination regarding guilt or severity of sentence was affected by:

<sup>13/</sup> Where a defendant who has previously been prosecuted in a proceeding based on the same transaction consents to a subsequent prosecution after being informed of the Department's policy against successive federal prosecution, a subsequent federal prosecution may be warranted even if the factors set forth are not satisfied.

<sup>14/</sup> The reference in the policy to a "compelling federal interest" or "substantial federal interests" is intended to indicate that a significant federal prosecutorial interest must be present to justify authorization of a successive prosecution. Whether such an interest is present must be evaluated on the basis of the facts and circumstances of each case. It is assumed that prosecutions involving offenses coming within priority areas of the Department--such as civil rights, organized crime, tax cases, and crimes against federal officials, witnesses, or informants--will normally be brought prior to or in conjunction with other possible federal charges arising out of the same transaction.

<sup>15/</sup> This factor may be satisfied where the first prosecution resulted in a misdemeanor conviction and a conviction for a felony is anticipated in the successive prosecution. Any determination whether such an interest exists should include the consideration given in the previous proceeding to victim restitution. The inadequate attention to this factor is inconsistent with the rationale of the restitution provisions of the Victim and Witness Protection Act of 1982.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

(1) Incompetence, corruption, intimidation, or undue influence; or

(2) The unavailability of significant evidence because it was not timely discovered or because it was erroneously excluded as a result of an unreviewable judicial determination;

b. Fairness to other defendants or significant resource considerations favor separate prosecutions;

c. The original indictment was held insufficient as a matter of law or there was a fatal variance between the offense charged and the proof at trial.

C. General Provisions

1. Application for Authorization

The initial determination whether a proposed prosecution comes within the dual prosecution policy or the successive federal prosecution policy is the responsibility of the U.S. Attorney in those cases under his/her control. Whenever the U.S. Attorney concludes that the policy is applicable, an authorization request should be submitted to the appropriate Assistant Attorney General. In cases where there is a substantial question as to the applicability of the policy and the U.S. Attorney concludes that the policy does not apply, the U.S. Attorney shall provide the appropriate Assistant Attorney General with a brief written statement summarizing the underlying facts and the reasons for the determination. These statements are to be forwarded within ten working days after the determination has been made.

In cases handled by other Department attorneys, an authorization request should be submitted to the appropriate Assistant Attorney General whenever there is a question as to whether the dual or successive federal prosecution policy applies. These authorization requests and statements from U.S. Attorneys explaining their decisions that the policy is inapplicable shall be brought to the attention of the Deputy Attorney General. The Deputy Attorney General shall be responsible for supervising the review of these authorization requests and statements in order to promote uniformity in the Department's determinations regarding the scope of the policy.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

2. Enforcement of the Policies

In the event of violations of the dual prosecution policy or successive federal prosecution policy, the appropriate Assistant Attorney General shall either authorize the prosecution retroactively, if such authorization is warranted, or direct that the prosecutors move for the dismissal of the indictment or information. Absent unusual circumstances, an Assistant Attorney General will be reluctant to issue authorization retroactively and will direct that charges be dismissed when necessary to correct a violation of the policy. In addition, appropriate administrative action may be initiated against prosecutors who violate the policy.

3. Reservation

The dual prosecution and successive federal prosecution policy statements are set forth solely for the purpose of internal Department of Justice guidance. They are not intended to, do not, and may not be relied upon to create any rights, substantive or procedural, enforceable at law by any party in any matter, civil or criminal, nor do they place any limitations on otherwise lawful litigative prerogatives of the Department of Justice.<sup>16/</sup>

4. Prior Guidelines and Policy Statements

These general procedural provisions and the dual prosecution and successive federal prosecution policy statements supersede all prior Department of Justice guidelines and policy statements on this subject.

<sup>16/</sup> All of the Courts of Appeals that have considered the question have held that a criminal defendant cannot invoke the Department's policy as a bar to federal prosecution. See, e.g., United States v. Snell, 592 F.2d 1083 (9th Cir. 1979); United States v. Howard, 590 F.2d 564 (4th Cir. 1979); United States v. Frederick, 583 F.2d 273 (6th Cir. 1978); United States v. Thompson, 579 F.2d 1184 (10th Cir. 1978) (en banc); United States v. Wallace, 578 F.2d 735 (8th Cir. 1978); United States v. Nelligan, 573 F.2d 251 (5th Cir. 1978); United States v. Hutul, 416 F.2d 607 (7th Cir. 1969). The Supreme Court, in analogous contexts, has concluded that Department policies governing its internal operations do not create rights which may be enforced by defendants against the Department. See United States v. Caceres, 440 U.S. 741 (1979); Sullivan v. United States, 348 U.S. 170 (1954).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

9-2.143 Juvenile Prosecutions

Prior approval from the Criminal Division is required before the U.S. Attorney may file a Motion to Transfer, i.e., a Motion to Proceed Against a Juvenile as an Adult under 18 U.S.C. §5032. See USAM 9-2.134, supra.

9-2.144 Interstate Agreement on Detainers

By virtue of the Interstate Agreement on Detainers Act, Pub. L. No. 91-538, 84 Stat. 1397-1403 (1970), the United States (and the District of Columbia) entered into the Interstate Agreement on Detainers, 18 U.S.C. App., hereinafter referred to as the Agreement.

The Agreement applies to interstate transfers of prisoners for trial and to transfers from the federal government to the states and from the states to the federal government. It does not apply to transfers of federal prisoners between the several judicial districts for trial on federal charges. See United States v. Krohn, 558 F.2d 390 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 868 (1977).

Article III of the Agreement permits a prisoner to initiate final disposition of any untried indictment, information, or complaint against him/her in another state on the basis of which a detainer has been lodged against him/her. Article IV permits the prosecuting authority of a state in which an untried indictment, information, or complaint is pending to obtain temporary custody of a prisoner against whom it has lodged a detainer by filing a "written request" for custody with the incarcerating state. Accordingly, both prisoners and prosecutors have the power to initiate trials under the Agreement. Article V provides a detailed procedure for obtaining temporary custody.

The Agreement applies only to "a person who has entered upon a term of imprisonment in a penal or correctional institution," Articles III(a), IV(a), and is therefore inapplicable to one incarcerated awaiting trial, See United States v. Reed, 620 F.2d 709, 711-12 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 880 (1980); United States v. Milhollan, 599 F.2d 518 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 909 (1979); United States v. Harris, 566 F.2d 610 (8th Cir. 1977); United States v. Roberts, 548 F.2d 665, 670-71 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 431 U.S. 931 (1977); United States v. Evans, 423 F. Supp. 528, 531 (S.D.N.Y. 1976), aff'd, 556 F.2d 561 (2d Cir. 1977). Since the Agreement applies only to a detainer based upon a pending "indictment, information, or complaint" which requires a "trial," Articles III(a), IV(a), the Agreement does not apply to a detainer based upon a parole violator warrant, see United States v. Reed, supra; United States v. Dobson, 585 F.2d 55 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 899 (1978). The procedure for disposition of parole violation detainers is set out in 18 U.S.C. §4214(b). The majority of state courts that have addressed the issue have, for the same reason, held the Agreement inapplicable to probation violation detainers as well. See Clipper v. State, 295 Md. 303, 455 A.2d 973 (1983); contra Gaddy v. Turner, 376 So. 2d 1225 (Fla. Ct. App. 2d Dist. 1979).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Article III(d) and Article IV(e) contain similar provisions that should be noted:

If trial is not had on any indictment, information, or complaint contemplated hereby prior to the return of the prisoner to the original place of imprisonment, such indictment, information or complaint shall not be of any further force or effect, and the court shall enter an order dismissing the same with prejudice.

Article IV(e) (emphasis added).

It has been held that "trial" in this context includes sentencing. See Walker v. King, 448 F. Supp. 580 (S.D.N.Y. 1978). The Department has not yet determined whether to accept this decision as a correct interpretation of the Act. Nevertheless, in order to avoid litigation and the risk of invalidating prosecutions, the return of prisoners should be deferred until after the imposition of sentence. Where, however, dismissal of an indictment is sought on the basis of this ruling it should be resisted.

Courts are divided on whether shuttling within the confines of the same state and district for a brief period violates the Agreement. Compare United States v. Schrum, 504 F. Supp. 23 (D. Kan. 1980), aff'd on opinion below, 638 F.2d 214 (10th Cir. 1981), with Sassoon v. Stynchcombe, 654 F.2d 371 (5th Cir. 1981). The return of a federal defendant to a state facility where he/she is to be held under contract as a federal prisoner may not violate the "anti-shuttling" provisions. See United States v. Sorrell, 562 F.2d 227, 229 n.3 (3d Cir. 1977) (en banc), cert. denied, 436 U.S. 949 (1978); United States v. Thompson, 562 F.2d 232, 234 (3d Cir. 1977) (en banc), cert. denied, 436 U.S. 949 (1978).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

In addition, Article IV(c) provides that, subject to continuances granted for good cause in open court in the presence of the prisoner or his/her attorney, "trial shall be commenced within one hundred and twenty days of the arrival of the prisoner in the receiving state," otherwise the indictment shall be dismissed with prejudice, Article V(c). "[D]elay that is lawful under the Speedy Trial Act generally will comply with the mandate of the Detainer Act." See United States v. Odom, 674 F.2d 228, 231 (4th Cir.), 457 U.S. 1125 (1982). See also Article III(a) (trial must commence within 180 days of receipt by prosecuting state of prisoner's request for final disposition of charges underlying detainer). A writ of habeas corpus ad testificandum, however, does not constitute a "written request" with respect to, and has no effect upon, pending charges, even when a detainer has been previously lodged. See Carmona v. Warden, 549 F. Supp. 621 (S.D.N.Y. 1982); Adams v. United States, 423 F. Supp. 578 (E.D.N.Y. 1976), aff'd, 559 F.2d 1202 (2d Cir. 1977).

A writ of habeas corpus ad prosequendum authorized by 28 U.S.C. §2241(c)(5) is not a "detainer" for purposes of the Act and does not trigger application of the Agreement. Once a detainer has been filed, however, use of a writ of habeas corpus ad prosequendum to obtain custody does constitute a "written request" within the meaning of the Agreement, activating its provisions. See United States v. Mauro, 436 U.S. 340 (1978).

The Agreement also provides that when a prisoner requests disposition of one matter upon which a detainer has been filed it constitutes a request for disposition of all matters on which detainers have been filed by the same "state." Article III(d). The several federal districts have been held to constitute separate "states" in this context. See United States v. Bryant, 612 F.2d 806 (4th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 446 U.S. 920 (1980). Prosecution on other charges upon which detainers have not been lodged is not authorized by the Agreement unless they arise from the same transaction. Article V(d). Whether trial of the latter is compulsory is not clear.

When the U.S. Attorney initiates the request under Article IV, the charge upon which the request is based must be disposed of prior to returning the prisoner. Article IV(e). The several federal districts have also been treated as separate states in this context. See United States v. Woods, 621 F.2d 844 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 877 (1980). Other charges may not be prosecuted unless they arise from the same transaction. Article V(d). Again, whether trial of the latter is compulsory or only permissible is not clear.

In Cuyler v. Adams, 449 U.S. 433 (1981), the Supreme Court held that Article IV(d) preserved a prisoner's extradition rights under the laws of the state of incarceration, so that he was entitled to a hearing before he could be transferred from the custody of the State of Pennsylvania to the State of New Jersey. This ruling has no application to prisoners serving federal sentences because the United States has neither adopted the Uniform Extradition Act nor enacted any other statute providing the right of a hearing. See Sorenson v. United States, 539 F. Supp. 865 (S.D.N.Y. 1982); Thomas v. Levi, 422 F. Supp. 1027 (E.D. Pa. 1976). It is the Criminal Division's position that state prisoners serving sentence in federal facilities under contracts pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §5003 are also not entitled to pretransfer hearings even if the state whose sentence they are serving provides for such hearings under its extradition laws.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

Section IV(a) allows a governor 30 days in which to disapprove a request for transfer on his/her own motion or that of the prisoner. It has been held, however, that a state governor does not have the right to disapprove a request in the form of a writ of habeas corpus ad prosequendum issued by a federal court even when a detainer has been previously lodged. See United States v. Graham, 622 F.2d 57 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 904 (1980). The Attorney General has delegated his authority to pass upon state requests under the Agreement to the Bureau of Prisons. See 28 C.F.R. §0.96(n); see also, 29 C.F.R. §527.31(a).

The Speedy Trial Act of 1974, 18 U.S.C. §3161(j), requires that a U.S. Attorney who knows that a defendant is serving a sentence in a penal institution must promptly obtain the defendant's presence for trial or cause a detainer to be lodged. If the prisoner demands trial and is made available for prosecution, the time limits of the Speedy Trial Act apply, but do not commence to run "until the defendant is actually present for purposes of pleading." See H.R. Rep. No. 93-1508, 93d Cong., 2d Sess. 36. In the event of conflict between the time limitation prescribed by the Agreement and the Speedy Trial Act, the more stringent should be applied. United States v. Mauro, supra, at 356-57 n. 24. See United States v. Odom, supra, at 231 ("The Detainer Act and the Speedy Trial Act deal with the same subject matter.... Whenever possible, the interpretation of the Acts should not be discordant").

The protection of the Agreement's "anti-shuttling" provisions may be waived by the defendant's request for a retransfer prior to disposition of the outstanding charges. See United States v. Black, 609 F.2d 1330, 1334 (9th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 847 (1980); United States v. Eaddy, 595 F.2d 341 (6th Cir. 1979); United States v. Ford, 550 F.2d 732, 735, 742 (2d Cir.), aff'd sub nom. United States v. Mauro, 436 U.S. 340 (1978); United States v. Scallion, 548 F.2d 1168, 1170 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 436 U.S. 943 (1978). As these rights are not guaranteed by the Constitution to preserve a fair criminal trial, there is no requirement that such a waiver be "knowingly and intelligently made." See United States v. Black, supra, at 1334; United States v. Eaddy, supra, at 344. Upon like reasoning, it is generally held that the rights will be waived or forfeited through "procedural default" by failure to make timely objection in the trial court so that violations cannot be complained of for the first time on appeal, id. at 346; United States v. Scallion, supra, at 1174, or in collateral proceedings under 28 U.S.C. §2255, id. at 707; United States v. Boniface, 601 F.2d 390,394 (9th Cir. 1979); Huff v. United States, 599 F.2d 860, 863 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 952 (1979); Hitchcock v. United States, 580 F.2d 964 (9th Cir. 1978); Edwards v. United States, 564 F.2d 652, 653-54 (2d Cir. 1977) or under 28 U.S.C. §2254, Fasano v. Hall, 615 F.2d 555 (1st Cir.), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 867 (1980); Bush v. Muncy, 659 F.2d 402 (4th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 910 (1982); Williams v. Maryland, 445 F. Supp. 1216, 1220-22 (D. Md. 1978). See, however, Cody v. Morris, 623 F. 2d 101 (9th Cir. 1980); United States v. Williams, 615 F.2d 585 (3d Cir. 1980). Because violation of the Agreement is not a "jurisdictional" defect, an unconditional plea of guilty forecloses direct appeal and collateral review of alleged violations. See United States v. Palmer, 574 F.2d 164 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 437 U.S. 907 (1978); United States v. Hach, 615 F.2d 1203, 1204 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 446 U.S. 912 (1980); United States v. Camp, 587 F.2d 397, 399-400 (8th Cir. 1978).

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-2.145 Dismissals

Criminal Division approval is required before dismissing, in whole or in part, an indictment, information, or complaint as set forth in USAM 9-2.134, supra.

The above-mentioned approval is not a direction but rather an authorization to dismiss if, in the opinion of the U.S. Attorney, this course is advisable. U.S. Attorneys must satisfy themselves that the conditions upon which dismissals are authorized have been complied with.

In the instances in which Division approval is required for dismissal, the U.S. Attorney should submit a Form No. USA 900 (Authorization for Dismissal of Indictment and Information) setting forth the reasons for recommending dismissal. If the exigencies of the situation require immediate action, telephonic approval to dismiss may be obtained and the Form 900 thereafter sent to the appropriate section of the Division.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-2.146 Pleas by Corporations

Charges against an individual defendant should not be dismissed on the basis of a plea of guilty by a corporate defendant unless there are special circumstances justifying the dismissal.

9-2.147 Extradition and Deportation

No agreement shall be made by a U.S. Attorney that an individual will not be extradited or deported or that his/her extradition or deportation will be delayed, altered, or restricted to certain nations without the prior approval of the Criminal Division in criminal cases and in cases involving extradition or the Civil Division in civil cases.

9-2.148 Recommendation of Death Penalty

The death penalty shall not be recommended without the approval of the Attorney General. Requests for such approval should be processed through the Criminal Division section or office having jurisdiction over the violation for which defendant is being prosecuted.

9-2.149 Revocation of Naturalization

No suit to revoke naturalization under 8 U.S.C. §1451 shall be instituted by the U.S. Attorney without prior consultation with the Office of Immigration Litigation in the Civil Division.

9-2.151 International Contacts

Other than when notifying a foreign consul of the arrest of a national of his/her country, see USAM 9-2.173, infra, the U.S. Attorney shall consult with the Division before making any contact concerning a criminal case with, and upon receiving any communication concerning a criminal case from:

A. The Department of State, a United States embassy or consular post;
or,

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

B. Any ministry, embassy, consulate, representative, officer, or agency of a foreign government, international organization, or agency.

Any proposed contact with other persons in a foreign country should first be discussed with the Criminal Division. Contact attorneys in the Office of International Affairs (FTS 724-7600) regarding international contacts. See USAM 9-4.540. Before attempting to do any act in Switzerland, even the making of a telephone call to that country, related to any present or possible future criminal prosecution, approval of the Criminal Division should be obtained. See USAM 9-4.541.

9-2.152 Special Instructions--General Litigation and Legal Advice Section Matters

Upon being served with the summons and complaint in a case within the General Litigation and Legal Advice Section's jurisdiction, see USAM 9-1.403, the U.S. Attorney should immediately send two copies of the pleadings and other papers to the Section with a letter of transmittal setting out any background information known to him/her about the action. Pending instructions from the Section, he/she should take all action appropriate to protect the interests of the government. Because of the sensitive nature of these cases and the necessity of a uniform response to the issues presented, it is important that the U.S. Attorney take no action going to the merits of the case until after advice from or consultation with the Section. If the U.S. Attorney has any doubt whether a particular case is within the Section's jurisdiction, he/she should promptly inquire of the Section. No case within the Section's jurisdiction may be compromised or settled without prior approval by the Section.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

U.S. Attorneys should also immediately advise the Section of the filing in any court, state or federal, in their districts of any case in which the issues relate to the Section's jurisdiction, so that the Section may advise him/her of whatever action the Attorney General desires to take under 28 U.S.C. §517.

9-2.153 Report by Grand Jury

The U.S. Attorney should consult with the Criminal Division prior to requesting a grand jury to make a report. When a U.S. Attorney learns that a grand jury is preparing a report which he/she has not requested, he/she should advise the Criminal Division.

9-2.154 Legislative Proposals by U.S. Attorneys

Please refer to USAM 1-8.000 (Relations with the Congress).

The Criminal Division is interested in obtaining the benefit of any suggestions by U.S. Attorneys or their Assistants for changes in federal statutory law, or rules, affecting criminal prosecutions. Accordingly, U.S. Attorneys and Assistants are encouraged to develop such proposals and to forward them for initial consideration to the Office of Legislation, Room 2244-A, Main Justice Building. The suggestions for changes in rules and legislation may also be submitted concurrently to the Legislation and Court Rules Subcommittee of the Attorney General's Advisory Committee of U.S. Attorneys. Suggested legislative changes should be submitted concurrently to the Office of Legislative Affairs.

U.S. Attorneys and their staffs are reminded that all suggestions for changes in federal criminal statutes must be communicated to the Department of Justice and not to Congress directly. Unsolicited communication to Congress of individual proposals for legislation, outside proper official channels, has the potential to cause grave embarrassment to the Department and, however well motivated, is contrary to Department policy. See also 18 U.S.C. §1913.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

9-2.155 Sensitive Matters

The U.S. Attorney should keep the Criminal Division apprised of all developments in sensitive criminal matters, particularly those which may generate questions to the Criminal Division or higher authority.

9-2.156 Compromises of Civil or Tax Liability

No agreement shall be made by a U.S. Attorney, by plea bargain with a defendant or in discussion designed to secure a witness's testimony or otherwise, which may prejudice or foreclose an action by the United States to impose civil or tax liability upon that party without prior approval of the appropriate Division of the Department except as expressly authorized by USAM 4-2.000. See especially USAM 4-2.12, 4-2.14. Any release, settlement, or other disposition contrary to those provisions is not binding on the United States.

In computing the amount of a claim which may be compromised without prior authorization pursuant to USAM 4-2.12 (c), supra, the U.S. Attorney must consider the entire amount of civil damages, not merely that amount to which the criminal case relates. See USAM 4-2.14 (c), supra. Where the U.S. Attorney is not authorized to compromise the claim, he/she must exercise extreme care to avoid giving a false impression or making any representation suggesting that, as a result of any plea agreement or commitment to cooperate, a civil or tax suit will be compromised, foreclosed, or somehow merged into the disposition of the criminal case.

Questions concerning the foregoing may be referred to the Commercial Litigation Branch of the Civil Division (ETS 724-7179) or the Criminal Section of the Tax Division (FTS 633-2973).

9-2.157 Investigation of Jury Panels

When it is deemed essential, the Federal Bureau of Investigation may be requested to investigate prospective petit jurors in federal criminal cases. However, an investigation should not be requested or undertaken unless there are exceptional circumstances involved in the case and then only with the approval of the Assistant Attorney General. Such investigations as may be authorized shall be limited to examining any criminal records, including arrest records, and checking field office indices.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Requests for such investigations should be submitted to the Assistant Attorney General sufficiently in advance of trial so as not to place an unnecessary time burden on the FBI.

9-2.158 Participation of Attorneys not Employed by the Department of Justice in Litigation

Special approval and appointment must be obtained for the participation in court proceedings by attorneys not employed by the Department of Justice. Requests for appointments for such attorneys to assist U.S. Attorneys should be directed to the Executive Office for U.S. Attorneys. Requests for appointments for such attorneys to assist Criminal Division attorneys should be directed to the Criminal Division's Office of Enforcement Operations.

It has long been the policy of the Department that only in rare cases will requests for special appointment be granted. The substantial assistance we receive from the attorneys of the investigative and referring agencies is appreciated and required. However, the responsibility for the conduct of the trial rests on the Department of Justice and should not be delegated.

Special circumstances may require that a blanket approval for the participation in litigation of attorneys employed by a federal agency or department other than the Department of Justice be obtained; if so, the U.S. Attorney in his/her request for the issuance of a blanket approval should explain fully the necessity for it. In such instances, the control and responsibility for the litigation remain with the U.S. Attorney.

9-2.159 Refusal of Government Departments and Agencies to Produce Evidence

It is the responsibility of the Department of Justice to enforce the law vigorously and it cannot abdicate this duty because of possible embarrassment to other agencies of the government. Situations may arise where substantial reasons of national security, foreign policy or the like may require the Department to abandon an investigation, forego litigation, or seek dismissal of a case. However, such action should be taken only after the most careful consideration of all of the relevant facts and then only with the personal approval of the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Division having responsibility for the case.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Accordingly, all U.S. Attorneys handling cases in which another government agency refuses to produce records or witnesses necessary for successful litigation of the case are directed to proceed in the following manner:

A. In no event should the U.S. Attorney accept the opinion or representation of the agency that such records or witnesses cannot be made available without determining all of the specific facts upon which the agency relies to support its refusal.

B. If the U.S. Attorney is not satisfied that the facts justify the refusal, he/she should so advise the agency and seek to procure the evidence requested of the agency.

C. If the U.S. Attorney concurs that there are sufficient and valid reasons to support the agency's refusal to produce the necessary evidence, he/she should advise the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the division having jurisdiction over the subject matter of the case of his/her conclusion. That Assistant Attorney General, after consultation with the Deputy Attorney General, will authorize the U.S. Attorney, if necessary and appropriate, to terminate the investigation, forego the litigation, or dismiss the case. A full statement of the facts supporting the conclusion of the U.S. Attorney should be set forth in the correspondence to the appropriate Assistant Attorney General.

The U.S. Attorney should also apprise the appropriate Assistant Attorney General of any incidents coming to his/her attention where he/she believes any agency of the federal government is not cooperating in his/her efforts to obtain the full disclosure of the facts to enable him/her to make an intelligent judgment as to whether the agency's refusal to produce requested evidence is justified.

9-2.161 Policy with Regard to the Issuance of Subpoenas to Members of the News Media, Subpoenas for Telephone Toll Records of Members of the News Media, and the Interrogation, Indictment, or Arrest of Members of the News Media

Procedures and standards regarding the issuance of subpoenas to members of the news media, subpoenas for the telephone toll records of members of the news media, and the interrogation, indictment, or arrest of members of the news media are set forth in 28 C.F.R. §50.10. See also

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

USAM 1-5.410. In view of the Department's policy to protect freedom of the press, news gathering function, and news media sources, all attorneys contemplating the issuance of such subpoenas or the initiation of criminal proceedings against a member of the news media should be aware of the requirements of 28 C.F.R. §50.10. See also USAM 1-5.410.

Except in cases involving exigent circumstances, the express approval of the Attorney General is necessary prior to the interrogation, indictment, or arrest of a member of the news media. The Attorney General's authorization is also required before the issuance of a subpoena to a member of the news media except in those cases where a media representative agrees to provide the material sought and that material has already been published or broadcast. In addition, the Attorney General's permission is required before the issuance of a subpoena for the telephone toll records of a member of the news media. Failure to obtain the prior approval of the Attorney General, where required, may constitute grounds for disciplinary action.

Whenever the Attorney General's authorization is sought pursuant to 28 C.F.R. §50.10 in a case or matter under the supervision of the Criminal Division, the Office of Enforcement Operations should be contacted at FTS 724-6672. In cases or matters under the supervision of other divisions of the Department of Justice, the appropriate division should be contacted.

9-2.162 Grand Jury Subpoenas for Financial Records

The Supreme Court held in United States v. Miller, 425 U.S. 435 (1976), that a bank depositor lacks the necessary Fourth Amendment interest to challenge a subpoena duces tecum issued to a bank for its records of its depositor's transactions. It is important, nevertheless, that U.S. Attorneys exercise a close control over the obtaining for law enforcement purposes of the business records of banks and other financial institutions. There is a danger that the Congress will curtail the government's access to such financial records unless past abuses and putative abuses of grand jury process are completely avoided.

It is required that:

A. U.S. Attorney or Assistant U.S. Attorney shall personally authorize the issuance of a subpoena duces tecum to obtain financial records in such a way as to avoid any appearance that the matter was left to the discretion of an investigative agent serving the subpoena;

B. Every such subpoena shall be returnable only on a date when the grand jury is in session and the subpoenaed records shall be produced

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

before the grand jury unless the grand jury itself has previously agreed upon some different course, see United States v. Hilton, 534 F.2d 556, 564-65 (3d Cir. 1976); and

C. If, for the sake of convenience and economy, the subpoenaed party is permitted voluntarily to relinquish the records to the government agent serving the subpoena, a report shall be made in due course to the grand jury as to the nature and contents of the records.

While these three requirements may seem to involve simply an observance of the fundamentals of grand jury practice, there is the broader intention of avoiding any semblance of abuse of the grand jury.

9-2.163 Grand Jury Subpoenas for Telephone Toll Records: Certifications

A. Telephone Company Policy

As a matter of corporate policy, the American Telephone and Telegraph Company and its affiliates will not release telephone toll records to any federal, state, or local law enforcement official except pursuant to legal process. Within twenty-four hours of service of a subpoena or summons, the company will notify its subscriber thereof, unless the government attorney certifies that notification to the subscriber would interfere with law enforcement. Such a certification will protect against notification for a period of 90 days only, but the company will honor requests for additional periods of 90 days as the needs of law enforcement may require. When the time lapses under a certification or re-certification, the company will notify its subscriber that his/her toll records were released. This notification will be given automatically, whether or not the subscriber requested the information.

This corporate policy went into effect on March 1, 1974 under the following public announcement:

Bell System Policy for Release of Toll Information
Upon Request of a Law Enforcement Agency

The toll billing records of a subscriber shall be released to a law enforcement agency only upon receipt of a valid civil or criminal subpoena or administrative summons.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Automatic notification will be given by the telephone company to the subscriber within twenty-four hours after the receipt of the subpoena or summons unless, in cases where unusual and compelling circumstances so dictate, a certification is included in the body of the criminal subpoena or summons, or an accompanying letter referring thereto, signed by the individual who procured the issuance of the subpoena or summons, to the following effect:

'Pursuant to an official criminal investigation of a suspected felony being conducted by the (agency), it is requested that your company furnish on (date) toll record information pertaining to (name and/or telephone number) for the date/s _____, through _____ inclusive.

You are not to disclose the existence of this request for a period of 90 days from the date of this request. Any such disclosure could impede the investigation being conducted and thereby interfere with the enforcement of the law.'

It is anticipated that such certification will only be provided in bona fide factual situations of compelling character.

B. Departmental Policy of Use of Subpoenas

It is the responsibility of the U.S. Attorney to make certifications and re-certifications in all appropriate situations in accordance with Criminal Division policy.

The policy is to have toll records subpoenaed in aid of criminal investigations whenever practicable. If speedy action is required but there is no grand jury in session to issue the necessary subpoena, the U.S. Attorney should give prompt consideration to the possibility of causing the investigation to be taken up in another district which has a grand jury in session and in which there exists possible venue for the offense. See 18 U.S.C. §3237 and USAM 9-11.221.

Since grand jury process may be utilized only with a view toward possible federal indictment, it would not be proper to subpoena telephone toll records to assist federal officials seeking to apprehend military deserters. See USAM 9-11.223. A subpoena could be used, however, in an investigation of a person suspected of harboring a deserter in violation of 18 U.S.C. §1381, or in an investigation looking toward a possible indictment of the military deserter.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

C. Certifications

So long as the grand jury investigation involves ongoing criminal activity, the Criminal Division considers it appropriate, as a matter of course, to request the telephone company not to notify the subscriber of the subpoena. On the other hand, if the investigation involves completed criminal activity only, it will generally be inappropriate to make a certification or re-certification. Certification for nondisclosure should be made in cases of completed criminal activity only if special circumstances exist to indicate that disclosure would impede or prejudice an investigation or prosecution.

Certification should be made, not in the body of a subpoena, but in an accompanying letter signed by the U.S. Attorney, an Assistant U.S. Attorney, or other attorney for the government handling the grand jury presentation.

It is imperative that the certification and re-certification procedures be implemented and monitored with great care in order to safeguard investigations as much as possible.

No further reference to Memorandum No. 796 is necessary.

D. Subpoenas for Telephone Toll Records of Members of the News Media

The policy regarding subpoenas for telephone toll records of members of the news media is discussed at USAM 9-2.161, supra, and USAM 1-5.410.

9-2.164 Number of Counts in Indictments

In order to promote the fair administration of justice, as well as the perception of justice, all U.S. Attorneys should charge in indictments and informations as few separate counts as are reasonably necessary to prosecute fully and successfully and to provide for a fair sentence on conviction. To the extent reasonable, indictments and informations should be limited to fifteen counts or less, so long as such a limitation does not jeopardize successful prosecution or preclude a sentence appropriate to the nature and extent of the offenses involved.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

9-2.165 State and Territorial Prisoners Incarcerated in Federal Institutions

18 U.S.C. §5003(a) authorizes the United States Bureau of Prisons to incarcerate persons who have been convicted in state and territorial courts. In 1978, the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit held that a state prisoner could be held in a federal penal facility pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §5003 only where "specialized treatment" was available to the state prisoner which was not available in a state facility. See Lono v. Fenton, 581 F.2d 645 (7th Cir. 1978) (en banc). This decision generated a number of suits by state prisoners incarcerated in federal facilities which sought to compel their return to the states in which they were convicted.

In 1981, the Supreme Court settled a circuit split on this issue, holding that 18 U.S.C. §5003 does not restrict the use of federal prison facilities to those state prisoners who are in need of some particular treatment available in the federal prison system. See Howe v. Smith, 452 U.S. 473 (1981). In the event that state or territorial prisoners confined in federal penal institutions initiate actions seeking to compel their transfers to the states or territories in which they were convicted on the basis of Lono v. Fenton, 581 F.2d 645 (7th Cir. 1978) (en banc), such efforts should be resisted on the grounds that Lono has been overruled by Howe v. Smith, 452 U.S. 473 (1981).

9-2.166 Testimony of FBI Laboratory Examiners

In situations where FBI laboratory examinations have resulted in findings having no apparent probative value, yet defense counsel intends to subpoena the examiner to testify the U.S. Attorney should inform defense counsel of the FBI's policy requiring payment of the examiner's travel expenses by defense counsel. The U.S. Attorney should also attempt to secure a stipulation concerning this testimony. This will avoid needless expenditures of time and money attendant to the appearance of the examiner in court.

9-2.170 Policy Limitations--Miscellaneous

9-2.171 Decision to Appeal or Not to Appeal

The decision to seek or not to seek a review by the Supreme Court of an adverse decision, the decision to appeal or not to appeal to all appellate courts (including petitions for rehearing en banc), and the decision to file or not to file petitions to such courts for the issuance of extraordinary writs are reserved to the Solicitor General.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

The circumstances in which the government may appeal from a district court decision in a criminal case are described in 18 U.S.C. §3731. Until recently, that section permitted, to the extent not barred by the double jeopardy clause, appeal by the government from a decision suppressing evidence or ordering return of seized property, and from a decision dismissing any count of an indictment or information. 18 U.S.C. §3731 was amended by section 1206 of the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984 to permit the government to appeal an order granting a new trial after conviction. The amendment applies to a notice of appeal filed after the Act was signed on October 12, 1984.

Prior authorization of the Solicitor General (through the Appellate Section of the Criminal Division) must be obtained for all appeals by the government to all appellate courts (including petitions for rehearing en banc, but not for rehearing by the panel) and for all petitions to such courts for the issuance of extraordinary writs. All review in the Supreme Court is handled by the Department. Two copies of all briefs and printed records on appeal should be forwarded to the Department as soon as possible. The Appellate Section of the Criminal Division should be notified immediately (within a day or two) of all decisions which may be adverse to the government and should be sent copies of all adverse district court rulings and all adverse and favorable court of appeals rulings.

Notices of appeal should not be filed prior to Solicitor General authorization unless it is absolutely necessary to preserve the government's right to appeal.

The time to petition for rehearing should be protected in those instances in which the Department has not been advised of an adverse decision of the court of appeals in a timely fashion by the filing of a motion for extension of 15 to 30 days to petition for rehearing.

9-2.172 Appearance Bond Forfeiture Judgments

The U.S. Attorney may compromise or close appearance bond forfeiture judgments that are for $100,000 or less. Authorization from the Criminal Division must be secured prior to entering into negotiations for compromising or closing as uncollectible such a judgment which is for more than $100,000.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-2.173 Arrest of Foreign Nationals

Where nationals of foreign countries are arrested on charges of federal criminal violations, the U.S. Attorney has the responsibility to ensure that the treaty obligations of the United States concerning notification of the consular officer of the country of which the arrested person is a national are observed. The procedure to be followed when the arrest is by an officer of the Department of Justice is specified in 28 C.F.R. §50.5.

Certain treaties require that the consular official be notified of the arrest of one of his/her nationals only upon the demand or request of the foreign national. Other treaties require notifying the consul of the arrest of a national of his/her country whether or not the arrested person requests such notification. If the foreign national arrested on federal criminal charges is a member of the consular staff or the consul himself/herself, special obligations are imposed by certain treaties.

Information concerning the treaty obligations of the United States in the event of the arrest of a foreign national, a consul, or member of the consular staff may be obtained from the Criminal Division by calling (724-7600).

9-2.210 Press Information and Privacy

See USAM 1-5.510 dealing with release of information to the news media or public relating to criminal or civil proceedings.

9-2.211 Press Information Guidelines for Criminal Cases

The guidelines for release of information to the media by press release or in any other way are found in 28 C.F.R. §50.2. The criminal guidelines are reprinted in USAM 1-5.540.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The instructions concerning release of information apply from the time "a person is the subject of a criminal investigation;" accordingly, no statements should be made concerning the subject matter of a grand jury nor should prospective defendants be identified.

No information concerning cases relating to internal security should be given to the news media or to anyone else not officially participating in the matter except through the Department's Office of Public Affairs.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-4.000 OBTAINING EVIDENCE

9-4.100 SEARCH AND SEIZURE

A. Introduction. It is recommended that USAM 9-4.100 et seq. be used in conjunction with: (1) the definitive three volume treatise, W. LaFave, Search and Seizure, A Treatise on the Fourth Amendment (1978) and its annual pocket part (hereinafter LaFave); (2) a review of recent cases, most particularly: United States v. Leon, _____ U.S. _____, 104 S. Ct. 3405 (1984), and Massachusetts v. Sheppard, _____ U.S. _____, 104 S. Ct. 3424 (1984), the decisions modifying the Fourth Amendment exclusionary rule so as not to bar the use in the prosecution's case-in-chief of evidence obtained by officers acting in reasonable reliance on a search warrant issued by a detached and neutral magistrate; (3) Segura v. United States, _____ U.S. _____, 104 S. Ct. 3380 (1984) (holding that the Fourth Amendment does not require suppression of evidence seized from a private residence pursuant to a valid search warrant even though the police have made an earlier illegal entry into the residence) and INS v. Lopez-Mendoza, _____ U.S. _____, 104 S. Ct. 3479 (1984) (holding that the exclusionary rule does not apply in deportation proceedings); and (4) JURIS, to obtain copies of current briefs filed by the Solicitor General in the Supreme Court. Wright, Federal Practice and Procedure: Criminal 2d, §§661-678; Cissell, Federal Criminal Trials, Chapter 2, and the Departmental publication, Proving Federal Crimes (1980), also are useful. Finally, the Appellate Section of the Criminal Division is available to furnish assistance.

The aim in considering the Fourth Amendment, the subject of more recent litigation than any other provision of the Bill of Rights, is not to be definitive but to point the reader in the right direction. While cases from the courts of appeals are cited herein, the focus is on recent Supreme Court cases which will, in turn, lead the reader to current circuit law. We also provide references to the LaFave treatise. Interceptions of communications pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §2510 et seq. ("Title IIIs"), are covered in USAM 9-7.000 et seq., and the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act of 1978, 50 U.S.C. §1801 et seq., is assigned to the Office of Intelligence Policy and Review.

B. The Fourth Amendment to the Constitution provides:

The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no Warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by Oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

1. Expectation of Privacy. The fundamental inquiry in considering Fourth Amendment issues is whether or not a search or seizure is reasonable under all the circumstances. See United States v. Chadwick, 433 U.S. 1, 9 (1977). This in turn requires a determination whether a person has an expectation of privacy against a government intrusion in those situations that society is prepared to recognize as "reasonable." See Katz v. United States, 389 U.S. 347, 360 (Harland, J. concurring); Oliver v. United States, _____ U.S. _____, 104 S. Ct. 1735, 1740 (1984); United States v. Jacobson, _____ U.S. _____, 104 S. Ct. 1652, 1656 (1984); Rakas v. Illinois, 439 U.S. 128, 143 (1978); LaFave §2.1. In order to establish "standing" to raise the Fourth Amendment claim, the defendant must have the reasonable expectation of privacy; if such a reasonable expectation exists, but not with respect to the charged defendant, he/she may not complain about the search. See, e.g., Rawlings v. Kentucky, 448 U.S. 98, 104-105 (1980); Rakas v. Illinois, supra, at 128, 140-149; United States v. Payner, 447 U.S. 727 (1980).

2. Probable Cause and Particularized Suspicion. The most significant intrusions into privacy by law enforcement officials permitted by the Fourth Amendment require probable cause. Its often quoted definition is set forth in Binegar v. United States, 338 U.S. 160, 175 (1949): "In dealing with probable cause, ... as the very name implies, we deal with probabilities. These are not technical; they are the factual and practical considerations of everyday life on which reasonable and prudent men, not legal technicians, act." See Illinois v. Gates, 462 U.S. 213, 224, (1983); LaFave §3.1. Lesser intrusions such as brief investigatory stops may rest on a lesser standard, a "particularized suspicion"--a term explained in United States v. Cortez, 449 U.S. 411, 417-418 (1981), that allows a trained law officer to draw inferences and make deductions that might elude untrained persons. See LaFave §9.3. Some encounters between an individual and law officers do not implicate the Fourth Amendment. INS v. Delgado, _____ U.S. _____, 104 S. Ct. 1758 (1984); Florida v. Royer, 460 U.S. 491, 496 (1983) (plurality opinion). Finally, a routine search at the border is a reasonable intrusion without any antecedent justification. See United States v. Ramsey, 431 U.S. 606, 619 (1977).

3. Difference Between Search and Seizure. The intrusion resulting from a search is different from the interference with property resulting from a seizure. A search affects a person's privacy interests; a seizure affects only a person's possessory interests. A "search" occurs when an expectation of privacy that society is prepared to consider reasonable is infringed. A "seizure" of property occurs when there is some meaningful interference with an individual's necessary interests in that property. A "seizure" of the person is a meaningful interference, however brief, with an individual's freedom of movement. Segura v. United States, supra; United States v. Jacobsen, supra, at 1652, 1656 and n.5; United States v. Karo, U.S. , 104 S. Ct. 3296 (1984). See also INS v. Delgado, supra, at 1758, 1762.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

Accordingly, the justification for a seizure may be reasonable in circumstances where a search would be unreasonable. It is thus well settled that it is "constitutionally reasonable for law enforcement officials to seize 'effects' that cannot support a justifiable expectation of privacy without a warrant, based on probable cause to believe they contain contraband." Segura v. United States, supra; United States v. Jacobsen, supra. The risk of disappearance or use before a warrant may be obtained outweighs the interest in possession. See, e.g., United States v. Place, 462 U.S. 696 (1983). A warrant still may be required for the search, however, because warrantless searches are presumptively unreasonable subject to exceptions. See, e.g., United States v. Karo, supra.

4. Governmental Action. Finally the Fourth Amendment only proscribes governmental action; "it is wholly inapplicable 'to a search or seizure, even an unreasonable one, effected by a private individual not acting as an agent of the Government or with the participation or knowledge of any governmental official.'" United States v. Jacobsen, supra, at 1656, quoting Walter v. United States, 447 U.S. 649, 662 (1980) (Blackmun, J., dissenting). See Burdeau v. McDowell, 256 U.S. 465, 475 (1921). See also United States v. Gumerlock, 590 F.2d 794 (9th Cir. 1979) (en banc).

9-4.110 Search Warrants

The issuance and execution of a federal search warrant should comply with the requirements of Rule 41 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure and the Fourth Amendment. See 2 LaFave, Chapter 4.

It is obviously desirable for law enforcement officials to apply for a search warrant before a neutral and detached magistrate with sufficient and accurate information to satisfy the "totality of the circumstances"

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

test set forth in Illinois v. Gates, 462 U.S. 213 (1983), and to execute the warrant properly. First, the Fourth Amendment has been interpreted to include the requirement that normally searches of private property be performed pursuant to a search warrant issued in compliance with the Warrant Clause. See, e.g., Arkansas v. Sanders, 442 U.S. 753, 758 (1979). Second, and most significantly, under United States v. Leon, _____ U.S. _____, 104 S. Ct. 3405 (1984), and Massachusetts v. Sheppard, _____ U.S. _____, 104 S. Ct. 3424 (1984), the exclusionary rule will not be applied to suppress evidence obtained by officers acting in objectively reasonable reliance on a search warrant, issued by a neutral and detached magistrate, that is subsequently determined to be invalid.

The modification of the exclusionary rule, however, should not be interpreted to diminish the importance of compliance with any warrant requirements. The Leon decision has been described by Justice Blackmun as "provisional" and "subject to change in light of changing judicial understanding about the effects of the rule outside the confines of the courtroom." Compliance will insure that Leon will not be overruled.

9-4.111 Exceptions to Warrant Requirements

The Supreme Court has said that it is preferable to obtain a search warrant, although in a wide range of diverse situations it and lower courts have recognized "flexible common-sense exceptions to this requirement." Texas v. Brown, 460 U.S. 730, 734 (1983) (plurality opinion); United States v. Karo, _____ U.S. _____, 104 S. Ct. 3296 (1984); Mincey v. Arizona, 437 U.S. 385, 390 (1978); United States v. Jeffers, 342 U.S. 48, 51-52 (1951). Full scale searches or seizures have been found to be permissible upon probable cause without a warrant. See, e.g., New York v. Belton, 453 U.S. 454 (1981), and United States v. Robinson, 414 U.S. 218 (1973); Chimel v. California, 395 U.S. 752 (1969) (search of person and surrounding area incident to arrest); United States v. Ross, 456 U.S. 798 (1982), and United States v. Nigro, 727 F.2d 100 (6th Cir. 1984) (en banc) (search of automobile or airplane believed to contain contraband); Schneckloth v. Bustamonte, 412 U.S. 218 (1973) (consent); United States v. Mendenhall, 446 U.S. 544, 557-558 (1980), and Zap v. United States, 328 U.S. 624 (1946) (consent); Warden v. Hyden, 387 U.S. 294 (1967) (hot pursuit); United States v. Pappas, 613 F.2d 324 (1st Cir. 1979) (en banc). Lesser intrusions may be permissible upon particularized suspicion. See, e.g., Terry v. Ohio, 392 U.S. 1 (1968) (stop and frisk); United States v. Brignoni-Ponce, 422 U.S. 873, 878 (1975); United States v. Cortez, 449 U.S. 411 (1981), and Brown v. Texas, 443 U.S. 47, 50-53 (1979) (seizure for questioning); Michigan v. Summers, 452 U.S. 692 (1981) (detention during execution of a search warrant). Other intrusions are legal without any suspicion. See, e.g., Almeida-Sanchez v. United States, 413 U.S. 266 (1973), and United States v. Ramsey, 431 U.S. 606, 616-619 (1977); Oliver v. United States, _____ U.S. _____, 104 S. Ct. 1735 (1984) (open fields); Delaware v. Prouse, 440 U.S. 648, 663 (1979) (roadblock); INS v. Delgado, _____ U.S. _____, 104 S. Ct. 1758, 1762-1763 (1984) (police questioning by itself without any form of detention); Illinois v. Andreas, _____ U.S. _____, 103 S. Ct. 3319 (1983) (controlled delivery); United States v. Villamonte-Marquez, 462 U.S. 579 (1983); South Dakota v. Opperman, 428 U.S. 364 (1976), and Illinois v. LaFayette, 462 U.S. 640 (1983) (standardized inventory procedure); Abel v. United States, 362 U.S. 217, 241 (1960), United States v. Colbert, 474 F.2d 174 (5th Cir. 1973) (en banc), and LaFave §2.6(b) and §2.6(c) (abandonment). One of the most frequently litigated exceptions to the warrant requirement--consent--is discussed at USAM 9-4.153, infra. Another exception--border searches--is discussed at USAM 9-4.170, infra.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

Significantly, a seizure without a warrant that initially may be legal on probable cause or may be legal as a lesser intrusion on a particularized suspicion may become unreasonable because of delay or other reasons. See, e.g., Segura v. United States, _____ U.S. _____, 104 S. Ct. 3424 (1984); Florida v. Royer, 460 U.S. 491 (1983) (plurality opinion).

9-4.112 Warrant Requirements

A. Neutral and Detached Magistrate

Under Rule 41(a) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, a federal search warrant may be issued by either a federal magistrate, a federal judge, or a judge of a state court of record for the district where the property is located upon request by a "federal law enforcement officer, or an attorney for the government." See 3 Wright, Federal Practice and Procedure; Criminal 2d §670.

The magistrate must be neutral and detached. United States v. Leon, _____ U.S. _____, 104 S. Ct. 3405 (1984). He/she must not be a rubber stamp for the police and must make an independent evaluation of probable cause without having any personal or professional stake in the outcome. See Lo-Ji Sales, Inc. v. New York, 442 U.S. 319, 327 (1979) (town justice who issued warrant and participated in general search acted not as detached judicial officer but as quasi-law enforcement officer); Connally v. Georgia, 429 U.S. 245, 250 (1977) (per curiam) (justice of peace who received fee only if warrants were issued not neutral and detached). 2 LaFave §4.2.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

B. Oath or Affirmation (Written Application)

The Fourth Amendment mandates that oath or affirmation support the facts and circumstances relied upon to establish probable cause. Rule 41 (c)(1) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure generally requires that a search warrant be issued by a magistrate upon a written affidavit which sets forth evidence demonstrating the existence of probable cause. The magistrate may, however, require the affiant to appear personally and may examine him/her and any witnesses he/she may produce, provided that such proceeding shall be recorded and made part of the affidavit.

C. Oral Application

1. Since 1977, Rule 41(c)(2) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure has provided a procedure for the issuance by a federal magistrate of a search warrant upon sworn oral testimony communicated by telephone "or other appropriate means." See 3 Wright, Federal Practice and Procedure; Criminal 2d §670.1; LaFave §4.3(c). The rule mandates that the magistrate be satisfied that "the circumstances are such as to make it reasonable to dispense with a written affidavit." The guidelines approved by the magistrates' committee of the Judicial Conference for the implementation of the Rule, incorporated in Chapter 4 of the Legal Manual for United States Magistrates, provide that the telephonic procedure should be used "sparingly" and "[u]nder no circumstances should it be allowed to become a substitute for the normal appearance requirement of Rule 41(c)(1) to meet the convenience of law enforcement personnel." Significantly, Rule 41(c)(2)(G) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure provides that, absent a finding of bad faith, evidence obtained upon an oral application is not subject to suppression "on the ground that the circumstances were not such as to make it reasonable to dispense with a written affidavit."

Obviously, under United States v. Leon, supra, an oral application, if the circumstances are appropriate, should be used to avoid the application of the exclusionary rule. Special care should be taken to insure that the application complies with both the Fourth Amendment and the Rule. Significantly, courts have considered the availability of the telephonic warrant in determining whether exigent circumstances existed for a warrantless search. See United States v. McEachin, 670 F.2d 1139, 1146-1148 (D.C. Cir. 1981); United States v. Cuaron, 700 F.2d 582, 589 (10th Cir. 1983); United States v. Manfredi, 722 F.2d 519, 522 (9th Cir. 1983).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Under the rule, the finding of probable cause may be based upon the same kind of evidence as is sufficient for a written affidavit. When a warrant on oral testimony is requested, the federal magistrate is required immediately to place under oath each applicant and each person upon whose testimony forms a basis for the warrant. A record of the entire conversation is required, either by a voice recording device or a stenographic or longhand verbatim record. If a voice recording device is used or a stenographic record made, the magistrate is required to have the record transcribed, to certify the accuracy of the transcription, and to file a copy of the original recording and transcription with the court. If a longhand verbatim record is made, the magistrate is required to file a signed copy with the court.

The applicant also is required to prepare and read a document known as the "duplicate original warrant" verbatim to the federal magistrate who in turn prepares the "original warrant" verbatim except as to modifications that he/she directs. In addition, the person who executes the warrant is required to enter the exact time of execution on the face of the duplicate original warrant.

There have been few cases interpreting this rule. In United States v. Shorter, 600 F.2d 585 (6th Cir. 1979), the court invalidated a telephonic search warrant because the affiant seeking the warrant was not immediately placed under oath as required by Rule 41(c)(2)(D) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, but gave an oath after he testified. In United States v. Loyd, 721 F.2d 331 (11th Cir. 1983), the court held that the magistrate's failure to certify the accuracy of the transcript of a taped oral search warrant after the search had occurred did not warrant suppression because there was no intentional disregard of the Rule.

2. The guidelines for oral search warrants contained in Chapter 4 of the Legal Manual for United States Magistrates provide as follows:

a. Applicability of the New Procedure

The new telephonic procedure for obtaining a search warrant from a magistrate should be used sparingly. Under no circumstances should it be allowed to become a substitute for the normal personal appearance requirement of Rule 41(c)(1) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure to meet the convenience of law enforcement personnel. The magistrate must be "satisfied that the circumstances are such as to make it reasonable to dispense with a written affidavit . . . ."

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

b. District Arrangements

In order for each district to be prepared to implement the new telephone procedure it is suggested that court officials confer with the U.S. Attorney and law enforcement personnel to establish local guidelines and procedures. A district should provide for at least one magistrate to be "on call" at all times to entertain applications for search warrants, such as through a rotation system. A district, for example, may provide--if feasible--that applications for telephonic warrants should normally be made to full-time magistrates only. As part of its program, the court may wish to explore with the telephone company the possibility of establishing conference calls on short notice in order to enable the magistrate to speak with the applicant(s) and an Assistant U.S. Attorney at the same time. The court should also make arrangements through the Administrative Office to provide suitable recording equipment for a magistrate's home or office to record pertinent telephone conversations between the magistrate and law enforcement personnel. The Magistrates Division can advise the court in determining the number and type of services needed.

c. Initial Showing

Upon receipt of a telephone request for a search warrant, the magistrate should require a showing of an emergency need for the warrant. If practicable, an Assistant U.S. Attorney should be included in the telephone conversation. The burden is on the agency and/or the U.S. Attorney to establish that the circumstances are such that it is unreasonable for the agent to present a written affidavit to the magistrate in person.

d. Demonstrating Need for Dispensing With a Written Affidavit

Criteria should be developed in each court to determine when and under what circumstances the telephonic procedure is acceptable. While conditions will vary from court to court, examples of such criteria could include the following:

- (1) The agent cannot reach the magistrate in his/her office during regular court hours.
- (2) The agent making the search is a significant distance from the magistrate.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

(3) The factual situation is such that it would be unreasonable for a substitute agent, who is located near the magistrate, to present a written affidavit in person to the magistrate in lieu of proceeding with a telephonic application.

(4) The need for a search is such that without the telephonic procedure a search warrant could not be obtained and there would be a significant risk that evidence would be destroyed.

e. Procedures to be Used in Considering Issuance of Warrant

The following procedures should be followed by a magistrate in considering a telephonic application for a search warrant:

(1) The magistrate should record the entire conversation with the affiant (or affiants) after the caller informs the magistrate that the purpose of the call is to request a warrant.

(2) If recording equipment is not available, the magistrate shall make a stenographic or longhand verbatim record.

(3) If feasible, an Assistant U.S. Attorney should be included in the telephone conversation at the same time as the agent and the magistrate.

(4) The magistrate must place under oath each person whose testimony will form a basis for the application in accordance with Rule 41 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. Adequate identification of the agent should be secured.

(5) The magistrate may wish to complete a log sheet such as AO Form 269 that includes essential data such as:

(a) The date and precise time of the telephone call;

(b) The name or names of the agents involved and their official titles and agency affiliations;

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

(c) The names and addresses of any other affiants;

(d) The name of any Assistant U.S. Attorneys who may have spoken with the magistrate regarding the search warrant application;

(e) The "emergency" circumstances giving rise to the telephonic warrant request;

(f) Any additional facts deemed particularly necessary or useful that do not already appear on the original warrant; and

(g) The magistrate's determination of the application.

(6) Whenever feasible, the agent's sworn oral testimony should already be reduced to written form by the time the magistrate is contacted, just as if a written affidavit were being presented in person to the magistrate. (AO Form 106). This will enable the magistrate to determine probable cause more easily and clearly. The agent or the attorney for the government should read the contents of the prepared statement to the magistrate. The magistrate may ask questions and solicit additional information necessary to establish all the elements needed for probable cause.

(7) The grounds for issuance and the contents of the warrant are those required by Rule 41(c)(1) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure.

(8) The applicant for the warrant should prepare a "duplicate original warrant" and read it, verbatim, to the magistrate. At the same time the magistrate should enter, verbatim, what is read to him/her by the applicant on the "original warrant." The magistrate may direct that modifications be made in the warrant.

(9) Once the magistrate is satisfied that the contents of the warrant are proper and that issuance of the warrant is justified, he/she should direct the agent or the attorney for the government to sign the magistrate's name on the "duplicate original" warrant.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

(10) The magistrate and the applicant(s) should synchronize their watches to assure that times placed on the warrants correlate with each other.

(11) The magistrate should simultaneously sign the original warrant and enter the exact date and time of issuance in accordance with Rule 41(c)(2)(C) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. The agent must place the exact time of execution on the duplicate original warrant in accordance with Rule 41(c)(2)(F) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure.

(12) The agent and magistrate should use the newly adopted oral search warrant form (AO Form 93A).

f. Procedures Following Issuance of Warrant

The following procedures should be followed by a magistrate after issuing a search warrant under the telephonic procedure:

(1) On the first court day following the issuance of the telephonic warrant the magistrate should direct that a duplicate tape be made of his/her conversation with the law enforcement agent. The duplicate tape should be turned over to the agent or U.S. Attorney's office for preparation of a transcript of the telephonic conversation. (In accordance with Judicial Conference policy, neither magistrates nor their staff should prepare documents for law enforcement officers.)

(2) The agent or Assistant U.S. Attorney should subsequently present to the magistrate's office a transcript of the conversation with the applicant. The magistrate should verify the accuracy of the transcript against his/her own recording and log sheet and certify it, if in order. At this time the magistrate may also wish to have the agent sign and swear to the veracity of the transcribed conversation, although this requirement, which had been contained in the rule approved by the Supreme Court, was specifically deleted by the Congress. If neither a sound recording nor a stenographic record were made, the magistrate should file a signed copy of a long-hand verbatim record with the court.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

(3) Rule 41(c)(1) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure specifies that up to 10 days may be granted to execute and return a warrant issued upon written affidavit. Rule 41(c)(2)(1) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure states that the contents of the warrant issued upon oral testimony are to be the same as those contained in Rule 41(c)(1) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure for a warrant issued upon an affidavit. This provision appears to apply the 10-day limit to warrants issued under Rule 41(c)(2) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. The magistrate should specify, on the face of the warrant, the amount of time granted to execute the warrant. Presumably, only a relatively short period of time is required, as the agent would otherwise have sufficient opportunity to apply in person to the magistrate for a warrant upon written affidavit. (The return must still conform to the requirements of Rule 41(d) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure.)

(4) In accordance with normal arrangements devised in cooperation with the clerk of the court, the magistrate should eventually send his/her log, the original tape (or the stenographic or longhand record), the certified transcript, and the warrants to the clerk for permanent filing, together with appropriate docket or minute notations.

9-4.113 Probable Cause

Rule 41 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure provides that a warrant may issue upon probable cause

To search for and seize any (1) property that constitutes evidence of the commission of a criminal offense; or (2) contraband, the fruits of crime, or things otherwise criminally possessed; or (3) property designed or intended for use or which is or has been used as the means of committing a criminal offense; or (4) person for whose arrest there is probable cause, or who is unlawfully restrained.

"In dealing with probable cause, . . . as the very name implies, we deal with probabilities. These are not technical; they are the factual and practical considerations of everyday life on which reasonable and prudent men, not legal technicians, act," Brinegar v. United States, 338 U.S. 160, 175 (1949); Illinois v. Gates, 462 U.S. 213, 224 (1983).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

The information communicated to the magistrate must contain sufficient information to satisfy the "totality of the circumstances" test announced in Illinois v. Gates, supra. See also Massachusetts v. Upton, ___ U.S. ___, 104 S. Ct. 2085 (1984). "Sufficient information must be presented to the magistrate to allow that official to determine probable cause; his action cannot be a mere ratification of the bare conclusions of others." Illinois v. Gates, supra, at 2332; United States v. Leon, ___ U.S. ___, 104 S. Ct. 3405 (1984). He/she must be given adequate information

To make a practical, common sense decision whether, given all the circumstances set forth in the affidavit before him, including the 'veracity' and 'basis of knowledge' of persons supplying hearsay information, there is a fair probability that contraband or evidence of a crime will be found.

Illinois v. Gates, supra, at 238.

While deference to a magistrate's determination is accorded, his/her finding of probable cause does not preclude inquiry into the knowing or reckless falsity of the affidavit on which that determination is made. See Franks v. Delaware, 438 U.S. 154 (1978). Under United States v. Leon, supra, suppression of evidence remains an appropriate remedy if the magistrate was "misled by information in an affidavit that the affiant knew was false or would have known was false except for his reckless disregard for the truth." Accordingly, the restrictions upon suppression of evidence adopted by Leon will likely result in an increase of motions bottomed on Franks v. Delaware, supra.

To invalidate a warrant and exclude the fruits of the search, a defendant bears the burden of establishing by a preponderance of the evidence that the affiant included perjured statements or recklessly disregarded the truth in making the statements, and that without the affidavit's false material the remainder of the affidavit lacks probable cause to support the warrant. Franks v. Delaware, supra, at 155-156, 171-172; United States v. Karo, ___ U.S. ___, 104 S. Ct. 3296 (1984); United States v. Reed, 726 F.2d 339, 341 (7th Cir. 1984); United States v. Foster, 711 F.2d 871, 879 (9th Cir. 1983). "The deliberate falsity or reckless disregard whose impeachment is permitted today is only that of the affiant, not of any nongovernmental informant." Franks v. Delaware, supra, at 171 (emphasis added). See LaFave §4.4(b).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

A defendant cannot routinely obtain a Franks hearing by merely challenging the affidavit supporting a warrant.

There is, of course, a presumption of validity with respect to the affidavit supporting the search warrant. To mandate an evidentiary hearing, the challenger's attack must be more than conclusory and must be supported by more than a mere desire to cross-examine. There must be allegations of deliberate falsehood or of reckless disregard for the truth, and those allegations must be accompanied by an offer of proof. They should point out specifically the portion of the warrant affidavit that is claimed to be false; and they should be accompanied by a statement of supporting reasons. Affidavits or sworn or otherwise reliable statements of witnesses should be furnished, or their absence satisfactorily explained.

Franks, supra, at 171. The presumption of validity of the warrant cannot be overcome by a defendant's self-serving statement which purports to refute the affidavit. See United States v. McDonald, 723 F.2d 1288, 1293 (7th Cir. 1983); United States v. Reed, supra, at 341-342.

9-4.114 Particularity

A federal warrant must describe with particularity the place to be searched and the persons or things to be seized. See LaFare §§4.5 and 4.6. The particularity and probable cause requirements are closely interconnected. See United States v. Hershenow, 680 F.2d 847, 851 (1st Cir. 1982). The particularity requirement is designed to prevent general warrants. See Andresen v. Maryland, 427 U.S. 463, 480 (1976); Coolidge v. New Hampshire, 403 U.S. 443, 467 (1971); Marron v. United States, 275 U.S. 192, 196 (1927). This requirement is accorded "the most scrupulous exactitude where the seizure impinges upon First Amendment freedoms." See Stanford v. Texas, 379 U.S. 476, 485 (1965); Lo-Ji Sales, Inc. v. New York, 442 U.S. 319, 326 (1979). See also Sequoia Books, Inc. v. McDonald, 725 F.2d 1091, 1093-1094 (7th Cir. 1984). A search conducted pursuant to a warrant that fails to conform to the particularity requirements of the Fourth Amendment is unconstitutional. See Massachusetts v. Sheppard, ___ U.S. ___, 104 S. Ct. 3424 (1984). In that case the Supreme Court ruled, however, that a technical mistake in particularity did not merit suppression of the evidence. The affidavit for the warrant stated that the police wanted to search for certain described items, including clothing of a murder victim and a blunt instrument that might have been used on the victim. By mistake, the warrant form that was signed authorized a search for controlled substances even though the judge authorizing the warrant informed the affiant that the warrant was sufficient in form and content to carry out the requested search. See also United States v. Loyd, 721 F.2d 331, 333 (11th Cir. 1983) (no suppression required for a non-intentional Rule 41, Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, violation).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

A. The Place to be Searched

While Massachusetts v. Sheppard, supra, may afford relief from reasonable mistakes in particularity, a flawed warrant should be avoided. The description of the premises to be searched should be sufficiently specific so that an "officer with a search warrant can, with reasonable effort, ascertain and identify the place intended." Steele v. United States, 267 U.S. 498, 503 (1925). As it has been noted, "the primary purpose of this limitation is to minimize the risk that officers executing search warrants will by mistake search a place other than the place intended by the magistrate." 2 LaFave, §4.5 at 72. See United States v. Prout, 526 F.2d 380, 387-388 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 840 (1976); United States v. Darenbourg, 520 F.2d 985, 987 (5th Cir. 1975); and United States v. Melancon, 462 F.2d 82, 94 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 409 U.S. 1038 (1972).

When a particular dwelling is described as the place to be searched, the warrant permits a search of the surrounding property as well. For example, the backyard of a house or a trash can in the rear of a house may be searched pursuant to a search warrant for the premises even though not specifically identified in the warrant since courts have construed the term "premises" to include more than the residence itself. See United States v. Anderson, 485 F.2d 239 (5th Cir. 1973), cert. denied, 415 U.S. 958 (1974); United States v. Wright, 468 F.2d 1184 (6th Cir. 1972), cert. denied, 412 U.S. 938 (1973); United States v. Meyer, 417 F.2d 1020 (8th Cir. 1969). See also United States v. Tabor, 722 F.2d 596 (10th Cir. 1983) (barn not covered by warrant to search house but circumstances justified protective sweep). With respect to multiple-occupancy premises, a search warrant which fails to particularize the apartment or limit the dwelling to be searched may be invalid. See United States v. Votteller, 544 F.2d 1355 (6th Cir. 1976) (warrant struck down when building in question was multiple dwelling and warrant listed only a telephone number located in the building). However, minor errors in the description will not be fatal to warrant if the executing officers are able to identify the place to be searched without difficulty. See United States v. Bedford, 519 F.2d 650, 655 (3d Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 424 U.S. 917 (1976).

In a variety of situations, courts have found that imprecise and faulty descriptions of premises in warrants did not result in violations of the Fourth Amendment. A review of these cases is set forth in United States v. Gitcho, 601 F.2d 369 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 871 (1979), upholding a search where the address stated in the warrant, although incorrect, was reasonable for the location intended. The court emphasized that the premises which were intended to be searched were, in fact, those actually searched. Searches of the entire premises have been upheld when police arrive to execute a warrant and unexpectedly find the building is broken down into subunits. See, e.g., National City Trading Corp. v. United States, 635 F.2d 1020 (2d Cir. 1980); United States v. Dorsey, 591 F.2d 922 (D.C. Cir. 1978); United States v. Whitney, 633 F.2d 902, 907-908 (9th Cir. 1980). Other searches comply with the constitutional mandate despite flaws in description, when the warrant has stated that the premises are occupied or controlled by a particular person who in fact is the occupant or in control. See, e.g., Kenney v. United States, 157 F.2d 442 (D.C. Cir. 1946); United States v. Campanile, 516 F.2d 288, 291 (2d Cir. 1975); 2 LaFare, §4.5 at 75.

Finally, ambiguities and defects in the description in the warrant are cured by the specificity in the affidavit when the affidavit accompanies the warrant. See United States v. Gill, 623 F.2d 540, 543-544 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 873 (1980); Moore v. United States, 461 F.2d 1236 (D.C. Cir. 1972). In short, so long as there is no reasonable probability that the wrong premises might be searched, a vague or erroneous description of premises in a warrant has been found to be constitutionally sufficient.

B. The Things to be Seized

It has often been said that the Fourth Amendment requirement of particularity makes general searches impossible "and prevents the seizure of one thing under a warrant describing another. As to what is to be taken, nothing is left to the discretion of the officer executing the warrant." Marron v. United States, 275 U.S. 192, 196 (1927); Stanford v. Texas, 379 U.S. 476, 485 (1965); Andresen v. Maryland, 427 U.S. 463, 480 (1976). But as Professor LaFare has remarked (2 LaFare, §4.6(a) at 96):

If read literally, that would mean no description would pass muster unless it was so detailed that there was no chance of there being present upon the premises some other object which the description might encompass. Quite obviously, few warrants could pass such a test, and it is more accurate to say that 'the warrant must be sufficiently definite so that the officer executing it can identify the property sought with reasonable certainty.'

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Rule 41(b) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure allows a warrant to be issued for property described in three ways:

(1) property that constitutes evidence of the commission of a criminal offense; or (2) contraband, the fruits of crime, or things otherwise criminally possessed; or (3) property designed or intended for use or which is or has been used as the means of committing a criminal offense.

Since the rule allows all kinds of objects to be the subject of a warrant "it is not possible to discuss the Fourth Amendment particularity situation that may arise." 2 LaFave, §4.6(a) at 95. We again refer the reader to Professor LaFave, who separately discusses contraband; stolen goods; instrumentalities and evidence; and literature, pictures, films and recordings. 2 LaFave §4.6(b), (c), (d) & (e).

It has been frequently recognized in discussions of warrants for business records that the particularity requirement must be applied with a practical degree of flexibility depending on the type of property to be seized, and that a description of property will be acceptable if it is as specific as the circumstances and nature of activity under investigation permit. See United States v. Truglio, 731 F.2d 1123, 1127 (4th Cir. 1984); United States v. Wuagneux, 683 F.2d 1343, 1348-1351 (11th Cir. 1982); United States v. Offices Known as 50 State Distributing Co., 708 F.2d 1371, 1374-1375 (9th Cir. 1983); National City Trading Corp. v. United States, 635 F.2d 1020, 1026 (2d Cir. 1980); United States v. Hershenow, 680 F.2d 847, 850-854 (1st Cir. 1982).

The seizure of obscene material involves difficult problems because particularity is accorded "the most scrupulous exactitude" where the seizure impinges upon First Amendment freedoms. See Stanford v. Texas, 379 U.S. 476, 485 (1965); Lo-Ji Sales, Inc. v. New York, 442 U.S. 319, 326 (1979). A warrant to seize "obscene publications" is overbroad; it does not contain adequate safeguards to assure nonobscene material the constitutional protection to which it is entitled. See Marcus v. Search Warrant, 367 U.S. 717, 731 (1961). A court of appeals has upheld, however, the seizure from a book store of "materials that contain depictions (in context, photographic) of sexual intercourse and variants thereof described in the warrant" issued on "a detailed affidavit from a police investigator which described in minute and indeed rather disgusting detail nine magazines that the investigator had read in the store." Sequoia Books, Inc. v. McDonald, 725 F.2d 1091 (7th Cir. 1984). But see United States v. Guarino, 729 F.2d 864, 866-869 (1st Cir. 1984) (en banc) (invalidating a warrant authorizing the stop and search of a truck to look for "obscene materials . . . of the same tenor and description as Turkish Delight, Sex Photo Fiction No. 1, and Sex Photo Fiction No. 2").

But even a search for stolen property or other objects may present problems in description. See 2 LaFave §4.6(c). The particularity guarantee, however, does not preclude use of generic language where officers are unable to specify in advance all seizable evidence on the premises to be searched. See, e.g., United States v. Hillyard, 677 F.2d 1336, 1339, 1340 (9th Cir. 1982); United States v. Scharfman, 448 F.2d 1352 (2d Cir. 1971), cert. denied, 405 U.S. 19 (1972). "Courts are least demanding when the objects described are contraband" and descriptions such as "narcotic drugs" have been upheld. 2 LaFave §4.6(b).

Finally, if portions of a search warrant fail to describe the object of a search with sufficient particularity, the other portions of the warrant which meet the particularity requirement are valid and severable from the overbroad portion. See, e.g., United States v. Fitzgerald, 724 F.2d 633 (8th Cir. 1983), cert. denied, ___ U.S. ___, 104 S. Ct. 2151 (1984); United States v. Riggs, 690 F.2d 298 (1st Cir. 1982); United States v. Christine, 687 F.2d 749 (3d Cir. 1982); United States v. Cook, 657 F.2d 730 (5th Cir. 1981); United States v. Thompson, 612 F.2d 233, 234 (6th Cir. 1979).

In short, careful draftsmanship should be employed and, hopefully, good faith mistakes will be saved by Massachusetts v. Sheppard ___ U.S. ___, 104 S. Ct. 3424 (1984), or by severability.

9-4.115 Execution

The principal statutory provisions covering the execution of a search warrant are set forth in Rule 41(d) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, 18 U.S.C. §3105 and 18 U.S.C. §3109. Execution of the warrant is discussed in 2 LaFave §4.7 (Time of Execution), §4.8 (Entry Without Notice or by Force), §4.9 (Detention and Search of Persons), §4.10 (Scope and Intensity of the Search), §4.11.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

A. Persons Authorized to Serve a Search Warrant

A search warrant can be served by any of the officers mentioned in its direction or by an officer authorized by law to serve such a warrant. Under 18 U.S.C. §3105, persons without authority to execute a warrant cannot be present or assist in the search unless an authorized officer has asked for assistance and is present to supervise the search. See United States v. Clouston, 623 F.2d 485 (6th Cir. 1980).

B. Timing of Execution

Normally a search warrant can only be executed in the daytime. See Fed. R. Crim. P. 41(c)(1). Daytime is defined as 6:00 a.m. to 10:00 p.m., local time. See Fed. R. Crim. P. 41(h). If the search begins during the daytime, it may extend into the nighttime, provided the agents executing the warrant act reasonably and do not continue the search beyond the time necessary for proper completion. See United States v. Burgard, 551 F.2d 190, 193 (8th Cir. 1977).

A nighttime warrant may be obtained if the issuing authority, for reasonable cause shown in the warrant, authorizes its execution at a time other than daytime; Fed. R. Crim. P. 41(c)(1); see United States v. Stefanson, 648 F.2d 1231, 1236 (9th Cir. 1981) (required affiant to show "sufficient facts" in affidavit to support authorization for nighttime search); see also United States v. Searp, 586 F.2d 1117, 1121 (6th Cir. 1978), cert. denied, 440 U.S. 921 (1979); United States v. Curry, 530 F.2d 636 (5th Cir. 1976), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 829 (1977). In contrast, searches for drugs, undertaken under 21 U.S.C. §879, require no special showing for a nighttime search. See Gooding v. United States, 416 U.S. 430 (1974) (merely showing that contraband is likely to be on the property or person to be searched at that time is sufficient for nighttime search under 21 U.S.C. §879); United States v. Gibbons, 607 F.2d 1320, 1326-1327 (10th Cir. 1979) (nighttime search of truck reasonable because it involved no intrusion into home or disturbance of its owner).

The search warrant authorizes the officer to search within a specified period of time, not to exceed 10 days, the person or place named for the specified property. See Fed. R. Crim. P. 41(c)(1). If the warrant is not executed within the specified time it is void and cannot be renewed. To conduct a search of the same person or place, a new affidavit must be filed and a new search warrant issued. See Sgro v. United States, 287 U.S. 206 (1932).

C. Protective Sweeps and Other Measures

An officer has the right to carry firearms and protect himself/herself while conducting a search. See, e.g., 21 U.S.C. §878(1).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

Furthermore, an officer can take measures to assure that the search will not be interfered with, including detention of the occupants where the warrant authorizes a search for contraband. See Michigan v. Summers, 452 U.S. 692 (1981). Likewise, if an officer has reasonable grounds to believe there may be other persons on the premises who might reasonably be expected either to interfere with the arrest by force or attempt the destruction of evidence, a "protective sweep" or a cursory examination of the surrounding area may be made. See United States v. Hill, 730 F.2d 1163, 1169 (8th Cir. 1984); United States v. Martino, 664 F.2d 860, 869 (2d Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 458 U.S. 1110 (1982) (officers lawfully on premises to effect arrest are entitled to make limited search for third persons who might destroy evidence or pose safety threat). Such protective sweeps have been upheld in a variety of contexts. See United States v. Sheikh, 654 F.2d 1057, 1072 (5th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 991 (1982) (police may conduct security check of motel room when occupant arrested outside room and reasonable suspicion others remained inside). See United States v. Bruton, 647 F.2d 818, 822-23 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 868 (1981) (sweep search of locked mobile home after shootout with defendant outside the structure); United States v. Young, 553 F.2d 1132, 1134 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 431 U.S. 959 (1977) (search of house for accomplices after shootout with defendant); United States v. Baker, 577 F.2d 1147, 1152 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 850 (1978) (protective sweep of house after arrest of owner and confederate in front of it); United States v. Tabor, 722 F.2d 596, 597-99 (10th Cir. 1983) (protective sweep of barn during execution of search warrant covering house).

Nevertheless, the scope of the search cannot exceed its justification--namely, to protect the officers. Compare United States v. Hatcher, 680 F.2d 438, 444 (6th Cir. 1982) (sweep search of entire house after arrest of defendant on drug charges found unreasonable on facts there), with United States v. Hill, supra, at 1170 (observation, including that a gun was visible in the living room, justified the entry into that room for a protective sweep even though the warrant did not authorize entry into the house). And mere presence at the scene of a search is not, standing alone, adequate justification for a search of persons not named in a warrant. See Ybarra v. Illinois, 444 U.S. 85 (1979). See also USAM 9-4.119; 9-4.125, infra.

9-4.116 Manner of Entry

A. Knock-and-Announce Requirements

Except in exigent circumstances, 18 U.S.C. §3109 requires that an officer knock, announce his/her identity and purpose, and be refused admittance before breaking into a residence to execute a search or an arrest warrant. See Sabbath v. United States, 391 U.S. 585 (1968); United States v. Miller, 357 U.S. 301 (1958) (interests such as protection of owner's privacy; prevention of unnecessary violence; and preservation of property are served by the 18 U.S.C. §3109 notice requirement). See 2 LaFave §4.8.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

An officer who either makes an unannounced entry into a dwelling, breaks down a door, forces open a chain lock on a partially opened door, opens a locked door with a key, or opens a closed but unlocked door violates the statute. See Sabbath v. United States, supra; see also United States v. Tolliver, 665 F.2d 1005, 1008 (11th Cir.) (per curiam), cert. denied, 456 U.S. 935 (1982) (18 U.S.C. §3109 applicable because door not freely opened by occupant); but see United States v. Crawford, 657 F.2d 1041, 1045 (9th Cir. 1981) (18 U.S.C. §3109 not applicable at inner bedroom door when officers gave proper announcement at front door; repeat notice not required). The issue whether the statute is applicable to an outer ornamental iron gate rather than the wooden front door of the apartment itself is presented in a certiorari petition pending before the Supreme Court in United States v. Moreno, No. 83-396 (1984).

There is no right to refuse entry to police executing a warrant. Thus, where officers have reasonable grounds for concluding that they are being refused admittance following proper announcement, they may use reasonable force to obtain entry. An occupant's refusal can be express or implied. 21 A.L.R. Fed. 820; see, e.g., In re Search Warrant Dated July 4, 1977, 677 F.2d 117, 136 (D.C. Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 456 U.S. 926 (1982) (office officials denied admittance by refusing to provide file keys to agents who had announced their identity and purpose and showed warrant to employees at office); United States v. Singleton, 439 F.2d 381 (3d Cir. 1971) (officers' announcement of authority and purpose followed by a refusal to open door and a shuffling of feet inside justified forcible entry).

Each case turns on its own particular facts. Nonetheless, officers should observe the knock-and-announce procedures and minimize the risk that the search will be held invalid.

This is not to say, however, that failure to knock-and-announce is unreasonable per se. No-knock entries are generally allowed when compliance with 18 U.S.C. §3109 becomes unreasonable due to exigent circumstances. See Ker v. California, 374 U.S. 23 (1963); see also United States v. McShane, 462 F.2d 5, 6 (9th Cir. 1972) (compliance would endanger officers' lives); United States v. Nolan, 718 F.2d 589, 596-602

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

(3d Cir. 1983), and Rodriguez v. Jones, 473 F.2d 599 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 412 U.S. 953 (1973) (compliance might have resulted in occupant's escape); United States v. Tolliver, 665 F.2d 1005, 1008 (11th Cir. 1982) (per curiam), cert. denied, 456 U.S. 935 (1982) (compliance might result in destruction of evidence). Exigent circumstances must be found based on facts known to the officers at the time of entry, and not on speculation. See United States v. Artieri, 491 F.2d 440 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 417 U.S. 949 (1974).

In addition to the exigency exception, a "useless gesture" exception exists when officers are virtually certain that the occupants already know their identity and purpose. See Miller v. United States, 357 U.S. 301 (1958); see also United States v. Eddy, 660 F.2d 381, 385 (8th Cir. 1981) (noncompliance justified when officers waiting outside door at time defendant opened it were "justifiably and virtually certain" that occupants already knew of their purpose).

18 U.S.C. §3109 does not, however, extend to unoccupied premises. See United States v. Brown, 556 F.2d 304 (5th Cir. 1977); United States v. Agrusa, 541 F.2d 690 (8th Cir. 1976), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 1045 (1977); Payne v. United States, 508 F.2d 1391 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 933 (1975) (useless gesture to knock and announce when officers are virtually certain premises are unoccupied). Neither the Fourth Amendment nor federal law bases the power to search on the presence of the possessor or occupant; therefore, as long as the requirements of 18 §3109 and Rule 41 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure have been satisfied, a search can be conducted despite the occupant's absence. See United States v. Agrusa, supra; 2 LaFave §4.7(c).

B. Entry After a Ruse Announcement

While an officer executing a warrant must announce his/her authority and purpose, the courts have generally held that entrance following a ruse announcement at the door is not a "breaking" within the meaning of the statute. See United States v. Beale, 445 F.2d 977 (5th Cir. 1971), cert. denied, 404 U.S. 1026 (1971); Leahy v. United States, 272 F.2d 487 (9th Cir. 1959), cert. denied, 364 U.S. 945 (1960); 2 LaFave §4.8(b). See also United States v. Harris, 713 F.2d 623 (11th Cir. 1983) (reentry by undercover agent with uniformed officer did not violate statute or Fourth Amendment). Compare Lewis v. United States, 385 U.S. 206 (1966) (government agent may pose as a willing buyer to gain consensual entry into a private home to purchase narcotics); Gouled v. United States, 255 U.S. 298 (1921) (surreptitious search under guise of social visit was illegal). See also Jones v. Berry, 722 F.2d 443 (9th Cir. 1983); United States v. Schuster, 684 F.2d 744 (11th Cir. 1982); United States v.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Baldwin, 621 F.2d 251 (6th Cir. 1980) (misplaced confidence in undercover agent did not invalidate search).

9-4.117 Scope and Intensity of the Search

The scope and intensity, including the duration, of a search under a warrant are discussed in 2 LaFave §4.10.

A. The particularity of the warrant defines the scope and intensity of the search.

A lawful search of fixed premises generally extends to the entire area in which the object of the search may be found and is not limited by the possibility that separate acts of entry or opening may be required to complete the search. Thus, a warrant that authorizes an officer to search a home for illegal weapons also provides authority to open closets, chests, drawers, and containers in which the weapon might be found. A warrant to search a vehicle would support a search of every part of the vehicle that might contain the object of the search. When a legitimate search is under way, and when its purpose and its limits have been precisely defined, nice distinctions between closets, drawers, and containers, in the case of a home, or between glove compartments, upholstered seats, trunks, and wrapped packages, in the case of a vehicle, must give way to the interest in the prompt and efficient completion of the task at hand.

Moreover "[p]laces within the described premises are not excluded merely because some additional act of entry or opening may be required. 'In countless cases in which warrants described only the land and the buildings, a search of desks, cabinets, closets and similar items has been permitted.'" Id. n.27, quoting 2 LaFave 152.

Where the officers have exceeded the scope of their search, those items uncovered during the impermissible search may be suppressed. However, their suppression does not, ipso facto, require suppression of the entire search. See Waller v. Georgia, _____ U.S. _____, 104 S. Ct. 2210, 2214 (1984); Andresen v. Maryland, 427 U.S. 463, 482, n.11 (1976); see also United States v. Heldt, 668 F.2d 1238 (D.C. Cir. 1981) (per curiam), cert. denied, 456 U.S. 926 (1982) (absent bad faith of executing officer, seizure of some items outside scope of valid warrant will not by itself affect admissibility of other contemporaneously seized items that do fall within warrant). If, however, the officers acted in bad faith or otherwise acted unreasonably, it may be possible to suppress the whole search. See United States v. Rettig, 589 F.2d 418 (9th Cir. 1978).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

An exception to this restriction is seizures made under the plain view doctrine. See In re Search Warrant Dated July 4, 1977, 667 F.2d 117, 145 (D.C. Cir. 1981) (per curiam) (documentary evidence not listed in search warrant for specified documents may be seized if incriminating character immediately apparent). See Coolidge v. New Hampshire, 403 U.S. 443 (1971) (plurality opinion); Texas v. Brown, 460 U.S. 730 (1983) (plurality opinion). If all the requirements of the plain view doctrine are satisfied, the evidence uncovered will be deemed lawfully seized even where those items were not particularized in the warrant. See United States v. Wright, 641 F.2d 602 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 451 U.S. 1021 (1981) (court upheld admission of shotgun discovered in closet while police were conducting a "protective sweep" of motel room pursuant to execution of a warrant for controlled substances).

B. An individual cannot be searched simply because he/she is present with others suspected of criminal activity or at a location where such activity is occurring. See Ybarra v. Illinois, 444 U.S. 85 (1979) (under warrant authorizing only search of tavern and employer, heroin uncovered during pat-down of patron suppressed); United States v. Di Re, 332 U.S. 581 (1948). A search of a person can be linked to the reason for the search. United States v. Peep, 490 F.2d 903 (8th Cir. 1974) (circumstances established probable cause to search defendant who arrived at apartment while it was being searched for narcotics). Officers are generally permitted to frisk individuals present on the premises when the warrant is executed even though they are not named in the warrant, providing the officers can demonstrate that their frisk was "supported by a reasonable belief that the defendant was armed and presently dangerous." Ybarra v. Illinois, supra.

C. In Michigan v. Summers, 452 U.S. 692 (1981), the Court approved a limited form of custodial detention that permits officers executing a search warrant for premises to detain any persons found there for whom they have some "articulable and individualized" suspicion of wrongdoing. Once a search has been justified, then any incidental detention of the occupants is considered less intrusive than either the search itself or an arrest. For a discussion of measures which may be reasonably undertaken for the protection of the searching officers, including protective sweeps, see USAM 9-4.115C, supra. See also USAM 9-4.125, infra, dealing with detention of occupants at the place to be searched.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-4.118 Receipt, Return of Inventory

Although officers are not required to exhibit a search warrant before conducting the search, they are required by rule to leave a copy of the warrant and a receipt for property taken with the occupant, or at the premises, after the search is completed. After conducting the search, an agent must promptly file a return to the designated magistrate accompanied by an inventory of the items seized. See Fed. R. Crim. P. 41(d). Failure to provide the return is curable after the fact, United States v. McKenzie, 446 F.2d 949, 954 (6th Cir. 1971), and will not warrant suppression of the evidence without a showing of prejudice. See United States v. Marx, 635 F.2d 436, 441 (5th Cir. 1981).

9-4.119 Seizure Pending a Warrant

Officers will on occasion seize or obtain custody of property such as suitcases, briefcases, or pieces of mail which they have probable cause to search. Unless exigent circumstances or some other exception to the warrant requirement exists, such property cannot be searched absent a warrant. Nevertheless, officers may hold the property for a reasonable time in order to obtain a search warrant. See Segura v. United States, ___ U.S. ___, 104 S. Ct. 3380 (1984); Chambers v. Maroney, 399 U.S. 42 (1970); United States v. Chadwick, 433 U.S. 1 (1977); Arkansas v. Sanders, 442 U.S. 753 (1979). See also United States v. Place, 462 U.S. 696 (1983). Cf. United States v. Van Leeuwen, 397 U.S. 249 (1970).

In Segura v. United States, supra, the Chief Justice, in a part of an opinion in which only Justice O'Connor joined, said that "securing a dwelling, on the basis of probable cause, to prevent the description or removal of evidence while a search warrant is being sought is not itself an unreasonable seizure of either the dwelling or its contents." See USAM 9-4.125, infra, dealing with detention of occupants pursuant to a search of a home.

9-4.120 Search and Seizure of Persons and Effects

It is true that the "'body' or identity of a defendant or respondent in a criminal or civil proceeding is never itself suppressible as a fruit of an unlawful arrest, even if it is conceded that an unlawful arrest, search, or interrogation occurred," INS v. Lopez-Mendoza, _____ U.S. _____, 104 S. Ct. 3479 (1984); United States v. Crews, 445 U.S. 463, 474 (1980); Gerstein v. Pugh, 420 U.S. 103, 119 (1975). Nevertheless, suppression of evidence obtained as a result of the arrest may still remain a remedy for constitutional violations, making it imperative that any arrest comply with recent decisions. These and other cases are discussed in LaFave, §§5.1, 9.1 et seq.

9-4.121 Seizure of the Person

See USAM 9-4.122; 9-4.123; 9-4.124; 9-4.125, infra.

9-4.122 Arrest

The subject of arrest and the searches that may legally occur as a result of an arrest are discussed in LaFave, Chapter 5 and the departmental publication Proving Federal Crimes, 1-11 through 1-16; parts of the latter publication are herein utilized.

As Professor LaFave points out "It is often important to determine whether or not the police have made an arrest and, if they have, precisely when the arrest occurs." This question is more difficult in light of the less intrusive stop and frisk permitted by Terry v. Ohio, 392 U.S. 1 (1968). See INS v. Delgado, _____ U.S. _____, 104 S. Ct. 1753 (1984); Dunaway v. New York, 442 U.S. 200, 212-216 (1979). Compare California v. Beheler, _____ U.S. _____, 103 S. Ct. 3517 (1983) and Berkemer v. McCarty, _____ U.S. _____, 52 U.S.L.W. 5023 (1984) (Miranda warnings required where a person has been taken into custody or otherwise deprived of his/her freedom in any significant way).

An arrest is not determined by the subjective intent of the officers. See Taylor v. Arizona, 471 F.2d 848 (9th Cir. 1972). United States v. Glover, 725 F.2d 120, 122 (D.C. Cir. 1984). More than a restriction of liberty is required, and courts will also consider the degree of force used in the detention. See United States v. Beck, 598 F.2d at 500-502. Whether there is an arrest depends upon an evaluation of all the circumstances. See United States v. Richard, 500 F.2d 1025 (9th Cir. 1974), cert. denied, 420 U.S. 924 (1975). Cooperation with agents to allay suspicions does not constitute an arrest. See Oregon v. Mathiason, 429 U.S. 492 (1977); United States v. Chaffen, 587 F.2d 920 (8th Cir. 1978); United States v. Canales, 572 F.2d 1182 (6th Cir. 1978). Where the defendant, "incapacitated by alcohol," was placed under temporary detention that was not an "arrest" under state law, there could be no search incident to an arrest; but police could make a routine inventory of defendant's belongings. See United States v. Gallop, 606 F.2d 836 (9th Cir. 1979).

When a search is made incident to an arrest, the validity of the search depends upon the lawfulness of the arrest. If the arrest is illegal, the search or any subsequent inculpatory statements pursuant to it may also be illegal. See Brown v. Illinois, 422 U.S. 590 (1975); United States v. Bonds, 422 F.2d 660 (8th Cir. 1970); Riccardi v. Perini, 417 F.2d 645 (6th Cir. 1969); Jones v. Peyton, 411 F.2d 857 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 396 U.S. 942 (1969). An arrest based on assumptions later found to be erroneous may be valid if at the time of the arrest the officer had probable cause to believe a crime had been committed and that the person arrested committed it. See United States v. Allen, 629 F.2d 51 (D.C. Cir. 1980); United States v. McEachern, 675 F.2d 618, 621 (4th Cir. 1982). The reasonableness of the arresting officer's conduct in apprehending the wrong person is determined by the totality of the circumstances surrounding the arrest. See United States v. Glover, supra, at 122; United States v. Allen, supra.

If an arrest is lawful under a presumptively valid ordinance, the search which follows is valid even though the ordinance is later declared unconstitutional. See Michigan v. DeFillippo, 443 U.S. 31 (1979). If, however, the statute itself authorizes searches under circumstances which do not satisfy traditional warrant and probable cause requirements of the Fourth Amendment, evidence obtained pursuant to such searches will be suppressed. Thus, warrantless entry of a home to effect an arrest under authority of a statute authorizing officers to enter a private residence without a warrant to make a routine felony arrest is unconstitutional. See Payton v. New York, 445 U.S. 573 (1980). See also Torres v. Puerto Rico, 442 U.S. 465 (1979) (Puerto Rico statute authorizing baggage search of anyone arriving from the United States); Almeida-Sanchez v. United States, 413 U.S. 266 (1973) (statute authorized border patrol to search any vehicle within a "reasonable distance" of the border plus a regulation fixing 100 miles as "reasonable distance").

There may be a question whether state or federal law is controlling where an arrest by state officials is to be used in federal court. While in United States v. Di Re, 332 U.S. 581, 589 (1948), it was held that in the absence of an applicable federal statute, the validity of an arrest for a federal offense without a warrant depends on the law of the state where the arrest takes place, the Court in Elkins v. United States, 364 U.S. 206, 224 (1960), held that searches and seizures are to be tested under federal law. At least two circuits have concluded from this that,

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Di Re notwithstanding, the validity of state arrests for purposes of federal trials is to be governed by federal law. See United States v. Miller, 452 F.2d 731, 733 (10th Cir. 1971), cert. denied, 407 U.S. 926 (1972); United States v. Alberty, 448 F.2d 706 (10th Cir. 1971); United States v. Porter, 701 F.2d 1158, 1165 (6th Cir. 1983). It is clear, however, that state law determines the validity of an arrest without a warrant for violation of state law, subject to minimum standards required by the Constitution. See United States ex rel. LaBelle v. LaVallee, 517 F.2d 750 (2d Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 1062 (1976); Burks v. United States, 287 F.2d 117 (9th Cir. 1961), cert. denied, 369 U.S. 841 (1962). See Sibron v. New York, 392 U.S. 40 (1968); Terry v. Ohio, 392 U.S. 1 (1968); United States v. Lewis, 362 F.2d 759, 761 (2d Cir. 1966). A search conducted incident to the valid arrest of a citizen comes within this exception to the warrant requirement. See United States v. Rosse, 418 F.2d 38 (2d Cir. 1969), cert. denied, 397 U.S. 998 (1970); United States v. Viale, 312 F.2d 595, 599-601 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 373 U.S. 903 (1963).

The arrest may not be justified by what is disclosed upon a subsequent search. If the arrest is unlawful at its inception, it remains so. If there is no probable cause for the arrest, the search is invalid. See Dunaway v. New York, 442 U.S. 200 (1979); Beck v. Ohio, 379 U.S. 89 (1964); Wong Sun v. United States, 371 U.S. 471, 484 (1963); United States v. Coker, 599 F.2d 950 (10th Cir. 1979). Even if the arrest is lawful, there is authority for the proposition that the government cannot rely upon the arrest to seize evidence without a warrant if it long had probable cause to know that the evidence would be there and could easily have obtained a search warrant. See Niro v. United States, 388 F.2d 535 (1st Cir. 1968). This problem of law enforcement officials using the arrest as a pretext to search remains. See LaFare §35.2(e) at 281.

9-4.123 Search Incident to Arrest

For a search incident to arrest to come within the exception to the warrant requirement, two factors must be present. First, the arresting officer must have the authority to make a valid arrest. Second, the arrest must be based on probable cause, see, e.g., Sibron v. New York, 392 U.S. 40, 62-63 (1968); Aguilar v. Texas, 378 U.S. 108 (1964); Brinegar v. United States, 338 U.S. 160 (1949); United States v. Garrett, 627 F.2d 14 (6th Cir. 1980); United States v. Fernandez-Guzman, 577 F.2d 1093 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 954 (1978), although probable cause is not required for the accompanying search itself. Thus, the lawful arrest provides the justification for a search. See Michigan v. DeFillippo, 443 U.S. 31 (1979); United States v. Robinson, 414 U.S. 218 (1973); Chimel v.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

California, 395 U.S. 752 (1967). As the Court stated in United States v. Robinson, supra, "[t]he justification or reason for the authority to search incident to a lawful arrest rests quite as much on the need to disarm the suspect. . . as it does on the need to preserve evidence. . ." Even when law enforcement officials apprehend the wrong person, they may search the arrestee and inspect articles found on his/her person at the place of arrest and at the place of detention. See United States v. McEachern, 675 F.2d 618, 622 (4th Cir. 1982).

A. The Search Must be Contemporaneous with Arrest

A search is incident to an arrest only if it is substantially contemporaneous with the arrest and is confined to the immediate vicinity of the arrest. See Shipley v. California, 395 U.S. 818, 819 (1969); Von Cleef v. New Jersey, 395 U.S. 814 (1969). The permitted purposes of the search are (1) to seize weapons to protect the arresting agents, (2) to prevent destruction of evidence, and (3) to prevent escape. See Chimel v. California, supra; United States v. Chadwick, 433 U.S. 1 (1977).

A warrantless search may occur before the actual arrest, so long as there was probable cause for the arrest. See United States v. Costello, 604 F.2d 589 (8th Cir. 1979); United States v. Chatman, 573 F.2d 565 (9th Cir. 1977); United States v. Jenkins, 496 F.2d 57, 73 (2d Cir. 1974), cert. denied, 420 U.S. 925 (1975); Busby v. United States, 296 F.2d 328 (9th Cir. 1961), cert. denied, 369 U.S. 876 (1962). However, the search may not be remote in time from the arrest. See United States v. Wyatt, 561 F.2d 1388 (4th Cir. 1977).

A search "contemporaneous" with an arrest does not necessarily mean "simultaneous." A search of a defendant's person and the property in his/her immediate possession, which could be made on the spot at the time of arrest, may be conducted legally later as a normal incident of incarceration when the accused arrived at the place of detention. See United States v. Castro, 596 F.2d 674 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 963 (1979). A warrantless seizure of the jailed arrestee's clothing when substitute clothing first became available on the morning after an 11 p.m. arrest was held part of normal administrative process incident to an arrest. See United States v. Edwards, 415 U.S. 800 (1974). Seizure of a jailed defendant's shoes six weeks after arrest was held proper as the defendant and his shoes were in custody from arrest until the shoes were taken for use as evidence. To require a warrant, it was said, "would be to require a useless and meaningless formality." See United States v. Oaxaca, 569 F.2d 518, 524 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 926 (1978).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Other instances where courts have held that a search was not contemporaneous with an arrest include: a search of defendant's apartment four days after he was arrested, Mincey v. Arizona, 437 U.S. 385 (1978); the search of a hotel room in California two days before an arrest in Nevada, Stoner v. California, 376 U.S. 483 (1964); the search of an office one hour after an arrest in a nearby elevator, United States ex rel. Nickens v. LaVallee, 391 F.2d 123 (2d Cir. 1968); a search of living quarters three hours after the related arrest, United States ex rel. Clark v. Maroney, 339 F.2d 710, 713-14 (3d Cir. 1965); a search of a car made several days after arrest, Williams v. United States, 323 F.2d 90, 94 (10th Cir. 1963), cert. denied, 376 U.S. 906 (1964); a search of defendant's hotel room to which the officers had taken defendant after he was arrested in the hotel's hallway wearing only a bathing suit, United States v. Anthon, 648 F.2d 669 (10th Cir. 1981).

B. The Scope of the Search Cannot Exceed that Which is Required

Searches incident to arrest are for the purpose of protecting the arresting officers and preventing the destruction of evidence. As such, the scope of such a search is limited to the arrestee's person and the area from within his/her immediate control, meaning "the area from within which he might gain possession of a weapon or destructible evidence." Chimel v. California, supra, at 752, 763; United States v. Chadwick, supra; United States v. Edwards, 415 U.S. 800, 802-803 (1974).

1. Search of the Person

When there is a lawful arrest, the arrestee and everything worn by him/her may be searched. See United States v. Robinson, supra. This includes clothing, removal of which may be required for the search, United States v. Edwards, supra, at 800, items in coat pockets, United States v. Campbell, 575 F.2d 505 (5th Cir. 1978); United States v. Smith, 565 F.2d 292 (4th Cir. 1977), and in pockets of pants after they have been removed, United States v. Chatman, supra.

A brief strip search, conducted without abuse and in a professional manner for a visual inspection of body surfaces to detect hidden evidence or objects which could be used to harm, is not unlawful. See United States v. Klein, 522 F.2d 296 (1st Cir. 1975).

Body cavity searches have been found to be lawful, with circuits in disagreement over the precise standard which must be met. There must be, according to one circuit, a "clear indication" that contraband is present in the cavity. See United States v. Rodriguez, 592 F.2d 553 (9th Cir. 1979); United States v. Mastberg, 503 F.2d 465

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

(9th Cir. 1974). See also United States v. Himmelwright, 551 F.2d 991, 995 (5th Cir. 1975) (applying a "reasonable suspicion" test to body cavity searches). See also USAM 9-4.187, infra, dealing with searches of persons in border contexts. A body cavity search, which was performed twice by two policewomen rather than skilled medical technicians on a defendant seven months pregnant, was held to violate due process, United States ex rel. Guy v. McCauley, 385 F. Supp. 193 (E.D. Wis. 1974). X-ray examination and the use of force to prevent a defendant from swallowing evidence have been held lawful. See United States v. Caldera, 421 F.2d 152 (9th Cir. 1970).

2. Articles Carried by Arrestee

Articles carried by an arrestee may be searched incident to a lawful arrest. These have included a purse, United States v. Morano, 569 F.2d 1049 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 435 U.S. 972 (1978); a wallet, United States v. Castro, supra; a camera and money, United States v. Matthews, 603 F.2d 48 (8th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 1019 (1980); a briefcase, United States v. Hayes, 553 F.2d 824 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 867 (1977); a bag, even though the arrestee is handcuffed and removed to the street, United States v. Fleming, 677 F.2d 602 (7th Cir. 1982); and hand-carried luggage, United States v. Garcia, 605 F.2d 349 (7th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 446 U.S. 984 (1980).

3. Areas Within Arrestee's Immediate Control

A search incident to a lawful arrest may be made of the arrestee's person and areas within arrestee's immediate control. See Chimel v. California, supra, at 752, 763. These include the passenger compartment and any containers found in the passenger compartment of an automobile whose occupant is subjected to a lawful custodial arrest, New York v. Belton, 453 U.S. 454 (1981); inside a cigarette package found in arrestee's coat pocket, United States v. Robinson, supra; the area under a mattress in a room where defendant was taken to get a shirt, Watkins v. United States, 564 F.2d 201 (6th Cir. 1977), cert. denied, 435 U.S. 976 (1978); a cabinet two to four feet from where a codefendant was lying on the floor, United States v. Weaklem, 517 F.2d 70 (9th Cir. 1975); a table in front of the defendants at the time they were arrested, United States v. Artieri, 491 F.2d 440 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 878 (1974); a bed and purse within reach of a companion of defendant who was arrested in a hotel room doorway, United States v. Simmons, 567 F.2d 314 (7th Cir. 1977); a motel room, United States v. Savage, 564 F.2d 728 (5th Cir. 1977); and a search of arrestee's personal effects at the station house. See Illinois v. Lafayette, 462 U.S. 640 (1983).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

If an area is not within an arrestee's control or reach, or if he/she is handicapped or otherwise unable to retrieve weapons or evidence therein, the area may not be searched incident to the arrest without a warrant. See United States v. Neumann, 585 F.2d 355 (8th Cir. 1978). Thus, the fruits of the search of a billfold in defendant's bedroom were suppressed where the defendant was shackled to a bed and the billfold was out of his reach; United States v. Berenguer, 562 F.2d 206 (2d Cir. 1977). Search of a closet when defendant is handcuffed to a chair at the far end of the room is not incident to arrest. See United States v. Lyons, 706 F.2d 321, 330-331 (D.C. Cir. 1983). See also United States v. Jackson, 576 F.2d 749 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 858 (1978). The area of search may be extended, however, if the police suspect that a confederate of the arrestee is hiding in the room or house where the arrest takes place. See USAM 9-4.115C, supra (Protective Sweeps).

Officers may not allow a defendant to wander about an apartment and then search every room that he/she enters as a search incident to an arrest. See United States v. Erwin, 507 F.2d 937 (5th Cir. 1975). Arresting officers may not order the accused to dress and then not bring the accused his/her clothes, requiring him/her to move about the room as a pretext for searching beyond the area of defendant's immediate control. See United States v. Griffith, 537 F.2d 900 (7th Cir. 1976). There is no justification for searching "all the desk drawers" in that room. Chimel v. California, supra, at 752, 763. Nor may a search of luggage be justified where the agent places it within the arrestee's reach at arrest. See United States v. Wright, 577 F.2d 378 (6th Cir. 1978).

Normally, the passage of articles from the arrestee to the police will remove any danger that weapons will be seized or items destroyed. See United States v. Chadwick, supra, at 15; United States v. Benson, 631 F.2d 1336 (8th Cir. 1980). Nevertheless, even though an item may be removed from the arrestee, it still may be inventoried, as where the arrestee is being taken into custody, and his/her valuables must be stored by police. See Illinois v. Lafayette, supra. This inventory procedure extends to any container or article in the arrestee's possession. Id. at 2611. The scope of this station house search may be more extensive than a search incident to arrest on the scene as there is a strong governmental interest in prevention of theft and false claims. Id. at 2609.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

9-4.124 Stop and Frisk

Conduct which restrains the movement of a suspect may constitute a "search" or "seizure" within the meaning of the Fourth Amendment, even though it does not rise to the level of an "arrest." On the one hand, relying on previous holdings in Florida v. Royer, 460 U.S. 491 (1983), and Brown v. Texas, 443 U.S. 47 (1979), the Court held in INS v. Delgado, supra, that "police questioning, by itself, is unlikely to result in a Fourth Amendment violation." The Court held that absent some facts leading the person to reasonably believe "he was not free to leave if he had not responded, one cannot say that the questioning resulted in a detention under the Fourth Amendment." On the other hand, the Court added that "if the person refused to answer and the police take additional steps--such as those taken in Brown--to obtain an answer, then the Fourth Amendment imposes some minimum level of justification to validate the detention or seizure." See also United States v. Mendenhall, 446 U.S. 544 (1980), discussed infra. This section deals with those cases wherein more than mere voluntary questioning is involved. See also USAM 9-4.127, infra, discussing investigatory detentions in the airport context.

In Terry v. Ohio, 392 U.S. 1 (1968), the Supreme Court held that a "stop and frisk" is within the purview of the Fourth Amendment. A person who is stopped for questioning by a police officer and who is denied the right to walk away is a seized person. Such a stop, however, does not require probable cause; rather the officer must be able to articulate specific facts and inferences that lead to a reasonable suspicion of criminal activity. Id. at 21. In United States v. Cortez, 449 U.S. 411 (1981), the Supreme Court discussed the degree of reasonable suspicion necessary to justify an investigatory stop. The Court stated that "[b]ased upon [the] whole picture the detaining officers must have a particularized and objective basis for suspecting the particular person stopped of criminal activity." Id. at 417-418.

Thus in Reid v. Georgia, 448 U.S. 438 (1980) (per curiam), the Supreme Court held an investigatory stop at an airport unlawful where it was based on the fact that the defendant fit a "drug courier profile." The Court reasoned that the circumstances relied upon in making the stop "describe a very large category of presumably innocent travelers, who would be subject to virtually random seizures [if such stops were lawful]." Id. at 441. In Brown v. Texas, supra, the court held that an individual in a high drug traffic area who merely looked suspicious to the officers could not be stopped without the existence of objective facts suggesting he was involved in unusual activity. See United States v. Burnette, 698 F.2d 1038, 1047 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 461 U.S. 936 (1983) (reasonable suspicion for stop when police observe suspect at motel with vehicle used in robbery); United States v. Martinez-Gonzalez, 686 F.2d 93, 99 (2d Cir. 1982) (reasonable suspicion for stop of persons exiting apartment used for drug trafficking); United States v. LeFevre, 685 F.2d 897, 899-900 (4th Cir. 1982) (reasonable suspicion for stop when officer observes suspect licking rolling papers while sitting beside packages of commercial cigarettes).

In addition, if an officer reasonably believes a suspect is armed and dangerous and nothing in the initial stages of the encounter dispels that suspicion, the officer may conduct a carefully limited protective search of the suspect's outer clothing. In Terry, the Court upheld such a protective search, balancing the individual's privacy interest against the state's interests in effective crime prevention and detection and law enforcement agents' more immediate interest in protecting themselves and other potential victims of violence. Terry, supra, at 22-25. In Michigan v. Long, 463 U.S. 1032 (1983), the Court extended Terry principles to permit the warrantless search of an automobile interior incident to an investigatory detention because the officer had a reasonable belief that the suspect was dangerous and might have gained access to a weapon.

Similarly, during the course of a protective search, officers may take reasonable steps to insure their own safety, such as handcuffing the defendant, without necessitating a finding that the suspect was in custody. See United States v. Booth, 669 F.2d 1231, 1236 (9th Cir. 1982); United States v. Purry, 545 F.2d 217, 220 (D.C. Cir. 1976). Nor does the use of a gun "automatically convert an investigatory stop into an arrest." United States v. Roper, 702 F.2d 984, 987 (11th Cir. 1983); United States v. Merritt, 695 F.2d 1263, 1272-74 (10th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 461 U.S. 916 (1983); United States v. Harley, 682 F.2d 398, 402 (2d Cir. 1982); United States v. Bull, 565 F.2d 869, 870 (4th Cir. 1977), cert. denied, 435 U.S. 946 (1978).

Because of the intrusive nature of the seizure and the severity of its consequences, the Supreme Court has refused to extend the reasonable suspicion standard for a stop and frisk to seizures of suspects for the purpose of subsequent stationhouse interrogations. See Dunaway v. New York, 442 U.S. 200 (1979). The Court explained that "[t]he mere facts that [defendant] was not told he was under arrest, was not 'booked,' and would not have had an arrest record if the interrogation had proved fruitless, * * * obviously do not make [his] seizure even roughly analogous to the narrowly defined intrusions involved in Terry and its progeny." Id. at 212-213.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

9-4.125 Detention During Search of Home

A person may be detained by the police without probable cause when they are searching his/her home under authority of a search warrant. See Michigan v. Summers, 452 U.S. 692 (1981). The detention of the occupant is less intrusive than the search itself and adds only minimally to the stigma associated with the search. Id. at 701. Detention is justified because a judicial officer has determined that there is probably criminal activity in the house to which the occupant is connected and because it minimizes the risk of harm to the officers and prevents flight in the event incriminating evidence is found. Id. at 701-702. A 45-minute detention has been held to be reasonable. See United States v. Timpani, 665 F.2d 1 (1st Cir. 1981).

However, a person's mere presence in a tavern being searched pursuant to a search warrant gives the police no right to pat down or search him/her absent any particularized suspicion that he/she is armed or dangerous. See Ybarra v. Illinois, 444 U.S. 85 (1979). See also USAM 9-4.119, supra, dealing with seizure of items generally pending procurement of a warrant; and USAM 9-4.115C, supra, dealing with protective sweeps during execution of a warrant.

9-4.126 Containers

In United States v. Ross, 456 U.S. 798 (1982), the Supreme Court rejected the government's argument that for purposes of the Fourth Amendment it is not permissible to distinguish between "worthy" and "unworthy" containers. Id. at 822. Therefore the government cannot claim that by virtue of a particular container's insubstantial nature, e.g., a paper sack, the owner lacks a sufficient privacy interest for Fourth Amendment protections to attach. The following principles governing seizures and searches of containers are therefore applicable without regard to the container's character.

A. Seizures of Containers

Where there is probable cause to believe that a container contains contraband, it may be seized and detained until a warrant can be obtained to effect a search of its contents. See United States v. Ross, supra, at 807 n.9; Arkansas v. Sanders, 442 U.S. 753, 761-762 (1979); United States v. Chadwick, 433 U.S. 1 (1977). Even absent probable cause, it is permissible for the police acting on the basis of reasonable suspicion to seize and briefly detain luggage believed to contain contraband for investigatory purposes. In United States v. Place, 462 U.S. 696 (1983), the court, analogized, however, the duration of such investigative detentions to that of a Terry-type stop and held that because the detention of luggage in that case approximated 90 minutes it was unlawful.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

B. Searches of Containers

As a general principle, closed packages and containers cannot be searched without a warrant. See, e.g., United States v. Ross, supra, at 812; Arkansas v. Sanders, supra, at 764-765; United States v. Chadwick, supra, at 11. The reason for this principle is that, like dwelling places, persons have reasonable expectations of privacy in such containers, expectations that clause was designed to protect. United States v. Chadwick, supra, at 7. As in every other class of cases involving the warrant clause, there are, however, exceptions to this general principle.

1. Exigent circumstances such as probable cause to believe that a package contains explosives permit an immediate search of its contents. See, e.g., Arkansas v. Sanders, 442 U.S. at 759-760; United States v. Chadwick, supra, at 15 n.9.

2. When a custodial arrest is made the police may conduct a prompt warrantless search of not only the arrestee's person but of containers within his/her immediate control--the area from which he/she might gain possession of a weapon or destructible evidence--in order to safeguard themselves and prevent the loss of evidence. United States v. Chadwick, supra, at 14.

3. Where the police have probable cause to conduct a warrantless vehicle search, they may, incident to the search, investigate any container that might conceal the item for which they are looking. See United States v. Ross, supra, at 824. However, it is of vital importance to understand that when the focus of the probable cause is not on the vehicle but upon the container itself, its incidental connection with the vehicle does not justify a warrantless search. Id. See Arkansas v. Sanders, supra, at 762-763. In such cases, the proper course of action is to secure the container and obtain a search warrant.

4. At least one form of investigation concerning the contents of a container does not implicate Fourth Amendment interests at all. A sniff by a drug detection dog does not constitute a search because it is "so limited both in the manner in which the information is obtained and in the content of the information revealed by the procedure." See United States v. Place, 462 U.S. 696 (1983). Accord United States v. Jacobson, ___ U.S. ___, 104 S. Ct. 1652, 1662 n.24 (1984). We emphasize, however, that in light of United States v. Leon, supra, the more prudent course would be to obtain a warrant if time permits.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

C. Controlled Delivery

No protected privacy interest remains in a container once government officers lawfully have opened the container and identified its contents as contraband even if the container is subsequently reopened after it has traveled to its intended destination. See Illinois v. Andreas, ___ U.S. ___, 103 S. Ct. 3319 (1983). The lawful discovery of contraband often provides an opportunity to identify the persons responsible by allowing the container to continue upon its journey to its intended destination. The typical pattern is described in Illinois v. Andreas, supra, at 3323, where the Court observed that usually a carrier, such as an airline, unexpectedly discovers contraband while inspecting luggage or after a parcel has broken open; upon being advised of the discovery, law enforcement officers then restore the contraband in the parcel, which is sent on its way until it can be seized along with its owner or recipient upon reaching the destination.

9-4.127 Searches and Seizures at Airports

In researching any airport search and seizure question, an excellent place to begin is 3 LaFave, §10.6. Usually these questions involve one of the following two subjects: (1) a confrontation between suspected narcotics traffickers and law enforcement officers, resulting in a search or seizure of the suspect's luggage, or (2) a search of luggage by airport security personnel pursuant to federal anti-hijacking regulations. We will discuss each in turn. Although the frequency with which these fact patterns arise in the course of airport searches makes it appropriate to discuss them in this context, the principles expounded herein are generally applicable. Similarly, although border searches and related problems are discussed separately USAM 9-4.170, infra, there is an overlap of issues and holdings in these two areas.

A. The Airport Drug Detection Program

The Supreme Court has decided four cases involving confrontations between suspected narcotics traffickers and law enforcement officers: United States v. Place, supra; Florida v. Royer, 460 U.S. 491 (1983); Reid v. Georgia, 448 U.S. 438 (1980); and United States v. Mendenhall, 446 U.S.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

544 (1980). Essentially, an encounter between an officer and a suspect can be classified in one of three ways: (1) a consensual encounter between the officer and suspect; (2) a brief, minimally intrusive investigatory stop; (3) a detention that is lengthy enough to be considered an arrest. See United States v. Ilazi, 730 F.2d 1120, 1123 (8th Cir. 1984); United States v. Waksal, 709 F.2d 653, 657-658 (11th Cir. 1983). Frequently, the encounter will begin as a voluntary communication and progress to an arrest. As the suspect's freedom diminishes, the officer's justification for holding the suspect must increase.

1. The Consensual Encounter. The Fourth Amendment is not implicated every time an officer speaks to a citizen. The Fourth Amendment only comes into play where a "seizure" of the citizen has occurred. See INS v. Delgado, supra. And, in the absence of a seizure, the officer needs no suspicion to speak to the citizen. The Supreme Court fashioned a test for determining when a seizure has taken place in Florida v. Royer, supra, at 498, and United States v. Mendenhall, supra, at 554 (opinion of Stewart, J.): the inquiry focuses on whether "a reasonable person would have believed that he was not free to leave." A person is seized "only when, by means of physical force or show of authority, his freedom of movement is restrained." See United States v. Mendenhall, supra, at 553. As stated in Royer, supra, at 496:

Law enforcement officers do not violate the Fourth Amendment by merely approaching an individual on the street or in another public place, by asking him if he is willing to answer some questions, [or] by putting questions to him if he is willing to listen * * *. Nor would the fact that the officer identifies himself as a police officer, without more, convert the encounter into a seizure requiring some level of objective justification.

In Mendenhall, supra, Justice Stewart found no seizure where the suspect was approached by two DEA agents, who identified themselves and asked to see her airline ticket and identification. After Mendenhall answered a few questions, the officers returned the ticket to her. She then agreed to accompany the agents to an office for further questioning and a search. Justice Stewart found that the consent was freely given, and hence there was no Fourth Amendment violation. In the following cases the courts of appeals have likewise found that the initial contact between the agent and the suspect was not a seizure: United States v. Notorianni, 729 F.2d 520 (7th Cir. 1984); United States v. Morgan, 725 F.2d 56, 58-59 (7th Cir. 1984); United States v. Puglisi, 723 F.2d 779, 783-786 (11th Cir. 1984); United States v. Berryman, 717 F.2d 651, 660-661 (1st Cir. 1983) (Breyer, J., dissenting), adopted by the majority en banc, Berryman, supra at 650.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

2. The Investigatory Detention. If the suspect is not free to leave, he/she has been seized. A seizure that is of limited duration is an investigatory detention rather than an arrest. In Florida v. Royer, the Supreme Court found that Royer had been detained against his will. The critical facts that lead to this determination were that the agents told Royer that he was suspected of transporting narcotics and that they retained Royer's ticket and identification when they asked him to accompany them to an office. Royer, supra, at 498. Further, they did not tell Royer that he was free to depart. Id. Without his ticket, Royer could not board the airplane, and accordingly, he had been seized. For examples of other cases that have found investigatory detentions in the airport context, see United States v. Cordell, 723 F.2d 1283, 1284-1285 (7th Cir. 1983); United States v. Saperstein, 723 F.2d 1221, 1226 (6th Cir. 1983); United States v. Manchester, 711 F.2d 458 (1st Cir. 1983); United States v. Waksal, supra, at 660-662. Investigatory detentions generally are also discussed at USAM 9-4.124, 9-4.125, supra.

To satisfy the Fourth Amendment, an investigatory detention must be supported by a reasonable, articulable suspicion of criminal activity. See Florida v. Royer, supra; Reid v. Georgia, 448 U.S. 438, 440 (1980); Terry v. Ohio, 392 U.S. 1 (1968). Reasonable suspicion is determined by the totality of the circumstances. See United States v. Cortez, 449 U.S. 411 (1981). A variety of factors can contribute to a finding of reasonable suspicion. Some of the factors that arise frequently in the airport context are (1) the suspect is traveling to or from a source city for narcotics (see, e.g., United States v. Ilazi, 730 F.2d 1120 (8th Cir. 1984); United States v. Cordell, supra, at 1285; United States v. Puglisi, supra, at 789); (2) the traveler has little or no luggage and the duration of his/her journey was one day or less (see, e.g., United States v. Ilazi, supra; United States v. Manchester, supra); (3) the traveler is the first or last to deplane (United States v. Ilazi, supra); (4) the traveler appears nervous or looks around for surveilling officers (United States v. Cordell, supra; United States v. Puglisi, supra; United States v. Manchester, supra); (5) the passenger attempts to conceal the fact that he/she is traveling with or meeting someone else; (6) the passenger pays for his/her ticket with cash (United States v. Cordell, supra; United States v. Puglisi, supra; United States v. Berryman, supra, at 665); or (7) the passenger travels under an assumed name (see, e.g., United States v. Cordell, supra; United States v. Puglisi, supra). On the other hand, in Reid v. Georgia, supra, the Supreme Court found no reasonable suspicion where the defendants arrived from a source city early in the morning carrying only shoulder bags and where they appeared to be trying to conceal the fact that they were traveling together. Reid v. Georgia, supra, at 438.

3. Arrest. Frequently, an investigatory detention will escalate into an arrest. To comport with the Fourth Amendment an arrest must be supported by probable cause. In United States v. Place, supra, the Supreme Court held that by detaining the suspect's luggage for 90 minutes, the DEA agents had effectively detained or seized the suspect. The Court ruled that a detention of that length normally must be supported by probable cause, especially where the agents could have taken steps to reduce the length of the detention. In Place, the Court refused to fix a precise time limit, however, for when an investigatory detention ripens into an arrest.

Even a brief detention can escalate into an arrest for Fourth Amendment purposes if the circumstances are sufficiently coercive. It is not necessary that the agents formally charge the defendant, however. For instance, if the agents hold the suspect's identification, luggage and ticket while questioning him/her, thereby curtailing his/her ability to travel, and remove him/her from the public concourse of the terminal to an enclosed office, an arrest has probably occurred. See Florida v. Royer, supra, at 499. But holding the tickets alone should not be dispositive of the arrest question, especially if the suspect has already completed his/her journey and no longer needs them. And if the suspect freely consents to continue the conversation in an enclosed room and out of the public eye, an arrest probably has not occurred. See United States v. Mendenhall, supra. One must look at all the facts to determine whether a consensual encounter has escalated to an investigatory stop and ultimately to an arrest.

B. The Anti-Hijacking Program

Private airport security personnel frequently discover narcotics, guns, and contraband while screening passengers and luggage to look for hijackers, bombs and other devices that pose a threat to the safety of air travel. The question then arises whether the discovery of the contraband implicates the Fourth Amendment. If the search is a private one, it does not. If it is deemed a governmental search, the Fourth Amendment applies. Generally, because airport security personnel are commanded by federal regulation to carry out these searches to ensure air safety, the searches are characterized as government searches. See LaFave, §10.6 (a-e), and cases cited therein. Nevertheless, these searches are often upheld on a consent rationale: as a condition to this travel, the passenger consents to submit his/her luggage and his/her person to the x-ray scanner and in some cases, to a closer examination by the security officer. See United States v. DeAngelo, 584 F.2d 46 (4th Cir. 1978). If he/she does not want to be searched, the passenger can choose a different mode of transportation. But see, LaFave, supra, at §10.6(g) (criticizing the consent rationale).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

9-4.128 Destruction or Removal of Property to Prevent Seizure; Warning the Subject of a Search

Prior to enactment of the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984, 18 U.S.C. §2232 made it a misdemeanor to impair an authorized search by a law enforcement officer by removing, concealing, or destroying the property to prevent its seizure. However, the section did not prohibit a person from warning another of an impending search so that the second person could remove, conceal, or destroy the evidence. Moreover, such warnings were held not to constitute an obstruction of justice. See United States v. Brown, 688 F.2d 596 (9th Cir. 1982). To remedy the omission, the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984 added a new paragraph proscribing the warning of another person of an impending search in order to prevent the seizure or securing of the objects of the search. The Act also raised the penalty for violating section 2232 to make such a violation a 5-year felony.

18 U.S.C. §2232 has been construed to cover such activities as igniting gambling documents upon the entry of FBI agents, United States v. Todars, 550 F.2d 1300 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 433 U.S. 909 (1977); destroying loansharking records after the defendant spotted FBI agents outside his home, even though the agents had no search warrant, United States v. Delguyd, 542 F.2d 346 (6th Cir. 1976); and refusing to "heave to" when ordered to do so by Customs officers who intended to seize the boat, United States v. Woodring, 536 F.2d 598 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 1003 (1976).

The United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit has held that section 2232 is not void for vagueness, United States v. Gibbons, 463 F.2d 1201 (3d Cir. 1972), and it is likely that the phrase "by any person authorized to make searches and seizures" in section 2232 is satisfied if the person had merely a colorable authority to engage in such activity, United States v. Bernstein, 287 F. Supp. 84 (S.D. Fla. 1968).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-4.130 Searches of Premises and Real Property

This area is covered generally in LaFave, supra, chapter 6. Essentially, the analysis to be applied in dealing with premises and/or property varies according to: (1) the place where the intrusion occurs; and (2) the justification existing for the intrusion.

9-4.131 Entry of Premises

In the past, the Supreme Court occasionally described the protection of the Fourth Amendment as extending to "constitutionally protected areas." But in Katz v. United States, 389 U.S. 347, 351 n.9 (1967), the Court held that the Fourth Amendment protects people, not places. While Katz and its progeny reject property law based criteria for determining the scope of Fourth Amendment protection, that law still retains some value as to the bounds of protected privacy rights. See Fixel v. Wainwright, 492 F.2d 480, 483 n.3 (5th Cir. 1974).

A person's expectation of privacy is at its greatest in the home or other premises in which he/she has a legitimate privacy interest. See Katz v. United States, supra, at 357, n.18; Payton v. New York, 445 U.S. at 586 ("It is a 'basic principle of Fourth Amendment law' that searches and seizures inside a home without a warrant are presumptively unreasonable."). See Johnson v. United States, 333 U.S. 10, 16 (1948) (holding that "exceptional circumstances" were required to justify a warrantless search of a suspect's hotel room). The court recently reaffirmed this precept in United States v. Karo, ___ U.S. ___, 104 S. Ct. 3296 (1984), calling it "obvious" that "private residences are places in which the individual normally expects privacy from governmental intrusion not authorized by a warrant, and that expectation is plainly one that society is prepared to recognize as justifiable."

The Court has, however, allowed the warrantless entry of a home where certain narrowly defined exigencies are present which do not directly involve the search for evidence of a crime. Calling these "emergency conditions," see Welsh v. Wisconsin, ___ U.S. ___, 104 S. Ct. 2091, 2097 (1984), the Court permits entry into residences where the officers are in "hot pursuit" of a fleeing felon, see, e.g., United States v. Santana, 427 U.S. 38, 42-43 (1976); Warden v. Hayden, 387 U.S. 294, 298-299 (1967); destruction of evidence is imminent, see, e.g., Ker v. California, 374 U.S. 23 (1963); Michigan v. Tyler, 436 U.S. 499, 510 (1978); or the entry is necessary to effectuate a felony arrest and exigent circumstances are present. See Payton v. New York, 445 U.S. 573 (1980). The government has the burden to show the need to justify warrantless searches by demonstrating that one of the exceptions applies. See, e.g., Payton v. New York, supra, 445 U.S. at 587; Mincey v. Arizona, 437 U.S. 385, 394 (1978); Vale v. Louisiana, 399 U.S. 30, 34 (1970).

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

A. To Effectuate an Arrest

While authority exists allowing entry into a home for purpose of effectuating an arrest, courts consider among other factors: (1) whether the entry is into the arrestee's home, or that of a third person, (2) the existence of an arrest warrant and/or exigent circumstances, and (3) the seriousness of the offense. The preferences for warrants, which the Court has so frequently recognized, is not applicable only to searches, but to arrests as well.

1. Pursuant to Arrest Warrant

In Payton v. New York, supra, the Court held that entry into a home for the purposes of effecting a routine felony arrest could be based upon an arrest warrant, with a search warrant being unnecessary. The Court conditioned its holdings, however, by adding that entry was appropriate where it was made into "a dwelling in which the suspect lives when there is reason to believe the suspect is within." The use of this "reason to believe" standard was consistent with cases prior to this decision, holding that less than probable cause was required. See United States v. Manley, 632 F.2d 978 (2d Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 1112 (1981); United States v. Cravero, 545 F.2d 406, 421 (5th Cir. 1976), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 1100 (1977). But cf. LaFave, supra, §6.1 at 123-24. This standard has been met by checking the suspect's address in phone books or directories, see Wanger v. Bonner, 621 F.2d 675 (5th Cir. 1980), or questioning neighbors. See United States v. Manley, supra.

The decision in Payton, supra, left open whether entry was permissible where the home was owned by a third person. Reaching this question in Steagald v. United States, 451 U.S. 204 (1981), the Court held that absent a search warrant and/or exigent circumstances, evidence seized in the home could not be used against the resident. The Court noted, however, that the rights of the individual named in the warrant were not at issue, but rather only those of the resident--for whom no warrant was issued. At least one circuit has found this distinction critical, holding that an individual arrested in the home of a third person, pursuant to an arrest warrant, had no cause to complain under Steagald, supra. See United States v.

Underwood, 717 F.2d 482 (9th Cir. 1983) (en banc), cert. denied, ____ U.S. _____, 104 S. Ct. 1309 (1984).

While Payton, supra, is applicable even where residence is based solely on rental for a short time, such as in a motel, see, e.g., United States v. Bulman, 667 F.2d 1374 (11th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 456 U.S. 1010 (1982), it is not where entry is made into premises opened to the public. See United States v. Blalock, 578 F.2d 245 (9th Cir. 1978).

B. Hot Pursuit

When the police enter premises in continuous "hot pursuit" of a suspect for whom probable cause to arrest exists, such entry is justified by the exigencies of the pursuit. See Warden v. Hayden, supra, at 298-299 (warrantless search of a house entered by a suspect minutes before arrival of police permissible as hot pursuit); United States v. Santana, supra, (same). Cf. United States v. Stubblefield, 621 F.2d 980, 982 (9th Cir. 1980) (hot pursuit and possibility that known, unapprehended suspect remains in house sufficient to support officer's warrantless entry).

Courts generally require that the pursuit be "hot," that is, immediately and directly related to the report of crime, in order to insure that the suspect is actually present in the premises entered. See United States v. Young, 553 F.2d 1132 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 431 U.S. 959 (1977); United States v. Scott, 520 F.2d 697 (9th Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 1056 (1976). Accordingly, in Welsh v. Wisconsin, supra, the court found a "hot pursuit" argument unconvincing where there was "no immediate or continuous pursuit of the petitioner from the scene of a crime." See Welsh v. Wisconsin, supra, at 2099.

This does not mean, however, that the suspect must remain in the officer's view at all times. Rather, it is commonly held that actual, personal knowledge that the accused is in the house is not required. See United States v. Haynie, 637 F.2d 227 (4th Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 451 U.S. 972 (1981) (warrantless search justified under hot pursuit even though police did not have actual knowledge of the suspect's entrance into the building). See also Scott v. Maggio, 695 F.2d 916 (5th Cir. 1983), cert. denied, ____ U.S. _____, 103 S. Ct. 3544 (1983) (entry minutes after receiving description by victim and path of flight by bystanders); Archibald v. Mosel, 677 F.2d 5 (1st Cir. 1982) (entry no more than 20-25 minutes after robbery); United States v. Stubblefield, supra (information obtained within minutes of bank robbery included names and address of owner of getaway car).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The exigency of the situation "must be assessed at the point immediately before the search." See Arkansas v. Sanders, 442 U.S. 753, 763 (1979). Courts, in evaluating the asserted exigency, generally rely on the totality of circumstances test. See United States v. Bruton, 647 F.2d 818, 823 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 868 (1981). See also Dorman v. United States, 435 F.2d 385, 392-93 (D.C. Cir. 1970) (where the District of Columbia Circuit identified several factors to be used in determining the presence of exigent circumstances: (1) the gravity of the offense involved; (2) the reasonableness of the arresting officer's belief that the suspect is armed; (3) the strength of the showing of probable cause; (4) the strength of the arresting officer's belief that the suspect is on the premises; (5) the likelihood that the suspect would escape if not immediately apprehended; (6) the character of the officer's entry; (7) the time of day.) See also LaFave, supra, §6.1 at 390 (stating that while these factors are widely utilized it may not be "sound" to impose such a standard upon police).

C. Prevention of Destruction of Evidence

Warrantless searches of persons may be made when the nature of the evidence is such that it could be destroyed or otherwise disappear before a warrant can be obtained. See Cupp v. Murphy, 412 U.S. 291 (1973) (evidence would be lost if suspect washed his hands); Schmerber v. California, 384 U.S. 757 (1966) (warrantless taking of blood sample to determine whether driver intoxicated was permissible).

To justify a warrantless search to preserve evidence, an officer must make a strong showing that he/she had reason to suspect the imminent destruction of evidence and therefore lacked sufficient time to obtain a warrant. See United States v. Crozier, 674 F.2d 1293, 1298-99 (9th Cir. 1982); United States v. Tolliver, 665 F.2d 1005, 1008 (11th Cir.) (per curiam), cert. denied, 456 U.S. 935 (1982); United States v. Martino, 664 F.2d 860, 870 (2d Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 458 U.S. 1110 (1982). Nevertheless, even where immediate action is necessary to save evidence, that ground cannot provide the sole justification for a warrantless entry into a dwelling to make an arrest. Where, for example, the crime was not sufficiently serious, such as drunk driving, the Court has held that a warrantless entry cannot be justified on the theory that alcohol levels in the body would dissipate. See Welsh v. Wisconsin, supra, at 2099-2100.

By contrast, where entry was only to secure the premises until a search warrant could be obtained, Segura v. United States, supra at 3380, two members of the Court said that "securing a dwelling, on the basis of probable cause, to prevent the destruction or removal of evidence while a search warrant is being sought is not itself an unreasonable seizure of either the dwelling or its contents." The Court held that the "initial entry--legal or not--does not affect the reasonableness of the seizure ...," but that nevertheless, "absent exigent circumstances, the entry may have constituted an illegal search, or interference with petitioners' privacy interests, requiring suppression of all evidence obtained during the entry."

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

D. Emergency Searches

In near-crisis situations where there is no time to obtain a warrant and where immediate action is required, the police may effect a warrantless entry and search. See Michigan v. Tyler, 436 U.S. 499 (1978) (upheld warrantless entry into still-smoldering premises to determine cause of fire). The "need to protect or preserve life or avoid serious injury is justification for what would otherwise be illegal" absent an emergency. See Wayne v. United States, 318 F.2d 205 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 375 U.S. 860 (1963). See also United States v. Jones, 635 F.2d 1357 (8th Cir. 1980) (report of gunshots and information that an individual in an apartment was dangerous, plus suspect's failure to respond to police knocking, and a burning odor created an emergency situation justifying the warrantless entry). Alternatively, the Fourth Amendment does not bar police officers from making warrantless entries and searches when they reasonably believe that a person within is in need of immediate aid. See Satchell v. Cardwell, 653 F.2d 408, 411-13 (9th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 1154 (1982) (informant's tip and officer's observation of reported kidnap victim justified warrantless entry to protect victim). See also United States v. Brand, 556 F.2d 1312 (5th Cir. 1977), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 1063 (1978) (drug overdose victim); United States v. Farra, 725 F.2d 197, 199 (2d Cir. 1984) (cases collected).

As with all warrantless searches, the scope of an emergency search is limited to that level of intrusion which is reasonably necessary to render assistance to a person in need or to prevent the commission of a crime. A search which exceeds the permissible bounds created by the emergency may result in the suppression of any evidence recovered during the search. See Cupp v. Murphy, 412 U.S. 291 (1973). Moreover, once the emergency passes, the right to effect a warrantless search ceases. See Root v. Gauper, 438 F.2d 361 (8th Cir. 1971). See also Mincey v. Arizona, 437 U.S. 385 (1978) (once exigency has terminated, a warrant must be obtained for a further search of premises). In addition, the emergency giving rise to the warrantless search may not be one created by the action or inaction of the police. See United States v. Jones, supra; United States v. Picariello, 568 F.2d 222 (1st Cir. 1978). An exception is made for a delay caused by the police in order to confirm the emergency. Id.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Finally, with respect to the manner by which entry is gained into the premises, see LaFave, supra, §6.2, 395-406, and USAM 9-4.116, supra, "Protective sweeps" of premises is similarly discussed at USAM 9-4.115C, supra.

9-4.132 Plain View Doctrine

The plain view doctrine permits the warrantless seizure of evidence or contraband discovered by police during an otherwise lawful search. See Coolidge v. New Hampshire, 403 U.S. 443 (1971) (plurality opinion). This doctrine is not without limitations, however. The Coolidge court carefully limited the scope of the doctrine in an attempt to bar exploratory searches under the guise of plain view. Thus, plain view may only be used as a basis for a warrantless seizure of evidence when both the intrusion and observation meet constitutional guarantees.

Plain view, without more, may not justify the seizure of an object. Id. Because the doctrine involves a search and seizure of an object situated in a place where there is normally a reasonable expectation of privacy, an officer must have a prior independent justification for his/her presence at the point of observation. See Texas v. Brown 460 U.S. 730 (1983) (plurality). Police presence might be justified by a warrant for another object, see Warden v. Hayden, 387 U.S. 294 (1967); United States v. Wright, 667 F.2d 793, 797 (9th Cir. 1982); United States v. Crouch, 648 F.2d 932, 933 (4th Cir.) (per curiam), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 952 (1981); United States v. Helldt, 668 F.2d 1238, 1268 (D.C. Cir. 1981) (per curiam), cert. denied, 456 U.S. 926 (1982); hot pursuit, United States v. Haynie, 637 F.2d 227, 232 (4th Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 451 U.S. 988 (1981); search incident to a lawful arrest; United States v. Wiga, 662 F.2d 1325, 1331 (9th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 456 U.S. 918 (1982); United States v. Eddy, 660 F.2d 381, 385 (8th Cir. 1981); United States v. Irizarry, 673 F.2d 554, 558 (1st Cir. 1982); some other legitimate reason; see, e.g., United States v. Strahan, 674 F.2d 96, 100 (1st Cir.), cert. denied, 456 U.S. 1010 (1982) (inventory search); United States v. Alonso, 673 F.2d 334, 337 (11th Cir. 1982) (per curiam) (customs search); United States v. Travelman, 650 F.2d 1133, 1138 (9th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 939 (1982) (consent search); United States v. Ocampo, 650 F.2d 421, 427 (2d Cir. 1981) (automobile search); or because the observation occurred in a public place. See Payton v. New York, supra, at 587.

Law enforcement officers are not entitled to seize an object simply because they have observed it. Rather, the court in Coolidge required that the evidentiary nature of the item must be "immediately apparent," a test later called an "unhappy choice of words" in Texas v. Brown, supra, at 1542. Courts have reached varying conclusions on whether the probable cause standard must be met. Some courts interpreted the "immediately apparent" requirement strictly, so as not to condone exploratory searches; see United States v. Hinckley, 672 F.2d 115, 131 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (per curiam); while other courts interpreted the requirement broadly thereby allowing police to examine items, at least in a brief perusal before determining their evidentiary significance. See United States v. McDonald, 723 F.2d 1288, 1295 (7th Cir. 1983); United States v. Chesher, 678 F.2d 1353, 1357, n.2 (9th Cir. 1982); United States v. Ochs, 595 F.2d 1247, 1257, n.8 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 955 (1979); United States v. Heldt, supra, at 1267-68; United States v. Crouch, 648 F.2d 932 (4th Cir.) (per curiam), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 952 (1981).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

Then, in Texas v. Brown, supra, the Supreme Court itself cautioned against insisting on an unduly high standard of probable cause. Suggesting that the standard be one of a "practical, non-technical" probability that certain items are associated with criminal activity, Texas v. Brown, supra, at 1543, quoting, Brinegar v. United States, 338 U.S. 160, 176 (1949), the Court found in prior cases the standard that the police must have "probable cause to associate the property with criminal activity." Texas v. Brown, supra, at 1542, emphasis in original; quoting from Payton v. New York, supra, at 587. The plurality opinion in Texas v. Brown, observed that the probable cause standard is met as long as the facts would "warrant a man of reasonable action in the belief . . . , that certain items may be contraband or stolen property or useful as evidence of a crime . . . , " or that a "particularized suspicion" exists. See Texas v. Brown, supra, at 1545. The Court added that it was not addressing whether "a degree of suspicion lower than probable cause would be sufficient basis for a seizure in certain cases." Id., n.7.

The plain view doctrine had been interpreted to require also that the discovery of incriminating evidence be "inadvertent." What Coolidge proscribed was the use of the plain view doctrine as a pretext by law enforcement officials in order to circumvent the general warrant requirement. Therefore, where probable cause was developed sufficiently in advance to support the issuance of a search warrant, and the officers had failed to obtain one, they were not authorized to rely upon plain view as a basis for the seizure. See United States v. Barry, 673 F.2d 912, 917-918 (6th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 927 (1983); United States v. Crouch, supra. It should be noted that some circuits viewed the inadvertency requirement as unnecessary when the seized evidence is contraband. See United States v. Vargas, 621 F.2d 54, 56 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 854 (1980); United States v. Cutts, 535 F.2d 1083, 1084 (8th Cir. 1976); United States v. Bellina, 665 F.2d 1335, 1346 (4th Cir.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

1981); United States v. Liberti, 616 F.2d 34, 38 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 446 U.S. 952 (1980). In Texas v. Brown, supra, Justice White indicated he would not require that "inadvertence" be shown, while the plurality simply concluded that "[w]hatever may be the final disposition of the 'inadvertence' element of 'plain view,' [this element] clearly was no bar to the seizure [there]." See Texas v. Brown, supra, at 1543 [footnote omitted].

Furthermore, a seizure of an object in plain view is still reasonable even if the officer used a visual aid such as a flashlight or headlight to illuminate an area. See Texas v. Brown, supra; United States v. Lee, 274 U.S. 559 (1927). See also United States v. Knotts, 460 U.S. 276, 280-81 (1983).

Some courts have distinguished between a seizure of an object in "plain view" and one subsequent to an "open view" of an object. A plain view search and seizure occurs when there is no infringement of an individual's reasonable expectation of privacy. See Katz v. United States, 389 U.S. 347 (1967). The seizure is presumptively reasonable assuming that there is probable cause to associate the property with criminal activity. See Payton v. New York, 445 U.S. 473 (1980). On the other hand, property in "open view" is situated on premises to which access is not otherwise available for the seizing officer. See Texas v. Brown, supra. The "open view" situation occurs, for example, when an officer is walking on the sidewalk and sees, through an open window in a house, incriminating evidence. Absent exigent circumstances, the officer would have to obtain a warrant before he/she could enter the house and seize the evidence. Thus, "[t]he plain view doctrine. . . does not authorize an officer to enter a dwelling without a warrant to seize contraband merely because the contraband is visible from outside the dwelling." See Washington v. Chrisman, 455 U.S. 1, 11 (1982) (dissenting opinion) citing Coolidge v. New Hampshire, supra, at 468.

9-4.133 Open Fields and Curtilage

Although the recent holding in Oliver v. United States, U.S. ___, 104 S. Ct. 1735 (1984), deals with "open fields," the opinion is also helpful in ascertaining the limits of a permissible search and/or seizure within the area known as the "curtilage."

A. The "Open Fields" Doctrine

In Hester v. United States, 265 U.S. 57 (1924), the court first enunciated the "open fields" doctrine. That case held that the entry onto defendant's property, and observation of illegal activities within 50-100 yards of his home, did not warrant suppression of evidence. The Court, in Oliver v. United States, supra, reaffirmed that doctrine, declining to adopt either a case-by-case approach or a rule of law which would depend upon whether the officers violated defendants' property rights and engaged in a technical trespass in coming onto defendant's property.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

Accordingly, the Court held that no legitimate expectation of privacy could be found even though trespassing signs and/or a fence had been erected. Similarly, no distinction could be drawn between areas which were truly "open fields," and those which were "thickly wooded." See Oliver v. United States, supra, n.11. Absent any evidence that the intrusion took place within the curtilage, see infra, the Court indicated that Fourth Amendment concerns were not violated.

B. The Curtilage

A difficult question, even after Oliver v. United States, supra, is what constitutes the "curtilage." This is a necessary inquiry in many cases inasmuch as the Court in Oliver v. United States, supra, held that "only the curtilage, not the neighboring open fields, warrants the Fourth Amendment protections that attach to the home."

A starting point in defining the "curtilage" is found in Oliver v. United States, supra, wherein the Court noted that courts of appeals have defined the "curtilage" by "reference to factors that determine whether an individual reasonably may expect that an area immediately adjacent to the home will remain private." An additional factor is whether the area surrounding the house is habitually used for family purposes. While the fence surrounding rural fields mentioned in Oliver v. United States, supra, may not have given rise to a legitimate expectation of privacy, a fenced yard appurtenant to a house in any urban setting, and excluding outsiders, may be within the "curtilage." See, e.g., United States v. Martino, 664 F.2d 860, 879 (2d Cir. 1981) (Oakes, J., concurring); Hobson v. United States, 226 F.2d 890, 894 (8th Cir. 1955). Thus, the court in Oliver v. United States, supra, observed that "for most homes, the boundaries of the curtilage will be clearly marked. . . ." Id., n.12.

Although some cases have searched for a simple answer to whether an area was within the "curtilage," such as the 75 foot boundary used in United States v. Bensinger, 546 F.2d 1292, 1297 (7th Cir. 1976), other cases have treated distance from the house as only one factor to be considered. See, e.g., United States v. Van Dyke, 643 F.2d 992, 994 (4th Cir. 1981); Care v. United States, 231 F.2d 22, 25 (10th Cir. 1956). Two other factors often mentioned are: (1) the existence of enclosures rendering the area private; see, e.g., Janney v. United States, 206 F.2d 601, 602 (4th Cir. 1953); Hodges v. United States, 243 F.2d 281 (5th Cir. 1957); Brock v. United States, 256 F.2d 55 (5th Cir. 1958); Fullbright v. United States, 392 F.2d 432 (10th Cir. 1968); and (2) the use to which the area was put, i.e., whether it was "an adjunct to the domestic economy of the family." See Care v. United States, supra, at 25. Examples of such cases include Walker v. United States, 225 F.2d 447, 449 (5th Cir. 1955), involving a barn which was "an integral part of that group of structures making up the farm home;" United States v. Dunn, 674 F.2d 1093 (5th Cir. 1982), appeal after remand, 706 F.2d 153, reh'g denied, 712 F.2d 1416 (1982); Taylor v. United States, 286 U.S. 1 (1932), involving a metal garage adjacent to the house; Roberson v. United States, 165 F.2d 752 (6th Cir. 1948), involving a smokehouse which was in a liveable condition and being used as a residence; Walker v. United States, 125 F.2d 395, 396 (5th Cir. 1942), involving a distillery in an enclosure; and United States v. Capps, 435 F.2d 637, 640, n.5 (9th Cir. 1970), involving an area between a house and a nearby cottage.

Conversely, where an area is sufficiently close to the dwelling, but nevertheless intended to be used by, or at least exposed to the public, it has been held that the Fourth Amendment was not violated. Such places included driveways, see, e.g., United States v. Ventling, 678 F.2d 63 (8th Cir. 1982); United States v. Humphries, 636 F.2d 1172 (9th Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 451 U.S. 988 (1981); porches exposed to the public or housing an entranceway, and walkways. See LaFave, supra, §2.3 at 323.

9-4.140 Search and Seizure of Automobiles, Boats and Airplanes

9-4.141 Automobiles

The concept of the investigatory stop based upon reasonable suspicion extends to investigatory stops of motor vehicles as well as to persons. Applying the principles of Terry v. Ohio, 392 U.S. 1 (1968) to stops of motor vehicles, the Supreme Court in United States v. Cortez, 449 U.S. 411 (1981), held that the controlling test is whether "[b]ased upon th[e] whole picture the detaining officers [had] a particularized and objective basis for suspecting the particular person stopped of criminal activity." Id. at 417-418. The Cortez Court emphasized that, in reviewing the propriety of the stop, the courts should address the issue from the perspective of whether the police, as experienced police officers, "could reasonably surmise that the particular vehicle they stopped was engaged in criminal activity." Id. at 421-422. The subject of automobile searches and seizures is covered generally in LaFave, §7.1 et seq.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

9-4.142 Regulatory Stops

The Fourth Amendment requirement of reasonableness is also flexible enough to allow government authorities some latitude in stopping vehicles for purely regulatory purposes related to the objective of promoting public safety. For example, in Pennsylvania v. Mimms, 434 U.S. 106, 109 (1977), the Supreme Court held that it was proper for the police to stop a motorist for further investigation after observing that his/her automobile had expired license plates. The Court also held that, following the investigatory stop, the police may properly direct the driver to get out of the vehicle in order to protect their safety, and, where further observation engenders reasonable suspicion to believe that he/she is armed, to conduct a pat-down search of his/her person. Id. at 110-111.

Where, however, the police have no reason to believe that the operator of a vehicle has violated state laws governing licensing, operation, or inspection, their ability to stop the vehicle is more limited. In Delaware v. Prouse, 440 U.S. 648 (1979), the Court held that, except in cases where there is "at least articulable and reasonable suspicion that a motorist is unlicensed or that an automobile is not registered, or that either the vehicle or an occupant is otherwise subject to seizure for violation of law, stopping an automobile and detaining the driver in order to check his/her driver's license and the registration of the automobile are unreasonable under the Fourth Amendment." Id. at 663. However, advertent to the practice of establishing border checkpoints for the purpose of detecting illegal aliens (see United States v. Martinez-Fuerte, 428 U.S. 543 (1976)), it held that it was perfectly permissible to conduct regulatory spot checks by requiring all on-coming traffic to stop to enable the police to examine documents or the vehicles' road worthiness. Such techniques, the Court reasoned, do not involve the "unrestrained exercise of discretion" by the police.

Cases governing the permissibility of conducting stops of motor vehicles at or near an international border to regulate entry into the United States follow a similar analytical framework. As indicated above, in United States v. Martinez-Fuerte, supra, the Court held that it was permissible for the Border Patrol to stop all vehicles passing a border checkpoint for the purpose of detecting illegal entry even when the checkpoints were located 25 or more miles from the international border and there was no individualized suspicion of wrongdoing. Id. at 558-559. It also afforded the Border Patrol "wide discretion" in determining when to divert to secondary inspection even for the purpose of responding to questions concerning immigration status. Id. at 560, 563.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

By contrast, in United States v. Brignoni-Ponce, 422 U.S. 873 (1975), the court held that except at the border or its functional equivalents--such as inland checkpoints--Border Patrol Officers on roving patrol may stop a motor vehicle for investigation only "when an officer's observations lead him reasonably to suspect that a particular vehicle may contain aliens who are illegally in the country * * *." Id. at 881. See also Almeida-Sanchez v. United States, 413 U.S. 266 (1973), where the Court held that the Fourth Amendment prohibits the use of roving patrols to search vehicles without a warrant or probable cause at points removed from the border or its functional equivalents. Border searches generally are discussed at USAM 9-4.170, infra.

9-4.143 Warrantless Searches and Seizures of Vehicles Based on Probable Cause

As a general rule, the Fourth Amendment does not require procurement of a search warrant as a predicate to stopping and searching an automobile where the police have probable cause to believe that it is carrying contraband or evidence of crime. Nevertheless, while neither a warrant nor exigent circumstances may be required, a warrant may, of course, provide a safer course, time permitting. As explained in United States v. Ross, 456 U.S. 798, 808 (1982), it is sufficient that the officers have probable cause, based on "objective facts that could justify the issuance of a warrant by a magistrate" that the vehicle contains contraband. The so-called automobile exception to the warrant requirement rests on two bases. First, the impracticability of obtaining a warrant because of the ready mobility of vehicles provides a basis for permitting warrantless searches of vehicles stopped along the highway. As the Supreme Court explained in Chambers v. Maroney, 399 U.S. 42, 51 (1970), "the car is movable, the occupants are alerted, and the car's contents may never be found again if a warrant must be obtained. Hence, an immediate search is constitutionally permissible." See United States v. Ross, supra, at 805; Arkansas v. Sanders 442 U.S. 753, 761 (1979); United States v. Chadwick, 433 U.S. 1, 12 (1977). The Court emphasized this rationale in Coolidge v. New Hampshire, 403 U.S. 443, 460 (1971), in holding that the warrantless search of an automobile in the owner's driveway following his removal from the premises was not permissible under the Fourth Amendment. It reasoned that "the opportunity for a search was * * * hardly 'fleeting'" as there was "no alerted criminal bent on flight, no fleeting opportunity on an open highway after a hazardous chase, no contraband or stolen goods or weapons, no confederates waiting to move the evidence, not even the inconvenience of a special police detail to guard the immobilized automobile. In short, by no possible stretch of the legal imagination can this be made into a case where 'it is not practicable to secure a warrant'". Id. at 462.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

More recently, however, the Supreme Court has identified a second justification for an automobile exception, namely the owner's diminished expectation of privacy in a motor vehicle even "in cases in which the possibilities of the vehicles being removed or evidence in it destroyed were remote, if non-existing." See United States v. Chadwick, supra, at 12, quoting Cady v. Dombrowski, 413 U.S. 433, 441-442 (1973). As the Court explained in Chadwick, supra, quoting Cardwell v. Lewis, 417 U.S. 583, 590 (1974) (plurality opinion):

One has a lesser expectation of privacy in an motor vehicle because its function is transportation and it seldom serves as one's residence or as a repository for personal effects * * *. It travels public thoroughfares where both its occupants and its contents are in plain view.

As a result, owner's privacy interests in the vehicles' interior are thought to be adequately protected by the requirement that any search be supported by probable cause or other reasonable justification, and by allowing the determination as to reasonableness to be made in the first instance--subject to later judicial review--by the searching officers. See, e.g., Cady v. Dombrowski, supra, at 448.

While the diminished expectation of privacy rationale articulated in these cases would suggest that the Court's holding in Coolidge v. New Hampshire, supra, lacks continuing vitality, the court has never expressly so held. Cf. Delaware v. Prouse, supra, at 662-663 (individual does not lose all expectation of privacy simply because an automobile is subject to government regulation). In the absence of an authoritative repudiation of the result in Coolidge, the most prudent course is therefore to procure a search warrant in any case where the circumstances suggest that the vehicle is unlikely to be removed.

It should be noted that, in any event, the impoundment of the car or vehicle does not define the scope of the officers' authority to conduct a warrantless search. Thus in Chambers, supra, the Court held that, where exigent circumstances permit an immediate search of a vehicle, a warrantless search may also be conducted even after the vehicle has been immobilized or impounded. It reasoned that, "[f]or constitutional purposes, we see no difference between on the one hand seizing and holding a car before presenting the probable cause issue to a magistrate and on the other hand carrying out an immediate search without a warrant. Given probable cause to search, either course is reasonable under the Fourth Amendment." Id. at 52; see United States v. Ross, supra, at 807 n.9; Texas v. White, 423 U.S. 67, 68 (1975).

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-4.144 The Permissible Scope of an Automobile Search Based Upon Probable Cause or Following Arrest or Detention of Its Occupants (Inventory)

In United States v. Ross, supra, the Court addressed the question whether, in conducting a warrantless vehicle search on the basis of probable cause, the police could open containers found in the vehicle. It held that the scope of a warrantless vehicle search based on probable cause is no narrower and no broader than the scope of a search authorized by a warrant and supported by probable cause. Id. at 823. It is therefore "defined by the object of the search and the places in which there is probable cause to believe that it may be found." Id. at 824. Although the Ross Court concluded that "[i]f probable cause justifies the search of a lawfully stopped vehicle, it justifies the search of every part of the vehicle and its contents that may conceal the object of the search" (Id. at 825), it was careful to emphasize that where the probable cause is focused upon a particular container placed in the vehicle itself, a search of the entire vehicle is not justified. Id. at 824. In such cases, the proper course is to secure the container and procure a warrant to search it. See Arkansas v. Sanders, 442 U.S. 753, 762, 766 (1979); United States v. Chadwick, 433 U.S. 1, 13 (1977).

Where the owners or occupants of the car have been arrested, it may be necessary to impound the vehicle. This will allow law enforcement officials to inventory the contents of the car without obtaining a warrant, even if probable cause does not exist. See South Dakota v. Opperman, 428 U.S. 364 (1976). The justification for such a rule is that the inventory protects both the owner's property as well as the police against claims of lost or stolen property. Id. at 369. The authority to conduct a valid inventory does not depend upon the time when it is conducted, but rather, can be conducted any time after the vehicle is impounded. See Cooper v. California, 386 U.S. 58, 61 (1967). The inventory cannot, however, be a mere pretext for an investigatory search. See United States v. Bush, 647 F.2d 357, 370 (3d Cir. 1981).

A. Vehicle Searches Incident to the Arrest of Its Occupant

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

In New York v. Belton, 453 U.S. 454 (1981), the Court articulated a "bright line" rule governing the permissible scope of a search incident to the arrest of its occupants. Viewing the passenger compartments as "the areas into which an arrestee might reach in order to grab a weapon or evidentiary item," it held that when a policeman/policewoman has arrested the occupant of an automobile, he/she may, as a contemporaneous incident of the arrest, search the entire passenger compartment of the vehicle. It also emphasized that such a search may properly include "any container found within the passenger compartment" including "closed or open glove compartment, consoles or other receptacles located anywhere within the passenger compartment, as well as luggage, boxes, bags, clothing and the like." The Court made it equally clear, however, that its holding "encompass[ed] only the interior of the passenger compartment and [did] not encompass the trunk." Id., n. 4.

B. Vehicle Searches Incident to the Investigatory Stop of a Suspicious Vehicle

In Michigan v. Long, 463 U.S. 1032 (1983), the Supreme Court extended the principles of Terry v. Ohio, supra, to permit "frisks" of motor vehicles. The Long court held that, where the police suspect that an occupant of a stopped vehicle poses a danger to them, it is permissible for them to conduct a search of the passenger compartment of the vehicle "limited to those areas in which a weapon may be placed or hidden." Reiterating the requirements of Terry, it explained that such frisks of vehicles are only permissible where the police "possess[es] a reasonable belief based on 'specific and articulable facts which, taken together with the rational inferences from those facts, reasonably warrant' the officers in believing that the suspect is dangerous and the suspect may gain immediate control of weapons.'" Michigan v. Long, supra, at 3480, citing Terry v. Ohio, supra, at 21. The Court also explained that if, in the course of such a properly limited search, the police discover contraband other than weapons it may properly be seized for evidentiary purposes.

9-4.145 Airplane Searches

A warrantless search of an airplane may be conducted, pursuant to the automobile exception of the warrant requirement, but the search must be based on probable cause. See United States v. Rollins, 699 F.2d 530 (11th Cir. 1983), cert. denied, _____ U.S. _____, 104 S. Ct. 335 (1983). Officials can search the plane immediately, due to the inherent mobility of the plane, or they can secure it until a warrant is obtained. See United States v. Nigro, 727 F.2d 100 (6th Cir. 1984).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The installation of an electronic tracking device (beeper) in an airplane with the owner's permission, and the monitoring of its signal from the plane are not searches within the meaning of the Fourth Amendment. See United States v. Miroyan, 577 F.2d 489 (9th Cir. 1978), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 896 (1978). Nor does the monitoring become illegal under the amendment if the terms of a warrant authorizing its installation required it to be removed before its signal was heard and recorded. Without the owner's permission, the installation of the device in the airplane cabin requires a warrant based on probable cause. See United States v. Butts, 729 F.2d 1514 (5th Cir. 1984) (en banc). With respect to beepers and pen registers generally, see USAM 9-4.151, infra.

9-4.146 Searches of Vessels Within and Without the Border

Both the Coast Guard and Customs Service board, inspect and search vessels. The boardings, inspections and searches may occur in territorial waters, customs waters, the contiguous zone, the high seas, or international waters. Territorial waters are defined as extending three miles from the coast; customs waters are defined as extending four leagues, approximately twelve nautical miles from the coastline; the contiguous zone is defined as extending nine miles from the three mile boundary, in other words, twelve miles from the coastline; the high seas are defined as extending seaward from the territorial waters encompassing the area known as the contiguous zone; and international waters are defined as that area beyond the contiguous zone in which these waters are freely accessible to all nations and are not subject to the sovereignty of any nation. See United States v. Hidalgo-Gato, 703 F.2d 1267, 1269-1271 nn. 4, 6 (11th Cir. 1983). For a discussion of border searches generally, see USAM 9-4.170, infra.

Under 14 U.S.C. §89(a) the Coast Guard has statutory authority to conduct searches and seizures "upon the high seas and waters over which the United States has jurisdiction," which can include customs waters. Under 19 U.S.C. §1581(a) both the Coast Guard and the Customs Service are empowered to board vessels and conduct customs searches but only in customs waters--within the twelve-mile limit. See United States v. Williams, 617 F.2d 1063, 1074-1077 (5th Cir. 1980) (en banc); Maul v. United States, 274 U.S. 501 (1972).

The Coast Guard may board any vessel subject to the jurisdiction of the United States to make a document and inspection search. See United States v. Thompson, 710 F.2d 1500, 1505 (11th Cir. 1983). This express statutory authority, as interpreted, allows the boardings and searches to include examinations for obvious customs and drug violations. See United States v. Espinosa-Cerpa, 630 F.2d 328 (5th Cir. 1980). No suspicion need accompany any such boarding. And, the location of such may be not only the high seas, but also internal waters providing ready access to the open sea. See United States v. Villamonte-Marques, 462 U.S. 979 (1983).

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Boardings by the Coast Guard can take place hundreds of miles from shore. All that is necessary is that the vessel boarded be subject to the jurisdiction of the United States. See United States v. Thompson, supra, at 1504. That includes any vessel of American registry. See United States v. Luis-Gonzalez, 719 F.2d 1539 (11th Cir. 1983); United States v. Freeman, 660 F.2d 1030 (5th Cir. 1981). It also covers stateless vessels; i.e., vessels that are unregistered or that claim registration in more than one nation. See United States v. Pinto-Mejia, 720 F.2d 248 (2d Cir. 1983); United States v. Marino-Garcia, 679 F.2d 1373 (11th Cir. 1982); United States v. Dominguez, 604 F.2d 304 (4th Cir. 1979).

Customs officers are empowered to conduct limited "investigative stops" of vessels in customs waters if the officers are aware of "articulable facts which justify a reasonable suspicion of illegal activity" aboard those vessels. See United States v. Albano, 722 F.2d 690, 692, n.2 (11th Cir. 1984) (cases collected). This includes the waters in the contiguous zone. See United States v. Hidalgo-Gato, supra. Whether boardings on the high seas are permissible by customs officers is an issue pending on appeal. See United States v. Sarmiento, appeal pending, Crim. No. 84-25-CR-EBD (S.D. Fla. 1984).

Although the Coast Guard has no regular authority to search foreign vessels not within the customs waters of the United States or within a designated "customs enforcement area," see 19 U.S.C. §1701, the Coast Guard (and other government agents) may search or seize a foreign vessel "upon the high seas" if "enabled or permitted under special arrangement with [the] foreign government." See 19 U.S.C. §1581(h). See United States v. Marsh, No. 82-1888 (1st Cir. 1984). See generally United States v. Hensel, 699 F.2d 18, 26-30 (1st Cir. 1983) (discussing the validity of searches of foreign ships in international waters under 14 U.S.C. §89(a) and international law).

Other foreign vessels may be approached for the purpose of confirming their registry. If a vessel so approached does not provide a satisfactory response, it may be boarded if there is reason to believe that the vessel is American. See United States v. Postal, 589 F.2d 862 (5th Cir. 1979); United States v. Cortes, 588 F.2d 106 (5th Cir. 1979). Foreign vessels also may be boarded with the consent of the nation of registry or with reasonable suspicion that the vessel is involved in a violation of

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

American criminal laws. See United States v. Williams, 617 F.2d 1063 (5th Cir. 1980) (en banc).

The only limitation imposed by case law upon the Coast Guard's plenary authority to board American registered vessels is found in United States v. Piner, 608 F.2d 358 (9th Cir. 1979), where the court deplored the warrantless random stopping and boarding of a vessel in the nighttime. The decision relies heavily upon case law applicable to random stops of automobiles. No other circuit has endorsed Piner; one court has implicitly rejected its holding. See United States v. Marino-Garcia, 679 F.2d 1373, 1384-1385 (11th Cir. 1982), and the Ninth Circuit has in later cases limited Piner to its unique factual context. See United States v. Eagon, 707 F.2d 362 (9th Cir. 1982); United States v. Watson, 678 F.2d 765 (9th Cir. 1982).

Once having boarded a vessel, the officers may conduct a search, the scope of which must be consistent with the purpose for the boarding. Where, for example, boarding is for a document and safety inspection, entry into a locked cabin may be permissible, at least where it is the only cabin on board and likely to house documents. See United States v. Thompson, supra at 1506-07. But see United States v. Kents, 691 F.2d 1376, 1383-1384 (11th Cir. 1982). If an inspection to examine documents results in the observation of evidence giving the officers probable cause to believe that the vessel contains illegal contraband, the search may be expanded. See United States v. Bain, No. 82-6008 (11th Cir. 1984).

When such searches are challenged, a critical question is whether the claimant had standing to object to the search. After all, in most instances, the contraband forming the subject matter of the prosecution has been discovered in an area in which no expectation of privacy exists, such as the ship's hold. See United States v. Bent, 707 F.2d 1190 (11th Cir. 1983); United States v. Freeman, 660 F.2d 1030 (5th Cir. 1981). Yet, all too frequently prosecutors have failed to demand that the claimant meet his/her threshold burden of showing standing to challenge the search. E.g., United States v. Hernandez, 668 F.2d 824 (5th Cir. 1982); United States v. d'Antignac, 628 F.2d 428, 432 n. 5 (5th Cir. 1980).

9-4.150 Limited Intrusions; Abandonment; Consent Searches

9-4.151 Limited Intrusions: Beepers and Pen Registers

A. Beepers

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The use of an electronic tracking device, commonly called a beeper, as a law enforcement surveillance technique involves Fourth Amendment issues, both in its installation and monitoring.

Courts have approved warrantless installation of beepers in varying circumstances. No Fourth Amendment rights have been found to be infringed by the warrantless attachment of a beeper on property by an invitee (United States v. Arredondo-Morales, 624 F.2d 681, 684-685 (5th Cir. 1980); United States v. Conroy, 589 F.2d 1258, 1264 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 831 (1979), or by the installation of a beeper on the exterior of a car or airplane parked in a location accessible to the public (United States v. Michael, 645 F.2d 252, 258 (5th Cir.) (en banc), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 950 (1981); United States v. Shovea, 580 F.2d 1382, 1388 (10th Cir. 1978), cert. denied, 440 U.S. 908 (1979); United States v. Moore, 562 F.2d 106, 111-112 (1st Cir. 1977), cert. denied, sub nom; Bubisink v. United States, 435 U.S. 926 (1978). See United States v. Knotts, 460 U.S. 276 (1983) (collecting cases in a footnote). Recently, in United States v. Karo, U.S. _____, 104 S. Ct. 3296 (1984), the Court held that the Fourth Amendment is not implicated where officers installed a beeper in a container with the consent of its owner and then transferred the beeper-laden container to an unsuspecting third party.

The monitoring of a beeper is, of course, less intrusive than a full-scale search. A beeper may be monitored without a warrant after it has been placed inside a container of chemicals as long as it does not reveal any information that could not have been obtained through visual surveillance. See United States v. Knotts, supra. But the warrantless monitoring of a beeper that has been taken into a private residence--"a location not open to visual surveillance"--violates the Fourth Amendment rights of those who have a justifiable interest in the privacy of the residence. See United States v. Karo, supra. Finally in United States v. Butts, 729 F.2d 1514 (5th Cir. 1984), the court ruled that the monitoring of a beeper in public airspace did not violate the Fourth Amendment even though the terms of the warrant which authorized its installation required it to be removed before its signal was heard and recorded. As to airplane searches generally, see USAM 9-4.145, supra.

In light of Karo, if agents have probable cause, it would be advisable for them to obtain a warrant whenever they seek to use a beeper (absent exigent circumstances) because of the possibility that monitoring may occur when the beeper is inside private premises. The warrant application need not identify the premises into which the beeper might be taken--we may not have any way of knowing that in advance--but the application should "describe the object into which the beeper is placed, the circumstances that led agents to wish to install the beeper, and the length of time for which beeper surveillance is requested." The issue, whether a showing of reasonable suspicion or probable cause is necessary for the minimal intrusion involved in the monitoring of a beeper in a home, was left open in Karo.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

B. Pen Registers.

"A pen register is a mechanical device that records the numbers dialed on a telephone by monitoring the electrical impulses caused when the dial on the telephone is released. It does not overhear oral communications and does not indicate whether calls are actually completed." See United States v. New York Telephone Co., 434 U.S. 159, 161 n.1 (1977). The provisions of the federal wiretap statute, 18 U.S.C. §2510 et seq., do not apply to the use of pen registers. Id. Likewise, the installation and use of a pen register is not a search within the meaning of the Fourth Amendment and therefore does not require a warrant. See Smith v. Maryland, 442 U.S. 735 (1979).

9-4.152 Abandonment

In determining whether property is abandoned, "[t]he fundamental question is whether the relinquishment occurred under circumstances which indicate [the owner] retained no justified expectation of privacy in the object." 1 LaFave, §2.6.

Law enforcement officials do not need a warrant to search or seize abandoned articles. See Abel v. United States, 362 U.S. 217, 241 (1960); United States v. Colbert, 474 F.2d 174 (5th Cir. 1973) (en banc). Courts have also held that a previous 'owner' no longer has a reasonable expectation of privacy in an object which he/she has disclaimed. See United States v. Tolbert, 692 F.2d 1041 (6th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, ___ U.S. ___, 104 S. Ct. 337 (1983). There is no constitutional violation as long as the disclaimer was not precipitated by officials' improper conduct. Id. at 1048. For a discussion of whether or not garbage is abandoned property, see 1 LaFave, §2.6(c).

9-4.153 Consent Searches

See USAM 9-4.154, 9-4.155, 9-4.156, 9-4.157, infra.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-4.154 The Effect of a Person's Consent to a Search

A. In General

A search conducted pursuant to valid consent constitutes a well recognized exception to both the warrant and the probable cause requirements of the Fourth Amendment. See Schneckloth v. Bustamonte, 412 U.S. 218 (1973); Katz v. United States, 389 U.S. 347, 358 (1967); Zap v. United States, 328 U.S. 624, 630 (1946). The requirements for invoking this exception are exhaustively catalogued in 2 W. LaFare., Search and Seizure, §§8.1-8.6 (1978). In light of Leon, it may be prudent to obtain a warrant and avoid having to determine whether consent was voluntary.

Briefly stated, evidence seized during a consensual search is admissible once the prosecutor proves that the consent was freely and voluntarily given. See Bumper v. North Carolina, 391 U.S. 543, 548 (1968). As the Court recognized in Schneckloth v. Bustamonte, supra, the question "whether a consent to search was in fact 'voluntary' or was the product of duress or coercion, express or implied, is a question of fact to be determined from the totality of all the circumstances." Id. at 227. Factors relevant to this determination include the claim of authority to search; the lawfulness of the defendant's custody; the consenting party's knowledge of the right to refuse; the existence of any promises, threats, deception or trickery; and the capacity of the consenting party. No one factor is per se determinative as to the voluntariness of consent. See United States v. Hearn, 496 F.2d 236 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 1048 (1974). Under this totality of circumstances approach, courts generally find a lack of consent only where there has been a finding that explicit or implicit coercion was brought to bear on the consenting party. See Schneckloth v. Bustamonte, supra, at 228.

Effective consent to a search can only be given by the accused or by a third party with right to equal access to the property. See United States v. Matlock, 415 U.S. 164 (1974). Moreover, the scope of a consent search may not exceed the limitation or purposes agreed to by the person giving consent. See Gouled v. United States, 255 U.S. 298, 306 (1921); United States v. Weber, 668 F.2d 552, 559-560 (1st Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 457 U.S. 1105 (1982).

B. Determining Whether Consent is Voluntary

1. Knowledge of the Right to Refuse Consent

Knowledge of the right to withhold consent is not a prerequisite to voluntary consent. Schneckloth v. Bustamonte, supra, at 234. Nevertheless, the fact that a consenting party was advised of his/her right to refuse a consent search is highly relevant in evaluating whether the consent was freely and voluntarily given. See United States v. Mendenhall, 446 U.S. 544, 558-559 (1980) (defendant twice told that she had the right to refuse to consent to a strip search); United States v. Berry, 670 F.2d 583, 605 (5th Cir. 1982) (en banc) (consent voluntary when suspects informed of right to refuse, offered telephone to use to consult an attorney, and allowed to consult with each other); United States v. Vasquez, 612 F.2d 1338 (2d Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 447 U.S. 907 (1980) (fact that suspect was twice advised of right to refuse consent is significant in evaluating voluntariness of consent).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

Thus, when a law enforcement officer seeks consent to search, he/she need not warn the consenting party of his/her right to refuse. See Schneckloth v. Bustamonte, supra. This is true regardless of whether the party is in custody. United States v. Garcia, 496 F.2d 670 (5th Cir. 1974), reh'g denied, 420 U.S. 1009 (1975). In fact, in a custodial situation, Miranda warnings need not be given prior to seeking consent to search. See United States v. Lemon, 550 F.2d 467 (9th Cir. 1977) (consent not testimonial or communicative within the Fifth Amendment sense); United States v. Garcia, supra; United States v. Heimforth, 493 F.2d 970 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 416 U.S. 908 (1974). See also Washington v. Chrisman, 455 U.S. 1, 6 n.3 (1982); 2 LaFave, Search and Seizure, §8.2(j). There is similarly no requirement that officers seeking consent advise a party not yet in custody that he/she is the focus of their investigation (United States v. Turpin, 707 F.2d 332, 334-335 (8th Cir. 1983) or that evidence obtained may lead to criminal prosecution (United States v. Wuagneux, 683 F.2d 1343, 1347 (11th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, ___ U.S. ___, 104 S. Ct. 69 (1983)).

2. Custody

Although Schneckloth, supra, involved consent in a non-custodial situation, courts have applied the totality of the surrounding circumstances test to custodial consent as well. In United States v. Watson, 423 U.S. 411, 424-425 (1976), the Court specifically concluded that custody alone was insufficient to indicate that consent was coerced. Thus, custody is merely another factor to be considered in evaluating the circumstances bearing on the voluntariness of a consent. Id. See also United States v. Wasserteil, 641 F.2d 704 (9th Cir. 1981). However, a strict scrutiny standard will be applied to such a consent. See United States v. Wiener, 534 F.2d 15 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 820 (1976); Hayes v. Cady, 500 F.2d 1212 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 1058 (1974). Where a defendant was taken into custody unlawfully, the prosecution bears an even heavier burden of showing that a subsequent consent was voluntarily given. See United States v. Sanchez-Jaramillo, 637 F.2d 1094, 1099 (7th Cir. 1978), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 862 (1980); United States v. Jones, 475 F.2d 723 (5th Cir. 1973), cert. denied, 414 U.S. 841 (1973); Bretti v. Wainwright, 439 F.2d 1042 (5th Cir. 1971), cert. denied, 404 U.S. 943 (1971).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

3. Claim of Authority to Search

An officer's claim of authority to search also bears heavily on voluntariness. Consent to search will be held invalid when an officer who has no grounds to obtain a warrant, threatens to hold a person or his/her property until he/she agrees to the search. See United States v. Jefferson, 650 F.2d 854, 858 (6th Cir. 1981) (consent invalid where prompted by threat of illegal detention). Likewise, if a law enforcement officer represents that he/she possesses a search warrant when in fact he/she does not, or if he/she possesses a warrant which is in fact invalid, a subsequent consent to search will be involuntary. See Bumper v. North Carolina, 391 U.S. 543 (1968); United States v. Thompson, 612 F.2d 233, 234 (6th Cir. 1979); Holloway v. Wolff, 482 F.2d 110 (8th Cir. 1973). But a mere threat by police to obtain a warrant if consent is withheld is not sufficient to constitute coercion because the police are only informing the defendant of a course of action they are entitled to take. See United States v. Calvente, 722 F.2d 1019, 1023 (2d Cir. 1983); United States v. Dennis, 625 F.2d 782, 793 (8th Cir. 1980); United States v. Tortorello, 533 F.2d 809 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 894 (1976); United States v. Faruolo, 506 F.2d 490 (2d Cir. 1974); United States v. Hall, 565 F.2d 917 (5th Cir. 1978); United States v. Gavic, 520 F.2d 1346 (8th Cir. 1975). See generally, 2 LaFave, Search and Seizure, §8.2(c).

Consent also will be deemed voluntary where the consenting party is unaware of the fact that the officer possesses a valid search warrant. See Comeaux v. Henderson, 462 F.2d 1345, 1346 (5th Cir. 1972); Hoover v. Beto, 467 F.2d 516 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 409 U.S. 1086 (1972). However, passive conduct in a confrontation with police who desire to search the premises does not constitute consent. See Johnson v. United States, 333 U.S. 10 (1948); Amos v. United States, 255 U.S. 313 (1921); United States v. Lindsay, 506 F.2d 166 (D.C. Cir. 1974). Such conduct is merely submitting to the apparent authority of the officer, rather than manifesting consent.

4. Promise of Leniency

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

A consent is not rendered involuntary by reason of its being given in exchange for promise of immunity from prosecution, United States v. Dowdy, 479 F.2d 213 (4th Cir. 1973), cert. denied, 414 U.S. 823 (1973); a suspended sentence, United States v. Silva, 449 F.2d 145 (1st Cir. 1971), cert. denied, 405 U.S. 918 (1972); a lighter sentence, United States v. Lippman, 492 F.2d 314 (6th Cir. 1974), cert. denied 419 U.S. 1107 (1975); or leniency for the defendant's wife. See United States v. Culp, 472 F.2d 459 (8th Cir. 1973), cert. denied, 411 U.S. 970 (1973). Of course, promises must be made in good faith and must not be implied threats. See United States v. Bolin, 514 F.2d 554 (7th Cir. 1975).

5. Capacity

The age, education, intelligence, physical and psychological condition of the consenting party must be considered in determining voluntariness. See, e.g., United States v. Mendenhall, 446 U.S. 544, 558 (1980) (age, sex, race, and level of education relevant to determination of consent: 22 year-old with eleventh grade education plainly capable of knowing consent); United States v. Janik, 723 F.2d 537, 548 (7th Cir. 1983) (valid consent by deputy sheriff who knew rights and was unlikely to be intimidated by number of officers present or by handcuffing); United States v. Green, 678 F.2d 81, 84 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1016 (1982) (consent voluntary despite claim that consenting party was under the influence of drugs); United States v. Wellins, 654 F.2d 550, 555 (9th Cir. 1981) (age, experience, intelligence, and emotional state relevant to determination of consent); United States v. Elrod, 441 F.2d 353 (5th Cir. 1971) (mentally incompetent person); United States v. Wallace, 160 F. Supp. 859 (D.D.C. 1958) (inarticulate person).

6. Prior Illegal Police Conduct: Fruit of the Poisonous Tree

Any illegal search or arrest of an individual may trigger the exclusionary rule. A consent following an illegal arrest or search may be automatically suppressed under the "fruit of the poisonous tree" doctrine, unless the government can show that sufficient cause has occurred to free the consent from any taint. See Nardone v. United States, 308 U.S. 338 (1939). Factors relevant to the determination of whether there has been sufficient attenuation include the length of time between arrest and consent and the opportunity of the defendant to consult with third parties. See Brown v. Illinois, 422 U.S. 590 (1975); see also Florida v. Royer, 460 U.S. 49 (1983) (consent tainted by unlawful detention); United States v. Wellins, 654 F.2d 550, 555 (9th Cir. 1981) (significant intervening events; taint was sufficiently attenuated when defendant talked with lawyer, was twice read his rights, talked with friend on telephone, cooperated and appeared relaxed during consent search); but see United States v. Willis, 473 F.2d 450 (6th Cir. 1973), cert. denied, 412 U.S. 908 (1973) (prior unlawful search which led officers to seek consent search did not render evidence derived from subsequent consensual search inadmissible).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

C. Balancing the Factors

The factors enumerated above are not inclusive. Every factor which bears upon the voluntariness of the consent must be considered. Courts generally balance those factors which suggest that consent was coerced, against those that suggest it was voluntary. See United States v. Race, 529 F.2d 12 (1st Cir. 1976); United States v. Hearn, 496 F.2d 236 (6th Cir. 1974), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 1048 (1974); United States v. Rothman, 492 F.2d 1260 (9th Cir. 1973).

D. Burden of Proof

When relying upon a consent theory to justify the lawfulness of a search, the government has the burden of proving that the consent was given freely and voluntarily. See United States v. Mendenhall, supra, at 544, 547; United States v. Matlock, 415 U.S. 164, 177 (1974); Schneckloth v. Bustamonte, 412 U.S. 218, 227 (1973); Bumper v. North Carolina, 391 U.S. 543, 548 (1968). The Supreme Court has held in Bumper v. North Carolina, supra, at 548, and United States v. Matlock, supra, at 177, that the government need only prove the consent voluntary by a preponderance of the evidence. Accord United States v. Ramey, 711 F.2d 104, 107 (8th Cir. 1983); United States v. Buettner-Janusch, 464 F.2d 759, 764 (2d Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 830 (1981); United States v. Selberg, 630 F.2d 1292, 1294 n.1 (8th Cir. 1980); United States v. Miley, 513 F.2d 1191 (2d Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 842 (1975); United States v. Boston, 508 F.2d 1171 (2d Cir. 1974), cert. denied, 421 U.S. 1001 (1975). Nonetheless, a number of circuit courts use a higher standard of proof such as "clear and positive proof" or "clear and convincing evidence." See United States v. Parker, 722 F.2d 179 (5th Cir. 1983); United States v. Hearn 496 F.2d 236 (6th Cir. 1974), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 1048 (1974); United States v. Jones, 475 F.2d 723 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 414 U.S. 841 (1973); United States v. Page, 302 F.2d 81 (9th Cir. 1962). The refusal of a consenting party to sign a written consent form does not preclude the government from establishing that an oral consent was voluntarily given. See United States v. Gomez-Diaz, 712 F.2d 949, 951 (5th Cir. 1983).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

9-4.155 Third Party Consent

In Frazier v. Cupp, 394 U.S. 731 (1969), the Supreme Court held that either user of jointly held property can consent to a search of that property, since they both assume the risk that the other will grant such consent. This justification for third party consent, which stems from the "expectation of privacy" reasoning of Katz v. United States, supra, has been adopted by many courts. More recently, however, the Supreme Court in United States v. Matlock, supra, favored an objective "common authority" test for third party consent, over the subjective "expectation of privacy" standard. See United States v. Gradowski, 502 F.2d 563 (2d Cir. 1974); United States v. Heisman, 503 F.2d 1284 (8th Cir. 1974). Consent may be obtained from a third party who possesses "common authority over or other sufficient relationship to the premises or effects sought to be inspected." Lucero v. Donovan, 354 F.2d 16 (9th Cir. 1965); see, e.g., Riley v. Gray, 674 F.2d 522, 528 (6th Cir. 1982) (search unreasonable when person who consented has no right to access, use, or control of apartment); United States v. Sellers, 667 F.2d 1123, 1126 (4th Cir. 1981) (consent reasonably given by person who removed and stored neighbor's belongings); United States v. Jamieson-McKames Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 651 F.2d 532, 542-543 (8th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 1016 (1982) (search reasonable when business associate who consented had unlimited access); accord United States v. Buettner-Janusch, 646 F.2d 759, 765 (2d Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 830 (1981).

Under a "common authority" test, a third party need not have a possessory interest in the property. See United States v. Matlock, supra. The authority which justifies a third party's consent rests not upon property law but on the mutual use of property by persons having joint interest over it. Id. Thus, one who satisfies the "common authority" test may consent to a search of premises even against a person who has a legal interest in the property. As Matlock makes clear, law enforcement officers are not required to seek out consent of persons under suspicion when a third party having common authority over the property is available to give consent. See 2 LaFare, §8.3(e), at 710-712. Similarly, under the Matlock rationale, "the prior refusal of an absent occupant to give consent would not present a bar to the police seeking consent from a co-occupant." Id., §8.3(d), at 704. Nor does an absent occupant's instruction that consent not be given invalidate a third party occupant's subsequent consent. Id., §8.3(c), at 702-703. If two people have standing to consent to a search, the consent of one of them may be rescinded through the objection of the others. See United States v. Matlock, supra, at 171. Thus, when two occupants are present and take contrary positions as to whether consent should be given, the position of the person with the superior interest takes precedence (i.e., a parent over a child, a homeowner over a house guest); however, if both parties have an equal interest in a place in which both are present, the better view is that the consent of both is required. Id., §8.3(d), at 707-709. However, even if both parties share an equal interest, greater recognition should be accorded the interest of the third party when the defendant has victimized the third party. Id., §8.3(d), at 709. See United States v. Hendrix, 595 F.2d 883, 886 (D.C. Cir. 1979) (wife beaten and threatened by gun-wielding husband may validly consent to a search of residence for gun despite husband's objection).

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

A. Husband-Wife

A suspect's spouse can consent to the search of a residence shared with the other spouse where they both have an equal right to its possession and occupancy. See United States v. Walker, 638 F.2d 1147, 1149 (8th Cir. 1981) (suspect's wife may consent to search of family home); United States v. Hendrix, 595 F.2d 883 (D.C. Cir. 1979) (wife could give consent to search of marital premises despite husband's refusal. Animosity between the spouses at the time of consent will not render such consent invalid, since the authority to consent is not based upon principles of agency or the waiver of another person's Fourth Amendment rights. See McCravy v. Moore, 476 F.2d 281 (6th Cir. 1973); United States v. Robinson, 479 F.2d 300 (7th Cir. 1973)). However, where the two are estranged, the courts must look closely to whether the consenting spouse still retains "common authority" over the premises. See United States v. Long, 524 F.2d 660 (9th Cir. 1975). But see United States v. Crouthers, 669 F.2d 635, 643 (10th Cir. 1982) (consent by wife who had moved out of house valid when wife had not yet abandoned marriage and retained key to house).

The "common authority" test is applicable to consent searches of personal property as well. See United States v. Baldwin, 644 F.2d 381, 383 (5th Cir. 1981) (per curiam) (consent valid when given by suspect's wife who has joint control over automobile).

B. Paramours

A man and woman who hold themselves out to be husband and wife, although unmarried in fact, have the same authority to consent to a search of common property as would have existed if they were in fact married. See White v. United States, 444 F.2d 724 (10th Cir. 1971).

C. Parent-Child

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The validity of parent-child consensual searches is discussed in 2 LaFave, §8.4(b) & (c). Under the Matlock "common authority" formulation, parents have clear authority to consent to a search of commonly shared areas of a house. Even with respect to areas within a house designated primarily for a child's use, a parent may generally consent to searches of those areas because of a parent's superior authority over the premises arising from the familial relationship. See United States v. Peterson, 524 F.2d 167 (4th Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 1088 (1976) (mother could consent to search of room in her house used by adult son); United States v. Mix, 446 F.2d 615 (5th Cir. 1971); United States v. Stone, 401 F.2d 32 (7th Cir. 1968). See also United States v. Block, 590 F.2d 535, 541 (4th Cir. 1978) (although mother could validly consent to search of adult son's room, consent did not extend to son's locked trunk found in room).

Courts have only infrequently addressed the converse situation of a search of premises based on the consent of a child. Professor LaFave has noted "that under the Matlock 'common authority' formula it cannot be said that a child has authority equivalent to that of his parents to permit a full police search of the family home. . . . That is, it cannot be said that the parents have assumed the risk of such an occurrence, for this is contrary to the common understanding of the parent-child relationship." 2 LaFave, §8.4(c), at 736-737. The question of whether a child has effectively consented to a search of premises belonging to a parent must be resolved on an ad hoc basis, with particular emphasis on the age of the child and the scope of the consent given. Id. See also United States v. Miller, 688 F.2d 652, 658 (9th Cir. 1982) (defendant's son had sufficient control over father's shop area to consent to search). The effectiveness of a child's consent to the search of a residence is more likely to be recognized if a parent has committed a crime against the child. 2 LaFave, §8.4(c), Supp. 1984, at 263.

D. Landlord-Tenant

A landlord cannot consent to a search of the tenant's premises because he/she lacks sufficient common authority during the period of tenancy. See United States v. Matlock, supra, at 164, 171 n.7; United States v. Bellina, 665 F.2d 1335, 1336 (4th Cir. 1981); Chapman v. United States, 365 U.S. 610 (1961); United States v. Parizo, 514 F.2d 52 (2d Cir. 1975); United States v. Savage, 564 F.2d 728 (5th Cir. 1977). An exception exists, however, where the tenant has abandoned the premises or property, see United States v. Sellers, 667 F.2d 1123, 1125-1126 (4th Cir. 1981) (consent of landlord valid when departing lessee left all possessions with landlord); United States v. Sledge, 650 F.2d 1075, 1077-1078 (9th Cir. 1981); United States v. Haynie, 637 F.2d 227, 237 (4th

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 451 U.S. 972 (1981), or has been evicted. See United States v. Roberts, 465 F.2d 1373 (6th Cir. 1972).

E. Hotel-Guest

A hotel clerk cannot consent to the search of a room which is registered to a guest. See Stoner v. California, 376 U.S. 483 (1964). Authorization for hotel personnel to enter rooms for purposes of cleaning and repair does not authorize entry for unrelated purposes. Id. at 489. Once the term of occupancy expires or the room is vacated, however, hotel management can consent to a search. See United States v. Parizo, 514 F.2d 52 (2d Cir. 1975); see also United States v. Costa, 356 F. Supp. 606 (D.D.C. 1973), aff'd, 479 F.2d 921 (D.C. Cir. 1973) (hotel manager may not consent to search of room occurring several hours after check-out time but before hotel has removed the occupant's belongings).

F. Joint Tenants

Consent may always be given by anyone who has common authority over the place or thing to be searched. See United States v. Matlock, 415 U.S. 164 (1974); Frazier v. Cupp, 394 F.2d 731, 740 (1969). However, a co-tenant may not consent to a search of an area or personal effects over which the suspect retains exclusive control. See United States v. Bussey, 507 F.2d 1096 (9th Cir. 1974); United States v. Heisman, 503 F.2d 1284 (8th Cir. 1974). See generally 2 LaFare, §8.3(f) (noting that although a joint tenant has no authority to consent to search of personal effects that defendant has taken steps to secure from scrutiny of other, validity of third party consent ought not turn "upon subtle distinctions in individual living arrangements").

G. House Guest

A host can generally consent to the search of the premises occupied by a guest because the host has a superior right to the premises and the guest's expectation of privacy is not as great. See United States v. Miroff, 606 F.2d 777, 779 (7th Cir. 1979); United States v. Buckles, 495 F.2d 1377 (8th Cir. 1974). However, a host's authority to consent to a search of the guest's room does not extend to a search of any closed containers or other personal property in which the guest has a reasonable expectation of privacy. See United States v. Isom, 588 F.2d 858, 861 (2d Cir. 1978); United States v. Poole, 307 F. Supp. 1185 (E.D. La 1969) (consent search of guest's suitcase in closet invalid).

H. Partners

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

A partner's consent to a search of the business premises is binding upon the other partners since he/she has common authority over the commonly held place. See United States v. Jamieson-McKames Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 651 F.2d 532 (8th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 1016 (1982); United States v. Sferas, 210 F.2d 69 (7th Cir. 1954).

I. Employer-Employee

Employer consent searches are also governed by the common authority test. See generally, 2 LaFave, §8.6(c) & (d). As Professor LaFave points out, the effectiveness of an employer's consent for the search of an employee's work will turn on (1) the extent to which the particular area searched may be said to have been set aside for the personal use of the employee; and (2) the extent to which the search was prompted by a unique or special need of the employer to maintain close scrutiny of employees. Id. at §8.6(d), p. 770. It is clear that an employer or supervisor may consent to a search of those areas which are not set aside for exclusive use by a particular employee. See United States v. Gargiso, 456 F.2d 584 (2d Cir. 1972) (corporate officer can consent to search of wired-off storage area for stolen property). By contrast, an employer cannot consent to a search of the personal belongings of an employee or areas assigned to the employee for his/her exclusive use. See United States v. Blok, 188 F.2d 1019 (D.C. Cir. 1951) (invalidating employer's consent to search employee's desk).

An employee can consent to a search of his/her employer's business premises when the premises are placed under his/her immediate control so as to give him/her apparent authority to consent. See United States v. Buettner-Janusch, 646 F.2d 759 (2d Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 803 (1981) (research assistant properly consented to search of professor's laboratory).

J. Bailor-Bailee

A person with custody of personal property belonging to another may consent to its search if he/she has been given sufficient control over it so that he/she has a right to equal access or use. See Frazier v. Cupp, 394 U.S. 731 (1969); see also United States v. Cepulonis, 530 F.2d 238 (1st Cir.), cert. denied, 426 U.S. 908 (1976). (Authority to release footlocker to anyone who spoke code words was sufficient control to allow third party to consent to search of footlocker); United States v. Neville, 516 F.2d 1302 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 925 (1975); Corngold v. United States, 367 F.2d 1 (9th Cir. 1966); but see United States v. Presler, 610 F.2d 1206 (4th Cir. 1979) (when defendant did not give acquaintance the key or combination to locked briefcases but entrusted them to acquaintances solely for safekeeping, no common authority existed giving third party right to consent). Cf. Rawlings v. Kentucky, 448 U.S. 98, 104-106 (1978) (owner of bailed property who lacks a legitimate expectation of privacy in the place stored may not object to search). Where possession of the property may implicate the bailee in a crime, he/she can consent to a search of the bailment. See United States v. Diggs, 544 F.2d 116 (3d Cir. 1976), aff'd, 569 F.2d 1264 (1977). A bailor, who either possesses or is entitled to possess the property, can consent to its search since his/her property right in the item is superior to that of the bailee. See Anderson v. United States, 399 F.2d 753 (10th Cir. 1968).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

K. Personal Effects

Generally, a third party consent to a search of the premises, whether authorized by a spouse, paramour, parent, joint occupant, host, employer, or bailee, does not extend to the defendant's enclosed personal effects within the premises. See United States v. Blok, supra; United States v. Robinson, 479 F.2d 300 (7th Cir. 1973); Corngold v. United States, 367 F.2d 1 (9th Cir. 1966); Maxwell v. Stephens, 348 F.2d 325 (8th Cir. 1965), cert. denied, 382 U.S. 944 (1965); Roberts v. United States, 332 F.2d 892 (8th Cir. 1964).

L. Eavesdropping

A person can consent to the tape recording or monitoring of his/her conversation with another person. See United States v. White, 401 U.S. 745 (1971); United States v. Neville, 516 F.2d 1302 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 925 (1975); United States v. Kippman, 492 F.2d 314 (6th Cir. 1974), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 1107 (1975); United States v. Dowdy, 479 F.2d 213 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 414 U.S. 823 (1973); United States v. Bonanno, 487 F.2d 654 (2d Cir. 1973). Furthermore, the extent of proof necessary to show consent to the monitoring of a conversation may be less than required to show consent to a physical search. Id.

9-4.156 Scope of Consent

"Government agents may not obtain consent to search on the representation that they intend to look only for certain specified items and subsequently use that consent as a license to conduct a general exploratory search. A consent search is reasonable only if kept within the bounds of the actual consent;" see United States v. Dichiarinte, 445 F.2d 126, 129 (7th Cir. 1971) (consent to search for drugs did not permit a documents search). See also Gouled v. United States, 255 U.S. 298, 306

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

(1921) (consent for informant to enter office did not validate search of private papers). If the defendant's response to the officer's request for consent is general and unqualified, "then the police may proceed to conduct a general search of that place." 2 LaFave, §8.1(c), at 624. And, the permissible scope of the search encompasses closed containers found on the premises. See United States v. Covello, 657 F.2d 151 (7th Cir. 1981) (consent for "complete" search of automobile permitted officers to search luggage found in the truck). Evidence observed in plain view may also be seized during a consensual search. See Washington v. Chrisman, 455 U.S. 1 (1982); United States v. Dichiarinte, supra; Davis v. United States, 327 F.2d 301 (9th Cir. 1964) (limited consent to enter; marijuana seen in plain view just inside the door). The authority to conduct a consensual search terminates when the police find the items for which the consent to search was solicited. See 2 LaFave, §8.1(c), 1984 Supp., at 234.

A law enforcement officer can properly misrepresent his/her identity in order to gain entry to the defendant's premises through consent. See Hoffa v. United States, 385 U.S. 293 (1966); Lewis v. United States, 385 U.S. 206 (1966); United States v. Pozos, 697 F.2d 1238, 1244 (5th Cir. 1983); United States v. Ruiz-Altschiller, 694 F.2d 1104, 1107, (8th Cir. 1982); United States v. Shigemura, 682 F.2d 699, 706, (8th Cir. 1982); cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1111 (1983); United States v. Enstam, 622 F.2d 857 (5th Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 450 U.S. 912 (1981); cf. United States v. Wuagneux, 683 F.2d 1343, 1348 (11th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, U.S. _____, 104 S. Ct. 69 (1983) (consent valid when IRS agent disclosed identity and intent to conduct audit without disclosing risk of future criminal proceedings). That does not mean, however, that officers may simply dispense with a warrant, and rely upon misrepresentations to gain entry. Misrepresentations concerning the crime under investigation or the true object of the search (assuming that the item could be found during a search of the same intensity as that consented to) are factors to be considered in assessing the voluntariness of the search. See 2 LaFave, §8.2(n), at 686-690.

9-4.157 Revocation of Consent

Consent to search may be withdrawn or limited prior to the completion of the search. See Mason v. Pulliam, 557 F.2d 426 (5th Cir. 1977). Consent may be revoked by either the party who gave the original consent (United States v. Bracer, 342 F.2d 522 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 382 U.S. 954 (1965)) or by a party who possesses an equal right to consent to search of the property in question. Jones v. Berry, 722 F.2d 443, 449 (9th Cir. 1983) (husband may revoke consent previously given by wife); United States v. Green, 523 F.2d 968 (9th Cir. 1975); Lucero v. Donovan,

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

354 F.2d 16 (9th Cir. 1965). But if the consent is revoked prior to the completion of the search, all items seized before the limitation is imposed may be held for evidence. Id.; see also United States v. Black, 675 F.2d 129, 138 (7th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 460 U.S. 1068 (1983).

A notable exception to a person's ability to withdraw consent arises in the context of airport searches. Once a boarding passenger has voluntarily submitted himself/herself and his/her carry-on luggage to pre-flight screening procedures, he/she may not revoke his/her implicit consent when preliminary screening indicates that a more detailed search is appropriate. See United States v. Herzbrun, 723 F.2d 773, 776 (11th Cir. 1984); United States v. Haynie, 637 F.2d 227, 230 (4th Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 451 U.S. 972 (1981); United States v. DeAngelo, 584 F.2d 46, 48 (4th Cir. 1978), cert. denied, 440 U.S. 935 (1979) ("having consented to the search, [the accused] could not withhold permission after the first step of the process disclosed that he was attempting to carry aboard the aircraft articles that were concealed from x-ray").

9-4.160 Administrative Searches

9-4.161 Administrative Warrant for Regulatory Inspections

Routine inspections of commercial and residential buildings made pursuant to a statute must be conducted with valid administrative search warrants. See Marshall v. Barlow's Inc., 436 U.S. 307, 312 (1978) (business premises); See v. City of Seattle, 387 U.S. 541, 546 (1967) (business premises); Camara v. Municipal Court, 387 U.S. 523, 534 (1967) (private dwelling). Administrative search warrants require a lesser degree of probable cause than searches in criminal investigations. See Camara v. Municipal Court, supra. The probable cause required to issue an area-wide warrant must be measured by a flexible standard of reasonableness that takes into account the public need for effective enforcement of the particular regulation involved. See See v. City of Seattle, supra, at 545. This lesser showing of probable cause is justified given the strong governmental interest in protecting public health and safety through effective enforcement of applicable regulations and the limited invasion of the owner's privacy which is neither personal in nature nor aimed at uncovering evidence of crime. Camara v. Municipal Court, supra, at 537. See Hern Iron Works, Inc. v. Donovan, 670 F.2d 838, 840 (9th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 830 (1982) (administrative warrant to search iron works is based on more relaxed standard of probable cause than criminal warrant); In re Searches and Seizures Conducted on October 2, and 3, 1980, 665 F.2d 775, 777 (7th Cir. 1981) (administrative search of registered pharmacy authorized by statute on less than criminal standard of probable cause); Marshall v. Horn Seed Co., Inc., 647 F.2d 96, 102 (10th Cir. 1981) (warrant application based on specific evidence of OSHA violation does not require probable cause in criminal sense).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

In order to meet the probable cause requirement, the administrative agency must demonstrate that it has satisfied reasonable administrative or legislative standards with regard to the targets of its inspections. See Camara v. Municipal Court, supra, at 538; Marshall v. Barlow's, supra. Factors to be assessed in evaluating whether the probable cause standard has been met include the passage of time, the nature of the building, or the condition of an entire area. See Camara v. Municipal Court, supra, at 538. Similarly, where an intrusion has both administrative and criminal purposes, such as the survey of a factory for illegal aliens in INS v. Delgado, supra, the courts may be expected to apply traditional criminal search and seizure precepts. If, however, the proceeding at which evidence is to be used is civil in nature, such as the deportation hearing in INS v. Lopez-Mendoza, supra, the exclusionary rule will not apply.

9-4.162 Exceptions to the Warrant Requirement in Administrative Searches

See USAM 9-4.163, 9-4.164, 9-4.165, 9-4.166, 9-4.167, 9-4.168, infra.

9-4.163 Emergencies

An administrative search may be carried out in the absence of a search warrant during an emergency which requires prompt inspection. Emergency situations which justify foregoing the warrant requirement include: the seizure of unwholesome food, North American Cold Storage Co. v. City of Chicago, 211 U.S. 306 (1908); compulsory vaccinations to prevent an epidemic, Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U.S. 11 (1905); health quarantines, Compagnie Francaise v. Louisiana Board of Health, 186 U.S. 380 (1902); entrance to a still-smoking building by fire marshals to prevent destruction of all relevant evidence, Michigan v. Tyler, 436 U.S. 499 (1978); emergency medical aid, United States v. Dunavan, 485 F.2d 201 (6th Cir. 1973); protection of the President, Scherer v. Brennan, 379 F.2d 609 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 389 U.S. 1021 (1967).

9-4.164 Regulated Industries

The Supreme Court has upheld warrantless administrative searches mandated by statute of certain regulated businesses because either the owner has a license and so should know if the inspection or the search is crucial to the regulation. See Donovan v. Dewey, 452 U.S. 594, 602 (1981) (regulations concerning mine safety inspections); United States v. Biswell, 406 U.S. 311, 316 (1972) (regulations concerning firearms dealers based on important government interests); Colonnade Catering Corp. v. United States, 397 U.S. 72, 77 (1970) (regulations concerning liquor industry); United States v. Ray, 652 F.2d 670, 671 (6th Cir. 1981) (per curiam) (regulations concerning strip mining). In Donovan v. Dewey, supra, the Court indicated that whether warrantless searches are lawful may turn upon whether Congress has "reasonably determined that warrantless searches are necessary to further a regulatory scheme and the federal regulatory presence is sufficiently comprehensive and defined that the owner cannot help but be aware that his property will be subject to periodic inspections undertaken for specific purposes."

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

This exception to the warrant requirement is based on the diminished expectation of privacy in pervasively regulated industries due to the tradition of close government inspection for which any person who chooses to enter such a business must be aware. See Marshall v. Barlow's Inc., supra; United States v. Gordon, 655 F.2d 478, 483 (2d Cir. 1981); United States v. Jamieson-McKames Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 651 F.2d 532, 541-42 (8th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 1016 (1982). Many courts justify warrantless inspections of these industries based on implied consent because those persons who accept operating licenses should know about statutory inspections. See United States v. New Orleans Public Service, Inc., 553 F.2d 459 (5th Cir. 1977); United States v. Biswell, supra.

The Fourth Amendment is satisfied as long as the inspection system under the statute is reasonable with respect to its time, place, and scope. See Lewis v. McMasters, 663 F.2d 954, 955 (9th Cir. 1981).

9-4.165 Consent to an Administrative Search

In actual practice, most administrative searches are conducted pursuant to the consent of the owner or occupant of the premises. See Camara v. Municipal Court, 387 U.S. 523, 539 (1967); Stephenson Enterprises, Inc. v. Marshall, 578 F.2d 1021 (5th Cir. 1978). Most courts follow the rule that consent for administrative searches need not meet the same standards of voluntariness as consent in a criminal investigation. See United States v. Thriftmart, Inc., 429 F.2d 1006 (9th Cir. 1970), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 926 (1970); United States v. Hammond Milling Co., 413 F.2d 608 (5th Cir. 1969), cert. denied, 396 U.S. 1002 (1970). If, however, the inspector improperly insists upon his/her right to search without a warrant, and the individual believes that he/she will be violating the law if he/she refuses to consent, then such consent is involuntary. See United States v. Kramer Grocery, 418 F.2d 987 (8th Cir. 1969) (FDA inspector, over the owner's objections, insisted on his right to inspect and demand certain records and information, consent involuntary); United States v. Anile, 352 F. Supp. 14 (N.D.W.Va. 1973) (drugstore owner told by government agents that he had no choice regarding a notice of inspection of his store; consent involuntary).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-4.166 Fire and Arson Investigations

Fire officials may enter a burning building without a warrant. Also, for a reasonable time after the blaze has been extinguished, they may investigate the causes of the fire. See Michigan v. Tyler, 436 U.S. 499 (1978); see also United States v. Moskow, 588 F.2d 882 (3d Cir. 1978); Steigler v. Anderson, 496 F.2d 793 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 1002 (1974). Any incriminating evidence found within the investigating officer's plain view may be seized in the course of such a search. Additional inquiries about the cause of the fire must be made with an administrative warrant. If officials suspect arson, but need more evidence, they must get a warrant based on the criminal standard of probable cause. When there is a delay in the search of premises in which the owner has a reasonable expectation of privacy, officials must obtain an administrative warrant to determine the cause of the fire. See Michigan v. Clifford, ____ U.S. ____, 104 S. Ct. 641 (1984).

9-4.167 Prisons

The Supreme Court has long recognized the special security problems of prisons and jails. See, e.g., Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 546-47 (1979); Jones v. North Carolina Prisoner's Labor Union, Inc., 433 U.S. 119, 124 (1977); Pell v. Procunier, 417 U.S. 817, 823 (1974); Procunier v. Martinex, 416 U.S. 396, 412 (1974). There is, accordingly, no right of privacy in traditional Fourth Amendment terms. See Hudson v. Palmer, ____ U.S. ____, 104 S. Ct. 3194 (1984).

The need to maintain prison security and discipline provides the basis for dispensing with the warrant and probable cause requirements when searching a prisoner's cell or electronically monitoring his/her conversation with a visitor. See United States v. Palmateer, 469 F.2d 273 (9th Cir. 1972); United States v. Hitchcock, 467 F.2d 1107 (9th Cir. 1972), cert. denied, 410 U.S. 916 (1973); see also Lanza v. New York, 370 U.S. 139, 143 (1962) ("It is obvious that a jail shares none of the attributes of privacy of a home, an automobile, an office, or a hotel room.") Searches conducted for the safety of inmates and/or the institution may be made at random and need not be conducted according to an established plan. See Hudson v. Palmer, supra. Nor is the inmate entitled under the Constitution to observe "shakedowns" of his/her jail cell. Block v. Rutherford, _____ U.S. _____, 104 S. Ct. 3227 (1984) (also holding that contact visits may be prohibited for legitimate security reasons). The warrantless monitoring of a conversation is not permitted if it involves a "special relationship" which the law has traditionally endowed with confidentiality, such as an attorney-client relationship. See Lanza, supra, at 144.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

As part of the routine inventory procedure incident to incarceration, police may search any container or article in the arrestee's possession. See Illinois v. Lafayette, 462 U.S. 640 (1983). The justification for this procedure rests on strong governmental interests such as theft, false claims, prevention of personal harm and identification. Id. at 2606.

9-4.168 Miscellaneous Administrative Searches

Various types of administrative searches may be carried out in the absence of a warrant or traditional probable cause, as long as the search furthers a reasonable administrative purpose and is not directed at uncovering evidence of a crime. Such searches cannot extend beyond the administrative objective. Probable cause may be based upon general circumstances which make it likely that an inspection will serve an administrative purpose, but not upon knowledge of the particular individual. This standard for administrative searches has been applied in the inspection of packages entering a federal building for explosives or dangerous weapons, see McMorris v. Aliota, 567 F.2d 897 (9th Cir. 1978); the inspection of baggage leaving a quarantined area for diseased horticulture, United States v. Schafer, 461 F.2d 856 (9th Cir. 1972), cert. denied, 409 U.S. 881 (1972); and the inspection of a truck entering a restricted area on a military base for dangerous materials. Entry into the public lobby of a motel-restaurant by an agent of the Secretary of Labor in order to serve an administrative subpoena was permitted despite the fact that the subpoena did not authorize inspection of the premises. See Donovan v. Lone Steer, _____ U.S. _____, 104 S. Ct. 769 (1984).

9-4.170 Border Searches

A. Characteristics

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

A border search may be distinguished from other official law enforcement searches in that its primary purposes are to insure the payment of import duties and to prevent the introduction of contraband or illegal aliens into the United States. See Boyd v. United States, 116 U.S. 616 (1886). Thus border searches have traditionally been recognized as an exception to the probable cause and warrant requirements of the Fourth Amendment. They need only comply with the Fourth Amendment standard of reasonableness. See Torres v. Puerto Rico, 442 U.S. 465, 472-73 (1979); United States v. Ramsey, 431 U.S. 606, 619 (1977); Almeida-Sanches v. United States, 413 U.S. 266, 272 (1973); see also United States v. Garcia, 672 F.2d 1349, 1354 (11th Cir. 1982); United States v. DeGutierrez, 667 F.2d 16, 18-19 (5th Cir. 1982); United States v. Flynn, 664 F.2d 1296, 1306 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 456 U.S. 930, (1982); United States v. Stone, 659 F.2d 569, 572 (5th Cir. 1981). The view that border searches are not subject to the probable cause and warrant requirement of the Fourth Amendment derives from the historical fact that authority to conduct searches at the border was enacted in 1789 by the same Congress which adopted the Bill of Rights. See United States v. Ramsey, supra; Boyd v. United States, supra, at 623.

B. Elements of a Valid Border Search

A warrantless border search is lawful if the officers conducting the search have the authority to do so; the person or property searched has crossed the border; the search is conducted at the border or its functional equivalent; and the scope of the search is reasonably limited to protect the interests of the agency conducting the search. See United States v. Thompson, 475 F.2d 1359 (5th Cir. 1973); Henderson v. United States, 390 F.2d 805 (9th Cir. 1967).

C. Border Search Authority

To conduct searches at the border, law enforcement officers must have border search authority. Customs officers, under 19 U.S.C. §§482, 1581(a) and 1582, and border patrol agents, under 8 U.S.C. §1357, are authorized to conduct warrantless searches of people and things at the border even in the absence of probable cause or reasonable suspicion. That authority is justified by the absolute right of the sovereign to control its borders, particularly with regard to the flow of aliens and smuggled goods. See United States v. Ramsey, supra; 606 (1977); Carroll v. United States, 267 U.S. 132 (1925). Authority is not limited, however, to persons or goods entering the country, but "the rationale behind this exception [to the warrant requirement] applies with equal force to persons or objects leaving the country . . ." United States v. Udofot, 711 F.2d 831, cert. denied, _____ U.S. _____, 104 S. Ct. 245 (1983).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

A search performed by a customs officer at the border or its functional equivalent may be more intrusive than a search by border patrol agents, whose object is limited to detecting illegal aliens. A customs officer can lawfully conduct a warrantless search of an automobile, its occupants, as well as its contents, including luggage. A border patrol agent can question the occupants of the vehicle regarding their citizenship, United States v. Martinez-Fuerte, 428 U.S. 543 (1976), and he/she can direct that the trunk of the car be opened to determine whether illegal aliens might be concealed there, United States v. Alvarez-Gonzalez, 561 F.2d 620 (5th Cir. 1977), but he/she cannot search luggage inside the car absent probable cause or reasonable suspicion. See United States v. Thompson, supra, at 1362. The limitations on the border patrol agents' authority can be removed by officially cross-designating him/her as a customs officer. See United States v. Villalon, 475 F.2d 937 (5th Cir. 1979); United States v. Thompson, supra, at 1363. Compare United States v. Soto-Soto, 598 F.2d 545 (9th Cir. 1979).

9-4.171 Functional Equivalents of the Border

"Whatever the permissible scope of intrusiveness of a routine border search might be, searches of this kind may in certain circumstances take place not only at the border itself, but functional equivalents as well. For example, searches at an established station near the border, at a point marking the confluence of two or more roads that extend from the border, might be functional equivalents of border searches. For another example, a search of the passengers and cargo of an airplane arriving at a St. Louis airport after a nonstop flight from Mexico City would clearly be the functional equivalent of a border search. See Almeida-Sanchez v. United States, 413 U.S. 266, 172-273 (1973). Problems relating specifically to searches and seizures of persons at airports are discussed at USAM 9-4.127, supra.

The Supreme Court has not defined functional equivalency beyond the illustrations given in Almeida-Sanchez. In United States v. Garcia, 672 F.2d 1349 (11th Cir. 1982), an appellate court made an attempt to set forth characteristics that would cause an inland geographical location to be considered the functional equivalent of the border. In that court's view, a search within the border may also be justified as a border search requiring no warrant nor any suspicion if there is reasonable certainty that the object or person searched has just crossed the border, there has been no time or opportunity for the object to have changed materially since the time of crossing, and the search is conducted at the earliest practicable point after the border was crossed. See Garcia, supra, at 1363-1364. See also United States v. Hildalgo-Gato, 703 F.2d 1267, 1268 (11th Cir. 1983) (holding that the "contiguous zone" is the functional equivalent of the border).

That definition is adequate for most instances where the government, before and after Garcia, has urged that a warrantless search was lawful because it occurred at the functional equivalent of the border. See, e.g., United States v. Messersmith, 692 F.2d 1315 (11th Cir. 1982); United States v. Niver, 689 F.2d 520 (5th Cir. 1982); United States v. Carter, 592 F.2d 402 (7th Cir. 1979); United States v. Himmelwright, 551 F.2d 991 (5th Cir. 1977). Only the requirement that the location be at the "earliest practicable point" from the border could be troublesome if given a literal construction. That has not happened as yet.

Permanent checkpoints located within a reasonable distance from the border may be regarded as the functional equivalent of the border. See United States v. Dreyfus-de Campos, 698 F.2d 227 (5th Cir.); cert. denied, 461 U.S. 947 (1983); United States v. Salinas, 611 F.2d 128 (5th Cir. 1980). However, those checkpoints are staffed solely by the Border Patrol, an arm of the Immigration and Naturalization Service charged with the responsibility of preventing entry by illegal aliens. Border Patrol agents may stop cars at the permanent checkpoints and question occupants regarding their citizenship, and they may require the trunk of the car to be opened in order to determine whether aliens might be concealed there. See United States v. Martinez-Fuerte, 428 U.S. 543 (1976); United States v. Alvarez-Gonzalez, 561 F.2d 620 (5th Cir. 1977). Moreover, if the routine questioning and inspection develops probable cause to believe that criminal activity is afoot, the border patrol agent can make a more extensive search. See United States v. Villalon, supra.

Because customs officers do not locate themselves at checkpoints, the courts have not been confronted with the extent to which a customs-type search can be made at a permanent checkpoint that serves as the functional equivalent of the border. Given the likelihood that searches by customs officers at the functional equivalent of the border would be regarded as constitutional, a search of similar scope by a border patrol agent could only be condemned because of a lack of statutory authority, and not because of a constitutional violation. That being so, the exclusionary rule, which was intended to prevent law enforcement officers from engaging in unconstitutional invasions of privacy as opposed to excesses of statutory authority, should not apply. See United States v. Garcia, supra; compare United States v. Harrington, 681 F.2d 612 (9th Cir. 1982).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Customs officers also patrol the waters surrounding the country. Their right to conduct suspicionless searches in customs waters is long recognized. A statute enacted in 1790 empowered customs officers to board ships within four leagues--twelve miles--of the coast, if bound to the United States, to demand to examine the ship's manifest, and to search the vessel. Act of Aug. 4, 1790, 1 Stat. 145. That statute is the direct ancestor of 19 U.S.C. §1581(a), which provides that customs officers may "at any time go on board of any vessel . . . at any place in the United States or within the customs waters . . . and examine . . . every part thereof . . . any person, trunk, package, or cargo on board . . ." The statute also serves as the basis for customs officers to conduct border-type searches of vessels in territorial waters, even before the vessels reach shore, if sufficient articulable facts have been shown for the conclusion that the vessel in question came from international waters and had crossed the territorial border. See United States v. Helms, 703 F.2d 759 (4th Cir. 1983). In United States v. MacPherson, 664 F.2d 69 (5th Cir. 1981), the court refused to quibble with the defendant regarding the distance from the Florida shore where the customs search occurred. The court applied the border-search plenary-authority rule to conduct a search occurring a half-mile beyond the three-mile territorial limit. A discussion of vessels generally is found at USAM 9-4.146, supra.

9-4.172 Extended Border Searches

If conditions remain essentially unchanged from the time a person or object crosses the border, a warrantless border search may be conducted at points far removed from the point of entry. Those searches are commonly known as extended border searches. See United States v. Lueck, 678 F.2d 895 (11th Cir. 1982); United States v. Jacobson, 647 F.2d 990 (9th Cir. 1981); United States v. Richards, 638 F.2d 765 (5th Cir. 1981). They generally arise in situations where officers have deliberately delayed conducting the searches for legitimate law enforcement purposes, such as the expectation that continued surveillance from the border will lead to the apprehension of others involved in illegal activities or the discovery of further evidence of a crime.

Because the delayed searches may involve a greater intrusion of privacy than searches at the border or its functional equivalent, the courts have imposed two requirements upon extended border searches. First, there must be a reasonable certainty that a border crossing has occurred and that conditions have remained unchanged from the crossing until the search. Second, the search must be supported by reasonable suspicion of criminality. See United States v. Garcia, 672 F.2d 1349, 1364 (11th Cir. 1982); United States v. Richards, supra.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

A consequence of extended border search doctrine is that it expands the application of border search law geographically. It also embraces objects that have not crossed the border, if those objects have been in direct contact with others that have been under surveillance since they crossed a border. For example, a vehicle that meets a vessel or airplane arriving from abroad can be searched to determine whether dutiable merchandise or contraband has been transferred to it. No proof is needed that the vehicle itself had contact with the border. See United States v. Lueck, 678 F.2d 895 (11th Cir. 1982); United States v. Fogelman, 586 F.2d 337 (5th Cir. 1978).

A crucial factor in extended border searches is the absence of a significant break in surveillance from the border. If there has been no break the standard of reasonable certainty of unchanged conditions has automatically been satisfied. See United States v. Fogelman, supra. If some break has occurred, the test is whether examining the totality of circumstances, the gap in surveillance removed the reasonable certainty that the items discovered were present at the time of the border crossing. See United States v. Martinez, 481 F.2d 214 (5th Cir. 1973) (35 minute break; 628 pounds of marijuana in secret compartment of trunk; search held reasonable despite break); Castillo-Garcia v. United States, 424 F.2d 482 (9th Cir. 1970) (165 pounds of marijuana found in car with fifteen minute break in surveillance; search held reasonable); United States v. Mejias, 452 F.2d 1190 (9th Cir. 1971) (4.6 pounds of cocaine could not have been sewn into lining of suitcase during break in surveillance). Even a break in surveillance can bar a subsequent border search where only a small quantity of contraband is seized and other persons have entered the vehicle since its entry into the United States. See United States v. Anderson, 509 F.2d 724 (9th Cir. 1974), cert. denied, 420 U.S. 910 (1975).

9-4.173 Routine Searches

Neither probable cause nor any amount of reasonable suspicion is required for a routine inspection at the border. See United States v. Ramsey, 431 U.S. 606 (1977); United States v. Grotke, 702 F.2d 49 (2d Cir. 1983). That inspection usually includes an examination of the entrant's visa and a search of luggage and personal effects. United States v. Himmelwright, 551 F.2d 991, 993 (5th Cir. 1977); see Carroll v. United States, 267 U.S. 132, 154 (1925). In addition, visual inspection of an individual is permissible. United States v. Rice, 635 F.2d 409 (5th Cir. 1981). The customs officer can, as a matter of routine examination, require the removal of an outer coat, hat or shoes, the emptying of pockets, or the presentation of a purse or wallet for inspection. See

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

United States v. Grotke, 702 F.2d 49, 51 (2d Cir. 1983); United States v. Carter, 592 F.2d 402 (7th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 441 U.S. 908 (1979); United States v. Fitzgibbon, 576 F.2d 279 (10th Cir. 1978); United States v. Chase, 503 F.2d 571 (9th Cir. 1974); Henderson v. United States, 390 F.2d 805 (9th Cir. 1967). Finally, a frisk is lawful as part of a routine inspection. See United States v. Sandler, 644 F.2d 1163, 1169 (5th Cir. 1981) (en banc); United States v. Wilmot, 563 F.2d 1298 (9th Cir. 1977).

9-4.174 More Extensive Intrusions

When the search at the border moves beyond the routine inspection, some level of suspicion must exist in order for the search to be reasonable under the Fourth Amendment. The degree of suspicion required of the officer performing the search is proportional to the degree of intrusion. See United States v. Afanador, 567 F.2d 1325, 1328 (5th Cir. 1978). Because the courts are not always in agreement in deciding what level of suspicion must be proved in a particular setting, it is advisable to pay particular attention to the law of the circuit where the search in question occurred. Indeed, there is a split between the Ninth and Eleventh Circuits as to the standard to be applied in determining whether strip searches and/or x-rays of body cavities is permissible. Compare United States v. Couch, 688 F.2d 599, 604-05 (9th Cir. 1982) (applying a "clear indication" of contraband standard to body cavity searches); United States v. Quintero-Castro, 705 F.2d 1099 (9th Cir. 1983) (same standard applied to x-rays) with United States v. Vega-Barvo, 729 F.2d 1341 (11th Cir. 1984) (applying reasonable suspicion standard to such searches).

A strip search involves the removal of sufficient garments to affect the dignity and privacy of the subject. In defining the degree of suspicion that justifies a strip search the Ninth Circuit has adopted a standard of real suspicion. In United States v. Guadalupe-Garza, 421 F.2d 876, 879 (9th Cir. 1970), that court defined real suspicion as "subjective suspicion supported by objective, articulable facts that would reasonably lead an experienced, prudent customs official to suspect that a particular person seeking to cross our border is concealing something on his body for the purpose of transporting it into the United States contrary to law."

Although other courts agree that a strip search cannot be performed simply as part of routine customs inspection activity, they do not uniformly accept that Ninth Circuit test of real suspicion. An alternative is the standard of reasonable suspicion. See United States v. Asbury, 586 F.2d 973 (2d Cir. 1978); United States v. Smith, 557 F.2d 1206 (5th Cir. 1977), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 1073 (1978). But however stated, the suspicion must be particularized, in that a strip search can be justified only if there is adequate suspicion, based upon articulable facts, that contraband is being concealed within the suspect's interior garments. See Hunter v. Auger, 672 F.2d 668 (8th Cir. 1982).

The issue of whether reasonable suspicion for a strip search exists is determined on a case-by-case basis. See United States v. De Gutierrez, 667 F.2d 16, 19 (5th Cir. 1982). Some factors relevant to a finding of reasonable suspicion include excessive nervousness, United States v. Holtz, 479 F.2d 89 (9th Cir. 1973); but see United States v. Price, 472 F.2d 573 (9th Cir. 1973) (nervousness alone does not justify a strip search); needle marks or other indications of drug addiction, United States v. Shields, 453 F.2d 1235 (9th Cir. 1972); or loose fitting or bulging clothes, United States v. Wardlaw, 576 F.2d 932 (1st Cir. 1978). United States v. Asbury, supra, at 976-977, contains a list of twelve possible factors. See also USAM 9-4.123, supra, dealing with searches of the person generally.

9-4.175 International Mail

The border search rationale which justified suspicionless searches at the border also applies to mail coming across the border. See United States v. Ramsey, 431 U.S. 606 (1977). Two statutes authorize mail searches. The first, 19 U.S.C. §482, provides that a customs officer may search any "envelope, wherever found, in which he may have a reasonable cause to suspect that there is merchandise which was imported contrary to law. . ." The second, 19 U.S.C. §1582, permits the Secretary of the Treasury to prescribe regulations for the search of "persons and baggage. . . ." Pursuant to this statute the Secretary has promulgated regulations permitting the opening of sealed mail arriving from abroad if there is reasonable cause to suspect that it contains "merchandise or contraband." However, no customs officer may open letters containing only correspondence or read any correspondence contained in a mailing unless he/she first obtains a warrant or receives the consent of the sender or addressee. See 19 U.S.C. §145.3. Another regulation, 19 C.F.R. §162.6, provides that all baggage and merchandise arriving from abroad are liable to search by a customs officer. That regulation makes no reference to a standard of reasonable cause.

These statutes and regulations have received generous constructions by the courts. Searches of incoming mail matter have been upheld in the absence of any suspicion. Even routine suspicionless spot-checking of packages arriving from abroad has been approved. See United States v. Emery, 541 F.2d 887 (1st Cir. 1976); United States v. Odland, 502 F.2d 148

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

(7th Cir. 1974), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 1088 (1974); see also United States v. Pringle, 576 F.2d 1114, 1116-1117 (5th Cir. 1978).

It is not necessary for the customs search of international mail to take place at the port of entry of the first possible inspection point. As long as the mail remains in the same sealed condition and is moving within customary mail channels, a search by customs officers at a subsequent stop prior to delivery is permissible under the border search principles. See United States v. Lowe, 575 F.2d 1193 (6th Cir. 1978) (search at Detroit Post Office of package arriving from Thailand and routed to Detroit from Los Angeles); United States v. King 517 F.2d 350 (5th Cir. 1975) (search at Birmingham of envelopes entering the United States at San Francisco and routed to Birmingham).

When contraband is discovered in the course of a customs search of mail, the government may reseal the package or letter and conduct a controlled delivery. Following the delivery, the recipient may be detained or arrested and the package retrieved. As long as there is no substantial likelihood that the contents of the package have been changed since it left the hands of the law enforcement officers, the reopening of the package after retrieval from the recipient does not constitute a search; accordingly, no warrant is required for the reopening, even if delayed until the officers have returned from the place of delivery to the police station. See Illinois v. Andreas, 463 U.S. 765 (1983); United States v. Richards, 638 F.2d 765 (5th Cir. 1981).

9-4.180 Suppression of Evidence and Return of Property

A person who claims to have been aggrieved by an allegedly unlawful search may move for the return of the seized property. See Rule 41(e) and 41(f), Fed. R. Crim. P. The defendant is generally under the burden of establishing both that the search was illegal and that he/she has "standing" to challenge it (see generally 3 LaFare, §11.2(b) and (c)); however, the burden may sometimes shift to the government to demonstrate by a preponderance of the evidence that a warrantless search was proper or that certain evidence was not the "fruit" of an unlawful search. See, e.g., Bumper v. North Carolina, 391 U.S. 543 (1968) (prosecution bears burden of proving that a consent to a warrantless search was voluntary); Alderman v. United States, 394 U.S. 165 (1969) (although the defendant "must go forward with specific evidence demonstrating taint," the prosecution "has the ultimate burden of persuasion to show that its evidence is untainted"); Nardone v. United States, 308 U.S. 338 (1939) (prosecution has the burden of demonstrating an independent basis for the admission of presumably tainted evidence). In federal practice, motions for the suppression of evidence "must be made prior to trial," and the accused's failure to do so "shall constitute waiver" of his/her evidentiary claim unless the trial court grants relief from the waiver "for cause shown." Rule 12(f), Fed. R. Crim. P. See also 3 LaFave, §11.1(a).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

The government may appeal before trial an order of the district court granting a motion to suppress evidence. See 18 U.S.C. §3731. By contrast, criminal defendants may not appeal before trial the denial of motions to suppress evidence. See DiBella v. United States, 369 U.S. 121, 131-133 (1962) (order granting or denying a pre-indictment motion to suppress evidence); Cogen v. United States, 278 U.S. 221 (1929) (order denying a defendant's post-indictment motion to suppress evidence); accord United States v. Acosta, 669 F.2d 292, 293 (5th Cir. 1982); Simons v. United States, 592 F.2d 251 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 835 (1979); Application of United States, 427 F.2d 1140, 1141-1142 (5th Cir. 1970). Nor may a defendant claim pendent jurisdiction under 18 U.S.C. §3731 and take an interlocutory cross-appeal from aspects of pre-trial rulings that were unfavorable to criminal defendants. See United States v. Johnson, 690 F.2d 60, 62-63 (3d Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1214 (1983); United States v. Cahalane, 560 F.2d 601, 608 (3d Cir. 1977), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 1045 (1978). Although persons aggrieved by an allegedly unlawful search may sometimes appeal prior to indictment an adverse ruling on motions for return of property, they may do so "[o]nly if the motion is solely for return of property and is in no way tied to a criminal prosecution in esse * * *." DiBella v. United States, supra, at 131-132. Most courts of appeals have taken a broad view of when a prosecution is in esse for DiBella purposes, holding that a pending grand jury investigation is enough to foreclose an immediate appeal. See, e.g., United States v. Furina, 707 F.2d 82, 84 (3d Cir. 1983); Standard Drywall, Inc. v. United States, 668 F.2d 156 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 456 U.S. 927 (1982); Imperial Distributors, Inc. v. United States, 617 F.2d 892, 896 (1st Cir.), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 891 (1980); In re Grand Jury Proceedings (FMC Corporation), 604 F.2d 806, 807 (3d Cir. 1979); Simons v. United States, 592 F.2d 251 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 835 (1979); Church of Scientology of California v. United States, 591 F.2d 533 (9th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 1043 (1980). See also Consumer Credit Insurance v. United States, 599 F.2d 770, 772-773 n.2 (6th Cir. 1979) (questioning whether the denial or pre-indictment motion under Rule 41(c) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure can ever be regarded as immediately appealable). But see, In re Grand Jury Proceeding (Young), 716 F.2d 493, 495-496 (8th Cir. 1983) (order denying motion for return of property immediately appealable despite pendency of a grand jury proceeding).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

9-4.181 Standing

The Supreme Court's view of standing to raise Fourth Amendment rights can be found in four key cases: Rawlings v. Kentucky, 448 U.S. 98 (1980); United States v. Salvucci, 448 U.S. 83 (1980); Rakas v. Illinois, 439 U.S. 128 (1978); and Alderman v. United States, 394 U.S. 165 (1969). Bearing in mind that since Rakas the question of standing often is inseparable from the constitutionality of the search itself, these decisions demonstrate that only those individuals who have allegedly suffered personal violations of their constitutional rights may challenge the introduction of evidence obtained as a result of the violation. See Alderman v. United States, 394 U.S. at 171, 174; Rakas v. Illinois, supra, at 128. In addition, the aggrieved person who is both a defendant in the criminal proceeding and one whose personal rights have been infringed may seek exclusion of the evidence at the criminal trial. See Rakas v. Illinois, supra, at 133-134. Thus, for example, a non-defendant witness may not avoid testifying on the ground that his/her testimony is the fruit of a Fourth Amendment violation. See United States v. Kember, 648 F.2d 1354, 1365-1368 (D.C. Cir. 1980); cf. United States v. Calandra, 414 U.S. 338, 348 (1974).

In line with the focus on protected "privacy" interests, the Supreme court and the circuit courts have de-emphasized property interests as an element of standing to raise Fourth Amendment challenges. The Supreme Court has stated that the Fourth Amendment is not bottomed on "arcane concepts of property law." See Rawlings v. Kentucky, supra, at 105. Instead, a defendant must himself/herself have a "legitimate expectation of privacy in the invaded place." See Rakas v. Illinois, supra, at 143. See also United States v. Bellina, 665 F.2d 1335, 1339-1340 (4th Cir. 1981). "[T]he threshold question in every suppression case is 'the existence of a reasonable expectation of privacy in the area searched.'" Id. at 1339, quoting United States v. Ramapuram, 632 F.2d 1149, 1154 (4th Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 450 U.S. 1030 (1981). Justice Marshall, dissenting in Rawlings, made clear that the Supreme Court had rejected a recognition of privacy rights bottomed solely on a defendant's interest in the item seized and not in the place searched. See Rawlings v. Kentucky, supra, at 115-118; see also United States v. Salvucci, supra, at 91-93.

Moreover, the expectation of privacy must be more than "reasonable;" it must also be a legitimate interest "that society is prepared to recognize as reasonable." See United States v. Jacobsen, ___ U.S. ___, 104 S. Ct. 1652, 1661 (1984); Oliver v. United States, ___ U.S. ___, 104 S. Ct. 1735, 1741 (1984); Rakas v. Illinois, supra, at 143-144, n. 12. In that regard, some courts have held that a defendant may not claim a reasonable expectation of privacy in the possession of contraband. See United States v. Parks, 684 F.2d 1078, 1083 N. 7 (5th Cir. 1982); United States v. Bailey, 628 F.2d 938, 942 (6th Cir. 1980); United States v. Washington, 586 F.2d 1147, 1154 (7th Cir. 1978); United States v. Emery, 541 F.2d 887, 889-890 (1st Cir. 1976). Cf. United States v. Jacobsen, supra, at 1662 and n. 23.

Several factors may be considered in evaluating whether the defendant has a sufficiently reasonable and legitimate expectation of privacy in the area searched to entitle him/her to raise the Fourth Amendment challenge. His/her possessory interest in the object is one factor. Other factors include whether he/she has taken any measures to ensure privacy; whether he/she has sole control over the area searched or item seized; whether the item is in plain view; whether the area searched is within the curtilage of a private dwelling (see Oliver v. United States, supra, at 1741); whether records seized were required by the government to be kept (see United States v. Katz, 705 F.2d 1237, 1242 (10th Cir. 1983)); whether he/she abandoned the items (see United States v. Gilman, 684 F.2d 616, 619-620 (9th Cir. 1982)); and whether the container from which the items are taken is sufficient to demonstrate a privacy interest in the enclosed items. See Arkansas v. Sanders, 442 U.S. 753, 764 n. 13 (1979); United States v. Ross, 456 U.S. 798 (1982). A privacy interest in the premises searched may be sufficient to establish standing, Alderman v. United States, supra, at 176-177, but if a defendant has no personal privacy interest in the premises searched he/she cannot complain that the search was unconstitutional. See United States v. Robinson, 698 F.2d 448, 454 (D.C. Cir. 1983); United States v. Briones-Garza, 680 F.2d 417 (5th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 916 (1982). Finally, if a privacy interest has been "compromised" and sufficiently diminished by private action, it may no longer be sufficient to meet the requirement that the expectation of privacy be reasonable. Cf. United States v. Jacobsen, supra, at 1660.

Accordingly, "automatic standing"--that is, the right of a defendant to challenge a Fourth Amendment search simply because he/she is charged with a possessory offense based upon evidence derived from the search--is no longer recognized by the Supreme Court. See United States v. Salvucci, 448 U.S. 83 (1980), specifically overruling, Jones v. United States, 362 U.S. 257 (1960); see also Rawlings v. Kentucky, supra, at 98.

Lastly, as a matter of practice, a defendant seeking suppression of evidence bears the burden of showing a violation of his/her personal constitutional rights. See Rakas v. Illinois, supra, at 130 n. 1; United States v. Savage, 701 F.2d 867, 870 (11th Cir. 1983); United States v. Nadler, 698 F.2d 995, 998 (9th Cir. 1983); United States v. Dickerson, 655 F.2d 559, 561 (4th Cir. 1981). Conversely, the government should challenge standing in the district court if it wishes to preserve the issue. See Steagald v. United States, 451 U.S. 204, 211 (1981).

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-4.182 Fruit of the Poisonous Tree

A. Attenuation (Live Witnesses)

Evidence obtained as a result of an illegal act committed by law enforcement officials must be sufficiently attenuated from the illegality in order to be admissible. See Wong Sun v. United States, 371 U.S. 471, 188 (1963); Dunaway v. New York, 442 U.S. 200, 217-218 (1979); Rawlings v. Kentucky, 448 U.S. 98, 106 (1980); Taylor v. Alabama, 457 U.S. 687, 694 (1982). Factors to be considered in the analysis of attenuation include the issuance of Miranda warnings, the amount of time between the illegal act and the procurement of evidence, whether there are intervening circumstances and the nature of the official misconduct. See Brown v. Illinois, 422 U.S. 590, 603-604 (1975). Where the illegal conduct results in the testimony of a live witness, "a closer, more direct link between the illegality and that kind of testimony is required" in order for the exclusionary rule to be invoked. See United States v. Ceccolini, 435 U.S. 268, 278 (1978).

B. Independent Source

Illegally obtained evidence may be admissible if a source of information independent of the tainted act leads to its discovery. See Segura v. United States, _____ U.S. _____, 104 S. Ct. 3380 (1984); United States v. Crews, 445 U.S. 463 (1980); Wong Sun, supra, at 392; United States v. Wade, 388 U.S. 218, 242 (1967); Costello v. United States, 365 U.S. 265, 280 (1961). The evidence is not excluded when the independent source sufficiently attenuates the evidence from the constitutional violation. Id. Nix v. Williams, _____ U.S. _____, 104 S. Ct. 2501, 2509 (1984).

C. Inevitable Discovery

When the government proves that evidence obtained as a result of an illegal act would have been inevitably discovered by legal measures, then it is admissible. See Nix v. Williams, supra, at 2509. The government must establish this form of attenuation by a preponderance of the evidence. Id.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-4.183 The Exclusionary Rule

The Supreme Court first required the exclusion in federal criminal trials of evidence obtained in violation of the Fourth Amendment in Weeks v. United States, 232 U.S. 383 (1914), and later made this exclusionary rule applicable to the states in Mapp v. Ohio, 367 U.S. 643 (1961). Nothing in the Fourth Amendment or any other provision of the Constitution either directly or implicitly provides for the exclusion of illegally seized evidence from criminal trials. See United States v. Leon, _____ U.S. _____, 104 S. Ct. 3405 (1984). Rather, the rule is merely a judge-made rule of evidence--constitutionally based but not specifically constitutionally required--the contours of which must be adapted to fit the circumstances. See, e.g., United States v. Calandra, 414 U.S. 338, 348 (1974); Desist v. United States, 394 U.S. 244, 254 n. 24 (1969).

The question "[w]hether the exclusionary sanction is appropriately imposed in a particular case * * * is 'an issue separate from the question whether the Fourth Amendment rights of the party seeking to invoke the rule were violated by police conduct.'" See United States v. Leon, supra. The Supreme Court has made clear that the purpose of the exclusionary rule is to deter Fourth Amendment violations by law enforcement officers by removing the incentive to commit those violations. See, e.g., Stone v. Powell, 428 U.S. 465, 486 (1976); United States v. Janis, 428 U.S. 433, 446 (1976); Elkins v. United States, 364 U.S. 206, 217 (1960). Because of the inherent trustworthiness of seized tangible evidence and the resulting societal costs from its loss through suppression, application of the exclusionary rule has been carefully "restricted to those areas where its remedial objectives are thought most efficaciously served." See Calandra, supra at 348. Thus, the exclusionary rule "has never been interpreted to proscribe the introduction of illegally seized evidence in all proceedings or against all persons." See Stone v. Powell, supra, at 486. Although the Supreme Court has "not seriously questioned," in the absence of a more efficacious sanction, the continued application of the rule to suppress evidence from the [prosecution's] case where a Fourth Amendment violation has been substantial and deliberate . . .", see United States v. Leon, supra, the Court has recognized a number of limitations on the reach of the rule (id. at 5158-5159 (collecting cases)), including a recently articulated "good faith" exception to the rule. These limitations are discussed below. The subject of the exclusionary rule is treated in LaFave, §11.1 et seq.

A. The Reasonable Good Faith Exception

As the Supreme Court has now held in United States v. Leon, supra, and Massachusetts v. Sheppard, supra, the Fourth Amendment exclusionary rule is inapplicable where law enforcement officers have acted in reasonable reliance on a judicially-issued warrant. While the exclusionary rule may be efficacious in deterring substantial and deliberate police misconduct (Leon, supra, at 5158), "it cannot be expected, and should not be applied, to deter objectively reasonable law enforcement activity" (id. at 5160). This observation is particularly true:

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

When an officer acting with objective good faith has obtained a search warrant from a judge or magistrate and acted within its scope. In most such cases, there is no police illegality and thus nothing to deter. It is the magistrate's responsibility to determine whether the officer's allegations establish probable cause and, if so, to issue a warrant comporting in form with the requirements of the Fourth Amendment. In the ordinary case, an officer cannot be expected to question the magistrate's probable-cause determination or his judgment that the form of the warrant is technically sufficient. "[O]nce the warrant issues, there is literally nothing more the policeman can do in seeking to comply with the law." * * * Penalizing the officer for the magistrate's error, rather than his own, cannot logically contribute to the deterrence of Fourth Amendment violations.

Id. at 5161 (footnotes and citation omitted).

Accordingly, the Court refused to require the suppression in Leon of evidence seized pursuant to a search warrant that was found to be unsupported by probable cause, and in Sheppard of evidence seized pursuant to a search warrant that, although supported by probable cause, failed to particularize properly the items to be seized.

Although significant in their impact, Leon and Sheppard do not in any way lessen Fourth Amendment standards or the need of law enforcement officers to comply with them. First, the decisions affect only the circumstances in which the suppression remedy is applicable; it does not alter substantive Fourth Amendment requirements. As the Court stated: "[W]e leave untouched the probable-cause standard and the various requirements for a valid warrant;" Leon, supra. Moreover, while lower courts have applied a good faith exception in the context of warrantless searches and seizures (see United States v. Williams, 622 F.2d 830, 840-848 (5th Cir. 1980) (en banc), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 1129 (1981) (suppression not required where officer made a warrantless arrest and incidental search on the reasonable, good-faith belief that his/her conduct was proper)); see also United States v. Ajlouny, 629 F.2d 830,

840-841 (2d Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 1111 (1981) (even if warrantless national security wiretap was unlawful, suppression not required where agents acted in good faith and could not be charged with knowledge that their conduct was improper); United States v. Nolan, 530 F. Supp. 386, 396-399 (W.D. Pa. 1981) (suppression not required for what was, at most, a technical, good faith violation of the knock-and-announce rule); United States v. Wilson, 528 F. Supp. 1129, 1132 (S.C. Fla. 1982) (even if arrest effectuated outside of officers' territorial jurisdiction was not a lawful citizen's arrest, good faith exception bars suppression of marijuana), neither Leon nor Sheppard will directly control the numerous situations in which officers made warrantless searches and seizures.

Finally, even when warrants are obtained, the Leon court identified four situations in which the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule will be unavailable: (1) where the warrant is based upon deliberate or reckless material misrepresentations by the affiant; (2) where the issuing magistrate has wholly abandoned his/her neutral and detached judicial role; (3) where the warrant is "based on an affidavit 'so lacking in indicia of probable cause as to render official belief in its existence entirely unreasonable;'" and (4) where the warrant's particularization of the place to be searched or the items to be seized is "so facially deficient * * * that the executing officers cannot reasonably presume it to be valid."

The practical contours of litigating cases under the reasonable good faith exception have not yet been fully developed. Nonetheless, the good faith exception should routinely be asserted as an alternative argument, in every case--whether in the context of warranted or warrantless police conduct--if a credible and respectable argument can be made that the search, seizure or arrest at issue was proper under the Fourth Amendment. The Leon decision itself will, of course, directly control situations where allegedly defective warrants are at issue; however, there is dicta in Leon and an extended analysis in the government's merits brief in Leon pertaining to situations where warrantless police conduct is at issue. The extent to which prosecutors will need to present detailed arguments regarding the good faith exception will vary from case to case and court to court; however, it is essential that the issue be preserved at all levels in every appropriate case.

Moreover, in recognizing the good faith exception, the Supreme Court emphasized that the standard adopted was one of objective, rather than subjective, reasonableness. Leon, supra, n.20. Because of this, the Court stated that the exception "should not be difficult to apply in practice" and "should ordinarily be * * * establish[ed] * * * without a substantial expenditure of judicial time" (id., at 5162). It is therefore envisioned that post-Leon suppression hearings at which the good faith exception is asserted will be no more onerous or burdensome to the government than are pre-Leon suppression hearings. And, as the Court indicated in Leon, the fact that a magistrate's probable cause determination has been affirmed by the district court is, for purposes of appeal, a strong indication that the officer's reliance on the warrant was reasonable. See also Stone v. Powell, supra, at 539-540 (White, J., dissenting).

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

B. Other Permissible Uses for Illegally Seized Evidence

The exclusionary rule "has never been interpreted to proscribe the introduction of illegally seized evidence in all proceedings * * * ." See Stone v. Powell, supra, at 486. Nor does the rule bar the use of illegally seized evidence for all purposes at a criminal trial. Because of the inherent trustworthiness of seized tangible evidence and the resulting societal costs from its loss through suppression, the application of the exclusionary rule has been carefully "restricted to those areas where its remedial objectives are thought most efficaciously served." See United States v. Calandra, 141 U.S. 338, 348 (1974). Thus, even with respect to defendants whose legitimate expectation of privacy have been violated by unlawful police conduct, the exclusionary rule bars the admission of illegally seized evidence only in criminal proceedings and during the prosecution's case-in-chief.

As the Supreme Court held in INS v. Lopez-Mendoza, ____ U.S. ____, 104 S. Ct. 3479 (1984), the exclusionary rule does not bar the admission of illegally seized evidence in civil deportation proceedings. See also United States v. Janis, 428 U.S. 433, 454 (1976) (holding that the "exclusion from federal civil proceedings of evidence unlawfully seized by a state criminal enforcement officer has not been shown to have a sufficient likelihood of deterring the conduct of the state police so that it outweighs the societal costs imposed by the exclusion"). Similarly, in United States v. Calandra, supra, the Supreme Court refused to prohibit the use of illegally seized evidence in grand jury proceedings. The lower federal courts have placed similar limitations on the kinds of proceedings in which the exclusionary rule may be invoked. See, e.g., Donovan v. Federal Clearing Die Casting Co., 695 F.2d 1020 (7th Cir. 1982) (exclusionary rule inapplicable to evidence seized by Occupational Safety and Health Administration pursuant to subsequently-invalidated search warrant); Tirado v. Commissioner, 689 F.2d 307 (2d Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 460 U.S. 1014 (1982) (evidence unlawfully seized by federal narcotics agents admissible in a federal civil tax proceeding; unlikely that narcotics agents would be deterred by prospect that illegally seized evidence might be unavailable in a future tax proceeding); United States v. Lee, 540 F.2d 1205, 1211 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 894 (1976) (exclusionary rule inapplicable to sentencing proceedings); United States v. Schipani, 435 F.2d 26, 28 (2d Cir. 1970), cert. denied, 401 U.S. 983 (1971) (same); United States v. Bazzano, 712 F.2d 826 (3d Cir. 1983) (en banc), cert. denied, _____ U.S. _____, 104 S. Ct. 1439 (1984) (exclusionary rule inapplicable at probation revocation hearings); Accord United States v. Winsett, 518 F.2d 51, 53-55 (9th Cir. 1975); United States v. Hill, 447 F.2d 817, 818-819 (7th Cir. 1971); United States ex rel. Sperling v. Fitzpatrick, 426 F.2d 1161, 1163-1164 (2d Cir. 1970).

The Supreme Court has also restricted the exclusionary rule to bar only evidence introduced in the prosecution's case-in-chief. Thus, the Court has found permissible the use of unlawfully seized evidence for impeachment purposes. See United States v. Havens, 446 U.S. 620 (1980); Walder v. United States, 347 U.S. 61 (1954); see also Oregon v. Hass, 420 U.S. 714 (1975); Harris v. New York, 401 U.S. 222 (1971). As the Court noted in Havens, any increase in deterrence occasioned "by forbidding impeachment of the defendant who testifies [is] deemed insufficient to permit or require that false testimony go unchallenged, with the resulting impairment of the integrity of the factfinding goals of the criminal trial." Havens, supra, at 627.

9-4.184 Retroactivity

The Supreme Court has recognized that new and expanded Fourth Amendment standards that represent a "clear break with the past" need not be given retroactive effect to benefit criminal defendants. See United States v. Peltier, 422 U.S. 531, 538-539 (1975) (decision prohibiting automobile stop by roving patrols not given retroactive effect); Williams v. United States, 401 U.S. 646, 654-655 (1971) (decision placing limitations of searches incident to arrest not given retroactive effect); Desist v. United States, 394 U.S. 244, 249-250 (1969) (decision prohibiting warrantless, non-trespassory electronic surveillance not given retroactive effect); Linkletter v. Walker, 381 U.S. 618, 636-639 (1965) (decision applying the exclusionary rule to the states not given retroactive effect). See also 3 LaFare, §11.5(c), nn. 57-58 (collecting cases). Because law enforcement officers justifiably relied on the old standards, the deterrent purposes of the exclusionary rule will not be advanced by the suppression of relevant and unimpeachable evidence of the defendant's guilt. In United States v. Johnson, 457 U.S. 537 (1982), the Court held that a construction of the Fourth Amendment that did not constitute a "clear break with the past" is to be applied to all convictions not yet final when the decision was handed down. See United

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

States v. Leon, ____ U.S. ____, 104 S. Ct. 3405 (1984). See generally LaFave, Search and Seizure, §11.5(a)-(c). By contrast, decisions that narrow the Fourth Amendment rights of defendants are usually given retroactive effect. Id. at §11.5(d). See United States v. Burns, 684 F.2d 1066 (2d Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1174 (1983) (decisions broadening police powers to conduct warrantless searches of automobiles and containers found therein are retroactive).

9-4.190 Custody and Disposition of Evidence and Seized Property

Normally, U.S. Attorneys' offices should not have custody of seized property. Properly defined, seized property is that for which the government does not have title to, but which the government has obtained custody or control of in accordance with statutory or other authority. See 41 C.F.R. §128-50.001-1. Under most circumstances, seized property should remain in the custody of the investigating agency. When such property is required in court, the agent handling the case, or other representatives of the investigating agency, should bring the property to the court and retain custody until the material is introduced as evidence; at which point, it becomes the responsibility of either the clerk of the court or the U.S. Marshal. Timely arrangements should be made with the clerk of the court or the U.S. Marshal for the storage of all such evidence.

U.S. Attorneys and Assistants should accept custody of seized property only for such short periods of time as are necessary to present the property to the court or grand jury. Except in extreme emergency situations, no seized property should be retained in the Office of the U.S. Attorney overnight. Generally, the only occasion when such property might be stored in the U.S. Attorney's office is when documentary material, secured under grand jury subpoena, is delivered into the custody of the U.S. Attorney. As long as such material is needed, it should be kept under appropriate security arrangements.

U.S. Attorneys and Assistants should always promptly notify the custodial agency when seized property will not be used as evidence, or upon case closings, in order to expedite disposition and alleviate extensive storage costs of such property by the custodial agency.

The disposition of lawfully seized property will be completed by one of four methods: the return of the property to the lawful owner; the disposition of unclaimed property; the forfeiture of the property; or the destruction or disposition of seized contraband or other types of property.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

9-4.191 Return of Seized Property to the Lawful Owner

Where it is evident that no further use will be made of property that was lawfully seized, the property should be promptly returned to the lawful owner. See United States v. Farrell, 606 F.2d 1341 (D.C. Cir. 1979); United States v. Smith, 497 F. Supp. 495 (N.D. Iowa 1980). Return of such property should occur:

- A. When it is determined that the property will not be introduced as evidence; or
- B. Subsequent to a trial with an acquittal; or
- C. Subsequent to a trial with a guilty verdict (or upon the entering of a guilty plea) and the appeal period has lapsed with no appeal filed; or
- D. Subsequent to the exhaustion of all appeal remedies where it is apparent that a re-trial will not be ordered.

Return of the property may be made without need for a court order, regardless of the method of seizure, i.e., by warrant or incident to an arrest. In such circumstances, the owner should be required to execute a Release and Hold Harmless Agreement not only to protect the United States and the seizing agent from any subsequent damage action arising from the seizure but also to protect the United States from the expense of any subsequent suit asserting that the property was released to an improper person. An example of such a form is provided in USAM 9-4.196, infra. See also Civil Division Practice Manual, 3-26.1, et seq.

9-4.192 Vesting of Unclaimed Property

If the owner of the property is not determinable, then the agency having custody of the unclaimed property should initiate administrative vesting proceedings against the property pursuant to 40 U.S.C. §§304(g), 484(m), and 41 C.F.R. §100-48 (GSA), or where the agency has regulations, pursuant to the regulations of that agency, e.g., 41 C.F.R. 28-50 (DOJ).

Normally, assistance from a U.S. Attorney is not required by an agency when it is following the administrative vesting procedures. Where, however, assistance is required (e.g., where there are multiple claims of ownership against the property), assistance should be provided as needed.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

This may take the form of an interpleader action. See USAM 4-10.500 (Interpleader).

9-4.193 Forfeiture of Seized Property

Forfeiture of property may be accomplished either through administrative or judicial forfeiture proceedings. The latter is necessary, for example, when the value of the property exceeds the maximum allowed by the applicable statute for administrative forfeiture or where administrative forfeiture is contested through the filing of a claim and cost bond. See, e.g., 19 U.S.C. §§1607, 1610. In such instances, procedures for judicial forfeiture or condemnation should be followed. See also USAM 4-10.300 (non-criminal statutes). For assistance with respect to forfeitures arising in connection with the violation of criminal statutes, contact the Asset Forfeiture Office of the Criminal Division.

For a list of the most commonly used forfeiture statutes and agency regulations, see USAM 9-4.198, infra.

9-4.194 Destruction of Seized Property

Destruction of seized property should be performed only pursuant to a court order, subsequent to the forfeiture of the property, or where the property seized is contraband. The agency responsible for the custody of the property is responsible for seeing that the destruction is carried out pursuant to regulations (see, e.g., 41 C.F.R. §101-45.309-4), and actual involvement by a U.S. Attorney should not be required. Where, however, U.S. Attorney involvement is required, such assistance should be provided as needed. See USAM 9-4.196, infra.

9-4.195 Disposition of Contraband

A. Per se contraband consists of objects, the possession of which, without more, constitutes a crime. One 1958 Plymouth Sedan v. Pennsylvania, 380 U.S. 993, (1965). It is well settled in decisional law that a claimant has no right to have per se contraband returned. United States v. Jeffers, 342 U.S. 48 (1951); United States v. Farrell, 606 F.2d 1341 (D.C. Cir. 1979) (see, e.g., 21 U.S.C. §§812, 881(f) (heroin); 26 U.S.C. §§5685 and 7302 (moonshine whiskey); 26 U.S.C. §5861(d) (sawed-off shotguns). A determination of property as contraband per se must be founded upon a specific statute. Carpenter v. Andrus, 485 F. Supp. 320 (D. Del. 1980).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

B. Derivative contraband consists of property which is not inherently illegal, but is used in an unlawful manner. Farrell, supra, at 1344. Forfeiture of derivative contraband pursuant to statute (e.g., 18 U.S.C. §924(d); 18 U.S.C. §3611; 21 U.S.C. §881) may be accomplished by judicial order of a court of competent jurisdiction (e.g., Fed. R. Crim. P. 32(b)(2)).

Where forfeiture of seized contraband requires an order of the court authorizing such action, the U.S. Attorney should proceed accordingly to effectuate the forfeiture. See also USAM 9-4.196, infra (Disposition of Hazardous Chemicals and Bulk Contraband Property).

9-4.196 Disposition of Hazardous Chemicals and Bulk Contraband Property

The seizure of hazardous chemicals and contraband bulk evidence pose serious storage and security problems for investigating agencies. As a general rule, all evidence seized must be preserved intact until the completion of trial. This rule, however, creates safety problems where volatile chemicals are concerned, or where an agency lacks the facilities to store large amounts of seized property. By following the steps outlined below, pre-trial disposition of such evidence may be accomplished without any adverse effect on the government's prosecution.

A. The failure of the government to take adequate steps to preserve evidence may deny a defendant due process, and thereby jeopardize otherwise viable convictions. Government of Virgin Islands v. Testamark, 570 F.2d 1162, 1165-66 (3d Cir. 1978). It is clear that the government may, however, under certain conditions destroy or otherwise dispose of evidence in its possession that would otherwise be introduced at trial without violating the defendant's right to due process. Courts have generally authorized destruction of evidence if three elements are established.

1. First, it must be shown that the evidence was disposed of in good faith. The courts will review the procedures established by an agency to preserve evidence to determine the existence of good faith. See United States v. Augenblick, 393 U.S. 348 (1968) and United States v. Harris, 543 F.2d 1247 (9th Cir. 1976). In reviewing the adequacy of the procedures followed, the existence of standard operating procedures followed by government officials, and the provision of notice to defendants, are two important elements that courts look for in determining the existence of good faith on behalf of the government. See United States v. Heiden, 508 F.2d 898, 902-03

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

(9th Cir. 1974) (where government draws samples from and takes photographs of large bulk of marijuana pursuant to agency procedure, destruction of most of the marijuana does not indicate bad faith of the government); and United States v. Bryant, 439 F.2d 642, 651-52 (D.C. Cir. 1971) (government must make "earnest effort" to preserve crucial evidence pursuant to regular procedures).

In addition to following normal agency procedures, adequate notice of the proposed disposition should be given to the defendant. The courts have suggested that such notice is necessary as an element of proof of good faith by the government, and to show a lack of prejudice to the defendant. See United States v. Young, 535 F.2d 484 (9th Cir. 1976); United States v. Heiden, 508 F.2d 898 (9th Cir. 1974) (Merrill concurring), United States v. Diaz-Segovia, N-78-0307 (D. Md. 1978) (unreported decision applying the Heiden concurrence).

2. The second element essential to support the disposition of evidence prior to trial is a showing of a lack of materiality of the evidence disposed. The Supreme Court in United States v. Augurs, 427 U.S. 97 (1976) provided the standard for determining if destroyed evidence is material. "If the omitted evidence creates a reasonable doubt that did not otherwise exist, constitutional error has been committed. This means an omission must be evaluated in the context of the entire record." Id. at 112.

The Fifth Circuit, in United States v. Gordon, 580 F.2d 827 (5th Cir. 1978) ruled that the complete destruction of the seized drug was not crucial, therefore not materially prejudicial, inasmuch as the defendants were charged with conspiracy to manufacture the drug. "In such a case, since no overt act is required, they could have so conspired although they had been entirely mistaken in the belief that the material they had would actually do the job." Id. at 837.

To overcome a possible, indeed, probable defense challenge regarding the improper and prejudicial destruction of material evidence, photographs of the entire lot of seized evidence should be made. In addition, samples of each kind of evidence should be taken prior to its destruction. In doing so, the government preserves the nature of the seized evidence regardless of whether it is considered material.

3. Finally, the third essential element is a showing of a lack of prejudicial effect towards the defendant. While the burden of establishing good faith is on the government, proof of materiality of the destroyed evidence and prejudice is upon the defendant. United

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

States v. Loud Hawk, 628 F.2d 1139 (9th Cir. 1980). Often, materiality and prejudice are analyzed together. See United States v. Arra, 630 F.2d 836 (1st Cir. 1980); United States v. Walkers, 629 F.2d 669 (10th Cir. 1980). Relevant factors to be considered in examining prejudice are: (1) the centrality of the evidence to the case; (2) its importance in establishing the elements, motive, or intent of the crime or the defendant; (3) the probative value and reliability of the substitute evidence; (4) the nature and probable weight of factual inferences or other demonstrations and kinds of proof allegedly lost to the accused; and (5) the probable effect on the jury from the absence of the evidence. See United States v. Tercero, 640 F.2d 190, 192 (9th Cir. 1980).

If adequate photographs are taken of the entire lot, and sufficient representative samples are also taken, then based on the above factors, the pre-trial disposition of the contraband bulk evidence should not have any substantial prejudicial effect on the defendant.

B. To insure that these three elements are adequately protected in cases where property is to be seized will pose storage or safety difficulties (thus requiring pre-trial disposition), the following steps should be taken:

1. Determine prior to the seizure if a likelihood exists of the seizure of hazardous or bulk evidence that pose serious safety or storage problems for the investigative agency.

2. Where such a likelihood does exist, include in the search warrant an application for a request for authorization for the post-seizure disposition of the property to be seized. Outline briefly the reasons for the requested disposition, the method of disposition contemplated, and the fact that adequate notice will be given to the defendant of the contemplated disposition.

3. An alternative to seeking authorization for destruction in the search warrant application is usage of the All Writs Act, 28 U.S.C. §1651. This alternative can be especially useful in an unexpected seizure of hazardous or bulky evidence. The actual procedure used, however, is discretionary and depends in large part on the specific courts' procedure.

4. Adequate notice of the proposed disposition should be given to the defendant, and include a specified time period in which notice of an intent to object to the disposition. Following the expiration of this time period, the agency that is to perform the disposition should be notified to proceed.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

5. Insure that prior to the disposition of the seized property, that photographs and samples be taken that are adequately representative of the entire lot.

These procedures do not apply to the destruction of controlled substances. Procedures for the destruction of controlled substances are set out at USAM 9-101.500 (Controlled Dangerous Substances Storage and Destruction Procedures).

9-4.197 Forms

Sample forms have been prepared for use in obtaining post-seizure disposition of property as provided for in USAM 9-4.195, supra, and for use in obtaining the release as provided in USAM 9-4.191, supra.

A. Rider to Search Warrant Application:

I am further advised by DEA chemists that lithium aluminum hydride is an extremely volatile chemical and is very dangerous. DEA chemists recommend destruction of this chemical, as well as any other volatile chemicals, at the scene of any seizure. It is therefore also requested that this warrant contain authorization for destruction of such chemicals believed to be highly volatile and dangerous.

B. Rider to Search Warrant:

You are also further authorized to destroy any lithium aluminum hydride found on the premises, provided that you preserve a sample thereof, take photographs of said chemical, and preserve all containers in which it is contained.

C. Supplemental Search Warrant Affidavit Paragraph Re Destruction of Chemicals:

Because of the foregoing facts, the affiant has probable cause to believe that the name premises contain chemicals which either have been used or will be used in the manufacture of a controlled substance. The affiant knows of his/her own experience and training and through consultation with a forensic chemist in the Drug Enforcement Administration Laboratory in _____, that some or all of these chemicals pose a significant safety hazard because of their exposure, flammable, poisonous, or otherwise toxic nature. Further, the affiant knows that the handling of clandestine laboratory chemicals without proper supervision and facilities has caused, in the past, explosions, fires, and other events which have resulted in injuries and health problems. Because of these facts, and because DEA District Office presently has no adequate, safe storage facilities, the affiant requests authorization by supplemental order to dispose of these chemicals in proper facilities in the event of their discovery.

Dear Mr./Ms. Doe:

On _____, 19__, a quantity of phenylacetone (P2P), totaling approximately _____ grams, was seized in connection with the above case. This is to advise that on or after _____, 19__, we will dispose of the seized P2P. Prior to that time, you may inspect the P2P. 9-4.200 MAIL COVERS

9-4.201 Defined

A "mail cover" is an investigative technique by which the postal authorities copy all information on the outside of a sealed envelope or postal card and furnish such information to the authority requesting the mail cover.

9-4.202 Regulations

The Postal Service has published revised regulations on the proper procedure for initiating, processing, placing, and using mail covers. See 39 C.F.R. §233.3. The regulations establish three categories of cases in which mail covers may be requested. In subversive activity cases all requests must be made to the Chief Postal Inspector or one of his/her designees. Requests in fugitive cases may be directed to the Chief Postal Inspector, his/her designees, the Postal Inspector In Charge of the postal district in which the mail cover is to operate, or one of his/her designees. In cases where the purpose of the mail cover is to obtain information regarding the commission or attempted commission of a crime, requests should be addressed to the same postal officials as in fugitive cases.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

All requests must be in writing except when time is of the essence. In no case will information obtained from a mail cover be released before a written request is received by the proper postal official. In addition, every written request must specify "reasonable grounds" demonstrating the necessity of the mail cover in the particular case.

9-4.203 Mail Cover--Prohibitions and Limitations

No mail cover report may include matter mailed between the mail cover subject and his/her known attorney. No mail cover may remain in force after the subject has been indicted, except when the purpose of the mail cover is to obtain information on further criminal violations or to assist in the location of a fugitive. In cases not involving national security or violation of postal law, mail covers may not last for more than 30 days unless renewed through the same procedures applicable to the original application. In no case, may a mail cover remain in effect for more than 120 days without the personal approval of the Chief Postal Inspector.

9-4.204 Mail Cover--Excludability of Evidence Obtained in Violation of Regulation

At least one court has refused to exclude evidence obtained through the use of a mail cover although it found that the procedures prescribed by the former mail cover regulations were violated. See United States v. Schwartz, 176 F. Supp. 613 (E.D. Pa. 1959) aff'd on other grounds, 283 F.2d 107 (3d Cir. 1960), cert. denied, 364 U.S. 942 (1961). In the Schwartz case, the court viewed the application of the exclusionary rule to evidence obtained in violation of the procedures prescribed by the regulations as an "accommodation of competing values" and held that the regulations were only a statement of departmental policy. The violation of this policy was not sufficiently important to warrant the exclusion of evidence. The reason behind the court's decision may have been that it did not believe that the former mail cover regulations were intended to create a substantive right for the benefit of the subjects of mail covers. See 14 Rutgers L. Rev. 450 (1960). For other cases holding that departure from internal governmental regulations gives a defendant no right to suppress, see Beverly v. United States, 468 F.2d 732, 746-747 (5th Cir. 1974); In re Tierney, 465 F.2d 806, 813 (5th Cir. 1972), cert. denied, 410 U.S. 914 (1973); United States v. Kline, 366 F. Supp. 994, 997 (D.D.C. 1973).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Defense counsel are likely to contend that the present mail cover regulations were written with the purpose of creating and protecting substantive rights of subjects of mail covers. See Accardi v. Shaughnessy, 347 U.S. 260 (1954); Service v. Dulles, 354 U.S. 363 (1957); Vitarelli v. Seaton, 359 U.S. 535 (1959); Yellin v. United States, 374 U.S. 109 (1963). To support this contention they will cite the language in which the new regulations are written and the background of the Congressional inquiry in response to which they were framed. The result of such a contention is to argue that a violation of procedures prescribed by the new regulations has the legal effect of applying the exclusionary rule to evidence obtained through the use of mail covers.

9-4.205 Insufficient Grounds for Mail Cover--Excludability of Evidence Obtained

Even if the procedures established by the regulations are followed, defense counsel may raise the objection that an erroneous decision was made as to the existence of the "reasonable grounds" required before a mail cover may be ordered. Unlike the question whether the procedures established by the regulations were followed, the manner in which the Postal Service interprets the "reasonable grounds" standard is a question of policy peculiarly within its own administrative competence. It is our opinion, therefore, that courts generally will be unwilling to reverse the Postal Service's determination unless there appears to be a clear abuse of administrative discretion.

9-4.206 Objections to Mail Cover Evidence--Notice to Division

When preparing a case for trial in which evidence obtained through the use of a mail cover is to be used, the possibility that defense counsel may attack the mail cover should be kept in mind. All attacks on mail cover evidence should be brought to the attention of the appropriate division of the Department of Justice. When the Criminal Division is the appropriate division, the Fraud Section should be contacted at FTS 724-7038.

9-4.207 Inquiries or Problems Concerning Mail Covers--Whom to Contact

Any inquiries or problems concerning mail covers should be directed to the Fraud Section, at FTS 724-7038.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-4.300 POLYGRAPHS

9-4.310 In General

A polygraph or lie detector examination is a procedure used to determine whether a subject shows the physiological and psychological reactions which are believed to accompany intentional attempts to deceive. Despite the appeal of a mechanical technique to measure a person's veracity, the polygraph has met with rare judicial acceptance and limited use as a federal investigative tool. In light of present scientific evidence the Department of Justice agrees with the conclusion of the Committee on Governmental Operations of the House of Representatives which held after extensive hearings:

There is no "lie detector." The polygraph machine is not a "lie detector," nor does the operator who interprets the graphs detect "lies." The machine records physical responses which may or may not be connected with an emotional reaction--and that reaction may or may not be related to guilt or innocence. Many, many physical and psychological factors make it possible for an individual to "beat" the polygraph without detection by the machine or its operator.

H.R. Rep. No. 198, 89th Cong., 1st Sess. 13 (1965). Following further hearings and study the same conclusions were reached in 1976. The Use of Polygraphs and Similar Devices by Federal Agencies: Hearings on H.R. 795 Before the House Comm. on Government Operations, 94th Cong. 2d Sess. (1976). The Department, unlike the Government Operations Committee, supports the limited use of polygraphs for investigatory purposes.

9-4.320 Technique

The basic function of a lie detection device is to record signs of internal stress which a subject is thought to undergo when falsely responding to questions. A polygraph examination begins with a present interview and study of the witness. Even the best trained and most experienced polygraphers must have a thorough understanding of the factual context of the activities under investigation in order to prepare a series of simple unambiguous questions. The pre-test interview allows the examiner to secure the confidence and cooperation of the subject, and to evaluate the subject's idiosyncracies which may affect the examination results. This procedure promotes the subject's belief in the infallibility of the machine and could augment his/her physical reactions by increasing his/her fear and anxiety over detection.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

A polygraph examination can be administered either on location or at a specific site. The locale must have a minimum number of distractions. Today's machines generally consist of: (1) a cardiograph, monitoring pulse and changes in blood pressure; (2) a pneumograph, recording respiration rate by measuring chest expansions and contractions; (3) a galvanometer, displaying the skin's resistance to an electric current (this is normally attached to the palmar surface of the subject's hand); and sometimes include a device measuring gross muscular movements. All responses are recorded in graphic form while the subject is undergoing questioning. Examiners employ different types of test questions to measure the subject's reactions. The most popular test utilizes true and false control questions so that a standard can be created with which to compare the subjects' recorded reactions to essential questions. Examinations cannot be conducted without the voluntary cooperation of the subject.

Following the examination the results are evaluated by the polygraphist who administered the examination to determine whether the illustrated responses indicated deception. The amount of expertise the examiner possesses is extremely important in assessing the results of the examination. The examiner must not only interpret the tangible results of the test, like any forensic scientist would, but must also evaluate his/her own activities and procedures to uncover any factors which may have contributed to inaccurate test results. These factors are discussed in USAM 9-4.340, infra.

9-4.330 Introduction at Trial

Neither the United States Code nor the Federal Rules of Evidence have any specific provision concerning the admissibility of polygraph examination results. In the absence of a Supreme Court decision regarding their use, federal courts have almost uniformly prohibited the introduction of polygraph evidence. These cases, as well as numerous commentaries, present diverse rationale supporting the continued opposition to legal acceptance of lie detection devices.

In Frye v. United States, 293 F. 1013 (D.C. Cir. 1923), the first reported federal case on polygraph admissibility, the court stated the appropriate standard for the judicial determination of whether to use newly developed scientific and experimental evidence should be whether the scientific principle or discovery is "sufficiently established to have gained general acceptance in the particular field in which it belongs." The polygraph was found not to possess such standing and scientific recognition among physiological and psychological authorities. The Frye standard is still often applied in discussions of the polygraph and other new scientific techniques. See, e.g., United States v. Skeens, 494 F.2d 1050 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (polygraphs); United States v. Franks, 511 F.2d 25, 33 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 422 U.S. 1042 (1975) (spectrographic analysis); United States v. Stifel, 433 F.2d 431, 438 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 401 U.S. 994 (1970) (neutron activation analysis); United States v. Tranowski, 659 F.2d 750, 755-756 (7th Cir. 1981) (photograph dating analysis); United States v. Hendershot, 614 F.2d 648, 654 (9th Cir. 1980) (shoe print lifting technique); Lindsey v. United States, 237 F.2d 893, 896 (9th Cir. 1950) (truth serum or sodium pentothal); United States v. Bruno, 333 F. Supp. 570, 574 (E.D. Pa. 1971) (ink identification).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

In United States v. Alexander, 526 F.2d 161, 163 (8th Cir. 1975), the court indicated that reliability is one of the most important factors in determining "general acceptance." Courts such as Alexander which have considered admitting results from polygraph tests have noted their willingness to accept proven scientific techniques, but have rejected polygraphs following their hearing of expert testimony and review of the extensive body of articles and text on polygraphs. Though polygraph methodology and examiner training have substantially improved since the primitive systolic blood test employed in Frye, the polygraph has yet to attain sufficient scientific acceptance among experts in polygraphy, psychiatry, physiology, psychophysiology, neurophysiology and other related disciplines to justify admission. See United States v. Alexander, supra, at 164. Following three days of testimony, the trial judge in United States v. Urquidez, 356 F. Supp. 1363 (C.D. Cal. 1973), found the most obvious conclusion to be made about polygraphs to be that there are many variables other than the ultimate test of truth or falsity influencing results. He noted the numerous disagreements among "experts" about proper test administration and how results should be interpreted.

The "general acceptance" standard is often utilized in conjunction with considerations of the relevance, prejudice and burden on judicial time of polygraph evidence. These considerations rather than a "general acceptance" standard concerning evidential admission have been employed in Rules 401-403 of the Federal Rules of Evidence. The concepts present in the Rules strengthen the arguments against admission. See generally Abbell, Polygraph Evidence: The Case Against Admissibility in Federal Criminal Trials, 15 Am. Crim. L. Rev. 19, 54-59 (1977).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The eight Courts of Appeals which have considered the admission of unstipulated polygraph examinations have uniformly held polygraph results inadmissible. See United States v. Bando, 244 F.2d 833, 841 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 355 U.S. 844 (1957) (dicta); United States v. TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION 389, 390 (9th Cir.) cert. denied, 404 U.S. 850 (1971); United States v. Hunter, 672 F.2d 815, 817 (10th Cir. 1982); United States v. Wainwright, 413 F.2d 796, 803 (10th Cir. 1969), cert. denied, 396 U.S. 1009 (1970); United States v. Russo, 527 F.2d 1051, 1058-59 (10th Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 426 U.S. 906 (1976); United States v. Skeens, 494 F.2d 1050, 1053 (D.C. Cir. 1974); United States v. Zeiger, 475 F.2d 1280 (D.C. Cir. 1972); Frye v. United States, 293 F. 1013, 1014 (D.C. Cir. 1923).

Some circuit courts while affirming district court denials of admission have acknowledged that there may be certain situations where admission is acceptable, and that admission is a matter within the sound discretion of the trial judge. See, e.g., United States v. Winter, 633 F.2d 1120, 1150 (1st Cir. 1981), cert. denied, _____ U.S. _____, 103 S. Ct. 1249, 1250 (1983) (issue of admissibility not addressed); United States v. Webster, 639 F.2d 174, 186 (4th Cir. 1981), modified on other grounds and aff'd, 669 F.2d 185 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 857 (1981); United States v. Rumell, 642 F.2d 213, 215 (7th Cir. 1981); United States v. Oliver, 525 F.2d 731, 736 (8th Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 424 U.S. 973 (1976); United States v. Eden, 659 F.2d 1376, 1382 (9th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 949 (1982). Courts willing to permit district court discretion require that proponents of polygraph evidence have the burden of laying a proper foundation for showing the underlying scientific basis and reliability of expert testimony. See United States v. DeBetham, 470 F.2d 1367 (9th Cir. 1972), cert. denied 412 U.S. 907 (1973). With the polygraph's misleading reputation as a "truthteller," the widespread debate concerning its reliability, and the critical requirement of competent examiner, and judicial problems of self-incrimination and hearsay, a trial court will rarely abuse its discretion by refusing to admit the evidence, even for limited purposes and under limited conditions. See United States v. Marshall, 526 F.2d 1349, 1360 (9th Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 426 U.S. 923 (1976).

Though the overwhelming majority of courts have rejected polygraph evidence in criminal cases, a number of state courts and a few federal district court decisions support a general policy of admission. See, e.g., Jackson v. Garrison, 495 F. Supp. 9, 10-11 (W.D. N.C. 1979), rev'd, 677 F.2d 371 (4th Cir. 1981); United States v. Zeiger, 350 F. Supp. 685, 689 (D.D.C.), rev'd, 475 F.2d 1280 (D.C. Cir. 1972) (per curiam); United States v. Ridling, 350 F. Supp. 90 (E.D. Mich. 1972) (admitted on condition court appoint examiner; decision mooted when examination proved inconclusive); United States v. DeBetham, 348 F. Supp. 1377 (S.C. Cal.), aff'd, 470 F.2d 1367 (9th Cir. 1972), cert. denied, 412 U.S. 907 (1973) (viewed tests positively but refused admission on basis of precedents); States v. Sims, 369 N.E. 2d 24 (Ohio 1977); Commonwealth v. A Juvenile,

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

313 N.E. 2d 120 (Mass. 1974); State v. Stanislawski, 216 N.W. 2d 8 (Wisc. 1976), overruled, State v. Dean, 307 N.W.2d 628, 653 (Wisc. 1981).

Other courts have allowed polygraph evidence in special situations. If a polygraph examination conducted on a key government witness indicates the witness is lying, then under the Brady doctrine, this may be disclosed to the jury as exculpatory evidence useful to impeach the witness' credibility. See United States v. Hart, 344 F. Supp. 522 (E.D. N.Y. 1971). But see Ogden v. Wolff, 522 F.2d 816 (8th Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 427 U.S. 911 (1976). Testimony of a government witness concerning a statement made to the defendant with respect to the results of his/her polygraph examination has been allowed where the defendant confessed after the exam and the voluntariness of the confession was at issue. See Tyler v. United States, 193 F.2d 24, 31 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 343 U.S. 908 (1952). Cf. United States v. Bad Cob, 560 F.2d 877 (8th Cir. 1977) (failure of defense counsel to object to improper references to defendant's refusal to take lie detector test not ineffective assistance of counsel since plausible strategy was to show lack of voluntariness of confession). At least one federal court has permitted the introduction of polygraph results in a criminal case upon stipulation of the defense and prosecution. See United States v. Oliver, 525 F.2d 731, 736-738 (8th Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 424 U.S. 973 (1976). More than twenty states now permit admission of polygraph evidence upon stipulation of the parties. See Israel v. McMorris, 455 U.S. 967, 970 (1982) (Rehnquist, J., dissenting from denial of writ of certiorari). Polygraph results have also been admitted experimentally towards the weakest count of a four count indictment, on which the court subsequently found the defendant innocent on the basis of the results. See United States v. Penick, 496 F.2d 1105, 1109 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 897 (1974).

9-4.340 Opposition to Admission

Though certain physiological reactions such as fast heart beat, muscle contraction and sweaty palms are believed to be associated with deception attempts, by themselves, they do not indicate deceit. Lie detection results from a comparison of the answers to pertinent test questions with the responses to control questions. Given the present theoretical and practical deficiencies of polygraphs, the courts have been justified in excluding polygraph evidence from the jury's consideration.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-4.341 Accuracy

Arguments against admissibility are based primarily on the accuracy of the test itself since numerous variables other than the ultimate questions of truth or falsity influence the results of a polygraph. See United States v. Urgidez, 356 F. Supp. 1363, 1365 (C.D. Cal. 1973). Estimates of reliability vary substantially depending on the competency of the examiner and methodology of the exam. John Reid, one of the foremost polygraph authorities, estimates a 9% error rate under optimal conditions. See United States v. Zeiger, 350 F. Supp. 685, 689 (D.D.C.), rev'd., 475 F.2d 1280 (1972). In United States v. Wilson, 361 F. Supp. 510, 512 (D.Md. 1973), the court felt that the studies conducted by private and governmental organizations assess the validity and reliability at 70-95%. See also United States v. DeBethan, 348 F. Supp. 1377, 1385 (S.D. Cal.), aff'd per curiam, 470 F.2d 1367 (1972); (accuracy range 80-91%); United States v. Alexander, 526 F.2d 161, 165, n.11 (8th Cir. 1975) (citing commentators estimating error rate more than 25%); State v. Stanislawski, 216 N.W. 2d 8, 12, n.12 (Wisc. 1974) (citing numerous authorities). Wilner, Polygraphy: Short Circuit to Truth?, 29 U. Fla. L. Rev. 286, 290-292 (1977). It is understandably difficult to collect accuracy statistics for actual criminal suspects if no subsequent confession took place.

9-4.342 Examination Variables

The recorded differences and purported indicia of deception may be caused by numerous variables. These unassessable factors are crucial to an accurate polygraph examination. Among the proven variables are: (1) physical characteristics of the subject such as fatigue, obesity, heart disease, respiratory difficulties and abnormal blood pressure; (2) temporary or permanent mental disorders such as delusions, feeble-mindedness or insanity which result in an inability to affirmatively participate or to be unable to differentiate between right and wrong; (3) the undetected use of alcohol or drugs; (4) distractions in the examination setting; such as extraneous noises, temperature fluctuations, or unusual objects; (5) the ability of the subject to mask legitimate test question reactions by faking responses to his/her own lying; (7) a guilty party's subjective belief in his/her own innocence; (8) excessive previous interrogation; (9) prior dry run examinations leading to belief that one can beat the machine; (10) the complexity of the matters being investigated; (11) the wording of the relevant questions; (12) the extent of motivation and fear by the subject that the polygraph will detect his/her lying; and even (13) the nervousness of an innocent subject induced by fear or a guilty complex involving a different offense.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

9-4.343 Role of Examiner

Courts and commentators have indicated numerous unique aspects of the polygraph which differentiate it from other more generally acceptable scientific procedures. The foremost weakness of polygraph methodology is its inherent reliance on the procedures and subjective evaluations employed by the polygraphist. Polygraphy albeit based on scientific theory remains an art of unusual responsibility placed on examiner. See, e.g., United States v. Alexander, supra, at 167; United States v. Wilson, supra, at 512. Even the strongest proponents have indicated that only about 20% of all examiners are able to handle the variety of problems which arise. See Inbau and Reid, Lie Detector Technique: A Reliable and Valuable Investigative Aid, 50 A.B.A.J. 407, 473 (1964).

A number of courts have heard testimony in which qualified experts differed on interpreting previously recorded polygraph results. See, e.g., United States v. Urgudez, 356 F. Supp. 1363, 1364 (C.D. Cal. 1973). The individual examiner must (1) determine the threshold level indicating deception, (2) related specific questions to significant pen movement, (3) correlate the various physiological measurement readings into one result, and (4) individualize his/her examination and interpretations according to the characteristics of the individual subject. See generally Wilner, Polygraphy: Short Circuit to Truth?, 29 U. Fla. L. Rev. 286, 299-303 (1977). Additionally, an examiner during the course of the examination, must study the subject for signs of evasiveness, uncooperation, drug use, or numerous other methods employed by subjects, with some success, to trick the machine. An examiner must also formulate meaningful unambiguous substantive and control questions. Often these difficulties are compounded by the necessity to construct questions and review the subject without sufficient preparation or information. This is especially true with defense administered exams given without access to or knowledge of the government's case.

9-4.344 Other Reasons for Exclusion

Stringent standards are necessary because triers of fact place excessive weight on results of such testing. McCormick, Law of Evidence §207 at 507 (2nd ed. 1972). There is "an almost impenetrable aura of scientific infallibility surrounding the polygraph machine . . . in the minds of the jury." See Commonwealth v. A Juvenile, 313 N.E. 2d 120, 135 (1974) (dissenting opinion). Courts have expressed the fear that juries will give undue weight to polygraph results and treat them as determinate of the ultimate issue at trial. See, e.g., United States v. Wilson, 361

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

F. Supp. 510, 513, (D. Md. 1973). Undue reliance by the jury on the polygraph as an accurate determiner of the truth will transfer the juries' "historical function" as a citizen fact finder to a machine. In any case, it is certain that the introduction of polygraph results and the argument of the weight to be accorded such seemingly important evidence will distract the jury from the other evidence and testimony presented and greatly lengthen trial proceedings as opposing parties attempt to lessen the impact of prejudicial results by attacking the conduct of the test and the subjective evaluations of the examiner. See United States v. Uriquidez, 356 F. Supp. 1363, 1367 (C.D. Cal. 1973). Extensive usage of the polygraph may also lead a jury to believe that a defendant or witness who did not take a polygraph exam is afraid of the results. See, Note, Problems Remaining For the "Generally Accepted" Polygraph, 53 Boston Univ. L. Rev. 375, 396-398 (1973).

9-4.350 Department Policy Towards Polygraph Use

Department policy opposes all attempts by defense counsel to admit polygraph evidence or to have an examiner appointed by the court to conduct a polygraph test. Government attorneys should refrain from seeking the admission of favorable examinations which may have been conducted during the investigatory stage. The reasons supporting the government position are contained in USAM 9-4.340, supra. In respect to its use as an investigatory tool, it is recognized that in certain situations, such as to test the reliability of an informer, a polygraph can be of some value. Department policy therefore supports the limited use of the polygraph during investigations. This limited use should be effectuated by utilizing the trained examiners of the federal investigative agencies, primarily the FBI, in accordance with internal procedures formulated by the agencies. When utilized it should be clear to the possible defendant or witness the limited purpose for which results are used and that the test results will be only one factor in making a prosecutive decision. An examination should be preceded by Miranda warnings to a subject in custody. Subsequent admissions or confessions will then be evaluated according to traditional voluntariness criteria. See Field v. Wyrick, 706 F.2d 879 (8th Cir. 1983), on remand from Supreme Court, Field v. Wyrick, 459 U.S. 42 (1982), rev'd per curiam, Field v. Wyrick, 682 F.2d 154 (8th Cir. 1982); Keiper v. Cupp, 509 F.2d 238 (9th Cir. 1975).

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-4.400 OUT-OF-COURT IDENTIFICATION PROCEDURES

See generally 71 Geo. L. J. 417-123 (Dec. 1982); Cissel, Federal Criminal Trials, §§3-1d(2) and 3-2a (1983).

9-4.410 Lineups and Showups

9-4.411 Power to Order Lineup; Right to Counsel

It is within the power of a federal grand jury to order a person suspected of a crime to participate in a lineup. The lineup in such a case will be a separate investigative procedure; it will not be physically incorporated into the grand jury proceedings. In re Melvin, 550 F.2d 674 (1st Cir. 1977).

A lineup is a well-accepted investigatory procedure carried out by law enforcement officers having a suspect in custody. It is considered preferable to an individual confrontation for identification purposes. See United States v. Wade, 388 U.S. 218 (1967); Gilbert v. California, 388 U.S. 263 (1967); Stovall v. Denno, 388 U.S. 293 (1967); In re Melvin, 550 F.2d 647 (1st Cir. 1977).

There is a Sixth Amendment right to counsel at all "critical confrontations." This right extends to all post-indictment lineups and showups. It requires the government to notify both counsel and the accused as to the proposed lineup or showup, and the presence of counsel is necessary in the absence of an "intelligent waiver." See United States

v. Wade, supra. The presence of substitute counsel may not satisfy the Sixth Amendment right where regular counsel is not available. United States v. Smallwood, 473 F.2d 98 (D.C. Cir. 1972). But there is no right to counsel before "the initiation of adversary judicial criminal proceedings--whether by way of formal charge, preliminary hearing, indictment, information or arraignment." See Kirby v. Illinois, 406 U.S. 682, 689 (1972). The court in In re Melvin, supra, noted that the government "wisely" intended to permit counsel to be present at the lineup ordered by the grand jury but refused to decide whether a right to counsel existed.

Where there has been a lineup or showup in which the right to counsel has been improperly denied, all testimony relating to the out-of-court identification is inadmissible. See Gilbert v. California, supra. A subsequent in-court identification will also be inadmissible unless the government can establish "by clear convincing evidence that the in-court identifications were based upon observations of the suspect other than at the lineup identification." In determining whether there is an independent source for the in-court identification, the court will consider the witness' prior opportunity to observe the criminal act, any discrepancy between a pre-lineup description and the defendant's actual appearance, any identification by picture of the defendant prior to the lineup, the failure to identify the defendant on a prior occasion, the lapse of time between the criminal act and the lineup and the circumstances surrounding the conduct of the lineup. See United States v. Wade, supra.

When a defendant challenges a lineup or showup on Sixth Amendment grounds, the court should hold a hearing in which it decides the issues of both right to counsel and independent source. See United States v. Holiday, 482 F.2d 729 (D.C. Cir. 1973). Such a procedure will avoid the need for remand if, on appeal, the lineup or showup is found to have violated the defendant's Sixth Amendment right.

9-4. 412 Self-Incrimination

Neither the lineup itself, nor requiring the accused to utter words for voice identification purposes during the lineup, violate the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination. See United States v. Wade, supra. The government may introduce into evidence the fact that the suspect refused to speak certain words during a lineup after being directed to do so, see Higgins v. Wainwright, 424 F.2d 177 (6th Cir. 1970), and may comment upon the suspect intentionally changing his/her appearance prior to a lineup as some evidence of guilt, see United States v. Jackson, 476 F.2d 249 (7th Cir. 1973).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-4.413 Due Process

Testimony concerning a lineup or showup identification is inadmissible if, considering the "totality of the circumstances," the identification procedure was so unnecessarily suggestive and conducive to mistaken identification that there was a denial of due process of law. See Stovall v. Denno, 388 U.S. 293 (1967). The procedure is suggestive when the identifying witness knows all the other participants in the lineup except the suspect, when the others are grossly dissimilar in appearance from the suspect, when only the suspect is required to wear the distinctive clothing allegedly worn by the culprit, when the police tell the witness that they have caught the suspect after which the suspect is viewed alone, when the suspect is pointed out before or during the procedure, when the participants are asked to try on clothing which only fits the suspect and when an identification is made in the presence of other identifying witnesses.

Where a lineup or showup is conducted in violation of the defendant's right to due process, an in-court identification of the defendant will not be permitted unless the government can establish an independent source. The criterion which is used to establish an independent source where a lineup or showup has been conducted in violation of the defendant's right to counsel, is also applicable here. (See USAM 9-4.311, supra.) Likewise, where there is a challenge on due process ground, the court should determine the issues of both due process and independent source at the same hearing.

9-4.414 Admissibility of Lineup and Showup Identifications

Lineup and showup identifications are admissible as non-hearsay statements under Rule 801(d)(1)(C) of the Federal Rules of Evidence.

9-4.420 Photographic Identification

9-4.421 Right to Counsel

The Supreme Court has differentiated between pre-trial lineups and pre-trial photographic identifications. Unlike post-indictment pre-trial

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

lineups, pre-trial photographic identifications, whether before or after indictment, have been held not to be a "critical stage" in the criminal proceedings requiring right to counsel. See United States v. Ash, 413 U.S. 300, 321 (1972). See also Hill v. Wyrick, 570 F.2d 748 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 436 U.S. 921 (1978); Anderson v. Maggio, 555 F.2d 447, 450 n.5 (5th Cir. 1977).

9-4.422 Due Process

Testimony concerning a photographic identification is inadmissible if, considering the "totality of the circumstances," the identification procedure was to impermissibly suggestive as to give rise to a very substantial likelihood of misidentification. See Simmons v. United States, 390 U.S. 384 (1968). The danger of misidentification is increased where the witness views only one photograph, where the same person keeps reappearing in each of the photographic displays and when the police indicate that they have other evidence against one of the suspects shown in the display.

Where a photographic identification is conducted in violation of the defendant's right to due process, an in-court identification will not be permitted unless the government can establish an independent source. The criterion which is used to establish an independent source where a lineup or showup has been conducted in violation of the defendant's right to counsel, is also applicable here. Likewise, where there is a challenge on due process grounds, the court should determine the issues of due process and independent source at the same hearing.

9-4.430 Physical Evidence

9-4.431 Right to Counsel

Obtaining physical evidence is not a critical stage of a criminal proceeding in which there exists a Sixth Amendment right to counsel.

Knowledge of the techniques of science and technology is sufficiently available, and the variables in techniques few enough, that the accused has the opportunity for a meaningful confrontation of the government's case at trial through the ordinary processes of cross-examination of the government's expert witnesses and the presentation of the evidence of his own experts . . . they are not critical stages since there is a minimal risk that his counsel's absence at such stages might derogate from his right to a fair trial.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

See United States v. Wade, supra at 227. United States v. Sheard, 473 F.2d 139 (D.C. Cir. 1972), cert. denied, 412 U.S. 943 (1973) (administration of a benzidine test).

9-4.432 Self-Incrimination

The privilege against self-incrimination "offers no protection against compulsion to submit to fingerprinting, photography, or measurements, to write or speak for identification, to appear in court, to stand, to assume a stance, to walk, or to make a particular gesture. The distinction which has emerged, often expressed in different ways, is that the privilege is a bar against compelling 'communications' or 'testimony,' but that compulsion which makes a suspect or accused the source of 'real or physical evidence' does not violate it." See Schmerber v. California, 384 U.S. 757, 764 (1966). United States v. Bridges, 499 F.2d 179 (7th Cir. 1974) (swabbing of defendant's hands to discover dynamite components.)

However, in some cases it becomes difficult to distinguish between testimonial and physical evidence. For example, a lie detector test, which measures changes in bodily function, may actually be directed towards eliciting responses which are essentially testimonial. "To compel a person to submit to testing in which an effort will be made to determine his guilt or innocence on the basis of physiological responses, whether willed or not, is to evoke the spirit and history of the Fifth Amendment." See Schmerber v. California, supra, at 746.

9-4.433 Search and Seizure

"Obtaining physical evidence from a person involves a potential Fourth Amendment violation at two different levels--the 'seizure' of the 'person' necessary to bring him into contact with government agents, and the subsequent search for a seizure of the evidence." See United States v. Dionisio, 410 U.S. 1, 8 (1973). Schmerber v. California, supra. Once there has been a lawful arrest, a subsequent seizure for physical evidence must comply with the requirements of the Fourth Amendment. Obtaining a blood sample may be justified as a search incident to a lawful arrest in order to prevent the destruction of evidence. See Schmerber v. California, supra. This same Fourth Amendment justification may be used when a person's hands are swabbed in order to discover the presence of certain chemicals, United States v. Bridges, supra, or where the police scrape dried blood from under a person's fingernails, see Cupp v. Murphy, 412 U.S. 291 (1973). (In Cupp v. Murphy, supra, the search was justified even though an arrest had not yet taken place. The Court noted that there was probable cause for arrest and that because the defendant knew he was under suspicion there existed the possibility that he would try to destroy the evidence.) The search must be carried out in a reasonable manner. In United States v. Owens, 475 F.2d 759 (5th Cir. 1973), the court upheld the use of a stomach pump where the defendant attempted to escape from custody and swallowed a package of heroin. He became unconscious, whereupon he was taken to a hospital for the stomach pump.

Where a search involves a very slight intrusion upon the person, such as where a few strands of hair are clipped, the court will look to see if the search was conducted "reasonable". Such a search will be upheld regardless of the fact that there are no exigent circumstances, and that a warrant has not been obtained. See United States v. D'Amico, 408 F.2d 331 (2d Cir. 1969).

9-4.440 Fingerprinting

9-4.441 Right to Counsel

The taking of fingerprints is not a critical stage at which the accused has a right to the presence of counsel. See United States v. Wade, supra. United States v. Sanders, 447 F.2d 112 (5th Cir. 1973), cert. denied, 414 U.S. 870 (1973).

9-4.442 Self-Incrimination

The taking of fingerprints does not fall within the category of either communication or testimony so as to be protected by the Fifth Amendment privilege. See Pearson v. United States, 389 F.2d 684 (5th Cir. 1968).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-4.443 Search and Seizure

"Fingerprinting involves none of the probing into an individual's private life and thoughts that marks an interrogation or search." See Davis v. Mississippi, 394 U.S. 721, 727 (1969). So long as the initial seizure of the person is reasonable, as in a lawful arrest, a subsequent fingerprint is permissible. It is also possible that the requirements of the Fourth Amendment could be met through "narrowly circumscribed procedures for obtaining, during the course of a criminal investigation, the fingerprints of individuals for whom there is no probable cause for arrest." See Davis v. Mississippi, supra at 728.

9-4.450 Handwriting Exemplars

9-4.451 Right to Counsel

The taking of handwriting exemplars is not a critical stage of a criminal proceeding requiring the assistance of counsel. See Gilbert v. California, supra.

9-4.452 Self-Incrimination

A handwriting exemplar, in contrast to the content of what is written, is an identifying physical characteristic which falls outside the protection of the Fifth Amendment. It is not testimonial or communicative in nature. See Gilbert v. California, supra. The government may introduce into evidence the fact that the suspect refused to provide an exemplar after being directed to do so by a court, United States v. Nix, 465 F.2d 90 (5th Cir. 1972), cert. denied, 409 U.S. 1013 (1972), or that he/she intentionally distorted his/her handwriting when giving the exemplar, United States v. Stenbridge, 477 F.2d 874 (5th Cir. 1973).

9-4.453 Search and Seizure

Obtaining a handwriting exemplar is not a "seizure" within the meaning of the Fourth Amendment. A person has no expectation of privacy in his/her handwriting because it is a physical characteristic which is constantly exposed to the public. So long as the initial seizure of the person is reasonable, compelling production of a handwriting exemplar is permissible. See United States v. Mara 410 U.S. 19 (1973).

9-4.460 Voice Exemplars

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-4.461 Self-Incrimination

Compelling a person to give a voice exemplar violates no privilege protected by the Fifth Amendment. The exemplar is used for identification purposes, and is not testimonial or communicative in nature. See United v. Dionisio, supra.

9-4.462 Search and Seizure

Once there has been a lawful "seizure" of the "person", the taking of a voice exemplar involves no Fourth Amendment consideration. A person has no expectation of privacy in his/her voice because it is a physical characteristic which is constantly exposed to the public. See United States v. Dionisio, supra.

9-4.463 Admissibility of Spectrograms (Voice Prints)

A spectrograph transforms the energy used in the production of speech into a visual graph of acoustical energy. The spectrogram of an unidentified speaker is compared with that of an identified speaker in order to find similar patterns. This method of voice identification has been accepted by only a small number of courts, as opposed to the aural method of voice identification which is widely accepted.

As of this date, there have been three Court of Appeals decisions of the admissibility of spectrograms. In United States v. Addison, 498 F.2d 741 (D.C. Cir. 1974), the court ruled that the spectrogram was inadmissible because its use is not generally accepted as reliable by the scientific community. In Frye v. United States, 293 F.1013 (D.C. Cir. 1923), the court held that the district court improperly focused on the spectrogram's reliability, rather than on its general acceptance by the scientific community. However, in United States v. Franks, 511 F.2d 25 (6th Cir. 1975), and United States v. Baller, 519 F.2d 463 (4th Cir. 1975) cert. denied, 423 U.S. 1019 (1975), the courts admitted the use of spectrograms, permitting those who oppose the admissibility of the results of the scientific test to direct their criticism towards the weight of such evidence.

9-4.500 INTERNATIONAL CONTACTS AND JUDICIAL ASSISTANCE

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-4.510 Judicial Assistance

Judicial assistance is the performance of a judicial act, such as the issuance of compulsory process for real evidence or testimony, by a judicial officer of one country in response to a request from a judicial officer of another country. See generally United States v. Reagan, 453 F.2d 165 (6th Cir. 1971). Such requests are sometimes called letters rogatory. It is critical to understand that the request must be made by a court of the United States or of one of the states, in order to be honored by the foreign judiciary. Often the legal attache at a United States consular post, after unsuccessfully attempting to obtain evidence through his/her contacts with that country's law enforcement authorities, will report that those authorities state that they need "a letter from the judge." Usually this means that judiciary compulsion is required to obtain the evidence and that the judiciary will not act without a formal request for judicial assistance. In some countries, a formal request is needed even for service of process.

This section will deal only with requests for compulsory process to obtain evidence for criminal matters being investigated or prosecuted in the United States. The Office of International Affairs, Criminal Division, (see USAM 9-1.103K) has the responsibility for coordinating all such outgoing requests. Because these requests require drafting, translation, and transmission to foreign authorities before they can be executed, and because foreign authorities are often slow in execution, in any criminal case where evidence from outside the United States may be required, the Office of International Affairs should be contacted as soon as that possibility arises.

In obtaining evidence from abroad, it is critical to determine at the outset whether judicial assistance is required. Often evidence can be obtained without judicial compulsion. See USAM 9-4.540, infra. There is no legal requirement to exhaust all other possible means of obtaining evidence; but as a practical matter, requests for judicial assistance consume so much time that alternatives, where possible, are invariably preferable. Always explore the possibility of willing compliance with your needs and of using the influence of foreign authorities other than the judiciary. Because of the amount of work required and the time delays inherent in requests for judicial assistance, they should be considered a last resort.

For guidance regarding outgoing requests in civil matters or incoming requests in criminal or civil matters, contact the Foreign Litigation Unit, Civil Division.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-4.511 Request for Judicial Assistance

Although requests for judicial assistance are necessarily requests by a judicial officer, ordinarily a United States District Court judge, the request "package" is prepared by the U.S. Attorney. The request is then "endorsed" by the judge. This practice allows latitude for the use of stronger language in the request that the judge, who may eventually hear the case, would be willing to adopt as his/her own. As a consequence, the "Statement of Facts" portion of the request, discussed in USAM 9-4.524, infra, contains the statement "The U.S. Attorney expects to prove the following facts: . . ."

9-4.512 Drafting a Request for Judicial Assistance

Each request for judicial assistance must comply with the requirements of United States law, international law, and the domestic law of the country to which the request is directed. Although the requirements necessarily vary from country to country, the following are important common drafting considerations.

A. The United States is requesting a foreign court to perform a rather extraordinary act and, therefore, must assiduously comply with that court's every requirement.

B. The language of the request must be clear and simple. Requests are generally translated for the foreign court by non-lawyers who may not be able to render the precise meaning of the English vocabulary. The use of legalese, words of art, slang, and technical language is counterproductive because attempts to translate such terms often produce incomprehensible requests. Do not use phrases such as "return an indictment," "set bail," "Fifth Amendment privileges," or "right to confrontation." Stilted or archaic language, such as that used in obsolete forms of pleading, have no place in requests which must be translated. Avoid complicated syntax. Follow the journalistic rule of thumb that if a sentence requires more than twenty words, it should probably be simplified.

C. Foreign courts generally require more specificity in requests for documents than do United States courts. Therefore, descriptions of documents desired must be as precise as possible.

D. Requests should be brief and to the point.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-4.520 Request Package

- A. The request package should be assembled as follows:
1. The court's request;
  2. An application to the court; and
  3. A memorandum in support of the application to the court.
- B. The application to the court must contain the following:
1. A description of the assistance requested, which includes identification of the evidence sought;
  2. A statement of the facts of the violation;
  3. A description of the offense; and
  4. An explanation of the need for the evidence requested, including, where appropriate, an explanation of the element of the offense the requested evidence tends to prove, and how the requested evidence will prove the offense.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

REQUEST FOR JUDICIAL ASSISTANCE

The United States District Court for the _____ District of _____ presents its compliments to the Appropriate Judicial Authority in _____ (country) _____ and requests international judicial assistance in obtaining _____ (generally describe evidence sought) _____ from _____ (person from whom evidence is sought) _____ for use in _____ (trial/grand jury proceedings) _____ under the authority of this Court. The assistance requested, and the need for this assistance, are set forth in full in the attached Application of the United States, made to this Court by the U.S. Attorney for this Judicial District. This assistance is essential to insure that this Court is fully informed of the facts of this case and to insure that justice is done.

We offer you our assurance of reinforced judicial assistance. In this condition, the courts of the United States are authorized by Title 28, United States Code, Section 1782, to use all their powers to assist foreign and international tribunals. Attorneys of the United States government will present requests of foreign and international tribunals to the courts of the United States for execution.

United States District Judge

9-4.522 Application for the Court's Request

The application for the court's request is, like the request itself, a full-captioned court paper constituting the U.S. Attorney's request to the United States district court. The application, incorporated by reference as part of the request for judicial assistance, is the "body" of the request, and must contain all supporting material for the court's request. See USAM 9-4.523 through 9-4.527.

9-4.523 Description of Assistance Requested

A precise description of the specific judicial act requested to be performed and of the specific evidence sought is required to allow the foreign judicial officer to properly execute the request and also to avoid any inference of a "government fishing expedition." The policy against such procedures is very much alive in other countries, especially those with bank secrecy laws. If the request is not believed to be well founded, the response is likely to be inordinately slow and incomplete. Therefore, in drafting the assistance request, tailor and request to the deposit and withdrawal records, and correspondence relating to such accounts and transactions.

(2) Taking the sworn, written statement of the representative of _____ (name of institution) who produces the documents referred to in paragraph (1) to the truth of the following statement:

(a) These documents are true and exact copies of original records presently in the custody of _____ (name).

(b) The originals of these copies are kept and retained in the ordinary course of business of _____ (name of institution) and it is the regular practice of this business to make records of this type.

(c) Entries on these documents were made at or near the time of the occurrence of the transactions they record.

(3) Ordering _____ (appropriate authority) to conduct a search of _____ (premises, address, description) and to seize therefrom _____ (evidence, description).

The statement requested in paragraph (2) can also be obtained through a "Certificate of Authenticity of Bank Records," the form for which is as follows:

CERTIFICATE OF AUTHENTICITY OF BANK RECORDS

I, _____ (name), state on my oath that I have supervisory authority over the custody of the business record of _____ (name of business establishment), and that, pursuant to the request of the judicial authority of _____ (country), I have supplied documents described as follows:

---

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

I further state that:

(1) These documents are true and exact copies of original records presently in the custody of the (name of business establishment).

(2) The originals of these copies are kept and maintained in the ordinary course of business of the (name of business establishment) and it is the regular practice of this business to make records of this kind.

(3) Entries on these documents were made at or near the time of the occurrence of the transactions they record.

The search and seizure request in paragraph (3) should satisfy the minimum standard requirements of a search warrant application in the United States.

9-4.524 Statement of Facts

A brief description of the case and a summary of the facts involved are required and must be sufficient to satisfy a foreign judicial officer who is to execute the request that he/she should act on behalf of the United States. The case description should identify the defendant or subject and indicate the nature of the offense involved. For example:

A United States Grand Jury in the _____ District of _____, is presently conducting an investigation into a scheme to defraud individual and institutional investors, both in this country and in Europe, through the fraudulent solicitation referred to at various times as Atlantic Trust Bank, Ltd.; Atlantic Trust Bank, S.A.; or Atlantic Trust Bank, N.V.:

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

or:

A Federal Grand Jury in the _____ District of _____ has charged J. Hughes with transporting certain securities having a value of $5,000.00 or greater, knowing them to have been obtained by fraud, in violation of Title 18, United States Code, Section 2314.

The summary of the facts must be sufficiently detailed to "flesh out" a violation. The summary should: describe the perpetrators and explain how they profited by their illegal acts; describe the modus operandi and explain how individual crimes were committed; describe the victims and explain exactly how each was harmed (e.g., who was deceived by what representation made by whom). When the United States possesses documentary evidence, such as cancelled checks, deposit slips, or copies thereof, which indicates the location of the evidence sought, copies of such documents should be referred to in the summary of facts and copies attached to the application for letters rogatory. The summary, which may require several paragraphs, should begin with the following statement:

The United States expects to prove the following facts:

This statement, as stated in USAM 9-4.511, supra allows the greatest possible latitude of expression in the summary.

9-4.525 List of Elements

Some countries require that "mutual criminality" exist before acting on a request. In such instances, the judicial officer examining the request must be able to determine that the conduct constituting the offense in the United States is also an offense in his/her country. He/she is aided in finding "mutual criminality" through a numerical listing of the elements of the United States offense in the application, together with the text of the statute which is attached as an appendix. Some countries may require a verbatim translation of both the appended criminal statute and the list of elements.

Call the Office of International Affairs to determine whether a list of the elements of the offense is required.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-4.526 Need for Assistance Requested

Give a specific explanation of the need for the requested evidence. The explanation should demonstrate how the requested evidence fits into the case, or is necessary to prove one or more elements of the offense. If it is not known exactly what the requested evidence will show, state what it is expected to show. If documentary evidence is already available (e.g., a cancelled check or other document), state how the requested evidence will corroborate, amplify, or supplement it.

9-4.527 Concluding Prayer

The following conclusion to the application is suggested:

Accordingly the United States of America applies to this Court to issue a request to the judiciary of _____ (country) _____ for the assistance described herein.

The legal principles and authorities in support of this application are set forth in the memorandum attached hereto and made a part hereof.

Respectfully submitted,

MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF APPLICATION FOR REQUEST FOR JUDICIAL ASSISTANCE

I. UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURTS HAVE THE INHERENT POWER TO ISSUE REQUEST FOR JUDICIAL ASSISTANCE.

Requests for judicial assistance, or "letters rogatory" are formal requests from a court of one nation to the judiciary of a foreign nation, enlisting the assistance of the latter in obtaining evidence which is beyond the jurisdiction of the requesting court. The execution of a request for judicial assistance by the foreign court is based, in the absence of a treaty, on comity between nations at peace, and as such is discretionary. See Janssen v. Belding-Corticelli, 84 F.2d 579 (3d Cir., 1936).

The power to issue such requests is inherent in the federal courts, United States v. Staples, 256 F.2d 290 (9th Cir., 1958), Re Villeneuve v. Morning Journal Association, 106 F.2d (S.D.N.Y. 1913), as in the power of United States Courts to execute the request of foreign tribunals, Ex parte Taylor, 110 Tex. 331, 220, S.E. 74 (1920). United States District Courts are empowered by statute, 28 U.S.C. §1782, to execute foreign requests.

II. THE PROCEDURE FOR THE ISSUANCE OF REQUEST FOR JUDICIAL ASSISTANCE IS BY APPLICATION TO THE REQUESTING COURT.

Although the Rules of Criminal Procedure do not provide procedures for the issuance of requests for judicial assistance, Rule 57(b), of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure provides:

If no procedure is specifically prescribed by rule, the court may proceed in any lawful manner not inconsistent with these rules or with any applicable statute.

Rule 28(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure provides:

In a foreign country, deposition may be taken... (3) pursuant to a letter rogatory. A commission or a letter rogatory shall be issued on application and notice and on terms that are just and appropriate... .

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Title 28, Section 1781, provides in part:

(a) The Department of State has power directly or through suitable channels -

(2) to receive a letter rogatory issued, or request made, by a tribunal in the United States, to transmit it to the foreign or international tribunal, officer, or agency to whom it is addressed, and to receive its return after execution.

The statute recognizes no distinction between civil and criminal cases for purposes of the procedure for the State Department's handling of requests for judicial assistance. There is no reason why a federal court in a criminal case should not follow the duly prescribed procedure for issuance of such requests in civil cases. Indeed, it would appear that the best way to proceed under Rule 57(b) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure is to follow Rule 28(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Plaintiff submits, therefore, that the attached application, which conforms to the provisions of Rule 28(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, is the proper procedural vehicle for its request that the court issue a request for judicial assistance.

An application for a request for judicial assistance seeking only documents is similar to a request for a subpoena duces tecum, which a party may issue without leave of court and without notice to the adverse party. See Rule 17(c), Fed. R. Crim. P. Documentary evidence is properly obtainable via a request for judicial assistance in a criminal case without notice to the defendants. See United States v. Reagan, 453 F.2d 265 (6th Cir. 1971). Thus, the requirement of Rule 57(b) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure that the court "proceed in any lawful manner" does not comprehend mandatory notice to the adverse party.

Respectfully submitted,

9-4.530 Procedure After Drafting

All drafts should be submitted to the Office of International Affairs for review before they are finalized for the signature of the judge. After the judge signs, forward the original and four copies, with a full length cover letter to prevent the Department mail room from stamping any part of the request proper, to the Office of International Affairs. All such correspondence, to be accurately and promptly handled, should be captioned as follows: "Judicial Assistance in _____ (name of case) _____, File No. 182-_____. If the matter has been previously assigned a Department file number, that number should be included in brackets after the 182-____ judicial assistance code number.

9-4.540 International Contacts

Although certain matters require formal requests for judicial assistance, there are many instances in which the assistance of foreign authorities can be elicited by less formal means. Where criminal cases and investigations require witnesses from overseas, official foreign government records, authentication of foreign documents, advice on foreign law, searches of official records (e.g., corporate registries), permission to interview persons in foreign countries, service of subpoenas, contact with foreign government officials, and other similar foreign activities, this purpose can often be achieved through the use of international contacts. However, since such contacts necessarily involve our foreign relations and unfamiliar provisions of foreign law, any proposed contact with persons in foreign countries concerning a criminal matter should first be discussed with Division attorneys in the Office of International Affairs and any proposed contact with the Department of State, United States embassies or other consular posts, any ministry, embassy, consulate, representative, officer, or agency of a foreign government, or any international organization or agency (e.g., NATO or UNESCO), concerning a criminal matter, other than the notification of a foreign consul in case of an arrest of a foreign national (see USAM 9-2.173), should be made only with the prior approval of the Criminal Division. Thus, those matters requiring requests for judicial assistance can be identified and appropriately handled, as discussed in USAM 9-4.510 supra, and other matters can be channeled by the Office of International Affairs along the most efficient path to maximize the benefit of established international contacts.

Utilization of the Office of International Affairs expertise in this area is imperative. Uncoordinated foreign contacts produce confusion, duplication of effort and are less efficient and effective than contacts undertaken with the cooperation of persons and agencies experienced in such matters. Certain contacts can prejudice the effectiveness of subsequent contacts and may constitute criminal violations of foreign law. See USAM 9-4.541, infra. Uncounseled contacts can also affect treaty negotiations in progress.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-4.541 Contacts in Switzerland

Article 271 of the Swiss penal code provides:

Any person who, in Swiss territory, without authorization, performs acts for a foreign State that are the function of a public agency or official, or any person who performs such acts for a foreign party or some other organization abroad, or any person who aids and abets such acts shall be punished by imprisonment, and in serious cases with confinement in a penitentiary.

This statute may be violated when an Assistant U.S. Attorney acting in his/her official capacity places a telephone call or mails a letter seeking information from a person in Switzerland. It is violated when a United States District Court clerk's office mails a pro forma "Notice to Appear" to a defendant in Switzerland. Because the Swiss consider any violation of this statute to be an infringement of their national sovereignty, even an inadvertent, minor violation has an immediate, prejudicial effect on Swiss government cooperation in Department requests for assistance, several of which are usually pending. Consequently, U.S. Attorneys and Department personnel acting under their direction shall obtain approval from the Criminal Division before they make any attempt to perform any act in Switzerland related to any present or possible future criminal prosecution.

Copies of the texts of Swiss statutes, as well as advice concerning their interpretation, can be obtained from the Office of International Affairs.

A. INTRODUCTION

The United States-Swiss Treaty on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters, effective January 23, 1977, enables prosecutors in the United States to obtain testimony and tangible evidence from Switzerland. Although the Treaty was designed to deal primarily with the problem of the Swiss bank secrecy laws, it affords United States prosecutors a wide range of assistance from the judicial and executive authorities of Switzerland.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The treaty is reciprocal, but this practice guide is intended only to provide the basic information needed by U. S. Attorneys in obtaining from Switzerland evidence needed in the investigation or prosecution of federal crimes.

The treaty contemplates assistance being given to both federal and state investigative and prosecutive authorities in the United States. However, the emphasis in this guide is on requests for assistance by federal authorities who, we anticipate, will make principal use of the treaty.

During the negotiation of the treaty, it was the understanding of the parties that each Central Authority would exercise discretion not only with respect to the form and content of requests, but also as the number of requests to be made and the priority to be given. The Criminal Division, in exercising this discretion, may deem it necessary to deny or defer some requests. For this reason it would be well to discuss the contemplated request at an early stage with the Office of International Affairs of the Criminal Division.

The treaty is intended for the use of the government in investigating and prosecuting crimes, and not for use as a defense discovery tool. Consequently, the Attorney General will not make requests on behalf of the defense except in very unusual circumstances. In any case where the defense requests that the treaty be used in its behalf, the prosecutor should immediately consult with the Office of International Affairs of the Criminal Division.

Certain terminology which has arisen during the negotiation of the treaty should be understood. Article 40 contains definitions of terms used in the treaty, but two other essential terms are:

1. Requesting state--The government requesting the assistance of the other in obtaining evidence. For purposes of this guide, the requesting state will always be the United States.
2. Requested state--The government whose assistance is requested. In this guide, the requested state will always be Switzerland.

The basic procedure for a U.S. Attorney will be to ascertain what evidence he/she needs, ascertain whether the treaty provides for his/her needs, and prepare a request under the treaty. This procedure is quite complex because the treaty is complicated and not entirely self-explanatory. Its applicability is limited by the nature of the crime and the extent (if any) to which the defendant or suspect is involved in organized crime. Some assistance is mandatory and some is discretionary. There are also limitations to the use of evidence obtained under the treaty.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

B. ASSISTANCE AVAILABLE

Each party to the treaty has agreed to make available to the other many of the legal processes ordinarily available to authorities in the requested state. Pursuant to a request under the treaty, the Swiss authorities will:

1. Execute a search warrant. (Article 9:2 of the Treaty)
2. Subpoena testimony of persons in Switzerland. (Article 10)
3. Locate persons in Switzerland. (Article 11)
4. Subpoena and authenticate documents. (Article 18)
5. Supply official records. (Article 19)
6. Effect service of process. (Article 22)
7. Request persons to appear in the United States. (Article 23)

In addition, under certain specified circumstances the Swiss authorities may:

1. Permit a United States official to take testimony to authenticate documents. (Article 20)
2. Transfer prisoners needed in the United States. (Article 26)

C. APPLICABILITY

The applicability of the treaty is its most complicated feature. Generally, the treaty applies to criminal prosecutions and investigations for the offenses listed in the Schedule (following Article 41) which are "mutually criminal," that is, punishable under the law of both the United States (or a state thereof) and Switzerland (or a canton thereof). The only civil matters to which the treaty applies are actions for the return of property of the government of Switzerland or of the government of one of the cantons of Switzerland, obtained by the commission of an offense which is covered by the treaty, and actions for damages by persons alleging unjustified detention as a result of action taken pursuant to the treaty. See Article 1:1(b) and (c).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

To a large extent the applicability of the treaty is limited by Article 4, which contains the provisions for compulsory measures. Under Article 4:2, compulsory measures are available only with respect to offenses in the Schedule which are mutually criminal. Article 4:2(b) excepts gambling offenses from the requirement of mutual criminality. The requirement of listing in the Schedule can be waived if the Swiss consider the offense to be of sufficient importance to justify the use of compulsory measures. See Article 4:3. Note, however that Article 4:3 does not provide for a waiver of the requirement of mutual criminality.

Switzerland may refuse assistance if it considers that the execution of the request will prejudice its sovereignty, security, or similar essential interests. See Article 3:1(a). The fourth exchange of diplomatic notes (see the Technical Analysis of the Treaty, p. 27) concerns itself with what "similar essential interests" are contemplated. The Swiss can refuse assistance if the request is made for the purpose of prosecuting a person, other than a member of an organized crime group, for acts on the basis of which he/she has been acquitted or convicted by a final judgment of a court in the requested State for a substantially similar offense and any sentence has been or is being carried out. See Article 3:1(b).

Article 2 provides that the treaty does not apply to extradition, execution of criminal judgments, political offenses, selective service violations, military offenses which would not be a crime if committed by a civilian in Switzerland, or antitrust laws. The treaty generally does not apply to violations with respect to taxes, customs duties, governmental monopoly charges or exchange control regulations. See Article 2:1(c)(5).

Article 2 contains the provisions for special applicability in cases involving organized crime. The effect of these provisions is to waive many of the otherwise applicable requirements of the treaty. For example, under Article 2:2(a), assistance under the treaty may be available for political and antitrust offenses if they are committed by a person described in Article 6:2 who is, or is reasonably suspected 1/ to be,

1/ Article 8:1 requires the United States to furnish the information on which we base "reasonable suspicion" under the organized crime provisions. "Reasonable suspicion" is less than probable cause. See Technical Analysis of the Treaty, pp. 36-37.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

knowingly involved in the illegal activities of an organized crime group (as defined in Article 6:3) and who is a member or affiliate of such a group, or a public official who has knowingly violated his/her official responsibilities in order to accommodate the desires of such a group or its members.

An "organized criminal group" is tortuously defined in Article 6:3. The "elements" of such a group, without any one of which the special organized crime provisions will not apply, are:

1. An association or group of persons combined together.
2. Association for a substantial or indefinite period.
3. Purpose of association:
  - a. Monetary or commercial gains for itself or others, and
  - b. Illegal means of obtaining these gains
4. Carrying out purpose in a methodical and systematic manner, including:
  - a. Acts or threats of violence or other acts which are likely to intimidate and are mutually criminal, and
  - b. Either:
    - (1) Striving to obtain influence in politics or commerce, especially in political organizations, public administrations, the judiciary, commercial enterprises, employers' associations, labor unions or other employees' associations, or
    - (2) Association with a similar (organized crime) group which strives to obtain such influence.

Under Article 2:2(b) the treaty applies to offenses relating to tax laws, customs duties, governmental monopoly charges or exchange control regulations if the requirements of Article 7:2 are met, viz., if:

1. The offense is committed by a person reasonably suspected of being in the upper echelon of an organized crime group or of

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

participating significantly in any important activity of such a group, and

2. Available evidence is insufficient to provide a reasonable prospect of successful prosecution of this person for the illegal activities of such group, and

3. You have reasonably concluded that the requested assistance will substantially facilitate the successful prosecution of such a person, and should result in his/her imprisonment for a sufficient period of time so as to have a significant adverse effect on the organized criminal group, and

4. The securing of the information or evidence without the requested assistance is impossible or unreasonably burdensome. See Article 7:3.

Under Article 7:1, the requirements of listing in the Schedule and mutual criminality are waived if the above listed requirements of Article 7:2 are met.

Article 2 apparently makes no exception to the rule that selective service violations and violations of military law are not covered by the treaty.

There is one more limitation to the applicability of the treaty in Article 2:4. If you are seeking assistance with respect to two crimes, one to which the treaty applies and one to which it does not apply, and if, under Swiss law, the former crime merges into the latter, no assistance will be rendered. (See the Technical Analysis of the Treaty, p. 39, discussing the Swiss doctrine of "consumption.") As a practical matter, the doctrine of consumption will seldom be applicable except in tax cases.

D. PROCEDURE

A prosecutor who believes that assistance under the treaty may be necessary should contact the Office of International Affairs of the Criminal Division as early as possible. There is no timetable for the execution of requests under the treaty. It provides merely, "A request shall be executed as promptly as circumstances permit;" Article 31:5. Time must be allowed for drafting the request, review of the request at the Department, translation, and transmittal to Switzerland before the Swiss authorities begin to consider and execute the request.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

On request, the Office of International Affairs will provide copies of previous requests under the treaty and will consult with the prosecutor to the extent necessary in drafting the request. The request, in draft form, must be submitted to the Office of International Affairs for review. The purpose of centralized review of requests is to maintain consistency in our practice under the treaty. Article 28 designates the Attorney General as the Central Authority, who handles requests under the treaty and whose approval is necessary for all requests. The Attorney General has delegated his/her duties and powers under Article 28 to the Assistant Attorney General for the Criminal Division. See 28 C.F.R. §0.64-1.

The approved draft is translated in Washington, D.C., and the finished request and translation are sent to the Swiss Federal Department of Justice and Police.

E. LIMITATIONS ON THE USE OF EVIDENCE OBTAINED UNDER THE TREATY

Articles 5 and 13 contain limitations on the use of evidence obtained pursuant to requests under the treaty. The general rule, stated in Article 5:1, is that anything obtained pursuant to a request under the treaty can be used only in the investigation and prosecution of the offense for which assistance has been granted. On request, the Swiss will make exceptions under Article 5:2 where assistance was previously granted for another offense and:

1. The same subjects are being prosecuted or investigated for an offense for which assistance is required to be granted, or
2. Other participants in, or accessories to, the same offense are being prosecuted, or
3. The person being investigated or prosecuted is an organized crime member as defined in Article 6:2.

Article 5:3 permits the use of the evidence in any investigation concerning the civil damages connected with an investigation or proceeding for which assistance has been granted. Information or knowledge educed from any materials obtained under the treaty can be used in continuing any investigation of an offense for which assistance may be given, if the investigation was initiated prior to the request which produced the materials; but the actual materials may not be used in evidence in a resulting prosecution unless, of course, the case qualifies for one of the exceptions in Article 5:2 listed above.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The restrictions on the use of the evidence obtained under the treaty are not intended to create grounds for suppression. (See the second exchange of diplomatic notes and the Technical Analysis of the Treaty, p. 43.) Furthermore, these restrictions do not apply where Switzerland specifically waives them.

Article 13 provides that unless a Swiss citizen has been advised of any right to refuse to testify available under both United States and Swiss law, testimony taken pursuant to the treaty cannot be introduced in evidence in any criminal proceeding against him/her in the United States except a prosecution for an offense against the administration of justice.

F. THE REQUEST

Although requests will naturally vary according to the facts of each case and the assistance needed, general requirements of the treaty militate in favor of a consistent format for requests. Make your request as brief as possible and couch it in simple, non-technical language. Since requests are translated by non-lawyers, you must take care to convey the sense of every idea without resort to legalese. Use the terms of the treaty to the extent possible.

The general format of the request will follow Article 29. Separate your responses to each requirement of Article 29 and caption each response to indicate which requirement is satisfied.

1. Introductory paragraph

The introductory paragraph should satisfy the requirements of Article 29:1. The introductory paragraph names the authority on whose behalf the request is being made, (see Article 28:2), names the offense being investigated in the terms of the Schedule of offenses, briefly states the need for the evidence, identifies the subject of the investigation or proceeding, and states concisely what assistance is requested. The reader thus has the essence of the request in a single paragraph, and needs to look further only for details. A satisfactory introductory paragraph might read:

The Central Authority 2/ of the United States requests the assistance of the appropriate authorities in Switzerland under the Treaty on Mutual Assistance in

2/ See Article 28

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Criminal Matters. The United States is investigating a group of persons who have induced victims to invest sums of money in an oil exploration project which does not exist. The records of these suspects' bank accounts are needed to prove that they have taken 3/ the investors' money for their own use. If necessary, compulsory measures should be used to obtain these records.

2. Subject matter of the investigation

The next paragraph (or paragraphs) of the request should satisfy Article 29:1(a). First describe the offense being investigated or prosecuted, then set forth the facts which made out the offense.

Describe the offense in concise terms. The Swiss are not interested in the elements of crimes which confer federal jurisdiction, for example the use of the mails or interstate transportation. See Article 4:4. In most cases it will be helpful to quote the code section violated except where the statute raises more questions than it answers, such as those sections which state, "Whoever willfully violates any provision of this chapter shall be fined....etc." See, e.g., 31 U.S.C. §§1058, 1059. Keep in mind that compulsory measures, which will be desired in most cases, are available only with respect to offenses in the Schedule, "which would be punishable under the law of the requested state if committed within its jurisdiction." See Article 4:2(a). You must name the offense in the terms of the Schedule and describe it sufficiently for the Swiss Central Authority to decide whether the offense would be punishable under Swiss law if committed in Switzerland. Note Article 4:2, which permits compulsory measures in exceptionally important offenses, despite the fact that the offense is not in the Schedule. An acceptable description of the offense might read:

SUBJECT MATTER OF INVESTIGATION

The Offense

The offense of fraud, in violation of 18 United States Code 1341, is committed when the offender induces another person to give up something of value in reliance upon statements which the offender makes, 3/ Not "converted," which is legalese.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Next, briefly state the facts of your case, showing that the offense has taken place or your reasons for believing the offense to have taken place. Keep it simple. What the Swiss want is the factual basis on which you are acting. Don't theorize; state facts on your well-founded beliefs. Be as candid as possible, but remember that the defense may be able to obtain your request through discovery. State these facts so as to lead into the next paragraph, where you will set forth the need for the assistance. An acceptable statement of facts might read:

Facts

Tex Acco and Stanley S. Derdoil have solicited and obtained money from investors by advertising that the money would be used to finance the exploration for oil in Antarctica. Although these advertisements were made over a year ago, and stated that the expedition was then forming, Acco and Derdoil have done nothing in the furtherance of forming an oil exploration expedition. A subpoena of the records of Acco's accounts in a New York bank has revealed the transfer of large amounts of funds to the Menteur Bank of Geneva, Switzerland.

3. The Need for Assistance

This paragraph should satisfy Article 29:1(b). Show why you need the assistance you are requesting. Show how the evidence you seek fits into the proof of your case, whether to prove one or more of the elements of the crime or to show a motive, such as a personal profit. An acceptable statement of the need for assistance might read:

NEED FOR ASSISTANCE

The FBI needs to obtain the records of any accounts held by Acco or Dercoil to prove that the funds they obtained have not been used for the exploration for oil. We believe the records of these accounts will show that Acco and Derdoil have spent the money for other purposes. Tracing the funds through the records of these accounts may also show disbursements to other persons who are suspected of being involved in this scheme.

4. Persons involved

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The information required by Article 29:1(c) is provided to satisfy the policies of Swiss law which protect persons accused of crimes and which, where possible, protect the identity of innocent persons whose business or personal affairs might be disclosed because of their connection with the subject of the inquiry. Swiss law has certain protections for those accused or suspected of crimes. Such persons, for example, are not required to testify under oath or affirmation. (See the Technical Analysis of Article 12.) It is important to the Swiss, therefore, to ascertain what persons are involved in the offense. You should, therefore, provide "the full name, place and date of birth, address and any other information which may aid in the identification of the investigation or proceeding." We will also state the person's citizenship. An acceptable response to Article 29:1(c) might read:

PERSONS INVOLVED

The persons who are presently the subject of this investigation are:

(1) Tex William Acco, United States citizen, born September 18, 1940, at Ertswile, Texas, U.S.A.; present address: 315 Ninth Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20530. Acco is married to a woman, formerly a citizen of Switzerland, named Beaucoup Acco (nee de Chair). They are believed to own a chalet near Geneva, Switzerland.

(2) Stanley S. Derdoil, U.S. citizen, born May 1, 1934, at Bayonne, New Jersey, U.S.A.; present address: 862 Mission Street, San Francisco, California 92002. Derdoil is Acco's business partner.

(3) Pierre Principe, French citizen born (date unknown) in Riems, France; present address: 1956 Kilbourne Street, Washington, D.C. 20007. Principe is the treasurer of two corporations which Acco has formed and may be a signatory party to Acco's bank account.

(4) Cynthia Rene Dobson, U.S. citizen, date and place of birth unknown; address unknown. Dobson is a joint signatory to one of Acco's New York City bank accounts, holds a Bank Americard credit card obtained on the strength of this account, and may be involved in fraudulent conveyances of funds from these accounts.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

5. The next paragraph should satisfy Article 29:2(a), naming witnesses or other persons who may be affected by the request, and briefly describing how they may be affected. An acceptable response to Article 29:2(a) might read:

PERSONS AFFECTED

Acco's wife Beaucoup, naturalized U.S. Citizen, formerly a Swiss citizen born December 7, 1943, at Geneva, Switzerland; present address: 315 Ninth Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. She may be a signatory to any accounts held by Acco and thus may be affected by this request.

6. To satisfy Article 29:2(b) the next paragraph should specify what, if any, particular procedure is to be followed. This would appear to be premature, since subsequent paragraphs specify the assistance which would more logically precede instructions as to procedure. Nevertheless, previous paragraphs have generally described the assistance required and requests will be more easily understood if the order set forth in Article 29 is followed. The treaty provides for most of the procedures anticipated, but it is conceivable that you might want compulsory process over documents before, or without, notice to a witness or other person involved. This paragraph is the appropriate place to give any detailed instructions in the execution of the request, such as the questions you desire to be asked of a person compelled to give testimony under Article 10, or the method of executing a search warrant (if such method is consistent with Swiss law). Note that instructions for authentication of documents are covered by a later provision, Article 29:2(e), and will be dealt with in paragraph (9) below.

7. An appropriate response to Article 29:2(c) would be merely to state that you desire the testimony to be taken (if any) under oath. If your request does not include the taking of testimony, state:

TESTIMONY

No testimony is requested.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

8. Article 29:2(d) requires a description of the information, statement, or testimony sought. Where the request is purely for documents and their authentication, this provision will not apply and you should merely state:

INFORMATION, STATEMENT, OR TESTIMONY SOUGHT

Other than the testimony required by Article 18 (or Article 20, depending on which you choose to use for authentication), no information, statement, or testimony is sought.

If your request is for the taking of testimony, an acceptable response to Article 29:2(d) might be:

TESTIMONY SOUGHT

We request that Joseph Bleau be compelled to testify, pursuant to Article 10, and answer the questions set forth in Appendix A, attached to this request.

If your request is for information which can be obtained without resort to judicial process, you might state:

INFORMATION SOUGHT

We desire to know whether John Doe was in Switzerland on December 25, 1976.

If your request is for an unsworn statement, an appropriate request might read:

STATEMENT SOUGHT

We desire Jean Deau to state how much money he gave Tex Acco for investment in the oil exploration expedition.

9. Article 29:2(e) requires a description of documents, records, or articles of evidence to be preserved, the person from whom they are to be obtained, and the desired method of reproducing or authenticating them. In describing the documents, be as specific as possible. The policy against government "fishing expeditions" is quite strong in Switzerland. The Swiss will not entertain a request for "any records of accounts in the name of Tex Acco in any bank in Zurich." Do not request anything which you haven't justified in the paragraph describing the need for documents. For example, limit the time frame for which documents will be relevant. Do not ask the Swiss to give any unnecessary assistance. The description of the person from whom the documents are sought can be more general. It is not expected that you name the official of the bank who is charged with the custody of the bank's records. In most cases, where photocopying will be the desired method of reproducing documents, merely indicate that Xerox or other photographic reproduction method is desired.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

There are two authentication procedures in the treaty, Articles 18 and 20. <sup>4/</sup> Article 18 applies to business records and provides that a Swiss official will interrogate the custodian under oath to establish authenticity. Where the request pertains to a pending court proceeding, the defendant has the right under Article 18 to be present at the authentication proceeding, either in person, by his/her attorney, or both. In such a case, therefore, the defense will have to be notified as to the date and place of authentication and the defendant given the opportunity to be present or represented, if he/she so desires. Note that Article 18 creates a presumption of authenticity if its provisions are followed. This provision should be viewed as an amendment to the Federal Rules of Evidence, since under Article VI of the Constitution, treaties are the law of the land equivalent to an act of the legislature. A treaty has the effect of supplanting inconsistent provisions of prior law. Article 20 provides for authentication of other documents, records, or articles of evidence by testimony taken by a United States consular official pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §§3491-3949. Although Article 20 does not specifically provide for the right of the defendant to be present at the authentication proceeding, at least one court has assumed that the Sixth Amendment requires an opportunity to be present. See United States v. Hay, 376 F. Supp. 264 (D. Colo. 1974), aff'd 527 F.2d 990 (1975). The consular official will have to be "commissioned" by a court of the United States under 18 U.S.C. §3492 to take such testimony, and the commission will require an application to the United States District Court.

<sup>4/</sup> Because the right of confrontation cannot be satisfied prior to a named individual being charged, authentication should not normally be requested at the investigative stage.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

An acceptable request might satisfy Article 29:2(e) by stating:

DOCUMENTS NEEDED

The documents needed are the records of any accounts held in the names of Tex William Acco, Stanley S. Derdoil, or Pierre Principe in the Menteur Bank of Geneva, between March 30, 1975, and the present. The documents should include, but should not be limited to, all ledger sheets, signature cards, powers of attorney deposited, records of currency exchanges, records of disbursements or withdrawals, correspondence and memoranda relating to such accounts. These documents are believed to be in the possession of the Menteur Bank of Geneva, located at 35 Rue des Larmes, Geneva, Switzerland. We request authentication of these documents under Article 18. We request reproduction of the documents by Xerox or some other photocopy method.

10. Article 29:2(f) requires information as to the allowances and expenses to which a person appearing in the United States will be entitled. The dollar amounts for attendance fees and per diem can be ascertained from 28 U.S.C. §1821. An acceptable response to this requirement might read:

ALLOWANCES AND EXPENSES

The United States Government will pay for the transportation of Mr. LeBeau from Zurich to Lincoln, Nebraska and back. In addition Mr. LeBeau will be paid $__ per day for his food and lodging, as well as $__ for each day he attends the trial.

11. The request should be prepared for the signature of the Assistant Attorney General of the Criminal Division.

9-4.542 Investigative Agencies In Foreign Countries

Certain investigative agencies of the United States (e.g., DEA) maintain operations in foreign countries. Although some countries require judicial authorization for providing evidence in the possession of their law enforcement agencies, such evidence can often be obtained simply by a request from the executive branch of the United States government (the agency) to the executive department of the foreign government, without the need to resort to the judiciary of either country. Although some countries require letters rogatory before providing evidence in the possession of their law enforcement agencies, such evidence can often be obtained simply by a request from the executive branch of the United States government (the agency) to the executive department of the foreign government, without the need to resort to the judiciary of either country. The Office of International Affairs may be contacted for assistance in making a request. In any case where, after a request, foreign officials do not give the overseas agent of a United States investigative agency such evidence, the Office of International Affairs should be contacted immediately so that appropriate steps may be taken.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

Evidence in the possession of a foreign agency is not subject to exclusion because the foreign agency obtained it by means violative of the United States Constitution, provided that the United States agency had no part in obtaining it, and further provided that the conduct of the foreign agency does not shock the conscience of the courts. See United States v. Calloway, 446 F.2d 753, 755 (3d Cir. 1971), cert. denied, 404 U.S. 1021 (1971); United States v. Cotroni, 527 F.2d 708 (2d Cir. 1975). Where the United States agency participates in obtaining the evidence, a defense motion to suppress is more likely to be granted. See United States v. Calloway, supra; United States v. Nagelberg, 434 F.2d 585, 586 (2d Cir. 1971), cert. denied, 401 U.S. 939 (1971). The "gray area" exists where the United States agency merely requests the evidence but does not participate in obtaining it. See Brulary v. United States, 383 F.2d 345, 347-348 (9th Cir. 1967), cert. denied, 389 U.S. 986 (1967); Stonehill v. United States, 405 F.2d 738, 743 (9th Cir. 1968), cert. denied, 395 U.S. 960 (1968).

9-4.543 Subpoenas to Obtain Records Located in Foreign Countries

Federal prosecutors, with increasing frequency, have been obtaining the issuance of grand jury and trial subpoenas duces tecum for the production of banking, financial, and commercial records which are stored within a foreign country. Typically, such subpoenas are served on a United States based entity, such as a bank or business enterprise, which maintains an office in the foreign country where the subpoenaed records are located. Typically, too, the subpoenaed records are "protected" by the bank and/or commercial secrecy laws of the foreign country.

Two recent court decisions upholding the use of such subpoenas, In Re Grand Jury Proceedings (Bank of Nova Scotia), 691 F.2d 1384 (11th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 462 U.S. 1119 (1983), and In Re Grand Jury Subpoena Directed to Marc Rich & Company, A.G., 707 F.2d 663 (2d Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 463 U.S. 1215 (1983), have dramatically improved the potential for law enforcement access to the records of foreign bank accounts and other foreign entities used by narcotics traffickers, organized crime figures, and white collar criminals to launder the proceeds of illegal activities or to engage in tax evasion or tax fraud schemes. Another important aspect of these cases is the willingness of the courts to impose substantial daily fines--$25,000 in Bank of Nova Scotia and $50,000 in Marc Rich--to compel compliance with their orders to produce records located in foreign countries.

The Bank of Nova Scotia and Marc Rich decisions clearly demonstrate that use of a subpoena to obtain foreign records is a powerful weapon which the Department will vigorously support in appropriate cases. It should be borne in mind, however, that it is not the only method--or indeed in most cases the most effective, economical or timely one--for obtaining such records. Moreover, since this method involves assertion by the United States of jurisdiction which may be in conflict with the bank or commercial secrecy laws of a foreign country, its uncoordinated use raises various questions of infringement of foreign sovereignty which can seriously damage United States foreign relations and adversely affect other cases under investigation. In this regard, several foreign countries have lodged strong protests with both the State and Justice Departments against the use of such subpoenas. We have rejected these protests and do not intend to relinquish the hard fought gains we have won in this battle, but we do want to seize upon this opportunity to convert these protests into offers of assistance by the countries concerned. It is with this in mind that the following has been promulgated.

A. Any federal prosecutor who plans to seek the issuance of a subpoena for bank, business or commercial records reasonably believed to be in a foreign country is directed to obtain the concurrence of the Office of International Affairs of the Criminal Division before taking such action. The request for Office of International Affairs' concurrence must be in writing and set forth:

1. The subject matter and nature of the grand jury investigation or trial;
2. A description of the records sought including their location and identifying information such as bank account numbers;
3. The purpose for which the records are sought and their importance to the investigation or prosecution;
4. The extent of the possibility that the records might be destroyed if the person or entity maintaining them becomes aware that they are being sought; and
5. Any other information relevant to the Office of International Affairs' determination.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

In emergencies, the Office of International Affairs can act on the basis of an oral request containing the above information. In such instances, if the Office of International Affairs concurs in the issuance of a subpoena, the oral request must be followed by a written request.

B. The following considerations will be taken into account in determining whether such a subpoena should be authorized:

1. The availability of alternative methods for obtaining the records in a timely manner, such as use of mutual assistance treaties, tax treaties or letters rogatory;
2. The indispensability of the records to the success of the investigation or prosecution; and
3. The need to protect against the destruction of records located abroad and to protect the United States' ability to prosecute for contempt or obstruction of justice for such destruction.

The Office of International Affairs should also be consulted prior to initiating enforcement proceedings relating to such subpoenas.

C. Finally, the Office of International Affairs' concurrence must be obtained prior to serving a subpoena ad testificandum on an officer of, or attorney for, a foreign bank or corporation, who is temporarily in, or passing through, the United States, when the testimony sought relates to the officer's or attorney's duties in connection with the operation of the bank or corporation.

9-4.600 USE OF HYPNOSIS

9-4.601 Purpose and Scope

A. Supersession of Prior Policy Memorandum

This chapter supersedes DOJ Memo No. 605, dated December 11, 1968, which was entitled "The Use of Hypnosis in Interrogation of Witnesses."

B. General

Through experiments and actual practice it has been demonstrated that in certain limited cases, the use of hypnosis can be an aid in the investigative process. Witnesses of crimes have been able to recall certain facets of the crime while in a hypnotic state which they could not remember in the normal state. Hypnosis has also been effectively used to restore the memory of witnesses who have experienced a mental blackout concerning the events of the crime.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

Although hypnosis may be of value in the investigative process in certain cases, it is subject to serious objections and should be used only on rare occasions. The information obtained from a person while in a hypnotic trance cannot be assumed to be accurate. If a witness at the time of the crime mistakes the color of the get-away car as blue when in fact it was black, he will state the color of the car as blue when questioned under hypnosis. In addition, it has been shown that a person under hypnosis, lacking real facts, may hallucinate or otherwise contrive or invent information. Also, because of the deep seated motive of self-preservation, it is possible for a person to lie even while in a hypnotic state. Therefore, any information obtained by the use of hypnosis must be thoroughly checked as to its ultimate accuracy and corroborated if possible.

9-4.610 Admissibility in Trial

The question whether hypnotically refreshed evidence is admissible at trial is still an open one in many jurisdictions. In those jurisdictions in which the question is unsettled, a foundation concerning the reliability of hypnosis is necessary. See, e.g., Harding v. State, 5 Md. App. 230, 246 A. 2d 302 (1968), cert. denied, 395 U.S. 949 (1969). In jurisdictions where such evidence is clearly admissible, there is no need for a foundation concerning the nature and effects of hypnosis. See United States v. Awkard, 597 F.2d 667 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 885 (1979).

9-4.611 Prosecution Witness

The case of Harding v. State, supra, decided in the Maryland Court of Special Appeals, illustrates the narrow sort of situation in which hypnosis may be effectively used. In that case, defendant was charged with intent to rape and assault with intent to murder. The prosecutrix met defendant and another man and woman in a bar. During the course of the evening the defendant became angry with the prosecutrix for her refusal to have sexual relations with him and eventually shot her. Defendant forced the other man to drive to an isolated area where the defendant dumped the woman on the side of the road. The next morning the woman was found lying two or three miles from the spot where she had been left. She was in a state of shock. At the time of initial questioning, the woman was not able to say what had happened to her after she had been shot. While under hypnosis, however, and without prompting, she was able to recall that the defendant had returned to the scene and assaulted her. After she was brought out of hypnosis, she continued to remember the events, and was able to testify about them at trial. The court upheld the admission of her testimony, even though her memory had been unlocked through the use of hypnosis.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

In Wyller v. Fairchild Hiller Corp., 503 F.2d 506 (9th Cir. 1974), the plaintiff, a helicopter crash survivor, sued the craft's manufacturer, Fairchild Hiller. At trial, "Wyller was permitted to testify as to his recollection [of the crash] both prior and subsequent to the [hypnosis] treatments." Wyller, supra, at 509. The court could not ". . . accept Fairchild's argument that Wyller's testimony was rendered inherently untrustworthy by his having undergone hypnosis. Wyller testified from his present recollection, refreshed by the treatments. His credibility and the weight to be given such testimony were for the jury to determine." Wyller, supra at 509. The fact of hypnosis affects credibility but not admissibility. In Kline v. Ford Motor Company, Inc., 523 F.2d 1067, 1069 (9th Cir. 1975), the survivor of a car crash, who suffered amnesia as a result of injuries sustained in the accident, sued the vehicle's manufacturer, Ford. Prior to her testimony at trial, she underwent hypnosis which revived her memory. "That her present memory depends upon refreshment claimed to have been induced under hypnosis goes to the credibility of her testimony not to her competence as a witness." Id.

Testimony based upon present recollection, which recollection had been refreshed through pre-trial hypnosis, has been admitted in criminal cases other than Harding, supra.

See also United States v. Adams, 581 F.2d 193 (9th Cir. 1978), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 1006 (1978) (discussed infra); State v. Jorgensen, 8 Or. App. 1, 492 P.2d 312 (1971) (murder witness who suffered from loss of memory as a result of trauma was, inter alia, subjected to hypnosis prior to trial; refreshed recollection testimony was admitted); State v. McQueen, 295 N.C. 96, 244 S.E. 2d 414 (1978) (murder witness was hypnotized prior to trial; trial testimony, refreshed by the hypnosis, was admitted); United States v. Awkard, supra, (prison murder; "Pre-trial hypnosis of witnesses is permitted in this circuit in both criminal and civil cases. The fact of hypnosis, if disclosed to the jury, may affect credibility of evidence, but not its admissibility." Id. at 669.)

In United States v. Adams, supra, Adams and his associates robbed a mail truck of approximately $9,600. During the course of the robbery, the mail truck driver was shot and killed. An eyewitness to the murder was hypnotized prior to trial. The defense unsuccessfully fought to suppress posthypnosis statements which the prosecution used to discredit the witness. The Ninth Circuit upheld the "admissibility of testimony based on memories refreshed under hypnosis." Id. at 198. The court went on to express concern, however, "that investigatory use of hypnosis on persons who may later be called upon to testify in court carries a dangerous potential for abuse. Great care must be exercised to insure that statements after hypnosis are the production of the subject's own recollection, rather than of recall tainted by suggestions received while under hypnosis." Id. at 198-199. In a footnote, the court further said "that, at a minimum, complete stenographic records of interviews of hypnotized persons who later testify should be maintained. Only if the judge, jury, and the opponent know who was present, questions that were asked, and the witness's responses can the matter be dealt with effectively. An audio or video recording of the interview would be helpful." Id. at 199 n.12. Adams was cited as controlling precedent in Awkard, supra, at 669.

The generally accepted admissibility at trial of testimony which had been refreshed or unlocked by pre-trial hypnosis is to be contrasted with the generally accepted inadmissibility at trial of out-of-court statements made while under hypnosis. See State v. Harris, 241 Or. 244, 405 P.2d 492 (1965). Harris, in the hope of collecting insurance monies, burned his wife to death during a staged automobile accident and was subsequently convicted of manslaughter. At trial Harris unsuccessfully tried to admit statements he made while under hypnosis.

Cf. People v. Harper, 111 Ill. App. 2d 204, 250 N.E. 2d 5 (1969), wherein the prosecutrix, while under the influence of Amytal, was able to recall the identity of her attacker. The court upheld suppression of the identification evidence which had been obtained while the prosecutrix was under the drug's influence. The court was not persuaded by the State's citation to Harding, supra, and concluded that there was ". . . no reason to equate examination under hypnosis and examination while under the influence of a drug having the effect of a so-called 'truth serum' except to note that the scientific reliability of neither is sufficient to justify the use of test results of either in the serious business of criminal prosecution." Harper, supra, at 7.

With regard to witnesses, hypnosis should not be employed unless there is a clear need for additional information, and it appears that hypnosis can be useful in aiding the witness to recall such information, as in Harding v. State, supra. A witness should never be hypnotized unless the witness gives consent, preferably in writing, and should always be given an explanation of the nature of hypnosis before being hypnotized.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Only a person trained in the art of hypnosis should be allowed to hypnotize a witness. See United States v. Adams, supra. During the interrogation, leading questions should be avoided to insure against the possibility of suggestion to the subject.

To avoid any questions which may subsequently arise, any interrogation made when the witness is subject to hypnosis should be videotaped whenever possible. In those cases where videotaping the interview is impossible, a transcript should be prepared in addition to any sound recording. In those cases where the interview session is videotaped, the tape need not be transcribed unless it is necessary in subsequent legal proceedings to provide a transcript. However, where a videotape is made but the interview is not transcribed, a copy of the videotape should be made to guard against the loss of or damage to the original tape.

9-4.612 Defendant

Because of the difficult problems involved, hypnosis should never be used on a suspect of a crime. In most cases, a suspect will probably refuse to submit to hypnosis; however, if he/she thinks he/she is clever enough, he/she may try to fake the hypnotic state and turn the interrogation to his/her advantage. Insofar as legal problems are involved, there is serious question as to what use, if any, can be made of information obtained from a suspect while he/she was under hypnosis. In general, courts will not admit into evidence any statements made by the defendant while in a hypnotic state. See People v. Ebanks, 117 Cal. 652, 49 P. 1049 (1897); State v. Pusch, 77 N.D. 860, 46 N.W. 2d 508 (1950); State v. Harris, supra.

Furthermore, if the defendant divulges information which leads to other evidence, this latter evidence could be excluded under the "fruit of the poisonous tree" doctrine. Another legal problem might arise if the defendant confesses after he/she has been placed under hypnosis but while not in the hypnotic state at the time of the confession. Because the defendant confessed under circumstances strongly suggesting he/she had been hypnotized just prior to the confession, it was held by a Canadian court that the confession would not be admitted unless the Crown could demonstrate that the confession was not influenced by hypnosis. Rex v. Booher (1928), 4 D.L.R. 795.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-4.613 Disclosure of Use of Hypnosis

If a witness has been hypnotized prior to trial, this fact should be disclosed in court. There are great differences between a statement made while under hypnosis and a statement made in the normal state, and the defendant should be given such information. In many cases, of course, the government will be required under 18 U.S.C. §3500(B) to produce the witness' prior statements. "Reversals have been predicated only on the failure to disclose the fact of hypnosis" [emphasis supplied]; United States v. Miller, 411 F.2d 825 (2d Cir. 1969). See Emmett v. Ricketts, 397 F. Supp. 1025 (N.D. Ga. 1975) (habeas writ issued). United States v. Adams, supra, at 198.

9-4.614 Expert Witness

The prosecution should be prepared to put on the stand an expert on hypnosis who can explain to the jury the nature of hypnosis and how it works in the interrogation process in order to dispel from the jurors' minds any misconceptions and doubts they may have concerning hypnosis. The expert should particularly be prepared to meet the argument that the mere repetition of a set of facts under hypnosis will further imprint on the subject's mind a belief in those facts and make him/her less likely to disavow them. The rebuttal to this argument is that while repetition of a story always has some tendency to imprint the story on the subject's mind, the telling of it under hypnosis per se adds nothing to the likelihood of further imprinting.

9-4.620 Authorization

A. General

Prior to using hypnosis on any witness the U.S. Attorney or Strike Force Attorney-in-Charge must obtain the authorization of the Director or the Associate Director, Office of Enforcement Operations (OEO), Criminal Division.

B. Non-Exigent Circumstances

1. To obtain such authorization, a written request should be submitted to the Office of Enforcement Operations of the Criminal Division stating the following:

- a. The name(s) of the person(s) to be hypnotized;

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

b. The reasons why the use of hypnosis is desired, i.e., for additional information (USAM 9-4.611, supra), and whether it appears that hypnosis can be useful in aiding the witness to recall such additional information (USAM 9-4.611, supra);

c. The fact that the person(s) to be hypnotized are not suspects or potential defendants in this or any related (federal or state) criminal investigation;

d. Whether the person(s) to be hypnotized are minors;

e. The fact that the person(s) to be hypnotized have consented to undergo hypnosis, and if the person(s) are minors, the fact that the parent(s) or legal guardian(s) have also consented for the minor(s) to undergo hypnosis;

f. The name(s) of the individual(s) who will induce hypnosis; and

g. The hypnotist's qualifications to induce hypnosis (as an example, one may indicate that Smith is licensed/certified as a psychologist and is a member of American Society of Clinical Hypnosis; attach resume; etc.).

2. "Written" requests may be sent to:

a. Director
Office of Enforcement Operations (OEO)
Criminal Division
United States Department of Justice
Box 7600
Ben Franklin Station
Washington, D.C. 20044

b. Telecopier location within OEO: FTS 633-3684.

c. Teletype located within OEO: OEO teletype symbol is JCOEO.

C. Exigent Circumstances

When true exigent circumstances exist (i.e., mail, telecopy, or teletype will not suffice), the OEO Director or Associate Director may verbally approve an oral request, which request must include the information noted at USAM 9-4.620(B)(1), supra. The OEO telephone number is FTS 633-3684.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-4.800 ACCESS TO AND DISCLOSURE OF FINANCIAL RECORDS

9-4.801 Introduction

Effective March 10, 1979, government access to and disclosure of financial records are governed by the Right to Financial Privacy Act of 1978, Title XI of Pub L. No. 95-630, 12 U.S.C. §§3401-3422, 92 Stat. 3697-3710. See also USAM 4-4.280, 4-4.530, 4-5.229, 4-11.850 and Civil Division Practice Manual, §§3.53.1--53.41.

Federal authorities may obtain access to financial records only if there is "reason to believe" (see USAM 9-4.824, infra) that the records are relevant to a legitimate "law enforcement inquiry" (12 U.S.C. §3401(7)), through means authorized and procedures established by the Act. "Law enforcement inquiry" is a broad term encompassing lawful inquiries into violations of or failures to comply with civil or criminal statutes or regulations, rules or orders issued pursuant thereto. See 12 U.S.C. §3401(7).

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

It is important to note that only a narrow class of records is covered by the Act (i.e., "financial records" pertaining to a "customer" obtained from a "financial institution"). See USAM 9-4.811--9-4.813, infra. See USAM 9-4.890, infra, for a capsule summary of the steps required to comply with the Act.

9-4.810 Right to Financial Privacy Act--General

9-4.811 Financial Institutions Covered

The term "financial institution" (12 U.S.C. §3401(1)) includes all banking-type financial institutions, as well as credit card issuers and consumer finance businesses, located in the United States, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, and the Virgin Islands.

Institutions not covered by the Act include bonding companies, credit bureaus, brokerage houses, government lending agencies, small business investment companies, the U.S. Postal Service, and Western Union. Although "credit card issuers" are covered by the Act, businesses which issue credit cards to facilitate sales (i.e., oil companies and large department stores) are "financial institutions" only with respect to records related to credit card use; cash sales or credit sales made other than pursuant to a credit card are not covered, as the business (i.e., the oil company or department store) is not a "card issuer" with respect to such transactions.

The term "card issuer" as used in the Financial Privacy Act is defined by reference to 15 U.S.C. §1602(n). Because that chapter of the United States Code is restricted to consumer credit cards, issuers of cards used for commercial, governmental, securities and other transactions excepted by 15 U.S.C. §1603 are not covered by the Financial Privacy Act.

Finally, the definition of "financial institution" at 12 U.S.C. §3401(1) focuses on "offices" of institutions located in the United

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

States, Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa and the Virgin Islands. The Act does not, therefore, protect records maintained in foreign offices of financial institutions.

9-4.812 Customers Covered

The term "customer" is a defined term (12 U.S.C. §3401(4),(5)) limited to natural persons or partnerships of five or fewer individuals. The Act does not protect corporations, associations, larger partnerships, trusts or other legal entities. Further, even though items in corporate or other noncovered accounts reflect transactions of private individuals (i.e., check endorsements or loan guarantees), such items are not covered by the Act. See H. R. Rep. No. 95-1383 at 217, 7 U.S. Code Cong. & Ad. News, 95th Cong., 2d Sess., at 9347-9348.

9-4.813 Records Covered

The term "financial records" (12 U.S.C. §3401(2)) means any original, copy of, or "information known to have been derived from" a record pertaining to a customer's relationship with a financial institution; 12 U.S.C. §3413(a) excepts financial records or information not identifiable with a particular customer and 12 U.S.C. §3413(g) excepts requests for basic account identification information. (See 9-4.846, infra). The Act does not protect records of a customer that appear in the account of a third person, such as check endorsements or items drawn by an individual and deposited into the account of a corporation if the item is obtained from a corporation's records. (See H. R. Rep. No. 95-1383 at 49, 7 U.S. Code Cong. and Ad. News, 95th Cong., 2d Sess., at 9321).

The phrase "information known to have been derived from" was inserted to prevent conscious circumvention of the Act. See USAM 9-4.849, infra, for situations where some information derived from financial records may be disclosed.

Only records obtained by a government authority on or after March 10, 1979, are covered by the Act (12 U.S.C. §3403(a); 15 U.S.C. §37(b)).

Furthermore, even as to financial information relating to accounts of individuals and partnerships of five or fewer partners, not all records of these entities are protected by the Act. Specifically, to be a protected record, an item in the account of an individual or covered partnership must also meet the four following tests:

- A. It must be held by a specific financial institution; and

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

B. It must pertain to an individual's (or covered partnership's) utilization of the services of that institution; and

C. It must relate to an account maintained by that individual (or covered partnership) at that institution; and

D. It must relate to an account maintained in that individual's (or partnership's) true name.

Applying the above four tests, the following items are not covered by the Act: forged or counterfeit financial instruments; records relating to an account established under a fictitious name; financial records in the possession of an institution other than the institution at which the person maintains an account (i.e., a check or money order cashed for a non-customer; bank surveillance photographs; contents of a safe deposit box sought pursuant to search warrant or records pertaining to services that do not involve an account relationship). Services not covered by the Act include sales of stock, performance of computer services, and other activities that do not involve a debtor-creditor relationship.

The basis for the four tests set out above is the legislative history of the Financial Privacy Act which explains that the definitions of "financial records" (12 U.S.C. §3401(2)) and "customer" (12 U.S.C. §3401(5)), "taken together, are intended to preclude application of the bill to anyone other than the person to whose account information the government seeks access." H. R. Rep. No. 95-1383 at 49, 7 U.S. Code Cong. & Ad. News, 95th Cong., 2d Sess., at 9321. Congressional intent to limit coverage of the Act to "account information" is further clarified by the House Report which states that a customer:

. . . is a person who uses a service of a financial institution, or for whom the institution acts as a fiduciary, but only in relation to an account maintained in the person's name. [Emphasis added.]

H. R. Rep. No. 95-1383 at 217, 7 U.S. Code Cong. & Ad. News, 95th Cong., 2d Sess., at 9347.

While the word "account" is not defined in the Right to Financial Privacy Act (Title XI) of the Financial Institution Regulatory and Interest Rate Control Act of 1978, Title IX (relating to electronic fund transfers) of that omnibus measure defines "account" as follows:

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

(2) the term 'account' means a demand deposit, savings deposit, or other asset account (other than an occasional or incidental credit balance in an open end credit plan as defined in section 103(i) of this Act), as described in regulations of the Board, established primarily for personal, family, or household purposes, but such term does not include an account held by a financial institution pursuant to a bona fide trust agreement . . . [Emphasis added.]

Pub L. No. 95-630, §903(2), 15 U.S.C. §169a(2). This definition of "account" is consistent with the meaning normally accorded the word in general legal encyclopedias:

"Account" is a word of ordinary and common acceptance in legal terminology and may be defined as an unsettled claim or demand by one person against another, based upon a transaction creating a debtor and creditor relations between the parties . . . [Emphasis added.] 1 Am Jur 2d, "Accounts and Accounting," p. 351.

In financial and mercantile transactions, however, it has been said that the term [account] has an appropriate technical import, being invariably used in the sense of a detailed or itemized account; and the word has been generally defined as: a business relation involving a record of debits and credits. [Emphasis added.] 1 CJS §49, p. 581.

Use of the term "account" in the definition of "customer" at 12 U.S.C. §3401(5), therefore, was not intended to encompass such services as renting of a safe deposit box, sales of stock, provision of computer services, and other activities which do not of necessity involve a debtor-creditor relationship. Rather, the word "account", when used in connection with financial institutions, is properly limited to its plain meaning as encompassing only checking, savings (or share) and loan services.

In summary, application of the definitions and tests set out above limits coverage of the Act to a narrow class of records. Determining whether needed financial information is covered by the Act, therefore, is an essential threshold issue in securing access to financial records.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-4.814 General Restrictions Upon Government Access

The Act (12 U.S.C. §§3402-3403) prohibits any agency or department of the United States from obtaining financial records from a financial institution, and financial institutions from providing them to the government, unless access is permitted by one of the exceptions to the Act (such as the exception for grand jury subpoenas), or is accomplished by one of five methods under procedures mandated in the Act:

- A. Customer authorization (see USAM 9-4.816, infra);
- B. Administrative summons or subpoena (see USAM 9-4.818, infra);
- C. Search warrant (see USAM 9-4.817, infra);
- D. Judicial subpoena (see USAM 9-4.818, infra); or
- E. Formal written request (see USAM 9-4.818, infra). The Act requires documentation of access to covered financial records; "informal access" (oral requests) to protected records is no longer permissible.

9-4.815 Certification of Compliance Requirement

Before protected records may be obtained under any authorized method of access, a supervisory official of the government authority seeking access must submit to the financial institution a certificate stating that all applicable provisions of the Act have been complied with (12 U.S.C. §3403(b)). Good faith reliance by the employees and agents of the financial institution upon this government certification of compliance absolves the institution of civil liability for any improper disclosure of records (12 U.S.C. §3417(c)). Certification is not required when proceeding by grand jury subpoena, an excepted method of access (12 U.S.C. §3413(i)).

Note that the broad and unequivocal wording of 12 U.S.C. §3403(b) requires certification of compliance when proceeding by customer authorization or search warrant as well as in connection with judicial subpoenas, administrative subpoenas and formal written requests. Further, the certificate of compliance should be presented to the financial institution only when all requirements of the Act have been satisfied. For example, if customer notice is given in connection with a subpoena or formal written request, the certificate of compliance should be presented to the financial institution only after the challenge period has passed without a customer challenge or after the court has dismissed a customer challenge. Of course, when no customer notice is required (as when an ex parte delay order has been obtained) the certificate of compliance may be delivered at the same time the subpoena or formal written request is served. Even where the Act is not applicable due to the nature of records sought or by virtue of an exception, some financial institutions may insist upon government certification as to the Act's inapplicability. Such certification can properly be given. See USAM 9-4.891, Form A (Form DOJ-461), for suggested form of certificate of compliance.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-4.816 Customer Authorization

The Act (12 U.S.C. §3404) establishes procedures for customer-authorized disclosures. Customers may authorize access to identified records by giving approval in writing for a period of no more than three months; such authorization is effective for only 90 days and is revocable at any time before the records are disclosed. The authorization must state the customer's rights under the Act and a customer may not be required to give an authorization as a condition of doing business with a financial institution. The authorization must identify the records sought and the purposes and agencies to which the records may be disclosed. Institutions must keep records of the agencies to which customer-authorized access is granted; these records are open to inspection by customers. Although the statute may be read as implying that the customer must give authorization directly to the financial institution, practical necessity dictates that the government directly obtain the authorization and deliver it to the financial institution on behalf of the customer.

Note: For maximum efficiency, the customer authorization should specify all agencies anticipated to require access; the purpose should also be stated broadly.

While there is no legislative history on the point, it is the view of the Department that any named account holder of a joint account may authorize government access to the account (i.e., either spouse in connection with a husband-and-wife account or any partner in connection with a partnership account). Perhaps the most analogous rule of law supporting this conclusion is that either spouse can consent to a search of a premises or of an item held jointly by husband and wife (see, e.g., United States v. Stone, 471 F.2d 170 (7th Cir. 1973), cert. denied, 411 U.S. 931 (1973), and that a partner may consent to a search of partnership business premises (see, e.g., Gurleski v. United States, 405 F.2d 253 (5th Cir. 1968), cert. denied, 395 U.S. 977 (1969)). Surely, no stricter standard should apply for a statutory right than for Fourth Amendment rights. See USAM 9-4.891, Form B (Form DOJ-462), for suggested form of customer consent and authorization.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-4.817 Search Warrant Procedures

The Act (12 U.S.C. §3406) establishes procedures for obtaining financial records by search warrant. Current law governing the obtaining of a warrant is not changed, but under the Act the government must, within 90 days after execution of the warrant for financial records, notify the affected customer or customers of the search. Customer notice may be delayed and the bank prohibited from notifying the customer of the search if a court order is obtained pursuant to 12 U.S.C. §3409. As noted at USAM 9-4.813, infra, the Act does not apply to warrants for the contents of safe deposit boxes. See USAM 9-4.824, infra, for a discussion of the court ordered delay procedure.

9-4.818 Definitions of Judicial Subpoena, Administrative Summons and Formal Written Request

An administrative summons or subpoena is a judicially enforceable demand for records issued by a government authority which is authorized by some other provision of law to issue such process; administrative process is governed by the Act (12 U.S.C. §3405).

Judicial subpoenas are any court orders to produce records, other than a grand jury subpoena, and are governed by the Act (12 U.S.C. §3407). The most common form of judicial subpoena is the trial subpoena issued for financial records of a customer who is not a party to the legal proceeding. (See USAM 9-4.841 for a discussion of the litigation exception, 12 U.S.C. §3413(e), which covers trial subpoenas for records of a defendant.)

Although the Act is clear on the point that grand jury subpoenas are excepted (12 U.S.C. §3413(i)), one financial institution has argued that grand jury subpoenas are a form of "judicial subpoena" and therefore subject to the customer notice and challenge requirements of 12 U.S.C. §3407. The court considering this argument, however, held that grand jury subpoenas are not "judicial subpoenas" within the meaning of the Act. See In re Subpoena to Testify Before the Grand Jury Issued to the Commonwealth National Bank, Civil Action No. 79-349, Misc. 79-24 (M.D. Pa., April 6, 1979) (unpublished opinion).

A formal written request is a new form of process created by the Act. It is designed to allow government authorities, such as the FBI and U.S. Attorneys' offices which do not have authority to issue administrative summonses or subpoenas, to request records in a formal manner. This procedure will replace the former practice of "informal access"--whereby government agents made oral requests to obtain bank records--with a new procedure that includes customer notice and challenge rights (except when a delay of notice court order is obtained). (See 28 C.F.R. §47.1, et seq., for regulations governing formal written requests by Department of Justice officials.)

The Act (12 U.S.C. §3408) governs formal written requests by agency officials. Unlike administrative process, a formal written request is not a coercive form of process (i.e., the financial institution may refuse to honor a request). In this respect, the formal written request is analogous to the previous informal access which could also be refused. See USAM 9-4.891, Form C (Form DOJ-463), for suggested form of formal written request.

9-4.819 Customer Notice Requirements for Judicial Subpoenas,
Administrative Process and Formal Written Requests

All three of these forms of process require that, unless a delay of notice order is obtained, the government agency seeking protected records must notify the customer before it can obtain the records. The extent of the notice required is spelled out in the Act and requires (1) a description of the records sought, (2) a statement of the purpose of the inquiry, and (3) an explanation of the procedure by which the customer may challenge the government process in court. Along with the notice, the customer is to be provided a copy of the government process and blank motion and affidavit forms for filing in court when properly completed.

In the joint account context, notice to one joint account holder will, in the opinion of the Department, constitute notice to all due to the relationship of the joint account holders. See USAM 9-4.816. Where an investigation is directed at one spouse in a husband-wife account or at one or more partners in a partnership account, customer notice should be directed to the spouse or to the partner or partners who are the subjects of the investigation.

Further, trial subpoenas are sometimes issued simply to obtain clearer copies or originals of documents to which the government has previously obtained access. Such a "re-disclosure" does not constitute a disclosure of financial records within the meaning of the Financial Privacy Act. (See, e.g., the interpretation of "disclosure" in a Privacy Act of 1974 case, Harper v. United States, 423 F.Supp. 192, 197 (D.S.C. 1976): "[a disclosure is] . . . the imparting of information . . . which was previously unknown to the person to whom it is imparted." [Emphasis added.]) Caution is required in seeking re-disclosure to insure that only records already in custody are obtained; the preferred practice is to provide the financial institution with copies of those items for which clearer copies or originals are sought. The financial institution will likely request certification of inapplicability of the Act; such certification may be given.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Finally, the provision at 12 U.S.C. §3409(a)(3)(E) was especially designed to authorize ex parte orders delaying customer notice of a trial subpoena where such notice would delay trial. See H. R. Rep. No. 95-1383, at 222, 7 U.S. Code Cong. & Ad. News, 95th Cong., 2d Sess., at 9352:

In addition, subsection 1109(a)(3) is a general harm provision designed to accommodate unanticipated needs for delay of notice. It is intended to be used only where the potential harm to an investigation is of a magnitude similar to the listed jeopardizing factors, or in the case of a trial or other ongoing official proceeding, where notice would unduly delay the proceeding. The last exception is a narrow one designed, for example, to permit the use of trial subpoenas for records immediately before or during a proceeding. [Emphasis added.]

9-4.821 Venue for Customer Challenge Suits

The appropriate courts in which a customer challenge may be filed should be listed in the notice by the agency seeking access. In the case of judicial subpoenas, venue for the customer challenge is restricted to the court issuing the subpoena (12 U.S.C. §3410(a)). In the case of administrative process and formal written requests, venue is governed by 28 U.S.C. §1391(e). This means that the customer may challenge in any one of as many as three Districts: (1) "where a defendant (the government) resides" (usually the District of Columbia); (2) "where the cause of action arose" (the site of the financial institution); or (3) "where the plaintiff resides" (the residence of the customer).

See 124 Cong. Rec. H 11736 (daily ed. October 5, 1978) (remarks of Rep. McKinney) ("This would allow the customer the option of going to whatever district court that is the closest to him and thereby giving him the advantage of faster service and reply.").

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-4.822 Substance of Customer Notice

The purpose of the investigation as stated in the customer notice need not include reference to specific sections of Title 18 believed to have been violated but should include the generic classification of the offenses (i.e., fraud, bribery of a federal official, extortion, narcotic trafficking, theft of federal property). The customer notice must also state the name and business address of the government official to be served with copies of customer challenge papers; this generally should be the official who initiates the legal process seeking access.

The provisions of the Act pertinent to customer notice can be found in the sections relating to the various forms of process: 12 U.S.C. §3405 for administrative process; 12 U.S.C. §3407 for judicial subpoenas; and 12 U.S.C. §3408 for formal written requests.

See USAM 9-4.891 for suggested forms of customer notice (Form D, Form DOJ-464); motion to enjoin or quash (Form E, Form DOJ-465); and sworn statement (Form F, Form DOJ-466).

9-4.823 Timing of Access Following Customer Notice

The Act gives a customer 10 days following personal service of notice or 14 days following mailing of notice within which to file a court challenge to government access. These time requirements are interpreted as calendar days except where the last day for filing falls on a weekend or court holiday in which case the filing deadline is extended to the close of business for the next court day. See Rule 6(a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and Rule 459(a) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure.

Because the Act permits customers to file and serve the government by mail and because the Act assumes that four days should be allowed for mail delivery, agencies seeking access to financial records should wait an additional four days to be certain that no challenge has been filed. In effect, therefore, the 10 or 14 day delay becomes a 14 or 18 day delay with time allowed for receipt by mail of the service copy of the customer's challenge papers. Note the agency official's obligation under 12 U.S.C. §§3405(3), 3407(3), and 3408(4)(B).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-4.824 Court-Ordered Delay of Notice Procedure

The Act (12 U.S.C. §3409) authorizes delayed customer notice in the case of judicial subpoenas, administrative process, and formal written requests as well as in connection with search warrants and inter-agency transfers of financial records. In certain situations the government may apply to a court for a delay of up to 90 days in customer notification (180 days for an initial search warrant delay).

To obtain an order delaying customer notice, the government agency must make a showing to a magistrate or district judge that:

A. The investigation in connection with which the records are sought is within the agency's jurisdiction;

B. There is "reason to believe" the records sought are relevant to the investigation; and

C. There is "reason to believe" that customer notice would result in:

1. Danger to the physical safety of any person;
2. Flight from prosecution;
3. Destruction of evidence;
4. Intimidation of witnesses; or
5. Some other serious jeopardy to the investigation or trial of comparable degree.

Renewals of the delay period may be granted upon the same showing of necessity.

"Reason to believe", as it is used in 12 U.S.C. §3410 and elsewhere in the Act, is a lower standard than probable cause; it would, for example, permit access where the only information available is an anonymous "tip". See 124 Cong. Rec. H 11737 (daily ed. October 5, 1978) (remarks of Rep. Pattison and Rep. La Falce) ("'Reasonable belief' and 'reason to believe' mean the same thing. 'Reasonable belief' does not mean 'probable cause.' We all agree that probable cause is far too high a standard to meet in the early stages of an investigation.")

In addition to permitting the government to postpone notification to the customer, any court order under this section will also prohibit the financial institution from disclosing to the customer that records are being sought.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

12 U.S.C. §3409(a) provides that an application for court-ordered delay of customer notice may be filed in any "appropriate court." Since these proceedings are by definition ex parte, there is no reason why they cannot be brought in the United States district court where either the agency or the financial institution is located. It generally would be preferable, however, to obtain the order from the court which has personal jurisdiction over the financial institution.

Practice Note: Because the Act excepts grand jury subpoenas, the 12 U.S.C. §3409 delay procedure does not apply to grand jury subpoenas, but see USAM 9-4.845, infra, for guidance on obtaining a protective order to prevent financial institutions from notifying customers of the issuance of a grand jury subpoena.

See USAM 9-4.891, infra, for suggested forms of application for ex parte delay of notice (Form G, Form DOJ-467) and delay of notice order (Form H, Form DOJ-468).

9-4.825 Post-Delay Procedures

Where customer notice has been delayed by court order or where access has been obtained pursuant to search warrant or the emergency exception of 12 U.S.C. §3414(b), the Act requires post-notice to the customer. (12 U.S.C. §§3409(b)(3), 3409(c), 3406(b)(c)).

See USAM 9-4.891, infra, for suggested form of post-notice of search warrant (Form I, Form DOJ-469); search warrant where post-notice is delayed by court order beyond 90 days (Form J, Form DOJ-470); formal written request, administrative process or judicial subpoena (Form K, Form DOJ-471); and emergency access (Form L, Form DOJ-472).

9-4.826 Customer Challenge Proceedings

The procedures to be followed in customer challenge proceedings are set forth at 12 U.S.C. §3410. Within the prescribed time period (10 to 14 days depending upon whether notice was personally served or served by mail), the customer may file a motion to quash an administrative summons or judicial subpoena, or a motion to enjoin the government from pursuing a formal written request. To support the motion, the customer must file a "sworn statement" stating that he/she is the person whose records are being sought (12 U.S.C. §3410(a)(1)) and stating reasons for believing that the records sought are not relevant to the investigation, that the Act has not been substantially complied with, or any other legal reason for denying access (12 U.S.C. §3410(a)(2)). See Hancock v. Marshall, 86 F.R.D. 209 (D.D.C. 1980) (movant must make out prima facie case of impropriety before the government is required to respond). Note that the Act clearly contemplates a dramatically simplified procedure for customer challenges including the suspension of normal service requirements. Further, mere filing of a customer challenge action precludes government access to financial records until the matter is fully adjudicated. See 12 U.S.C. §§3405(3), 3407(3) and 3408(4)(B).

One issue likely to arise in every customer challenge is the basis for the government's belief that the records sought are relevant to a legitimate law enforcement inquiry. In the first customer challenge proceeding litigated, involving records of a non-litigant sought in connection with a civil proceeding, the court granted the government's request for an opportunity to inspect the financial records in question prior to court determination of the relevancy of the records. See Romo v. United States Department of Justice, Civil No. 79-Div-1990 (MEL), (S.D.N.Y. May 15, 1979) (unpublished order).

9-4.827 Government Response to Customer Challenge

If the customer complies with the above requirements, the government then bears the burden of proving that it is entitled to access (12 U.S.C. §3410(b)). To do this, the government must show that there is reason to believe that the records sought are relevant to a legitimate law enforcement inquiry (i.e., a lawful investigation or official proceeding inquiring into a violation of any criminal or civil statute or regulation, rule or order) within the jurisdiction of the investigating agency. See McGloshen v. United States Department of Agriculture, 480 F. Supp. 247 (W.D. Ky. 1979) (to prevail against a customer challenge, the government must show only "a demonstrable reason to believe that the law enforcement inquiry is legitimate and a reasonable belief that the records sought are relevant to that inquiry.") The test of relevance is broad and should encompass anything that might be used as evidence or that might lead to evidence. The inquiry must be legitimate; it cannot be pursued to harass the subject or for political purposes. (See, e.g., 124 Cong. Rec. H11737 (daily ed. October 5, 1978) (remarks of Rep. Pattison) ("An investigation conducted solely for purposes of political harassment or intimidation or otherwise in bad faith is not legitimate . . . [but] . . . We do not want judges standing over prosecutors telling them when they have enough evidence to begin an investigation.")). If the customer meets this burden, a summons or subpoena will be quashed and a formal written request enjoined. Note that the court is expressly empowered to find for the customer if there has not been "substantial compliance" with the Act. See 12 U.S.C. §3410(c); but see H. R. Rep. No. 95-1383 at 224, 7 U.S. Code Cong. & Ad. News, 95th Cong., 2d Sess., at 9533. ("This language is intended only to ensure that minor technical violations of the bill are not the basis for denying access.") The Act (12 U.S.C. §3410(b)) requires that customer challenges be decided by the court within seven calendar days of the filing of the government's response; through this provision, Congress has recognized the need for expeditious resolution of customer challenges. This requirement should not be read as authorizing access during the pendency of a challenge proceeding.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-4.828 In Camera Review of Government Response

The Act provides that court review of the government's response to a challenge may be in camera (12 U.S.C. §3410(b)). Factors meriting in camera review include the same circumstances as justify delay of notice: flight from prosecution, destruction of or tampering with evidence, intimidation of potential witnesses, or other serious jeopardy to an investigation or trial. It is the view of the Department that an adversary hearing would jeopardize an investigation or trial if it might reveal the identity of an informant or result in improper discovery practices by a defendant (i.e., lead to disclosure or premature discovery of information to which a defendant would not be entitled through discovery rules, the Jencks Act, or Brady). See H. R. Rep. No. 95-1383 at 224, 7 U.S. Code Cong. & Ad. News, 95th Cong., 2d Sess., at 9354; (in camera provision is "to prevent abuse of the challenge procedure as a method of pre-trial discovery . . .").

9-4.829 Appeals and Other Post-Challenge Matters

Denials of customer challenges are not appealable until after the conclusion of any legal proceedings brought against the customer based upon the financial records (12 U.S.C. §3410(d)). Because of this restriction on customer appeals, the government must notify the customer upon a determination not to proceed further with the investigation in connection with which financial records have been obtained over a customer challenge. Such notice does not preclude a later legal proceeding based in whole or in part on newly obtained evidence. Where records are obtained over a customer challenge, the Act requires the government to certify to the appropriate court if no prosecutorial decision is made within 180 days of disclosure. See 12 U.S.C. §3410(d).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The running of any applicable statute of limitations is suspended during the time that a customer challenge action is pending in court (12 U.S.C. §3419). Violations of the procedures of the Act do not affect the admissibility of the information obtained. See 12 U.S.C. §3417(d); United States v. Brown, 605 F.2d 389, 395-396 (8th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 100 S.Ct. 466 (1979).

See USAM 9-4.891, infra, Form M (Form DOJ-473), for suggested form of notice that no legal proceeding is contemplated.

9-4.831 Rights and Duties of Financial Institutions

Financial institutions are obligated to assemble records requested through administrative summons/subpoena or judicial subpoena even during the pendency of customer challenge proceedings. See 12 U.S.C. §3411. Financial institutions have the right to resist a government request for records on various grounds (i.e., vagueness, undue burden); such rights remain unaffected by the Act but cannot be asserted by the customer. See 12 U.S.C. §3410(f).

9-4.832 Interagency Transfers of Financial Records

The Act (12 U.S.C. §3412) sets forth new restrictions on the transfer of financial records obtained under the Act among federal departments and agencies. These procedures are substantially different from existing restrictions found in the Privacy Act of 1974, 5 U.S.C. §552a.

Financial records may be transferred to another federal agency under 12 U.S.C. §3412 only if an official of the transferring agency certifies in writing that there is reason to believe that the records are relevant to a legitimate law enforcement inquiry of the receiving agency. In addition, within 14 days after any transfer, the customer must be notified of the transfer unless the government has obtained, in connection with its original access or at the time of the transfer, a court order delaying notice under the provisions of 12 U.S.C. §3409, as discussed at USAM 9-4.824, supra.

Transfer restrictions do not apply to intra-departmental transfers (i.e., the FBI or DEA may transfer financial records to U.S. Attorneys' offices or to the Department's litigating Divisions without restriction). In addition, post-transfer-notice is only required for transfers between federal departments; the Act does not restrict transfers of financial records from state or local government agencies to federal agencies or from federal to state agencies. Neither does the Act cover transfers of financial records between a federal agency and an agency of a foreign government. Also note that 12 U.S.C. §3413(g) expressly excepts from post-notice the transfer of account identification information obtained pursuant to that subsection.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Further, the Act is interpreted as authorizing federal bank supervisory agencies to refer criminal cases to the Department of Justice without post-notice to the customer if the crime involved is closely related to the management of the financial institution and if the scope of information included in the referral is limited to those items which may be reported by a financial institution under USAM 9-4.849, infra. For additional information on the authority of federal bank supervisory agencies to report crime, see May 22, 1979, Office of Legal Counsel opinion to the Deputy Attorney General and July 17, 1979, memorandum from the Criminal Division to the Deputy Attorney General. (Transmitted to U.S. Attorneys by memorandum from the Executive Office of U.S. Attorneys dated August 9, 1979.)

Please note that the transfer restrictions of 12 U.S.C. §3412 do not apply to records obtained pursuant to any of the Act's exceptions, including 12 U.S.C. §3413(a) (records not identifiable with a particular customer); 12 U.S.C. §3413(c) (records required to be reported by statute); 12 U.S.C. §3413(e) (records obtained pursuant to the Federal Rules of Civil or Criminal procedure); 12 U.S.C. §3413(f) (records obtained pursuant to an administrative subpoena issued by an administrative law judge); 12 U.S.C. §3413(g) (account identification information) and 12 U.S.C. §3413(i) (grand jury subpoenaed records).

Practice Note: Caution is required in connection with transfers between state and federal agencies as the Congress clearly intended that state and local agencies not be used as sub-agents of federal agencies to circumvent the restrictions of the Act. Transfers that would create an appearance of impropriety should be avoided. If, for example, a state agency offers financial records to a federal agency without being requested to do so or if records previously obtained by a state agency are provided in response to a federal inquiry, the transfer does not create an appearance of impropriety. If, however, financial records obtained by a state subsequent to a federal inquiry are transferred to the requesting federal agency, there would be an appearance of abuse, if the timing and circumstances of the transfer were such as to suggest that state officials were merely acting as sub-agents of federal officials for purposes of circumventing the Financial Privacy Act.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Note that the Act is interpreted not to require a second post-notice to the customer when records are re-transferred from the transferee to the original transferring agency.

See USAM 9-4.891, infra, Form N (Form DOJ-474), for suggested form of certification for transferring records and Form P (Form DOJ-476) for form of customer notice of transfer.

9-4.840 Exceptions

9-4.841 Litigation Exception

The Act does not apply when financial records are sought through the Federal Rules of Civil or Criminal procedure or through other rules in connection with any judicial proceeding to which the customer is a party. See 12 U.S.C. §3413(e). Upon issuance of a trial subpoena for the financial records of a criminal defendant pursuant to Rule 17(c) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, therefore, the notice, challenge, reporting and other requirements of the Act do not apply. Some financial institutions may insist upon issuance of a certificate of compliance in connection with a trial subpoena for records of a criminal defendant; such a certification that the Act is inapplicable by virtue of the litigation exception may be issued. See USAM 9-4.819, supra, for procedure to be followed in connection with a criminal trial subpoena for financial records of non-parties.

For the reasons set out at USAM 9-4.816, supra, no notice is required in connection with Rule 17(c) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure trial subpoenas even though the records sought are held in a joint husband-wife or partnership account.

9-4.842 Grand Jury Subpoena Exception

The Act does not apply to subpoenas issued by federal grand juries (12 U.S.C. §3413(1)), but 12 U.S.C. §3420 does contain new restrictions upon the handling and use of financial records subpoenaed by grand juries. This section requires that financial records obtained by grand jury subpoena must be actually "returned and presented" to the grand jury and must be destroyed or returned to the financial institution if not used in connection with the return of an indictment, a criminal prosecution or a purpose permitted by Rule 6(e) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The broad wording of the grand jury exception is significant:

Nothing in this title (except sections 1115 [requiring reimbursement effective October 1, 1979] and 1120 [imposing handling restrictions once records are in federal custody] shall apply to any subpoena or court order issued in connection with proceedings before a grand jury. [Emphasis and explanatory language added.]

By virtue of the wording of the exception, grand jury subpoenas are not subject to the certification of compliance, customer notice, or civil liability provisions of the Act. In fact, aside from the new reimbursement and handling provisions, the Act leaves federal grand jury subpoenas precisely where they were before the Act.

Pre-Act case law--including United States v. Miller, 425 U.S. 435 (1976), which held that customers of financial institutions have no standing to challenge a federal grand jury subpoena directed to the institution--remains in effect.

The legislative history of the Act points out that grand jury subpoenas were excepted from the Act because:

The grand jury is the single most important investigative tool of criminal law enforcement. In addition, grand jury procedures are already subject to judicial scrutiny. Furthermore, the Supreme Court decisions indicate that the constitutional status of the grand jury protects it from burdensome delays. Finally, grand juries are protected by rules keeping their proceedings secret. Expanded notice and challenge rights might diminish grand jury secrecy and threaten the privacy of individuals being investigated.

H. R. Rep. No. 95-1383 at 228, 7 U.S. Code Cong. & Ad. News, 95th Cong., 2d Sess., at 9358. The five major purposes of the rule of grand jury secrecy are set out in United States v. Procter & Gamble Co., 356 U.S. 677, 681-82 n.6 (1958).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The "actually returned and presented" language of 12 U.S.C. §3420(1) is not interpreted by the Department as requiring either return of the records by a representative of the subpoenaed financial institution or physical production of the records before the grand jury in every case. Rather, it is the view of the Department that 12 U.S.C. §3420(1) should be interpreted in keeping with the realities of grand jury practice. For purposes of convenience and economy, therefore, the subpoenaed party may be permitted to surrender records to a federal agent so long as a report is made in due course to the grand jury. Note the handling restrictions discussed in USAM 9-4.844, infra, however.

The question has arisen as to whether the "actually returned and presented" language of the Act prohibits agents of the grand jury from inspecting grand jury subpoenaed records at the financial institution or from searching through records of financial institutions to locate items covered by the subpoena. The first court confronting these issues held that such activities are not prohibited by the Act, unpublished opinion, In re Grand Jury Proceedings, Misc. Action No. 314, Section "B," (E.D. La., June 13, 1979) (unreported opinion). More recently, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit has affirmed a district court opinion stating that the Act does not prohibit agents of a grand jury from searching for and copying bank records sought pursuant to grand jury subpoena, In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 636 F.2d 81, 84-85 (5th Cir. 1981).

9-4.843 Procedure for Grand Jury Subpoena of Financial Records

To carry out the Congressional mandate, a grand jury log of all subpoenas duces tecum for financial records issued and returned must be established and maintained. Where these requirements pose special difficulties, financial records may be sought by formal written request or other process authorized by the Act.

The grand jury log of subpoenas for financial records should contain the following information: (1) description of the grand jury subpoena, (2) date issued, (3) date returned, (4) subsequent disposition of records (disposition notes might contain entries such as "turned over to FBI Agent Jones for analysis on 7/17/79; returned to GJ by Agent Jones with summary on 7/24/79"). Entries as to disposition of records are important because the purpose of the log requirement is to establish a "paper trail" so that handling of subpoenaed records is documented for later review if necessary. The log requirement does not necessitate establishment of a separate system if the information required to be maintained therein is documented in some other way (i.e., grand jury minutes or docket entries).

The Financial Privacy Act requires full compliance with previously stated Department grand jury policy as published at USAM 9-2.162:

(A) U.S. Attorney or Assistant U.S. Attorney shall personally authorize the issuance of a subpoena duces tecum to obtain financial records in such a way as to avoid any appearance that the matter was left to the discretion of an investigative agent serving the subpoena;

(B) Every such subpoena shall be returnable only on a date when the grand jury is in session, and the subpoenaed records shall be produced before the grand jury, unless the grand jury itself has previously agreed upon some different course, see United States v. Hilton, 534 F.2d 556, 564-65 (3d Cir. 1976); and

(C) If, for the sake of convenience and economy, the subpoenaed party is permitted voluntarily to relinquish the records to the government agency serving the subpoena, a report shall be made in due course to the grand jury as to the nature and contents of the records.

9-4.844 Procedures for Handling Financial Records Subpoenaed by the Grand Jury

Financial records subpoenaed by a grand jury must be accorded the same protection as other "grand jury materials," such as grand jury transcripts, and must be used only in connection with obtaining an indictment for prosecution of the indicted offense, or for purposes authorized by Rule 6(e) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure or by Brady v. Maryland, 373 U.S. 83 (1963).

Because 12 U.S.C. §3420 incorporates Rule 6(e) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, FBI and DEA access to grand jury-subpoenaed financial records is the same as with respect to other Rule 6(e) material. More specifically, 12 U.S.C. §3420 permits agents, when authorized by the attorney for the government, to:

- A. Have ready access to grand jury--subpoenaed records;

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

B. Copy such records as necessary in connection with criminal investigative activities;

C. Summarize such records in FD-302's and other reports;

D. Circulate such reports to other offices as necessary to check and cross-check information; and

E. Use such reports in setting out criminal investigative leads to other offices.

9-4.845 Prohibiting Banks from Notifying Customers of Grand Jury Subpoenas

A number of financial institutions are interpreting the Act as requiring that they notify customers of grand jury subpoenas. It is the view of the Department that such notice is contrary to the intent of the Act. First, in many cases customer notice of a grand jury subpoena would frustrate an investigation or endanger the physical safety of grand jurors, witnesses, and officials working with the grand jury. Second, such notice jeopardizes grand jury secrecy. (See H. R. Rep. No. 95-1383 at 228, 7 U.S. Code Cong. & Ad. News, 95th Cong., 2d Sess., at 9358: "Expanded notice and challenge rights [in connection with grand jury subpoenas] might jeopardize grand jury secrecy and threaten the privacy of individuals being investigated.") Third, all duties of customer notification set out in the Act are imposed upon government authorities, not financial institutions. And fourth, no legitimate purpose is served by customer notification as customers have no standing to challenge government access to records pursuant to grand jury subpoena (see United States v. Miller, 425 U.S. 435 (1976)).

In addition to informal discussions with financial institutions and their counsel requesting confidentiality in connection with grand jury subpoenas for financial records, some federal prosecutors have issued letters to financial institutions documenting the need for confidentiality and the lack of any obligation on the part of the financial institution to give customer notice of grand jury subpoenas. Issuance of such letters is proper if they are appropriately drafted. See In re Vescova Special Grand Jury, 473 F. Supp. 1335 (C.D. Cal. 1979) (government attorneys cannot legally impose an obligation of secrecy upon financial institution). State laws requiring customer notice of grand jury subpoenas are not applicable to federal legal process. In re Grand Jury Subpoena (Connecticut Savings Bank), 481 F. Supp. 833 (D. Conn. 1979).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Where informal efforts to obtain agreement from financial institutions not to notify customers of grand jury subpoenas are unavailing, some federal prosecutors have sought and obtained court orders prohibiting such notice. The two major impediments to obtaining such protective orders are (1) the language of Rule 6(e) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure ("No obligation of secrecy may be imposed upon any person except in accordance with this rule.") and (2) the fact that 12 U.S.C. §3409 (authorizing protective orders) would seem not to encompass grand jury subpoenas due to the wording of the grand jury exception at 12 U.S.C. §3413(i). Nevertheless, some courts have granted protective orders in connection with grand jury subpoenas.

See Forms Q1 to Q4 for the form of motion and order successfully used in District of Maryland and unpublished order in In re Grand Jury Subpoena Duces Tecum dated September 16, 1980, CR 80-93 Misc. (N.D. Cal., September 16, 1980) (unpublished opinion).

It is the position of the Department that the Financial Privacy Act, by authorizing imposition of an obligation of secrecy upon financial institutions in connection with administrative subpoenas, trial subpoenas, and formal written requests, impliedly authorizes a similar obligation in connection with grand jury subpoenas, under 12 U.S.C. §3409 and 18 U.S.C. §1651. Such orders do not conflict with Rule 6(e) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure because they are limited to the fact of receipt of a grand jury subpoena rather than to matters occurring before the grand jury. In the alternative, even if Rule 6(e) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure is found to embrace the fact of receipt of a grand jury subpoena, protective orders directed to financial institutions are not subject to Rule 6(e) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure because such orders are based upon the institution's status as a record custodian regulated by the Financial Privacy Act rather than upon the financial institution's status as a grand jury witness. Supporting this interpretation is the fact that it would be nonsensical if courts were empowered to prohibit customer notification in connection with a formal written request but not in connection with a constitutionally contemplated form of legal process which was excepted from the Financial Privacy Act because customer notification in connection therewith would jeopardize grand jury secrecy. See In re Swearingen Aviation Corp., 486 F.Supp. 9 (D. Md. 1979), modified, per curiam, 605 F.2d 125 (4th Cir. 1979).

9-4.846 Account Identification Information Exception

The Act does not require customer notice and a challenge opportunity nor does it impose restrictions upon interagency transfers where only basic account identification information is involved (i.e., name and address of customer, type of account, and account number). The government is required, however, to use some form of process to obtain such account identification information. In addition to authorizing special access to account identification information for a specific customer, 12 U.S.C. §3413(g) also permits more specific inquiries as to the account number associated with a particular financial transaction or class of transactions as well as accounts associated with a foreign country or subdivision thereof. See 12 U.S.C. §3413(g)(2) for international financial transactions covered.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

This exception may be used to investigate transactions (such as check forgeries) where a crime has been committed and is necessary to trace a financial instrument through various accounts to find the wrongdoer. In addition, it will be useful to confirm that a financial institution does indeed have financial records sought in connection with a particular investigation before action is initiated to secure access to the records.

See USAM 9-4.891, Form O (Form DOJ-475), for suggested form of formal written request for account identification information. (This form includes a built-in certificate of compliance.) Other forms of process (i.e., an administrative subpoena) may be used to obtain account identification information.

9-4.847 Foreign Intelligence and Secret Service Protective Function
Exceptions

12 U.S.C. §3414(a) excepts authorized foreign intelligence investigations and functions of the Secret Service in protecting the President and certain other federal officials and candidates. The exemption may only be used if a certificate of compliance with the Act, signed by a supervisory official of a rank designated by the head of the government authority seeking access, is submitted to the financial institution.

An annual tabulation of the use of this exception must be provided to the Congress. Financial institutions receiving certificates in foreign intelligence and protective function cases are prohibited by the Act from revealing to the customer that access to financial records was sought or has been obtained. 12 U.S.C. §3414(a)(3). Such prohibition of notice should be enforceable by court order under 12 U.S.C. §3418.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-4.848 Emergency Access Exception

12 U.S.C. §3414(b) excepts government access to financial records in narrowly limited emergency situations where any delay would create imminent danger of physical injury, serious property damage or flight from prosecution. No customer notice is required in such situations. To avoid abuse of this provision, records may be obtained only if the certification of compliance is made by a supervisory official of a rank designated by the head of the government authority seeking access. (The Attorney General has re-delegated to heads of Departmental units this authority to designate supervisory officials for certification.) In addition, the government must file in court within 5 days thereafter a sworn statement by the supervisory official justifying use of the emergency exception and (unless a court order delaying notice is obtained pursuant to 12 U.S.C. §3409(c)) must notify the customer as soon as practicable that his/her records were obtained. An example of a situation justifying use of the emergency exception would be a kidnapping case where financial records might lead to location of the victim or suspect.

9-4.849 Exceptions Permitting Disclosures by Financial Institutions

A. Notwithstanding the restrictions upon disclosure of financial records by financial institutions, institutions are permitted to notify government authorities of possible violations of law reflected in records within the custody of the institution (12 U.S.C. §3403(c)). This is interpreted to permit financial institutions to disclose the nature of the offense suspected, the identity of the customer involved, the identifying numbers of the accounts in which records reflecting the offense are contained, the dates of the transactions in question, and other information as is necessary to enable law enforcement authorities to initiate an investigation of the suspected offense. The 12 U.S.C. §3403(c) exception does not permit financial institutions to turn over or to verbally disclose the contents of financial records; rather, it is intended that the financial institution will provide information of the nature described above so that the law enforcement agency can then obtain access to the financial records through a form of legal process authorized by the Act (administrative process, grand jury subpoena, formal written request, etc.).

B. Financial institutions may also disclose financial records necessary to collect debts owed to the institutions (see 12 U.S.C. §3403(d)(1)) or to process and administer government loans (12 U.S.C. §3403(d)(2)).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

C. Because the Act contemplates that law enforcement authorities must proceed under the Act to obtain actual financial records required in the investigation and prosecution of suspected offenses reported by financial institutions, the information provided in the financial institution's report of crime must be sufficient to allow the government authority to meet the requirements that the Act sets out for access to records. Specifically, the government must be able to "reasonably describe" (12 U.S.C. §3402) the records sought and to issue a certificate of compliance with the Act (required in connection with all access mechanisms except grand jury subpoenas). Moreover, in issuing a certificate of compliance, the government authority must have "reason to believe that the records sought are relevant to a legitimate law enforcement inquiry." See 12 U.S.C. §§3405(1), 3407(1) and 3408(3). Such a description and determination can hardly be made and certified on the strength of a financial institution's unelaborated and unevaluated suspicions alone. Finally, because access to financial records may be sought by customer authorization pursuant to 12 U.S.C. §3404, particularly where access to records of victims is required, names and addresses of all protected customers whose records contain evidence of the suspected offense must be supplied so that law enforcement authorities can seek customer authorization of disclosure.

D. In reporting that a suspected criminal violation has occurred, is occurring, or will occur, a financial institution may disclose the following information to a federal law enforcement agency:

1. The name(s) and address(es) of the person(s) suspected and his/her (their) relationship with the financial institution, if any;
2. The identity of the financial institution(s) or office(s) thereof involved;
3. The specific offense(s) suspected;
4. The name(s) and address(es) of the account holder(s) and the account number(s) and type(s) of account(s) in which evidence of the suspected offense(s) is located; and
5. A general description (dates and any suspicious circumstances) of the transaction(s) involved in the suspected offense(s).

Of course, any information not derived from records protected by the Act which will assist the law enforcement agency may be freely disclosed.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

To illustrate the extent of information which may be disclosed in connection with a financial institution's notification to federal law enforcement authorities of a suspected criminal offense, the following example is provided:

E. Example: The employing institution, First Financial, suspects one of its tellers, Steve Jones, of taking advantage of his position at First Financial's State Street branch office to embezzle funds from the accounts of six customers, one of which is a corporation, and of depositing the proceeds of these embezzlements in Jones' own account at the State Street office. Under the Act, First Financial may report the crime to federal law enforcement authorities providing all pertinent information not covered by the Act. In this case, such non-protected information might include records of Jones' shortages and overages as a teller, complete records relating to the corporate account which has been victimized, information from First Financial's employment records pertaining to Jones including such items as his employment application and salary level, and information obtained from interviews with other employees of First Financial [if such information is not derived from financial records pertaining to Jones' personal account] which indicates that Jones is living in a style not in keeping with his income as a teller or that Jones engages in suspicious activities while performing his job as teller.

Of course, financial records relating to Jones' personal account are protected, as are records pertaining to the five accounts of private individuals who are being victimized by Jones' embezzlement. The victims' records may, however, be obtained pursuant to the non-target exception. 12 U.S.C. §3413(h)(1)(A); (see USAM 9-4.850, infra). Even if derived from such protected records, however, the following information may be reported to federal law enforcement authorities:

1. Jones' full name and address, the fact that he is employed as a teller at the State Street office, and the fact that he is suspected of embezzlement;
2. The fact that the suspected offenses all involve transactions occurring at First Financial's State Street office;
3. The fact that the offenses appear to involve violations of federal criminal law (i.e., 18 U.S.C. §656);
4. The names and addresses of the customers who are suspected victims of the embezzlements, the fact that they are believed to be victims, the fact that they have accounts at the State Street office,

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

the account numbers of the victims' and Jones' accounts, and the fact that Jones is suspected of depositing embezzled funds in his account (again records pertaining to accounts of victims may be obtained pursuant to 12 U.S.C. §3413(h)(1)(A)); and

5. The dates of the suspicious transactions involving each victim's account and Jones' account together with a description of any circumstances leading to the belief that the withdrawals and deposits in question were part of an embezzlement scheme (for example, inquiries by customer victims as to specific unexplained debits to their accounts).

F. The notification of crime may also include the financial institution's analysis of the information described above together with an analysis of the significance of the suspected offense. While the general description and analysis of suspicious transactions may not be so detailed as to eliminate any need for law enforcement access to actual records, it should be sufficient to enable federal authorities (1) to reasonably describe records needed in the investigation, and (2) to determine that there is reason to believe such records are relevant to a legitimate law enforcement inquiry. Once provided with sufficient information to comply with these two requirements of the Act, federal authorities can proceed to obtain access to records pursuant to the procedures set out by the Act.

G. Finally, while reports of crime by financial institutions must be entirely voluntary, federal agents are free to advise officers and employees of financial institutions that they are authorized by 12 U.S.C. §3404(c) to report suspected crimes to federal law enforcement authorities.

H. The intent of the Congress is clear that financial institutions and their officers, employees and agents should report crimes as authorized by 12 U.S.C. §3403(c):

A bank could and should, report to the appropriate officials information pertaining to the cashing of a forged check, the passing of counterfeit currency or bonds, or the use of its services to facilitate a fraudulent scheme . . . Once information is received by government authorities, they must obtain any pertinent records that they seek in accordance with the procedures of the bill. [Emphasis added.]

9-4.851 Non-Target Exception

12 U.S.C. §3413(h)(1)(A) is a particularly significant provision from the standpoint of law enforcement access. The exception provides as follows:

Nothing in this title (except sections 3403, 3417, and 3418) shall apply when financial records are sought by a government authority--

(A). In connection with a lawful proceeding, investigation, examination, or inspection directed at the financial institution in possession of such records or at a legal entity which is not a customer. [Emphasis added.]

The first portion of this exception authorizes access, limited only by certification of compliance and potential civil liability, in connection with investigations targeted against custodian financial institutions. The second portion of the exception, however, disjunctively broadens its sweep to include a far greater range of "excepted" targets, thereby permitting ready access to customer records in connection with embezzlement investigations directed against bank officers or employees, fraud investigations directed against outside swindlers, or any investigation requiring access to records of numerous customers and directed against an entity other than the customer whose records are sought.

The Department interprets the term "legal entity" as encompassing natural persons; this interpretation is grounded on three bases: (1) the term "entity" is sufficiently broad to encompass natural existence and is defined for general purposes as a "real being" (Black's Law Dictionary at 626 (4th ed. 1972)); (2) the exception does not read ". . . or another legal entity" which would have been the logical phrasing had Congress intended to denote only non-natural entities such as financial institutions; and (3) a non-natural legal entity (other than a small partnership) could never be a "customer" under the restrictive definition of the Act so that if "legal entity" was not intended to encompass natural persons there would have been no need for the added qualification of "...

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

which is not a customer." Moreover, the fact that such an investigative target (i.e., a teller) may coincidentally maintain an account of some sort at the financial institution in question does not render the target a "customer" within the meaning of 12 U.S.C. §3413(h)(1)(A). In an embezzlement case, therefore, the fact that the teller suspected of the embezzlement happens to maintain a checking account at that bank does not prevent the use of 12 U.S.C. §3413(h)(1)(A) to obtain access to records of the victims of the embezzlement. Of course, if records pertaining to the teller's checking account are sought in connection with an embezzlement investigation, they could not properly be obtained under the exception.

Note: It is the position of the Department of Justice that the non-target exception must be used if it is applicable. The Civil Division has twice declined to defend challenge actions when this exception was applicable and should have been employed.

9-4.852 Bank Supervisory Agency Exception

Agencies listed in 12 U.S.C. §3401(6) which exercise supervisory or regulatory functions with respect to financial institutions have free access to financial records to perform audits, develop regulations, monitor monetary policies and similar activities without providing customer notice or certification of compliance. Such supervisory agencies are also permitted to exchange examination reports and "other information" with other supervisory agencies without restriction under 12 U.S.C. §3412(d).

9-4.853 General Accounting Office Exception

The General Accounting Office, which is Congress' arm for performing audits of government agency operations, is allowed free access to any financial records held by the agencies it is examining (12 U.S.C. §3413(j)).

9-4.854 Internal Revenue Service Exception

The Act does not prohibit the disclosure of financial records obtained pursuant to the Internal Revenue Code. Accordingly, administrative summonses issued by the Internal Revenue Service in administering the tax laws are governed by the Internal Revenue Code, which establishes notice and challenge procedures and are, therefore, excepted from coverage by the Act (12 U.S.C. §3413(c)).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-4.855 Required Report Exception

Financial information that is required to be reported by statute or regulation is not subject to the Act; this includes reports on savings account interest payments and reports on certain cash and international transactions required by the Bank Secrecy Act (12 U.S.C. §3413(d)).

9-4.856 Exception for Financial Records Pertinent to Federally Insured or Guaranteed Loans

Those agencies responsible for federal loan, loan insurance, or loan guaranty programs where customers are the recipients of government assistance are excepted by 12 U.S.C. §3413(h)(1)(B) from customer notice in connection with access to financial records to be used for loan administration and collection functions. Records obtained pursuant to this exception may only be used for these purposes, however, unless customer notice and opportunity to challenge are afforded.

Federal agencies responsible for administering loan programs must advise borrowers of the agencies' access rights and must certify to the bank their compliance with the Act. Financial institutions must keep a record, open to inspection by the customer, of all instances in which access is granted pursuant to this exception.

9-4.857 Securities and Exchange Commission Exception

The Securities and Exchange Commission was expressly excluded from the Act's provisions until two years from the date of enactment (November 10, 1980). See 12 U.S.C. §3422. The SEC was brought under the provisions of the Act by Pub. L. No. 96-433 but on a somewhat different basis than other federal agencies.

9-4.860 Reimbursement of Financial Institutions

A. Generally, the government is not required to reimburse record custodians for the cost of complying with federal legal process. Rather, compliance with legal process is viewed as an incident of citizenship or, in the case of commercial entities, a cost of doing business. See, e.g., United States v. Bryan, 339 U.S. 323 (1950); Hurtado v. United States, 410 U.S. 578 (1973). But see also, In re Grand Jury No. 76-3 (MIA) Subpoena

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Duces Tecum, 555 F.2d 1306 (5th Cir. 1977), holding that a court may order reimbursement under Rule 17(c) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, if compliance with a subpoena would otherwise be "oppressive" or "unreasonable."

B. Effective October 1, 1979, 12 U.S.C. §3415 requires government authorities to reimburse financial institutions for the costs incurred in furnishing certain financial records of individuals and partnerships of five or less individuals in connection with law enforcement inquiries.

C. The costs incurred by a financial institution in supplying information pursuant to requests by the Department under 12 U.S.C. §§3403 - 3408, 3413(i), 3414 are reimbursable by the Department if the "return date" is on or after October 1, 1979. No payment shall be made unless the financial institution submits an itemized bill or invoice showing specific details concerning the search, reproduction, and transportation costs. (Witness and mileage fees will be treated in the same manner as other witness expenses.)

D. The following rates of reimbursement have been established by the Federal Reserve Board in accordance with the Right to Financial Privacy Act (12 U.S.C. §3415) and are published at 12 C.F.R. §219 (Regulation S):

1. Actual search and retrieval costs--$2.50 per quarter hour for time spent by employees in locating, retrieving, reproducing, packaging and/or preparing documents for shipment;
2. Actual computer costs--time and necessary supplies;
3. Reproduction costs--15 cents per page; and
4. Transportation costs--to locate and retrieve records and/or to transport summoned records to the Department of Justice attorney's office.

E. Investigative agencies are responsible for costs incurred pursuant to their activities, up to the time that judicial process (a grand jury subpoena, a trial subpoena or a search warrant) is used to obtain financial information. At that point, the proper litigating component becomes responsible for costs incurred pursuant to its activities.

F. The costs other than witness expenses will be treated as administrative costs, classified under the following object classification codes (O/C):

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

1. O/C 2540 is used when a customer authorizes disclosure of financial data, 12 U.S.C. §3404.

2. O/C 2541 is used when financial records are obtained pursuant to an administrative subpoena or summons, 12 U.S.C. §3405.

3. O/C 2542 is used when financial records are obtained pursuant to a search warrant, 12 U.S.C. §3406.

4. O/C 2543 is used when financial records are obtained pursuant to a judicial subpoena, 12 U.S.C. §3407.

5. O/C 2544 is used when financial records are obtained pursuant to a formal written request, 12 U.S.C. §3408.

6. O/C 2545 is used when financial records are obtained pursuant to a Grand Jury subpoena, 12 U.S.C. 3413(i).

7. O/C 2546 is used when financial records are obtained pursuant to special procedures, 12 U.S.C. §3414.

G. Financial institutions shall complete Section B of the Request for Financial Information, Form OBD 211, and return the form, together with the requested information, to the Requesting Officer or designee which shall be an officer of the initiating U.S. Attorney's office or litigating division. The appropriate official shall review the invoice to determine that it is itemized, that costs are reasonable, and that the services and/or records were received. If these criteria are met, the official shall approve the invoice by signing it, indicating the appropriate Public Law Section, and forwarding it to the administrative office to assign the appropriate accounting classification code.

H. Administrative officials shall forward all approved originals to:

U.S. Department of Justice
Accounting Operations Group
P.O. Box 7405
Ben Franklin Station
Washington, D.C. 20044

Invoices received by the Accounting Operations Group which are not properly itemized or approved will be returned to the requesting officer. U.S. Marshals WILL NOT pay for these invoices unless a specific authorization is made by this office.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

I. Attached (as Form R) is a sample notice which could be submitted to financial institutions with Form S (Form OBD-211) to summarize reimbursement procedures and restrictions.

Before approving Forms OBD-211, Request for Financial Information, or payment, Administrative Officers must:

1. Ensure that the financial records requested pertain to legitimate "customers" as defined in the Act and USAM 9-4.812, supra, (i.e., individuals and partnerships of five or less individuals). Reimbursement cannot be made when the financial records relate to any other legal entities.

2. Ensure that reimbursements are authorized only for legitimate "financial institutions" as defined in the Act and USAM 9-4.811, supra. Many requests have been received to reimburse institutions which are not covered under the Act.

3. Ensure that Forms OBD-211 are properly prepared, that the appropriate "Section" in Item Number 18 is identified, and that the rates of reimbursement are in accordance with the entitlements and limitations authorized.

4. Work with attorneys or investigative agents handling cases and financial institutions, if necessary, to ensure that amounts charged are reasonable for the services actually received.

Note: The government is not required to reimburse financial institutions for records when the subject of the investigation is the financial institution in possession of the records sought. See In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 636 F.2d 81 (5th Cir. 1981).

9-4.870 Customer Civil Actions for Violations of the Act

12 U.S.C. §3417 authorizes customers to file a civil action to recover damages for violations of provisions of the Act either by the government or by a financial institution. Recovery is $100 regardless of the volume of the records involved. Actual damages sustained as a result of the violation are recoverable. Punitive damages are recoverable if the violation was wilful or intentional. Court costs and reasonable attorney's fees are also recoverable.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

A financial institution, its employees and agents, are absolved of liability for any violation of the Act if good faith reliance is placed upon a government certificate of compliance with the Act (12 U.S.C. §§3417 (c), 3403(b)).

While a civil action against the government is directed at and will be satisfied by the government agency rather than the individual government official involved, any court finding of a wilful or intentional violation of the Act requires a disciplinary proceeding by the Merit Systems Protection Board against the official involved (12 U.S.C. §3417(b)). See Civil Division Practice Manual at §3-53.1, et seq., for the defense of civil actions against federal agencies.

9-4.880 Reporting Requirements

The Act (12 U.S.C. §3421) establishes various reporting requirements including a report to be prepared by the Administrative Office of United States Courts detailing the number and outcome of government applications for delay of customer notice and of customer challenge suits. In addition, government agencies obtaining records through administrative or judicial process, search warrant, formal written request, or intelligence or emergency access provisions must report on such activities to the appropriate Congressional Committees. Such reports must include the number of requests under each applicable provision and any other relevant information. For the Department of Justice, the Office of Management and Finance will compile and coordinate data submitted by departmental units. See Order DOJ 2110.40 (April 30, 1980), Form T, for reporting procedures and format.

9-4.890 Compliance Checklist

First determine whether the records sought are covered by the Act (i.e., do they pertain to an "account" (checking, share, savings, or loan account) of a "customer" (living natural person or partnership of five or less partners) obtained from a "financial institution" (bank, savings and loan, credit union, mortgage bank, finance company, or credit card issuer) where the "customer" maintains his/her account in his/her true name?).

If the records are covered by the Act, access procedures will vary depending upon the form of process utilized. Following are the major steps to be observed for the seven access mechanisms most often employed by Department of Justice personnel to obtain covered records:

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

A. Customer Authorization (12 U.S.C. §3404; USAM 9-4.816, supra)

1. Obtain execution by customer of authorization (Form DOJ-462) and execute certificate of compliance (Form DOJ-461).
2. Serve upon or mail to financial institution:
  - a. the authorization,
  - b. certificate of compliance, and
  - c. reimbursement materials (Form OBD 211 and Form R).
3. Obtain records within 90 days and use pursuant to general transfer restrictions.**
4. Process reimbursement and maintain data necessary for annual statistical report to Congress.

B. Administrative Subpoena, Trial Subpoena and Formal Written Request (12 U.S.C. §§3405, 3407, 3408; USAM 9-4.818-9-4.819, supra) (Does not apply to trial subpoenas for records of parties to litigation.)

1. Execute subpoena or formal written request (Form DOJ-463).
2. Either:
  - a. Serve upon or mail the subpoena or request to financial institution with copy of subpoena or request plus:
    - (1) customer notice (Form DOJ-464),
    - (2) blank motion form (Form DOJ-465), and
    - (3) blank sworn statement form (Form DOJ-466) to the customer.

** General Transfer Restrictions: May transfer records freely within Department of Justice (DEA, FBI, Crm Div, USAs, etc.) and to state, local or foreign governments (subject to Privacy Act of 1974) but must certify (Form DOJ-474) and give customer notice of transfer within 14 days (Form DOJ-476) if transfer is made to non-DOJ federal agency or department.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

b. Wait 14 days from date of personal service or 18 days from date of mailing to customer, or until court has dismissed any challenge filed by the customer.

c. Execute and serve upon or mail to financial institution a certificate of compliance (Form DOJ-461) and reimbursement materials (Form OBD 211 and Form R).

d. Obtain records and use pursuant to general transfer restrictions.

e. If records are obtained over a customer challenge, notify customer if decision is made not to prosecute (Form DOJ-473), or make necessary certification to court if no prosecutorial decision has been made within 180 days of access (see 12 U.S.C. §3410(d)).

or

a. Obtain court order delaying notice (Forms DOJ-467 and 468).

b. Serve upon or mail to financial institution:

(1) the subpoena or request,

(2) the court order,

(3) a certificate of compliance (Form DOJ-461), and

(4) reimbursement materials (Form OBD 211 and Form R).

c. Obtain records and use for the specific purposes listed in the authorization (see 12 U.S.C. §3403(4)) and/or pursuant to general transfer restrictions.

d. Upon expiration of court-ordered delay, serve upon or mail to customer the notice of access and delay (Form DOJ-471).

3. Process reimbursement and maintain data necessary for annual statistical report to Congress.

C. Search Warrant (12 U.S.C. §3406; USAM 9-4.817, supra)

1. Obtain issuance of search warrant.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

2. Serve: (a) warrant, (b) certificate of compliance (Form DOJ-461), and (c) reimbursement materials (Form OBD-211 and Form R) upon financial institution and secure records.

3. Use records pursuant to general transfer restrictions.**

4. Within 90 days of execution of warrant, either secure court order delaying notice (Forms DOJ-467 and 468) or notify customer of execution of the warrant (Form DOJ-469).

If a Court order is obtained delaying notice, use Form DOJ-470 for customer notice upon expiration of period of delay.

5. Process reimbursement and maintain data necessary for annual statistical report to Congress.

D. Grand Jury Subpoena (12 U.S.C. §§3413(i), 3420; USAM 9-4.842-9-4.845, supra).

1. Obtain issuance of subpoena.

2. Serve upon or mail to financial institution with reimbursement materials (Form OBD-211 and Form R).

3. Log in subpoenaed records (see USAM 9-4.843, supra).

4. Use records per Rule 6(e), Fed. R. Crim. P.

5. Process reimbursement and maintain data necessary for annual statistical report to DOJ.

E. Basic Identifying Account Information Exception (12 U.S.C. §3413(g); USAM 9-4.846, supra).

1. Either:

a. execute formal written request for account information (Form DOJ-475) which has built-in certificate of compliance;

---

** General Transfer Restrictions: May transfer records freely within Department of Justice (DEA, FBI, Crm Div, USAs, etc.) and to state, local or foreign governments (subject to Privacy Act of 1974) but must certify (Form DOJ-474) and give customer notice of transfer within 14 days (Form DOJ-476) if transfer is made to non-DOJ federal agency or department.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

or

b. execute subpoena or other process and certificate of compliance (Form DOJ-461).

2. Serve upon financial institution and secure information.

F. Non-Target Exception (12 U.S.C. §3413(h)(1)(A); USAM 9-4.850, supra) (if records of non-target are sought)

1. Execute certificate of compliance (Form DOJ-461) and legal process, if desired.

2. Serve on financial institution and obtain information.

3. Records may be used only for purpose for which obtained and transferred only if to be used against financial institution or target other than subject of records.

G. Emergency Access (12 U.S.C. §3414(b); USAM 9-4.848, supra)

1. Obtain execution of certificate of compliance (Form DOJ-461) by supervisory official designated by head of agency (may be accompanied by legal process if desired).

2. Serve upon financial institution, obtain records and use per general transfer restrictions.**

3. Within five days of access, file sworn statement with court justifying emergency access, AND, either:

a. notify customer of access (Form DOJ-472), OR

b. obtain court order delaying notice (Forms DOJ-467 and 468)

**General Transfer Restrictions: May transfer records freely within Department of Justice (DEA, FBI, Crm Div, USAs, etc.) and to state, local or foreign governments (subject to Privacy Act of 1974) but must certify (Form DOJ-474) and give customer notice of transfer within 14 days (Form DOJ-476) if transfer is made to non-DOJ federal agency or department.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

4. Follow up as practicable with reimbursement materials (Forms OBD-211 and Form R).

5. Process reimbursement and maintain data necessary for annual statistical report to Congress.

6. If court order is obtained delaying notice, notify customer at expiration of period of delay (Form DOJ-471).

STATEMENT OF CUSTOMER RIGHTS UNDER THE RIGHT TO FINANCIAL PRIVACY ACT OF 1978

Federal law protects the privacy of your financial records. Before banks, savings and loan associations, credit unions, credit card issuers or other financial institutions may give financial information about you to a Federal agency, certain procedures must be followed.

Consent to Financial Records

You may be asked to consent to make your financial records available to the Government. You may withhold your consent, and your consent is not required as a condition of doing business with any financial institution. If you give your consent, it can be revoked in writing at any time before your records are disclosed. Furthermore, any consent you give is effective for only three months, and your financial institution must keep a record of the instances in which it discloses your financial information.

Without Your Consent

Without your consent, a Federal agency that wants to see your financial records may do so ordinarily only by means of a lawful subpoena, summons, formal written request, or search warrant for that purpose.

Generally, the Federal agency must give you advance notice of its request for your records explaining why the information is being sought and telling you how to object in court. The Federal agency must also send you copies of court documents to be prepared by you with instructions for filling them out. While these procedures will be kept as simple as possible, you may want to consult with an attorney before making a challenge to a Federal agency's request.

Exceptions

In some circumstances, a Federal agency may obtain financial information about you without advance notice or your consent. In most of these cases, the Federal agency will be required to go to court to get permission to obtain your records without giving you notice beforehand. In these instances, the court will make the Government show that its investigation and request for your records are proper.

When the reason for the delay of notice no longer exists, you will usually be notified that your records were obtained.

Transfer of Information

Generally, a Federal agency which obtains your financial records is prohibited from transferring them to another Federal agency unless it certifies in writing that the transfer is proper and sends a notice to you that your records have been sent to another agency.

Penalties

If a Federal agency or financial institution violates the Right To Financial Privacy Act, you may sue for damages or to seek compliance with the law. If you win, you may be repaid your attorney's fees and costs.

Additional Information

If you have any questions about your rights under this law, or about how to consent to release your financial records, please call the official whose name and telephone number appear below:

Records or information concerning your transactions held by the financial institution named in the attached subpoena, summons, or formal written request are being sought by the _____

in accordance with the Right To Financial Privacy Act of 1978, 12 U.S.C. §§3401-3422, for the following purpose(s):

_____

If you desire that such records or information not be made available, you must:

- (1) Fill out the accompanying motion paper and sworn statement (as indicated by the instructions beneath each blank space) or write one of your own, stating that you are the customer whose records are being requested by the Government, and either giving the reasons you believe that the records are not relevant to the legitimate law enforcement inquiry stated in this notice or any other legal basis for objecting to the release of the records.
- (2) File the motion and sworn statement by mailing or delivering them to the Clerk of any one of the following United States District Courts (in some cases, there will be only one appropriate court):

- (3) Serve the Government authority requesting the records by mailing (by registered or certified mail) or by delivering a copy of your motion and sworn statement to _____
_____.
- (4) Be prepared to come to court and present your position in further detail.
- (5) You do not need to have a lawyer, although you may wish to employ one to represent you and protect your rights.

If you do not follow the above procedures, upon the expiration of ten days from the date of service or fourteen days from the date of mailing of this notice, the records or information requested therein may be made available. These records may be transferred to other Government authorities for legitimate law enforcement inquiries, in which event you will be notified after the transfer.

Very truly yours,

MOTION FOR ORDER PROHIBITING NOTIFICATION OF SERVICE OF GRAND JURY SUBPOENAS DUCES TECUM

The United States of America, by _____, United States Attorney for the District of _____, and (insert name of Assistant U.S. Attorney) Assistant United States Attorney for said District, moves the Court, pursuant to 12 U.S.C. §3409, and 28 U.S.C. §1651, and pursuant to the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, for an Order prohibiting (insert name of bank) from serving upon its customers notification of the service upon that institution of a Grand Jury subpoena duces tecum, and states as follows:

1. On (insert month and year), this Court assigned to the _____ Grand Jury, (insert month and year), Term, an investigation of (insert brief description of nature of investigation). With the assistance of the Office of the United States Attorney for the District of (insert state) the Special Grand Jury is presently conducting an investigation of certain violations of the federal criminal laws involving (insert brief description of nature of investigation). [On (insert date), that investigation was transferred by the Court to the (insert month and year) Term _____ Grand Jury _____].

2. On or about (insert date of subpoena), a subpoena duces tecum was issued, on behalf of the Grand Jury, addressed to the Custodian of Records of (insert name of bank), and calling for production by them of certain financial records before the (insert month and year), Term _____ Grand Jury. A copy of that subpoena is attached hereto. There is reason to believe that the records, whose production is sought under the terms of the subpoena, are relevant to the _____ Grand Jury's present investigation of, (insert investigation description). The subpoena was served upon the (insert name of bank) shortly after its issuance.

[3. When served with the Grand Jury's subpoena, the custodian of records of the (insert name of bank) notified the Government that, in accordance with the Bank's policy (and/or applicable state law), the Bank would undertake immediately to notify its customers of the fact of service of that subpoena, despite the fact that such notice is not required by the Right to Financial Privacy Act. Such disclosure to the customers of the financial institution subpoenaed will result in serious prejudice to the _____ Grand Jury's ongoing investigation. In particular, notification of those customers of the service of that subpoena will seriously jeopardize the _____ Grand Jury's investigation by impairing its ability to obtain the testimony of other potential witnesses, (and will seriously jeopardize an ongoing undercover investigative effort presently being conducted by the Federal Bureau of Investigation).]

WHEREFORE, the Government respectfully requests this Court issue an order as follows:

(1) Directing that, for a period not to exceed 90 days, (insert name of bank) shall not provide its customers, either directly or indirectly, with notice of the fact of service of the Grand Jury subpoenas duces tecum dated (insert date of subpoena), or notice of the nature of the documents whose production is commanded under the terms of the subpoena, or notice of the fact that such documents have been produced before the Grand Jury in compliance with the subpoena's terms; and

(2) Commanding that this motion and the order issued pursuant hereto shall remain sealed for a period of time not to exceed 90 days, or until further order of this Court, whichever shall first occur, and providing that a copy of the order issued pursuant hereto may be served upon the custodian of records of the (insert name of bank); and

(3) Commanding that a copy of the Grand Jury subpoena duces tecum dated (insert date of subpoena), attached hereto, shall remain sealed until the _____ Grand Jury, (insert month and year) Term, concludes its present investigation of (insert investigation description), or until further order of this Court, whichever shall first occur.

MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF MOTION FOR AN ORDER PROHIBITING NOTIFICATION OF THE SERVICE OF GRAND JURY SUBPOENA

The United States has moved the Court to prohibit (insert name of bank) from disclosing to its customers, for a period of ninety days, that the bank has been served with a Grand Jury subpoena duces tecum. 1/ The motion is filed under the terms of the Right to Financial Privacy Act, 12 U.S.C. §3401 et seq., pursuant to the Court's inherent powers, and under the provisions of the All Writs Act, 28 U.S.C. §1651.

The Government's application is made for the soundest of reasons. 2/ The Order whose entry is requested is framed in terms that parallel precisely the terms of the delayed-notice provisions of the Right to Financial Privacy Act, 12 U.S.C. §3409. And, the Order has been framed to be issued pursuant to the Court's inherent powers, and under the terms of the All Writs Act, 28 U.S.C. §1651. See United States v. New York Telephone Co., 434 U.S. 159, 172-178 (1977). The Order is drawn so that no one will be prohibited from relating "facts within their knowledge acquired beyond the grand jury room;" United States v. Central Supply Association, 34 F. Supp. 241, 245 (N.D. Ohio 1940). Rather, by the least restrictive available means, the Order will simply defer the time at which the (insert name of bank) will become free to disclose publicly what it stated to or learned from the Grand Jury; King v. Jones, 319 F. Supp. 653, 658-659 (N.D. Ohio 1940).

1/ The requested Order would also prohibit the financial institution from notifying its customers of the matter of the documents subpoenaed, and of the nature and extent of compliance by the institutions with the subpoena's terms.

2/ The reasons advanced by the Government are explicated fully in an Affidavit filed ex parte and in camera together with this pleading. The government contends that the financial institution and its customers are not entitled to those reasons at this time, and requests the court to retain the Affidavit filed by the government under seal of court.

In pertinent part, Rule 6(e) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure provides that "No obligation of secrecy may be imposed upon any person except in accordance with this rule." 3/ Although seemingly absolute on its face, those parts of Rule 6(e) were designed to ameliorate the "unnecessary hardship" of imposing an oath of secrecy upon the witness concerning testimony before the grand jury. See Fed. R. Crim. P., Rule 6(e), Advisory Committee Note 2 (emphasis supplied). 4/

Both prior and subsequent to the enactment of Rule 6(e) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, the courts have recognized that some circumstances exist in which some appropriate limitation upon disclosure

3/ Rule 6(e) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure provides:

(1) General Rule.--A grand jury, an interpreter, a stenographer, an operator of a recording device, a typist who transcribes recorded testimony, an attorney for the Government, or any person to whom disclosure is made under paragraph (2)(A)(ii) of this subdivision shall not disclose matters occurring before the grand jury, except as otherwise provided for in these rules. No obligation of secrecy may be imposed on any person except in accordance with this rule. A knowing violation of Rule 6 may be punished as a contempt of court. [Emphasis added.]

4/ Whatever "hardship" may be imposed upon the witnesses served with the Requested Orders is clearly not "unnecessary." To the contrary, the imposition of any such "hardship" is essential to preserve the legitimate functions of the grand jury and the integrity of the judicial process itself. And, whatever "hardship" may be imposed is, in any event, not overly burdensome on either those subject to the orders or the customers themselves.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

of matters may be imposed upon grand jury witnesses, despite the seemingly absolute language of the Rule. In Goodman v. United States, 108 F.2d 516 (9th Cir. 1939), the court found it "well within the discretionary power of the court to impose an obligation of secrecy not alone upon grand jurors, but upon the witnesses, if the court believes the precaution necessary in the investigation of crime." Id. at 520. And, in United States v. Central Supply Association, 34 F. Supp. 241, 245 (N.D. Ohio 1940), the court enumerated at least five circumstances in which such a precaution might be found "necessary in the investigation of crime." See King v. Jones, supra, 319 F. Supp., at 658.

Following the enactment of Rule 6(e) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure in 1946, 5 F.R.D. 573, 583 (1946), <sup>5/</sup> the witness secrecy provision of Rule 6(e) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure was not subjected to judicial scrutiny until the decision in United States v. Smyth, 104 F. Supp. 279 (N.D. Cal. 1952). Finding that the rule enunciated in Goodman survived the enactment of Rule 6(e) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, the Smyth court noted that:

...the secrecy of grand jury proceedings is of substance and not of procedure. The power of the trial court to enforce secrecy is jurisdictional and a necessity if grand juries are to function. The Federal Constitution encysted the common law grand <sup>5/</sup> It is interesting to note that one of the framers of Rule 6(e) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure suggested that the Rule itself contemplated the possible imposition of a limited oath of secrecy upon grand jury witnesses, and that the purpose of including the witness secrecy provision of the Rule was only to circumscribe the type of oath which might properly be imposed. After noting that the "Rule is specific that 'no obligation of secrecy may be imposed on any person except in accordance with this rule,'" George F. Longsdorf, a member of the Advisory Committee that drafted the original version of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, suggested in 1951, that the "rules do not prescribe the forms of oaths to be taken by grand jurors or by witnesses called before the grand jury." That fact was mentioned, he added, "to make allusion to the practices sometimes formerly followed of exacting before Federal grand juries a form of oath to witnesses which exacted greater secrecy than Rule 6(e) requires." G.F. Longsdorf, The Beginnings and Background of Federal Criminal Procedure, in 4 W.W. Barron, Federal Practice and Procedure, at 24 (Rules ed. 1951).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

jury with all its incidents. The Rules could not change the Constitution nor prevent the court from imposing secrecy upon everyone in connection with such a proceeding in the public interest. See also United States v. Central Supply Association, 34 F. Supp. 241 (N.D. Ohio 1940). Smyth, supra, 104 F. Supp. at 280-81, n.5.

The same conclusion has been reached by each of the other courts that have considered the courts' powers to impose some appropriate limitations upon the disclosures which federal grand jury witnesses are able to make. See In re Proceedings Before The Grand Jury Summoned October 12, 1970, 321 F. Supp. 238, 240 (N.D. Ohio 1970); King v. Jones, supra 319 F. Supp., at 657; In re Grand Jury Witnesses, 370 F. Supp. 1282, 1285 n.5 (S. D. Fla. 1974).

Furthermore, the entry of an Order such as that requested here is well within the powers of the Court. The grand jury is an arm of the court, which exercises jurisdiction of persons and subjects under the authority and supervision of the Court. In re Long Visitor, 523 F.2d 443, 446-47 (8th Cir. 1975), and In re Gompman, 531 F.2d 262, 266 (5th Cir. 1976). As the Supreme Court noted in Brown v. United States, 359 U.S. 41, 49 (1958):

A grand jury is clothed with great independence in many areas, but it remains an appendage of the court, powerless to perform its investigative function without the court's aid, because powerless itself to compel the testimony of witnesses. It is the court's process which summons the witness to attend and give testimony, and it is the court which must compel a witness to testify if, after appearing, he refused to do so. 6/

6/ Since the grand jury is able to compel the attendance of witnesses only through the use of the district court's process, it might well be argued that the district court has the power in this case to issue the requested Orders as a logical derivative of its power to issue the subpoenas duces tecum to which the Order relates, under Rule 17 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. In such case the witness secrecy provision of Rule 6(e) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure may not be called into play at all.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Form Q-2

See also O'Bryan v. Chandler, 352 F.2d 987, 990 (10th Cir. 1965); In re A & H Transportation, Inc., 319 F.2d 69, 71 (4th Cir. 1963); and In re Seiffert, 446 F. Supp. 1153 (N.D.N.Y. 1978). The power of a district court to enforce secrecy is jurisdictional and an incident of the court's supervisory authority over grand juries "encysted" by the Constitution. See United States v. Smyth, supra, at 280-81, n.5.

Federal courts are endowed by All Writs Act, Title 28, United States Code, Section 1651, with "the power to issue such commands . . . as may be necessary to effectuate and prevent the frustration of orders . . . previously issued in [the] exercise of jurisdiction otherwise obtained." United States v. New York Telephone Co., supra, at 172. While "the power of federal courts to impose duties upon third parties is not without limits," id., the district courts should be "trusted to exercise their powers under the All Writs Act only in cases of clear necessity and to balance the burden imposed upon the party required to render assistance against the necessity." Id. at 165, n.5. Though "unreasonable burdens may not be imposed," the power conferred by the All Writs Act is available "as a 'legislatively approved source of procedural instruments designed to achieve 'the rational ends of law.'" Id. at 172, citing Harris v. Nelson, 394 U.S. 286, 299 (1969); and Price v. Johnston, 334 U.S. 266, 282 (1948).

The requested Order is sought under the terms of the All Writs Act, to render effective the process of this grand jury. That process consists in the subpoena duces tecum to which the Order relates. The subpoena is no more than "orders . . . previously issued in [the] exercise of jurisdiction otherwise obtained" and properly exercised, either directly by the district court or through its investigative arm, the grand jury. The requested Order is simply a "command" issued by the court, in the exercise of its discretion, "necessary to effectuate and prevent the frustration" of the grand jury's process. Appropriately balancing "the burden imposed upon the party required to render assistance against the necessity" presented by the facts which compelled the government to seek issuance of the Order, the government contends that the Court should find the Order both permissible and necessary under these circumstances; essential to preserve the legitimate functions of the grand jury; rationally related to the reasons for which it is sought; and not overly burdensome on those subject to the Order or on the customers of (insert name of the bank). Compare United States v. New York Telephone Co., supra at 174.

Finally, the court should note that the entry of an Order such as that sought here is not without precedent. Indeed, in a recent decision, the Fourth Circuit implicitly approved the entry of such an Order under similar circumstances. See In re Swearingen Aviation Corporation, etc., 4486 F. Supp. 9 (D. Md.), aff'd 605 F.2d 125 (4th Cir. 1979).

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

FORM R

NOTICE

A. Pursuant to the Right to Financial Privacy Act, Title 12, United States Code, Section 3415, financial institutions may be reimbursed for necessary costs actually incurred effective October 1, 1979. The Federal Reserve Board has established the following guidelines:

1. Search and Processing Costs--May be billed at the rate of $2.50 per quarter hour, or fraction thereof, for time spent by employees locating and retrieving documents, reproducing documents, or packaging and preparing documents for shipment. Computer time and necessary supplies may also be billed if itemized separately.

2. Reproduction Costs--May be billed at a rate of 15 cents per page.

3. Transportation Costs--May bill for direct costs incurred to transport employees to locate and retrieve material required. May also bill for direct costs incurred in transporting material to location required by legal process.

B. An itemized bill or invoice must be furnished the United States Attorney in order to receive reimbursement. However, reimbursement may be made only in connection with the following types of financial records: checking, savings, share, loan or credit card account records pertaining to accounts of individuals or partnerships of five or fewer partners. Reimbursement cannot be made for records relating to accounts of:

1. Corporations
2. Large partnerships (6 or more partners)
3. Associations
4. Trusts
5. Government agencies
6. Other legal entities

You may refer to the Federal Register, Volume 44, No. 190, September 28, 1979, pp. 55812-55815, for more detailed guidelines. If you have further questions, please contact:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Order

DOJ 2110.40

Apr. 30, 1980

Subject: RIGHT TO FINANCIAL PRIVACY ACT REIMBURSEMENT PROCEDURES AND REPORTING REQUIREMENTS

1. PURPOSE. This order provides procedures for the payment of fees to financial institutions and for the preparation of the congressional report as required by the Right to Financial Privacy Act of 1978, P.L. 95-630, 12 U.S.C. 3401 et seq.
2. SCOPE. The provisions of this order apply to all Offices, Boards, Divisions, and Bureaus of the Department of Justice.
3. CANCELLATION. This order cancels Order DOJ 2740.2.
4. SUMMARY. Section 3415 of Title 12 of the U.S. Code requires Government authorities under limited circumstances to reimburse financial institutions for the direct costs incurred in researching, assembling, reproducing, and transmitting financial information on individuals and partnerships comprised of five or fewer persons. 12 U.S.C. 3421(b) requires the submission of an annual report to the Congress on requests for financial records and incidents of judicially delayed notification relating thereto. The Assistant Attorney General for Administration (AAG/A) is assigned the responsibility for preparing the Department report. In order to facilitate the preparation of the report, a standardized reporting format (Appendix 1) has been developed for submission to the AAG/A and for the consolidated Department report to the Congress.
5. DEFINITIONS
  - a. Financial Institution. Any office of a bank, savings bank, card issuer as defined in Section 103 of the Consumers Credit Protection Act (15 U.S.C. 1602(n)), industrial loan company, trust company, savings and loan, building and loan, or homestead association (including cooperative banks), credit union, or consumer finance institution, located in any State or territory of the United States, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, or the Virgin Islands.

Distribution: Bureau Financial Managers

Initiated By: Justice Management Division

- b. Financial Record. An original of, a copy of, or information known to have been derived from any record held by a financial institution pertaining to a customer's relationship with the financial institution.
- c. Government Authority. Any agency or department of the United States, or any officer, employee or agent thereof.
- d. Person. An individual or a partnership of five or fewer individuals.
- e. Customer. Any person or authorized representative of that person who utilized or is utilizing any service of a financial institution, or for whom a financial institution is acting or has acted as a fiduciary, in relation to an account maintained in the person's name. "Customer" does not include corporations or partnerships comprised of more than five persons.
- f. Directly Incurred Costs. Costs incurred solely and necessarily as a consequence of searching for, reproducing or transporting books, papers, records, or other data, in order to comply with legal process or a formal written request or a customer's authorization to produce a customer's financial record. The term does not include any allocation of fixed costs (overhead, equipment, depreciation, etc.). If a financial institution has financial records that are stored at an independent storage facility that charges a fee to search for, reproduce, or transport particular records requested, these costs are considered to be directly incurred by the financial institution.

6. COST REIMBURSEMENT PROCEDURES. Each Office, Board, Division and Bureau which requires or requests access to financial records pertaining to a customer shall pay to the financial institution that assembles or provides the financial records a fee for reimbursement of reasonably necessary costs which have been directly incurred. Paragraph 6a sets forth reimbursable costs and rates for reimbursement. Incurred costs for requests for assembling or providing certain types of financial records which are not reimbursable are set forth in paragraph 6b. Action required for payment of reimbursable costs are contained in paragraph 6c.

a. Allowable Costs.

(1) Search and processing costs.

- (a) Reimbursement of search and processing costs shall be for the total amount of personnel direct time incurred in locating and retrieving, reproducing, packaging and preparing financial records for shipment.

(b) The rate for search and processing costs is $10 per hour per person, computed on the basis of $2.50 per quarter hour or fraction thereof, and is limited to the total amount of personnel time spent in locating and retrieving documents or information or reproducing or packaging and preparing documents for shipment where required or requested by a government authority. Specific salaries of such persons shall not be included in search costs. In addition, search and processing costs do not include salaries, fees, or similar costs for analysis of material or for managerial or legal advice, expertise, research, or time spent for any of these activities. If itemized separately, search and processing costs may include the actual cost of extracting information stored by computer in the format in which it is normally produced, based on computer time and necessary supplies; however, personnel time for computer search may be paid only at the rate specified in this paragraph.

(2) Reproduction costs

(a) Reimbursement for reproduction costs shall be for costs incurred in making copies of documents required or requested.

(b) The rate for reproduction costs for making copies of required or requested documents is 15 cents for each page, including copies produced by reader/printer reproduction processes. Photographs, films, and other materials are reimbursed at actual cost.

(3) Transportation costs. Reimbursement for transportation costs shall be for necessary costs directly incurred to transport personnel to locate and retrieve the information required or requested, and necessary costs directly incurred solely by the need to convey the required or requested material to the place of examination.

b. Exceptions. A financial institution is not entitled to reimbursement for costs incurred in assembling or providing the following financial records or information.

(1) Security interests, bankruptcy claims, debt collection. Any financial records provided as an incident to perfecting a security interest, proving a claim in bankruptcy, or otherwise collecting a debt owing either to the financial institution itself or in its role as fiduciary.

- (2) Government Loan Programs. Financial records provided in connection with a government authority's consideration or administration of assistance to a customer in the form of a government loan, loan guaranty, or loan insurance program or as an incident to processing an application for assistance to a customer in the form of a government loan, loan guaranty, or loan insurance agreement; or as an incident to processing a default on, or administering, a government-guaranteed or insured loan, as necessary authority to permit a responsible government authority to carry out its responsibilities under the loan, loan guaranty, or loan insurance agreement.
- (3) Nonidentifiable Information. Financial records that are not identified with or identifiable as being derived from the financial records of a particular customer.
- (4) Federally Required Reports. Financial records required to be reported in accordance with any federal statute or rule promulgated thereunder.
- (5) Government Civil or Criminal Litigation. Financial records sought by a government authority under the Federal Rules of Civil or Criminal Procedure or comparable rules of other courts in connection with litigation to which the government authority and the customer are parties.
NB. This exception does not apply to grand jury subpoenas. A financial institution is entitled to reimbursement for the costs incurred in providing records, data or information pursuant to a subpoena or court order issued in connection with proceedings before a grand jury. 12 U.S.C. 3413(1), 3415.
- (6) Administrative Agency Subpoenas. Financial records sought by a government authority pursuant to an administrative subpoena issued by an administrative law judge in an adjudicatory proceeding subject to Section 554 of Title 5, U.S. Code, and to which the government authority and the customer are parties.
- (7) Identity of Accounts in Limited Circumstances. Financial information sought by a government authority in accordance with the Right to Financial Privacy Act and for a legitimate law enforcement inquiry, and limited only to the name, address, account number and type of account of any customer or ascertainable group of customers associated with a financial transaction or class of financial transactions, or with a foreign country or subdivision thereof in the case of government authority exercising financial controls over foreign accounts in the United States under section 5(b) of the Trading With the Enemy Act (50 U.S.C. App. 5(b); the International Emergency Economic Powers Act (Title II, P. L. 95-223); or section 5 of the United Nations Participation Act (22 U.S.C. 287(c)).

(8) Investigation of a Financial Institution or its Noncustomers. Financial records sought by a government authority in connection with a lawful proceeding, investigation, examination or inspection directed at the financial institution in possession of such records or at a legal entity or person which is not a customer.

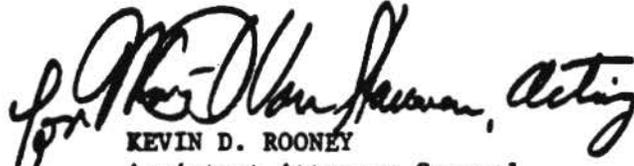

c. Payments. Payments are to be made for reasonably necessary direct costs incurred by the financial institution. Payments will be for work completed or for work done prior to withdrawal of the request or legal process. No payments will be made without an itemized bill or invoice which identifies costs as search and processing, reproduction, and transportation. See 6a(1), (2) and (3) above. See 12 CFR 219.6. The cost of furnishing such records shall be charged to the organizational appropriation of the official who directly obtained the legal process for the production of the financial records.

7. REPORTING PROCEDURES. The head of each Office, Board, Division and Bureau which accesses financial records pursuant to 12 U.S.C. 3404, 3405, 3406, 3407, 3408, 3414, or 3420 shall submit to the Office of the Controller, Justice Management Division, a report by February 28 covering the preceding calendar year. This report shall enumerate the number of requests for financial records made under each of the above sections. The information regarding requests under 12 U.S.C. 3420 (grand jury requests) is being collected for Departmental use, and will not be included in the congressional submission. The report will also reflect organization experience under the subject Act for the reporting period. The individual reports will be consolidated by the Office of the Controller and directed to the AAG/A for submission to the House Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs Committee and the Senate Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs Committee by April 30 of each year. Appendix 1 sets forth an acceptable format for reporting the required information.

8. IMPLEMENTING PROCEDURES. The Administrator of the Drug Enforcement Administration, Commissioner of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and the Deputy Assistant Attorney General for Administration, Office of the

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-4.900 ACCESS TO AND DISCLOSURE OF TAX RETURNS IN A NONTAX CRIMINAL CASE

Section 1202 of the Tax Reform Act of 1976 (Pub. L. No. 94-455), as amended by section 356(a) of the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1982 (Pub. L. No. 97-248), was designed to protect the confidentiality of tax returns and return information and establishes criteria for the disclosure of such material by the Internal Revenue Service and its use and further disclosure by the beneficiaries of disclosure. See USAM 9-4.901 and 9-4.902, infra. Effective January 1, 1977, disclosure of returns and return information is prohibited except as specifically provided in 26 U.S.C. §6103, as amended, or other sections of the Code. Disclosure in violation of these provisions subjects the offender to possible criminal penalties.

Among the disclosures authorized by the Act are those in 26 U.S.C. §6103(i) concerning access to returns and return information by certain Department of Justice personnel for use in the investigation and prosecution of federal criminal statutory violations and related civil forfeitures not involving tax administration. The access procedures and use restrictions in such a case are set forth at USAM 9-4.910, infra.

9-4.901 Definitions

A. "Return" means any tax or information return, declaration of estimated tax, or claim for refund required by, provided for, or permitted under, the provisions of Title 26 which is filed with IRS by, on behalf of, or with respect to, any person, and any amendment or supplement, including supporting schedules, attachments, or lists which are supplemental to, or part of, the return. See 26 U.S.C. §6103(b)(1).

B. The term "return information" includes all tax information relating to a taxpayer which is contained within the files of the Internal Revenue Service. Return information is divided into two distinct classifications:

1. Taxpayer return information: that information filed with, or furnished to the Internal Revenue Service by or on behalf of a taxpayer. An example of taxpayer return information is that portion of an interview between an IRS agent and the representative of a named taxpayer functioning in that capacity, discussing the taxpayer.

2. Return information other than taxpayer return information: that return information not provided to the Internal Revenue Service by or on behalf of a taxpayer, i.e., information obtained from third parties who are not representatives of the taxpayer.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Examples of return information other than taxpayer return information are:

a. The books and records of a named taxpayer supplied to IRS by a third party.

b. That portion of an interview between an IRS agent and a third party discussing a named taxpayer.

c. Information developed by IRS agents in the course of investigating a named taxpayer's return from sources other than the taxpayer's representative functioning in that capacity.

d. The fact that a named taxpayer filed or failed to file a return.

C. "Tax administration" means the administration, management, conduct, direction, and supervision of the execution and application of the internal revenue laws or related statutes (or equivalent laws and statutes of a State) and tax conventions to which the United States is a party, and the development and formulation of federal tax policy relating to existing or proposed internal revenue laws, related statutes, and tax conventions, and includes assessment, collection, enforcement, litigation, publication, and statistical gathering functions under such laws, statutes, or conventions. 26 U.S.C. §6103(b)(4).

D. "Person" means an individual, a trust, estate, partnership, association, company or corporation. 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(1).

E. "Secretary" means the Secretary of the Treasury or his/her delegate. 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(11)(B). The delegate with regard to 26 U.S.C. §6103 is IRS. 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(12)(A)(i), Treasury Order No. 150-37 (Mar. 17, 1955), Treasury Reg. §301.9000-1 (June 15, 1967).

9-4.902 Disclosure

Disclosure is defined in 26 U.S.C. §6103(b)(8) as "the making known to any person in any manner whatever a return or return information." The breadth of this definition invalidates a number of prior access procedures. For example, upon inquiry by the appropriate Division, IRS was formerly permitted under 26 U.S.C. §6103(f) to indicate whether a named person did or did not file a return (i.e., notification of the existence of a return). Under 26 U.S.C. §6103 as amended, such notification would be a prohibited disclosure unless the provisions of 26 U.S.C. §6103(i)(2) were met. See S. Rep. No. 94-938, 94th Cong., 2d Sess., at 339, 342.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Although the definition of disclosure does not appear to admit many exceptions, the return to the supplier of information supplied to IRS appears to be one. Arguably, therefore, it is not a disclosure for IRS to return taxpayer records supplied by a U.S. Attorney to that U.S. Attorney, provided that no supplementary tax material prepared by IRS is included. Likewise, "disclosure" by the prosecutor of a return obtained pursuant to 26 U.S.C. §6103(i)(1) to the taxpayer who filed the return with IRS would not appear to be prohibited since no "making known" of information is involved.

9-4.903 Consent to Disclosure

Seeking disclosure pursuant to 26 U.S.C. §6103(i) is unnecessary whenever the taxpayer to whom return or return information pertains consents to disclosure. See 26 U.S.C. §6103(c). Normally, IRS will make disclosure upon proper receipt of a taxpayer's waiver.

A taxpayer's consent to disclosure must be formalized by "a written document pertaining solely to the authorized disclosure." 26 C.F.R. §301.6103(c)-1(a). That document must conform to the requirements of 26 C.F.R. §301.6103(c)-1(a).

When a taxpayer files a motion for disclosure of illegal electronic surveillance under 18 U.S.C. §3504, he/she is deemed to have requested or consented to disclosure under 26 C.F.R. §301.6103(c)-1(a) insofar as returns and return information are involved. See USAM 9-4.983, infra.

9-4.910 Access to Returns and Return Information

26 U.S.C. §6103(i) sets forth the conditions which govern IRS's disclosure of tax returns and return information protected under 26 U.S.C. §6103(a), for use in proceedings pertaining to either the enforcement of a federal criminal statute, or related civil forfeiture proceedings which may be pursued in addition to or in lieu of criminal prosecutions. The methods which must be used to obtain IRS's disclosure vary according to the type of material sought and reason for its disclosure.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Disclosure of tax returns and taxpayer return information must be secured through the issuance of an ex parte order by a federal district judge or magistrate under 26 U.S.C. §6103(1)(1). See USAM 9-4.911, infra. Such orders automatically include return information other than taxpayer return information (i.e., information about a taxpayer from a third party). Thus, when filing an application under 26 U.S.C. §6103(1)(1), it is not necessary to make a separate request under 26 U.S.C. §6103(1)(2) (as discussed below and in USAM 9-4.912, infra).

If, however, only return information other than taxpayer return information is sought, it may be obtained pursuant to a written request under 26 U.S.C. §6103(1)(2). See USAM 9-4.912, infra.

26 U.S.C. §6103(1)(3) authorizes IRS to make disclosures of return information other than taxpayer return information on its own initiative under certain conditions, and any return information under other, more restrictive conditions. See USAM 9-4.913, infra.

26 U.S.C. §6103(1)(4) governs the use of information obtained under 26 U.S.C. §6103(1)(1), (1)(2), or (1)(3) in judicial or administrative proceedings. See USAM 9-4.914, infra. It should be noted, however, that, although 26 U.S.C. §6103(1)(4) authorizes use in civil forfeitures related to the enforcement of federal criminal statutes, this use alone does not authorize disclosure under 26 U.S.C. §6103(1)(1) or (1)(2). Thus, caution should be exercised that any returns or return information needed for a civil forfeiture are obtained under the appropriate procedure before termination of the criminal enforcement proceeding. Criminal enforcement proceedings should not be initiated, however, solely as a means of obtaining return information which would otherwise not be available for use in a civil forfeiture.

26 U.S.C. §6103(1)(5) governs the disclosure of a return or return information for the purpose of locating a fugitive from justice. See USAM 9-4.915, infra.

26 U.S.C. §6103(1)(6) provides that the Secretary shall not disclose any return or return information under the specified paragraphs and subparagraphs of 26 U.S.C. §6103(1) if he/she determines "that such disclosure would identify a confidential informant or seriously impair a civil or criminal tax investigation."

The Internal Revenue Service has offered the services of the local District Disclosure Officer to each U.S. Attorney for the purpose of briefing the U.S. Attorney and his/her assistants on the procedures to be followed in obtaining returns and return information under the revised statute. Each U.S. Attorney is urged to respond to this offer. IRS is anxious to cooperate in successfully implementing the statute, and close coordination between individual U.S. Attorneys' offices and the local District Disclosure Officer will expedite the processing of requests.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

In addition, the Criminal Division, through its Office of Enforcement Operation, will be available to lend assistance and answer questions. The local and FTS number for such assistance is 724-6672.

9-4.911 Disclosure Under 26 U.S.C. §6103(i)(1)

26 U.S.C. §6103(i)(1) authorizes application for an ex parte order for the disclosure of "any return or return information . . . to officers or employees of any federal agency who are personally and directly engaged in" the investigation, or preparation for prosecution, of violations of specifically designated federal criminal statutes other than ones involving tax administration. The application must explain the intended use.

Applications for the ex parte order authorized by this paragraph may be authorized by: the Attorney General, the Deputy Attorney General, the Associate Attorney General, any Assistant Attorney General, and U.S. Attorney, any special prosecutor appointed under 28 U.S.C. §593, or any attorney in charge of a Criminal Division organized crime strike force established pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §510. It is anticipated that most applications will be authorized by U.S. Attorneys or Strike Force Chiefs. Samples of an application and resulting order appear at the end of this section.

A. Prior to the submission of this application, however, the responsible official should notify the appropriate IRS District Director that such action is being planned. This notice should include all relevant details so that IRS can:

1. Assemble the requested information; and
2. Make any appropriate determination provided for in 26 U.S.C. §6103(i)(6), (see USAM 9-4.916, infra).

B. Applications may be submitted to either federal magistrates or federal district court judges.

C. Applicants must demonstrate that:

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

1. There is reasonable cause to believe that a specific federal crime has occurred;

2. There is reasonable cause to believe that the tax information sought is relevant to the offense;

3. The information will be used exclusively in a federal criminal investigation of proceeding concerning such act (except as provided in 26 U.S.C. §6103(i)(4), see USAM 9-4.914, infra); and

4. That the information cannot reasonably be obtained from another source.

Language in the application and order should track the statutory language as closely as possible. Since 26 U.S.C. §6103(i)(1) refers to disclosure for the "enforcement of a specifically designated federal criminal statute," applicants should list every statutory violation for which "reasonable cause" exists.

D. Applicants should file simultaneously with the application a motion requesting the court to seal the application and its order granting or denying the application. U.S. Attorneys should notify Internal Revenue Service whenever a motion to seal is granted, and whenever the records are subsequently unsealed. Such motions are not necessary when an applicant determines that disclosure of the application will not jeopardize an ongoing investigation.

E. As noted in USAM 9-4.910, supra, 26 U.S.C. §6103(i)(1), applications now cover return information other than taxpayer return information (as well as all return and taxpayer return information). Therefore, when such an application has been made, it is not necessary to make a separate 26 U.S.C. §6103(i)(2) request for return information other than taxpayer return information.

F. Disclosures under this paragraph are limited by the restrictions in 26 U.S.C. §6103(i)(6). See USAM 9-4.916, infra.

G. Sample application to be used when requesting either 26 U.S.C. §6103(i)(1) information only or joint 26 U.S.C. §6103(i)(1) and (i)(2) disclosures.

(3) The returns and return information are sought exclusively for use in a federal criminal investigation or proceeding concerning such act.

(4) The information sought to be disclosed cannot reasonably be obtained, under the circumstances, from another source.

Applicant further alleges and states that in addition to (himself/herself)

This application is authorized by (name and title of authorizing official).

Therefore, applicant prays that this Court enter an order, ex parte, on this application granting disclosure by the Internal Revenue Service of the returns and return information specified in this application.

ORDER FOR DISCLOSURE OF RETURNS AND RETURN INFORMATION

On this _____ day of _____, 19____, comes for the attention of the Court the application of the United States Attorney for the _____ District of _____, (Attorney-in-Charge of the _____ Strike Force) for an ex parte order, pursuant to 26 U.S.C. §6103(i)(1), directing the Internal Revenue Service to disclose returns and return information of:

Name:

Address:

Social Security Number or Employer Identification Number:

for the taxable period(s). (State year(s) for which disclosure is sought.)

After examining the application the Court finds:

(1) There is reasonable cause to believe, based upon information believed to be reliable, that a violation of a federal criminal statute, namely _____ U.S.C. _____, has been committed.

(2) There is reasonable cause to believe that the returns and return information are or may be relevant to a matter related to the commission of such act.

(3) The returns and return information are sought exclusively for use in a federal criminal investigation or proceeding concerning such act.

(4) The information sought to be obtained cannot reasonably be obtained, under the circumstances, from another source.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The Court further finds that applicant and:

Name:

Title:

(It is only necessary to include the names and titles of attorneys involved in the investigation and/or prosecution.)

are employees of the United States Department of Justice and are primarily and directly engaged in, and the information sought is solely for their use in, investigating the above-mentioned violation of _____ U.S.C. _____, and preparing the matter for trial; and that the application is authorized by (name of authorizing official).

It is therefore ordered that the Internal Revenue Service:

- (1) disclose such returns and return information of

Name:

Address:

Social Security Number of Employer Identification Number:

for the taxable period(s) (state year(s)), as have been filed and are on file with the Internal Revenue Service;

- (2) certify where returns and return information described above have not been filed or are not on file with the Internal Revenue Service that no such returns and return information have been filed or are on file;

- (3) disclose such returns and return information described above as come into the possession of the Internal Revenue Service subsequent to the date of this order, but for not longer than 90 days thereafter;

- (4) disclose such returns and return information and make such certification only to applicant and:

Name:

Title:

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

(State names of many attorneys involved in the investigation and prosecution.)

and to no other person; and

(5) disclose no returns or return information not described above.

It is further ordered that applicant:

Name:

Title:

and any officer or employee of any federal agency who may be subsequently assigned in this matter shall use the returns and return information disclosed solely in investigating the above-mentioned violation of _____ U.S.C. _____, and such other violations of any federal criminal statutes, although presently unknown, as are discovered in the course of this investigation of _____ U.S.C. _____, and preparing the matter for trial, and that no disclosure be made to any other person except in accordance with the provisions of 26 U.S.C. §6103 and 26 C.F.R. §301.6103(1)-1.

9-4.912 Disclosure Under 26 U.S.C. §6103(1)(2)

The procedure established by this paragraph is to be utilized only when the requester's sole interest is return information other than taxpayer return information. See USAM 9-4.911, supra.

A. Written requests for this kind of information may be addressed to the appropriate IRS District Director by the head or Inspector General of any federal agency, the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the Administrator of the Drug Enforcement Administration, and any official authorized to authorize an application under 26 U.S.C. §6103(1)(1). See USAM 9-4.911, supra. Thus, a letter from a U.S. Attorney to the appropriate District Director which meets the statutory requirements is sufficient to obtain information available under 26 U.S.C. §6103(1)(2). An example request letter appears at the end of this section.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

B. The uses authorized for such information are identical to those for information obtained under 26 U.S.C. §6103(1)(1) and the request must explain the intended use. See USAM 9-4.911, supra.

The request must set forth:

1. The taxpayer's name and address;
2. The taxable period(s) for which information is sought;
3. The statutory authority under which the enforcement proceeding is being conducted; and
4. The specific reason or reasons why the information sought is relevant to the enforcement proceeding.

Disclosures under this paragraph are limited by the restrictions in 26 U.S.C. §6103(1)(6). See USAM 9-4.916, infra.

Involved in this investigation/prosecution (state facts).

Disclosure of the requested return information is or may be relevant to the investigation/indictment in establishing (state reasons for relevancy).

Access to the information will be limited to: (state names, title, and addresses of attorneys working on the investigation or prosecution), or such other officers and employees of a federal agency as shall be specifically assigned to participate in the investigation, preparation for trial, or trial, of this matter. No disclosure will be made to any other person except in accordance with the provisions of 26 U.S.C. §6103 and 26 C.F.R. §301.6103(i)-1.

At this time it is anticipated that the disclosed material will be used. (State the intended use, i.e., whether the material is sought solely for investigative purposes at the time of the request or whether the requester currently anticipates using the information in a judicial proceeding and an estimated time table.) Therefore, disclosure is required on or before (date).

At this time it is not anticipated that returns and taxpayer return information will be sought pursuant to 26 U.S.C. §6103(i)(1).

9-4.913 Disclosures Under 26 U.S.C. §6103(i)(3)

This paragraph authorizes IRS initiated disclosure of return information in carefully specified circumstances.

A. IRS may disclose return information (other than taxpayer return information; i.e., 26 U.S.C. §6103(i)(2) information) which indicates that a federal criminal law (not involving tax administration) has been violated to the head of the federal agency responsible for enforcing the law. The head of the agency may then disclose the information to officers and employees of the agency to the extent necessary to enforce the law.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

B. If there is return information eligible for disclosure under the above criteria, the taxpayer's identity may also be disclosed. Disclosures under this subparagraph are limited by the restrictions in 26 U.S.C. §6103(i)(6). See USAM 9-4.916, infra.

C. In practice all 26 U.S.C. §6103(i)(3) disclosures are made to the Office of Enforcement Operations (OEO) as the designated representative of the Attorney General. OEO then refers the material, as appropriate, within the Department of Justice (including Offices of the United States Attorneys). If, however, the information should go to another agency, (e.g., the Social Security Administration), OEO must return it to IRS and request that IRS send it to the designated agency.

D. IRS is also authorized to disclose any return information to:

1. Any federal or state law enforcement agency to the extent necessary to apprise it of "circumstances involving an imminent danger of death or physical injury to any individual;" and

2. Any federal law enforcement agency to apprise it of "circumstances involving "the imminent flight of any individual from Federal prosecution."

Disclosures for these two purposes are not limited by the restrictions in 26 U.S.C. §6103(i)(6). See USAM 9-4.916, infra.

9-4.914 Use of Certain Disclosed Returns and Return Information in Judicial or Administrative Proceedings, 26 U.S.C. §6103(i)(4)

This paragraph governs disclosures which agencies may make of returns or return information obtained from IRS under either 26 U.S.C. §6103(i)(1) or (i)(2). They "may be disclosed in any judicial or administrative proceeding pertaining to the enforcement of a specifically designated federal criminal statute or related civil forfeiture to which the United States or a federal agency is a party" upon a finding that the information is probative of a matter in issue relevant to the commission of a crime, or of the guilt or liability of a party. Disclosure may also be made pursuant to either the Jencks Act or Rule 16 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

No finding of relevance is required for disclosure of return information other than taxpayer return information in any proceeding described above when the United States or a federal agency is a party.

No return or return information is to be admitted into evidence if IRS notifies the Attorney General of a determination that disclosure "would identify a confidential informant or seriously impair a criminal or civil tax investigation." This situation is not likely to occur since IRS normally will not have disclosed the information to the agency if either of these events is likely to result from such disclosure. In any event, the burden of notification is clearly on IRS.

Admission in violation of this prohibition does not constitute reversible error.

The Criminal Division has interpreted this language to include use in any post-conviction proceeding resulting from the original conviction. The justifying theory is that enforcement continues until the defendant is no longer subject to the custody of the Attorney General. Thus, the United States Parole Commission may use tax material in a hearing to determine whether to terminate parole supervision pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §4211(c). Moreover, such use is appropriate even though it may not, technically, amount to an introduction "into evidence." For example, tax material may be provided to the court for its use in sentencing pursuant to Rule 32(c), of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure.

9-4.915 Disclosure to Locate Fugitives from Justice 26 U.S.C. §6103(i)(5)

A. Any official who may authorize an application to a judge or magistrate under 26 U.S.C. §6103(i)(1) (see USAM 9-4.911, supra) may also authorize one under subsection (i)(5) for the disclosure of returns and return information to the extent necessary to locate a fugitive. The advantage of proceeding under subsection (i)(5), when appropriate, rather than 26 U.S.C. §6103(i)(1) is that less is required to justify granting the application. Applicants must establish only that:

1. A federal arrest warrant for commission of a federal felony has been issued for the taxpayer who is now a fugitive;
2. The return or return information is being sought solely for purposes of locating the taxpayer; and
3. There is "reasonable cause" to believe that the return or return information will further efforts to locate the taxpayer.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

It should be noted that this paragraph authorizes disclosure only of returns and return information of the individual who is a fugitive.

A sample application is included at the end of this section.

Disclosures under this paragraph are limited by the restrictions in 26 U.S.C. §6103(i)(6). See USAM 9-4.916, infra.

9-4.916 Restrictions on Disclosures, 26 U.S.C. §6103(1)(6)

This paragraph prohibits IRS from making all but one disclosure described in USAM 9-4.911 through 9-4.915 if a determination is made that disclosure "would identify a confidential informant or seriously impair a civil or criminal tax investigation." In the case of an application for a court order under either 26 U.S.C. §6103(1)(1) or (1)(5), IRS must certify the making of this determination to the court.

These restrictions are administered solely by IRS; they do not require any action by applicants or requesters.

The exception to their application is an IRS initiated disclosure under 26 U.S.C. §6103(1)(3)(B) to prevent death, physical injury, or flight to avoid federal prosecution.

9-4.917 Communication with IRS Personnel

26 U.S.C. §6103 governs not only access to tangible tax material (e.g., returns, IRS investigative reports), but also communications regarding such material. See USAM 9-4.902, supra. Communication between IRS personnel and the prosecutor (e.g., the furnishing by IRS of investigative leads, discussion of IRS investigative results) is severely restricted. Satisfactory communication is possible, however, where disclosure has been obtained pursuant to 26 U.S.C. §6103(1)(1) or (1)(2).

Under either 26 U.S.C. §6103(1)(1) or (1)(2), communication between a prosecutor and IRS agent is permissible to the same extent that disclosure is authorized in the court order or request. The prosecutor and the IRS agent can discuss fully the material initially disclosed to the prosecutor. Assuming the order or request authorizes IRS disclosure of subsequently obtained material, discussion and exchange of information can continue within the boundaries of the order or request as dictated by the necessities of the investigation. Separate court orders or requests are required, however, to facilitate communication where the investigation expands to focus on taxpayers not included in the original order or request.

Absent a 26 U.S.C. §6103(i)(1) court order or a 26 U.S.C. §6103(i)(2) request, IRS can only provide tax material under 26 U.S.C. §6103(i)(3) and 26 U.S.C. §6103(k)(6), both of which inhibit ongoing communication.

Under 26 U.S.C. §6103(i)(3)(A), 26 U.S.C. §6103 material may be disclosed by IRS "to the extent necessary to apprise" the prosecutor of the possible commission of a federal crime. See USAM 9-4.913, supra. The provision appears geared to precipitating a 26 U.S.C. §6103(i)(1) or (i)(2) request and not to supplying a flow of investigative leads. Assuming the latter use is not improper, the material, once disclosed by IRS, could be discussed with an IRS agent where an investigation could not otherwise be properly conducted. Unlike 26 U.S.C. §6103(i)(1) and (i)(2), 26 U.S.C. §6103(i)(3)(A) required that all disclosures--initial and subsequent--be in writing. Communication subject to such an impediment appears overly cumbersome.

By contrast, 26 U.S.C. §6103(i)(3)(B) does not require that disclosures be in writing, which is sensible since it pertains to emergency circumstances. The provision appears to be geared to supplying investigative leads calling for an immediate response by law enforcement authorities, and thus communications between IRS and law enforcement authorities should be uninhibited under 26 U.S.C. §6103(i)(3)(B).

Under 26 U.S.C. §6103(k)(6), 26 U.S.C. §6103 material may be disclosed to a prosecutor by an IRS agent "to the extent that such disclosure is necessary in obtaining information, which is not otherwise reasonably available," for purposes of tax administration. The provision is designed to allow an IRS investigator to make limited disclosures for purposes of completing a tax case, but does not contemplate aiding the prosecutor with the preparation of a nontax criminal case. Thus, a prosecutor may not receive all the material relevant to the nontax criminal case and, under 26 U.S.C. §6103(k)(6), has no way of ascertaining the extent of relevant material withheld. No genuine exchange of information is possible under 26 U.S.C. §6103(k)(6).

9-4.918 Utilization of IRS Personnel

An IRS tax investigation operates independently of a prosecutor's nontax investigation unless a tax investigation and prosecution are authorized by the Tax Division. See USAM 9-4.970, infra. Generally, absent tax case authorization, the prosecutor will not receive IRS investigative assistance, except to the extent of disclosure and communication permitted by the methods previously discussed. See USAM 9-4.910, supra. However, given a nontax criminal investigative situation which requires special expertise of the type possessed by certain IRS personnel, an IRS agent with such expertise may be utilized in that investigation without imposing the restrictions of 26 U.S.C. §6103. This result is accomplished by "insulating" the agent from the Service through his/her appointment as a special agent of the grand jury, assignment as a Strike Force investigator, or designation to serve in some capacity other than as an IRS agent.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

A. The prosecutor seeking such IRS participation in a nontax criminal case should keep in mind the following:

1. A request for the assistance of IRS personnel is a request for IRS expertise; a request should be made only where such expertise is essential to the investigation.

2. Reliance on IRS personnel provides no additional access route to 26 U.S.C. §6103 tax material; an IRS agent, while so serving, may not gain access to tax material held by IRS relating to the subject of his/her service except as prescribed by 26 U.S.C. §6103.

3. Use of IRS personnel is controlled by internal IRS considerations; and requires IRS authorization (often obtainable at the district director level).

B. Examples of situations in which the prosecutor might seek IRS participation in a nontax criminal case include the following:

1. An investigation involving political corruption centers around a corporate bookkeeping system suspected of containing camouflaged payoff entries;

2. An informant wishes to provide evidence of a nontax crime but refuses to deal with other than a trusted IRS agent.

PURPOSE: This bluesheet implements revised policy regarding pretrial detention hearing reporting requirements for monitoring the use of pretrial detention under the Bail Reform Act of 1984. (Chapter 6, entitled Release of Detained Persons, will be revised shortly to reflect the changes of the Bail Reform Act of 1984.)

---

The following is a new section:

9-6.400 Pretrial Detention Hearing Reporting Requirements

The Department of Justice has established the following reporting requirements for monitoring the use of the pretrial detention provisions of the Bail Reform Act of 1984.

Effective October 1, 1985:

1. Assistant United States Attorneys are not required to consult with the Criminal Division before making motions for pretrial detention hearings, although they should consider doing so in making close decisions or when they encounter unusual problems.

2. The Offices of United States Attorneys will report the following information monthly:
  - a. Number of pretrial detention hearings requested by the Government and Court (initial motions only -- does not include motions for ten-day holds, motions that were withdrawn before final ruling, or motions for revocation of release);
  - b. Results of hearings (motion granted or denied);
  - c. Basis for rulings by judicial officer (risk of flight, dangerousness, or both);
  - d. Results of District Court Reviews of magistrate orders (defendant detained or released). NOTE: appeals should continue to be reported as required to the Appellate Section; and
  - e. Additional comments describing particularly significant rulings, noteworthy cases, or special problems in obtaining detention orders, at the option of the United States Attorney.

Although the method for collecting the above information is the prerogative of the United States Attorney, each United States Attorney should designate a single person responsible for collecting and transmitting the information (typically an administrative assistant or supervising secretary). An optional Tally Sheet is attached, along with a standard Reporting Form for their use. A supervising Assistant United States Attorney should decide whether to add any optional comments.

3. Using the attached or a similar Reporting Form, monthly totals for each United States Attorneys' Office, along with any additional comments, must be mailed to the Department during the first week of each month to:

9-6.000 RELEASE OF DETAINED PERSONS

9-6.100 ANALYSIS OF THE BAIL REFORM ACT--18 U.S.C. §§3141-3151

9-6.101 Background of the Bail Reform Act

The Eighth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America provides that: "Excessive bail shall not be required nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted." Prior to ratification of the Bill of Rights, Congress passed the Judiciary Act of 1789 which provided that, "upon all arrests in criminal cases, bail shall be admitted, except where the punishment may be death." 1 Stat. 73, 91 (1789). This has continued to be the basic federal bail policy to this date.

In the mid-1960's studies of the bail system in the United States indicated that bail practices which relied primarily on financial considerations inevitably disadvantaged poor defendants and that there was no significant correlation between poverty and appearance for trial. In order to eliminate the inequities of the bail system, Congress enacted the Bail Reform Act of 1966, which became effective on September 20, 1966, "to revise the practices relating to bail to assure that all persons, regardless of their financial status, shall not needlessly be detained pending their appearance to answer charges, to testify, or pending appeal, when detention serves neither the ends of justice nor the public interest." Bail Reform Act of 1966, Pub. L. No. 89-465, §2, 89 Stat. 214, 216 (1966), 18 U.S.C. §§3146-3151.

The emphasis of the Bail Reform Act is on release of accused persons prior to trial on appropriate conditions. Standards to be used in determining the conditions of release are delineated in the Act. Of significance is the fact that the word "Release" was substituted for the word "Bail" as the heading of Chapter 207. The change of words indicates a change of emphasis from monetary bail to release on a series of conditions among which bail is but one possible method used to assure appearance as required.

9-6.110 Offenses

Offenses covered by this act include any criminal offense which is in violation of an Act of Congress and is triable by a court established by an Act of Congress other than an offense triable by court-martial,

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

military commissioner, provost court, or other military tribunal. See 18 U.S.C. §3156(a)(2).

Even though an offense under the District of Columbia Code is in violation of an Act of Congress, specific bail provisions in the District of Columbia Court Reform and Criminal Procedure Act of 1970 (Pub. L. No. 91-358, District of Columbia Code, §§23.1321-1332), which was enacted several years after the Bail Reform Act, govern release determinations concerning local offenses under the District of Columbia Code. See United States v. Thompson, 452 F.2d 1333 (D.C. Cir. 1971), cert. denied, 405 U.S. 998 (1972).

9-6.120 Release Authority

Rule 5(a) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure requires that an arresting officer shall take the arrested person without unnecessary delay before the nearest available magistrate, or in the event that a federal magistrate is unavailable, before a state or local judicial officer, empowered to commit persons charged with offenses against the law of the United States pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §3041, Power of Courts and Magistrates.

Conditions of pretrial release are determined at an accused's hearing before a judicial officer, United States v. Wind, 527 F.2d 672 (6th Cir. 1975); United States v. Gilbert, 425 F.2d 490 (D.C. Cir. 1969), who is empowered to release the accused. See 18 U.S.C. §3146. An in camera proceeding, from which defendant and counsel are excluded, is not allowable under the Bail Reform Act. See United States v. Wind, supra, at 675.

A judicial officer is defined as any person or court authorized pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §3041 or the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure to bail or otherwise release a person before trial or sentencing or pending appeal in a court of the United States. See 18 U.S.C. §3156, Fed. R. Crim. P. 46.

18 U.S.C. §3141, Power of Courts and Magistrates, provides that bail may be taken by any court, judge, or magistrate authorized to arrest and commit offenders. A judicial officer would thus include a state judicial officer who is authorized to arrest and commit offenders. In capital cases, only a judge of a court of the United States that has original jurisdiction in criminal cases is authorized to grant release. See 18 U.S.C. §3141. Accordingly, United States Magistrates are not empowered to grant release in capital cases since their jurisdiction is derived solely from the District Court. However, because they are officers authorized to arrest and commit offenders, they are authorized to order a pretrial release in noncapital cases.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-6.130 Release in Noncapital Cases Prior to Trial

9-6.131 Presumption of Release

The Bail Reform Act of 1966 creates a presumption in favor of pretrial release for defendants charged with noncapital offenses. See 18 U.S.C. §3146. Any person charged with a noncapital crime shall be released on his/her personal recognizance (R.O.R.) or upon the execution of an unsecured appearance bond, unless it is determined that additional safeguards are required to assure the appearance of such person in which case a judicial officer may impose one of a series, or any combination of a series, of additional conditions of release. See 18 U.S.C. §3146(a).

The major consideration of the judicial officer in determining the appropriate release conditions is to determine which condition or combination of conditions will reasonably assure the appearance of the accused. See United States v. Smith, 444 F.2d 61, 62 (8th Cir. 1971), cert. denied, 405 U.S. 977 (1976). The judicial officer in exercise of his/her discretion should initially seek minimal nonfinancial conditions of release which will reasonably assure the defendant's appearance for trial; imposition of a money bond is proper only after all other nonfinancial conditions have been found inadequate. See United States v. Wright, 483 F.2d 1068 (4th Cir. 1973); United States v. Cramer, 451 F.2d 1198 (5th Cir. 1971); United States v. Smith, supra, at 62; United States v. Leathers, 412 F.2d 169 (D.C. Cir. 1969); Wood v. United States, 391 F.2d 981 (D.C. Cir. 1968); United States v. Cowper, 349 F. Supp. 560 (N.D. Ohio 1972); United States v. Gillin, 345 F. Supp. 1145 (S.D. Tex. 1972).

The only generally recognized exception to the general rule that in noncapital cases a person is to be released under the minimal conditions necessary to reasonably assure his/her appearance when required is where a defendant has threatened a potential witness against him/her. The courts, in such cases, have inherent power to confine a defendant in order to protect future witnesses at the pretrial stage as well as during trial. See United States v. Phillips, No. 77-1731 (4th Cir. June 10, 1977) (unpublished opinion); United States v. Wind, 527 F.2d 672 (6th Cir. 1975); United States v. Gilbert, 425 F.2d 490 (D.C. Cir. 1969). (See also, United States v. Bigelow, 544 F.2d 904 (6th Cir. 1976), in which

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Wind was held inapplicable to a situation in which the defendant was charged with the offense of threatening the President).

In addition, it should be noted that the First Circuit has upheld a district court order denying pretrial release to a defendant who was indicted for the offense of making a false statement (18 U.S.C. §1001), holding that, while 18 U.S.C. §3146 does create a strong presumption in favor of pretrial release, the statute does not expressly provide that a defendant has an absolute right to bail in every circumstance. See United States v. Abrahams, 575 F.2d 3 (1st Cir. 1978). The court, after examination of the defendant's record, concluded that "there is nothing in the record that suggests that bail will result in his [defendant's] appearance at trial," and that this case is "the rare case of extreme and unusual circumstances that justifies pretrial detention without bail." Id. at 8. The defendant's record included previous convictions, previous failures to appear in this case for removal and other prosecutions, fugitive status in a state case, the use of false identities, the transfer of large sums of money to Bermuda, and the giving of false information at previous bail hearings.

9-6.132 Conditions of Release--18 U.S.C. §3146(a)(1)-(a)(5)

Once a judicial officer determines that R.O.R. or an unsecured appearance bond will not reasonably assure appearance, then he/she is to consider the conditions outlined in 18 U.S.C. §3146(a)(1)-(a)(5), ad seriatim, and impose the first of the conditions or any combination of conditions which will reasonably assure appearance. The Eighth Circuit has held that the restrictive conditions of 18 U.S.C. §3146 are not violative of the Eighth Amendment even when they are imposed in addition to money bail. See United States v. Smith, 444 F.2d 61 (8th Cir. 1971), cert. denied, 405 U.S. 977 (1976). The court in Smith held that the primary purpose of the permitted conditions is to assure the presence of the defendant, and as such, the conditions set forth in the statute are in aid of the fundamental power of the court to call an accused to answer a complaint and are patently reasonable. Id. at 62.

The release conditions follow:

A. Third Party Custodians--18 U.S.C. §3146(a)(1)

The first alternative is to place the accused in the custody of a third person or organization. The Act does not specify who would be a proper custodian. The Senate debate suggests that a qualified third person such as the accused's attorney (United States v. Robinson, 453 F. Supp. 1 (S.D.N.Y. 1977)), minister, employer, relative, or other person or group considered by the court to be a responsible citizen, and in whose custody the accused is not likely to flee, would be an appropriate custodian. See 111 Cong. Rec. 3993 (daily ed. March 4, 1965) (remarks of Senator Ervin). It is not clear whether the failure of Congress to prohibit the use of certain persons as custodians leaves the courts free to assign persons such as probation officers, United States Marshals, etc. However, the District of Columbia Circuit Court of Appeals released a defendant in the custody of military police. See United States v. Bronson, 433 F.2d 537 (D.C. Cir. 1970).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The Act requires that the group or party supervising the accused agree to take custody. Bail Reform Act Form No. 2 provides for the signature of the custodian or proxy who agrees (1) to supervise the defendant in accordance with conditions as set out in the release order, (2) to use every effort to assure appearance of defendant at all scheduled hearings before the United States Magistrate or Court, and (3) to notify the Magistrate or Court immediately in the event the defendant violates any condition of his/her release or disappears. This form should be used in all cases of release under the Bail Reform Act and is not limited to cases of third party custody.

B. Restrictions on Travel, Abode and Associations--18 U.S.C.
§3146(a)(2)

In the event that third party custody is determined to be inadequate to assure the later appearance of the accused, the judicial officer may place restrictions on travel, association, or residence of an accused. Restrictions on travel have been held to be allowable conditions for the purpose of reasonably assuring appearance at trial. See United States v. Cook, 428 F.2d 461 (5th Cir. 1970); Brown v. United States, 392 F.2d 189 (5th Cir. 1968); Brown v. Fogel, 387 F.2d 692 (4th Cir. 1967).

C. Appearance Bond Secured by Percentage Deposit--18 U.S.C.
§2146(a)(3)

The third alternative allows the judicial officer to require the execution of an appearance bond in a specified amount and a deposit in the registry of the court of a sum not to exceed 10% of the bond. The deposit may be in a security or cash and is to be refunded when the accused has performed the conditions of his/her release. There are several objectives served by this release alternative. Cash bail eliminates the bondsman/

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

bondswoman as the middle person and reduces the financial loss to the accused who performs his/her obligation. Since the money or security is his/hers, the deterrent value is theoretically greater than posting a purchased bond because once the premium is spent it cannot be recovered; however, a cash deposit is refundable. This provision focuses attention on the accused's reliability enabling him/her to get his/her money back if he/she performs the required conditions. The provision also enables a disadvantaged defendant to post his/her own money or borrow money with the assurance that it will be returned and that he/she will have the future use of the money either to repay a loan or perhaps to aid in his/her own defense.

In holding that a third party supplying an 18 U.S.C. §3146(a)(3) deposit would ordinarily be entitled to the return of his/her deposit upon the performance of the conditions of release, the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit held there is no provision that the cash deposited be the property of the party bonded. See United States v. Bursey, 515 F.2d 1228, 1235 (5th Cir. 1975). It is an abuse of discretion for the trial court to refuse to release defendant's bail deposit on the ground that defendant had not paid his/her fine, where there is no question that he/she had complied with all the conditions of his/her appearance bond. See United States v. Wickenhauser, 710 F.2d 486 (8th Cir. 1983).

D. Bail--18 U.S.C. §3146(a)(4)

The fourth alternative allows posting a bail bond or cash in lieu of a bond. This is essentially equivalent to the present bail system. It is important to note that in addition to R.O.R. and release on an unsecured appearance bond there are the three nonfinancial release conditions and the one financial condition referred to above which must be considered before a judge can require a bail bond. Bail is the least desirable alternative because it discriminates against the poor. See United States v. Leathers, 412 F.2d 169 (D.C. Cir. 1969); United States v. Gillin, 345 F. Supp. 1145 (S.D. Tex. 1972).

It may be appropriate for the court to inquire into the sources of proffered bail and if the court lacks confidence in the surety's ability to secure the appearance of a bailed defendant, it may refuse approval of the bond. See United States v. Nebbia, 357 F.2d 303 (2d Cir. 1966); United States v. Melville, 309 F. Supp. 822 (S.D.N.Y. 1970).

There are two other statutes that, although not technically part of the Bail Reform Act, are both still in effect and impinge on the issue of money bail. First, 18 U.S.C. §3142 gives the surety the power to arrest a defendant who has been released on execution of an appearance bond in order to vacate the obligation of the surety. In such case the surety is authorized to deliver the person to the custody of the marshal who, in turn, is to bring him/her before the court.

Second, under 18 U.S.C. §3143, the judge or committing magistrate may also require a defendant, previously released on execution of an appearance bond, to give better surety if proof is received that the defendant is about to abscond and that the bail is insufficient. For default thereof, the judge may order the arrest of the defendant.

E. Alternative Conditions--18 U.S.C. §3146(a)(5)

The fifth alternative allows the judicial officer to impose any other condition deemed reasonably necessary to assure the appearance of the accused. The court is authorized to exercise discretion and inventiveness in developing other methods of release that are consistent with the goals of eliminating unnecessary pretrial detention and making criminal justice more efficient. This last alternative also specifically allows conditions requiring that a person return to custody after designated hours. The accused's return to custody gives the court a close check on him/her and enables the court to institute proceedings against him/her quickly if he/she flees. Since this type of release requires part-time custody, it was placed as the last alternative because the Act favors release whenever possible.

9-6.133 Criteria to be Examined by Judicial Officer--18 U.S.C. §3146(b);
Bail Reform Act Form No. 1

In determining which conditions of release will reasonably assure appearance, the judicial officer is to take into account, on the basis of available information, the nature and circumstances of the offense charged, the weight of the evidence against the accused, the accused's family ties, employment, financial resources, character and mental condition, the length of his/her residence in the community, his/her record of convictions, and his/her record of appearance at court proceedings or of flight to avoid prosecution or failure to appear at court proceedings. See 18 U.S.C. §3146(b). These factors are to be considered in light of their bearing on the likelihood of the accused's appearance when required.

A determination by the judicial officer is to be made on the basis of "available information". Since some of the information would be highly prejudicial if released to the jury, such information should be kept confidential, whenever possible, and care should be taken to avoid undue publicity which might be unfair to the accused.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Bail Reform Act Form No. 1 is an appropriate vehicle to assist the judicial officer in the gathering and recording of information pertinent to his/her determination. Part I lists questions to be asked of the representative of the United States. Part II contains questions for the defendant or other person having information in accordance with factors to be considered as outlined in 18 U.S.C. §3146(b). See USAM 9-6.200, infra.

9-6.134 Release Order--18 U.S.C. §3146(c); Bail Reform Act Form No. 2

18 U.S.C. §3146(c) provides that the judicial officer who authorizes the release of an individual is also to issue an order containing the conditions imposed. Bail Reform Act Form No. 2, Order Specifying Methods and Conditions of Release, has been prepared for this purpose and is an extremely important and useful tool because it may constitute the only instructions an accused may have concerning his/her release obligations. See USAM 9-6.200, infra. 18 U.S.C. §3146(c) also mandates the judicial officer to inform a defendant who is to be released of the penalties applicable to violation of the conditions imposed on his/her release and to inform him/her that a warrant for his/her arrest will be issued upon such violation. This warning is not a condition precedent to a subsequent conviction for bail jumping under 18 U.S.C. §3150. See USAM 9-6.180, infra, (Penalties for Failure to Appear).

9-6.135 Twenty-Four Hour Review--18 U.S.C. §3146(d)

If a person is not able to meet his/her conditions of release and is still detained after twenty-four hours, or if such person is regularly required to return to custody at a specified time (daytime release), after the imposition of such conditions, he/she may file an application for review of the release condition by the judicial officer who imposed the original conditions. In the event that the judicial officer who imposed conditions of release is not available, any other officer in the district may review such conditions. See 18 U.S.C. §3146(d).

If the conditions are not modified when the application is reviewed by the judicial officer, the officer is directed to set forth in writing the reasons for imposing the release conditions. The requirement of "written reasons" is set forth in Rule 9A of the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure as well as 18 U.S.C. §3146(d).

Courts of Appeals, when reviewing an action pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §3147, (See USAM 9-6.150, infra, (Review)), often remand the case so that the judicial officer may state in writing the reasons for imposing conditons. See United States v. Briggs, 471 F.2d 947 (5th Cir. 1973); United States v. Estes, 458 F.2d 1076 (5th Cir. 1972); United States v. Bennett, 444 F.2d 535 (9th Cir. 1971); Weaver v. United States, 405 F.2d 353 (D.C. Cir. 1968).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Many individuals will not be aware of their right to review; therefore, it is recommended that they be instructed of their right to review at the initial hearing before the judicial officer, as provided in Bail Reform Act Form No. 2.

The judicial officer who originally imposed conditions of release will be responsible for establishing new appropriate release conditions if the original order is reviewed successfully on appeal to a higher court. In one case, although the Court of Appeals determined that the District Court had erroneously remanded the defendant to custody without bail, the court declined to fix pretrial bail because it was initially within the province of the District Court. United States v. Wind, 527 F.2d 672 (6th Cir. 1975).

9-6.136 Amendment of Release Order--18 U.S.C. §3146(e)

A judicial officer may amend his/her order in writing at any time to impose additional or different conditions. This subsection was enacted in order to allow a judicial officer to amend his/her order when additional information comes to his/her attention after the hearing which indicates that other conditions are more appropriate. In light of the short period of time between arrest and presentation to the judicial officer, it may be difficult in some cases to gather adequate information for the hearing, or a court appointed attorney may not yet be available to an indigent accused, and, as a result, such accused's presentation of facts in his/her favor to the judicial officer may be incomplete. In addition, the accused's complete criminal record and background may not be available to the government. Therefore, later information may be highly relevant and the power to amend gives needed flexibility in such cases.

There is no requirement of a formal hearing before release conditions are amended. See S. Rep. No. 1541, 89th Cong., 2nd Sess. 11 (1966). Amendment of release conditions based on new adverse information as to the likelihood that the defendant will appear may necessitate an ex parte hearing to establish new conditions. As soon thereafter as possible the defendant should be brought before the judicial officer to be informed of the new conditions and be given an opportunity to meet them or challenge the changes. Whenever practicable, the defendant's attorney should be informed of a hearing to change conditions based on new information. It is expected that the judicial officer will also generally notify the U.S. Attorney before amending release conditions at the suggestion of the defendant. If the original or the amended conditions cause an accused to be detained in custody, even if only at specified times, e.g., daytime release, the accused is entitled to exercise the right to apply for review under 18 U.S.C. §3146(d).

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-6.137 Rules of Evidence--18 U.S.C. §3146(f)

The rules of evidence pertaining to the admissibility of evidence in a court of law do not apply to information offered in connection with release hearings under the Act.

9-6.138 Forfeiture of Collateral--18 U.S.C. §3146(g)

The Act allows for disposition of minor cases by forfeiture of collateral security when such disposition is authorized by the court, thus enabling defendants who do not wish to contest these minor offenses to be released under the liberal provisions of this Act. See 18 U.S.C. §3146(g).

9-6.140 Appeals from Conditions of Release--18 U.S.C. §3146

18 U.S.C. §3147 gives a detained person the right to file a motion for review of release conditions and subsequent appeal to a court having appellate jurisdiction if such motion does not result in his/her release.

The statute sets up a series of review provisions. The first two steps of this series, twenty-four hour review and the power to amend release conditions, are described above. 18 U.S.C. §3147 deals with the last two steps of review, a motion to the court having original jurisdiction over the offense, and an appeal to the court having appropriate appellate jurisdiction.

A person detained or required to return to custody at specified times who desires to have such release conditions reviewed must first file an application for review under 18 U.S.C. §3146(d), which is a review by a judicial officer after such party is detained for twenty-four hours. Once the 18 U.S.C. §3146(d) review is terminated, such person, if still detained, may move the court having original jurisdiction over the offense to amend the order of release pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §3147(a). Such motion need not be filed if the judicial officer who set the conditions and held the twenty-four hour review is a judge of the court having original jurisdiction over the offense with which the detained party is charged, a judge of the United States Court of Appeals, or a Justice of the Supreme Court. The court of original jurisdiction must promptly review the motion. Thus, a jurisdictional prerequisite to review is an application pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §3146(d) to the original judicial officer. See Shackleford v. United States, 383 F.2d 212 (D.C. Cir. 1967); United States v. Clark, 289 F. Supp. 608 (E.D. Pa. 1968).

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The House report on the Bail Reform Act of 1966 specifically defines what constitutes prompt determination as follows:

Prompt determination as required by this subsection [18 U.S.C. §3147(a)] means that such a motion shall be given priority and that determination shall be expedited in conformity with the underlying purpose of this legislation, namely, that the accused shall not needlessly be detained pending his appearance to answer charges when such detention serves neither the ends of justice nor the public interest.

H.R. Rep. No. 1541, 89th Cong., 2d Sess. 14 (1966).

There is no mention in the Bail Reform Act of the requirements of a written order by the court concerning its decision on an 18 U.S.C. §3147(a) motion; however, the Senate report indicates that a written order is contemplated since the appellate court is to review the order of the trial court on the accused's motion to amend. See S. Rep. No. 750, 89th Cong., 1st Sess. 19 (1965). In light of the intention of Congress expressed above, which clearly requires meaningful review of release proceedings, the order of the trial court should be as detailed as possible and should delineate the relevant facts and the basis for its decision.

The statute does not give guidelines for the hearing on this type of motion. Since this is a motion to amend, rather than an appeal, it can be assumed that a de novo investigation may be taken, with evidence presented and reviewed by the court concerning facts and reasons which provide a basis to amend the order.

When the court denies the motion to amend allowed by 18 U.S.C. §3147(a) or conditions for release have been imposed by a judge of the court having original jurisdiction over the offense, and an 18 U.S.C. §3147(a) motion is, therefore, not necessary, an appeal may be taken to the court having appellate jurisdiction over such court.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The Senate report indicates that the appellate court shall review the statement of evidence in the release order and the order of the trial court on the accused's motion to amend. See S. Rep. No. 750, supra. Any order appealed shall be affirmed if "it is supported by the proceedings below."

If the appellate court finds that the order is not supported by the proceedings below, it may remand the case for further hearing or may request additional evidence or order the person released pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §3146(a). The appeal is to be heard promptly with the same priority as an 18 U.S.C. §3147(a) motion.

9-6.150 Release in Capital Cases or After Conviction--18 U.S.C. §3148

18 U.S.C. §3148 deals with release from two types of detention: (1) detention of persons charged with offenses punishable by death; and (2) detention of a person convicted of an offense who is awaiting sentence, or sentence review under 18 U.S.C. §3576, or has filed an appeal or a petition for writ of certiorari. Unlike offenders covered in 18 U.S.C. §3146, there is no traditional right to bail in either of the above cases. Historically there was no right to bail for capital crimes. After conviction, since the presumption of innocence is gone, detention may be based on a finding that the defendant is guilty. Congress recognized this distinction and the Bail Reform Act treats these offenders differently. 18 U.S.C. §3148 provides that these persons are presumptively to be released under the provisions of §3146 (see United States v. Fields, 466 F.2d 119 (2d Cir. 1972)), but may be detained if the court or judge has reason to believe that the conditions of release will not reasonably assure that the person will not flee, or pose a danger to any person or the community, or if it appears that the appeal or writ is frivolous or taken for delay. This is the only section of the Act which authorizes denial of release for possibly dangerous persons.

The current validity of the provision of 18 U.S.C. §3148 relating to capital offenses is seriously in doubt because it is triggered by a charge of a capital offense, and, pursuant to the holding of the Supreme Court in Furman v. Georgia, 408 U.S. 233 (1972), the death penalty provisions of all federal statutes are apparently unconstitutional, with the exception of the recently revised provisions of 49 U.S.C. §1472, relating to aircraft piracy, United States v. Kaiser, 545 F.2d 467, 471 (5th Cir. 1977). See USAM 9-10.000, infra, (Capital Crimes). A majority of the courts that have examined the procedural benefits accorded by federal statute to persons charged with capital offenses have held that the unconstitutionality of the death penalty provision of the substantive offenses invalidates the attendant procedural provisions. See Kaiser, supra, at 475; United States v. Hoyt, 451 F.2d 570 (5th Cir. 1971), cert. denied, 465 U.S. 995 (1972); United States v. Freeman, 380 F. Supp. 1004 (D. N.D. 1974); contra, United States v. Watson, 496 F.2d 1125 (4th Cir. 1973). While these cases have not ruled directly on the question of whether the government may continue to treat offenses that were formerly punishable by death as capital for the purpose of denying bail, it is the Department's position that the government may not continue to treat such offenses as capital for any concomitant provision of a death penalty statute, whether the purpose is to restrain or protect the defendant.

The power to release an individual in a capital case is confined to a court or judge, under 18 U.S.C. §3148, rather than by any other judicial officers. See 18 U.S.C. §3141. This limits the persons authorized to allow release. In addition, none of the review provisions of 18 U.S.C. §3147 apply to persons subject to 18 U.S.C. §3148 whether they are pretrial in a capital case or their status is post-trial. However, rights of judicial review that exist elsewhere are not affected. An individual covered by 18 U.S.C. §3148 can appeal from a decision refusing bail and the appellate court can reverse the decision of the lower court if there was a clear abuse of discretion or other mistake of law. See Harris v. United States, 404 U.S. 1232 (1971) (Douglas, Circuit Justice) (in which Justice Douglas made an independent determination of the merits of an application where bail was denied by the District Court and the Court of Appeals).

There are no specific standards set out in the statute to be used by the judicial officer in determining whether a person seeking release under 18 U.S.C. §3148 will flee or pose a danger to another person or to the community. In determining whether or not a certain person will pose a danger, the criteria listed within 18 U.S.C. §3146(b) of the Bail Reform Act are highly relevant. See the discussion in Harris v. United States, supra, at 1232; United States ex. rel. Waler v. Twomey, 484 F.2d 874 (7th Cir. 1973); United States v. Baca, 444 F.2d 1292 (10th Cir. 1971), cert. denied, 404 U.S. 979 (1971); Leary v. United States, 431 F.2d 85 (5th Cir. 1970); United States v. Quicksey, 371 F. Supp. 561 (S.D. W. Va. 1974), for an examination of facts considered in determining denial of release pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §3148.

Because the convicted defendant is presumptively releasable, the government has the burden of proving that the defendant has not met the minimum standards for allowing release and should be detained without bail. See Harris v. United States, supra, at 1232; Leary v. United States, supra, at 86; United States v. Brown, 399 F. Supp. 631 (W. D. Okla. 1975). See also, Ward v. United States, 79 S. Ct. 1063, 1065 (1956) (Frankfurter, Circuit Justice).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-6.160 Release of Material Witnesses--18 U.S.C. §3149

The policy of the Act requires the release of material witnesses whenever possible. If it is shown by affidavit that a person's testimony is material in any criminal proceeding and that it may become impracticable to secure the presence of the witness by subpoena, a judicial officer is to impose conditions of release pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §3146.

No material witness is to be detained because of his/her inability to fulfill the conditions of his/her release if his/her testimony can adequately be secured by deposition and further detention is not required to prevent a failure of justice. Release may be delayed for a reasonable period of time until the deposition of the witness can be taken pursuant to the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure.

Under Rule 15(a) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, if a witness is committed for failure to give bail to appear to testify at a trial or hearing, the court on written motion of the witness and upon notice to the parties may direct that his/her deposition be taken. The court may discharge the witness after the deposition has been subscribed.

Although the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure do not specifically allow for a motion by a witness to have his/her deposition taken when he/she is unable to fulfill a condition of release other than bail, it is assumed that the witness is entitled to make a Rule 15(a) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure motion. The reason for allowing the deposition is to preserve the testimony of the witness and to eliminate unnecessary pretrial detention. Imposition of a non-monetary condition of release which the witness cannot fulfill and which therefore results in his/her detention, or which requires part-time detention, instead of bail, should not affect the right of a witness to have his/her deposition transcribed and subsequently to be released from custody. Although the Act contemplates the release of material witnesses, where appropriate conditions are imposed under 18 U.S.C. §3146 which result in the detention of a witness, that witness has the responsibility to file a motion pursuant to Rule 15(a) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure requesting that his/her deposition be subscribed so that he/she may be released. A witness may be detained for a reasonable period of time until his/her deposition is recorded. For example, because notice to the accused is required, it is not unreasonable to keep the witness in custody while such notice is given pursuant to Rule 15 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

A court in exercise of its sound discretion, has the power, inferable from 18 U.S.C. §3149 and Rule 46(b) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, to issue a warrant of arrest, not preceded by a subpoena, for a material witness. See United States v. Anfield, 539 F.2d 674, 677 (9th Cir. 1976); Bacon v. United States, 449 F.2d 933, 937 (9th Cir. 1971). A material witness warrant must be based on probable cause, which under Rule 46 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure and 18 U.S.C. §3149, is tested by two criteria--that the testimony of the person is material and that it may become impracticable to secure the presence of the person by subpoena. Bacon, supra, at 943; United States v. Feingold, 416 F. Supp. 627, 628 (E.D.N.Y. 1976).

9-6.170 Penalties for Failure to Appear--18 U.S.C. §3150

The Bail Reform Act provides penalties for any person released pursuant to the provisions of the Act who willfully fails to appear before any court or judicial officer as required. See 18 U.S.C. §3150. Because many persons charged with an offense are released pursuant to the Bail Reform Act without posting traditional bail, this section contains a penalty for persons who willfully fail to appear even though they will not have forfeited bail. Anyone released in connection with a felony charge, or while awaiting sentence or pending appeal or certiorari after conviction of any offense who willfully fails to appear as required is to be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than five years, or both, or if released in connection with a charge of misdemeanor, is to be fined not more than the maximum provided for such misdemeanor or imprisoned for not more than one year or both, and anyone released for appearance as a material witness, who fails to appear, is to be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year or both.

There is no thirty-day "grace period" during which an offender may appear before being subject to penal sanctions as was the case in the pre-1966 law. If a person willfully does not appear as required, he/she is immediately subject to the penalties of 18 U.S.C. §3150.

In the event bail was posted the bail is forfeited in addition to the penalties specified above. The forfeiture is governed by Rule 46(e) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, which provides that on breach of a condition of the bond, the court is to declare a forfeiture. If it appears to the court that justice does not require the enforcement of the forfeiture, the court may set aside the forfeiture. See Fed. R. Crim. P. 46(e)(2). When a forfeiture of default has not been set aside, the court is to enter a judgment of default and may issue an execution on the bond. See Fed. R. Crim. P. 46(e)(3). The applicability of Rule 46 of the

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure to the Bail Reform Act has been challenged and the argument has been made that since 18 U.S.C. §3151 provides for contempt for breaches of its provisions, that Congress must have intended the remedies under the Bail Reform Act to be exclusive--forfeiture, fine and imprisonment for nonappearance, and contempt for violation of other conditions. However, it has been held that Rule 46 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure and the Bail Reform Act are complementary and form a unified system for dealing with pretrial release. See Brown v. United States, 410 F.2d 212, 216 (5th Cir. 1969), cert. denied, 396 U.S. 932 (1969).

The bail jumping statute, 18 U.S.C. §3150, proscribes the failure to appear before "any court or judicial officer as required." The question has arisen whether a defendant's failure to report to a United States Marshal or probation officer is a failure to appear before "any court or judicial officer as required." A failure to appear before a probation officer for preparation of a pre-sentence report may be deemed a violation of a defendant's release conditions but is not a failure to appear before the court or judicial officer as required to uphold a conviction under 18 U.S.C. §3150. See United States v. Clark, 412 F.2d 885 (5th Cir. 1969). However, a majority of the courts have upheld convictions of persons who failed to surrender to a marshal to begin serving sentence on the theory that the marshal is the court's designated agent for limited purposes such as taking a defendant into custody. See United States v. Burleson, 638 F.2d 237 (10th Cir. 1981); United States v. Harris, 544 F.2d 947 (8th Cir. 1976); United States v. Black, 543 F.2d 35 (7th Cir. 1976); United States v. Bright, 541 F.2d 471 (5th Cir. 1974); United States v. Cardillo, 473 F.2d 325 (4th Cir. 1973) (dictum) (stating that a clerk, who delivered a warning to the defendant in the presence of the judicial officer, was an agent of the court.)

18 U.S.C. §3150 has withstood constitutional challenges of vagueness, the court holding that any ambiguity of the "when required" provision is cured by the requirement that the failure must be willful. See United States v. DePugh, 434 F.2d 584 (8th Cir. 1970), cert. denied, 401 U.S. 978 (1971). Because a conviction under 18 U.S.C. §3150 is for a willful failure to appear and not for nonappearance resulting from a mistake or misunderstanding, the courts have considered circumstantial evidence such as whether adequate notice of a required appearance was given, United States v. Cardillo, supra; United States v. Currier 405 F.2d 1039 (2d Cir. 1969), cert. denied, 395 U.S. 914 (1969), and whether the defendant signed an order stating she would appear for hearings, United States v. Guerrero, 517 F.2d 528 (10th Cir. 1975), to determine willfulness.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Although a prosecution under 18 U.S.C. §3150 contemplates that a defendant be given a reasonable notice as to any required court appearance, the federal courts have upheld convictions when the defendant's nonappearance occurs because he/she purposely engaged in a course of conduct designed to prevent him/her from receiving notice, the courts holding that such conduct can be as "willful" as when a defendant receives and deliberately ignores a notice to appear. In those cases, actual notice is not required. See United States v. DePugh, supra; United States v. Cardillo, supra, at 327. Thus, nonappearance has been held to be willful when a defendant hides from court notice, United States v. Bright, supra; United States v. Depugh, supra, at 552; United States v. Hall, 346 F.2d 875 (2d Cir. 1965), cert. denied, 382 U.S. 910 (1965); when a defendant signed a bond that she would appear for scheduled appearances, United States v. Guerrero, supra, at 529; when a defendant was present when the date was set for trial after executing a bond, United States v. Dorman, 496 F.2d 438 (4th Cir. 1974), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 942 (1974); when a defendant failed to keep his attorney advised of his location coupled with leaving the jurisdiction, Gant v. United States, 506 F.2d 518 (8th Cir. 1974), cert. denied, 420 U.S. 1005 (1975); and when a person uses an alias and returns the notice to the court having jurisdiction, United States v. Cohen, 450 F.2d 1019 (5th Cir. 1971). However, mere proof of nonappearance standing alone is not sufficient to establish willfulness, and one court overturned a conviction when the defendant's attorney failed to notify the court that the defendant was in jail in another jurisdiction. See United States v. Reed, 354 F. Supp. 18 (W.D. Mo. 1973). It is not a sufficient defense to combat the "willfulness" element of the offense that the defendant feared for his/her personal safety, United States v. Ely, 480 F.2d 617 (5th Cir. 1973), reh'g denied, 480 F.2d 925, cert. denied, 414 U.S. 1041 (1973); United States v. Miller, 451 F.2d 1306 (4th Cir. 1971); nor is it an adequate defense that the nonappearance was a result of defendant's discovery that a co-defendant was going to testify against him/her, United States v. Garcia-Turino, 458 F.2d 1345 (9th Cir. 1972), cert. denied, 409 U.S. 951, reh'g denied, 409 U.S. 1068 (1972).

It is not error to introduce a bonding company's posters indicating that the defendant was a fugitive to prove willfulness. See United States v. Washam, 529 F.2d 402 (5th Cir. 1976). Nor is it error to permit a defense attorney to testify that he/she notified the defendant to be present because relating such information was counsel's duty as an officer of the court and was not within the boundary of the attorney-client privilege. See United States v. Freeman, 519 F.2d 67 (9th Cir. 1975); United States v. Bourassa, 411 F.2d 69 (10th Cir. 1969), cert. denied, 396 U.S. 915 (1969). However, it has been held to be inadmissible hearsay for the attorney to state that in the past he/she had told the court he/she informed his/her client. See United States v. Freeman, supra, at 69.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The question of when an appearance is "required" or whether the defendant was ordered to appear has arisen under 18 U.S.C. §3150. A court docket or notice mailed to a defendant's attorney may be construed as a court direction to appear for the purpose of 18 U.S.C. §3150. See Gant v. United States, supra; United States v. Cardillo, supra.

9-6.171 Warnings Required at Initial Bail Release Not a Prerequisite for Subsequent Bail Jumping Prosecution

Three federal courts have held that the failure to render a warning, required under 18 U.S.C. §3146(c), as to the applicable penalties for violation of release conditions is not a bar to a subsequent prosecution for violation of 18 U.S.C. §3150, because the legislative history indicated that Congress did not intend such a warning to be a prerequisite to prosecution or an element of the offense. See United States v. Cardillo, supra; United States v. Eskew, 469 F.2d 278 (9th Cir. 1972); United States v. DePugh, supra. In Senate Judiciary Committee hearings, then Deputy Attorney General Ramsey Clark testified that the warning requirement "is not designed as a prerequisite to subsequent prosecution, but in order to enhance its deterrent value of increased emphasis on criminal penalties." Senate Judiciary Committee Hearing on S. 1357, 89th Cong., June 15, 1965, at 22-23.

It should be noted that at least two prosecutions were lost because defendants were not warned at the time of their initial release, of the penalties applicable for failure to appear at later court appearances, when district courts interpreted the warning requirement to be followed literally. See United States v. Campbell, Crim. R. 68-72 (D. Ore. March 10, 1969) (unreported opinion); United States v. Graves, Crim. R. 14110 (D. Nev. Aug. 11, 1969)(unreported opinion). Neither case is reported and the Circuit Courts of Appeals decisions noted above are all subsequent in time and should be controlling.

However, any future incidents of this problem can be avoided by the use of the prepared Bail Reform Act Form No. 2, which contains all warnings and notices to the defendant required by the Bail Reform Act. (See USAM 9-6.200, infra).

The Act does not provide penalties for a violation of a condition of release short of failing to appear before a judicial officer or court as required. See United States v. Williams, 594 F.2d 86 (5th Cir. 1979), on reh'g, 622 F.2d 830, cert. denied, 449 U.S. 1127 (1981); United States v. Bright, 541 F.2d 471 (5th Cir. 1976), reh'g denied, 544 F. 2d 5181, cert.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

denied, 430 U.S. 935 (1977). There are three possible ways of handling violations not covered by 18 U.S.C. §3150. First, the conditions of release can be amended to include additional conditions to be performed by the accused which take into account the violation of the prior release conditions. Second, a warrant for arrest can issue immediately upon violation of release conditions pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §3146(c), such an arrest can be based on the court's contempt powers as preserved in bail matters in 18 U.S.C. §3151. Finally, if bond has been posted, forfeiture of the bond is an alternative sanction for violation of the bond. See United States v. Clark, 412 F.2d 885 (5th Cir. 1969); Brown v. United States, 410 F.2d 212 (5th Cir. 1969), cert. denied, 396 U.S. 932 (1969). See USAM 9-121.100 (Appearance Bond Forfeiture Judgment).

9-6.180 Contempt--18 U.S.C. §3151

This section provides that nothing in the Bail Reform Act shall interfere with or prevent the exercise by any court of the United States of its power to punish for contempt.

9-6.190 Bail Reform Act Forms

The Administrative Office of the United States Courts has designed two forms to assist a judicial officer in determining which conditions of release will reasonably assure appearance. Bail Reform Act Form No. 1, AO 201 (10-70), Record of Responses to Questions at Bail Reform Act Hearing, is comprised of 2 parts, both designed to assist the judicial officer in obtaining and recording pertinent information required by the Bail Reform Act of 1966. This information will enable the officer to issue the Order Specifying Methods and Conditions of Release (Bail Reform Act Form No. 2); additionally, the responses will be useful in further proceedings under the Act. Part I contains questions for the representative of the government concerning the circumstances of the offense, circumstances of arrest and inquiries about other relevant information including threats to potential witnesses, and possible attempts to flee the jurisdiction if released. Part II includes questions for the defendant or any person having information about the accused and elicits information about the accused's background, family, employment, financial resources, health, criminal record, record of previous appearances, etc.

Bail Reform Act No. 2, Order Specifying Methods and Conditions of Release, is a form designed to assist the judicial officer in his/her release order. In addition to specifying the conditions of release, the

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Bail Reform Act Form No. 2 will provide notice to the defendant of the review provisions of the Act, further appearance that may be required or ordered, a warning of the penalties for violation of any condition of his/her release, and notice of the offense of bail jumping, 18 U.S.C. §3150. The defendant must acknowledge the conditions of release and penalties and forfeitures for violation of conditions of release and failure to appear. The information contained on Bail Reform Act Form No. 2 is invaluable in establishing the elements of a bail jumping prosecution under 18 U.S.C. §3150 if such a prosecution shall ultimately result. Accordingly, each U.S. Attorney's office should follow a policy of requiring the preparation of this form in all cases of persons released pursuant to the Bail Reform Act.

RECORD OF RESPONSES TO QUESTIONS AT BAIL REFORM ACT HEARING

The Bail Reform Act of 1966 requires that each judicial officer, in determining which conditions of release will reasonable assure appearance, shall take into account available information concerning the following:

- the nature and circumstances of the offense charged
- the weight of the evidence against the accused
- the accused's family ties
- employment and financial resources
- character and mental condition
- length of residence in the community
- record of convictions
- record of appearance at court proceedings
- record of flight to avoid prosecution
- record of failure to appear at court proceedings.

This information is necessary to enable the officer to issue the Order Specifying Methods and Conditions of Release (Bail Reform Act Form No. 2).

The questions listed in Part I are designed to assist the judicial officer in obtaining information, principally from the representative of the United States, concerning the nature and circumstances of the offense charged, the weight of the evidence against the accused, and the circumstances of the arrest. The questions set forth in Part II are designed to assist in obtaining information, principally from the defendant, concerning the other factors specified in the statute. In each part, the information or its verification may be sought from any source.

Questions need not be limited to the ones suggested here, nor need all questions be asked in all cases. Neither the defendant nor the representative of the United States may be compelled to answer any question. Responses to questions should be recorded on this form in order to facilitate their use in further proceedings under the Act.

This Form No. 1 need not be used if the United States Attorney and counsel for the defendant agree on the terms of an order (Form No. 2) which specifies methods and conditions of release acceptable to the judicial officer.

Recognizance

that he promises to appear at all scheduled hearings as required.

Unsecured Bond

that he will execute a bond binding himself to pay the United States the sum of _____ dollars ($ _____) in the event that he fails to appear as required.

[NOTE: The judicial officer is required to release the defendant by one of the above methods unless he determines that such a release will not reasonably assure the appearance of the defendant as required. In the event such a determination is made, the judicial officer shall, either in lieu of or in addition to the above methods of release, impose the first condition of release listed below which will reasonably assure the appearance of the person for trial. If no single condition gives that assurance, any combination of conditions may be used.]

Part II.—Conditions of Release

Upon finding that release by one of the above methods will not by itself reasonably assure the appearance of the defendant, it is hereby FURTHER ORDERED that the defendant be released on the condition (s) checked below:

Third Party
Custody

(1) The defendant is placed in the custody of _____ (Name of person or organization) _____
(Address) _____
(City and State) _____ Tel. No. _____

who agrees (a) to supervise the defendant in accordance with conditions 2 and 5 as checked below, (b) to use every effort to assure the appearance of the defendant at all scheduled hearings before the United States Magistrate or Court, and (c) to notify the Magistrate or Court immediately in the event the defendant violates any condition of his release or disappears.

_____

(NOTE: A defendant for whom conditions of release are imposed and who after twenty-four hours from the time of the release hearing continues to be detained as a result of his inability to meet the conditions of release, shall, upon application, be entitled to have the conditions reviewed by the judicial officer who imposed them.)

Part III.—Appearance and Penalties

Appearance

It is hereby FURTHER ORDERED that the defendant shall appear next at _____

and at such other places and times as the United States Magistrate or Court may order or direct.

Penalties

If the defendant violates any condition of his release, a warrant for his arrest will issue immediately. After arrest, the terms and conditions of any further release will be redetermined.

If the defendant fails to appear before any court or judicial officer as required, an additional criminal case may be instituted against him. If the failure to appear is in connection with a charge of felony, or while awaiting sentence, or pending appeal or certiorari after conviction, the penalty is a fine of not more than $5,000 or imprisonment for not more than five years, or both; if he fails to appear after being released on a misdemeanor charge, the penalty is a fine of not more than the maximum provided for the misdemeanor or imprisonment for not more than one year, or both.

Part IV.—Acknowledgment by Defendant

Acknowledgment

I _____ <sup>Defendant</sup> understand the methods and conditions of my release which have been checked above and the penalties and forfeitures applicable in the event I violate any condition or fail to appear as required.

9-6.210 Effective Date of Sentence: Credit for Time in Custody Prior to the Imposition of Sentence--18 U.S.C. §3568

Section 4 of the Bail Reform Act which amended existing 18 U.S.C. §3568 provides that the Attorney General is to give credit towards service of the sentence imposed for any days spent in custody in connection with the offense or acts for which the sentence is imposed. It should be noted that current 18 U.S.C. §3568 thus gives credit for time spent in custody for any reason. This allowance applies to sentences imposed in bailable and non-bailable offenses, since credit is to be given against all offenses.

In addition, 18 U.S.C. §3568 provides that credit will be given for time in custody due to "the offense or acts for which the sentence is imposed." This language is used to make it clear that the allowance is earned where a person is arrested on a more serious charge but is convicted and sentenced for a lesser offense. Credit is also given for the time spent in custody of a state on a charge which subsequently is determined to be a federal offense.

The Attorney General is instructed to give the deduction for time spent in custody to insure that all defendants get equal treatment and that such credit is not discretionary with a judge. An offense under 18 U.S.C. §3568 is any criminal offense other than an offense triable by court-martial, military commission, provost court, or other military tribunal which is in violation of an Act of Congress and triable in any court established by Act of Congress. However, the provisions of 18 U.S.C. §3568, which was amended considerably by the Bail Reform Act, are not retroactive and do not apply to sentences imposed prior to September 20, 1966.

9-6.220 Cases Removed from State Court--18 U.S.C. §3144

When a state court judgment in a criminal proceeding is brought to the Supreme Court for review, the defendant may not be released from custody until final judgment upon such review, or, if the offense is bailable, until a bond, with sufficient sureties, in a reasonable sum, is given.

9-6.300 PRETRIAL SERVICES ACT OF 1982

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-6.301 Background of the Pretrial Services Act of 1982

A. Origin of Pretrial Services

In 1974 Congress enacted the Speedy Trial Act in response to the alarming number of defendants who committed crimes while on release awaiting trial. The Speedy Trial Act had two essential elements. Title I established a short period of time before trial and Title II created Pretrial Services Agencies to implement the Bail Reform Act of 1966.

Title II of the Speedy Trial Act of 1974 directed the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts to set up demonstration pretrial services agencies in ten federal judicial districts. The primary functions of the agencies were to: (1) collect, verify and report promptly to the judicial officer all information pertaining to the pretrial release of persons charged with an offense and recommend appropriate release conditions; (2) review and modify the reports and recommendations; (3) supervise and provide supportive services to persons released in their custody; and (4) inform the court of violations of conditions of release.

The ten demonstration districts were chosen by the Chief Justice, upon consultation with the Attorney General, on the basis of the number of criminal cases in the district, the percentage of defendants detained before trial, the incidence of crime charged to persons released prior to trial, and the resources available.

Under the Speedy Trial Act of 1974, the Director of the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts was required to report annually to the Congress on the accomplishments of the demonstration pretrial services agencies with particular attention to their effectiveness in: (1) reducing crime committed by persons on pretrial release; (2) reducing the volume and cost of unnecessary pretrial detention; and (3) their general effectiveness in improving the bail process. In addition, the fourth and final report issued by the Director was required to include a recommendation concerning the expansion of pretrial services agencies beyond the ten demonstration districts and compare the performance of the agencies administered by the Division of Probation with the agencies administered by the Board of Trustees.

On May 14, 1980, Senator Biden, along with Senators Kennedy, Mathias, and Thurmond introduced S. 2705, a bill to expand pretrial services beyond the existing ten demonstration districts.

On May 13, 1980, the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee on Criminal Justice held a hearing to review the performance of the ten demonstration districts and also to evaluate proposals to expand pretrial services.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

On July 30, 1980, the Senate Judiciary Committee ordered S. 2705, as amended, reported to the Senate. Subsequently, on September 20, 1980, S. 2705 passed the Senate without further amendment and was sent to the House of Representatives.

On April 8, 1981, Senators Biden and Mathias introduced the Pretrial Services Act of 1981 (S. 923), which was virtually identical to S. 2705 as passed by the Senate in 1980. On September 27, 1982, Congress enacted the Pretrial Services Act of 1982, which appears in Title 18 U.S.C. §§3152-3156.

9-6.302 Purpose of Act

The Pretrial Services Act of 1982 established pretrial services for defendants in every federal judicial district except the District of Columbia. The most important functions of pretrial services are: (1) compiling and verifying personal background information on individuals charged with violation of federal criminal law for use by judges and magistrates in making bail decisions; (2) monitoring and supervising individuals released on bail; and (3) reporting to the court all violations of the conditions of release and recommending necessary modifications in conditions of release. Demonstration pretrial services programs in 10 representative judicial districts proved that the programs would meet the objectives of reducing the number of defendants who fail to appear for trial; reducing the number of defendants unnecessarily confined during the pretrial detention period; increasing the use of nonfinancial terms of conditions of release; and reducing the cost of unnecessary pretrial detention. See U.S. Code Cong. & Ad. News 3, 2d Sess. at 2377.

9-6.310 Establishment of Pretrial Services--18 U.S.C. §3152

18 U.S.C. §3152 requires the Director of the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts, under the supervision and direction of the Judicial Conference of the United States, to establish pretrial services in each judicial district, other than the District of Columbia. The chief probation officer will supervise pretrial services, except in Special Districts created under 18 U.S.C. §3152(b), which authorizes the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts to establish pretrial services in certain Special Districts. The appropriate United States district court and the circuit judicial council must jointly recommend that a district be designated a Special District.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-6.320 Organization and Administration of Pretrial Services--18 U.S.C.

18 U.S.C. §3153 provides for the organization and administration of pretrial services in all districts. This includes districts in which pretrial services are supervised by a probation officer as well as districts in which pretrial services are supervised by chief pretrial services officers in Special Districts.

9-6.321 Appointment of Necessary Personnel

18 U.S.C. §3153(a)(1) authorizes the appointment of necessary personnel with the approval of the district court. In Special Districts, the panel responsible for the appointment of the chief pretrial services officer should be notified and consulted prior to any such appointment.

9-6.322 Temporary and Intermittent Services

18 U.S.C. §3153(a)(2) authorizes the chief pretrial services officer in Special Districts and the chief probation officer in all other districts to procure temporary and intermittent services to the extent authorized by 5 U.S.C. §3109.

9-6.323 Designation of Personnel

18 U.S.C. §3153(b) authorizes the chief probation officers in all districts (except Special Districts) in which pretrial services are established to designate personnel under chapter 231 of this Title to perform pretrial services.

9-6.324 Confidentiality of Information

18 U.S.C. §3153(c)(1) establishes the general rule governing confidentiality of information contained in pretrial services files, presented in any pretrial services report or divulged by a pretrial services officer, probation officer or staff member during the course of any hearing. Such information should be confidential and only be used for a bail determination. The confidentiality rule is designed to promote candor and truthfulness by the defendant in bail interviews. The final pretrial services report must be made available to the attorney for the accused and the attorney for the government.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-6.325 Regulations on Pretrial Services Information

18 U.S.C. §3153(c)(2) provides for exceptions to the general rule that pretrial services files should only be used for bail determinations. The Director of the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts is required to issue regulations which will establish the policy governing release of such information.

The following regulations have been promulgated by the Director as of May 6, 1983, pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §3153(c)(2):

A. Regulations and Statutory Provisions Governing the Release of Pretrial Services Information

The Pretrial Services Act of 1982, 18 U.S.C. §3153(c), contains the following provisions regarding the meaning and use of pretrial services information:

1. Definition

Pretrial services information means information obtained in the course of performing pretrial services functions in relation to a particular accused. 18 U.S.C. §3153(c)(1).

2. General principle of confidentiality

Except as provided in regulations issued by the Director of the Administrative Office, pretrial services information shall be used only for the purpose of a bail determination and shall otherwise be confidential. 18 U.S.C. §3153(c)(1).

3. Admissibility on the issue of guilt

Pretrial services information is not admissible on the issue of guilt in a criminal judicial proceeding unless such proceeding is a prosecution for a crime committed in the course of obtaining pretrial release or a prosecution for failure to appear for the criminal judicial proceeding with respect to which

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

pretrial services were provided. 18 U.S.C. §3153 (c)(3).

B. Pretrial Services Confidentiality Regulations

The following regulations are issued under the authority vested in me as Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts by the Pretrial Services Act of 1982, 18 U.S.C. §3153(c)(2), and 28 U.S.C. §604(f). They shall govern the release of information obtained in the course of a pretrial services investigation or ongoing bail supervision.

I. General

A. Recordation of pretrial services information

A pretrial services officer (PSO) shall record only such information as is pertinent to the determination of bail and to bail supervision. A PSO shall not solicit, record, or indicate in any form information regarding the alleged offense(s) unless such information has been obtained from documents of public record. Whenever information obtained from public records is developed and recorded, the PSO shall identify the source of information.

This regulation is not to be interpreted as prohibiting the report to a judicial officer of information relating to any danger that the release of a person charged with an offense may pose to any other person or the community, where such report is authorized by federal law.

B. Disclosure of pretrial services information

Except as provided in these regulations, pretrial services information shall not be divulged in connection with any civil, criminal, administrative, or legislative proceeding conducted by a federal, state or local authority.

C. Response to subpoenas

Pretrial services officers shall not disclose pretrial services information and shall not release their files and reports, or any other information developed during the bail investigation or during bail

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

supervision, in response to a subpoena, subpoena duces tecum, or any other form of judicial process in any federal, state or local judicial proceeding unless authorized by these regulations or directed by a judge of the district court which the officer serves.

D. Minimal disclosure

Any disclosure of pretrial services information which is made pursuant to these regulations shall be limited to the minimum information necessary to meet the need and purpose for the disclosure, as determined by the chief pretrial services officer (CPSO), the chief probation officer (in those districts where such officer supervises pretrial services as provided by 18 U.S.C. §3152(a)), or by such other court officer as may be specifically authorized under these regulations to make such determination.

E. Deletion of information in pretrial services report

A pretrial services officer may request that the judicial officer to whom a pretrial services report is furnished delete certain information from the report before making such report available to the attorney for the defendant and the attorney for the government. Specifically, the PSO may request that the judicial officer delete such information as the judicial officer determines, following an in camera inspection of the report, (1) would violate the promise of confidentiality by which it was obtained from a defendant or a third party or (2) might result in harm to the physical or mental health of the defendant or another person.

F. Return of counsels' copies

Any copies of the pretrial services report which are divulged to the defendant and/or to his attorney, or to the attorney for the government, for the purpose of a bail determination or in connection with bail revocation or the modification of release conditions, shall be returned to pretrial services at the end of the hearing and shall not be made part of the record.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

II. Authorized disclosures

A. Research

1. Pretrial services information shall be available to members of the pretrial services staff and to other qualified persons for the purpose of research related to the administration of justice. "Other qualified persons" are those whose training and experience are appropriate to the nature of the work in which they are engaged and who are performing such work with adequate administrative safeguards against the unauthorized disclosure of confidential information.

2. The CPSO, or the chief probation officer who supervises pretrial services, with the written approval of the chief of the Pretrial Services Branch, Division of Probation, Administrative Office of the United States Courts, shall determine which persons meet the definition of "other qualified persons" in subsection (1), supra, for the purpose of qualifying to receive pretrial services information needed for research related to the administration of justice.

3. A release of information for research purposes shall not be granted without a formal written proposal submitted to the CPSO or the chief probation officer who supervises pretrial services.

4. Necessary procedural safeguards shall be taken to protect the anonymity of those individuals to whom information released under this section relates. Such safeguards must include, but need not be limited to, the completion of a nondisclosure agreement affirming the continued confidentiality of information received.

B. Contract agencies

1. Pretrial services information is available to private agencies which have contracted with pretrial services to provide supportive services for the

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

custody or care of persons released pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §3154(4).

2. Contracts with private agencies which may receive pretrial services information must contain a non-disclosure agreement which requires the agency to adhere to the same policies and practices regarding the release of confidential information as are followed by pretrial services officers. Such non-disclosure agreement must be executed before pretrial services information can be released to the agencies or their employees.

C. Families

Information regarding a subject's status or adjustment in a pretrial services program may be furnished to members of his or her family only if (1) in the professional judgment of the contract agency and the PSO, such information would be beneficial in the ongoing supervision, treatment, or rehabilitation of the defendant, and (2) the defendant authorizes in writing the release of such information to specified family members.

D. Probation officers

Pretrial services information shall be available to probation officers for the purpose of compiling a presentence investigation report. A probation officer who receives pretrial services information must maintain the confidentiality of such information at all times.

E. Counsel

The attorney for the defendant and the attorney for the government shall have access to pretrial services information to the extent that such information is contained in a pretrial diversion report.

F. Law enforcement agencies

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

At the discretion of the court, pretrial services information may be used by law enforcement agencies for investigatory and enforcement purposes in certain limited circumstances if, in the opinion of the appropriate judicial officer, the disclosure of such information would not violate the promise of confidentiality by which it was obtained from a third party, and if the disclosure would not result in harm to the physical or mental health of the defendant or other persons. Such limited circumstances include (1) an investigation of or arrest for the defendant's failure to appear, (2) an investigation of alleged violations of the conditions of release, and (3) an investigation of crimes committed to secure or maintain release under the release provisions of chapter 207 of title 18, United States Code, such as perjury or false statements to a federal officer (18 U.S.C. §§1001, 1621, 1623).

This regulation is not to be interpreted as in any way diminishing the responsibility of pretrial services to inform the court and the United States attorney, pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §3154(5), of all apparent violations of pretrial release conditions, arrests of released persons, and any danger that a released person may come to pose to any other person or the community.

G. Defendant

Pretrial services information shall be available to the defendant upon written request in specified circumstances if (1) in the opinion of the CPSO, or the chief probation officer who supervises pretrial services, its disclosure would not violate the promise of confidentiality by which it was obtained from a third party, (2) disclosure would not result in harm to the physical or mental health of other persons, and (3) the defendant manifests in his request the understanding that the information which he is seeking may not necessarily be favorable to him. "Specified circumstances" are those occasions when the information is derived for the purpose of securing or maintaining employment, securing clemency, or securing or maintaining government benefits such as social security, veterans' payment, or pension benefits.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

H. In camera inspection by court

Pretrial services information which a pretrial services officer believes may be exculpatory of a defendant or a third party (including but not limited to a codefendant) may be released to the court for in camera inspection where the interest of justice so requires.

If a defendant or a third party demonstrates a basis for believing exculpatory information is contained in the files or report of a pretrial services officer, such information may be released to a judicial officer for in camera inspection where the interest of justice so requires.

For the purposes of this regulation, it is presumed that the "interest of justice" would be served by an in camera inspection of pretrial services information in situations where there is a substantial likelihood that the information, if disclosed in open court, would be material, exonerating on the issue of guilt, or germane to the issue of truth in an administrative, legislative, or judicial proceeding, and would not be otherwise available in such proceeding.

Chief Judge of the district on the administration and operation of pretrial services within the district. The Chief Judge of the circuit and the magistrate or their designees who serve on the panel in Special Districts should also be provided with a copy of the report in a timely fashion. The annual report to the Judicial Conference of the United States by the Director of the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts will include a report on the administration and operation of pretrial services for the previous year.

9-6.350 Definitions--18 U.S.C. §3156

18 U.S.C. §3156(b) provides:

As used in sections 3152-3155 of this chapter.

(1) the term "judicial officer" means, unless otherwise indicated, any person or court authorized pursuant to section 3041 of this title, or the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, to bail or otherwise release a person before trial or sentencing or pending appeal in a court of the United States, and

(2) the term "offense" means any Federal criminal offense which is in violation of any Act of Congress (other than a petty offense as defined in section 1(3) of this title, or an offense triable by court-martial, military commission, provost court, or other military tribunal).

9-6.400 PRETRIAL DETENTION HEARING REPORTING REQUIREMENTS

The Department of Justice has established the following reporting requirements for monitoring the use of the pretrial detention provisions of the Bail Reform Act of 1984.

Effective October 1, 1985:

1. Assistant U.S. Attorneys are not required to consult with the Criminal Division before making motions for pretrial detention hearings, although they should consider doing so in making close decisions or when they encounter unusual problems.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

2. The offices of U.S. Attorneys will report the following information monthly:

a. Number of pretrial detention hearings requested by the government and court (initial motions only--does not include motions for ten-day holds, motions that were withdrawn before final ruling, or motions for revocation of release);

b. Results of hearings (motion granted or denied);

c. Basis for rulings by judicial officer (risk of flight, dangerousness, or both);

d. Results of district court reviews of magistrate orders (defendant detained or released). NOTE: Appeals should continue to be reported as required to the Appellate Section; and

e. Additional comments describing particularly significant rulings, noteworthy cases, or special problems in obtaining detention orders, at the option of the U.S. Attorney.

Although the method for collecting the above information is the prerogative of the U.S. Attorney, each U.S. Attorney should designate a single person responsible for collecting and transmitting the information (typically an administrative assistant or supervising secretary). An optional Tally Sheet follows, along with a standard Reporting Form for their use. A supervising Assistant U.S. Attorney should decide whether to add any optional comments.

3. Using the following or a similar Reporting Form, monthly totals for each U.S. Attorney's Office, along with any additional comments, must be mailed to the Department during the first week of each month to:

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-7.000 ELECTRONIC SURVEILLANCE

9-7.010 Purpose and Scope

9-7.011 Introduction

The purpose of this chapter is to provide information and guidance to Department of Justice attorneys with respect to Title III of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968, as amended (see 18 U.S.C. §2510 et seq.), and closed circuit television surveillance.

9-7.012 Scope of Title III

Title III of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 (see 18 U.S.C. §§2510-2520) is a comprehensive scheme for controlling the interception of an unauthorized disclosure and use of oral, wire, and radio communications. The legislative history relating to Title III states that the purpose of Title III is to prohibit:

[A]ll wiretapping and electronic surveillance by persons other than duly authorized law enforcement officials engaged in the investigation of specified types of major crimes after obtaining a court order, with exceptions provided for interceptions by employees of communications facilities whose normal course of employment would make necessary such interception, personnel of the Federal Communications Commission in the normal course of employment, and Government agents to secure information under the powers of the President to protect the Nation against actual or potential attack, or to otherwise protect the national security.

S. Rep. No. 1097, 90th Cong., 2d Sess. (1968) at 27 reported in 7 Cong. News, 1968, 1635.

Except as otherwise specifically provided in other sections of Title III, 18 U.S.C. §2511 makes it a criminal offense to acquire aurally by means of an electronic or other device and a separate offense to disclose or use information obtained through such acquisition by means of an electronic or other device:

(a) any communication transmitted, in whole or through wire or cable facilities; and

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

(b) any oral communication uttered by one who exhibits a reasonable expectation that such communication is not subject to interception.

"Intercept" is defined in 18 U.S.C. §2510(4) as the aural acquisition of the contents of a communication ". . . through the use of any electronic, mechanical or other device." This definition clearly excludes simple eavesdropping by the unaided human ear from the coverage of the statute even if the conversation involved occurs in what otherwise would be considered a private place, but it is not equally clear what is intended to be included in the terms "aural acquisition" and "contents of the communication." The Senate Committee on the Judiciary, Report on the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1967, 90th Cong., 2d Sess. (S. Rep. 1097, April 29, 1968) (hereinafter, Senate Report) states at page 90 that, "[t]he proposed legislation is not designed to prevent the tracing of phone calls. The use of a 'pen register,' for example, is not governed by the procedures prescribed by Title III, because that device does not result in aural acquisition of the contents of the communication. See United States v. Illinois Bell Telephone Company, 531 F.2d 809 (7th Cir. 1976).

18 U.S.C. §2510(1) defines "wire communication" as covering all communications carried, in whole or in part, by wire or cable, and 18 U.S.C. §2511(1) therefore constitutes an absolute prohibition against wiretapping. On the other hand, 18 U.S.C. §2510(2) limits the meaning of "oral communication" to one uttered ". . . by a person exhibiting an expectation that such communication is not subject to interception under circumstances justifying such expectation" and, therefore, creates a prohibition which will vary in scope with changing factual situations. The Senate Report (at 89-90) indicates that the definition is intended to "reflect existing law" as set forth in Katz v. United States, 389 U.S. 347 (1967), but its description of the factors to be considered in determining whether the speaker's expectation of privacy is reasonable makes very little sense in a practical context.

The report's assertion that the speaker's subjective intent is not to be the controlling factor seems to be a statement of the obvious if it means only that reasonableness is an objective test, but it is clear that the efforts a subject makes to secure privacy for his/her conversation are extremely relevant even if, unbeknownst to him/her, he/she is in a place which is subject to eavesdropping by passersby. If the subject goes into a room and engages in a whispered discussion which an agent stationed outside the room's open window cannot hear clearly, the recording of that discussion by the agent through a sensitive microphone would be a violation of the statute even if the room were public and filled with strangers. Similarly, if it were known that the subject met with his/her co-conspirators every noon at a particular table in a restaurant where they discussed plans for a murder, despite the public nature of the place where the conspiracy was carried on, a microphone could be placed under their table only pursuant to an interception order.

It may be that, as the Senate Report states, any conversation in a jail cell may be recorded and that a prisoner can have no reasonable expectation of privacy there, but there will be very few places in which the subject of the interception may be said to have anything approaching a proprietary interest where such liberties will be permissible. The further example of the subject who loses the protection of the statute in his/her home by speaking loudly enough for those outside to hear has little practical relevance; it is difficult to imagine any great number of cases in which agents would be interested in recording criminal discussions being conducted for public consumption.

In sum, little in the way of substantive guidelines can be offered for resolution of the question of the speaker's expectation of privacy, but the decision of the Supreme Court in Mancusi v. DeForte, 392 U.S. 364 (1968), indicates that a liberal approach will be taken in extending the ambit of the Fourth Amendment's protection. When the issue is in doubt, the best practice is to proceed by way of an interception order.

18 U.S.C. §2510(5) excludes from the otherwise broad definition of "electrical, mechanical or other" devices any telephone equipment ". . . furnished to the subscriber or used by a communications common carrier in the ordinary course of its business [or] . . . being used . . . by an investigative or law enforcement officer in the ordinary course of his duties." The Senate Report does not amplify this exception, but the language seems clearly to be intended to exempt from the statutory prohibition an interception by extension telephone; whether any other result is intended is problematical. But see United States v. Harpel, 493 F.2d 346 (10th Cir. 1974), holding that an extension telephone used to accomplish an interception is not within the exception.

It is the view of the Department that radio communications which are transmitted independently of the facilities of a wire communications common carrier are not within the scope of the provisions of Title III regarding wire and oral communications. But see United States v. Hall, 488 F.2d 193 (9th Cir. 1973), holding that such transmissions are "oral communications" if attended by a reasonable expectation of privacy. At least as to so-called Citizen Band radio traffic, the view of the Department is that no such reasonable expectation of privacy can exist.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Interception of radio transmissions is, of course, within the scope of 47 U.S.C. §605. However, that section has no application to law enforcement officers acting in the regular course of their employment. See United States v. Hall, supra. For a more detailed discussion of the prohibitions against interception of wire, oral and radio communications, see USAM 9-60.200 et seq.

9-7.013 Consensual Monitoring

18 U.S.C. §2511(2)(c) provides that "it shall not be unlawful under this chapter for a person acting under color of law to intercept a wire or oral communication, where such person is a party to the communication or one of the parties to the communication has given prior consent to such interception." See United States v. White, 401 U.S. 745 (1971). As such consensual interceptions need not be made under Title III procedures. Interception orders under 18 U.S.C. §2518 are not available and should not be sought in cases falling within 18 U.S.C. §2511(2)(c). In this connection, the Attorney General has issued policy guidance concerning the monitoring of a private conversation with the consent of a party. The following constitutes the Attorney General's Memorandum of November 7, 1983, on consensual monitoring:

NOVEMBER 7, 1983 MEMORANDUM OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL ON CONSENSUAL MONITORING

By Memorandum dated October 16, 1972, the Attorney General directed all federal departments and agencies to obtain Department of Justice authorization before intercepting verbal communications without the consent of all parties to the communication. This directive was clarified and continued in force by the Attorney General's subsequent Memorandum of September 22, 1980, to Heads and Inspectors General of Executive Departments and Agencies.

This Memorandum supersedes the aforementioned directives. It establishes new authorization procedures with relevant rules and guidelines while it continues existing reporting procedures. It limits the requirement for prior written approval by the Department of Justice to specific types of investigations, but it continues to require verbal authorization from Department of Justice attorneys in all other types of investigations. This change in policy, eliminating prior written Department of Justice approval in most cases of consensual surveillance, is a result of the exercise of the Department's review function for some ten years. This experience reflects the fact that the departments and agencies have been uniformly applying the required procedures with great care, consistency, and good judgment, and that the number of inappropriate requests for consensual interceptions has been negligible.

The Fourth Amendment to the Constitution, Title III of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968, as amended (18 U.S.C. §2510, et seq.) and the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act of 1978 (50 U.S.C. §1801, et seq.) permit government agents, acting with the consent of a party to a communication, to engage in warrantless interceptions of telephone communications and verbal, non-wire communications. See United States v. White, 401 U.S. 745 (1971); United States v. Caceres, 440 U.S. 741 (1979). Similarly, the Constitution and federal statutes permit federal agents to engage in warrantless interceptions of verbal, non-wire communications when the communicating parties have no justifiable expectation of privacy. <sup>1/</sup> Since such interception techniques are particularly effective and reliable, the Department of Justice encourages their use by federal agents for the purpose of gathering evidence of violations of federal law, protecting informants or undercover law enforcement agents, or fulfilling some other similarly compelling need. While these techniques are lawful and helpful, their use in investigations is frequently sensitive, so they must remain the subject of careful, self-regulation by the agencies employing them.

The sources of authority for this Memorandum are Executive Order No. 11396 ("Providing for the Coordination by the Attorney General of Federal Law Enforcement and Crime Prevention Programs"); Presidential Memorandum ("Federal Law Enforcement Coordination, Policy and Priorities") of September 11, 1979; Presidential Memorandum (untitled) of June 30, 1965, on, inter alia, the utilization of mechanical or electronic devices to overhear non-telephone conversations; and the inherent authority of the Attorney General as the chief law enforcement officer of the United States.

I. DEFINITIONS

As used in this Memorandum, the term "agency" means all of the Executive Branch departments and agencies and specifically includes United States Attorneys' Offices which utilize their own investigators and the Offices of the Inspectors General.

---

<sup>1/</sup> As a general rule, nonconsensual interceptions of verbal wire communications violate 18 U.S.C. §2511, regardless of the communicating parties' expectation of privacy, unless the interceptor complies with the court-authorization procedures of Title III. of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 (18 U.S.C. §2510, et seq.) or with the provisions of the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act of 1978 (50 U.S.C. §1801, et seq.).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

As used in this Memorandum, the term "interception" means the aural acquisition of verbal communications by use of an electronic, mechanical, or other device. Cf. 18 U.S.C. §2510(4).

As used in this Memorandum, the term "public official" means an official of any public entity of government including special districts as well as all federal, state, county, and municipal governmental units.

II. NEED FOR WRITTEN AUTHORIZATION

A. Investigations Where Written Department of Justice Approval is Required

A request for authorization to intercept a verbal communication without the consent of all parties to the communication must be sent for approval to the Director of the Office of Enforcement Operations, Criminal Division, Department of Justice, when it is known that:

1. The interception relates to an investigation of a member of Congress, a federal judge, a member of the Executive Branch at Executive Level IV. or above, or a person who has served in such capacity within the previous two years;
2. The interception relates to an investigation of any public official and the offense investigated is one involving bribery, conflict of interest, or extortion relating to the performance of his or her official duties;
3. The interception relates to an investigation of a federal law enforcement official;
4. The consenting or nonconsenting person is a member of the diplomatic corps of a foreign country;
5. The consenting or nonconsenting person is or has been a member of the Witness Security Program and that fact is known to the agency involved or its officers;
6. The consenting or nonconsenting person is in the custody of the Bureau or Prisons or the United States Marshals Service; or
7. The Attorney General, Deputy Attorney General, Associate Attorney General, Assistant Attorney General for the Criminal Division, or the United States Attorney in the district where an investigation is being conducted has requested the investigating agency to obtain prior written consent for making a consensual interception in a specific investigation.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

B. Investigations Where Written Department of Justice Approval is Not Required

In all other cases approval of consensual surveillances will be in accordance with the procedures set forth in Part V. below.

C. Interceptions Not Within Scope of Memorandum

Even if the interception falls within one of the seven categories above, the procedures and rules in this Memorandum do not apply to:

1. Extraterritorial interceptions;
2. Foreign intelligence interceptions, including interceptions pursuant to the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act of 1978 (50 U.S.C. §1801, et seq.);
3. Interceptions pursuant to the court-authorization procedures of Title III. of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 as amended (18 U.S.C. §2510, et seq.);
4. Routine Bureau of Prisons interceptions of verbal communications which are not attended by a justifiable expectation of privacy;
5. Interceptions of radio communications; and
6. Interceptions of telephone communications.

III. AUTHORIZATION PROCEDURES AND RULES

A. Required Information

The following information must be set forth on any request to intercept a verbal communication without the consent of all parties to the communication:

1. Reasons for the Interception. The request must contain a reasonably detailed statement of the background and need for the interception.
2. Offense. If an interception is for investigative purposes, the request must include a citation to the principal criminal statute involved.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

3. Danger. If an interception is for protection purposes, the request must explain the danger to the consenting party.

4. Location of Devices. The request must state where the interception device will be hidden, i.e., on the person, in personal effects, or in a fixed location.

5. Location of Interception. The request must specify the location and primary judicial district where the interception will take place. An interception authorization is not restricted to the original district. However, if the location of an interception changes, notice should be promptly given to the approving official. The record maintained on the request should reflect the location change.

6. Time. The request must state the length of time needed for the interception. Initially, an authorization may be granted for up to thirty days from the day the interception is scheduled to begin. If there is need for continued interception, extensions for periods of up to thirty days may be granted. In special cases (e.g., "fencing" operations run by law enforcement agents), authorization for up to sixty days may be granted with similar extensions.

7. Names. The request must give the names of persons, if known, whose communications the department or agency expects to intercept and the relation of such persons to the matter under investigation or to the need for the interception.

8. Trial Attorney Approval. The request must state that the facts of the surveillance have been discussed with the United States Attorney, an Assistant United States Attorney, an Organized Crime Strike Force Attorney for the district in which the surveillance will occur, or any previously designated Department of Justice attorney for a particular investigation, and that such attorney has stated that the surveillance is appropriate under this Order. Such statement may be made orally.

9. Renewals. A request for renewal authority to intercept verbal communications must contain all the information required for an initial request. The renewal request must also refer to all previous authorizations and explain why an additional authorization is needed.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

B. Verbal Requests

Unless a request is of an emergency nature, it must be in written form and contain all of the information set forth above. Emergency (for example, telephonic) requests in cases in which written Department of Justice approval is required may be made to the Director or Associate Director of the Office of Enforcement Operations and should then be reduced to writing and submitted to the appropriate headquarters official as soon as possible after authorization has been obtained. An appropriate headquarters filing system is to be maintained for surveillance requests which have been received and approved in this manner. These verbal requests must include all the information required for any regular written requests as set forth above.

C. Authorization

Authority to engage in a consensual interception in situations set forth in Part II. A. of this Memorandum may be given by the Attorney General, the Deputy Attorney General, the Associate Attorney General, the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Criminal Division, a Deputy Assistant Attorney General in the Criminal Division, or the Director or Associate Director of the Criminal Division's Office of Enforcement Operations.

D. Emergency Interceptions

If an emergency situation requires a consensual interception during non-working hours at the Department of Justice, the authorization may be given by the head of the responsible department or agency, or his or her designee. Such department or agency must then notify the Office of Enforcement Operations not later than five working days after the emergency authorization. The notification shall explain the emergency and shall contain all other items required for a non-emergency request for authorization as set forth in Part III. A. above.

IV. SPECIAL LIMITATIONS

A. Consensual Interceptions

When a communicating party consents to the interception of his or her verbal communications, the device may be concealed on his or her person, in personal effects, or in a fixed location. Each department and agency engaging in such consensual interceptions must ensure that the consenting party will be present at all times when the device is operating. In addition, each department and agency must ensure: (1) that no agent or person cooperating with the department or agency trespasses while installing a device in a fixed location, and (2) that as long as the device is installed in the fixed location, the premises remain under the control of the government or of the consenting party. See United States v. Padilla, 520 F.2d 526 (1st Cir. 1975).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

B. Non-Consensual, Non-Private Interceptions

The interceptions of verbal, non-wire communications when no party to the communication has consented and when no party has a justifiable expectation of privacy <sup>2/</sup> must be conducted under tightly controlled circumstances. Each department or agency must ensure that no communication of any party who has a justifiable expectation of privacy is intercepted.

V. CONSENSUAL INTERCEPTIONS WHERE NO WRITTEN APPROVAL REQUIRED

Each agency must continue to maintain internal procedures for supervising, monitoring, and approving all consensual interceptions of verbal communications. Approval for a consensual interception must come from the head of the agency or his/her designee. Any designee should be a high-ranking supervisory official at headquarters level.

Prior to receiving approval for a consensual interception from the head of the agency or his/her designee, a representative of the agency must contact the United States Attorney, an Assistant United States Attorney, an Organized Crime Strike Force attorney in the district where the interception is to occur, or any previously designated Department of Justice attorney for a particular investigation. Final authorization may be obtained verbally from the attorney so contacted. The attorney, in giving final authorization, will determine both the legality and propriety of the interception in question.

Each department or agency shall establish procedures for emergency authorizations consistent with the requirements of Part III. D. above, with a follow-up verbal Department of Justice attorney authorization.

Records are to be maintained for each interception. These records are to include the information set forth in items 1 through 8 of Part III. A. above.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

VI. REPORTS

The head of each department or agency, or his or her designee, shall make quarterly reports summarizing the results of interceptions authorized pursuant to this Memorandum. The report shall contain the following information broken down by offense or reason for interception: the number of requests for authorization, the number of emergency authorizations, the number of times that the interceptions provided information which corroborated or assisted in corroborating the allegation or suspicion, and the number of authorizations not used. The quarterly reports shall be submitted in January, April, July, and October of each year to the Office of Enforcement Operations in the Criminal Division.

In October of each year, each department or agency shall submit to the Attorney General an inventory of all devices which are intended for the surreptitious interception of telephone or verbal, non-wire communications, including devices used to intercept communications pursuant to the warrant provisions of Title III. of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 as amended.

VII. GENERAL LIMITATIONS

This Memorandum relates solely to the subject of consensual interception of verbal communications except where otherwise indicated. This Memorandum does not alter or supersede any current policies or directives relating to the subject of obtaining necessary approval for engaging in nonconsensual electronic surveillance or any other form of nonconsensual interception.

9-7.014 Use of Pen Registers

One commonly used electronic surveillance device is the pen register. A pen register is a mechanical device that records the numbers dialed on a telephone. Unlike other devices used in electronic surveillance, a pen register does not actually overhear oral communications. For this reason a pen register has been regarded as a less intrusive form of electronic surveillance.

The United States Supreme Court has held that no warrant is required under either the Fourth Amendment or Title III of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968, 18 U.S.C. §2510 et seq., when installing a pen register. See Smith v. Maryland, 442 U.S. 735 (1979) (Fourth Amendment); United States v. New York Telephone Co., 434 U.S. 157 (1977) (Title III).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

However, it is the policy of the Department of Justice that no pen register shall be installed by any federal law enforcement agency except pursuant to an order issued by a federal district court. Such an order may be obtained under Rule 57(b) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure and, as an adjunct thereto, an order pursuant to the All Writs Act may be obtained directing the cooperation of the concerned telephone company. Procedures for obtaining such orders are described in USAM 9-7.231, infra. A model application and order are included in USAM 9-7.925 and 9-7.926.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

5. A description of the communication expected to be intercepted together with an analysis of the relevance of that communication to the investigation;

6. The names of all persons whose communications may be expected to be intercepted together with their backgrounds and places in the investigation;

7. The length of time it is requested that the device be activated; and

8. Any information not specified which may be relevant to the request or which may shed light on problems to be anticipated in the securing or execution of the order.

9-7.160 The Affidavit

The affidavit is a document of particular importance, and its preparation must be attentively supervised by the attorney who will oversee the interception. 18 U.S.C. §2518(1) and (4) specify the information to be contained in the application (including the supporting affidavit of probable cause) and order, respectively.

The probable cause standard for a Title III affidavit is the same as in other search and seizure situations. It is not the purpose or intent of this chapter to review the law of probable cause, and the chapter on search and seizure should be referred to for that purpose. Many courts have expressed views as to the sufficiency of the probable cause in support of applications for Title III interceptions, and these should be consulted for additional guidance. These cases include United States v. Cantor, 328 F. Supp. 561 (E.D. Pa. 1971); United States v. Leta, 332 F. Supp. 1357 (M.D. Pa. 1971); United States v. LaGorge, 336 F. Supp. 190 (W.D. Pa. 1971); United States v. Becker, 334 F. Supp. 546 (S.D.N.Y. 1971); United States v. Focarile, 340 F. Supp. 1034 (D. Md. 1972); United States v. Escander, 319 F. Supp. 295 (S.D. Fla. 1970); United States v. Scott, 331 F. Supp. 233 (D.D.C. 1971).

As a general matter, the highest degree of specificity consistent with the information available at the time of application and with the safeguarding of intelligence sources should characterize the affidavit. There should be no tendency to allege only the minimum necessary to establish probable cause, and the applying agent should be as candid and cooperative as is possible under the circumstances.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

In Illinois v. Gates, 103 S. Ct. 2317 (1983), the Supreme Court abandoned strict application of the "two pronged test" set forth in Aguilar v. Texas, 378 U.S. 108 (1964), and Spinelli v. United States, 393 U.S. 410 (1969), for determining the sufficiency of an affidavit based on information from an informant. The Court concluded that the wiser approach was the totality of the circumstances analysis that traditionally applies to probable cause determinations. The issuing judge is now charged with making "a practical, common-sense decision whether, given all the circumstances set forth in the affidavit. . . including the 'veracity' and 'basis of knowledge' of persons supplying hearsay information, there is a fair probability that . . . evidence of a crime will be found in a particular place." Id. at 2332. Thus, the principles announced in Aguilar, supra, and Spinelli, supra, should still be observed and in drafting the affidavit, particular care should be accorded to establishing the reliability of informants and the accuracy of the information which they provide. There is a tendency to assert conclusions rather than facts in Title III affidavits, and care must be used to avoid unsupported statements of opinion and conclusions, particularly where they relate to key facts. The source of each item of information in the affidavit should be specified. It is important to set forth underlying circumstances and the factors which give intrinsic reliability to the basic facts established by the affidavit.

The statute requires that the affidavit contain a full and complete statement as to whether or not other investigative procedures have been tried and failed or why they reasonably appear to be unlikely to succeed if tried or to be too dangerous. See 18 U.S.C. §2518(1)(d). In this connection, the use of stereotype statements and "boiler plate" should be avoided, and effort should be devoted to tailoring the statement to the "factual situation" presented. In United States v. Kerrigan, 514 F.2d 35 (9th Cir. 1975), the court said, "... the boiler plate recitation of the difficulties of gathering usable evidence in bookmaking prosecutions is not a sufficient basis for granting a wiretap order." However, the court affirmed the conviction, noting that the government had demonstrated a factual basis for the conclusion that other investigative means would not suffice. See also United States v. Pezzino, 535 F.2d 483 (9th Cir. 1976), and United States v. Smith, 519 F.2d 516 (9th Cir. 1975). This statement should, as part of its exposition, include consideration of every ordinary technique set out in the Senate Report. (Failure to list them in the application is not grounds for suppression, however, so long as they are factually eliminated by the allegations of the affidavit. See United States v. Curreri, 363 F. Supp. 430 (D. Md. 1973). The following excerpt from the Senate Report at 101, supra, deals with the showing planned by the drafters:

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Normal investigative procedure would include, for example, standard visual or aural surveillance techniques by law enforcement officers, general questioning or interrogation under an immunity grant, use of regular search warrants, and the infiltration of conspiratorial groups by undercover agents or informants. Merely because a normal investigative technique is theoretically possible, it does not follow that it is likely . . . What the provision envisions is that the showing be tested in a practical and commonsense fashion . . . .

In most situations where use of electronic surveillance will be contemplated, ordinary visual surveillance will have been attempted and resulted in agent testimony which, while helpful to probable cause, falls far short of the quantum of proof necessary for conviction. Visual surveillance might also be impracticable in ethnic or close, established neighborhoods where the residents are well known to each other or are aware of and hostile to the presence of law enforcement officers.

Questioning under a grant of immunity might be unfeasible on the practical grounds that such questioning would alert the subjects of the investigation to enforcement interest and cause a change in their methods of operation, if no reasonable number of persons could give testimony embracing the entire spectrum of the operation under investigation, or if the identity of the persons to subpoena and immunize is unknown.

Use of search warrants might be foreclosed because the particular offense involved seldom or never generates physical evidence, the organization under investigation keeps its records in easily disposable form, e.g., chalk boards, rice or flash paper or has in the past destroyed evidence in a search, the records sought are kept in code or mean little unless examined in the light of the transactions by telephone which gave rise to them (see United States v. Bobo, 477 F. 2d 974 (4th Cir. 1973)), or by the fact that such records were kept and retained for only 14 days while proof of a federal offense requires illegal activity for 30 days or longer.

Undercover operations are not a "standard" investigative technique. They are dangerous, expensive, and highly speculative ventures. The fact that the organization has existed for years with no additions to its membership, that such additions as were made to membership were made from an identifiable class of persons in existence for a long period of time, or that no one operative could hope to uncover the scope of the operations

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

(see United States v. Bobo, supra) might constitute reasons why no operative can be inserted.

The above listing is not to be used as a litany of excuses for use of electronic surveillance in working a case. It is intended solely as examples of reasons which might force consideration of electronic surveillance. Wire and oral interceptions have been and should remain almost the last resort of law enforcement.

In United States v. Donovan, 429 U.S. 413 (1977), the Supreme Court held that 18 U.S.C. §2518(1)(b)(iv) requires "that a wiretap application must name an individual if the Government has probable cause to believe that he is engaged in the criminal activity under investigation and expects to intercept his conversations over the target telephone" (45 U.S.L.W. at 4119). Thus, the application (and the proposed order, see United States v. Kahn, 415 U.S. 143, 152 (1967)) should include a list of those persons whom there is probable cause to believe are committing the offense and a list of those persons whom there is probable cause to believe will be overheard in conversations relating to the offense. See Appendices I and II at USAM 9-7.170, 9-7.180, 9-7.910, and 9-7.921, infra.

Where the sufficiency of the probable cause to warrant identification of a person is borderline, that person should be named in the application and order. In other words, the naming requirements of the statute should be liberally construed in the interest of caution. Accordingly, applications for extension interceptions should also name any person who was intercepted during a previous period of interception unless the evidence shows that the person either was not committing the offense or will not be overheard during the extension.

When transcribed conversations contain jargon or uncommon terminology, the terms should be explained. The explanation may be included in a short paragraph following the paragraph in which the communications are set out.

While the drawing of the affidavit is the business, in the first instance, of the supervising agent, the supervising attorney should work closely with him/her to insure that the affidavit fully complies with all technical requirements. In this connection, it should be noted that those who review proposed affidavits in the Department of Justice apply high standards, and they are not satisfied with minimal or arguable probable cause levels. Unsatisfactory affidavits will result in delay while the supervising attorney is contacted to provide required correction.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Finally, immediately prior to submission to the Department for review, the proposed affidavit should be reviewed to determine whether the probable cause in it is current. Generally, the Department expects the basic probable cause to be no more than 15 days old at the time the file containing the proposed affidavit, application, and order are received by the Office of Enforcement Operations in the Department which will process the request.

9-7.170 The Application

A. 18 U.S.C. §2518 lists in detail the information required to be contained in an application for an interception order as follows:

(a) The identity of the investigative or law enforcement officer making the application, and the officer authorizing the application;

(b) A full and complete statement of the facts and circumstances relied upon by the applicant, to justify his belief that an order should be issued, including (i) details as to the particular offense that has been, is being, or is about to be committed, (ii) a particular description of the nature and location of the facilities from which or the place where the communication is to be intercepted, (iii) a particular description of the type of communications sought to be intercepted, (iv) the identity of the person, if known, committing the offense and whose communications are to be intercepted;

(c) A full and complete statement as to whether or not other investigative procedures have been tried and failed or why they reasonably appear to be unlikely to succeed if tried or to be too dangerous;

(d) A statement of the period of time for which the interception is required to be maintained. If the nature of the investigation is such that the authorization for interception should not automatically terminate when the described type of communication has been first obtained, a particular description of facts establishing probable cause to believe that additional communications of the same type will occur thereafter;

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

(e) A full and complete statement of the facts concerning all previous applications known to the individual authorizing and making the application, made to any judge for authorization to intercept, or for approval of interceptions of, wire or oral communications involving any of the same persons, facilities or places specified in the application, and the action taken by the judge on each such application; and

(f) Where the application is for the extension of an order, a statement setting forth the results thus far obtained from the interception, or a reasonable explanation of the failure to obtain such results.

B. The requirements of 18 U.S.C. §2518 are designed to respond directly to the Supreme Court's analysis of the New York statute in Berger v. New York, 388 U.S. 41 (1967), the major elements of which are listed in the Senate Report, at 74, as

(1) Particularity in describing the place to be searched and the person or thing to be seized;

(2) Particularity in describing the crime that has been, is being, or is about to be committed;

(3) Particularity in describing the type of conversation sought;

(4) Limitations on the officer executing the eavesdrop order which would (a) prevent his searching unauthorized areas, and (b) prevent further searching once the property sought is found;

(5) Probable cause in seeking to renew the eavesdrop order;

(6) Dispatch in executing the eavesdrop order;

(7) Requirement that the executing officer make a return on the eavesdrop order showing what was seized;

(8) A showing of exigent circumstances in order to overcome the defect of not giving prior notice.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

C. In light of this congressional purpose, some discussion of the requirements of 18 U.S.C. §2518 is in order.

1. As a general matter, the highest degree of specificity consistent with the information available at the time of application and with the safeguarding of intelligence sources should characterize the application;

2. A form of application appears in USAM 9-7.900, infra. The form provides for the separate listing of those: (a) who are committing the offenses; and (b) whose communications are to be intercepted. See United States v. Kahn, 415 U.S. 143 (1974). Care should be taken to list under each category only those persons for whom the affidavit establishes probable cause. Complete instructions are included on the form;

3. If a probable interceptee is under indictment or being tried, this fact should be noted in the application. Likewise, if a telephone to be tapped is a public pay phone, it should be set out. In both instances the court will be provided an opportunity to draw or modify the order so as to make allowances for the given situation;

4. Lastly, if effectuation of the proposed electronic surveillance will require surreptitious or covert entry, the application should so advise the court. See Dalia v. United States, 441 U.S. 238, 259 n.22 (1979). See also suggested application form appearing at USAM 9-7.910, infra.

9-7.180 The Order

18 U.S.C. §2518(4) requires that an interception order contain the following information:

(a) The identity of the person, if known, whose communications are to be intercepted;

(b) The nature and location of the communications facilities as to which, or the place where, authority to intercept is granted;

(c) A particular description of the type of communication sought to be intercepted, and a statement of the particular offense to which it relates;

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

(d) The identity of the agency authorized to intercept the communications, and of the person authorizing the application; and

(e) The period of time during which such interception is authorized, including a statement as to whether or not the interception shall automatically terminate when the described communication has been first obtained.

18 U.S.C. §2518(5) also requires that every order and extension thereof contain the following statement to the effect that:

The authorization to intercept shall be executed as soon as practicable, shall be conducted in such a way as to minimize the interception of communications not otherwise subject to interception under this chapter, and must terminate upon attainment of the authorized objective, or in any event . . . [insert time specified in order]. Section 2518(5) expressly provides that the interception . . . must terminate upon attainment of the authorized objective, or in any event in thirty days.

The form and content of the interception order raise few problems not already raised in the preceding discussion, but again it must be borne in mind that each of the requirements listed above should be met in as great detail as possible. As with a normal warrant, the scope of the permissible search will be construed against the government, and it is likely that where the order omits some seemingly obvious point the court hearing a motion to suppress will be little inclined to give the agent the benefit of the doubt.

A form of order appears in USAM 9-7.921, infra. Where a public telephone is to be tapped, the order should be drafted to limit, insofar as practicable, monitoring activity to instances when the facility is being used by those whose interception has been authorized. See United States v. George, 465 F. 2d 772 (6th Cir. 1972). Physical surveillance of the telephone is usually necessary in this type of situation. In this way, interception is limited to calls placed by or to the subjects. See United States v. LaGorga, 336 F. Supp. 190 (W.D. Pa. 1971). A sample form for this purpose is included in USAM 9-7.922, infra. In situations where physical surveillance is impossible, provision for voice identification should be made.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Where the application sets forth the fact that a subject of the electronic surveillance is under indictment, the order should contain restrictive language requiring particular care to avoid the monitoring of conversations pertinent to trial or other disposition of that case. A sample form for such actions appears in USAM 9-7.923, infra.

Neither Title III nor the Fourth Amendment ". . . require that a Title III electronic surveillance order include a specific authorization to enter covertly the premises described in the order." Dalia v. United States, supra at 255 n.17, 258-259. Nevertheless, it is the policy of the Department that orders authorizing microphone surveillance should expressly authorize the installing agents to enter the premises surreptitiously to install the interception device, to maintain the device, to place the device more effectively, and to remove it at the expiration of the order. See suggested interception order form appearing at USAM 9-7.921, infra. Once the initial entry has been accomplished pursuant to the court's approval it is not necessary to secure either additional Department or court approval for subsequent entries in order to accomplish repositioning, maintenance, or removal. Contra United States v. Ford, 553, F. 2d 146 (D.C. Cir. 1977). See also J. Carr, The Law of Electronic Surveillance §4.07[2][b] (1977 & Supp. 1980); C. Fishman, Wiretapping and Eavesdropping §§104, 117, and 124 (1978 & Supp. 1980).

The order should contain a provision requiring periodic reports by the supervising attorney. The judge who authorizes an interception may, in his/her discretion, order that the court be furnished with periodic reports ". . . showing what progress has been made toward achievement of the authorized objective and the need for continued interception." See 18 U.S.C. §2518(6). The statute does not make mandatory the filing of these reports unless the judge so directs in the authorization order. The frequency of these reports is similarly left to the discretion of the court. It is, however, clearly in the interest of the government to file these reports in order to: (1) demonstrate continuing judicial interception; and (2) to build the strongest possible record on appeal. Accordingly, the supervisory attorney should, as a matter of course, recommend to the district judge that the reporting requirement be included in any orders authorizing interception of oral communications. This may be accomplished by including such a requirement in the draft order submitted to the court. The appropriate interval between reports depends upon what is reasonable under the facts of the case. The usual interval is about five days.

Based on recent allegations of possible breaches in some Title III investigations, it has been concluded that there is no legal need for a communication common carrier, landlord, custodian or other person to be acquainted with the full details of the court order such as, the names of the subjects to be intercepted, the violations of law being investigated, etc., in order for them to furnish the necessary assistance. Therefore, in the interest of security, a separate abbreviated order should be prepared and presented to the court in the applicable circumstances. A copy of this order may be left in the possession of the communication carrier. A sample form for this purpose is included in USAM 9-7.924, infra.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-7.200 APPLICATION PROCEDURE

9-7.210 Who May Apply for Interception Orders

Although the statute authorizes applications for interception orders to be made by investigative or law enforcement officers, it is the policy of the Department that all such applications be filed by supervising attorneys.

9-7.220 Judges to Whom Application Should be Presented

Judges of the United States district courts or of the United States courts of appeals are competent to issue interception orders within the area over which they have physical jurisdiction.

18 U.S.C. §2516(1) and §2518(1) refer to "judges of competent jurisdiction," and that term is defined in 18 U.S.C. §2510(9)(a) to include judges of both the district courts and courts of appeals. Except in extraordinary circumstances, all applications should be presented to district court judges.

9-7.230 Documents to be Presented

The documents to be presented to the judge include the application, with copies of the authorization and transmitted letter attached, the affidavit, and the original and one copy each of the proposed orders for interception and for pen register or tone decoder to be used.

It is the policy of the Criminal Division that no pen register shall be installed by any federal law enforcement agency except pursuant to an order issued by a federal district court.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Such an order may be obtained pursuant to Rule 57(b), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedures and as an adjunct thereto an order pursuant to the All Writs Act may be obtained directing the cooperation of the concerned telephone company. Sample forms which may be utilized in applying for an order are included at USAM 9-7.925 and 9-7.926, infra.

Attorneys applying for such orders are to satisfy themselves that the agency requesting the order is engaged in an investigation of possible criminal activity within the jurisdiction of the agency and that the requested pen register is reasonably calculated to further the investigation.

In no case should the duration of any order exceed thirty days, but applications for extension of an order may be made when, in the view of the U.S. Attorney or Strike Force Chief, it is necessary to accomplish the objective of the investigation.

9-7.231 Trap and Trace Guidelines

In United States v. New York Telephone, 434 U.S. 159 (1977), the Supreme Court held that a district court had the power to compel a telephone company to provide facilities and other assistance to agents of the government in order to attach a pen register to a given line. The Court further held, however, that a telephone company may not be compelled to provide such assistance in cases where such an order would be overly burdensome on the company. The courts have used the same rationale in cases concerning the placement of trap and trace devices to discover the originating numbers of incoming calls. See, e.g., United States v. Mountain States Telephone & Telegraph Company, 616 F.2d 1122 (9th Cir. 1980), In the Matter of the Application of the United States, 610 F.2d 1148 (3d Cir. 1979).

Providing the minimal assistance necessary to place a pen register on a line is generally a simple matter for the phone company, but providing assistance to trap and trace a call entails far greater expenditures of phone company time, manpower and operational capacity. Thus, a telephone company is more likely to feel that an order compelling its cooperation in tracing a phone call is too burdensome, and a court is more likely to scrutinize a request for such an order to determine its effect on the company. Therefore, to minimize the burden on a telephone company that might defeat an order, and further to minimize possible litigation that could delay an important trace, the Criminal Division, after some discussion with appropriate officials of the Bell System, believes that the following guidelines will be beneficial to all concerned with this investigative technique.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

A. Before considering an application for a trap and trace order, the supervising attorney will make certain that the investigating agency is conducting a bona fide criminal investigation of matters within its recognized jurisdiction.

B. Before an agent seeks an order to trace incoming calls to a particular line, he/she should, whenever possible, review the proposed trace with the local telephone company's security department. The security department should be able to advise the agent of foreseeable problems in the execution of the proposed order.

C. Except in very rare instances, orders should be limited to Electronic Switching System (ESS) or No. 5 cross-bar facilities. The likelihood of successfully tracing a telephone call through a system using less sophisticated equipment is extremely low and requires an inordinate amount of time, manpower and equipment.

D. Where possible, all orders should also be limited with respect to:

1. Scope--an order should avoid having a trap and trace device on more than one line at a given switching facility.

2. Geography--it is preferable that the order limit traces to "all calls originating in X city" or "all calls originating within a Y-mile radius of Z town." If the target phone is located in a large city, the order should limit the trace to a specific section or sections of the city whenever possible (i.e. "the east side of X city" or "the Borough of _____ in Y city").

3. Duration--orders should limit the trace to twenty (20) days, subject to an extension if the supervising attorney determines it to be necessary.

4. Hours--if it is possible to anticipate when calls will come into a target phone, tracing should be limited to these hours.

E. Except in unusual circumstances, the agent should seek the tracing information from the local telephone company only during regular business hours. The time intervals at which the agent may seek the information will vary, based upon the particular circumstances of each case. Appropriate arrangements can be made during the preliminary discussions with the local telephone company security department.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

F. Each order should contain a clause forbidding the phone company to disclose that a trace is or has been in progress.

G. A telephone company should be given the opportunity for a hearing in camera to seek limitations of any proposed order if it feels the order is too burdensome.

H. AT&T has indicated that it will accept orders under Rule 57(b), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, as well as under Rule 41, Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure.

I. As with pen registers, no central Justice Department authorization or separate affidavit will be required.

Please bear in mind that these guidelines are meant to be somewhat flexible depending on the circumstances of each investigation. As noted above, the actual scope, duration, etc., of any trace should be negotiated with the security department of the local company. Also, it should be noted that these guidelines may prove too restrictive for emergency situations (e.g., kidnappings), requiring even more flexibility. In general, however, compliance with these guidelines will result in a minimum of delay in obtaining an order and will assure close cooperation with AT&T, its Bell System subsidiaries, and other telephone companies. While we cannot consult with every private telephone company, these guidelines should also provide a useful framework for cooperation with other companies.

A model order incorporating the above guidelines is included at USAM 9-7.928, infra. A sample application for such an order is included at USAM 9-7.927, infra.

9-7.240 Presentation of Application

The application should be presented as expeditiously as possible following the receipt of authorization under 18 U.S.C. §2516(1). 18 U.S.C. §2518(3) provides that interception orders are to be issued in an ex parte proceeding if the issuing judge determines that:

- (a) There is probable cause for belief that . . .
a particular offense . . . [listed] in section 2516 .
. . [has been, is being, or is about to be committed];

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

(b) There is probable cause for belief that particular communications concerning that offense will be obtained through such interception;

(c) Normal investigative procedures have been tried and have failed or [if not tried] reasonably appear to be unlikely to succeed . . . or to be too dangerous;

(d) There is probable cause for belief that the facilities [or place] from which . . . [the interception will be made] are being used, or are about to be used, in connection with the . . . [offense involved] or are leased to, listed in the name of, or commonly used by . . . [the subject of the order].

Although 18 U.S.C. §2518(3)(b) requires a finding that ". . . particular communications . . ." will be intercepted, the Senate Report at 102 states that the judge is required ". . . to determine that there is probable cause for belief that facts concerning . . . the offense may be obtained . . . ."

The Senate Report at 102 states that these findings "together . . . are intended to meet the test of the Constitution that electric surveillance techniques be used only under the most precise and discriminate circumstances, which fully comply with the requirement of particularity . . . ."

18 U.S.C. §2518, paragraphs (2) and (3), indicate that the issuing judge is expected to play an active role in the application and issuance procedure. 18 U.S.C. §2518(2) provides that he/she may require the applicant ". . . to furnish additional testimony or documentary evidence . . ." if that contained in the original application is insufficient to justify the granting of an order, and 18 U.S.C. §2518(3) provides that the order may be issued as requested or as modified.

The Senate Report at 102 states that additional testimony given in connection with an application should be under oath, and a record should be made through the use of a court reporter. Since these ex parte proceedings are intended to be confidential, the judge should be requested to instruct the court reporter concerning this requirement of confidentiality and order that all the copies of the transcript and stenographic notes or tapes be placed under seal and treated in the same fashion as are recordings. See USAM 9-7.340, infra.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-7.250 Sealing of Documents

As soon as the order has been signed, the supervisory attorney should make certain that the judge has sealed the documents and has caused them to be properly safeguarded or to seal them himself/herself in the court's presence. See United States v. Cantor, 470 F.2d 890 (3d Cir. 1971). The usual practice is either to file the sealed package with the district court clerk for safekeeping in the clerk's vault or for the supervising attorney to take and retain custody of the sealed documents until the interception has been completed, at which time they will be filed with the court. If this latter procedure is followed, it must be ordered by the court and the identifying number of the action placed on the sealing envelope. (It is good practice to secure either a duplicate original or to make a duplicate copy for the supervising attorney's work file. Such a document is frequently needed prior to the normal time for unsealing. A copy of the signed order is usually provided to the communications common carrier in conjunction with any request for information, facilities, or technical assistance.)

9-7.260 Procedure if the Application for an Interception Order is Denied

In the event that a judge refuses to issue an interception order, notice must be given to the Department of Justice, Office of Enforcement Operations. Upon receipt of notification that an application has been denied, the Department will determine whether a new application can be or should be made on the facts available or whether additional investigation is needed.

9-7.270 Emergency Interceptions

18 U.S.C. §2518(7) provides for the interception of communications for up to 48 hours without a prior court order under certain emergency conditions. However, that section also provides that an application for a court order approving the interception must be made within 48 hours after interception has begun to occur.

The Attorney General, the Deputy Attorney General, or the Associate Attorney General will exercise his/her power to authorize such emergency interceptions in appropriate cases. As this provision does not dispense with any of the application procedures prescribed under 18 U.S.C. §2518(1)-(6) but merely delays the application process for 48 hours, the investigative agency requesting such authorization should, insofar as practicable, submit its request in the form indicated below:

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

A. A written request to the Attorney General signed by the director or head of the investigating agency. In addition to identifying the persons to be intercepted, the facilities from which, or the place where, the wire or oral communications are to be intercepted, and the offenses to which the communications are expected to relate, the request must expressly state that the requester has determined that:

1. An emergency situation exists that involves an immediate danger of death or serious physical injury to any person, conspiratorial activities threatening the national security interest, or conspiratorial activities characteristic of organized crime that requires a wire or oral communication to be intercepted before an order authorizing such interception can with due diligence be obtained; and
2. There are grounds upon which such an order could be entered under Title III.

The request should be accompanied by documentation setting forth probable cause for belief that:

- a. An individual is committing, has committed, or is about to commit a particular offense enumerated in 18 U.S.C. §2516;
- b. That particular communications concerning that offense will be obtained through such interception; and
- c. That the facilities from which or the place where, the wire or oral communications are to be intercepted are being used, or are about to be used, in connection with the commission of such offenses.

When it appears that an emergency authorization may be needed, the Office of Enforcement Operations should be immediately contacted for further information and advice.

9-7.300 CONDUCT OF INTERCEPTION

9-7.301 Preliminary Action

The statute requires that the interception devices be installed as soon after entry of the order as practicable. The supervising attorney should encourage the investigative agency to take whatever preliminary steps are appropriate to insure that the devices are installed at the earliest possible moment. Such action may include making preliminary arrangements with the telephone company or finding a means for surreptitious entry, where that will be necessary, in advance of approval by the court. The technical agent for a wiretap should obtain pertinent cable and pair and junction box information (appearances of leads) from the communications common carrier whenever possible. Also, the supervising agent and technical agent should select a listening post and obtain the necessary technical equipment to conduct the interception. The supervising agent should determine what personnel will be needed to conduct the interception and any visual surveillance and he/she should make arrangements for obtaining them. He/she should also set up the shifts and posts for all personnel.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-7.302 Preliminary Meeting Held by Supervising Attorney

Prior to any monitoring, action should be taken to insure that the interception will be in conformity with the court order and the statute. The supervising attorney should hold a meeting of the supervising agent, case agent, technical agent, and as many prospective monitoring agents as possible. During this meeting, he/she should inform the agents of the contents of the anticipated order. Stress should be placed on those provisions of the order describing:

- A. The type of communication sought to be intercepted;
- B. The particular offense to which it relates;
- C. Minimization; and
- D. Termination when the objective of the interception has been obtained.

He/she should instruct them what to do when confronted with the interception of communications involving crimes not named in the order, privileged communications, how to minimize interception of non-pertinent matters and when to terminate the interception. The supervising attorney should emphasize that any limitations in the order relating to, for example, limited hours of operation or visual surveillance or voice identification should be followed strictly.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-7.303 Posting the Order

As the interception must be confined to the terms of the court order, a copy of the order should be posted at the situs of the listening post. Each monitoring agent should be required to read, initial, and date the order prior to beginning his/her first monitoring shift.

9-7.310 Duties of Agents In General

9-7.311 Duties of the Supervising Agent

A. The supervising agent normally is the liaison between the supervising attorney and the monitoring agents. This insures that instructions from the attorney are properly communicated to the agents and that the attorney receives a clear picture of what the interception is producing. The supervising agent is also charged with the responsibility of conducting the interception in compliance with all instructions of the court and the supervising attorney and insuring that the interception device is installed as soon as practicable after the court order is obtained.

B. The supervising agent should prepare and deliver to the supervising attorney daily written reports. There is no prescribed form for such reports, but they should show the nature and scope of the interception for that day. For instance, they should indicate the number of relevant conversations intercepted, the number of non-pertinent conversations terminated, whether any of the individuals named in the order was intercepted, whether any new participants were identified, and whether any problems have arisen, e.g., equipment malfunction, privileged communications, or evidence of other crimes. These daily reports should be made even throughout a weekend or holiday period and may originally be accomplished via telephone with the documentation being prepared the next working day. A copy of the corresponding day's log should accompany each report.

C. The supervising agent's duties include providing for the integrity and admissibility of the recordings by following the principles set forth herein and insuring proper termination of the interception either on the day specified in the court order or when the objective of the interception has been accomplished, whichever comes first. If during the course of the interception the supervisory agent determines that the communications expected to be overheard are intercepted and recorded, the supervisory agent must immediately terminate the interception and inform the supervising attorney.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-7.312 Duties of Monitoring Agents

The monitoring agents have initial responsibility in the following circumstances:

A. In the event conversations between individuals in the relationship of husband-wife, clergyman-penitent, and physician-patient are intercepted, the agent must notify the supervising agent as soon as practicable;

B. In the event conversations between individuals in the relationship of attorney-client are intercepted:

1. If the conversation concerns a pending criminal case (the client under indictment), the agent must immediately shut off the recording device, remove the earphones, note such in the logs (identifying the parties intercepted), and notify the supervising agent; or

2. If the conversation relates to matters other than a pending criminal case, proceed as in A. above.

C. In the event conversations relating to crimes other than those specified in the court order are intercepted, the agent must notify the supervising agent as soon as practicable;

D. If the court order authorizes the interception of specific individuals' telephone calls from a public booth, the agent may intercept and record only those pertinent conversations of the specified subjects. When other persons are using the phone the recording device must be shut off and the earphones must be removed; and

E. In the event the communications expected to be overheard are intercepted and recorded, the agent must immediately request instructions from the supervising agent as to whether to terminate the interception.

9-7.313 The Log

The monitoring agents should maintain a contemporaneous log, by shifts, of all communications intercepted, indicating the reel and footage location of each communication; the time and duration of the interception; whether outgoing or incoming in the case of telephone conversations; the number called if the call was outgoing; the participants, if known; the subject and, to an abbreviated extent, the content of all pertinent conversations. Any peculiarities, such as codes, foreign language use, or background sounds, should also be noted. When the interception of a communication is terminated for purposes of minimization, that fact should be noted. This log should record the names of the personnel in each shift and the function performed by each, malfunctions of the equipment or interruptions in the surveillance for any other reason and the time spans thereof, and interceptions of possibly privileged conversations or conversations relative to crimes not specified in the original interception order. Each entry in the log should be initialed by the person making it.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-7.314 Duties of the Technical Agent

As previously noted, the technical agent should:

A. Prior to the order:

1. If a wiretap, secure the necessary technical information regarding the connections to be made to accomplish the interception. (This information should be preserved with the records of the case for later court use.) If the interception is to be of oral communications, he/she should similarly make necessary plans and preparations to facilitate the installation of the interception device;

2. Secure and establish the listening post in conjunction with the supervising agent;

3. Obtain and set up the interception equipment at the listening post. This equipment may include tape recorders in sequence, a cassette recorder, and a pen register or tone decoder.

B. Subsequent to the order:

If a wire interception, test the wire pairs with a hand set and make a test call to insure that the equipment is connected to the proper telephone line. See United States v. Lawson, 334 F. Supp. 612 (E.D. Pa. 1971).

Every technical act performed should be carefully recorded for future court use.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-7.315 Minimizing the Interception

18 U.S.C. §2518(5) provides that every order shall contain a provision that the interception shall be conducted in such a way as to minimize the interception of communications not otherwise subject to interception. This provision requires the intercept procedure to be conducted so as to reduce to the smallest possible number the interception of "innocent" communications. In this context, the word "possible" means feasible or practicable consistent with the objective of obtaining evidence of the criminal activity described in the interception order. See United States v. Focarile, 340 F. Supp. 1033, 1047 (D. Md. 1972); United States v. Ramsey, 503 F.2d 524, 532, n. 26 (7th Cir. 1974). In the usual situation, some interception must take place before it can be determined that the interception of the communication should be interrupted.

Conversations which must be minimized include privileged communications. However, it is difficult to draw any hard and fast rules in this area, for there appears to be an exception to every truism concerning minimization. As a guiding principle, it may be said that problems relating to minimization must be dealt with on an ad hoc basis and that monitoring agents must be provided with instructions by the supervising attorney as the surveillance progresses. For his/her part, the attorney should be familiar with the expanding case law in this area. See Scott v. United States, 436 U.S. 128 (1978); United States v. Terry, 702 F.2d 299 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 103 S. Ct. 2095 (1983); United States v. Feldman, 606 F.2d 673 (6th Cir. 1979).

The supervising attorney should provide guidance to the monitoring agents at his/her preliminary meeting. In addition, he/she should provide written instructions for posting at the listening post if the nature of the interception suggests the desirability of such action. During the course of the interception, the supervising attorney should review and change his/her instructions as to minimization whenever appropriate.

9-7.316 Evidence of Other Crime

The monitoring agents should also be instructed as to how to react to interceptions which apparently relate to crimes other than those enumerated in the order. Essentially, they should continue to intercept and record calls of this nature and report this fact to the supervising attorney as soon as possible, but not later than the next monitoring day. The attorney should then make an initial determination as to whether the conversation may be evidence of a crime not listed in the order. If so, the supervising judge should be informed via the next periodic report.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-7.317 Privileged Communications

A prime objective of authorized interceptions of private communications is to provide the government with legally admissible evidence of criminal activity which could not be obtained through normal investigative techniques. However, the confidentiality of conversations between individuals who stand in the relationship of husband-wife, clergyman-penitent, physician-patient, and attorney-client are protected by testimonial privilege. If a defendant could properly assert such a privilege against introduction of his/her conversations when the government had obtained evidence of them through normal investigative techniques, then it was not the intent of Congress to allow the government to use these conversations as evidence when obtained through electronic surveillance. Accordingly, 18 U.S.C. §2517(4) states:

No otherwise privileged wire or oral communication intercepted in accordance with, or in violation of, the provisions of this chapter shall lose its privileged character.

The practical effect on the investigative agency of this section is this: If an intercepted communication would be otherwise privileged, the government may not introduce evidence of the communication's content at trial. Whenever the agent supervising the interception becomes aware that the subject whose conversation is being intercepted is talking to his/her spouse, his/her physician, or his/her clergymen, the agent should bring this fact to the attention of the supervising attorney at the end of the recording period, or as soon thereafter as practicable. After being informed of the nature and content of these conversations, the supervisory attorney can make a determination as to whether or not the communication in question is one which qualifies for the privilege and so advise the investigative agent.

A more serious situation is presented when the conversations overheard by the government are between the subject and his/her attorney (or if the subject is an attorney, between the subject and his/her client) In this instance, the confidential communication is not only protected by a testimonial privilege but also by the Sixth Amendment's guarantee of the individual's right to the assistance of counsel. If the intercepted communications deal with legal advice given by the attorney to the client concerning a pending criminal case, then care must be taken not to violate the client's Sixth Amendment rights.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

In the event that the electronic surveillance intercepts a communication between an attorney and client concerning a pending criminal case, that is, a case in which the client is under indictment, the agent supervising the interception must immediately shut off the interception equipment and make a notation in the logs that the conversation was shut off and was not overheard. The log should identify the attorney and the client who were on the line which occasioned the shut off. The agent should also bring this fact to the immediate attention of the supervising attorney. In rare instances, the government may be authorized to intercept the conversations of a subject and his/her attorney after an indictment has been returned against the subject; Cf. Osborn v. United States, 385 U.S. 323 (1966). However, great care must be exercised by the supervising attorney that actual pending cases against a subject are not needlessly jeopardized in order to further potential cases.

In the event, on the other hand, that the electronic surveillance intercepts a communication between an attorney and client relating to matters other than a pending criminal case, e.g., a conversation in relation to an illegal activity, the agent supervising the interception should, at the earliest practicable moment, bring this fact to the attention of the supervising attorney. Upon being informed of the circumstances and content of the conversation, the supervising attorney must decide if the conversation is in fact privileged. If that determination is made, the supervising attorney should instruct the investigative agency not to disclose the content of the privileged communication to other investigative or police agencies, nor to conduct further investigation based upon the contents of the privileged communication. Such privileged conversations should not be included in the copies of transcriptions of the tapes, but should be recorded on the sealed copy that will remain in the custody of the court.

9-7.318 Reports to the Court

The authorizing order normally requires that reports be filed periodically with the supervising judge. 18 U.S.C. §2518(6) provides that the reports should show ". . . what progress has been made toward achievement of the authorized objective and the need for continued interception." As a matter of policy, the supervising judge should be kept fully advised of the progress of the interception.

The forms used for this purpose vary from district to district. However, it is good practice to include as part of each periodic report to the court copies of the daily reports received by the supervising attorney from the supervising agent. The report should clearly identify the interception by docket number or whatever other means is used in the district, the date it is made, and the period it covers. It should also explain to the court matters which, in the opinion of the supervising attorney, might not be clear to the court. It might contain a copy of the minimization instructions given to the agents at the onset of the interception and, in later reports, such changes as are made in these instructions. In this manner the court could change the instructions if appropriate. If certain expected communications have not been overheard and the reason is apparent, this information should be included in the report. For example, that an expected conversation between X and Y at X's house might not occur on a certain date because Y was ill. It is not necessary to go into great detail or cover matters which do not relate to the authorized objective. But the supervising attorney should take care that his/her summary fairly apprises the court of the progress of the surveillance.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

In advising the court of ". . . the need for continued interception," the supervising attorney is essentially restating and updating the probable cause to continue the surveillance under the original authorization. While the sufficiency of the report will not be tested by the same standards as the original application, the record of the case will be strengthened if the government has demonstrated throughout the surveillance that the conditions which justified the original authorization are still operative. Therefore, the supervising attorney should not phrase the continued need in a conclusory fashion, but he/she should candidly, and, in some detail, inform the court why he/she thinks the electronic surveillance should continue. Each report should contain an order sealing it until after the conclusion of the interception and placing it in the custody of whomever has custody of the application and order.

The interval between reports will, of course, be determined by the desires of the supervising judge. Absent some firm indication by him/her, the interval suggested should depend on what is reasonable in the case; the longer the period of authorized interception, the longer the periods between reports may be. Usually, the interval is set at about five days. The reports to the court have assumed importance because of the significance which courts of appeals and reviewing district courts have attached to them, particularly in evaluating the effectiveness of judicial supervision of minimization. See United States v. Bynum, 485 F.2d 490 (2d Cir. 1973); United States v. Quintana, 508 F.2d 867, 875 (7th Cir. 1975); United States v. James, 494 F.2d 1007, 1021 (D.C. Cir. 1974); United States v. Cox, 462 F.2d 1293, 1301 (8th Cir. 1972).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-7.320 Recording the Intercepted Communications

Title III directs that the contents of any intercepted communication ". . . shall, if possible, be recorded on tape or wire or other comparable device." (See 18 U.S.C. §2518(8)(a)). This requirement would seem to be mandatory in all but the most extraordinary situations. Although mechanical breakdown of recording equipment would probably be temporarily excusable under this section, the preferred practice is to provide for recorder redundancy in an effort to avoid such a situation.

9-7.321 Protection of the Recording

The statute commands "the recording of the contents of any wire or oral communication under this subsection shall be done in such way as will protect the recording from editing or other alterations." (See 18 U.S.C. §2518(8)(a)). Accordingly, the following procedure should be followed during the period of authorized interceptions:

A. Either during or at the end of each recording period a copy of the recorded communications should be made for the use of the investigative agency and the supervising attorney;

B. The original recording should be placed in a sealed evidence envelope and kept in the custody of the investigative agency until it is made available to the court at the expiration of the period of the order;

C. A chain of custody form should accompany the original recording. On this form should be a brief statement, signed by the agent supervising the interception, which identifies:

1. The order which authorized the recorded interceptions (by number if possible);
2. The date and time period of the recorded conversations;
3. The identity (where possible) of the individuals whose conversations were recorded;
4. The place where the intercepted communications took place.

The form should indicate to whom the supervising agent has transferred the custody of the original recording and the date and time that this occurred. Each subsequent transfer, including that to the court, should be similarly noted on the form.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The agent supervising the recording should mark a label attached to the original tape reel or wire so as to identify it as corresponding with the accompanying chain of custody form. The date of the recording should also be marked on the label and this should be initialed by the agent.

D. Each agent or other person signing the chain of custody form should be prepared to testify in court that the original tape, while in his/her custody, was kept secure from the access of third parties (unless so noted on the form) and was not altered or edited in any manner.

It is the responsibility of the investigative agency to ensure that original recordings in their custody will be maintained in such way as to ensure their admissibility in evidence at trial over objections to the integrity of the recording.

9-7.322 Procedure When No Recording Can Be Made

In those unusual instances where no recording of the intercepted communications could be made, the following procedure should be utilized:

A. If it is intended that the overheard conversation be introduced in evidence at trial the intercepting agent should make a contemporaneous log or memorandum. This log should be as near to a verbatim transcript as is possible under the circumstances of the interception;

B. The log or memorandum should close with a brief statement signed by the agent indicating the date, time, and place of the intercepted conversation. The order authorizing the interception should be identified. The agent should indicate that the log or memorandum contains the contents of the intercepted communication which he/she overheard. This should be followed by the agent's signature; and

C. This log should be treated by the investigative agency as if it were an original recording of the intercepted communication, and the procedure outlined in USAM 9-7.321, supra, should be followed.

9-7.323 Duplicate Recordings

The statute allows the investigative agency to make duplicate recordings of the original tape or wire before the original is sealed. Since the sealed original will, as a practical matter, be unavailable for replay by the investigative agency or the Department of Justice, at least one duplicate should always be made from the original before sealing. Some agencies record a duplicate original "work copy" of the tape contemporaneous with the recording of the original. See United States v. Lanza, 349 F. Supp. 929 (M.D. Fla. 1972).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-7.330 Termination of the Interception

Congress provided a statutory scheme allowing authorized electronic surveillance of private conversations for the limited purpose of securing evidence of crime which could not easily be obtained in other ways. Although modern techniques of electronic surveillance might be useful in providing investigative agencies with general intelligence concerning criminal activities, the use of the technique solely for general intelligence gathering would raise serious constitutional questions under the Fourth Amendment. Therefore, 18 U.S.C. §2518(5) commands interception to terminate either when the objective of the surveillance has been realized, or on a specified date within 30 days after the initial interception--whichever comes first.

9-7.331 Termination upon Achievement of Authorized Objective

The interception of private conversations must terminate as soon as the government has obtained the evidence which was the objective of the authorization. If interception is continued beyond that point, evidence derived from continued interception will not be construed as obtained pursuant to court order. "No order entered under this section may authorize or approve the interception of any wire or oral communication for any period longer than is necessary to achieve the objective of the authorization . . ." (See 18 U.S.C. §2518(5)). Such an unauthorized interception would be violative of the Fourth Amendment. (See Katz v. United States, 389 U.S. 347 (1967)), and would have three serious consequences: First, evidence derived from the unauthorized interception would be rendered inadmissible. See 18 U.S.C. §2515; Weeks v. United States, 232 U.S. 383 (1914). Second, the agents conducting the unauthorized interception might be subject to criminal penalties. (See 18 U.S.C. §2511). Third, the agents conducting the unauthorized interception subject to civil suit by persons whose conversations were intercepted. (See 18 U.S.C. §2520).

It would be well to note that, while many orders cite the identification of co-conspirators as one of the primary objectives, a blind reliance upon this language as grounds for continuing the surveillance until the calendar expiration date could be fraught with serious consequences. While it is true that identifying and defining the roles of conspirators is a proper objective, it must be realized that these interceptions, especially gambling interceptions, rarely result in the identification of all participants. The central consideration is whether a continued interception can stand the test of subsequent court scrutiny.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The investigative agent supervising the interception bears initial responsibility for terminating the interception. When, during the course of the interception, the supervising agent determines that the communications expected to be overheard have been intercepted and recorded, he/she shall cause the interception to terminate immediately. He/she shall then inform the supervising attorney of his/her decision. If the supervising attorney does not concur, when interception under the original order shall be resumed. The daily report of the supervising agent to the supervising attorney will enable the supervising attorney to make an independent judgment as to whether the objective of the surveillance has been accomplished. If the supervising attorney determines that sufficient evidence has been obtained from the authorized interception, the investigative agency must immediately cease further electronic surveillance.

9-7.332 Termination Upon Expiration of Period of Interception

Regardless of whether or not an authorized interception has achieved its objective, it may only take place during the period authorized by the court order. It is the responsibility of the investigating agency to terminate the interception within the time period appearing on the order. The investigative agency should install the intercepting device as soon as authorization is obtained so that the authorized time period does not begin to run after the initial probable cause has grown stale. Whether execution of the warrant was sufficiently prompt is a question of fact which decided adversely to the government could be fatal in a motion to suppress. The investigative agent supervising the interception should promptly inform the supervising attorney that termination of the electronic surveillance has occurred.

9-7.333 Application for Extension of Interception

If the supervising attorney anticipates that the interception will terminate without achieving its authorized objective, he/she should determine if there are facts which would justify making application for an extension of the authorization. If the supervising attorney decides that application for an extension is appropriate, he/she should obtain authorization from the Attorney General or specially designated Assistant Attorney General to apply for the extension exactly as if he were applying for an original order for an interception. An application for an extension, if filed without the express authorization of the Attorney General or a specially designated Assistant Attorney General, is unauthorized and communications intercepted pursuant to the extension order will be suppressed as the product of an illegal interception. It should be noted that the draft application which he/she submits must include ". . . a statement setting forth the results thus far obtained from the interception, or a reasonable explanation of the failure to obtain such results." (See 18 U.S.C. §2518(1)(f)). If the supervising attorney intends that an existing interception continue without interruption via an extension, it is his/her responsibility to take the necessary steps to secure an extension from the authorizing court before the time when the interception must terminate pursuant to the original order.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

When a gap exists between the termination of the original interception and the signing of the extension order, it is not necessary that the interception facilities be removed or dismantled. It is sufficient that they be inactivated, that is, turned off. During this period it is imperative that the intercepting agents understand that they do not have authority to intercept or record communications unless and until the court signs the extension, and even then their authority is circumscribed by the terms of the extension order and not the original. However, terms inadvertently omitted from the extension may be determined by reference back to the original. See United States v. Poeta, 455 F. 2d 117 (2d Cir. 1972). During the extension interception, the same procedure should be followed as during the original interception.

9-7.340 Sealing and Custody of the Recording Upon Termination of Interception

Immediately upon termination of the interception, the original recordings of the conversations should be submitted by the supervisory attorney to the judge authorizing the interception. See United States v. Poeta, supra. The judge will then order the original recordings sealed and order their place of custody. As most courts and their clerks are not equipped to safeguard evidence, the supervisory attorney should suggest that the court order the custody of the sealed recordings to remain with the investigative agency which undertook the surveillance. In many instances, the bulk of the tapes will preclude their being kept by the clerk of the court. The sealing should be done under the supervision of the authorizing judge.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Any delay should be carefully documented to show a good faith attempt at compliance with the statute by the government. If the failure to seal on the day of termination is foreseeable, the supervisory attorney should seek an order of the supervising judge extending the time for sealing. If not, the procedure followed in most districts of submitting a form sealing order to the court could help. In addition to the matters required by 18 U.S.C. §2518(8)(a), the order could recite the reasons for any delay in sealing. It is suggested that the order likewise recite the number of tapes sealed. See USAM 9-9.730, infra, for a form sealing order.

If the court so orders, it is the responsibility of the investigative agency to maintain the recordings without breaking the seal placed upon them by court order. The statute directs that the unbroken seal of the court or an explanation for its absence is pre-requisite to admitting the recordings in evidence at trial. The investigative agency must be prepared to maintain safely the original recordings for a minimum period of 10 years. Even after this 10 year period, the recording may only be destroyed pursuant to an order of the court which issued the original authorization to intercept. At the time of signing of the sealing order, it is also appropriate to remind the court of its reporting obligation under 18 U.S.C. §2519 and to fill the report out for the court and submit it to the court, if that is the practice in the district. Failure to file this report is not a ground for suppression. See United States v. Kohne, 358 F. Supp. 1053 (W.D. Pa. 1973).

9-7.350 Use of Original Recording before Trial

As noted, the prerequisite for admissibility into evidence of the original recording is the presence of the court's seal or a satisfactory explanation for its absence. If for any reason, however, it becomes necessary for the government to make use of the original recording before trial, the supervising attorney should apply to the authorizing judge for an order allowing him/her to break the seal and use the recording. The application should state in detail the reasons for the request and the uses to which the original recording will be put. If the supervising attorney drafts the order authorizing breaking of the seal, this order should contain the same information appearing in the application.

Some courts will handle the question of admissibility of the recording in a pre-trial conference. In those situations, the trial attorney will have an opportunity to break the seal and listen to the recording before trial. This enables the trial attorney to examine the quality and content of the recording. Storage in high heat or close to strong magnetic forces can lower the quality of the recording. At this pre-trial stage, counsel for the defendant should be afforded an opportunity to be present at the breaking of the seal, playing of the original tape, and resealing of the original tape. It should be noted that 18 U.S.C. §2518(8)(c) makes violation of the recording, sealing, and custody provisions subject to the contempt power of the court.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-7.400 THE INVENTORY

9-7.410 The Notice Requirement

Congress has provided that notice be served on certain persons whenever an application for an interception order has been filed (See 18 U.S.C. §2518(8)(d)). Congress intended by this provision that the government's activities under Title III would be made public. In addition, Congress intended to put the subject of the interception on notice so that he/she could seek civil redress under 18 U.S.C. §2520 if he/she believed his/her privacy was violated (See Senate Report, at 105).

9-7.420 Persons Entitled to Receive Notice

The persons named in the order or the application are entitled to receive notice. Other parties to intercepted communications may receive notice if the issuing judge determines in his/her discretion that it is in the interest of justice. (See 18 U.S.C. §2518(8)(d)). Everyone whose communications were intercepted is a potential recipient of notice under this section.

9-7.430 Contents of the Inventory

Notice is given to a party by serving upon him/her an inventory which includes:

- (1) the fact of the entry of the order or the application;
- (2) the date of the entry and the period of authorized, approved or disapproved interception, or the denial of the application; and
- (3) the fact that during the period wire or oral communications were or were not intercepted.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

See 18 U.S.C. §2518(8)(d). Upon receipt of the inventory, the recipient or his/her counsel may move for inspection of the application, order, and recorded interceptions. The judge may grant this inspection in full or in part if he/she determines it to be in the interest of justice.

9-7.440 Time of Service

The court shall order service of the inventory "[w]ithin a reasonable time . . ." after (a) the date of filing of an application for an order of approval under 18 U.S.C. §2518(7)(b), which is subsequently denied or (b) the termination of the period of an order or extension thereof. The "reasonable time" must occur within 90 days of either (a) or (b).

9-7.450 Postponing of the Inventory

Congress recognized that continuing investigation of a subject could be compromised if the inventory invariably was served within the 90 day period. The filing of the inventory may, therefore, be postponed during a period when the supervising attorney can demonstrate that there is "good cause" for the postponement. See 18 U.S.C. §2518(8)(d) (1976).

Whenever the supervising attorney has reason to believe that there is "good cause" to postpone the serving of the inventory, he/she should immediately file an ex parte motion stating the good cause and requesting postponement. The motion may be made to any judge of competent jurisdiction. Normally, it would be made before the judge to whom application for the order was originally made. It is clear that the inventory may be late, See United States v. John, 508 F.2d 1134 (8th Cir. 1975); United States v. Lucido, 373 F. Supp. 1142 (E.D. Mich. 1974); United States v. Wolk, 466 F.2d 1143 (8th Cir. 1972); United States v. Forlano, 358 F. Supp. 56 (S.D. N.Y. 1973); United States v. Cafero, 473 F. 2d 489, (3d Cir. 1973). Failure to serve any inventory at all may result in suppression where there is a further showing of specific prejudice to support suppression as to any defendant. See United States v. Principie, 531 F. 2d 1132 (2d Cir. 1976). The inventory time can, of course, be extended pursuant to appropriate order. See United States v. Manfredi, 488 F. 2d 588 (2d Cir. 1973); United States v. Schullo, 363 F. Supp. 246 (D. Minn. 1973); United States v. Cafero, supra.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-7.460 Preparation of Inventory List

The second requirement set forth by the Supreme Court in Donovan, 513 F.2d 337 (6th Cir. 1975), involves post intercept inventory notice. The Court held that 18 U.S.C. §2518(8)(d) requires the government, when the intercept is over, to classify all persons whose conversations have been overheard and to provide that information to the issuing judge so that he/she may use it in causing mandatory notice to be served on persons named in the application or order and in exercising his/her discretionary power to have notice served on unnamed persons who were intercepted; see Donovan, supra. The following are essential classifications:

- A. Persons named in the order or the application;
- B. Other persons whose intercepted communications apparently incriminate them in the offense or offenses specified in the interception order;
- C. Other persons whose intercepted communications apparently incriminate them in offenses not specified in the interception order; and
- D. Persons whose intercepted communications are apparently non-incriminating.

See USAM 9-7.400 to 9-7.450, supra, and USAM 9-7.940 to 9-7.943, infra.

If any omission is discovered after the judge has been provided with the classifications, a supplementary report correcting the omission should be made to him/her as soon as possible.

To facilitate the preparation of the inventory listing, the supervising attorney should require the supervising agent to furnish him/her a preliminary report detailing the names of those intercepted and the category into which each falls, approximately 80 days after termination of the interception.

On preparation of inventory generally, see United States v. Chun, 503 F.2d 533 (9th Cir. 1974). See also United States v. Doolittle, 507 F.2d 1368, affirmed en banc, 518 F.2d 500: (6th Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 430 U.S. 905 (1977), and United States v. Donovan, supra.

The inventory listing should be forwarded by the supervising attorney to the court about 5 days prior to the date inventory is due together with a proposed order in which the names of those to be mandatorily inventoried are listed by category. The proposed order should also make provisions for insertion by the court of the names of those to be discretionally inventoried. This will permit the supervising judge to exercise his/her discretion by indicating who is to be inventoried. The supervising attorney should assist the judge in the exercise of this function by making recommendations. Ordinarily, those in the first three of the above categories are inventoried and those in the fourth one are not. It is important to insure that every indictee and prospective indictee who has been indentified subsequent to the inventory proceedings is served with an inventory as soon as practicable.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-7.500 DISCLOSURE OF INTERCEPTED COMMUNICATIONS

Congress did not intend to make private communications become public property through the use of authorized electronic surveillance. The statute (18 U.S.C. §2517(1), (2), and (3)) sets forth the limited categories of who may disclose information derived through electronic surveillance, to whom the information may be disclosed, and how the information may be used. In 18 U.S.C. §2517, the Congress struck a balance between the need of the community to keep private its communications and the need of the community for effective law enforcement through disclosure of the fruits of electronic surveillance. Any disclosure by government attorneys and agents or any other person of the contents of intercepted communications which is not pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §2517 may subject the offending party to a civil action for damages under 18 U.S.C. §2520.

9-7.510 Who May Disclose Intercepted Communications

Any investigative or law enforcement officer who, by any means authorized by this chapter, has obtained knowledge of the contents of any wire or oral communication, or evidence derived therefrom, may disclose or use the information in the performance of his/her official duties. (18 U.S.C. §2517(1) and (2)). This would include investigative agents and supervising attorneys who either participated in the interception of the communication to be disclosed or who have learned of its contents from someone entitled to tell them.

Not every "investigative or law enforcement officer" may disclose or use his/her knowledge of the contents of an intercepted communication, however. Only those agents and attorneys who in the course of their duties transmit such information are authorized to do so. The contents of an intercepted communication is to be disclosed by an agent or attorney only after he/she is satisfied that the person to whom disclosure is made has a need to know the information.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-7.520 To Whom Intercepted Communications may be Disclosed

Disclosure may be made ". . . to another investigative or law enforcement officer to the extent that such disclosure is appropriate to the proper performance of the official duties of the officer . . . receiving the disclosure." (See 18 U.S.C. §2517(1)). By this section, Congress intended that there be close cooperation among the different federal investigative agencies, and between federal and state or local law enforcement agencies in the administration of criminal justice (see Senate Report, at 99). If an individual is authorized by law to investigate, make arrests, or prosecute any of the offenses enumerated in 18 U.S.C. §2516, and would be able to make use of the information in the course of his/her official duties, then disclosure to him/her of the contents of an intercepted communication is proper. See Iannelli v. United States, 477 F.2d 999 (3d Cir. 1973). This limitation is applicable to state and local jurisdiction investigative and law enforcement officers.

9-7.530 Non-Statutory Restriction on Disclosure

Although the statute permits disclosure of information pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §2517(1) and (2), situations will arise wherein the congressional policy of cooperation between federal and state investigative agencies is counterbalanced by a policy of non-disclosure of information between separate investigative agencies to protect the security and integrity of an agency's authorized interception and the subsequent prosecution of the subject. Therefore, while intra-agency disclosure will be governed by procedures established by the director of the agency conducting the authorized interception, and disclosure to the Attorney General and Department of Justice (Criminal Division) attorneys will be governed by statute and procedures established herein, all other disclosures will be governed by the following:

A. Disclosure may be made at the discretion of the investigative agency. A memorandum of disclosure should be prepared by the investigative or law enforcement officer making the disclosure. This memorandum should indicate the name and agency of the person to whom disclosure was made, the date of disclosure, a brief summary of the information disclosed, or identification (by number of the order if possible) of the authorized interception, and the purpose for making the disclosure.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

B. The investigative agency must inform the recipient that the disclosed information came from an authorized interception and that subsequent authorization must be obtained before use in any proceeding.

9-7.540 Use of Intercepted Communications by an Investigative or Law Enforcement Officer

An investigative or law enforcement officer may use evidence derived from intercepted communications in the same manner as he/she would use any other items of information or evidence in the course of his/her duties. See United States v. Vento, 533 F.2d 838 (3d Cir. 1976).

9-7.550 Disclosure to a Grand Jury or in a Criminal Proceeding

If a witness before a grand jury or in a criminal proceeding in federal or state court has knowledge of the contents of an intercepted communication or evidence derived therefrom, he/she may testify under oath concerning this communication or evidence if he/she obtained the information upon which his/her testimony is based in a manner authorized by 18 U.S.C. §2517(1) or (2). However, before such a witness may disclose communications relating to offenses not specified in the interception order, an order authorizing the disclosure must be obtained from a judge of competent jurisdiction in accordance with 18 U.S.C. §2517(5). See United States v. Brodson, 528 F.2d 214 (7th Cir. 1975). An order should be obtained for any disclosure from an interception conducted by another jurisdiction, such as by a state or a foreign government. See United States v. Marion, 535 F.2d 697 (2d Cir. 1976).

Such a disclosure order may be issued even though the communication is evidence of a crime not designated in 18 U.S.C. §2516 and is one for which an original authorization could not be obtained. (See Senate Report, at 100). If the intercepted communication relates solely to a state offense, and is to be used in state proceedings, it is the responsibility of state prosecuting officials to make the "subsequent application" before a state judge of competent jurisdiction. The statute does not require that the supervisory attorney or the state prosecutor must present the subsequent application to the same judge who authorized the original interception. In the federal system, subsequent application should be made to a judge of competent jurisdiction in the district wherein venue lies for the particular offense in question. Forms for such an application and order are at USAM 9-7.950 and 9-7.960, infra.

The statute directs that once evidence relating to other crimes is derived from an authorized interception, "[s]uch [subsequent] application

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

shall be made as soon as practicable." See 18 U.S.C. §2517(5). Accordingly, whenever an authorized interception discloses evidence of crimes other than those specified in the authorization, the agent supervising the interception should inform the supervising attorney of the existence and contents of the communication in question by including the relevant facts in the daily report (see USAM 9-7.311, supra). Although applications for such orders should not be unduly delayed, neither should orders be sought in cases which are never brought to complaint or indictment. Also, it has been held that while failure to make timely application for an order under 18 U.S.C. §2517(5) may be grounds for refusing to issue the order, once the order has been entered lack of timeliness is not ground for suppression of the intercepted communications. See United States v. Denisio, 360 F. Supp. 715 (D. Mo. 1973); and United States v. Vento, supra.

9-7.560 Approval for Use of Intercepted Communications in Civil Litigation

The approval of the Assistant Attorney General, Criminal Division, should be obtained prior to the use of communications intercepted under Title III in civil litigation in order to avoid compromise of pending or prospective criminal investigations or other actions. The approval should be sought by memorandum addressed to the Assistant Attorney General, Criminal Division, setting out:

A. The name of the intercepting agency and the agent who will testify and produce the tapes;

B. Whether the intercepting agency has any objection to such testimony;

C. The status of any other indicted criminal cases arising out of the evidence derived from the interception;

D. The names of any attorneys engaged in criminal prosecution of the cases arising out of such evidence and the attorneys' opinions as to whether disclosure will delay, damage or impair the progress of these criminal cases;

E. The court before which application for disclosure will be made (if appropriate);

F. The court in which the evidence will be used;

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

G. The name of the opposing party in the suit in which the evidence will be used;

H. The type of proceeding in which the evidence will be used; and

I. The benefit to the government in use of the interception evidence.

9-7.570 Defendant Overhearings and Attorney Overhearings Wiretap Motions

Recently, we have received a number of questions from United States Attorneys concerning the appropriate response to be made to various wiretap motions filed in connection with federal criminal cases. The question most frequently asked concerns the government's obligation to inquire as to whether or not defendants or their attorneys have been overheard.

A. Defendant Overhearings

Generally, when a defendant alleges he/she had been overheard, the government has an obligation to conduct a search of the appropriate agencies and to affirm or deny the claim pursuant to the provisions of 18 U.S.C. §3504. This search is initiated at the request of the U.S. Attorney to the Office of Enforcement Operations of the Criminal Division and the results of the check are reported to that office. The agencies which should be canvassed in most instances are:

1. The United States Secret Service;
2. The Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms;
3. The United States Customs Service;
4. The United States Postal Inspection Service;
5. The Internal Revenue Service;
6. The Drug Enforcement Administration; and
7. The Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Other appropriate agencies will be canvassed depending on whether the court has ordered additional agencies searched or whether the nature of the charges would make it appropriate to conduct a search.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Pursuant to 26 U.S.C. §6103(c), the Internal Revenue Service requires the written consent of the taxpayer before any information concerning that taxpayer is released in a non-tax case. Therefore, it is necessary that if a search of the Internal Revenue Service is to be undertaken, the request must be accompanied by a motion signed by either the taxpayer or his/her counsel. If a waiver indicating the taxpayer's consent is submitted, the taxpayer himself/herself must sign that document. In multi-party cases an indication of consent from each party is required.

Although "mere assertion" has generally been sufficient to raise a claim under 18 U.S.C. §3504, see In re Evans, 452 F.2d 1239, 1247 (D.C. Cir. 1971), there is some indication that courts are beginning to raise the threshold.

The Fifth Circuit held in United States v. Tucker, 526 F.2d 279, 282 (5th Cir. 1976), cert. denied, 425 U.S. 935, that a claim surveillance "may have taken place" was not sufficient; a positive statement that unlawful surveillance had taken place was required. See also, In re Millow, 529 F.2d 770, 774-775 (2nd Cir. 1976) (lacks any colorable basis, objection should be raised to the search on that ground).

Further, many courts have adopted the view that the government's response must be measured against the specificity of the allegations of unlawful electronic surveillance and the strength of the support of these allegations. See United States v. Gardner, 611 F.2d 770 (9th Cir. 1980); In re Brummitt, 613 F.2d 62 (5th Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 447 U.S. 907; and, United States v. Alvillar, 575 F.2d 1316 (10th Cir. 1978).

In response to the defendant's motion or discovery request, the government should ask the court to require the defendant to provide descriptive biographical data and a specific time period for the survey in order to assist government agencies in making an accurate and expeditious check. It is important to keep in mind that it is the province of either the court or the defendant to set a time period to be searched; not the government's. Unless the government makes no attempt to limit the time of the search or is unsuccessful in persuading the court or the defendant to do so, the search conducted will encompass the present date to as far back as records exist. This is a very costly and time consuming process which we should attempt to avoid by procuring a narrow time limit for the search.

The identifying information which should be included with an Electronic Surveillance (Elsur) request consists of the full name of the subject to be checked, all known aliases used by that individual, date and place of birth, race, sex, social security number, and an FBI number if one is available. The time period for which the check is to be performed and all addresses and phone numbers, both residential and commercial, in which the subject of the Elsur check had a proprietary interest during that period, should also be included. This identifying information will both speed the search and help assure its accuracy, especially when the subject has a common surname.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Elsur requests should be made at the earliest opportunity in order to give the agencies involved sufficient time to conduct a thorough and accurate search. The average time needed to conduct the search is 6-8 weeks. In your written request to conduct a 18 U.S.C. §3504 search, please include all necessary identifying information, a list of agencies to be surveyed other than the normal seven (see list above), the time period of the search, the citations of the statutes involved in the investigation or changed in the indictment, your deadlines, and a copy of the subject's signed motion or waiver. (See list of agencies above.) A specific exception to the government's obligation to search has been recognized where there is an inherent impossibility that the evidence to be offered could be the fruits of an illegal surveillance. For example, in In re Dellinger, 357 F. Supp. 949, 958-61 (N.D. Ill. 1973), the charge was contempt of court and the evidence to be offered was a trial transcript. Since there was no possibility that the trial transcript could have resulted in any way from an illegal surveillance, the court held that 18 U.S.C. §3504 did not apply. Should any of your cases involve evidence that could not possibly be obtained as the result of electronic surveillance, you should object, preliminarily, to conducting the search for defendant overhearings on that ground.

Even if the answers of the appropriate agencies are negative, the response to the 18 U.S.C. §3504 motion should not be made in the absolute to the effect that defendant has never been overheard. The records or indices maintained by the agencies would not necessarily disclose all overhearings but only those which have been identified and catalogued. Accordingly, if the result of the search is negative, the response should state that the search of the appropriate records or indices fails to reveal any overhearing of the defendant.

If the search reveals that the defendant has been overheard, the following procedure shall be employed by the agency conducting the search in determining who should be notified of the electronic surveillance. All overhearings or oral acquisitions initiated and conducted in connection with an investigation of criminal activity are reported to the Office of Enforcement Operations. That office will in turn apprise the U.S. Attorney of the results of the electronic surveillance search as reported by each agency. Electronic surveillance involving a domestic national security matter (one having no ostensible connection with a foreign country or foreign national), see Zweibon v. Mitchell, 516 F.2d 594, 663-70 (D.C. Cir. 1975), should normally be reported directly to the Office of Enforcement Operations. If, as will be explained later, any doubt exists as to whether a particular oral acquisition was initiated for foreign intelligence purposes or for a domestic national security purpose, the matter should be referred to the General Litigation and Legal Advice Section of the Criminal Division. If the agency conducting the search determines that the electronic surveillance was authorized for foreign intelligence purposes, it will report that overheard to the General Litigation and Legal Advice Section of the Criminal Division, which will prepare the necessary response, supporting memorandum and affidavits so that the court can make an in camera determination of the foreign intelligence wiretap's legality.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

§ 4. Attorney Overhearings

Overhearings of attorneys and defense counsel staff involve Sixth, rather than Fourth Amendment rights, and should be handled somewhat differently.

Although there is always an obligation to complete voluntary disclosure to the court when an overheard of the defense staff concerning a trial is discovered, the Department is under no obligation to conduct a search for such overhearings, absent a showing that conversations relating to the conduct of the defense may have been overheard. In Black v. United States, 385 U.S. 26 (1966), and O'Brien v. United States, 386 U.S. 345 (1967), the United States recognized its affirmative obligation to bring to a court's attention any overhearings of which it was aware which relate to the defendant's case whether or not a demand is made for such overhearings. See Dellinger, supra, at 957. You must inform the court of all overhearings of defendant's attorneys of which you are aware in each case you prosecute. In short, a "mere assertion" is insufficient to trigger an obligation to conduct a search for Sixth Amendment overhearings. Instead, some minimum showing is required before a search must be undertaken.

The reason for this difference is that a defendant's Sixth Amendment rights are not implicated when his/her attorney is overheard unless the conversations overheard are relevant to the representation of the particular client in the matter at hand. See United States v. Union Nacional de Trabajadores, 576 F.2d 388, 394 (1st Cir. 1978); United States v. Vielguth, 502 F.2d 1257, 1260 (9th Cir. 1974).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

An example of the minimum showing required before the government must respond to a claim that counsel had been overheard is found in United States v. Alter, 482 F.2d 1016, 1026 (9th Cir. 1973), which held that the claimant at least show by affidavit:

(1) The specific facts which reasonably lead the affiant to believe that named counsel for the named (defendant) has been subjected to electronic surveillance;

(2) The dates of such suspected surveillance;

(3) The outside dates of representation of (defendant) by the lawyer during the period of surveillance;

(4) The identity of the person(s), by name or description, together with their respective telephone numbers, with whom the lawyer (or his agents or employees) was communicating at the time the claimed surveillance took place; and

(5) Facts showing some connection between possible electronic surveillance and the (defendant) who asserts the claim . . .

When these elements appear by affidavit or other evidence the government must affirm or deny illegal surveillance . . .

See United States v. Alter, supra at 1026.

For your guidance, then, searches for attorney overhearings should be resisted unless the defendant makes at least the minimal showing required by Alter, and should be strictly limited to the time period during which the attorney legally represented the defendant. A standard similar to that in Alter is set forth in Beverly v. United States, 468 F.2d 732, 752 (5th Cir. 1972).

Once the defendant has established in accordance with Alter a prima facie case that electronic surveillance of counsel has occurred, the government has an obligation to conduct a search of the appropriate agencies. Any intercepted communications of defense counsel or the defense staff, except for those involving a foreign intelligence surveillance, will be reported by the agency conducting the search to the Office of Enforcement Operations. Intercepted communications of defense counsel or the defense staff involving foreign intelligence surveillances will be reported by the agency conducting the search to the General Litigation and Legal Advice Section of the Criminal Division, which has the responsibility in this area.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Should you have any questions, please contact the Office of Enforcement Operations (724-6867).

9-7.600 GRAND JURY PREPARATION

9-7.610 Preliminary Action

Normally, only selected intercepted communications will be disclosed to the grand jury in the interest of presenting the government's case in the briefest and most direct way possible. The process of selection should start with the logs of the interception, which can be utilized as an index to the transcripts. In addition, the supervising agent should be consulted as to his/her knowledge of any especially pertinent communications which might not be readily apparent from examination of the logs themselves.

Once the supervising or trial attorney decides which specific conversations are to be used, a composite tape composed of them should be prepared for grand jury use from the copies of the original tapes lodged with the investigative agency. See United States v. Kohne, 358 F. Supp. 1053 (W.D. Pa. 1973). The trial attorney should listen to the composite and satisfy himself/herself as to its clarity, recording quality, and probative value. After such listening, additional or substitute conversations may be desired. The composite tape may be changed accordingly. If expert testimony is needed concerning the meaning or cumulative effect of the conversations, the trial attorney should satisfy himself/herself that every conversation relied upon by the expert is on the composite tape.

Such composite tapes of the conversations of potential grand jury witnesses are useful for playback to a witness as they assure that his/her testimony will be accurate and truthful. Although an agent is not authorized to be present solely for the purpose of operating a tape playback machine under Rule 6(e), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, an agent may present evidence consisting of intercepted communications as part of his/her testimony. In other situations in which the agent desires to play back recorded conversations, as for example, to confront a witness with his/her statement, the attorney might have to operate the tape machine himself/herself. In such a case, he/she should be prepared with ready references to the conversations which he/she plans to use.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-7.620 Recalcitrant Witnesses and the Gelbard Doctrine

There is considerable tactical advantage in questioning an immunized hostile witness in a grand jury setting using the tapes of his/her recorded conversations to assure that his/her testimony will be truthful.

Preliminary notice is not required for such use. Also, the suppression provisions of 18 U.S.C. §2518(10) are not applicable to a grand jury. See Gelbard v. United States, 408 U.S. 41, 54 (1972); United States v. Best, 363 F. Supp. 11 (S.D. Fla. 1973). Further, copies of the original recordings may be used, thereby permitting the seal on the original to be undisturbed.

Occasionally, a grand jury witness may invoke the prohibition against the improper use of intercepted communications of 18 U.S.C. §2515 as "just cause" for his/her refusal to answer and thereby attempt to escape contempt citation under 28 U.S.C. 1826(a), relying on the rationale of Gelbard, supra. It is important to note that Gelbard does not confer standing on a grand jury witness to suppress evidence before a grand jury. In re Marcus, 491 F.2d 901 (1st Cir. 1974). It merely extends the right not to testify in response to interrogation based on the illegal interception of his communications. See Gelbard, supra, at 47.

It is the Department's view that in instances in which electronic surveillance was conducted pursuant to court order, the in camera examination of the order, should preclude further inquiry into the legality of the surveillance. See Gelbard, supra, at 70 (concurring opinion of Mr. Justice White) combined with the dissenting opinion of Justices Rehnquist, Burger, Blackman, and Powell. However, the courts of appeals which have considered this question have not been uniform in specifying the evidence required to satisfy them of the legality of an interception for this purpose. The Seventh Circuit in In re DeMonte, 667 F.2d 590, 595-96 (1981), held that when a witness fails to make a specific showing of probable illegal electronic surveillance, the prosecutor's affidavit denying that the surveillance was illegal is an adequate response. The Second Circuit, in In re Persico, 491 F.2d 1156 (1974), held the government had met its burden of proof by producing the court order for the electronic surveillance for in camera inspection. The First Circuit, In re Lochiatto, 497 F.2d 803 (1974), held that the government must also produce for inspection the supporting documents to include the application for the interception order, the affidavits in support of the court order, and a government order, the affidavit indicating the length of time the surveillance was conducted. This court left to the discretion of the district judge the question of whether the witness should have access to the documents over objection by the government. It should be noted that several courts of appeals have accepted the government's affidavit denying any electronic surveillance. The Fifth Circuit, Beverly v. United States, 468 F.2d 732 (1972), accepted as sufficient an affidavit stating that inquiry had been made with the appropriate federal government agencies and that there had been no electronic surveillance. Accord, In re Grumbles, 453 F.2d 119 (3d Cir. 1971); Korman v. United States, 486 F.2d 926 (7th Cir. 1975). See 18 U.S.C. §3504. The Ninth Circuit, United States v. Alter, 482 F.2d 1016 (1973), held the affidavit must meet the specifics set out in the claim, that is, it must identify the persons contacted, the substance of the inquiry, and the substance of the replies.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-7.700 PRE-TRIAL PROCEEDINGS

9-7.710 Pre-Trial Notice of Interception Use

When the government intends to introduce the contents of intercepted communications, or evidence derived therefrom, in a federal criminal proceeding, each party to the proceeding must be furnished with a copy of the application and court order under which the interception was authorized or approved. Unless the parties have been served with these copies at least 10 days prior to the hearing, trial or proceeding, the evidence shall be inadmissible unless there is a waiver of the period. (See 18 U.S.C. §2518(9)). This section does not apply to grand jury hearings where evidence derived from electronic surveillance is offered (See Senate Report at 105).

The intent of the 10 day notice requirement of 18 U.S.C. §2518(9) is to allow parties to the hearing to file motions to suppress under 18 U.S.C. §2518(10). In those unusual cases wherein the government is unable to furnish the above information 10 days prior to the proceeding, the judge may waive the 10 day time limit. In such a situation, the trial attorney should move the presiding judge for a waiver. The motion should allege facts from which the court could find that the government could not meet the 10 day requirement and that the parties will not be prejudiced by a delay in receiving such information.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-7.720 Grounds of Motions to Suppress

Congress has permitted "[a]ny aggrieved person ..." to "...move to suppress the contents of any intercepted wire or oral communication, or evidence derived therefrom," on the ground that:

- (i) the communication was unlawfully intercepted; or
- (ii) the order of authorization or approval under which it was intercepted is insufficient on its face; or
- (iii) the interception was not made in conformity with the order of authorization or approval.

See 18 U.S.C. §2518(10)(a). The purpose of this section is to provide a definite remedy to the right conferred upon "aggrieved persons" in 18 U.S.C. §2515 that the fruits of unlawful electronic surveillance not be admitted into evidence. To promote this remedy, the moving party or his/her counsel may inspect portions of the intercepted communications or evidence derived therefrom if the judge determines that this would be in the interest of justice. Congress clearly intended to limit a party's right of inspection to the minimum necessary under the circumstances of the case. Inspection was not intended to be a substitute for far ranging discovery into the government's electronic surveillance files. "Nor should the privacy of other people be unduly invaded in the process of litigating the propriety of the interception of an aggrieved person's communications." (See Senate Report, at 106).

9-7.730 "Aggrieved Person" Defined

"A person who was a party to any intercepted wire or oral communication or a person against whom the interception was directed" is the definition of aggrieved person given by 18 U.S.C. §2510(11). The "...person against whom the interception was directed" refers to the subjects of the surveillance named in the application. In a proceeding brought against such a person, he/she would be an "aggrieved person" in regard to evidence of communications of others which was derived from an electronic surveillance directed against him/her or which occurred on a premises in which he had a proprietary interest. See United States v. King, 478 F.2d 494 (9th Cir. 1973); United States v. Ahmad, 347 F. Supp. 912 (M.D. Pa. 1972); Alderman v. United States, 394 U.S. 165 (1969). Traditional notions of standing would seem to limit the class of aggrieved persons entitled to move for suppression under 18 U.S.C. §2518(10) to parties to the proceeding in which the motion is filed. The wording of 18

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

U.S.C. §2510(11) and 18 U.S.C. §2518(10) is so broad, however, that this does not necessarily follow from the language of the statute. If a motion to suppress is filed by an "aggrieved person" who is not a party to the proceeding in which the motion is filed, the motion should be resisted on the ground of no standing. The Senate Report indicates that the status of a person as a party to a proceeding is a prerequisite to the person's standing to file a motion to suppress under 18 U.S.C. §2518(10)(a). See United States v. Dorfman, 690 F.2d 1217 (7th Cir. 1982) (standing depends on the likelihood of an invasion of privacy actually occurring through the disclosure of unlawfully obtained evidence).

9-7.740 Time for Filing Suppression Motions

The statute places two limitations on when the motion to suppress may be filed. First, the motion must be filed in conjunction with "... any trial, hearing, or proceeding in or before any court, department, officer, agency, regulatory body, or other authority of the United States...." The motion may not be filed any time a party desires, but only when some type of proceeding is pending, see United States v. Persico, 362 F. Supp. (S.D.N.Y. 1973), although the proceeding need not be of a traditional criminal category.

Secondly, the motion must be made before the proceeding "...unless there was no opportunity to make such motion or the person was not aware of the grounds of the motion." See United States v. Sisca, 361 F. Supp. 735, 738-741 (S.D.N.Y. 1973). See also 18 U.S.C. §2518(10)(a). The statute appears to contemplate, but does not expressly require, that any hearing on the motion or a decision thereon be similarly accomplished before the trial or other proceedings. It is important that the trial attorney oppose any motions not timely filed and request a hearing and decision prior to the actual trial. Otherwise, the right of the United States to appeal from an order of suppression (see 18 U.S.C. §2518(10)(b)) might be defeated. (See, Senate Report, at 106). If a motion to suppress is granted during the course of a proceeding, the supervisory attorney should immediately prosecute an emergency appeal. See 18 U.S.C. §2518(10)(b).

9-7.750 Pre-Trial Discovery

Under Rule 16, Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, each defendant is entitled to receive transcripts of his/her own conversations and in those districts allowing liberal discovery--transcripts of the conversations contained on the composite tape which will be used in evidence. 18 U.S.C.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

§2518(10)(a) also grants the court discretion to deliver to a defendant "... such portions of the intercepted communication or evidence derived therefrom as the judge determines to be in the interests of justice." The two provisions place little limit on discovery of the tapes and transcripts, but Congress clearly intended to limit a party's right of inspection to the minimum necessary under the circumstances of the case. Inspection under 18 U.S.C. §2518(10)(a) was not intended to be a substitute for far ranging discovery into the conversations of others. "Nor should the privacy of other people be unduly invaded in the process of litigating the propriety of the interception of an aggrieved person's communications." See Senate Report at 106. (Emphasis supplied).

9-7.760 Common Bases of Motions to Suppress

Pre-trial motions to suppress have in the past usually been used on deficiencies or irregularities affecting:

- A. Constitutionality;
- B. Authorization procedures;
- C. Probable cause;
- D. Minimization;
- E. Attainment of authorized objective; and
- F. Requisite necessity.

9-7.761 Constitutionality

The constitutionality of Title III has been affirmatively determined by several courts. See United States v. Tortorello, 480 F.2d 764, 771-75 (2d Cir. 1973), cert. denied 414 U.S. 866 (1973); United States v. Cafero, 473 F.2d 489 (3d Cir. 1973); United States v. Cox, 462 F.2d 1293, 1302-04, 1362 n. 12 (8th Cir. 1972); United States v. Cox, 449 F.2d 679, 687 (10th Cir. 1971), cert. denied, 406 U.S. 934 (1972).

9-7.762 Authorization Procedures

The Supreme Court of the United States has stated that the provision in 18 U.S.C. §2516(1) for approval of an interception application by the

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Attorney General "was intended to play a central role in the statutory scheme and that suppression must follow when this statutory requirement has been ignored", see United States v. Giordano, 416 U.S. 505 (1974), but that suppression is not required where the application and order incorrectly state that the authorization had been given by a specially designated Assistant Attorney General, see United States v. Chavez, 416 U.S. 562 (1974).

9-7.763 Probable Cause

An attack on the affidavit sometimes takes the form of an allegation of insufficiency of probable cause. General discussion of probable cause sufficiency may be found in USAM 9-4.100 et seq. (search and seizure). The cases listed below deal with the quantum of probable cause required in electronic interception situations. See United States v. Tortorello, 480 F.2d 764 (2d Cir. 1973); United States v. Poeta, 455 F.2d 117, 121-22 (2d Cir. 1972), cert. denied, 406 U.S. 948 (1972); United States v. LaGorga, 336 F. Supp. 190, 193 (W.D. Pa. 1971); United States v. King, 335 F. Supp. 523, 532-37 (S.D. Cal. 1971); United States v. Becker, 334 F. Supp. 546, 549-50 (S.D.N.Y. 1971); United States v. Leth, 332 F. Supp. 1357, 1361-62 (M.D. Pa. 1971); United States v. Scott, 331 F. Supp. 233, 242-44 (D. D.C. 1971); Dudley v. United States, 320 F. Supp. 456, 458-60 (N.D. Ga. 1970); United States v. Escandar, 319 F. Supp. 295, 304 (S.D. Fla. 1970). Another comment regarding probable cause appears in USAM 9-7.160, supra.

9-7.764 Minimization

As previously noted, 18 U.S.C. §2518(5) provides that every interception order must require that the interception be conducted in such a way as to minimize the interception of communications not subject to interception. The burden of making a prima facie showing of minimization rests on the government. See United States v. Rizzo, 491 F.2d 215, 217, n. 7 (2d Cir. 1974). However, the court is not required to hold a full adversary hearing on the issue of minimization. It may, for example, deny a defense motion to suppress on the basis that affidavits, supplemented by logs and tapes, make the necessary showing. See United States v. Cirillo, 499 F.2d 872, 880-881 (2d Cir. 1974).

The minimization requirement is a creature of statute, United States v. Cox, 462 F.2d 1293, 1300 (8th Cir. 1972), and the court decisions view the statute's minimization command as requiring a case-by-case analysis of the reasonableness of a particular interception. See United States v. Quintana, supra; United States v. Quintana, supra; United States v.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Armocida, 515 F.2d 49 (3d Cir. 1975); United States v. Scott, 516 F.2d 751, (D.C. Cir. 1975). The requirement only reaches those conversations which are not likely to lead to the discovery of any searched-for evidence. United States v. Bynum, 360 F. Supp. 400, 409 (S.D.N.Y. 1973), aff'd, 485 F.2d 490 (2d Cir. 1973), vacated on other grounds, 417 U.S. 903 (1974). Also, in United States v. Kahn, 415 U.S. 143, 903 (1974). Also in United States v. Kahn, 415 U.S. 143, 154 (1974), the Supreme Court expressed the view that the minimization requirement is a duty "to execute the warrant in such a manner as to minimize the interception of any innocent conversations." (Underscoring added).

In view of the foregoing, it is considered that the minimization provision stems from a legislative as distinguished from a constitutional source, that the provision is to be broadly construed in favor of the interception of conversations having investigative value, and that the statute is not necessarily transgressed by the interception of innocent conversations.

In determining whether the requirement of minimization has been satisfied, courts have established specific factors for evaluation. United States v. Bynum, supra, at 410. The character of the criminal enterprise is such a factor. For the nature of the activity, its complexity and size, its geographical reach, and similar considerations all bear on the conduct of an interception. See United States v. Quintana, supra, at 874; United States v. Armocida, 515 F.2d 29 (3d Cir. 1975); United States v. James, 494 F.2d 1007, 1019 (D.C. Cir. 1974); United States v. Scott, supra.

The purpose of the investigation may be a critical factor in determining the authorized scope of the interception. Where an objective of the interception is to define the scope of criminal activity, or to identify unknown conspirators, or to obtain information on the operation of an illegal business, the parameters of interception are much broader than when an interception is instituted for a narrow, limited purpose. See United States v. Manfredi, 488 F.2d 588, 600 (2d Cir. 1973); cert. denied, 417 U.S. 936 (1974); accord: United States v. Quintana, supra, at 874; United States v. James, supra, at 1021; United States v. Chavez, 533 F.2d 491 (9th Cir. 1976).

Courts have also considered whether the government could have developed screening instructions based on the expected content of communications as a factor bearing upon minimization. For example, if, at the time of the initiation of the interception, the government knows all the persons who are suspected of the criminal offense, it can tailor its minimization efforts to avoid monitoring incoming or outgoing calls involving other persons; similarly, if the government knows during what time of the day the telephone will be used for criminal activity, it can avoid intercepting calls at other times. Such considerations affect the initial minimization tactics employed by the government, but the interception policy may be expanded or contracted to conform with investigative requirements as the interception continues. See United States v. James, supra, at 1020. On the other hand, where the government does not, at the outset, have reason to believe that any identifiable group of calls will be innocent, it may be reasonable to monitor all calls until a pattern of innocent calls develops. Such a pattern may not always be identifiable, however, because it is often impossible to determine that a particular conversation would be irrelevant and innocent until it has been concluded. See United States v. Quintana, supra at 874; accord: United States v. Armocida, supra, at 53; United States v. Bynum, 485 F.2d 490, 500 (2d Cir. 1973); United States v. Manfredi, supra, at 600; United States v. Chavez, supra; United States v. Scott, supra.

The use of code words, cover-up jargon, or other evasive tactics, particularly in a narcotics conspiracy, makes investigation difficult and necessitates more detailed and extensive monitoring of conversations. See United States v. James, supra, at 1019-1020, accord: United States v. Quintana, supra, at 874, n. 7; United States v. Cox, supra, at 1300-1301; United States v. Manfredi, supra at 600; United States v. Scott, supra, at 751; United States v. Chavez, supra. Accordingly, the interception of all telephone communications for such time as is appropriate where evasive tactics are used does not constitute a failure to minimize. See United States v. Manfredi, supra at 600.

Another important factor is that of judicial supervision. Where a judge has required and reviewed reports at specified intervals, courts have been inclined to find that the minimization requirement has not been violated. See United States v. Quintana, supra, at 875; United States v. Armocida, supra, at 32; United States v. Bynum, supra, at 410; United States v. James, supra, at 1021; United States v. Cox, supra, at 1301; United States v. Bynum, supra, at 501; United States v. Scott, supra, at 751; United States v. Chavez, supra.

In analyzing the overall interception, courts have said that telephone conversations of brief duration do not permit intercepting agents sufficient opportunity to identify the caller and characterize the conversation. See United States v. Scott, 504 F.2d 194, 198 (D.C. Cir. 1974). Interceptions of such conversations completed in less than 2 minutes cannot be considered unreasonable. See United States v. Bynum, supra, at 500; accord: United States v. Scott, supra, at 516 F.2d 751. Moreover, calls between known coconspirators may be monitored in their entirety, for relevant information may emerge at any point in a call.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Where one of the parties is a known conspirator, the monitoring of his/her conversations may be more extensive than if he/she were not suspected, at least during the early phases of the interception; by listening to such calls, agents can effect the screening of unknown parties. The interception of communications of suspected conspirators is similarly appropriate until their complicity can be determined. See United States v. Bynum, 360 F. Supp. 400, 416 (S.D.N.Y. 1973), aff'd., 485 F.2d 490 (2d Cir.) vacated on other grounds, 417 U.S. 903 (1974). One court has viewed the brief length of time an interception was in operation as having a substantial bearing on whether the minimization was reasonable. It considered one of the most obvious indicia of minimization to be termination of the entire interception within a relatively short time. See United States v. Chavez, supra.

9-7.765 Suppression of Communications

Only violations which are basic to the protection of Title III require suppression of intercepted communications. When a court grants a motion based on the grounds of lack of proper authorization under 18 U.S.C. §2516(1) or lack of probable cause, it will usually suppress all the fruits of the interception. See United States v. Giordano, supra.

In other situations, the suppression should be tailored to the degree required to provide an appropriate remedy. For example, the remedy for failure to minimize the interception of a communication, is suppression of that communication, not suppression of the entire interception. See United States v. Cox, 462 F.2d 1293 (8th Cir. 1972); United States v. Scott, supra, at 751, n. 19; United States v. Sisca, 361 F. Supp. 735, 746-47 (S.D.N.Y. 1973); aff'd., 503 F.2d 1337 (2d Cir. 1974); United States v. Bynum, supra, at 403-04, n. 3; United States v. Mainello, 345 F. Supp. 863, 874-77 (E.D. 1972); United States v. LaGorga, 336 F. Supp. 190, 196-97 (W.D. Pa. 1971); United States v. King, 335 F. Supp. 523, 543-45 (S.D. Cal. 1971), rev'd. on other grounds, 478 F.2d 494 (9th Cir. 1973); See United States v. Askins, 351 F. Supp. 408, 415 (D. Md. 1972); United States v. Leta, 332 F. Supp. 1357, 1360 (M.D. Pa. 1971); United States v. Principe, 531 F.2d 1132 (2d Cir. 1976). 18 U.S.C. §2515 must be read in the light of 18 U.S.C. §2518(10)(a). These provisions were not intended to press the scope of the suppression role beyond present search and seizure law. See Senate Report, at 96. See also Nardone v. United States, 302 U.S. 379 (1937); Nardone v. United States, 127 F.2d 521 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 316 U.S. 698 (1942); Wong Sun v. United States, 371 U.S. 471 (1963).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-7.766 Requisite Necessity

The statute requires a "full and complete statement as to whether or not other investigative procedures have been tried and failed or why they reasonably appear to be unlikely to succeed if tried or to be too dangerous." See 18 U.S.C. §2518(1)(c). While the circuits are uniform in condemning purely conclusory affidavits that merely track the statutory language, they vary in the amount of detail necessary in the affidavit to meet the requirement of requisite necessity. Electronic surveillance need not be a tool of last resort but the affidavit must specifically demonstrate the limitations of normal investigative techniques. See United States v. Southard, 700 F.2d 1 (1st Cir.), cert. denied, 52 U.S.L.W. 3262 (1983); United States v. Robinson, 698 F.2d 448 (D.C. Cir. 1983); United States v. Lilla, 699 F.2d 99 (2d Cir. 1983); United States v. Vento 533 F.2d 833 (3d Cir. 1976); United States v. Webster, 639 F.2d 174 (4th Cir. 1981); United States v. Cifarelli, 589 F.2d 180 (5th Cir. 1979); United States v. Landmesser, 553 F.2d 17 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 855 (1977); In re Demonte, 674 F.2d 1169 (7th Cir. 1982); United States v. Jackson, 549 F.2d 517 (8th Cir. 1977); United States v. Martinez 588 F.2d 1227 (9th Cir. 1978); United States v. Johnson, 645 F.2d 865 (10th Cir.) cert. denied, 454 U.S. 866 (1981); United States v. Messersmith, 692 F.2d 1315 (11th Cir. 1982).

9-7.800 TRIAL

9-7.810 Preliminary Preparation

Composite tapes and transcripts should be prepared well in advance of trial. In addition, the trial attorney should decide what matters should be the subject of stipulation and judicial notice. One desirable stipulation relates to use of the composite tape. Such a stipulation will facilitate the trial because the agent operating the playback machine will not have to change reels or skip around within reels to play pertinent conversations. To this end, a copy of the composite tape might be delivered to the defense for examination and comparison. The interception order is an item which should be listed for judicial notice.

9-7.820 Pre-Trial Conference

In a case utilizing Title III wiretape evidence, a pre-trial conference is most desirable, particularly if the case is before a judge who has never presided over such a wiretap trial. A pre-trial conference will make it possible for the attorneys on both sides to discuss with the judge the problems that they anticipate will arise, and it is suggested that a trial brief be prepared in support of the position to be taken with respect to the admissibility of the tape recordings and transcripts, competence of a layperson to identify a voice, and other possible legal issues. The trial brief should be presented at the pre-trial conference in order to give the judge sufficient time to review it.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

At the time of the pre-trial conference, there should also be a discussion of the physical problems, if any, deriving from the use of electronic equipment in the courtroom. The type of equipment to be used will, of course, vary based upon local conditions and agency capability, but the placement of available equipment can be worked out in advance. Also, a test for acoustical problems might be advisable, particularly in older courthouses.

Another matter which can be resolved at a pre-trial conference is the inclusion of a voir dire question concerning prospective jurors' feelings on the use of court-authorized electronic surveillance. Two sample questions are included in USAM 9-7.970, infra. Finally, at the pre-trial conference, every attempt should be made to arrive at stipulations concerning facts not in dispute, such as the data reflected by telephone company records. A stipulation as to the contents of not only the subscriber records but also installation records and toll call records would eliminate the testimony of at least one and perhaps several telephone company employees. A sample stipulation as to subscriber records is contained in USAM 9-7.980, infra.

9-7.830 Presentation of Government's Case-In-Chief

The following outline suggested for presentation of the government's case lists various witnesses who may not be necessary if stipulations have been obtained. It appears that courts which have never heard a trial involving Title III material tend to require more explicit testimony concerning the technical and electronic process than courts which are familiar with the procedures.

Generally, the following order of witnesses will be the most efficient:

A. Case Agent. This witness should briefly describe the investigation leading up to the application for the Title III, including an explanation of the nature and subjects of the investigation. The case agent is usually the affiant for the Title III affidavit and can testify as to the application process and the signing of the order. At this point, for purposes of continuity, it might be best to have the case agent step down subject to recall to continue his/her testimony later in the trial. In this preliminary testimony, it is suggested that the attorney attempt to lay the foundation as to relevancy of the tape recordings not only to the defendants but also to the violations charged.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

B. Chief of Security or other Security Representatives of the Telephone Company. The testimony of this witness should cover the matters leading up to the connection of the interception wires, including the serving of process, and the technical assistance that was furnished to the investigative agency by the telephone company. He/she may also be used to define certain technical terms and procedures peculiar to the telephone company.

C. Technical Agent. This witness should testify concerning the obtaining of technical information and assistance from the telephone company and that, subsequent to the entry of the court order, he/she performed the steps necessary to conduct an electronic surveillance of the specified telephone lines. He/she should also testify that he/she tested the connection to insure monitoring of the correct telephone and concerning procurement, setting up, and testing of the interception and recording equipment. In most jurisdictions, this agent is also the person in charge of duplication of the tapes and is often the custody agent, although occasionally the custody will rest primarily with the supervising agent. When these duties are all performed by the technical man, he/she will describe the overall system of custody of the tapes, beginning with the placement of the unused tape on the machine at the beginning of the monitoring day, its removal at the conclusion of the day, the procedures utilized by him/her in the duplication of the tape, and the subsequent handling of both the original tape and the duplicate, including the court-ordered sealing of the original tapes. The technical agent generally instructs all monitoring agents in the operation of the recording machines, and therefore, testimony from the supervising agent and the technical agent as to the procedures followed in the interception and recording of conversations should be sufficient. In certain instances, courts have required testimony from monitoring agents, including their explanation of the making of the logs.

D. Supervising Agent. If the supervising agent is the witness for chain of custody, he/she should be called for testimony to show not only custody but the fact that the tapes were never edited or altered. The supervising agent may also be in a position to testify that he/she compared the composite tape with the original and that it is an exact copy of the portions included in the composite. Additionally, he/she should be able to testify as to the procedures utilized in preparing the transcripts and to the fact that he/she compared the transcripts to the tapes and the transcripts accurately reflect the recorded conversations. If a composite tape is used, it will also be necessary to adduce evidence establishing the authenticity and accuracy of its contents.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-7.840 Playback of Tapes for the Jury

The type of equipment utilized for the playing of the tapes will vary, depending upon agency capability and local courtroom conditions. The acoustics should be tested prior to trial if a speaker system is to be used. If headsets are to be used, care should be taken to insure that the jurors are instructed to raise their hands in case of a malfunction of equipment.

9-7.850 Voice Identification

There are several ways to conduct voice identification at trial. One is to use an agent who is familiar with the voice of one or both of the parties to the conversation. See United States v. Turner, 528 F.2d 143, 163 (1975); United States v. James, 494 F.2d 1007 (D.C. Cir. 1974); United States v. Turner, 485 F.2d 976 (D.C. Cir. 1973). Another method is to use a party to the conversation as the witness. A third method is to use as a witness a person who is familiar with the voice of the defendant as it sounds over the telephone, such as friends of the defendant who had talked with him/her on numerous occasions over the telephone. When utilizing the latter two methods, it is advisable to memorialize their expected testimony by sworn affidavit or grand jury testimony or both.

The use of spectrographs for purposes of voice identification without corroborating evidence is discouraged. There is no objection to their use in conjunction with other means of identification.

Although voice identification is used, corroborating evidence, such as telephone subscriber records showing the phone listed to the defendant, surveillances putting the defendant at the place of interception, and the like should be used to confirm the voice identification. Circumstantial evidence of voice identity is sufficient in itself to support a conviction. See United States v. Kohne, supra; United States v. Iannelli, 477 F.2d 999 (3d Cir. 1973), aff'd, 420 U.S. 770 (1975). See also United States v. Turner, 485 F.2d 976, 979 (D.C. Cir. 1973).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

It is helpful to use transcripts as an aid to the jury during the playing of the tapes. When this occurs, the voice identification agents must be prepared to testify that they compared the transcripts to the tapes and the transcript identification is identical to their identification of the voices of the respective defendants. Allowed in United States v. Kohne, supra; United States v. Vigi, 363 F. Supp. 314 (E.D. Mich. 1973).

9-7.860 Transcripts

The necessary foundation for the transcripts can generally be provided through the testimony of the supervising agent. In attempting to utilize transcripts for purposes of voice identification, it is suggested that the following procedure be employed:

A. Have the parties to each conversation identified on the transcripts;

B. Have this identification made by the person who would be the voice identification witness at trial;

C. Have each voice identification witness explain how he/she became familiar with the voice of the person he/she identified; and

D. Have the witness verify his/her identification of parties as noted on the transcript.

The above, in addition to the supervising agent's testimony as to the method of preparation of the transcripts, should provide the proper foundation for introduction of the transcripts.

9-7.870 Use of Expert Witnesses

The expert can be utilized for various purposes. Among them are the interpretation of the tapes, including definitions of terms used in the particular illegal business, and the analysis of seized records. He/she can be called either at the end of the trial, or during the playing of the tapes. The latter is not only more efficient but also more effective, as it permits analysis of terminology and opinions based on facts established by the intercepted communications. When the expert is called at the end of the trial and is asked to interpret a specific communication, he/she may refer to it by the time of interception and some distinctive words or phrases used, or, by transcript page number. If the latter method is followed, the jury should have the transcript in its possession at the time of his/her testimony.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

If he/she is to be called at the end of the trial, the expert should be exempted from the witness exclusion rule for the limited purpose of being in the courtroom while the tapes are being played to the jury. Such a procedure avoids the question of whether the expert heard the same tapes that the jury heard.

The following items should normally be covered in testimony from an expert witness in a gambling case:

- A. Definitions of gambling terminology and "jargon";
- B. General description of the operation;
- C. The relationship of the specific operation to the general description;
- D. A call-by-call analysis;
- E. Relationship between tapes and records seized;
- F. Gross volume or continuity of existence or both; and
- G. Analysis of flash paper, or water soluble paper.

Another method of interpretation of tapes is to utilize as a witness one who was a party to a conversation. Such a witness can cogently explain the nature of the conversation and what was meant by the particular words or terms used during the conversation. However, these witnesses are generally reluctant, and it is often easier to use an expert.

Once the expert has testified as to the meaning of various terms and the significance of certain types of conversations, it is not necessary for him/her to provide the same testimony as to every conversation.

9-7.880 Instruction and Charge Conference

A request that frequently comes back from the jury after it has retired for deliberation is to have certain of the tapes replayed. Certain judges will not permit this, although the government's position

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

has generally been that it is legally proper to permit a replaying, just as it is proper to permit the jurors to look at documentary evidence. In any event, while at the charge conference, the judge's position on this issue should be determined. If the judge's decision is to not permit the replaying, the jury should be informed before it retires that it will not be permitted to hear the tapes again.

The only instruction peculiar to cases involving the use of Title III is one relating back to the voir dire question concerning jurors' feelings on the use of evidence derived from court-authorized electronic surveillance. A proposed instruction is included in USAM 9-7.990, infra.

_____, an attorney of the United States Department of Justice, being duly sworn, states:

A. He/she is an "investigative or law enforcement officer--of the United States" within the meaning of Section 2510(7) of Title 18, United States Code, that is--an attorney authorized by law to prosecute or participate in the prosecution of offenses enumerated in Section 2516 of Title 18, United States Code.

B. Pursuant to Section 2516 of Title 18, United States Code, the Assistant Attorney General of the _____ Division, United States Department of Justice, having been specially designated by the Attorney General pursuant to Order Number 931-81 of January 19, 1981, has approved this application for an order authorizing the interception of (wire) (oral) communications. Attached to this application is a copy of

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Order Number 931-81 of January 19, 1981, specially designating the Assistant Attorney General of the _____ Division to approve applications for court orders authorizing interception of wire or oral communications. Also attached is a copy of the Assistant Attorney General's memorandum of authorization, approving this application.

C. This application seeks authorization to intercept (wire) (oral) communications of _____ and others as yet unknown concerning offenses enumerated in Section 2516 of Title 18, United States Code, that is--offenses involving [the transmission, by means of an interstate wire facility, of gambling and wagering information by a person engaged in the business of gambling, in violation of Title 18, United States Code, Section 1084, and the use of interstate telephone communication facilities for the transmission of betting information in aid of a racketeering enterprise (gambling), in violation of Section 1952 of Title 18, United States Code, and a conspiracy to commit such offenses in violation of Section 371 of Title 18, United States Code,] [ _____ ] which have been committed and are being committed by _____ and others as yet unknown.

D. He/she has discussed all the circumstances of the above offenses with Special Agent _____ of the _____ office of the [Federal Bureau of Investigation] [ _____ ] who has directed and conducted the investigation herein, and has examined the affidavit of Special Agent _____ (attached to this application as Exhibit C and incorporated by reference herein) which alleges the facts therein in order to show that:

1. There is probable cause to believe that _____ and others as yet unknown have committed and are committing offenses involving [the transmission, by means of (an) interstate facilit(y) (ies), of gambling and wagering information by a person engaged in the business of gambling, in violation of Title 18, United States Code, Section 1084, and the use of interstate telephone communication facilities for the transmission of betting information in aid of a racketeering enterprise (gambling), in violation of Section 1952 of Title 18, United States Code, and a conspiracy to commit such offenses in violation of Section 371 of Title 18, United States Code] [ _____ ];

2. There is probable cause to believe that particular (oral) (wire) communications of _____ and others as yet unknown concerning these offenses will be obtained through the interception for which authorization is herewith applied. In particular, these (wire) (oral) communications will concern the

[interstate transmission of gambling information related to horse-race results and the dissemination of such information to persons engaged in the unlawful business of gambling, the identity of the participants, the precise nature and scope of the illegal activity, and the relationships of the enterprise with other gambling activities] [ ]. In addition, the communications are expected to constitute admissible evidence of the commission of the offenses;

3. The attached affidavit contains a full and complete statement explaining why normal investigative procedures either have been tried and have failed or reasonably appear unlikely to succeed if continued, or reasonably appear unlikely to succeed if tried;

4. There is probable cause to believe that the [specified] [telephone(s) subscribed by _____ and located at _____ and carrying telephone number(s)] (has) (have) been used and (is) (are) being used by _____ and others as yet unknown in connection with the commission of the above-described offenses.

E. (No previous application to any judge for authorization to intercept, or for approval of interception of, wire or oral communications involving any of the same persons, facilities, or places specified in this application are known to the individual authorizing and making this application.) (The following is) (The attached affidavit contains) a full and complete statement of the facts concerning all previous applications known to the individual authorizing and making this application made to any judge for authorization to intercept, or for approval of interceptions, or wire or oral communications involving any of the same persons, facilities, or places specified in this application, and the action taken by the judge on each such application).

WHEREFORE, your affiant believes that probable cause exists to believe that _____ and others as yet unknown are engaged in the commission of offenses involving the transmission of gambling and wagering information of an interstate wire facilit(y) (ies) by a person engaged in the business of gambling and the use of interstate telephone communication facilities for the transmission of betting information in aid of a racketeering enterprise (gambling) and a conspiracy to do so] [____]; that _____ and others as yet unknown have used, and are using the [premises _____] [telephone(s) subscribed to by _____, located at _____ and bearing number(s) _____] in connection with the commission of the above-described offenses; that communications of _____ and others as yet unknown concerning these offenses will _____ be intercepted [at _____] [to and from the above-described telephone(s)]; and that normal investigative procedures appear unlikely to succeed.

On the basis of the allegations contained in this application and on the basis of the affidavit of Special Agent _____, attached thereto, affiant requests this court to issue an order, pursuant to the power conferred on it by Section 2518 of Title 18, United States Code, authorizing the [Federal Bureau of Investigation] [_____] to intercept (wire) (oral) communications [at _____] [to and from the above described telephone(s)] until communications are intercepted which reveal the manner in which _____ and others as yet unknown participate in the [illegal use of interstate telephone facilities for the transmission of betting information in aid of a racketeering enterprise (gambling)] [_____] and which reveal the identities of his/her confederates, their places of operation, and the nature of the conspiracy involved therein, or for a period of _____ days from the date of that order, whichever is earlier.

[It is further requested that the order authorize surreptitious entry of the premises for the purpose of installing, maintaining and removing any electronic oral interception devices utilized pursuant to the authority granted by its order.]

[It is further requested that this court issue an order pursuant to Section 2518(4)(e) of Title 18, United States Code, directing that the [Name of telephone company], a communication common carrier as defined in Section 2510(10) of Title 18, United States Code, shall furnish the applicant forthwith all information, facilities and technical assistance necessary to accomplish the interception unobtrusively and with a minimum of interference with the services that such a carrier is according the person whose communications are to be intercepted, the furnishing of such facilities or technical assistance by the [Name of telephone company] to be compensated for by the applicant at the prevailing rates. [This order to communication common carrier is a separate abbreviated order and a sample is found in USAM 9-7.924, infra.]]

APPLICATION

The United States, by its attorney(s), moves this court pursuant to Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, Rule 57(b), to grant an order (1) authorizing the installation and use of an electronic or mechanical device to trace and identify the telephone numbers of parties placing calls to telephone number(s) _____ located at _____ and subscribed to by _____ and (2) directing the _____ Telephone Company of _____, a communication common carrier as defined in Section 2510(10) of Title 18, United States Code, to furnish forthwith _____ (agents of investigating agency) with all of the information facilities and technical assistance necessary to unobtrusively accomplish such tracing and identification, including installation and operation of the device. In support of this application, the United States represents as follows:

A. _____ (Special) _____ agents of the _____ (agency) have been engaged in an investigation of _____ (subject) for violations of federal laws, including _____;

B. It is believed that _____ (subject) _____ use(s) telephone number(s) located at _____ and subscribed to by _____ to discuss (his)(her)(their) criminal activity(ies), to conduct (his)(her)(their) criminal activity(ies), and/or to further (his)(her)(their) criminal activity(ies);

C. It is believed that information concerning the afore-mentioned offenses, additional co-conspirators, and the victims of these offenses will be obtained upon discovery of the numbers, locations and subscribers of the telephones from which _____ (target wire) _____ is called.

Wherefore it is respectfully requested that this court grant an order:

1. Authorizing the installation and/or use of an electronic or mechanical device to trace and identify the telephone numbers of, and provide the name and address of the subscriber of record to, each identified incoming call to telephone number(s) _____;

2. Directing the _____ Telephone Company of _____, a communication common carrier as defined in Section 2510(10) of Title 18, United States Code, to forthwith furnish _____ (Special) agents of the _____ (agency) with all information, facilities, and technical assistance necessary to accomplish the tracing and identification, including installation and operation of the device, unobtrusively and with a minimum of disruption to normal telephone service;

3. Directing the _____ Telephone Company of _____ to provide _____ (Special) agents of the _____ (agency) at reasonable intervals during regular business hours with the results of the tracing and identification, including the telephone number of, and the name and address of the subscriber of record to, each identified incoming call to telephone number(s) _____ and, where possible, the time and duration of each such call; and

4. Further directing that the _____ Telephone Company of _____, its agents and employees shall not disclose to the listed subscriber(s) of the above-mentioned telephone number(s), nor to any other person, the existence of this order or of this investigation, unless otherwise ordered by the court.

Furthermore it is respectfully requested that the court's order be limited in the following respects:

a. The tracing operation shall be limited to Electronic Switching System (ESS) or No. 5 cross-bar facilities;

b. The tracing operation shall be restricted to tracing and recording only those calls originating from _____ ;

c. The tracing operation shall be restricted to the hours of _____ to _____ daily;

d. The court's order shall be in effect for twenty (20) days from the time it is granted.

Respectfully Submitted,

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

It appearing that the application has been made in good faith in furtherance of a pending criminal investigation, and it appearing that there is reason to believe that the telephone(s) from which incoming telephone calls are to be traced and identified (is) (are) being and will be used in connection with criminal activity,

It is ordered, pursuant to Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, Rule 57(b), and the All Writs Act, 28 U.S.C. §1651(a), that the _____ Telephone Company is hereby authorized and ordered to:

A. Install and/or operate an electronic or mechanical device in order to trace and identify the telephone number or, and provide the name and address of the subscriber of record to, each identified incoming call to telephone number(s) _____, and, where possible, provide the time and duration of each such call;

B. Continue the operation of such tracing operation for a period not to exceed twenty (20) days from the date of this Order.

Provided, however, that the tracing operation be limited to telephone facilities employing ESS or No. 5 cross-bar switching facilities, and only those reasonably necessary to trace all calls originating from _____; provided further that the tracing operation can be conducted unobtrusively, with a minimum of disruption to normal telephone service; and that the tracing operation be limited to the hours of _____.

It is further ordered that:

1. The _____ Telephone Company will give to (Special) Agents of _____ all information gathered by reason of the Order at reasonable intervals while this Order is in effect.

2. The _____ (agency) will compensate and/or reimburse the _____ Telephone Company for all charges and/or expenses incurred in complying with this Order.

3. _____ Telephone Company, its agents and employees shall not disclose to the listed subscribers of the above-mentioned telephone number(s), nor to any other person, the existence of this order or of this investigation, unless otherwise ordered by the court.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

This sworn application is submitted for an order pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §2517(5) authorizing the use, pursuant to the provision of 18 U.S.C. §2517(3) in any criminal proceeding held under the authority of the United States of the contents and any evidence derived therefrom of (wire) (oral) communications intercepted by an investigative or law enforcement officer in a manner authorized by Chapter 119, 18 U.S.C. which relate to offenses other than those specified in the order of authorization.

A. He/she is an "investigative or law enforcement officer of the United States" within the meaning of 18 U.S.C. §2510(7)--that is, he/she is an attorney authorized by law to prosecute or participate in the prosecution of offenses enumerated in 18 U.S.C. §2516.

B. On _____, upon application of _____ (applicant's name) (title) _____, District of _____, an order was issued by Judge _____, authorizing agents of the _____ to intercept of a period of _____ days (wire) (oral) communications of _____ and _____ and unknown others to and from telephone number(s) _____ subscribed to by _____ in the premises known as _____, located at _____, for the purpose of securing evidence that _____ and unknown others were committing offenses specified in 18 U.S.C. §2516, to wit: offenses involving violations of _____. A copy of that order along with the application and supporting affidavit is attached to this application as Exhibit B and incorporated by reference herein.

C. On _____, agents of the _____ commenced the court order interception set forth in paragraph B above. These interceptions continued until termination on _____.

D. During the authorized period of interception, (wire) (oral) communications were intercepted which indicated that _____ and unknown others were committing offenses other than those specified in the aforementioned order(s), that is, offenses in violation of _____ U.S.C. _____. These communications were intercepted incidentally and in good faith.

On the bases of the allegations contained in this application, affiant requests the court to issue an order pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §2517(5) authorizing the use of the contents of the intercepted (wire) (oral) communications regarding the violations set forth in paragraph D above by those persons whose names are set out in paragraph D above, in any criminal proceeding held under the authority of the United States as provided by 18 U.S.C. §2517(3).

A. Does any juror have any strong conviction, belief, or prejudice against the federal law which permits a United States district judge to authorize federal investigative agencies, upon a proper showing of probable cause to believe that a crime is being committed, (to wiretap a designated telephone or telephones) (to listen to conversations between conspirators).

If any juror answers affirmatively, please inquire as to whether such belief would render that juror unable to serve as a fair and impartial juror in a case involving court-authorized wiretapping.

B. As an alternative to the above, should it be denied, the government submits the following question: "the government intends to present evidence derived from the use of court-authorized electronic surveillance, to wit: (wiretapping). If the judge instructs you that such evidence is admissible, would the fact that it was derived from a

9-7.990 Form Proposed Jury Instruction

Ladies and Gentlemen of the jury, when you were being questioned to determine your qualifications to sit as a juror in this case, you stated that you would not be prejudiced against evidence that had been obtained through court-authorized electronic surveillance. I now instruct you that I have ruled the tape-recorded evidence to be admissible, and you are to consider it as you would the other evidence in this case.

9-7.1000 VIDEO SURVEILLANCE

Video surveillance is not covered by Title III of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act because Title III relates only to the "aural acquisition of the contents of any wire or oral communication." See 18 U.S.C. §2510 (4) (emphasis added). Moreover, video surveillance is an area of the law where there is at present very little case precedent to provide guidance. The Department does, however, have guidelines governing the use of video surveillance and there are two cases, United States v. Torres, 751 F.2d 875 (7th Cir. 1984) and United States v. Biasucci, 786 F.2d 504 (2nd Cir. 1986), which discuss the use of video surveillance in detail. Special care should be taken to ensure that both the guidelines and the Torres and Biasucci decisions are followed when video surveillance is used during a federal criminal investigation.

9-7.1010 Authority--The Department of Justice Guidelines

Certain officials of the Criminal Division have been delegated authority to review and evaluate requests to conduct closed circuit television surveillance for law enforcement purposes by any component of the Department of Justice. See Department of Justice Order No. 985-82, dated August 6, 1982, at USAM 9-7.1011. The delegated authority encompasses every use of television surveillance for law enforcement purposes except the use of such surveillance to record events in public places or places to which the public has unrestricted access and where camera equipment can be installed in such places or in areas to which investigators have lawful access. The heads of investigative agencies are empowered to ensure that electronic surveillance of "public places" is conducted in a proper manner. "Public places" include such areas as open fields, public streets, and public parking lots. Places in which the public has unrestricted access include such places as public hallways in buildings.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The officials responsible for monitoring video surveillance matters are the Assistant Attorney General and Deputy Assistant Attorneys General of the Criminal Division as well as the Director and Associate Directors of the Office of Enforcement Operations. Ordinarily, the Director and Senior Associate Director of the Office of Enforcement Operations review video surveillance requests. A request may be approved as a matter of course by one of these officials when no intrusion on a person's legitimate privacy rights appears to be involved. The most common such situation is when a consenting party to the presence of the camera will be present at all times. However, when justifiable expectations of privacy seem to exist, the Criminal Division takes the position that the use of video surveillance may be considered as equivalent to a search and thus requires judicial authorization. For example, there seems to be little doubt that the conducting of video surveillance in a private office or residence without a consenting party present would constitute an invasion of one's reasonable expectations of privacy and thus be a "search" within the meaning of the Fourth Amendment.

9-7.1011 Order Delegating Authority

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Order No. 985-82

DELEGATION OF AUTHORITY TO AUTHORIZE TELEVISION SURVEILLANCE

I hereby delegate to the Assistant Attorney General of the Criminal Division, the Deputy Assistant Attorneys General of the Criminal Division, and the Director and Associate Director of the Office of Enforcement Operations, Criminal Division, authority to review and evaluate all requests to conduct television surveillance for law enforcement purposes within the Department of Justice. When, on the basis of such review and evaluation, the responsible official concludes that the proposed surveillance would not intrude on the subject's justifiable expectations of privacy, he/she may authorize the surveillance. If such official concludes that the surveillance would infringe on the subject's justifiable expectations of privacy, he/she shall initiate proceedings to obtain a judicial warrant.

In an emergency situation, i.e., where a television surveillance request cannot be delivered to the Director of the Office of Enforcement Operations at least forty-eight (48) hours before the proposed use of such surveillance, authorization may be given by the head of the responsible Department of Justice investigative service or his/her designee. The investigative service shall give written notification to the Office of Enforcement Operations no later than five (5) working days after the authorization of the circumstances which gave rise to it. The notification shall set forth the nature of the emergency, the need for expeditious action, and a description of the investigation being conducted, including the subject of the investigation and the method of utilization of the closed circuit television surveillance.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

This order shall not apply to closed circuit television surveillances of events transpiring in public places or places to which the public has general unrestricted access and where the camera equipment can be placed in the public area or in an area to which the surveilling agents have non-trespassory, lawful access. The head of each responsible Department of Justice investigative service shall issue written guidelines concerning such closed circuit television surveillances so as to insure strict adherence to the spirit and substance of this order.

9-7.1020 CCTV Where There is a Reasonable Expectation of Privacy

As set forth in the above guidelines (See USAM 9-7.1011), the Criminal Division takes the position that the use of CCTV in a situation where an individual has a constitutionally protected expectation of privacy constitutes a search and requires judicial authorization. Since the provisions of Title III do not specifically apply to CCTV and since there is no other federal statute that relates directly to video surveillance, the legal requirements for a court order authorizing CCTV and, indeed, even the court's authority to order this type of surveillance were somewhat speculative. These questions seem to have been resolved by the Seventh Circuit in United States v. Torres, 751 F.2d 875 (7th Cir. 1984) and by the Second Circuit in United States v. Biasucci, 786 F.2d 504 (2nd Cir. 1986). Torres and Biasucci are the leading cases in this area and should be consulted whenever video surveillance is considered in situations where the Fourth Amendment is implicated.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

In Torres, the FBI procured a court order under Title III to place a bug and a video surveillance camera inside two premises in connection with an investigation into terrorist activities. The trial judge suppressed the video evidence, holding that there was no statutory or other basis for the order allowing television surveillance and that therefore the fruits of the surveillance were inadmissible. See United States v. Torres, 583 F. Supp. 86, 99-105 (N.D. Ill. 1984). The Seventh Circuit reversed, indicating that a warrant for video surveillance that complies with the provisions that Congress put into Title III in order to comply with the Fourth Amendment ought to satisfy that amendment's requirement of particularity. The court went on to say that Title III was Congress' carefully thought out and constitutionally valid effort to implement the requirements of the Fourth Amendment with regard to the necessarily unconventional type of warrant that is used to authorize electronic eavesdropping. The court concluded that because electronic interception is thought to pose a greater threat to personal privacy than physical searches, Congress made the requirements for a valid intercept warrant higher than those for a conventional Rule 41 warrant, noting that, except for probable cause, none of the requirements of 18 U.S.C. §2518 are found in Rule 41. The court then reasoned that if the government conducts electronic surveillance in conformity with the requirements of particularity that Title III imposes on electronic eavesdropping, the government has also conformed with the requirement of particularity in the Fourth Amendment's warrant clause. The court made clear, however, that a warrant for television surveillance that does not satisfy the four provisions of Title III that implement the particularity requirement would violate the Fourth Amendment. Ibid at 882-885.

In Biasucci, the court issued an order pursuant to Rules 41 and 57b of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure authorizing FBI agents to install a hidden video camera in business offices in connection with a loansharking investigation. The defendants moved to suppress the tapes based upon a lack of statutory authority for the order and alternatively that the government did not demonstrate a valid basis for its issuance. The motion was denied and the defendants were later convicted on a variety of racketeering and extortion charges. The convictions were affirmed by the Second Circuit in all respects. The court in citing Torres indicated that it found the reasoning in Torres to be compelling and that it was joining the Seventh Circuit in holding that district courts, federal magistrates, and state judges may authorize television surveillance in appropriate circumstances. The court cited the minimum constitutional standards for aural electronic surveillance set forth in both Berger v. New York, 388 U.S. 41 (1967), and Katz v. United States, 389 U.S. 347 (1967), by the Supreme Court and said that given the obvious similarities between oral and video surveillance, it believed the same standards governing the former should be applied to the latter. The court went on to say that when Congress passed Title III, there was abundant evidence that it specifically intended to adopt the constitutional guidelines announced in Berger and Katz. The court indicated that the Torres court in similar fashion borrowed four provisions of Title III implementing the Fourth Amendment's requirements of particularity and minimization as a "measure of the government's constitutional obligation of particular description in using television surveillance to investigate crime." Ibid at 885. "We," said the court, "likewise believe that these standards, borrowed from Title III together with the more general constitutional requirements, form a sufficient outline of the showing the government must make before a warrant should issue authorizing video surveillance."

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The four provisions that must be satisfied before a CCTV order can be issued are the following: (1) a showing that normal investigative procedures have been tried and have failed or reasonably appear unlikely to succeed if tried or to be too dangerous; (2) a particular description of the type of communication sought to be intercepted, and a statement of the particular offense to which it relates; (3) the interception period cannot be longer than necessary to achieve the objective of the authorization, nor in any event longer than 30 days; (4) the interception must be conducted in such a way as to minimize the interception of communications (video images) not otherwise subject to interception. See Torres, 751 F.2d at 883-84. Applications, orders, and supporting affidavits should comport with the guidelines set forth in Torres and Biasucci.

9-7.1030 Court Authorization

When court authorization for video surveillance is deemed necessary, it should be obtained by way of an application and order based on Rules 41(b) and 57 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure and the All Writs Act (28 U.S.C. §1651). The application and order should be based on an affidavit that establishes probable cause to believe that evidence of a federal crime will be obtained by the surveillance and should include: (1) a statement indicating that normal investigative procedures have been tried and failed or reasonably appear to be unlikely to succeed if tried or to be too dangerous; (2) a particularized description of the premises to be surveilled; (3) the names of the persons to be surveilled, if known; (4) a statement of the steps to be taken to assure that the surveillance will be minimized to effectuate only the purposes for which the order is issued; and (5) a statement of the duration of the order which shall not be longer than is necessary to achieve the objective of the authorization nor in any event longer than thirty days.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The closed circuit television order should not be incorporated into an order for electronic surveillance pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §2518. In the event the closed circuit television order is being filed in conjunction with an electronic surveillance order pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §2518, the affidavit used in support of the latter order may, where appropriate, also be used in support of the separate closed circuit television order. However, Department policy requires that the video surveillance order be separate from and not part of the Title III order.

A. Pursuant to Rules 41(b) and 57 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure and the All Writs Act (28 U.S.C. §1651), the United States of America by and through _____, United States Attorney for the _____ District of _____, and _____, an Assistant United States Attorney for said District, hereby makes application to this Court for an order authorizing the interception and recording of visual, non-verbal conduct by means of closed circuit television occurring within the following premises: [At this point set forth a particularized description of the premises to be surveilled.] The factual basis for the granting of this application is set forth in the attached affidavit of _____, which is incorporated by reference herein.

B. Also attached to this application is a letter from the Director, Office of Enforcement Operations, Criminal Division, United States Department of Justice, authorizing the making of this application for visual surveillance by means of closed circuit television.

C. The attached affidavit of _____ reflects that there is probable cause to believe:

1. That the premises known as _____, located at _____, are being and will continue to be used by _____, _____, _____, and others as yet unknown to discuss, plan, and commit offenses involving _____ in violation of Sections _____ and _____ of Title _____, United States Code.

2. That visual non-verbal conduct of the above-named individuals will be obtained through interception by means of closed circuit television at these premises and that such conduct will provide:

a. information indicating the precise nature, scope, extent, and methods of operation of the participants in the illegal activities referred to above;

b. information reflecting the identities and roles of all accomplices, aiders and abettors, co-conspirators, and participants in the illegal activities referred to above; and

c. admissible evidence of commission of the offenses described above.

D. Installation of electronic visual surveillance equipment will require surreptitious entry into the premises (by breaking and entering if necessary) and the danger to the safety of the agents inherent in such entry requires that the agents be armed.

E. Normal investigative procedures have been tried and failed or reasonably appear unlikely to succeed if tried or appear to be too dangerous to employ.

F. On the basis of the attached affidavit of _____ and allegations contained in this application:

IT IS HEREBY REQUESTED that this Court authorize Special Agents of the _____ to intercept and record by means of closed circuit television visual, non-verbal conduct of _____, _____, _____, and others as yet unknown within the premises known as _____, located at _____, concerning offenses involving _____ in violation of Sections _____ and _____ of Title _____, United States Code.

IT IS FURTHER REQUESTED that such interception not automatically terminate when the type of visual, non-verbal conduct described above has first been obtained but continue until conduct is intercepted that reveals: (1) the manner in which the above-named individuals and others as yet unknown participate in the above-described offenses; (2) the precise nature, scope, and extent of the above-described offenses, and (3) the identity and roles of all accomplices, aiders and abettors, co-conspirators, and participants, or for a period of thirty (30) days from the date of this order, whichever is earlier.

IT IS FURTHER REQUESTED that Special Agents of the _____ be authorized to enter the above-described premises surreptitiously, covertly, and by breaking and entering in order to install, maintain, and

A. Upon the application of _____, United States Attorney for the _____ District of _____, by Assistant United States Attorney _____, for an Order authorizing the interception and recording by means of closed circuit television of visual, non-verbal conduct occurring within [particularly describe premises to be viewed], pursuant to Rules 41(b) and 57(b) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure and the All Writs Act (28 U.S.C. §1651), and based upon the affidavit of _____, sworn to before me, full consideration having been given to the matters set forth therein, the Court finds there is probable cause to believe that:

1. The premises known as _____ have been, are being, and will continue to be used by _____, _____, and others as yet unknown to discuss, plan, and commit offenses involving _____, in violation of Sections _____ and _____ of Title _____, United States Code.

2. Visual non-verbal conduct of the above-named individuals will be obtained through interception by means of closed circuit television at these premises and interception of such conduct will provide:

a. information indicating the precise nature, scope, extent, and methods of operation of the participants in the illegal activities referred to above;

b. information reflecting the identities and roles of all accomplices, aiders and abettors, co-conspirators, and participants in the illegal activities referred to above, and

c. admissible evidence of commission of the above-described offenses.

3. Installation of electronic visual surveillance equipment to effectuate this Court's order will require surreptitious entry into the premises (by breaking and entering if necessary) and that the danger to the safety of the agents inherent in such entry requires that the agents be armed.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

4. Normal investigative techniques have been tried and failed or reasonably appear unlikely to succeed if tried or to be too dangerous to employ.

B. WHEREFORE, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that the _____ is authorized to intercept and to record by means of closed circuit television visual, non-verbal conduct within the premises known as _____, of _____, _____, and others as yet unknown concerning offenses involving _____, in violation of Sections _____ and _____ of Title _____, United States Code.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED THAT such interception shall not automatically terminate when the types of visual, non-verbal conduct described above have first been obtained, but shall continue until conduct is intercepted that reveals: (1) the manner in which the above-named individuals and others as yet unknown participate in the above-described offenses; (2) the precise nature, scope, and extent of the offenses, and (3) the identity and roles of all accomplices, aiders and abettors, co-conspirators and participants, or for a period of thirty (30) days from the date of this order, whichever is earlier.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that Special Agents of the _____ are authorized to enter the foregoing premises surreptitiously, covertly, and by breaking and entering in order to install, maintain, and remove electronic visual equipment needed to intercept and to record visual, non-verbal conduct occurring within the foregoing premises and that such agents may be armed.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that this Order shall be executed as soon as practicable and that interception shall be conducted in such a manner as to minimize the interception of visual, non-verbal conduct when it is determined that a named interceptee's conduct is not criminal in nature. This Order shall terminate upon attainment of the authorized objectives or at the end of thirty (30) days from the date of this Order, whichever is earlier.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that when it is determined that none of the named interceptees nor any person subsequently identified as an accomplice who uses the premises to commit or converse about the designated offenses is inside the premises, interception of visual, non-verbal conduct shall be discontinued, except that if such a determination is made, visual monitoring ceases, and agents are thereafter unable to ascertain whether any of the aforementioned persons is inside the premises, agents may engage in spot monitoring to determine whether any of the persons is once again inside the premises. Whenever it is determined that any of the aforementioned persons is within the premises, interception of visual, non-verbal conduct may be initiated to determine whether such conduct involves the designated offenses. If the conduct relates to such offenses, it may be intercepted.

OF 1986, PUBLIC LAW NO. 99-508

On October 21 1986, President Reagan signed into law the Electronic Communications Privacy Act of 1986, Public Law No. 99-508. This legislation is primarily a comprehensive revision of Title III of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968. It provides coverage for the technological advances developed in the area of electronic communications since the passage of the original act. The 1968 act governed only the aural acquisition of the contents of a wire or oral communication. Thus, if the intercepted conversation could not be heard or understood by the human ear, the existing law did not apply. The new legislation encompasses not only the interception of wire and oral communications as defined in the original act, but virtually all forms of non-aural electronic communications during both the transmission stage and the period when such communications are maintained in electronic storage. Included within the concept of electronic communication are such new and increasingly utilized communication methods as electronic mail, computer data transmissions and video teleconferencing. The principal purpose of the new statute is to regulate the use of these dramatically improved communications technologies that have been developed since 1968 and to protect the transmission of all forms of information, including voice, data and some forms of video, from improper interception. The overall thrust of the legislation is to expand privacy protection in the new areas of electronic communication while recognizing and preserving the interests of effective law enforcement. The purpose of this section is to provide a broad overview of the new Act and acquaint attorneys with those provisions that have special significance for federal law enforcement.

Initially, it should be noted that most of the provisions of the new Act became effective on January 20, 1987, which is 90 days from the date the Act was signed. There is, however, one provision of the Act which took effect immediately. The new provisions of 18 U.S.C. 2516 extend authority to authorize a request for an electronic surveillance order to any Acting Assistant Attorney General or Deputy Assistant Attorney General in the Criminal Division, as well as to an Assistant Attorney General, once those officials are so designated by the Attorney General. This provision of the Act will be implemented by a new Attorney General delegation order.

It should also be noted at the outset that while the intent of the new statute is to cover all known electronic communications technologies to which an expectation of privacy can reasonably attach, several exceptions were made to exclude forms of communications where privacy interests were deemed to be relatively weak (e.g., handheld or cordless telephones, tone only pagers) or nonexistent (e.g., many forms of radio communications). These exceptions will be discussed in detail later in this section.

The Electronic Communications Privacy Act of 1986 is divided into three separate, but closely related, titles: Title I - Interception of Communications and Related Matters; Title II - Stored Wire and Electronic Communications and Transactional Records Access; and Title III - Pen Registers and Trap and Trace Devices.

9-7.2100 TITLE I - THE INTERCEPTION OF COMMUNICATIONS AND RELATED MATTERS

The first portion of the new Act is comprised of amendments to Title III of the 1968 act. The amendments establish a new category denominated "electronic communications" in addition to the wire and oral communications covered under the original act and address some of the difficulties perceived by law enforcement officials in utilizing the former Title III. 18 U.S.C. 2510-2520.

The new statute defines and regulates three types of communications: (1) wire; (2) oral; and (3) electronic communications. The last type, in essence, is any form of communication using electronics in which the human voice is not utilized. In addition, in one transmission there may be more than one type of communication, such as a voice telephone conversation followed by a computer transmission on the same line utilizing modems. All forms of communications will now be covered with the limited exceptions noted below. Thus, coverage of transmission of electronic communications both from the perspective of protecting the individual communication from third party interception and regulating governmental interception will be virtually all-inclusive.

In actuality, the new Act mandates little change in the substantive or procedural requirements for obtaining an order to intercept a traditional wire or oral communication. For the most part, with respect to wire and oral communications, the United States Attorneys will proceed in precisely the same manner as they have in the past. With respect to electronic communications, the substantive provisions of the law are primarily the same as those governing oral and wire communications, but the procedural provisions are somewhat different. The Act treats electronic communications in two different categories. Title I of the Act regulates interception of electronic communications during the transmission stage and, accordingly, treats them much as a wire or oral interception, although, as noted, with several lessened procedural requirements. Title II of the Act, discussed infra, is directed to electronic records that are temporarily in storage before or after the actual transmission. Many of the changes to the wire or oral communications provisions noted below are quite beneficial to law enforcement, and many of these were made at the Department's suggestion.

The new Act's most significant changes, additions and exceptions set forth in Title I are the following:

9-7.2110 Wire Communications

The definition of "wire communication" under the old statute has been redrafted to include only "aural transfers," which are defined as communications that involve the human voice at some point in the transmission. 18 U.S.C. 2510(1)(18). Wire communications are specifically excluded from the new definition of electronic communications. 18 U.S.C. 2510(12)(B). The Department insisted on keeping the distinction between wire and electronic communications in order to ensure that the case law in this area, built up over 18 years, would continue to be applicable and the courts would not be called upon to reinterpret established electronic surveillance principles.

The new law eliminates the distinction contained in the original Title III between common carrier and non-common carrier electronic communication systems where the system is designed to carry private communications not readily accessible to the public. The new Act applies to any person (as defined in 18 U.S.C. 2510(6)) engaged in providing facilities for the transmission of interstate or foreign communications or communications affecting interstate or foreign commerce. 18 U.S.C. 2510(1). This amendment was added to provide coverage of private communications systems where the affecting commerce jurisdictional basis is present. This change is in recognition of the fact that some major corporations and professional firms that are not traditional common carriers are installing their own private communications systems.

9-7.2120 Oral Communications

The definition of oral communication remains the same but is specifically excluded from the definition of electronic communication. 18 U.S.C. Section 2510(2). The effect of the exclusion is to make it clear that an oral communication under the statute can never be a radio communication. See, United States v. Rose, 669 F.2d 23, 25-26 (1st Cir.) cert. denied, 459 U.S. 828 (1982)

9-7.2130 Electronic Communications

An "electronic communication" under the new statute is any transfer of signs, signals, writing, images, sounds, data or intelligence of any nature transmitted in whole or in part by a wire, radio, electromagnetic, photoelectronic or photo-optical system that affects interstate or foreign commerce. "Electronic communication" is also specifically defined to exclude a wire or oral communication. 18 U.S.C. 2510(12)(B). The effect of the breadth of this definition is that any and all forms of electronic communications, unless specifically exempted, are now subject to the provisions of the statute just as wire communications have been covered since 1968.

The term "intercept" under the new Act has been broadened to mean the aural "or other" acquisition of the contents of wire, electronic or oral communications. The "or other" was added to accommodate the non-aural acquisition of electronic communications. 18 U.S.C. 2510(4)

9-7.2140 Exceptions

Because the definition of electronic communication is so broad and all-inclusive it became necessary to carve out some forms of electronic communications that either appeared patently not to be deserving of privacy protection or where a policy decision was made by the Congress not to include a specific form of electronic communication. Those exceptions appear in the legislation either as exceptions to defined terms in 18 U.S.C. 2510 or as exceptions to the section that penalizes certain activity as unlawful, 18 U.S.C. 2511. The exceptions are as follows:

- (a) The radio portion of handheld or cordless telephone conversations. These utilize a radio transmission over a limited distance to a base station at a regular telephone. They are so easily intercepted, often over an ordinary AM radio, that the decision was made that there is no reasonable expectation of privacy in these communications. Such handheld, cordless, telephones should be distinguished from cellular telephones, which are covered under the Act. 18 U.S.C. 2510(12)(A)
- (b) Tone only paging devices. It has been the Department's position that intercepting only tone beeps or vibrations from a pager is not a search and, therefore, such interceptions raise no Fourth Amendment implications; the Act endorses this policy. By contrast, digital display and voice paging devices are covered by the new legislation. 18 U.S.C. 2510(12)(C)
- (c) Communications from tracking devices (beepers) placed in automobiles or packages to trace their location. 18 U.S.C. 2510(12)(D). These are specifically excluded from this legislation, and the decision was made to leave this area to case law development. However, it should be noted that the new legislation adds a new 18 U.S.C. 3117 to specifically solve one problem that arises in connection with the use of mobile tracking devices. These devices, by their nature, can easily be transported across jurisdictional lines. However, a court order, in those circumstances where one is required under case law, might well be limited to one judicial district. This new section provides extra-jurisdictional effect to a court order that authorizes the installation of a mobile tracking device. It should be noted that the authorization outside the jurisdiction of the court is not limited to the territorial jurisdiction of the United States for a mobile tracking device.

- (d) A partial exception for video interceptions exists. The new Act covers and criminalizes the unauthorized interception of a closed circuit television broadcast between two points. For example, a business competitor breaking into the wire transmission of a teleconference violates the law, and a law enforcement interception of that communication by tapping into the lines requires a court order under the statute. The Act, however, does not cover the government's use of its own video equipment to surreptitiously intercept and televise a meeting without the consent of a party because there is no interception of an electronic communication occurring as no wires are tapped. (See H. Rep. No. 99-647, 99th Cong., 2d Sess. p. 36 (1986)) The latter does require a search warrant issued pursuant to Rule 41 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure and, accordingly, the law in this area has been left to the courts to develop. See, United States v. Biasucci, 786 F.2d 506 (2nd Cir. 1986); United States v. Torres, 751 F.2d 875 (7th Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 105 S. Ct. 1853 (1985).
- (e) Pen registers and trap and trace devices. These investigative tools qualify as electronic communications as that term is broadly defined. Since the privacy interests involved are so limited with these techniques, they have both been excluded from the coverage of Title I of the Act. 18 U.S.C. 2511(h)(i). However, Title III of the Act specifically regulates these techniques. By and large that Title, to be discussed infra, merely codifies existing Department policy and practices on pen registers and trap and trace devices. 18 U.S.C. 3121 - 3125.
- (f) Certain radio communications. The definition of electronic communication is so broad that it sweeps in all forms of radio communications. Thus, it was necessary for the statute to specifically exclude various forms of radio communications that patently should not be subject to protection from interception such as electronic communications that are broadcast so as to be readily accessible to the public (AM and FM radio station broadcasts), ship to shore general public type communications, public safety communications, citizen band radio, general mobile radio services and the like. 18 U.S.C. 2511(2)(g). This subsection of the Act also contains other specific exceptions relating to interaction with the Federal Communications Act or where there is a necessity to service the system or locate interference. Id.

9-7.2150 Hybrid Communications

To cure the ambiguities that exist relating to conversations that are in part wire and in part radio communications, the Act had to address handheld or cordless telephone conversations, cellular telephone conversations and paging devices. All of these combine wire and electronic communications. See, United States v. Hall, 488 F.2d 193 (9th Cir. 1973). As noted, the radio portion of a handheld or cordless telephone communication is specifically excluded from the Act. 18 U.S.C. 2510(1). This is in recognition of the fact that such "backyard" phones are so easily intercepted within their very short range from the base station phone that no true privacy interests can be deemed present. An interception of the wire portion of such a conversation, however, is covered by the Act as long as the interception is made on the wire portion as opposed to listening to the radio portion.

Both the wire and radio portions of a cellular telephone conversation are specifically covered by the Act. A reference to connections in switching stations in 18 U.S.C. 2510(1) is included so that even radio to radio cellular communications that would occur in a conversation between persons utilizing two cellular car phones will come within the proscriptions of the statute. Including cellular communications within the statute is a Congressional recognition that persons using car phones or briefcase phones that are fully mobile expect that their conversations are private, much as conversations on traditional telephones are private. The mobility of these phones, as opposed to the very limited mobility of a handheld, cordless phone, and the difficulty of intercepting cellular conversations also argue for their privacy protection.

Another problem addressed by the statute is the potential for combining both wire and electronic communications into one conversation over the same telephone line. For instance, two parties can converse in a normal voice conversation, then, using modems, send data to computer terminals and/or exchange written messages on their terminals, and later return to the voice communication method before terminating the conversation. The legislative history makes it clear that if any part of the conversation is a wire communication, then for purposes of the statute, Congress expects that the conversation will be deemed a wire communication. H. Rep. No. 99-647, supra, at p. 35. This has only a limited practical effect because only certain of the procedural aspects of the statute are different for wire communications than they are for electronic communications.

9-7.2160 Penalties

The basic penalty provisions of the existing statute are retained and anyone who intentionally discloses or endeavors to disclose the contents of any wire, oral or electronic communication having reason to know the information was obtained through an unlawful interception is subject to both criminal and civil penalties. Thus, the penalty provisions that apply to the illegal tapping of wire communications are extended to interceptions of electronic communications.

Several of the existing penalty provisions have been modified. For instance, the culpability standard for all wire, oral or electronic communications interception offenses has been changed from "willfully" to "intentionally." 18 U.S.C. 2511. Initial research indicates that this change will be of little practical effect.

In addition, the penalty provision for the interception of the radio portion of a cellular telephone conversation required careful handling because of the presence of radio scanners on the market. These scanners, which are currently in the hands of amateur radio hobbyists, are designed so that they can intercept cellular calls as long as the cellular phone and the radio interceptee are in the same cell and on the same frequency. A first offense for such an interception, if the interception is not for a tortious or illegal purpose or for commercial gain, carries only a $500 fine. 18 U.S.C. 2511(4)(b)(ii). Subsequent offenses or an offense for a tortious or illegal purpose or for commercial gain can carry up to a five year prison term. 18 U.S.C. 2511(4)(a).

Finally, the bill also sets up a reduced penalty structure for a private home television viewer who, using a satellite dish, intercepts specified unscrambled satellite transmissions for private, non-commercial use. For a first offense under these circumstances the only sanction available will be a civil suit by the federal government seeking injunctive relief. 18 U.S.C. 2511(5)(a)(ii).

A full discussion of the penalty provisions of the statute will appear later in an amended United States Attorneys' Manual section.

The legislation also adds a new provision to Title 18 that criminalizes the disclosure of a court approved electronic surveillance application. This new statute, added as a subsection (c) to 18 U.S.C. 2232, provides a five year penalty and a fine for warning, or attempting to warn, the subject of an electronic surveillance application "in order to obstruct, impede, or prevent such interception." The provision applies to both interceptions under the new Act and those authorized under the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act (50 U.S.C. 1801, et seq.). Disclosure of existing wiretap orders has been an occasional problem in recent years, since not all cases fit within the less specific obstruction of justice and contempt statutes. A specific offense will close this gap.

9-7.2170 New Crimes

A large number of new crimes have been added to the list of crimes enumerated in 18 U.S.C. Section 2516 for which a wire or oral interception order can be obtained. Expansion of the list of wiretap predicate offenses was a major goal of the Department in the drafting of the Act and should work to make this investigative technique more useful. These additional crimes are: 18 U.S.C. 751 (escape), 18 U.S.C. 1952A (use of interstate commerce facilities in the commission of murder for hire), 18 U.S.C. 1952B (violent crimes in aid of racketeering activity), 18 U.S.C. 2312, 2313, 2314, (interstate transportation or receipt of stolen vehicles), the second section 2320 of Title 18 (trafficking in certain motor vehicles or motor vehicle parts), 18 U.S.C. 1203 (hostage taking), 18 U.S.C. 1029 (fraud and related activity in connection with access devices), 18 U.S.C. 3146 (penalty for failure to appear), 18 U.S.C. 3521(b)(3) (witness relocation and assistance), 18 U.S.C. 32 (destruction of aircraft or aircraft facilities), 18 U.S.C. 115 (threatening or retaliating against a federal official), 18 U.S.C. 1365 (destruction of an energy facility), 18 U.S.C. 1341 (mail fraud), 18 U.S.C. 2511, 2512 (interception and disclosure of certain communications and use of certain interception devices), 18 U.S.C. 831 (prohibited transactions involving nuclear materials), 18 U.S.C. 33 (destruction of motor vehicles or motor vehicle facilities), 18 U.S.C. 1992 (wrecking trains), 22 U.S.C. 2778 (relating to the Arms Export Control Act), 42 U.S.C. 2284 (sabotage of nuclear facilities or fuel), 49 U.S.C. 1679(c)(2) (destruction of natural gas pipeline), 49 U.S.C. 1472(i) or (n) (aircraft piracy), and any felony violations of Chapter 65 (malicious mischief), Chapter 111 (destruction of vessels), and Chapter 81 (piracy) of Title 18, United States Code. In addition, a new subsection was added that authorizes interception to ascertain the location of any fugitive from justice from an offense described in 18 U.S.C. 2516(1).

9-7.2180 Procedural Changes

Section 2518 of Title 18, which describes the procedure for intercepting wire, oral, and now electronic communications remains substantially the same under the new law. There are, however, some significant changes designed, for the most part, to ease certain procedural requirements for the interception of such communications by federal law enforcement officers. Some of these new procedural provisions are as follows:

(a) Interception of electronic communications. 18 U.S.C. 2516(3) allows any attorney for the government to make an application for an electronic communications interception order in connection with any federal felony. This is in contrast to the enumerated crimes that limit requests for wire or oral interception orders. Moreover, the new law does not require approval from Washington as a prerequisite to filing an application for an electronic communications interception order. However, although Washington approval for this type of interception order is not required by the Act, the Department of Justice has agreed with Congress to administratively require Washington approval for the first three years to insure that the Act is properly implemented. See, H. Rep. No. 99-647, supra, at p. 51. Accordingly, for the initial three year period, requests to intercept electronic communications must be authorized by the same officials in Washington that authorize the interception of wire communications.

It is also important to note that pursuant to 18 U.S.C. 2518(10)(c), as to the interception of electronic communications, the remedies and sanctions described in the statute are the only judicial remedies and sanctions available for nonconstitutional violations of the Act. When a violation of constitutional magnitude is involved, the trial court will apply the existing constitutional law with respect to the exclusionary rule. United States v. Leon, 468 U.S. 897 (1984).

(b) Mobile interception devices. Under the prior wiretap statute, a law enforcement agency wishing to install an oral interception device in an automobile had to obtain an order authorizing the interception from a court in every district that the automobile was expected to enter or forego intercepting conversations in districts in which no order had been obtained. The new statute amends 18 U.S.C. 2518(3) by providing that court orders for mobile interception devices need only be obtained in one district. Thus, there will no longer be a need to secure separate court orders in each jurisdiction that the vehicle passes through; an order in any jurisdiction within the United States will authorize the requested interception. This provision should be available not only for oral bugging devices installed in vehicles, but for court orders authorizing interception of cellular phone conversations over car telephones. Note that in contrast with the provision on mobile tracking devices, 18 U.S.C. 3117, the authorization under 18 U.S.C. 2518(3) for mobile interception devices is valid only within the United States.

(c) Commencement of the thirty day period. 18 U.S.C. 2518 (5) has been amended to provide that the thirty day period for an order authorizing the interception of a wire, oral or electronic communication begins on the earlier of the day on which the interception begins or ten days after the order is entered. This latter provision allows a grace period in case of difficulties in setting up equipment or other technical or operational problems. Thus, investigative agents will have up to ten days in which to place a listening device, often a difficult job, before the thirty day time limit begins to run on the order. This provision makes it more likely that a full interception period will take place before an extension order has to be sought.

(d) After the fact minimization. 18 U.S.C. 2518(5) has also been amended to specifically authorize after the fact minimization in cases where codes or foreign languages are used by the interceptees and there is no expert reasonably available to translate the conversations during the interception period. This amendment provides statutory authorization for what is becoming a more frequent practice as interceptees use complex codes and foreign languages in an attempt to ensure the secrecy of their conversations. Often, the codes and languages used are so obscure that it is impossible to find a translator until the interception period is well under way or over.

(e) The use of support personnel. One of the most frequent problems encountered by agencies conducting electronic surveillance pursuant to the original statute has been the need to use "law enforcement officers," as that term is defined in 18 U.S.C. 2510(7), to monitor intercepted conversations. This requirement necessitated that non-agent translators, state and local investigators, or any other individuals needed to aid in the monitoring, who were not federal law enforcement officers under the specific statutory definitions, be deputized as United States Marshals before conducting the interceptions. The deputation requirement often resulted in disputes over the meaning of "law enforcement officer" and delays in the authorization process. The problem has been eliminated by the new law, which provides that an interception may be conducted by "Government personnel, or by an individual operating under a contract with the Government, acting under the supervision of an investigative or law enforcement officer authorized to conduct the interception." 18 U.S.C. 2518(5). This change is designed to substantially reduce the deputation procedure as well as free field agents from the need to monitor interceptions so that they can engage in other law enforcement activities. The key to the provision is that the government or contract personnel must be working under the supervision of an appropriate investigative or law enforcement official.

(f) Roving interceptions. One of the most significant additions to 18 U.S.C. 2518 concerns the specificity required in the description of the place to be bugged or the telephone to be tapped. The original law required that the application for, and the order authorizing, an electronic surveillance request indicate the "particular" facility or place in which the interception was to occur. The new law contains an exception to the particularity requirement and, in effect, allows an interception order to target a specific person rather than the specific telephone or premises that that person might use. The amendments establish two similar rules to govern the interception of "oral communications" and "wire or electronic communications" where the target facility need not be identified with specificity before the interception order is obtained. 18 U.S.C. 2518(11).

With respect to "oral communications," the application must contain a full and complete statement as to why the ordinary specification requirements are not practical. The application must also identify the person committing the offense and whose communications are to be intercepted. The judge must then make a specific finding that the ordinary specification rules are not practical under the circumstances. 18 U.S.C. 2518(11)(a). Examples of situations where ordinary specification rules would not be practical include cases in which suspects meet in parking lots or fields or move from hotel room to hotel room in an attempt to avoid electronic surveillance. In such cases, the order would allow law enforcement officers to follow the targeted individual and engage in the interception once the conversation occurs. 18 U.S.C. 2518(12).

The provision concerning "wire or electronic communications" is similar to that governing oral communications. The application must specifically identify the person committing the offense whose communications are to be intercepted. The application must also show, however, that the person committing the offense has demonstrated a purpose to thwart interception by changing facilities. In these cases, the court must specifically find that such a purpose has been evidenced by the suspect. An example of a situation that would meet this test would be the subject who moves from phone booth to phone booth numerous times to avoid interception. 18 U.S.C. Section 2518(11)(b).

With respect to both oral and wire or electronic communications, the approval of the Attorney General, Deputy Attorney General, Associate Attorney General, Assistant Attorney General or an Acting Assistant Attorney General is required before a relaxed specificity order is sought. Approval by a Deputy Assistant Attorney General in the Criminal Division, which is authorized for all other interceptions, is not sufficient for this type of application.

The government cannot begin the interception until the facilities from which, or the place where, the communication is to be intercepted is determined by the agency implementing the order. 18 U.S.C. 2518(12). Congress also intended that the actual interception not commence until the targeted individual begins, or evidences an intention to begin, a conversation. It was not intended that the relaxed specificity order be used to tap a series of telephones, intercept all conversations over those phones, and then minimize the conversations recorded as a result. This provision puts the burden on the investigatory agency to determine when and where the interception is to commence. See, H. Rep. No. 99-647, supra, at p. 53. There is no requirement of notification to the court once the premises or specific phone is identified prior to making the interception; however a specific place or phone must be identified. Limiting interceptions to specific places once they are determined should satisfy the specificity requirement of the Fourth Amendment.

Obviously, this provision will be a valuable tool in criminal investigations as sophisticated suspects have been quite effective in avoiding electronic surveillance by frequently changing their meeting places and telephones. However, the Fourth Amendment implications involved in this procedure should not be ignored. This is an extraordinary provision and it is the intention of the Department of Justice that it be used sparingly and only in clearly appropriate cases. This provision is not a substitute for investigative footwork; it is not intended that the ordinary showing of probable cause with respect to a specific telephone or location be dispensed with on the theory that the subject is a criminal who engages in criminal conversations wherever he goes.

A further consideration, especially in wire or electronic interceptions, is the practical problems faced by the telephone company or other provider of electronic communication services in effecting the interception, complete with leased lines to the government listening post, on extremely short notice. Care has to be exercised to work with the telecommunication companies and to provide them with as much information and notice as possible as far in advance as possible. Telephone companies in particular have expressed great concern about their ability to comply with such orders, which may require action on their part that will strain their ability to assist law enforcement officials in these cases. Congress, at the request of the telephone companies, included a provision in the Act allowing the companies to move the court that has issued a reduced specificity order for the interception of wire or electronic communications to modify or quash the order if the interception cannot be performed in a timely or reasonable manner. 18 U.S.C. 2518(12). The key for all concerned is to approach this procedure with care and foresight and to be aware of the practical and legal problems that may arise.

(g) Reporting requirements. 18 U.S.C. 2519, which requires judicial reports to the Administrative Office of the United States Courts, has been amended to require reports on wire, oral, or electronic communication surveillance orders issued under the relaxed specificity provisions noted above. 18 U.S.C. 2519(1)(b). Otherwise the reporting section is unchanged.

9-7.2190 Recovery of Civil Damages

18 U.S.C. 2520 relating to civil damages has been largely rewritten. The new section provides for equitable relief, compensatory and punitive damages, and attorneys' fees for a violation of the chapter. Added to section 2520 are statutory provisions for the computation of damages and a two year statute of limitations on actions brought under the section. Finally, 18 U.S.C. 2520(d) provides a good faith defense to actions brought under the section and specifically includes reliance on a facially valid court order within the meaning of "good faith."

9-7.2200 Injunctive Remedy

A new section, 18 U.S.C. 2521, has been added to the law. This section enables the Attorney General to initiate civil proceedings to enjoin a felony violation of the chapter that presents a continuing and substantial injury to the United States or to any person or class for whose protection the action is brought.

9-7.3000 TITLE II - STORED WIRE AND ELECTRONIC COMMUNICATIONS AND TRANSACTIONAL RECORDS ACCESS

Title II of the Act is completely new and is designed to protect the privacy of stored electronic communications, either before such a communication is transmitted to the recipient or, if a copy of the message is kept, after it is delivered. In developing legislation to cover new communications technologies, now identified by the statute as "electronic communications," it became apparent that entirely different problems exist with reference to such methods as electronic mail and computer transmissions than are present in the case of wire or oral communications. In the former, copies, whether backup to guard against computer failure or stored copies in a remote computing system, are a central feature of the new technology; in the latter, preserved copies of spoken telephone messages are virtually unknown. Businesses and companies that provide communications services urged Congress to establish appropriate methods for government access to these new stored records to protect their customers' interests and to bring certainty to this developing communications industry. In addition, privacy interests were recognized by making it a federal offense to improperly access or disclose the contents of stored electronic communications. In developing the legislation these new electronic communications were divided into two categories: a) communications during the transmission stage, and b) communications in "storage." Electronic storage is defined in 18 U.S.C. 2510(17) as both any temporary, intermediate storage of a wire or electronic communication incidental to the electronic transmission thereof and the storage of such communication by an electronic communication service for purposes of backup protection of such communication.

There was general recognition that the interception of communications during the transmission stage is more intrusive than of those in storage and, accordingly, those communications were given almost the same protection as that provided for wire and oral communications. However, as noted earlier in this section, it is somewhat easier to obtain an interception order for an electronic communication in transmission than it is to obtain a wire or oral interception order. The provisions governing electronic communications during the transmission stage are set forth in Title I of the Act and are discussed in detail at p. 9, supra.

With respect to stored communications, the Department originally urged that these communications should be treated as third party records and should be available by administrative or grand jury subpoena or by a court order. The various concerned segments of the communications industry had considerable difficulty with this concept, arguing that in the business community clients would not use electronic communications services if the records being transmitted were readily available to law enforcement agencies. These communications were likened to regular mail being handled by the Post Office. Under present day standards, a search warrant would be required to intercept mail since it enjoys Fourth Amendment protection. Congress ultimately decided that electronic mail in storage incident to transmission should be accorded the same protection. 18 U.S.C. 2703(a).

The same principle applies to "backup" copies made by the providers of electronic communications services to protect the communications from loss when the system has a malfunction and records are inadvertently lost, a not infrequent occurrence. As these copies are kept to protect the owner, the argument was made that since their existence is for the owner's benefit, a search warrant should be required to obtain them just as it would be needed to seek the records if possessed at the owner's headquarters. Similar protection was requested for records maintained by providers of remote computing services that were simply performing processing functions and did not have access to the contents of the communications. Without the right to actually access the records, the claim was made that the remote computing service provider was not truly a third party custodian. An example of a remote computing service would be a firm that takes time and salary records from a large firm, applies established computer programs to the records, and returns pay checks with appropriate tax deductions made.

The consensus that was reached was to accord Fourth Amendment type protection to the stored data for the first 180 days, requiring a search warrant under Rule 41 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure for government access. After the 180-day period expired, any records still retained would revert to the status of third party records and would be available by administrative or grand jury subpoena or by a specially created court order procedure. The Act's provisions also permit the government to ask a computer storage company to create a copy of existing records as they exist on a specific day and hold them pending court order access. This provision, to be discussed infra, should be quite beneficial in certain large scale fraud investigations where remote computing facilities are used as it will eliminate the danger of a computer command to destroy the records when the perpetrator suspects law enforcement interest in his activities.

The most important provisions of Title II are the following:

9-7.3010 Unlawful Access to Stored Communications

18 U.S.C. 2701 makes it an offense to (a) intentionally access, without authorization, a facility through which an electronic communication service is provided; or (b) intentionally exceed the authorization of such facility; and as a result of this conduct, obtain, alter or prevent authorized access to a wire or electronic communication while it is in electronic storage in such a system. 18 U.S.C. 2701(a). An "electronic mail" service, which permits a sender to transmit a digital message to the service's facility, where it is held in storage until the addressee requests it, would be subject to 18 U.S.C. 2701. A "voice mail" service operates in much the same way, except that the stored message takes the form of the sender's voice, usually in digital code. It would likewise be subject to this section. Moreover, a remote computing service provided through an electronic communication service is also protected.

This provision is intended to address the increasing problem of both unauthorized "computer hackers" and corporate spies who deliberately gain access to, and sometimes tamper with, electronic communications that are not available to the public. The provision is not intended to criminalize access to "electronic bulletin boards," which are generally open to the public so that interested persons may communicate on specific topics. Where communications are readily accessible to the general public, the sender has, for purposes of 18 U.S.C. 2701(a), extended an "authorization" to the public to access those communications. A communication will be found to be readily accessible to the general public if the telephone number of the system and other means of access are widely known, and if a person does not, in the course of gaining access, encounter any warnings, encryptions, password requests, or other indicia of intended privacy. To access a communication on such a system is not a violation of the law. 18 U.S.C. 2701(a).

If a violation of 18 U.S.C. 2701(a) was committed for commercial advantage, malicious destruction or damage, or private financial gain, the violator could receive up to a year in prison and a $250,000 fine for the first offense and up to two years imprisonment and a fine as provided by Title 18, United States Code, for a second or subsequent offense. In all other cases, a jail term of up to six months and a fine of $5,000, or both, could be imposed. 18 U.S.C. 2701(b)(2).

9-7.3020 Disclosure of the Contents of a Stored Communication

18 U.S.C. 2702 governs disclosure of the contents of a stored communication. 18 U.S.C. 2702(a) generally prohibits the provider of a wire or electronic communication service from knowingly divulging the contents of any communication while in electronic storage by that service to any person other than the addressee or intended recipient of the communication. Similarly, 18 U.S.C. 2511(3), as amended, prohibits such a provider from divulging the contents of a communication while it is in the transmission stage. Neither provision, however, nor any other provision of the Act, is intended to affect any other provision of federal law that prohibits the disclosure of information on the basis of the content of the information, such as the Fair Credit Reporting Act, 15 U.S.C. 1681(b), which limits the circumstances under which consumer reporting agencies may disclose certain information relating to consumers.

18 U.S.C. 2702(a)(1) states that a provider of an electronic communication service shall not knowingly divulge the contents of a communication while in electronic storage.

18 U.S.C. 2702(a)(2) prohibits the provider of a remote computing service from disclosing the contents of any communication that is maintained by the service if certain conditions are met. The first condition is that the communication must be on behalf of and received by means of electronic transmission from (or created by means of computer processing of communications received by means of transmission from) a subscriber or customer of such service. 18 U.S.C. 2702(a)(2)(A). The second condition is that the communication must be solely for the purpose of providing storage or computer processing services to the subscriber or customer if the provider is not authorized to access the contents of any such communications for purposes of providing services other than storage or computer processing. 18 U.S.C. 2702(a)(2)(B). The practical purpose of this provision was set forth in the Report of the House of Representatives Committee on the Judiciary as follows:

This provision reflects the rapidly growing importance of information storage and processing to the Nation's commerce. Today, the subject matter of commerce increasingly is information in electronic form and the processing of information itself has become a major industry. The secure storage of electronic information has thus become as important to the commercial system as the protection of paper records. Accordingly, where an electronic communication is transmitted by a subscriber or customer to such a service, and is stored on the subscriber's behalf solely for the purpose of providing storage or computer processing services to the subscriber, the Committee intends that the communication - - together with the products of any processing that the service performs for the customer - - remain available only to the subscriber and to the persons he designates, with certain exceptions enumerated in Section 2702(b). H. Rep. No. 99-647, supra, pp. 65-66.

18 U.S.C. 2702(b) provides six distinct exceptions that modify the general prohibitions against disclosure contained in 2702(a). Accordingly, the contents of a communication may be disclosed under the following circumstances:

- a. to an addressee or intended recipient of the communication or his agent;
- b. as otherwise authorized in 18 U.S.C. 2517 (the basic wire and electronic communications disclosure provisions); 18 U.S.C. 2511(2)(a) (disclosure to suitable switchboard operators and telephone company personnel in the ordinary course of business); or the new 18 U.S.C. 2703 (access by the government to the contents of electronic communications);
- c. with the consent of the originator, addressee, or intended recipient, or the subscriber in the case of a remote computing service;
- d. to an employee or other person whose facilities are used to transmit the communication to its destination;
- e. as may be necessary in order to provide the service or to protect the property or rights of the provider of the service;

- f. to a law enforcement agency, if the contents were:
- (i) inadvertently obtained by the service provider; and
  - (ii) appear to pertain to the commission of a crime.

The final exception is intended to be read narrowly. It is not intended to be a substitute for fulfilling the procedural requirements contained in 18 U.S.C. 2703, which govern government access to stored communications. A service provider's systematic practice of reviewing these communications to look for evidence of a crime would not qualify as inadvertent. H. Rep. No. 99-647, supra, at p. 67.

It should be noted that the penalty for improper disclosure by a service provider of stored communications is civil in nature since this section provides no criminal penalty. A provision for a civil action for violation of most of the provisions of Title II of the bill is set out in the new 18 U.S.C. 2707.

9-7.3030 Requirements for Governmental Access to Stored Communications

(a) Procedures for access to the contents of a stored communication. 18 U.S.C. 2703 sets forth the procedural requirements that the government must meet in order to obtain access to electronic communications in storage and related transactional records. The statute draws a distinction between contents of electronic communications that have been in storage for 180 days or less and those that have been stored for a longer period of time. Thus, the section provides that a governmental entity may only obtain access to the contents of an electronic communication that has been in storage for 180 days or less pursuant to a search warrant issued under the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure or an equivalent state warrant. If the message has been stored for more than 180 days the government can, as discussed below, obtain the information by a variety of procedures including a search warrant, grand jury subpoena, administrative subpoena, or a court order, depending on the type of notification the government wishes to provide the subscriber. The distinction results from Congress's conclusion that while the contents of a message in storage should be protected by Fourth Amendment standards as are the contents of a regularly mailed letter, to the extent that the record is kept beyond six months, it is closer to a business record maintained by a third party for its own benefit and, therefore, deserving of a lessened standard of protection. The above provision clearly applies to the new communication concept generally referred to as electronic mail in which messages are sent between parties much like traditional mail except that an electronic communications system is utilized instead of a postal service. As noted below, the provision, with its search warrant requirement, may not apply in the case of a remote computing service in which a data base may be held by the service for less than or more than 180 days and can be modified and updated on a weekly or even a daily basis.

18 U.S.C. 2703(b) sets forth the procedures that the government may use to obtain access to electronic communications held for more than 180 days or to such communications held by a provider of a remote computing service. That subsection provides that the government may proceed using any of three alternative means of access. The government may, without providing any notice to the subscriber, obtain a state or federal search warrant based upon probable cause. 18 U.S.C. 2703(b)(A). If the government chooses to give notice to the subscriber, it may obtain access to the records by using either a grand jury or administrative subpoena, 18 U.S.C. 2703(b)(B)(i), or a new statutory court order based upon a finding that the records are relevant to a legitimate law enforcement inquiry. 18 U.S.C. 2703(d). Please note that the required notification to the subscriber may be delayed pursuant to 18 U.S.C. 2705, as discussed below.

As noted, 18 U.S.C. 2703(a), which governs the procedures for governmental access to the contents of records in electronic storage, requires that a search warrant based on probable cause be obtained for access to the contents of an electronic communication held for less than 180 days. Such communication contents held for more than 180 days can be obtained by the methods set forth in 18 U.S.C. 2703(b), which, along with search warrants, include a specially created court order and grand jury and administrative subpoenas. 18 U.S.C. 2703(b) relates specifically to records held in remote computing systems and such records are not mentioned anywhere in 18 U.S.C. 2703(a). The question arises as to whether the 180 day provision in 18 U.S.C. 2703(a) applies as well to records held in remote computing systems as it clearly does to communications during transmission such as those utilized by an electronic mail company. Is access to records held by remote computing systems limited during the first 180 days in the system to situations where search warrants can be obtained, or can those records be accessed by the government, regardless of their length of time in the system, simply by use of a grand jury or administrative subpoena or the new statutory court order?

The Act is clearly disjunctive in its treatment of "Electronic Communications in Electronic Storage" under 18 U.S.C. 2703(a) and "Electronic Communications in a Remote Computing Service" under 18 U.S.C. 2703(b). It would appear, therefore, that Congress intended that access to communications in a remote computing service be governed only by the provisions of 2703(b), which makes a search warrant optional to a subpoena or court order. Since no time limit is set forth in 2703(b), it seems that the government could obtain records in a remote computing service at any time by issuing an administrative or grand jury subpoena or obtaining a court order based upon a simple showing of relevancy. The legislative histories of the Act, however, make this proposition far from clear.

The House Report treats communications in electronic storage and communications in a remote computing system in the disjunctive, as the Act itself does. Thus, the House Report states that 18 U.S.C. 2703(a) deals with the contents of an electronic communication in storage, noting that such records can only be obtained through a search warrant during the first 180 days in storage. H. Rep. No. 99-647, supra, at pp. 67-68. The House Report also notes that "electronically stored communications can be of two types. The first type of stored communications are those associated with transmission and incident thereto. The second type of storage is of a back-up variety." Id. at p. 68. This statement, and the fact that remote computing service records are discussed under a separate subsection in the House Report, supports the view that records given to a remote computing service are neither given over for, nor held incidentally to, purposes of transmission and, therefore, are not governed by the 180 day provisions set forth in 18 U.S.C. 2703(a).

The Senate Report, however, appears to treat the two types of records in the same manner in stating that 18 U.S.C. 2703(b) "provides that for electronic communications that are maintained by a remote computing service and that have been in storage in an electronic communication service for more than 180 days the Government can gain access in several ways." S. Rep. No. 99-541, 99th Cong., 2d Sess. at p. 38 (1986). The Senate Report contains no independent discussion of remote computing service records in storage for less than 180 days. The argument can be made that the Senate Report is incorrect as it does not reflect the plain meaning of the statute as set forth in 18 U.S.C. 2703(a) and (b). Moreover, since the language was originally drafted by the House, the House Report should be the more authoritative as the Senate made no changes in this language.

Although it does not appear in either Report, an argument can be made that because a remote computing company has little access to the records themselves, they are nothing more than a mere extension of the record originator and should stand in the originator's place in the face of a government request for access to the records. If a search warrant would be required to obtain the originator's records in his own office, then, similarly, a search warrant should be necessary to obtain the same records from a remote computing service possessing the records under circumstances in which the service cannot access the records except for purposes of storage or to run a computer program. Without independent access to the records, the remote computing service should not be deemed an ordinary third party custodian of records who must respond to a subpoena. This is the argument the remote computing industry is sure to raise.

Ultimately, the courts will have to determine the correct legislative meaning and intent on this issue. Initially, United States attorneys are urged to argue that government access to the contents of an electronic communication held by a remote computing service does not require a search warrant during the first 180 days. All those implementing this statute for the government should be aware, however, that this ambiguity exists and be prepared for a court challenge to a subpoena or the more limited statutory court order for such records.

As just referred to above, the type of electronic communication held by a remote computing service that is subject to these provisions on governmental access is limited. The communication must be on behalf of a subscriber of a remote computing service and must have been given to the remote computing service under narrow conditions. The communication must have been received in a certain form (i.e., by means of electronic transmission or similar means). 18 U.S.C. 2703(b)(2)(A). In addition, the communication must have been surrendered solely for the purpose of providing storage or computer processing services to the subscriber, and the provider may not be authorized to access the contents of any such communication for purposes of providing any services other than storage or computer processing. 18 U.S.C. 2703(b)(2)(B). A computer storage company that does not meet these requirements would certainly be deemed an ordinary third party custodian of records regardless of the ultimate decision as to the remote computing service.

(b) Procedures for access to transactional information including telephone toll records. 18 U.S.C. 2703(c) sets forth the rules under which the government may obtain access to transactional records. These are records that pertain to the subscriber to, or customer of, an electronic communication service or remote computing service and which do not involve the contents of a communication. In electronic communications these are the records that are the equivalent of the traditional telephone toll records maintained by a telephone company. As drafted, this provision covers not only transactional records of an electronic mail company or a computer data processor, but also, in fact, covers and regulates governmental access to traditional telephone toll records themselves. It is important to note at the outset that the statute's provisions in the area of telephone toll records impose no greater burden on the government than the previous Department policy of obtaining such records by way of subpoena or administrative summons. In fact, in some cases, the statute will actually make it easier for an investigative agency to obtain and use such records. Nevertheless, as part of the general intent of the Act to cover all forms of wire and electronic communications, telephone toll records, like pen registers, will now be covered by a federal statute.

As discussed below, the government will be able to obtain such transactional records by grand jury subpoena, administrative subpoena, or court order based upon a finding of relevancy. In the past, the Federal Bureau of Investigation could only obtain these records pursuant to a grand jury subpoena with such a subpoena's attendant Rule 6(e) disclosure and storage restrictions and problems. Under 18 U.S.C. 2703(c), the Bureau, and other investigative agencies lacking administrative subpoena powers, will now be able to obtain transactional records, including telephone toll records, pursuant to a court order based on a readily available standard and telephone toll records available solely as grand jury records will no longer be a problem.

18 U.S.C. 2703(c) (1) (B) and 18 U.S.C. 2703(c) (2) allow the government to obtain transactional records without notice to the subscriber by obtaining (1) an administrative or grand jury subpoena; (2) a search warrant pursuant to state or federal law; or (3) a court order pursuant to 18 U.S.C. 2703(d) based upon a finding that the information is relevant to a legitimate law enforcement inquiry. Granted that pen register data (regulated in Title III of the Act) and telephone toll records provide identical type data, that court process of some nature is now required under Department policy for such records, and that the Act's intent is to regulate all forms of wire and electronic communications, this provision with its relevancy standard both effectuates the Congressional purpose and protects legitimate law enforcement interests in obtaining the necessary information. The government may also, of course, obtain such records from the service provider when the customer consents to the disclosure. 18 U.S.C. 2703(c) (1) (B) (iv).

(c) Court orders for disclosure of the contents of communications or transactional records. 18 U.S.C. 2703(d) governs court orders issued pursuant to 18 U.S.C. 2703(b) (B) (ii) relating to the contents of stored communications and 18 U.S.C. 2703(c) (1) (B) (iii) relating to transactional records. 18 U.S.C. 2703(d) provides that to obtain such an order the government must demonstrate that there is reason to believe that the contents of an electronic communication, or the records or other information sought, are relevant to a legitimate law enforcement inquiry. The only contents that can be sought using the court order option are those stored for more than 180 days. Thus, the standard for the order for contents of records stored more than 180 days is the same as for transactional records. However, for contents, as opposed to transactional records, notice to the subscriber is also required unless it can be delayed under 18 U.S.C. 2705; no notice is required to the subscriber for access to transactional records.

(d) Cause of action barred. 18 U.S.C. 2703(e) provides that no cause of action shall lie against the provider of a wire or electronic communications service, or its officers and employees, for providing information, facilities, or assistance to the government pursuant to a court order, subpoena, warrant or certification.

9-7.3040 Backup Preservation of Information in Storage

(a) Government access. 18 U.S.C. 2704 sets forth the procedures that apply to backup copy preservation. This is the provision that will permit law enforcement officials to have a copy, in the nature of a picture of the records that exist on a given day, made of records of illegal activities in which a computer storage or remote processing firm is utilized in the criminal activity. It is an innovation that should be of major value to law enforcement in coming years. 18 U.S.C. 2704(a) (1) provides that when the government seeks records that are being held by a remote computing storage company pursuant to 18 U.S.C. 2703(b) (2), the government may include in its subpoena or court order a requirement that the service provider create a backup copy of the communication in order to preserve the communication. The provider is directed to create the requested backup copy as soon as practicable consistent with its regular business practices, but in any event within two business days of the receipt of the order or subpoena and then notify the government that the copy has been made. The provider is also directed not to notify the subscriber of the order or subpoena.

18 U.S.C. 2704(a) (2) provides that the government is required to notify the subscriber of the subpoena or court order within three days after the receipt of the service provider's confirmation of the creation of the backup copy. This notice can be delayed pursuant to 18 U.S.C. 2705(a). 18 U.S.C. 2704(a)(3) states that the provider may not destroy the backup copy until the later of (1) the delivery of the information to the government; or (2) the resolution of any legal proceedings related to the government's order or subpoena.

Under 18 U.S.C. 2704(a)(4) the service provider is required to release the backup copy to the government no sooner than 14 days after the government provides notice to the subscriber if (1) the provider has not received notice that the subscriber has challenged the government's request; and (2) the provider has not initiated proceedings to challenge the subpoena or court order.

18 U.S.C. 2704(a)(5) provides that a government agency may require the creation of a backup copy under 2701(a)(1) if in its sole discretion the agency determines that there is reason to believe that notification pursuant to 18 U.S.C. 2703 of the existence of a subpoena or court order for the production of stored communications may result in the destruction of or tampering with the evidence sought. It is of special significance that this determination is not subject to challenge by the subscriber or service provider. The key to this provision is that the government can make certain that a copy of the relevant records is created prior to any litigation or notice and before any attempt to alter or destroy the records electronically can be made.

(b) Customer challenges. 18 U.S.C. 2704(b)(1) provides that within 14 days after notice by the government that a backup copy has been requested, the subscriber may move to vacate the court order or quash the subpoena ordering that the backup copy be made. The subsection then sets forth the procedural details governing proceedings to quash or vacate. The challenger must serve the government with notice and provide written notice to the service provider. The challenger must then establish that he is the relevant customer or subscriber and that the records sought are not relevant to a legitimate law enforcement inquiry or that the government failed to comply with the statutory requirements for access to the records.

If the court finds that the challenger has met the requirements of 2704(b)(1), the government must file a sworn response, in camera if appropriate. 18 U.S.C. 2704(b)(3). If the court determines that the challenger has failed to meet these requirements, it will order the process enforced. On the other hand, if the challenger has standing and can show either lack of relevance or noncompliance with the procedural requirements, the court can vacate the order or quash the subpoena. 18 U.S.C. 2704(b)(4). Thus, once the backup copy is created, the government can enforce access to it by complying with the procedural provisions of this section and by merely establishing relevancy to a legitimate law enforcement inquiry.

18 U.S.C. 2704(b)(5) provides that a court order denying a motion or application shall not be deemed a final order and, therefore, no interlocutory appeal may be taken from the denial. Of course, nothing precludes a subscriber from raising these issues again during a subsequent hearing or trial.

9-7.3050 Delayed Notice

(a) Procedure. 18 U.S.C. 2705 governs delay of notification to the customer or subscriber. Where the government seeks the contents of a stored electronic communication pursuant to the provisions of 18 U.S.C. 2703(b) by way of a court order, it may include in its application a request for delayed notification of 90 days or less. The court is to grant this request if it determines that there is reason to believe that notification might have an adverse result as described in 2705(a)(2). 18 U.S.C. 2705(a)(1)(A). Where the government seeks the contents of a communication governed by 18 U.S.C. 2703(b) by way of an administrative or grand jury subpoena, it may obtain a delay of notification for a period of up to 90 days upon the certification of a supervisory official that there is reason to believe that notification of the existence of the subpoena may have an adverse result described in 2705(a)(2). 18 U.S.C. 2705(a)(1)(B). It should be noted that under this latter provision, the government need provide only the written certification; it is not necessary for the government to obtain a court order based upon a finding of adverse results. Thus, this provision, unlike similar delayed notification provisions in statutes such as the Right to Financial Privacy Act, 12 U.S.C. 3409, requires nothing more than a government certification to trigger delayed notification.

A "supervisory official" for purposes of this provision includes the investigative agent or assistant investigative agent in charge of a field office or an equivalent official in the investigating agency's headquarters or regional office. Thus, for instance, it will require the certification of a supervisory agent such as the Special Agent in Charge or the Assistant Special Agent in charge of an FBI or DEA office to comply with this provision. A certification by the agent in charge of an investigation would not suffice. The term also means the chief prosecuting attorney, the first assistant or an equivalent official in a regional or headquarters office. 18 U.S.C. 2705(a)(6).

18 U.S.C. 2705(a)(4) provides that extensions of up to 90 days may be made of the delayed notification as long as the original requirements of the section are met with respect to the extension.

(b) Adverse results. An adverse result that can trigger delayed notification is one of the following: (1) endangering the life or physical safety of an individual; (2) flight from prosecution; (3) destruction of, or tampering with, evidence; (4) intimidation of potential witnesses (including victims of any crimes); and (5) otherwise seriously jeopardizing an investigation or unduly delaying an ongoing trial. 18 U.S.C. 2705(a)(2).

(c) Preclusion of notification. 18 U.S.C. 2705(b) provides a procedure for the government to preclude the service provider from notifying its customer or subscriber of the existence of a warrant, subpoena, or court order. That section states that such preclusion may only be obtained in cases where the government is not required to notify, or where the government has obtained the authority to delay notification. A preclusion of notification must be granted by a court of competent jurisdiction that finds that there is reason to believe that adverse results set forth in 18 U.S.C. 2705(a)(2) will occur if notification is given.

9-7.3060 Cost Reimbursement

(a) Payment. 18 U.S.C. 2706(a) provides that the government, when seeking records pursuant to 18 U.S.C. 2702, 2703, or 2704, must reimburse the person or entity assembling or providing the records for all reasonable costs that have been incurred in providing the information. Note that 18 U.S.C. 2706(c) exempts telephone toll records and telephone listings from the reimbursement requirement. These records are excluded primarily because the government has not traditionally paid the telephone companies for providing this type of information. The court can, however, order the government to reimburse the provider of telephone toll records where the information sought is unusually voluminous or causes an undue burden on the provider. 18 U.S.C. 2706(c).

(b) Amount. Under 18 U.S.C. 2706(b), the amount of the reimbursement payment will be as mutually agreed by the government and the provider or, in the absence of such an agreement, as determined by the court.

9-7.3070 Civil Action

(a) Cause of action. 18 U.S.C. 2707(a) provides a civil cause of action for a provider of an electronic communication service, or its customer or subscriber who is aggrieved by an intentional violation of the statute. However, this provision and 18 U.S.C. 2703(e) specifically preclude any cause of action against a provider of an electronic communication service that discloses information pursuant to a court order, warrant, subpoena or certification.

(b) Relief. 18 U.S.C. 2707(b) defines the relief that may be appropriate in civil actions to include preliminary or other equitable or declaratory relief, damages, attorneys' fees, and other reasonably incurred litigation costs. Damages include actual damages and any profits made by the violator as a result of the violation, but in no case less than $1,000. 18 U.S.C. 2707(c).

(c) Defenses. 18 U.S.C. 2707(d) sets forth the defenses to actions brought under the statute. This subsection provides a complete defense to any civil or criminal action brought under Title 18, United States Code, or any other law where the defendant demonstrates a good faith reliance on a court order, warrant, subpoena, or legislative or statutory authorization, or in good faith complies with a request from a law enforcement officer. 18 U.S.C. 2707(d) also provides a complete defense to defendants who rely upon a good faith determination that 18 U.S.C. 2511(3) permitted the conduct complained of.

(d) Statute of limitations. 18 U.S.C. 2707(e) provides that a civil action may not be commenced later than two years after the date upon which the claimant first discovered or had reasonable opportunity to discover the violation.

9-7.3080 Exclusivity of Remedies

18 U.S.C. 2708 provides that the remedies and sanctions described in the statute are the only judicial remedies and sanctions available for nonconstitutional violations of the Act. When a violation of constitutional magnitude is involved, the trial court will apply the existing constitutional law with respect to the exclusionary rule. United States v. Leon, 468 U.S. 897 (1984).

9-7.3090 Counterintelligence Access to Telephone Toll and Transactional Records

(a) Duty to provide. 18 U.S.C. 2709 sets forth the rules governing counterintelligence access to telephone toll and transactional records. 18 U.S.C. 2709(a) provides that a communications common carrier or the provider of an electronic communication service shall provide such subscriber information or telephone toll records pursuant to a request from the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation under 18 U.S.C. 2709(b).

(b) Certification. 18 U.S.C. 2709(b) contains the conditions under which the Director of the FBI, or his designee, may request these records. This section states that the Director or his designee must certify in writing that the information sought is relevant to an authorized foreign counterintelligence investigation; and that there are specific, articulable facts giving reason to believe that the person or entity to whom the information sought pertains is a foreign power or an agent of a foreign power as defined in the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act of 1978, 50 U.S.C. 1801 et seq.

(c) Disclosure prohibition. 18 U.S.C. 2709(c) prohibits the service provider from disclosing to any person that the FBI has sought or obtained transactional records under the provisions of 18 U.S.C. 2709.

(d) Dissemination by the FBI. 18 U.S.C. 2709(d) provides that the FBI may disseminate records obtained under this section only as provided in guidelines approved by the Attorney General for foreign counterintelligence collection and foreign counterintelligence investigations conducted by the FBI, and with respect to dissemination to an agency of the United States the dissemination can only be made if the information is clearly relevant to the authorized responsibilities of such agency.

(e) Congressional consultation. 18 U.S.C. 2709(e) provides that the Director of the FBI shall fully inform the House and Senate intelligence committees concerning all requests made under this section.

9-7.4000 TITLE III - PEN REGISTER AND TRAP AND TRACE DEVICES

The final Title of the legislation adds a new Chapter 206 to Title 18 of the United States Code, Section 3121 et seq., which regulates the use of pen registers and trap and trace devices. The title begins with a general prohibition against the use of a pen register or a trap and trace device without first obtaining a court order pursuant to 18 U.S.C. 3123 or the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act of 1978 (50 U.S.C. 1801 et seq.). Although the courts have clearly held that pen registers were not within the reach of the wiretap statute and that the Fourth Amendment does not require a warrant for this procedure, (United States v. New York Telephone Co., 434 U.S. 159 (1977); Smith v. Maryland, 442 U.S. 735 (1979)), the telephone companies have insisted on court orders for fear of civil liability before they would assist in placing a pen register. The same principle has applied to trap and trace devices. Accordingly, for a number of years Department policy has required the use of a court order issued under Rules 41 or 57 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure for pen registers and trap and trace devices. USAM 9-7.014; 7.231. Thus, this new chapter in Title 18 in essence codifies the existing Department policy of obtaining a court order to authorize the installation of a pen register or a trap and trace device and sets forth the procedure for seeking such an order. It is important to note that the chapter places no new restrictions on law enforcement in this regard in that it applies basically the same standards required now. In addition, it has certain procedural changes that are advantageous to law enforcement. Moreover, codifying the pen register and trap and trace procedures should eliminate the risk of more restrictive legislation, such as that contained in the original bills in this area, from being enacted in the future.

The statute contains provisions excepting the use of pen registers and trap and trace devices from the court order requirement in certain circumstances. Thus, a service provider need not obtain a court order before using a pen register or trap and trace device in order to test, operate, or maintain its equipment and services, or to protect the property rights of its customers. 18 U.S.C. 3121(b)(1). The service provider may also use a pen register or trap and trace device without first securing a court order to record the fact that a wire or electronic communication was initiated or completed in order to protect itself, or another provider, or a customer from fraud or abuse. 18 U.S.C. 3121(b)(2). Finally, it is not necessary to obtain a court order when the telephone user consents to the installation of the pen register or trap and trace device. 18 U.S.C. 3121(b)(2).

9-7.4010 Procedure

(a) The application. 18 U.S.C. 3122(a)(1) provides that any attorney for the government may apply for a pen register or trap and trace order or an extension of such an order under 18 U.S.C. 3123. The application must be in writing and under oath. It must identify the agency conducting the investigation and the person making the application and must contain a certification that the information likely to be obtained is relevant to an ongoing criminal investigation.

Please note that the standard for obtaining the order is relevancy to an ongoing criminal investigation, not probable cause or reasonable suspicion. This lesser standard reflects that while Congress wished to provide some protection against the random use of these devices, it recognized that an individual does not have a reasonable expectation of privacy in the numbers dialed to or from his telephone and, therefore, that the installation and use of a pen register or trap and trace device is not a "search" within the meaning of the Fourth Amendment requiring the protection of a warrant based upon probable cause. See, Smith v. Maryland, 442 U.S. at 743-44.

18 U.S.C. 3122(a)(2) provides that a state investigative or law enforcement officer may apply for a pen register or trap and trace order "[u]nless prohibited by State law." This phrase was included in the section to make it clear that the new law does not preempt any existing state laws governing the installation and use of pen registers and trap and trace devices by state officials. Thus, a state law requiring a higher standard of proof as a prerequisite to a pen register or trap and trace order will continue in effect with respect to that state's officials.

(b) The order. 18 U.S.C. 3122 provides that a pen register or trap and trace order may be issued by "a court of competent jurisdiction." The definition of court of competent jurisdiction includes any "district court of the United States (including a magistrate of such a court)." 18 U.S.C. 3126(2)(A). This definition, and, indeed this title, finally provides the magistrates with unquestioned authority to issue pen register and trap and trace orders. The problem prior to this provision was that although magistrates have authority under Rule 41 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure to authorize the use of pen registers, there are no statutes, rules, or reported case law indicating whether magistrates could issue the ancillary technical assistance orders, and the telephone companies have refused to honor such an order issued by a magistrate. It was therefore the Department's policy that pen register and trap and trace orders be obtained only from district court judges. As noted, the definition of "court of competent jurisdiction" in section 3126 now makes it clear that a magistrate may issue enforceable pen register and trap and trace orders. See 18 U.S.C. 3124.

18 U.S.C. 3123 sets forth the procedure that must be followed by the court in issuing a pen register or trap and trace order. The section contains four subsections as follows:

Subsection (a) states that upon an application the court shall issue an ex parte order authorizing the installation and use of a pen register or trap and trace device within the jurisdiction of the court if the court finds that the government attorney has certified that information likely to be obtained through the pen register or trap and trace is relevant to an ongoing criminal investigation. This provision does not authorize the court to conduct an independent judicial review of whether the application meets the relevance standard; it need only review the completeness of the attorney's certification. Accordingly, there will be no need for an affidavit to establish a factual basis; all that will be required is a sworn application containing the requisite certification and a draft order for the court to issue. This, too, comports with current practice.

Subsection (b) sets forth the contents of the pen register or trap and trace order. The order is required to specify (1) the identity, if known, of the person to whom is leased, or in whose name is listed, the telephone line to which the device is to be attached; (2) the identity, if known, of the person who is the subject of the criminal investigation; (3) the number and, if known, physical location of the telephone line to which the pen register or trap and trace is to be attached; and (4) a statement of the offense to which the information likely to be obtained by the device relates. In addition, the order is to direct, upon request, the furnishing of information, facilities and technical assistance necessary to accomplish the installation of the device from the service provider. The content of the order relating to cooperation is intended to codify the existing informal practice of cooperation between the telephone companies and the Department. The subsection on the required order contains largely the same requirements now imposed on federal prosecutors for a pen register order as set forth in the United States Attorneys' Manual. USAM 9-7.014, 9-7.925 and 9-7.926.

Subsection (c) provides that an order may authorize the use of a pen register or trap and trace device for a 60 day period, with possible extensions of 60 days. This is a doubling of the 30 day period now set out in the existing Department policy and should serve to limit the number of such repetitive orders.

Subsection (d) directs that the order be sealed until otherwise ordered by the court. This subsection also prohibits the disclosure of the existence of either the order or the underlying investigation to any unauthorized person unless or until otherwise ordered by the court. Violations of this provision will be punishable as a contempt of court.

(c) Technical assistance. 18 U.S.C. 3124 governs technical assistance orders. 18 U.S.C. 3124(a), which relates to pen register technical assistance orders, provides that upon the request of an authorized person a provider of a wire communication service, landlord, custodian, or other person shall furnish all the information, facilities, and technical assistance necessary to effectuate the order unobtrusively and with a minimum of interference. This is patterned on the same provision in 18 U.S.C. 2518 for assistance in the installation of a wiretap.

18 U.S.C. 3124(b) regulates technical assistance orders for trap and trace devices. The installation of these devices requires more in the way of telephone company assistance than does the installation of a pen register. Thus, this subsection states that the provider of a wire communication service, landlord, custodian, or other person shall install the trap and trace device on the appropriate line and provide all other necessary technical assistance. The subsection also requires that the third party furnish the results of the trap and trace device to the designated law enforcement agency at reasonable intervals during regular business hours for the duration of the order.

It should be noted that the telephone companies have requested, and the Department has agreed, that trap and trace technical assistance applications contain the following language that reflects the technical and business hour requirements unique to trap and trace orders:

- i. the tracing operation is to be limited to Electronic Switching System (ESS) or No. 5 cross-bar facilities;
- ii. the tracing operation is to be restricted to tracing and recording only those calls originating from a specific city within a certain mileage radius or, in the case of a large city, from a specific section or sections of that city; and
- iii. the tracing operation is to be restricted to certain specific hours daily.

This specific language is currently required by Department policy, and, although not included in the statute, Department policy will be to continue this practice until changing technology requires modification. USAM 9-7.927 and 7.928.

18 U.S.C. 3124(c) states that the persons providing technical assistance shall be reasonably compensated for reasonable expenses incurred in providing technical facilities and other assistance. This compensation provision is also modeled after the provision that applies in Chapter 119 of Title 18 concerning wiretap orders and is intended to be interpreted and implemented in a similar fashion.

18 U.S.C. 3124(d) provides that no cause of action shall lie against the provider of a wire or electronic communication service or its employees for providing technical assistance as required by a court order issued pursuant to this section.

Finally, 18 U.S.C. 3124(e) provides that a good faith reliance upon a court order or a legislative or statutory authorization is a complete defense to any civil or criminal action brought under this chapter or any other law.

9-7.4020 Pen Register and Trap and Trace Reports

18 U.S.C. 3125 requires the Attorney General to make an annual report to Congress on the number of pen register and trap and trace orders applied for by law enforcement agencies of the Department of Justice. Current Department policy already requires that the Department's agencies compile quarterly statistics concerning their pen register usage. (Memorandum of September 24, 1979, to investigative agencies from Philip B. Heymann, Assistant Attorney General, Criminal Division.) This section merely requires that this information be reformulated, with the added trap and trace data, and submitted to Congress. As there are relatively few trap and trace orders there should be little added burden caused by this reporting requirement.

The following is a new section:

9-7.5000 FORMS - THE ELECTRONIC COMMUNICATIONS PRIVACY ACT OF 1986

Listed below are a set of forms for use in obtaining court orders in electronic surveillance cases which replace a number of the forms currently set out in USAM 9-7.900.

1. Application and order seeking interception of a wire or oral communication pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §2518.

2. Application and order seeking interception of an electronic communication pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §2518.

3. Application and order seeking installation and use of a pen register pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §§3122-23.

4. Application and order seeking installation and use of a trap and trace device pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §3122-23.

5. Order directing assistance of a wire or electronic communication service provider in executing a court order for a wire, oral or electronic interception of communications.

Several points must be kept in mind in implementing the amended statute after its date of effect and in utilizing these forms. First, there has been little basic change in the forms for seeking a court order to intercept a wire or oral communication. The changes in these forms are basically to utilize new terminology set forth in the Act.

Second, the forms for interception of an electronic communication are new and, with one exception, immediate and widespread use of this new investigative tool is not expected although it is not discouraged. The exception concerns interception of digital display pagers sometimes called "clone" pagers. These are pagers in which an alpha-numeric message, usually a call back telephone number, appears on the display after the pager number is called and the message transmitted. Investigators have obtained duplicate or "clone" pagers used by suspects and have been receiving the same message on the clone pager that the suspect receives on his pager. We believe a number of clone pagers are currently being utilized by federal investigative agencies. Prior Department policy has required that a court order, based on probable cause, be obtained pursuant to Rule 41 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure for interception of such pager messages. After January 20, 1987, messages sent on such pagers will be considered as the sending of electronic communications and their interception will require an application and court order pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §2518. Unlike an ordinary wire or oral interception order, the statute does not require prior consent in Washington before an application for an electronic communication interception order can be submitted to the court. However, in order to obtain this reduced level of approval, the Department promised both Judiciary Committees of the Congress that Washington approval would informally be required for all interceptions of electronic communications for a period of three years. In order to live up to this promise, we must require that all applications for electronic communications, including those for clone pagers, be submitted to the Office of Enforcement Operations in the Criminal Division for prior review. The submission must include the draft application, order and affidavit. Efforts will be made to set up an expedited review process for clone pagers due to the limited nature of the information that will be intercepted. Nevertheless, we must insist on this procedure being followed in all cases.

Second, pen registers will require a court order by statute as opposed to a court order sought pursuant to the All Writs Act which is the current Department policy. The attached forms on pen registers (and trap and trace devices) contain all the requirements of the new statute. We do not believe that obtaining a pen register will be in any way more difficult than it is under current law. In this regard, please note that a pen register order can be sought for up to 60 days, that the application can be presented to a United States Magistrate, that no affidavit should be necessary, and that no prior Washington approval is required for pen registers or trap and trace device orders.

Third, any existing court order on January 20, 1987, for a wire or oral communication, pen register, or a clone pager remains valid until it expires under its terms. Only extensions or new orders filed after the effective date are covered by the new statute.

Fourth, the statute permits a form of interception called "roving interception." (See the December 15, 1986 analysis at pp. 10-12). This is potentially a very valuable new investigative tool. The Criminal Division intends to maintain close control over the initial orders in this area. We are currently drafting the appropriate forms and any office that believes it has a case that might effectively utilize this new procedure should contact the Office of Enforcement Operations.

Any questions on the new statute or the forms should be directed to the Office of Enforcement Operations in the Criminal Division at FTS: 633-3684 or 633-2869.

APPLICATION

_____, an attorney of the United States Department of Justice states:

A. Applicant is an "investigative or law enforcement officer of the United States" within the meaning of Section 2510(7) of Title 18, United States Code, that is, an attorney authorized by law to prosecute or participate in the prosecution of offenses enumerated in Section 2516 of Title 18, United States Code.

B. Pursuant to Section 2516 of Title 18, United States Code, the (Assistant) (Acting Assistant) (Deputy Assistant) Attorney General of the Criminal Division, United States Department of Justice, having been specially designated by the Attorney General pursuant to Order Number 1162-86 of December 12, 1986, has approved this application for an order authorizing the interception of (wire) (oral) communications. Attached to this application is a copy of Order Number 1162-86 of December 12, 1986, specially designating the above official to approve applications for court orders authorizing interception of wire or oral communications. Also attached is a copy of that official's memorandum of authorization, approving this application.

C. This application seeks authorization to intercept (wire) (oral) communications of _____ and others as yet unknown concerning offenses enumerated in Section 2516 of Title 18, United States Code, that is, offenses involving (characterize offenses) which have been committed and are being committed by _____ and others as yet unknown.

D. Applicant has discussed all the circumstances of the above offenses with Special Agent _____ of the _____ who has directed and conducted the investigation herein, and has examined the affidavit of Special Agent _____ attached to this application as Exhibit__ and incorporated by reference herein which alleges facts to show that:

1. There is probable cause to believe that _____ and others as yet unknown have committed and are committing offenses involving (characterize offenses);

2. There is probable cause to believe that particular (wire) (oral) communications of _____ and others as yet unknown concerning these offenses will be obtained through the interception for which authorization is herewith applied. In particular, these (wire) (oral) communications will concern the (characterize offenses.) In addition, the communications are expected to constitute admissible evidence of the commission of the offenses;

3. The attached affidavit contains a full and complete statement explaining why normal investigative procedures have been tried and failed, reasonably appear unlikely to succeed if continued, reasonably appear unlikely to succeed if tried, or are too dangerous;

4. There is probable cause to believe that the (telephone(s) subscribed to by _____, located at _____ and carrying telephone number(s) _____) (premises located at _____) (has) (have) been used and (is) (are) being used by _____ and others as yet unknown in connection with the commission of the above-described offenses.

E. (No previous application to any judge for authorization to intercept, or for approval of interception of, wire or oral communications involving any of the same persons, facilities, or places specified in this application are known to the individual authorizing and/or making this application.) (The following is)

(The attached affidavit contains) (a full and complete statement of the facts concerning all previous applications known to the individual(s) authorizing and making this application made to any judge for authorization to intercept, or for approval of interceptions, of wire, oral, or electronic communications involving any of the same persons, facilities, or places specified in this application, and the action taken by the judge on each application).

WHEREFORE, your affiant believes that probable cause exists to believe that _____ and others as yet unknown are engaged in the commission of offenses involving (characterize offenses); that _____ and others as yet unknown have used, and are using, the (telephone(s) subscribed to by _____, located at _____ and bearing number(s) _____) (premises located at _____) in connection with the commission of the above-described offenses; that (wire) (oral) communications of _____ and others as yet unknown concerning these offenses will be intercepted (to and from the above-described telephone(s)) (at the above described locations); and that normal investigative procedures appear unlikely to succeed.

On the basis of the allegations contained in this application and on the basis of the affidavit of Special Agent _____, attached hereto, the applicant requests this court to issue an order pursuant to the power conferred on it by Section 2518 of Title 18, United States Code, authorizing the (investigative agency) to intercept (wire) (oral) communications (to and from the above described telephone(s)) (at the above described location) until communications are intercepted that reveal the manner in which _____ and others as yet unknown participate in the specified offenses and that reveal the identities of (his) (her) (their) coconspirators, their places of operation, and the nature of the conspiracy involved therein, or for a period of (not to exceed 30) days, whichever is earlier; pursuant to Section 2518(5) of Title 18, United States Code, the applicant requests that the time set forth in the order run from the earlier of the day on which the investigative or law enforcement officer first begins to conduct the interception or ten days from the date of this order.

(It is further requested that the order authorize surreptitious entry of the premises for the purpose of installing, maintaining and removing any electronic oral interception devices utilized pursuant to the authority granted by this order.)

(It is further requested that this court issue an order pursuant to Section 2518(4) of Title 18, United States Code, directing that the (name of wire communication service provider, landlord, custodian, or other person) shall furnish the applicant forthwith all information, facilities and technical assistance necessary to accomplish the interception unobtrusively and with a minimum of interference with the services that such service provider, landlord, custodian, or other person is according the person whose communications are to be intercepted; the service provider, landlord, custodian, or other person furnishing such facilities or technical assistance shall be compensated by the applicant for reasonable expenses incurred in providing such facilities or assistance.

I declare under penalty of perjury that the foregoing is true and correct.

ORDER

AUTHORIZING INTERCEPTION OF (WIRE) (ORAL) COMMUNICATIONS

Application under oath having been made before me by _____ _____, an "investigative or law enforcement officer" as defined in Section 2510 of Title 18, United States Code, for an order authorizing the interception of (wire) (oral) communications pursuant to Section 2518 of Title 18, United States Code, and full consideration having been given to the matters set forth therein, the court finds:

A. There is probable cause to believe that _____ and others as yet unknown have committed and are committing offenses involving (characterize offenses).

B. There is probable cause to believe that particular (wire) (oral) communications concerning these offenses will be obtained through the interception for which authorization is herewith applied. In particular, these (wire) (oral) communications will concern the (characterize offenses).

C. Normal investigative procedures have been tried and failed, reasonably appear unlikely to succeed if continued, reasonably appear unlikely to succeed if tried, or are too dangerous.

D. There is probable cause to believe that (the telephone(s) subscribed to by _____, located at _____ and carrying number(s) _____) (premises located at _____) (has) (have) been and (is) (are) being used by _____ and others as yet unknown in connection with the commission of the above-stated offenses.

WHEREFORE, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that the (investigative agency) is authorized, pursuant to an application authorized by an appropriate official of the Criminal Division, United States Department of Justice, pursuant to the power delegated to that official by special designation of the Attorney General under the authority vested in him by Section 2516 of Title 18, United States Code: to intercept (wire) (oral) communications of _____ and others as yet unknown concerning the above-described offenses (to and from the telephone(s) subscribed to by _____ and bearing telephone number(s) _____) (from the premises located at _____). Such interception shall not automatically terminate when the type of communications described above in paragraph (B) have first been obtained but shall continue until communications are intercepted that reveal the manner in which _____ and others as yet unknown participate in the specified offenses and that reveal the identities of (his) (her) (their) coconspirators, their places of operation, and the nature of the conspiracy involved therein, or for a period of (not to exceed 30) days, whichever is earlier; pursuant to Section 2518(5) of Title 18, United States Code, the time set forth in the order shall run from the earlier of the day on which the investigative or law enforcement officer first begins to conduct the interception or ten days from the date of this order.

(It is further ordered that special agents of the (investigative agency) are authorized to enter the foregoing premises surreptitiously for the purposes of installing, maintaining, and removing any electronic oral interception devices utilized pursuant to the authority granted by this order.)

PROVIDING THAT, this authorization to intercept (wire) (oral) communications shall be executed as soon as practicable after the signing of this order and shall be conducted in such a way as to minimize the interception of communications not otherwise subject to interception under Chapter 119 of Title 18 of the United States Code, and must terminate upon attainment of the authorized objective or, in any event, at the end of (not to exceed 30) days measured from the earlier of the day on which the investigative or law enforcement officer first begins to conduct the interception or ten days from the date of this order.

PROVIDING ALSO, that (applicant) shall provide the court with a report on or about (such intervals as the court may require) days following the date of this order showing what progress has been made toward achievement of the authorized objective and the need for continued interception.

device(s) is relevant to the ongoing criminal investigation in that it is believed that this information will concern the aforementioned offenses.

3. Applicant requests that the court issue an order authorizing the installation and use of a trap and trace device to capture the incoming electronic or other impulses which identify the originating number of a wire or electronic communication and the date, time and duration of such incoming impulses for a period of (not to exceed 60) days.

4. The applicant further requests that the order direct the furnishing of information, facilities, and technical assistance necessary to accomplish the installation of the trap and trace device including installation and operation of the device, unobtrusively and with a minimum of disruption of normal telephone service. The wire communications service provider shall be compensated by the applicant for reasonable expenses incurred in providing such facilities and technical assistance.

5. The applicant further requests that the order direct that the results of the trap and trace device shall be furnished to Special Agents of the (investigative agency) at reasonable intervals during regular business hours for the duration of the order.

6. The applicant further requests that the court order direct (wire or electronic communications service provider), its agents and employees not to disclose to the subscriber, or any other person, the existence of this order or of this investigation unless otherwise ordered by court.

7. The applicant further requests that the court order be limited in the following respects:

(a) the tracing operation shall be limited to Electronic Switching System (ESS) or No. 5 cross-bar switching facilities; and

(b) the tracing operation shall be restricted to tracing and recording only those calls originating from (geographical area).

WHEREFORE, it is respectfully requested that the court grant an order for (not to exceed 60) days (1) authorizing the installation and use of a trap and trace device(s) to identify incoming calls on telephone number(s) _____, (2) directing the (wire or electronic communications provider) to forthwith furnish agents of the (investigative agency) with all information, facilities and technical assistance necessary to accomplish the installation of the trap and trace device(s), including installation and operation of the device(s), unobtrusively and with minimum interference to the service

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-8.000 JUVENILES: YOUTH CORRECTIONS ACT

9-8.010 Armed Forces Enlistment as an Alternative to Federal Prosecution

Present regulations of the Armed Services prohibit the enlistment or induction of an individual against whom criminal or juvenile charges are pending or against whom the charges have been dismissed to facilitate the individual's enlistment or induction. This policy is based, in part, on the premise that the individual who enlists or volunteers for induction under such conditions is not properly motivated to become an effective member of the Armed Forces.

Determination as to whether prosecution should be instituted or pending criminal charges dismissed in any case should be made on the basis of whether the public interest would thereby best be served and without reference to possible military service on the part of the subject. The Armed Forces are not to be regarded as correctional institutions and U.S. Attorneys are urged to give full cooperation to the Department of Defense in the latter's efforts to ensure a highly motivated all-volunteer Armed Forces and to bolster public confidence in military service as a thoroughly respectable and honorable profession.

There may be exceptional cases in which imminent military service, together with other factors, may be considered in deciding to decline prosecution if the offense is trivial or insubstantial, the offender is generally of good character, has no record or habits of anti-social behavior and does not require rehabilitation through existing criminal institutional methods and failure to prosecute will not seriously impair observance of the law in question or respect for law generally. In no case however, should the U.S. Attorney be a party to, or encourage, an agreement respecting criminal prosecution in exchange for enlistment or induction into the Armed Services.

9-8.100 JUVENILES

A "juvenile" for purposes of 18 U.S.C. Chapter 403 (18 U.S.C. §§5031 - 5042) is a person who has not attained his/her eighteenth birthday, or for the purpose of proceedings and disposition under that chapter for an alleged act of juvenile delinquency, a person who has not attained his/her twenty-first birthday. "Juvenile delinquency" is the violation of a law of the United States committed by a person prior to his/her eighteenth birthday which would have been a crime if committed by an adult.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act of 1974 was signed into law on September 7, 1974, and was amended by the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984. On October 16, 1974, the Attorney General pursuant to Order No. 579.74 (28 C.F.R. §0.57) authorized the Assistant Attorney General, Criminal Division to exercise the power and authority vested in the Attorney General by 18 U.S.C. §§5032, 5036. By a criminal division memorandum dated March 12, 1985, to all U.S. Attorneys effective October 12, 1984, the authority to prosecute juveniles for acts of juvenile delinquency (including proceeding by information) and the power to certify under 18 U.S.C. §5032 were redelegated to all U.S. Attorneys. It should be noted that prior approval from the General Litigation and Legal Advice Section of the Criminal Division is requested before filing a motion to transfer. See 9-8.130, infra.

9-8.110 Certification

With one limited exception (see USAM 9-8.111, infra), under 18 U.S.C. §5032, a juvenile cannot be proceeded against in any court of the United States unless the Attorney General, after investigation, certifies to the appropriate United States District Court that (1) the juvenile court or other appropriate state court does not have jurisdiction or refuses to assume jurisdiction over the juvenile with respect to the alleged act of juvenile delinquency; (2) the state does not have available programs and services adequate for the needs of juveniles; or (3) the offense charged is a violent felony or an offense described in 21 U.S.C. §§841, 952(a), 955 or 95, and there is a substantial federal interest that justifies the exercise of federal jurisdiction.

The authority to proceed with this certification in those cases where it is deemed appropriate has been delegated to U.S. Attorneys. This was effected by Attorney General Order No. 579-74 (28 C.F.R. §0.57) and a memorandum to all U.S. Attorneys dated March 12, 1985.

Before the certification can be made, an investigation must take place. To satisfy this requirement the following steps should be taken:

A. Cases of Exclusive U.S. Jurisdiction - The U.S. Attorney should, at a minimum, research the appropriate law and statutory provisions which apply to that case. It may be advisable to contact the appropriate local prosecutor and obtain his/her concurrence in such finding of exclusivity of jurisdiction.

B. Cases of Concurrent Jurisdiction - The appropriate local prosecutor should be contacted and the facts of the case discussed with him/her. A determination should be made as to whether he/she is accepting or refusing prosecutorial responsibilities in the matter. It is strongly urged that, when the local prosecutor refuses to assume jurisdiction over the juvenile, you receive a letter from him/her to this effect and append it to the certification filed with court.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

C. Adequacy of State Juvenile Programs and Services - The U.S. Attorney should request the Chief Probation Officer in his/her judicial corrections system to conduct an investigation into the state juvenile corrections system in that district to determine whether there are available programs and services adequate for the needs of juveniles. Such studies should be made on a periodic basis to reflect any possible changes brought about by state juvenile authorities. We strongly urge that when you utilize this procedure you obtain a statement from the probation officer, outlining the basis for his/her findings, and append this to the certification.

D. Violent Felony and Substantial Federal Interest - The Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984 added this category permitting the disposition of a case involving a juvenile charged with a serious felony by means of a federal proceeding. If the crime charged is a felony crime of violence or a serious drug offense as described in 21 U.S.C. §§841, 952(a), 955 or 959, and there is a "substantial Federal interest in the case or offense to warrant the exercise of Federal jurisdiction," it may be certified for federal prosecution.

This provision is limited to serious violent felonies and drug offenses so that the federal government will continue to defer to state authorities for less serious juvenile offenses. See S. Rep. No. 225, 98th Cong., 1st Sess. 389 (1983). Congress clearly intended that the determination of a "substantial Federal interest" be based on a finding that the nature of the offense or the circumstances of the case give rise to special federal concerns. Id. Examples would include assault on, or assassination of a federal official; aircraft hijacking; interstate kidnaping; major espionage or sabotage activity; large-scale drug trafficking; or significant or willful destruction of United States property.

If, after investigation, any one of the above factors are found to exist, the U.S. Attorney shall proceed with the certification. The certification must specifically set out the kind of investigation made and, as a result of the investigation, which of the factors allowing federal jurisdiction was found to exist.

Since it is possible that a successful attack on the certification may be based on the U.S. Attorney's abuse of discretion in this area, the criteria outlined above should be adhered to as closely as possible when utilizing the certification provisions of the Act.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-8.111 Exception to Certification

The certification requirement does not apply to violations of law committed within the special maritime and territorial jurisdiction of the United States for which the maximum authorized term of imprisonment does not exceed six months. Most of these cases involve petty offenses committed on government land where summary disposition is in everyone's best interest. See S. Rep. No. 225, 98th Cong., 1st Sess. 388 (1983). In such a case, regular adult procedures may be followed.

9-8.120 Filing of the Complaint

Paragraph one of 18 U.S.C. §5032 states:

A juvenile alleged to have committed an act of juvenile delinquency, other than a violation of law committed within the special maritime and territorial jurisdiction of the United States for which the maximum authorized term of imprisonment does not exceed six months, shall not be proceeded against in any court of the United States unless . . . [the certification procedure is followed].

The proceedings referred to are properly interpreted as either the filing of the information which initiates juvenile adjudication action or in those cases where it is warranted, the commencement of criminal prosecution which is begun by motion to transfer. It is only at the point where the United States has decided it will not surrender the juvenile to the state, but will proceed against him/her in federal court, that the certification is required in cases not falling within the limited exception.

In other words, the Department does not interpret 18 U.S.C. §5032 as requiring certification prior to the filing of a complaint and issuance of an arrest warrant. That part of 18 U.S.C. §5032 which states "[i]f the Attorney General does not so certify, such juvenile shall be surrendered to the appropriate legal authorities of such state" (emphasis added) necessarily implies that an arrest procedure has been completed. Upon a juvenile's arrest, the U.S. Attorney should move as expeditiously as possible to make the determination as to whether he/she is to be turned over to state authorities or whether there is a substantial basis to file a certification invoking federal jurisdiction.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Nor should certification be required in cases where a juvenile is brought before a magistrate for a Federal Rules of Criminal Procedures, Rule 40, removal hearing. The U.S. Attorney in the district where the removal hearing is being held should set out the government's position based on the Department's interpretation of 18 U.S.C. §5032 as indicated above. He/she should also urge that the U.S. Attorney in the district where the crime was committed or the complaint was filed is the only party who can make the proper determination concerning the appropriate forum for the handling of the case (i.e., only he/she can determine whether one of the factors necessary for certification exists or whether the case should be turned over to state authorities).

It must be emphasized that the major thrust of the Act is to insure greater participation by the states in the handling of juvenile criminal matters. Accordingly, the U.S. Attorney should make every effort to funnel cases to state authorities where it has been determined that there is no exclusive federal jurisdiction.

9-8.130 Motion to Transfer

18 U.S.C. §5032 provides several avenues for adult prosecution of a juvenile. The first is where he/she has requested in writing, upon advice of counsel, to be proceeded against as an adult. The other procedure involves the filing of a "motion of transfer" in cases involving juveniles who have committed a crime of violence or a serious drug offense (as defined in 18 U.S.C. §5032) after their fifteenth birthday. In the latter case, after filing of the motion to transfer (Motion to Proceed Against the Juvenile as an Adult) in the United States District Court, the court must conduct a hearing to determine whether such prosecution would be in the interest of justice. In making this determination, the court must consider the criteria set out in 18 U.S.C. §5032. In doing so it must receive evidence on each of the factors set out and make findings in the record with regard to each of those factors. In the case of repeat offenders see USAM 9-8.131, infra.

To maintain uniformity in those cases where adult prosecution is desired, U.S. Attorneys must forward a request to so proceed to the Department. Such requests should be forwarded only in those cases where, after a careful study of the facts, the U.S. Attorney feels the criteria set out in the statute can be met. The request must set out the facts on the case in detail; state that, after study, it has been determined that the criteria can be met; and give the reasons for the U.S. Attorney's desire to proceed against the juvenile as an adult in the particular case. The request for authority to proceed by motion to transfer should be referred to the Chief of the General Litigation and Legal Advice Section of the Criminal Division. Upon the granting of such request, the U.S. Attorney shall file the motion to transfer.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-8.131 Repeat Offenders

Where a juvenile of sixteen years of age or older is charged with a serious crime involving violence against persons or a particularly dangerous crime involving destruction of property (as defined in 18 U.S.C. §5032) and he/she has been previously found guilty of such a serious offense, this fact alone should serve as adequate justification for federal prosecution of the juvenile. Therefore, in such cases involving repeat offenders who have prior records of similar, serious offenses, transfer of the case for prosecution upon motion of the government seems to be mandatory.

Juvenile adjudications are not generally considered findings of guilt or innocence. The fact that no proceedings against a juvenile may be commenced until prior juvenile records are received by the court, however, supports the argument that juvenile records may be used in determining whether the juvenile is a repeat offender. Moreover, the wording of the statute dictates that a juvenile offender "who has previously been found guilty of an act which if committed by an adult would have been one of the offenses set forth in this subsection or an offense in violation of a state felony statute which would have been such an offense if a circumstance giving rise to federal jurisdiction had existed, shall be transferred to the appropriate district court . . . for [federal] criminal prosecution." (Emphasis added.) This wording supports the Department's argument in favor of considering prior juvenile adjudications, for it makes federal prosecution mandatory where there is a prior record of this type. See S. Rep. No. 225, 98th Cong., 1st Sess. 391-392 (1983).

9-8.132 Conviction on Lesser Charges

If a juvenile is transferred for prosecution and is convicted of a lesser charge which could not have supported the transfer, then the disposition of the juvenile is to proceed in the same manner as if he/she had been adjudicated delinquent rather than criminally convicted. If a juvenile is convicted of a charge that could not have supported the original transfer of his/her case, he/she should not be held to the consequences of criminal conviction but rather should be treated as though he/she had been adjudicated delinquent.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-8.133 Prior Juvenile Records

Proceedings against a juvenile are not to commence until any prior juvenile court records of the juvenile have been received by the court, or the clerk of the court certifies that the juvenile has no prior record or that the records are unavailable and explains why. These requirements are to be understood in the context of a standard of reasonableness. See S. Rep. No. 225, 98th Cong., 1st Sess. 391 (1983).

9-8.140 Prosecutorial Discretion

The Act does not change the long-established rule that prosecutors have discretion to forego certain prosecutions in the interest of justice. Where a state treats its juveniles as adults or has poor programs and services there is still no affirmative requirement to prosecute. Courts have uniformly held that U.S. Attorneys were not stripped of their normal prosecutorial discretion even when statutes "required" prosecution. See Inmates of Attica v. Rockefeller, 477 F.2d 375 (2d Cir. 1973).

Similarly, selective prosecution is not a denial of equal prosecution unless the selection is based on an unjustifiable standard such as race or religion. See United States v. Goodwin, 457 U.S. 368, 380 n.11 (1982); Bordenkircher v. Hayes, 434 U.S. 357, 364 (1978); Oyler v. Boles, 368 U.S. 448, 456 (1962). U.S. Attorneys should continue to exercise their discretion in a manner consistent with the best interests of society and the criminal justice system.

The use of any pre-trial diversion program, including the "Brooklyn Plan," for juveniles is inappropriate unless the certification requirements of the Act have been met and the pre-trial diversion guidelines set out by the Department have been complied with. (See USAM 1-12.010.)

9-8.150 Jury Trials

Some confusion about this issue has arisen as a result of a memorandum to federal judges, magistrates, etc., from the Administrative Office of the United States Courts stating that the statutory prohibition against jury trial in juvenile proceedings has been deleted. That is true. However, it is the view of the Department that the Act does not require jury trials and the jury trials shall be opposed.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

There is no constitutional requirement of a jury trial in a state juvenile proceeding. See McKiever v. Pennsylvania, 403 U.S. 528 (1971). This rule has been extended to federal juvenile proceedings. See United States v. Cuomo, 525 F.2d 1285 (5th Cir. 1976); Cotton v. United States, 446 F.2d 107 (7th Cir. 1971); United States v. Salcido-Medina, 483 F.2d 162 (9th Cir. 1973); United States v. James, 464 F.2d 1228 (9th Cir. 1972); United States v. John Doe, 385 F. Supp. 902 (D. Ariz. 1974). If this rule is to be changed, it should be by clear and explicit provisions in the Act showing that Congress intended to change the settled case law. See Callanan v. United States, 364 U.S. 587, 594-595 (1961); Toilet Goods v. Finch, 419 F.2d 21, 27 (2d Cir. 1969). This rule of statutory construction applies with special force where, as here, the statute does explicitly provide for other constitutional rights normally associated with the trial of "crimes" including the right to counsel, see 18 U.S.C. §§5032, 5034 and 5037, and the right to a speedy trial, see 18 U.S.C. §5036.

The legislative history of the Act indicates that the statutory prohibition was deleted not to change the law but to allow the courts to decide on a constitutional ground whether a jury trial is required. Every Court of Appeals that has considered this issue has held that there is not a constitutional right to a jury trial in a federal juvenile delinquency proceeding. For a summary of decisions, see United States v. Cuomo, supra.

9-8.160 Notification

U.S. Attorneys should insure that the law enforcement officers in their judicial district are made aware of the requirements of 18 U.S.C. §5033. In addition to the requirement that the juvenile be advised of his/her constitutional rights in language comprehensive to the juvenile, the arresting officers must also notify the Attorney General (notice to U.S. Attorney will suffice), and the juvenile's parents, guardian, or custodian of such custody. The arresting officer must also notify the parents, guardian, or custodian of the rights of the juvenile and of the nature of the alleged offense.

9-8.170 Detention

U.S. Attorneys must insure that the juvenile is detained in a proper facility in accordance with 18 U.S.C. §5035. Note that the juvenile alleged to be a delinquent should not be detained or confined in any institution in which the juvenile has regular contact with adult persons convicted of a crime or awaiting trial on criminal charges.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-8.180 Information Concerning Juveniles

Subsections (a) through (c) of 18 U.S.C. §5038 guard against improper disclosure of juvenile records.

Subsection (d) provides for the fingerprinting and photographing not only of juveniles prosecuted as adults but also of juveniles adjudicated delinquent with respect to offenses that are felonies involving violence or serious drug crimes. Fingerprints and photographs of juveniles not prosecuted as adults may be made available only in accordance with the provisions of 18 U.S.C. §5038(a).

Subsection (e) prohibits the publication of the name or picture of any juvenile in connection with a juvenile delinquent proceeding. While this does not prohibit the publication of information obtained legitimately by the media, it does bar the release of such information by court or government officials.

Subsection (f) directs the transmission to the Federal Bureau of Investigation of all information concerning adjudications which relate to a juvenile who has on two separate occasions been found guilty of committing an act which, if committed by an adult, would be a felony involving violence or an offense described in 21 U.S.C. §§841, 925(a), 955 or 958.

9-8.200 YOUTH CORRECTIONS ACT

The purpose of the Act is to provide a more flexible method of sentencing convicted youth offenders in order to secure corrective treatment and release under supervision. The court may invoke the alternative sentencing provisions of the Federal Youth Correction Act (18 U.S.C. §§5005-5026) if:

A. The defendant has been convicted of a criminal offense, whether a felony or misdemeanor or petty offense, under regular adult procedure; and

B. At the time of conviction the defendant was under 22 years of age (Youth Offender), or

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

C. At the time of conviction he/she has attained his/her 22nd birthday but has not attained his/her 26th birthday, and the court finds, after consideration of the defendant's previous record of delinquency or crime, his/her social background, capabilities, health, and other factors, that there is reasonable ground to believe that he/she will benefit from treatment under the Act, 18 U.S.C. §4206 (Young Adult Offender).

For purposes of determining whether a defendant qualifies as a "youth offender" the time of conviction has been held to be the time the verdict is returned or a plea of guilty is taken. See United States v. Branich, 495 F.2d 1066 (D.C. Cir. 1974) rather than the time of the judgment on the verdict. See 18 U.S.C. §5006(e), (h).

If the above requirements are met and the court in its discretion decides to proceed under the provisions of the Youth Corrections Act, the court is vested with authority as set forth below.

9-8.210 Probation - Youth Offender

If the court is of the opinion that the youth offender does not need commitment, it may suspend the imposition or execution of sentence and place the youth offender on probation (18 U.S.C. §5010(a)). Expungement of the conviction of a youth offender placed on probation under 18 U.S.C. §5010(a) occurs when the court has exercised its discretion to discharge the youth unconditionally prior to expiration of his/her probationary period, but does not occur merely upon his/her successful completion of probation. Tuten v. United States, 103 S. Ct 1412 (1983).

A. Indeterminate Sentence Not Exceeding 6 Years. The court may commit the youth offender to the custody of the Attorney General for treatment and supervision until discharged by the Youth Correction Division of the Board of Parole, 18 U.S.C. §5010(b). A youth offender may be given an indeterminate sentence under 18 U.S.C. §5010(b) irrespective of the maximum term of imprisonment otherwise provided by law for the offense of which he/she has been convicted. However, where the youth offender enters a plea of guilty to a crime for which the maximum penalty is less than the maximum under the indeterminate sentencing of the Youth Act, it is essential that he/she understand, at the time of his/her plea, the alternative sentencing provisions of the Youth Act. When he/she appears for sentencing, if there appears doubt that he/she was aware of such provisions at the time of his/her plea, he/she should be permitted to withdraw his/her plea, if he/she so elects.

B. Indeterminate Sentence Exceeding 6 Years. If the aggregate punishment otherwise provided by law for the offense or offenses of which the youth offender has been convicted exceeds 6 years, and if the court finds that the youth offender may not be able to derive maximum benefit from treatment by the Youth Correction Division of the Board of Parole prior to the expiration of 6 years from the date of conviction, the court may, in lieu of the penalty of imprisonment otherwise provided by law, sentence the youth offender to the custody of the Attorney General for treatment and supervision of any further period that may be authorized by law for the offense or offenses of which he/she stands convicted or until discharged by the Youth Correction Division, 18 U.S.C. §5010(c). Such a sentence extends the permissible period of treatment and supervision for such additional time in excess of 6 years as the sentencing court has fixed.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

C. Commitment for Observation and Study. If the court desires additional information as to whether a youth offender will derive benefit from treatment under 18 U.S.C. §5010(b), (c), it may order his/her commitment to the custody of the Attorney General for observation and study at an appropriate classification center or agency. See 18 U.S.C. §5010(e). The law provides that within 60 days from the date of such order, or within such additional period as the court may grant, the Youth Correction Division must report its finding to the court.

D. Split Sentences. The Ninth Circuit holds that the Youth Corrections Act permits the court to sentence youth offenders to "split sentences" consisting of periods of confinement and probation. See United States v. Roberts, 638 F.2d 1344 (9th Cir. 1981); United States v. Smith, 645 F.2d 747 (9th Cir. 1981). (It should be noted that the Department disagrees with this interpretation).

9-8.220 Commitment Without Regard to the Act

If the court finds that the youth offender will not benefit from treatment under 18 U.S.C. §5010(b), (c), the court may then sentence him/her under any other applicable penalty provision of law. See 18 U.S.C. §5010(d). However, before the court may impose an adult sentence on an individual who is eligible for sentencing under the Youth Corrections Act an explicit finding that the offender will "not benefit" from such treatment must be made on the record by the sentencing court. See Dorszynski v. United States, 418 U.S. 424 (1974). Retroactive application of the rule set out in Dorszynski should be opposed by all U.S. Attorneys. See Jackson v. United States, 510 F.2d 1335 (10th Cir. 1975); Owens v. United States, 515 F.2d 507 (3d Cir. 1975), summarily affirming Owens v. United States, 383 F. Supp. 780 (M.D. Pa. 1974). All

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

U.S. Attorneys should also insure that defendants are fully advised before plea and sentence as to the maximum sentence they may receive under the Youth Corrections Act. See Fed. R. Crim. P. 11. An existing Youth Corrections Act sentence may be modified to an adult sentence by the imposition of a federal concurrent or consecutive adult sentence. In such cases, the subsequent sentencing court should make an explicit finding that the offender would not benefit further from youth treatment during the remainder of his/her YCA term. See Ralston v. Robinson, 454 U.S. 201 (1981). In cases where the subsequent adult conviction and sentence is in state court, it is necessary for the original sentencing court to make a specific "no further benefit" finding in order to modify the YCA sentence to adult treatment. See King v. Kennedy, 671 F.2d 1053 (7th Cir. 1982).

9-8.230 Juvenile Delinquents Not Committable as Youth Offenders

A juvenile who has been processed under the Juvenile Delinquency Act and found by the court to be a juvenile delinquent, but not convicted under regular criminal procedure, may not be committed under the provisions of the Youth Corrections Act. See 18 U.S.C. §5037 (Juvenile Delinquency Act), 18 U.S.C. §5006, particularly (e) and (h); and §5032(b).

9-8.240 Release of Committed Youth Offenders

A committed youth offender may be released conditionally under supervision by the Youth Division at any time, 18 U.S.C. §5017(a). The offender may be discharged unconditionally upon expiration of 1 year from the date of conditional release. See 18 U.S.C. §5017(b). Youth offenders committed under 18 U.S.C. §§5010(b) or 5010(c) must be released conditionally under supervision not later than 2 years before expiration of their respective maximum terms. The maximum term under 18 U.S.C. §5010(b) is set by the statute at 6 years; under 18 U.S.C. §5010(c) the court fixes the maximum term. 18 U.S.C. §§5017(c), 5017(d).

9-8.250 Youth Corrections Act

Although most of the Sentencing Reform Act has a substantially delayed effective date, the Youth Corrections Act was repealed on October 12, 1984. This repeal also had the effect, as intended, of nullifying the Young Adult Offenders Act, former 18 U.S.C. §4216.

Because of ex post facto and other policy considerations, however, the Department takes the position that the repeal of these statutes is applicable only as to offenses committed after October 12, 1984. See generally, Weaver v. Graham, 450 U.S. 24 (1981). Nevertheless, although the statute may still be available for application in such cases if judges should choose to use them, attorneys for the government should argue in individual cases that judges should not exercise their discretion to impose a Youth Corrections Act sentence and should find that the defendant will not benefit from its provision. See 18 U.S.C. §5010(c) and Dorszynski v. United States, 418 U.S. 424 (1974). As the legislative history behind the repeal of the Youth Corrections Act shows, there are only a few youth facilities in the country, with the result that the youngest federal prisoners, those who may most need to retain family ties, are often the furthest from home of any federal offenders. As the statute is phased out, fewer and fewer offenders will be in the remaining facilities, so that there will be fewer programs and less reason to suppose that a youthful offender will receive any benefit from being sentenced under the Youth Corrections Act.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-9.000 MENTAL COMPETENCY OF AN ACCUSED

The conviction of a defendant while he/she is mentally incompetent violates due process. Pate v. Robinson, 383 U.S. 375, 379 (1966). 18 U.S.C. §§4244-4248 prescribe the procedure required when the mental competency of the defendant at the time of trial (or at the time of a guilty plea) comes under suspicion before trial or after commitment under sentence, and also when mental competency is present on expiration of sentence. See generally, C. Wright, Federal Practice and Procedure, Criminal 2d §196. See also USAM 3-3.000 (Psychiatric Examinations in Criminal Cases).

The separate question of insanity or incompetence at the time of the offense as a defense to criminal charges is discussed at USAM 9-18.200 et seq.

9-9.100 EXAMINATION BEFORE TRIAL

9-9.110 When An Examination is Necessary

18 U.S.C. §4244 requires the U.S. Attorney to file a motion for judicial determination of the mental competency of a person charged with violation of federal law if he/she has reasonable cause to believe that the mental condition of the defendant may render him/her unable to understand the charges against him/her or properly assist in his/her defense. See Dusky v. United States, 362 U.S. 402 (1960). Such motion may also be filed on behalf of the accused or the court may act on its own motion.

It has been held that the initial motion for a 18 U.S.C. §4244 examination cannot be denied unless the motion fails to set forth reasonable cause for belief that the defendant is incompetent, or unless it is determined that the motion is frivolous or not made in good faith. The degree of discretion allowed the district judge in this determination varies among the circuits. Compare United States v. Metcalf, 698 F.2d 877 (7th Cir. 1983) with Chavez v. United States, 656 F.2d 512 (9th Cir. 1981). The district court is allowed greater discretion in denying subsequent motions. Chavez v. United States, supra, at 517.

9-9.120 Procedure For Examination and Report

It is urged that examinations be made by private psychiatrists or on an outpatient basis at a hospital or clinic. See USAM 3-3.310. It is the responsibility of the U.S. Attorney to determine the availability of board-certified psychiatrists and to maintain a panel from which selections may be made. If it should be found necessary, the court may order the accused committed to a private hospital for examination but such commitments should be avoided where possible. Only in exceptional circumstances, such as the absence of other facilities or where long term commitment or examinations under adequate security conditions is necessary, should defendants be placed in federal custody for such examination.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

Whenever the accused is referred for examination, it is imperative that the U.S. Attorney forward to the examining doctor a summary letter setting forth a full exposition concerning the alleged crime together with all background information on the accused, including his/her history of criminal convictions and any prior history of mental illness.

9-9.130 Use of Local Psychiatrists Wherever Possible

With regard to the original mental examination it is of the utmost importance that the services of local, or the nearest available, qualified psychiatrists be utilized as far as possible. If satisfactory examination cannot be secured in the area, the Bureau of Prisons will offer suggestions upon request. When commitment is ordered for the conduct of the examination, the use of the nearest hospital or other facility acceptable to the court is recommended. Commitment to the Bureau of Prisons (Springfield, Missouri; Butner, North Carolina; and Lexington, Kentucky—females) should not routinely be ordered for the initial examination and report under 18 U.S.C. §4244, because the facilities and resources of the available institutions are continually overtaxed. Bureau of Prisons' facilities should be utilized where a secure facility is indicated and when the court is willing to commit the accused to such a facility for an extended period of time (i.e., 60 to 90 days). See USAM 3-3.310. If, at the time of commitment to a Bureau of Prisons' facility, it appears that medical or psychiatric treatment may be required, the court should be asked to indicate in the commitment order its directives regarding treatment, including the use of antipsychotic medication.

9-9.140 Order for Examination

The order should specify the specific purpose of the examination, i.e., mental competency to stand trial, rather than merely citing 18 U.S.C. §4244. See USAM 3-3.301, 3-3.303. The order for examination may also specifically direct that an examiner render an opinion as to the accused's mental responsibility at the time of the alleged offense, under the framework of the responsibility tests applicable in the trial district. See Fed. R. Crim. P. 12.2; United States v. Reason, 549 F.2d 309, 312 (4th Cir. 1977); United States v. Reifsteck, 535 F.2d 1030 (8th Cir. 1976); see also United States v. Dysart, 705 F.2d 1247 (10th Cir. 1983). Local examination is highly desirable for "dual purpose" examinations because local doctors are more readily available for trial testimony on the responsibility issue. See USAM 3-3.302, 3-3.320. In the exceptional cases in which defendants are committed to a Bureau of Prisons facility, dual purpose examinations may be ordered only if only a single doctor is asked to render an opinion both on competency and responsibility.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-9.200 PROCEEDINGS AFTER EXAMINATION

Where the report indicates that the accused is presently mentally incompetent, the statute requires that the court hold a hearing upon due notice and make a finding on the evidence. Where the psychiatrist's report indicates that the accused is presently competent, no hearing is required unless the evidence, as a whole, raises a bona fide doubt as to the defendant's competence to stand trial. A judicial determination as to competence is required in every case after the psychiatric examination, regardless of the content of the report. See Chavez v. United States, 656 F.2d 512, 516-517 (9th Cir. 1981).

The nature of the precommitment hearing mentioned in 18 U.S.C. §4244 is not described in the statute. In many cases the hearing has been held on the basis of the medical reports without the presence of the reporting psychiatrist. This has resulted in habeas corpus suits challenging commitment to custody under 18 U.S.C. §4246 on the basis that the precommitment hearing was lacking in due process because held on the basis of reports without live testimony by the psychiatrist. Waivers of the presence of the reporting psychiatrists have been held to be ineffective since the accused is considered mentally incompetent, nor can waivers by the accused's counsel be considered appropriate. Consequently the habeas corpus courts have frequently found the hearing to have been invalid and have ordered the return of the accused to the committing court for a new hearing.

9-9.210 Subpoena of Psychiatrists

In order to insure a proper precommitment hearing under 18 U.S.C. §4244, U.S. Attorneys should as a general rule subpoena the reporting psychiatrist to testify in person. In this manner the defense attorneys and the U.S. Attorney will be enabled properly to probe the basis of the conclusion of lack of mental capacity for trial, within the definition established in decisions under the mental competency statutes. The need for personal appearance of the reporting psychiatrist points up the necessity that whenever possible local examinations or local commitments for examination be made in order to obviate extensive travel by the Bureau of Prisons.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-9.300 COMMITMENT

If the court finds that the accused is in fact mentally incompetent it may order him/her committed, pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §4246, to the custody of the Attorney General. As a result of the Supreme Court's decision in Jackson v. Indiana, 406 U.S. 715 (1972), a person committed to the custody of the Attorney General pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §4246 can be held only for a reasonable period of time necessary to determine whether there is a substantial probability that he/she will attain mental competency to stand trial in the foreseeable future. If it appears that the person will not be mentally competent to stand trial in the foreseeable future, the government must either institute the customary civil commitment proceedings that would be required to commit indefinitely any other citizen, or release the defendant. United States v. Wood, 469 F.2d 676 (5th Cir. 1972); United States v. Debellis, 649 F.2d 1 (1st Cir. 1982); United States v. Lancaster, 408 F. Supp. 225 (D. D.C. 1976). If the release of the person would endanger the officers, property, or other interests of the United States, a hearing should be conducted pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §4247. Upon such hearing, if the court determines that the release of the person would endanger the officers, property, or other interests of the United States, the court may commit the person to the custody of the Attorney General. United States v. Wood, supra. A person committed to the custody of the Attorney General pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §4247 shall remain in the custody of the Attorney General until the sanity or mental competency of such person shall be restored or until the mental condition of the person is so improved that if he/she be released he/she will not endanger the safety of the officers, the property, or other interests of the United States or until suitable arrangements have been made for the custody and care of the prisoner by the state of his/her residence. See 18 U.S.C. §4248. If the release of the person does not meet the standard set out in 18 U.S.C. §4247, but his/her release would pose a danger to the community, it is up to the state to institute civil commitment proceedings and the U.S. Attorney should seek to persuade the appropriate state officials to institute such proceedings.

9-9.310 Commitment Order Should Contain Statement Of Charges Against the Subject

When commitment follows a finding of mental incompetency, the U.S. Attorney should make certain that the commitment order includes a brief statement of the charges pending against the subject. The order should be accompanied by copies of any reports relating to the charges or the background of the accused, as well as copies of all available psychiatric records and reports upon which the finding of incompetency is based. The furnishing of such material enables institutional authorities to chart appropriate treatment whereas, without it, they must depend upon information furnished by the subject which may be inaccurate.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-9.400 COMPETENCY RECOVERED--TRIAL

9-9.410 Procedure for the Return of Defendant to the District

Upon receipt of notice from the Bureau of Prisons that a defendant has recovered mentally to the point of being able to stand trial, or that after a reasonable period of examination it does not appear that the accused will regain competency in the foreseeable future, the U.S. Attorney should promptly cause issuance of a writ of habeas corpus ad prosequendum out of his/her court to be executed by the U.S. Marshal for his/her district by taking the accused into custody at the named institution. No funds are available to the institutional authorities for the return of a defendant to the district from which he/she was committed. It is important that the defendant be returned to the district as soon as possible since the time limitations of the Speedy Trial Act begin to run from the time the court receives notification that the defendant is able to stand trial. See Guidelines to the Administration of the "Speedy Trial Act of 1974" of the Committee of the Judicial Conference on the Administration of the Criminal Law, section 3161(h)(4), pp. 21-22.

9-9.420 Judicial Finding Of Mental Competency

Once a defendant has been returned to the district, a trial cannot proceed without an antecedent judicial finding, with or without hearing, that the accused has recovered mental competency. If the court, upon all the evidence in hand, is unconvinced as to mental recovery it may order the subject returned for further treatment under the original commitment. See United States v. Clark, 617 F.2d 180 (9th Cir. 1980).

9-9.430 Effect Of Psychotropic Drugs

In all cases where the defendant is returned to the trial district with maintenance of his/her competency contingent upon his/her continued usage of psychotropic drugs, the U.S. Attorney should request a full hearing on the defendant's competency. It has been held that the use of a prescribed tranquilizer which enables the defendant to understand the charge against him/her and to discuss the matter with an adequate degree of understanding does not render defendant mentally incompetent to stand trial. See United States v. Hayes, 589 F.2d 811, 123 (5th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 847 (1979); Government of Virgin Islands v. Crowe, 391 F. Supp. 987 (D. V.I. 1974), aff'd., 529 F.2d 511 (3d Cir. 1975).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-9.500 MENTAL INCOMPETENCY UNDISCLOSED AT TRIAL

9-9.510 Procedure

When a board of examiners referred to in 18 U.S.C. §4241 has examined a sentenced prisoner and has found probable cause to believe that he/she was mentally incompetent at the time of trial, provided such issue was not raised and determined during trial, the Director of the Bureau of Prisons is required under 18 U.S.C. §4245, to certify the finding of the board, and such certificate, with a copy of the finding, must be transmitted to the clerk of the sentencing court. For the issue to be barred as having been raised and determined during trial, the trial judge must have held a hearing on the issue, followed by a finding of mental competency. Stone v. United States, 358 F.2d 503 (9th Cir. 1966). On receipt of the certificate from the Director, the court must hold a hearing. If it concludes that mental incompetency existed at the time of trial it must vacate the judgment of conviction and grant a new trial. Prior to the new trial, the defendant should be examined pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §4244 to determine his/her competency to stand trial.

9-9.520 Person Cannot Compel A Certification Of Mental Incompetency Under 18 U.S.C. §4245

A person serving a sentence cannot compel the Director of the Bureau of Prisons to issue a certification of mental incompetency under 18 U.S.C. §4245. Such certification may be initiated only upon the finding of the board of examiners that there is probable cause to believe that defendant was mentally incompetent at the time of trial and only if the issue was not raised and determined during trial. While this issue can be subsequently raised in a habeas corpus proceeding, it is left to the court's discretion whether it is necessary for a psychiatrist to examine defendant or whether a hearing has to be held to determine if defendant was competent to stand trial. See Nunley v. Chandler, 308 F.2d 223 (10th Cir. 1962); Burrow v. United States, 301 F.2d 442 (8th Cir. 1962); United States v. Thomas, 291 F.2d 478 (6th Cir. 1961); Hoskins v. United States, 251 F.2d 51 (6th Cir. 1957).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-10.000 CAPITAL CRIMES

9-10.010 Federal Death Penalty Provisions

With the exception of the Aircraft Piracy statute, the various existing federal death penalty provisions are unenforceable in view of a series of Supreme Court decisions including Furman v. Georgia, 408 U.S. 238 (1972) and United States v. Jackson, 390 U.S. 570 (1968). These death penalty provisions are void because they set forth no legislated guidelines to control the fact-finder's discretion in determining whether the penalty of death is to be imposed.

Subsequent to Furman, Congress amended the Aircraft Piracy statute, 49 U.S.C. §§1472-1473, which provides for the death penalty, but which places substantial constraints on the discretion of the fact-finder. Essentially, this statute provides that a separate hearing must be held before a defendant is sentenced to death. The hearing must be held before a jury, or, on motion of the defendant, before a judge. The fact-finder then must return a special verdict setting forth findings as to the existence or non-existence of specified mitigating and aggravating factors which are set forth in 49 U.S.C. §1473(c)(6) and (7). If any one of five mitigating factors is found to exist, the court may not impose sentence of death. If, however, the fact-finder determines that none of the mitigating factors exist and that one or more of the specified aggravating factors exist, the court may impose sentence of death. It is the Department's view that this procedure is constitutionally permissible because it provides specific guidelines which preclude the arbitrary and capricious imposition of the death penalty.

9-10.020 Recommendation of Death Penalty

The death penalty shall not be recommended without the approval of the Attorney General. See USAM 9-2.151, supra.

9-10.100 Procedural Requirements in Cases Under Statutes Authorizing Death Penalty--After Furman

Federal law contains various provisions which establish special procedures for the trial of capital cases. The provisions include the following:

A. 18 U.S.C. §3005 (appointment of two attorneys for defense in capital cases)

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

- B. 18 U.S.C. §3148 (release on bail in capital cases)
- C. 18 U.S.C. §3235 (venue in capital cases)
- D. 18 U.S.C. §3281 (no time limitation on instituting proceedings in capital cases)
- E. 18 U.S.C. §3432 (requiring disclosure of the government witness list and the list of persons summoned to be perspective jurors at least three days before trial)
- F. Rule 7(a), Fed. R. Crim. P. (prohibiting waiver of indictment in capital cases)
- G. Rule 24(b), Fed. R. Crim. P. (increased preemptory challenges in capital cases)

With regard to prosecutions under statutes having death penalty provisions that are unconstitutional under Furman, supra, there is some uncertainty about the applicability of the aforementioned procedural safeguards.

The majority of courts that have considered this issue have concluded that in prosecutions where the death penalty provision is unconstitutional, a defendant is not entitled to the special procedural safeguards applicable to capital cases. For example, it has been held that because the death penalty provision under the federal murder statute, 18 U.S.C. §1111, was invalid, a defendant is not entitled to two court appointed attorneys. See United States v. Dufer, 648 F.2d 512 (9th Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 450 U.S. 925 (1981); United States v. Shepherd, 576 F.2d 719 (7th Cir. 1978), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 852 (1978); United States v. Weddell, 576 F.2d 767 (8th Cir. 1977), cert. denied, 436 U.S. 919 (1978).

Similarly, such a defendant would not be entitled to additional peremptory challenges. See United States v. Maestos, 523 F.2d 316 (10th Cir. 1975); United States v. Martinez, 536 F.2d 886 (9th Cir. 1976), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 907 (1976); United States v. McNally, 485 F.2d 398 (8th Cir. 1973), cert. denied, 415 U.S. 978 (1974); United States v. Hoyt, 451 F.2d 570 (5th Cir. 1971), cert. denied 405 U.S. 995 (1972). Furthermore, a defendant would not be entitled to the government's witness list and a list of persons summoned to be perspective jurors three days before trial. See Hoyt, supra; United States v. Kaiser, 545 F.2d 467 (5th Cir. 1977).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

This view of the issue is given further support by a line of cases which antedates Furman, supra, and holds that where the government expressly or implicitly agrees not to seek the death penalty, there is no error in denying the defendant the benefit of the procedural protections. See Loux v. United States, 389 F.2d 911 (9th Cir. 1968); Amsler v. United States, 381 F.2d 37 (9th Cir. 1967); Hall v. United States, 410 F.2d 653 (4th Cir. 1969); see also United States v. Crowell, 498 F.2d 324 (5th Cir. 1974).

A contrary view on this issue was expressed by a divided panel of the Fourth Circuit in United States v. Watson, 496 F.2d 1125 (4th Cir. 1973). The panel majority held that, notwithstanding Furman, supra, a defendant, charged with first degree murder under 18 U.S.C. §1111, had an absolute right to two attorneys under 18 U.S.C. §3005. The majority opinion made no effort to reconcile its decision with the prior Fourth Circuit decision in Hall, supra. The dissenting judge in Watson, supra, agreed with the weight of authority that the procedural safeguards accorded to defendants in capital cases are applicable only where death was a possible penalty.

With regard to the unlimited statute of limitations (see 18 U.S.C. §3281) and the more restrictive bail provisions (see 18 U.S.C. §3148) in capital cases, it is the Department's view that these statutory provisions remain in effect in prosecutions for capital offenses with unconstitutional death penalty provisions. The unlimited statute of limitations and the more restrictive bail provisions clearly are not intended to provide additional safeguards to a defendant faced with the death penalty. Rather, these provisions are tied to the extremely serious nature of the offense charged and the possibility that the defendant may present a danger to another person or to the community. Because the purpose of these statutes derives from the nature of the offense rather than from the severity of the penalty, it is our view that they remain in effect so long as Congress has not downgraded the offense to non-capital status. See United States v. Kennedy, 618 F.2d 557 (9th Cir. 1980); United States v. Provenzano, 423 F. Supp. 662 (S.D. N.Y. 1976) aff'd without opinion, 556 F.2d 562 (2d Cir. 1977); United States v. Helmich, 521 F. Supp. 1246 (M.D. Fla. 1981).

9-11.000 GRAND JURY

9-11.001 Monograph

The Narcotic and Dangerous Drug Section has prepared a monograph entitled "Federal Grand Jury Practice" (Volumes I and II). Copies may be obtained from that Section, FTS 724-7045.

9-11.010 Grand Jury Indictment Required by the Fifth Amendment

The Fifth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States provides, in part, that "no person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the Militia, when in actual service in time of War or public danger."

While it is a very effective instrument of law enforcement, the grand jury is regarded primarily as a protection for the individual. It has been said that the grand jury stands between the accuser and the accused as "a primary security to the innocent against hasty, malicious, and oppressive persecution." See Wood v. Georgia, 370 U.S. 375, 390 (1962). The grand jury functions to determine whether there is probable cause to believe that a certain person committed a certain offense and, thus, to protect individuals against the lodging of unfounded criminal charges. See United States v. Calandra, 414 U.S. 338 (1974); Bransburg v. Hayes, 408 U.S. 665 (1972); United States v. Cox, 342 F.2d 167 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 391 U.S. 935 (1965).

9-11.020 The Role of the Prosecutor

In his/her dealings with the grand jury, the prosecutor must always conduct himself/herself as an officer of the court whose function is to insure that justice is done and that guilt shall not escape nor innocence suffer. He/she must recognize that the grand jury is an independent body, whose functions include not only the investigation of crime and the initiation of criminal prosecution but also the protection of the citizenry from unfounded criminal charges. The prosecutor's responsibility is to advise the grand jury on the law and to present evidence for its consideration. In discharging these responsibilities, he/she must be scrupulously fair to all witnesses and must do nothing to inflame or otherwise improperly influence the grand jurors.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-11.030 Presentment No Longer Used

The presentment has been obsolete for some time now as a method of instituting federal prosecutions. The presentment was a charge that the grand jury preferred on its own initiative. The word, "presentment," is still used today in various non-Constitutional senses, perhaps most commonly to refer to a grand jury report of the type authorized under 18 U.S.C. §3333. See Gaither v. United States, 413 F.2d 1061 (D.C. Cir. 1969); United States v. Briggs, 514 F.2d 794 (5th Cir. 1975); In re Grand Jury January, 1969, 315 F. Supp. 662 (D. Md. 1970). 8 Moore's Federal Practice-Cipes, Criminal §6.02(3); Wright, Federal Practice and Procedure, Criminal 3110.

9-11.040 Offenses that Must be Prosecuted by Indictment

The Fifth Amendment protection is embodied in Rule 7 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. Under Rule 7(a), an offense punishable by death must be prosecuted by indictment, while an offense punishable by imprisonment for more than one year or at hard labor must be prosecuted by indictment unless indictment is waived, in which event it may be prosecuted by information. All other offenses may be prosecuted either by indictment or information.

Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure 7 specifies what are "otherwise infamous" crimes within the meaning of the Fifth Amendment. See Ex parte Wilson, 114 U.S. 417 (1885). As classified in 18 U.S.C. §1, all felonies must be prosecuted by indictment absent an appropriate waiver (which may not occur in a capital case), and all misdemeanors (including petty offenses) may be prosecuted either by indictment or information. It follows from the provision in Rule 7 that a grand jury may properly inquire into the least (as well as the most) serious federal offenses. See In re Grand Jury Investigation, 186 F. Supp. 298 (D.D.C. 1960). See also USAM 9-12.000 on indictments.

9-11.100 INDICTMENT OF MEMBERS OF THE ARMED FORCES

It was once considered appropriate for the armed forces to prosecute their own members by court-martial for all offenses chargeable under the punitive articles of the Uniform Code of Military Justice (10 U.S.C. §§877-934). There is no grand jury in the military justice system. In 1969, the Supreme Court interpreted the Fifth Amendment to restrict courts-martial jurisdiction, at least within the United States and in peacetime, to offenses which are "service-connected." See O'Callahan v. Parker, 395 U.S. 258 (1969). An offense committed by a member of the service on a military installation that affects the security of a person or of property there, is considered to be service-connected. See Relford v. Commandant, 401 U.S. 355 (1971). Without a service-connection, however, an offense committed by a member of the service in a civilian setting in the United States will have to be prosecuted like any other federal offense and cannot be left for prosecution by military authorities. In short, the offense will have to be charged under federal statutes other than the Uniform Code of Military Justice, and an indictment will have to be obtained if required under Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 7.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

The court-martial system is no part of the federal judiciary but is established under the Constitutional power of Congress to make rules for the government and regulation of the armed forces of the United States. See Manual For Court-Martial, United States, 1969 (revised edition), paragraph 8. The fact that an offender is prosecutable by court-martial does not prevent prosecution for the offense by civilian authorities; members of the armed forces are subject to federal and state prosecution on the same basis as civilians. See Caldwell v. Parker, 252 U.S. 376 (1920); Owens v. United States, 383 F. Supp. 780 (M.D. Pa. 1974), aff'd, 515 F.2d 507; People v. Powers, 227 N.Y.S. 2d 433, cert. denied, 374 U.S. 811 (1962). But, as pertinent, consider the policies discussed at USAM 9-2.142 and possible double jeopardy. See Grafton v. United States, 206 U.S. 333 (1907).

9-11.200 POWERS AND LIMITATIONS OF GRAND JURIES

9-11.201 The Functions of a Grand Jury

While grand juries are sometimes described as performing accusatory and investigatory functions, it is particularly useful to say that a grand jury's function is to determine whether or not there is probable cause to believe that a certain person committed a certain federal offense within the venue of the district court. Thus, it has been said that a grand jury has but two functions—to indict or, in the alternative, to return a "no-bill," see Wright, Federal Practice and Procedure, Criminal §110. It is useful to look upon the functions of a grand jury in this way because, in general, a grand jury may not perform any different function. The investigative grand jury works toward such an end, although some investigations are never brought to fruition.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

At common law, a grand jury enjoyed a certain power to issue reports alleging non-criminal misconduct. A special grand jury impaneled under 18 U.S.C. §3331 is authorized, on the basis of a criminal investigation (but not otherwise), to fashion a report, potentially for public release, concerning either organized crime conditions in the district or the non-criminal misconduct in office of appointed public officers or employees. This is discussed fully at USAM 9-11.440, infra. It would seem that a grand jury impaneled under Rule 6 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure also has a power to issue reports on non-criminal matters. See Jenkins v. McKeithen, 395 U.S. 411 (1969); Hannah v. Larche, 363 U.S. 420 (1960); 8 Moore's Federal Practice--Cipes, Criminal §6.02[3]; Application of Johnson 484 F.2d 791 (7th Cir. 1973) (and cases cited therein). Whether and in what form a grand jury report should be issued is in all events a difficult and complex question. Consultation should be had with the Criminal Division before any grand jury report is initiated, whether by a regular or special grand jury. See USAM 9-11.441, infra.

9-11.210 The Investigative Powers of a Grand Jury

The grand jury has always been accorded the broadest latitude in conducting its investigations. The proceedings are conducted ex parte, in secret, and without any judicial officer in attendance to monitor them, and there is no exclusionary rule or standard of relevancy or materiality to inhibit grand jury inquiry. A grand juror's own information, newspaper reports, rumors, or whatever, may properly be used to trigger an investigation. The grand jury may act upon mere suspicion that the law has been violated, or with the objective of seeking assurance that it has not. The grand jury may investigate a field of fact with no defendant or criminal charge specifically in mind and with no duty to measure its steps according to predictions about the outcome. Thus the grand jury may conduct the broadest kind of investigation before stopping to determine whether an indictment should be found. See United States v. Calandra, 414 U.S. 338 (1974); Branzburg v. Hayes, 408 U.S. 665 (1972); United States v. Morton Salt Co., 338 U.S. 632 (1950); Blair v. United States, 250 U.S. 273 (1919); Haye v. Henkel, 201 U.S. 43 (1906); United States v. Smyth, 104 F. Supp. 283 (N.D. Cal. 1952).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-11.220 Power of a Grand Jury Limited by Its Functions

However expansive the courts have been in describing the investigative powers of a grand jury, these powers must be exercised with a view toward possible return of an indictment. It is an abuse of grand jury process to call witnesses simply for purposes of discovery or trial preparation in a case instituted independently or under an indictment returned by a former grand jury. Such an abuse of process would not necessarily vitiate a conviction, however; and grand jury process is not abused when utilized after the return of one indictment with a view toward the possible return of a superseding or additional indictment, nor when information duly obtained in a criminal investigation is used for related civil purposes. There is no principle like double jeopardy or collateral estoppel to prevent a grand jury from conducting an investigation similar to one undertaken by another grand jury, even if that other grand jury returned a no-bill. See United States v. Proctor and Gamble Company, 356 U.S. 677 (1958); United States v. Thompson, 251 U.S. 407 (1920); United States v. Brasch, 505 F.2d 139 (7th Cir. 1974), cert. denied, 421 U.S. 910 (1975); United States v. Fitch, 472 F.2d 548 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 412 U.S. 954 (1973); United States v. Senak, 477 F.2d 304 (7th Cir. 1973); United States v. Star, 470 F.2d 1214 (9th Cir. 1972); Beverly v. United States, 468 F.2d 732 (5th Cir. 1972); United States v. Dardi, 330 F.2d 316 (2d Cir. 1964); Durbin v. United States, 330 F.2d 316 (D. D.C. 1954).

A. Approval Required Prior to Resubmission of Same Matter to Grand Jury

However, once a grand jury returns a no-bill or otherwise acts on the merits in declining to return an indictment, the same matter (i.e., the same transaction or event and the same putative defendant) should not be presented to another grand jury or presented again to the same grand jury without first securing the approval of the responsible Assistant Attorney General. Ordinarily, such approval will not be given in the absence of additional or newly discovered evidence or a clear circumstance of a miscarriage of justice. For a case recognizing that the U.S. Attorney will often issue the subpoenas when the grand jury is not in session and collecting numerous cases on grand jury practice, see United States v. Kleen Laundry and Cleaners, Inc., 381 F. Supp. 519 (E.D. N.Y. 1974).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

B. Use Of Grand Jury To Locate Fugitives

It is the Department's position that it is a misuse of the grand jury to utilize the grand jury solely as an investigative aid in the search for a fugitive in whose testimony the grand jury has no interest. In re Pedro Archuleta, 432 F. Supp. 583 (S.D.N.Y. 1977); and In re Wood, 430 F. Supp. 41 (S.D.N.Y. 1977), aff'd. In re Cueto, 554 F.2d 14 (2d Cir. 1977). Furthermore, while such investigations are often justified on the ground that the grand jury is actually investigating harboring violations, this explanation may well be viewed as merely a subterfuge, particularly when the person thought to be the harborer is compelled to testify under 18 U.S.C. §6003. Only in extraordinary situations (i.e., harboring by a number of individuals) will a request for an order to compel testimony be considered for an alleged participant in the harboring.

There are, however, some limited situations in which the courts have recognized that grand jury efforts to locate a fugitive are proper, as described below. In any of these situations, a proposed grand jury subpoena of witnesses or records aimed at locating a fugitive must be submitted to the General Litigation and Legal Advice Section of the Criminal Division and will require approval by the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Criminal Division or other responsible Assistant Attorney General or by a designated Deputy Assistant Attorney General. Additional procedural requirements are detailed below.

1. The use of grand jury process to locate a fugitive is proper when the grand jury is interested in hearing the fugitive's testimony. Thus, in Matter of Archuleta, 432 F. Supp. 583, 595 (S.D.N.Y. 1977), the court stated:

A grand jury may use its subpoena power to call witnesses to aid in finding other witnesses whose whereabouts are unknown and whom the grand jury believes it should hear.

In Matter of Wood, 430 F. Supp. 41, 48 (S.D.N.Y. 1977), the court stated:

[T]he grand jury may properly be employed to locate other prospective witnesses, even when those persons may be fugitives from justice. See Hoffman v. United States 341 U.S. 479 (1951). As the Supreme Court stated in that case, 'the government may inquire of witnesses before the grand jury as to the whereabouts of unlocated witnesses . . . .' Id. at 488.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Thus, if the grand jury seeks the testimony of the fugitive in the investigation of federal criminal violations before it, it may subpoena other witnesses and records in an effort to locate the fugitive witness. However, there are several cautions in this regard:

a. Interest in the fugitive's testimony must not be pretextual. The sole motive for inquiring into the fugitive's location must be the potential value of his/her testimony. A subpoena for the fugitive witness must be approved by the grand jury before seeking to subpoena witnesses or records to locate the fugitive; and

b. It is not proper to seek to obtain grand jury testimony from any witness, including a fugitive, concerning an already returned indictment. In Beverly v. United States, 468 F.2d 732, 742-43 (5th Cir. 1972); the court stated:

It is true . . . 'it is improper to use the grand jury for the purpose of preparing an already pending indictment for trial. United States v. Dardi, 330 F.2d 216 (2d Cir. 1964). It is a misuse of the grand jury to use it as a substitute for discovery.

Thus, it would not be proper to seek to locate a fugitive for the purpose of having him/her testify about matter for which an indictment has already been returned, unless there are additional unindicted defendants to be discovered or additional criminal acts to be investigated through the testimony of the fugitive. In re Russo, 448 F.2d 369, 374 (9th Cir. 1971); Beverly v. United States, supra, at 743.

c. Current policy on "target" witnesses must be observed. See USAM 9-11.260. Grand jury subpoenas for witnesses and records aimed at locating a fugitive witness who is a target of the grand jury investigation will be approved only where a target subpoena already has been approved by the responsible Assistant Attorney General.

Such approval, per USAM 9-11.260, will depend on "A) The importance to the successful conduct of the grand jury's investigation of [the target's] testimony or other information sought; B) Whether the substance of his/her testimony or other information sought could be provided by other witnesses; C) whether the questions the prosecutor and grand jury intend to ask or the other information sought would be protected by a valid claim of privilege."

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

2. Use of the grand jury to learn the present location of a fugitive is proper when present location is an element of the offense under investigation.

a. Harboring, Misprision, Accessory: On adequate facts, the present location of a fugitive might tend to establish that another person is harboring him/her, 18 U.S.C. §§1071, 1072, 1381, or has committed misprision, 18 U.S.C. §4, or is an accessory after the fact in the present concealment of the fugitive, 18 U.S.C. §3. In Raymond v. United States, (6th Cir, Aug. 5, 1975) (unpublished), the court of appeals stated that "the present location of the fugitives in question is a relevant and necessary subject of inquiry in the investigation of possible offenses, such as harboring fugitives and misprision of a felony. . . ." And in In re Grusse, 402 F. Supp. 1232, 1237-38 (D. Conn. 1975), the court concluded that grand jury witnesses could properly be questioned on whether two fugitives had stayed in that district, in an investigation of harboring, 18 U.S.C. §1071, and accessory after the fact, 18 U.S.C. §3.

However, this justification could be viewed as a subterfuge if the suspected harborer (or the person potentially guilty of misprision or as an accessory) were to be subjected to an order under (18 U.S.C. §6003) to compel his/her testimony about the location of the fugitive. In order to insure the proper use of investigations for harboring, misprision, and accessory after the fact, based on acts of concealment, U.S. Attorneys are to consult with the General Litigation and Legal Advice Section of the Criminal Division prior to initiating grand jury investigations for these offenses.

b. Escape and Bondjump: The Criminal Division does not view the present location of a fugitive as relevant evidence in a grand jury investigation concerning escape by a federal prisoner, see 18 U.S.C. §751, or bondjump, see 18 U.S.C. §3150. These offenses address the circumstances of prior departure from a known location. The fugitive's present location is not a relevant factor as it is in harboring or misprision investigations. No case law supports such a rationale for use of the grand jury to locate a fugitive.

c. Unlawful Flight to Avoid Prosecution: It has been suggested that grand jury subpoenas might be used to locate a fugitive in investigations of unlawful flight to avoid prosecution, 18 U.S.C. §1073.

However, in such investigations "normally the federal complaint will be dismissed when the fugitive has been apprehended and turned over to state authorities to await interstate extradition. See USAM 9-69.410. Since such cases are as a rule not prosecuted, and under the terms of 18 U.S.C. §1073 cannot be prosecuted without written authorization from the Attorney General or an Assistant Attorney General, we have concluded that any effort to use the grand jury in the investigation of such cases shall be preceded by consultation with the General Litigation and Legal Advice Section of the Criminal Division, and by written authorization to prosecute pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §1073, from the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Criminal Division. See also USAM 1-3.115(c), INTERPOL-USNCB, Fugitive Unit.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

3. Flight as evidence of consciousness of guilt.

The grand jury cannot be used to locate a fugitive on the rationale that present location is relevant to flight as consciousness of guilt. As in escape cases, the relevant facts concerning flight are those surrounding a prior departure from a known location and not the present location of the fugitive.

It is the Criminal Division's view that the areas of permissible use of grand jury subpoenas to locate fugitives here spelled out can be sustained in court against any challenge.

C. Obtaining Records to Aid in the Location of Federal Fugitives by use of the All Writs Act, 28 U.S.C. §1651; an Alternative to use of Grand Jury Subpoenas for Such Purpose

The Criminal Division recognizes the importance of providing to federal investigative agencies a means of obtaining records which would aid in the search for federal fugitives. Usually the records sought are telephone toll records of close associates and relatives of the fugitive, although other records might also be valuable in ascertaining the location of the fugitive. As a result of a careful study of this problem, it is the recommendation of this Division that such records may be obtained by a court order issued under the All Writs Act, 28 U.S.C. §1651, in those cases in which a complaint or an indictment and arrest warrant have been issued.

Generally, a grand jury subpoena may not be used to locate fugitives unless the grand jury is investigating the crime of harboring, 18 U.S.C. §1071, accessory after the fact, 18 U.S.C. §3, or misprision, 18 U.S.C. §4. A federal grand jury subpoena may be used to locate a fugitive if the grand jury wants the testimony of the fugitive. However, in those instances in which the sole purpose for obtaining records relating to the fugitive's whereabouts is to apprehend him/her for prosecution, a court order under 28 U.S.C. §1651 should be obtained for such records.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

It is suggested that in those cases in which a complaint or an indictment has been returned against the fugitive and there is an outstanding warrant for his/her apprehension, telephone toll records or other records reasonably expected to furnish leads to the fugitive's whereabouts may be obtained by a proper application to the district court before which the complaint or indictment is pending for an order for production of such records to the United States Marshal, or other federal officer charged with the responsibility for locating and apprehending the fugitive. The authority for such a court order is the All Writs Act, 28 U.S.C. §1651. The All Writs Act provides:

The Supreme Court and all courts established by Act of Congress may issue all writs necessary or appropriate in aid of their respective jurisdictions and agreeable to the use and principles of law.

The Supreme Court has recognized in numerous cases the power of a federal court to issue such orders under the All Writs Act "as may be necessary or appropriate to effectuate and prevent the frustration of orders it has previously issued in the exercise of its jurisdiction." See United States v. New York Telephone Co., 434 U.S. 159, 172 (1977). "This statute has served since its inception, in substance, in the original Judiciary Act as a 'legislatively approved source of procedural instruments designed to achieve 'the rational ends of law.'" Harris v. Nelson, 394 U.S. 286, 299 (1969), quoting Price v. Johnson, 334 U.S. 266, 282 (1948). As the Supreme Court noted in Adams v. United States ex rel. McCann, 317 U.S. 269 (1942), "[u]nless appropriately confined by Congress, a Federal court may avail itself of all auxiliary writs as aids in the performance of its duties, when the use of such historic aids is calculated in its sound judgment to achieve the ends of justice entrusted to it." Id. at 273.

The Supreme Court has applied the All Writs Act flexibly to accomplish these purposes. See United States v. New York Telephone Co., supra. Adams v. United States ex rel. McCann, supra, held that the use of these supplemental powers is not limited to only those situations where it is "necessary" in the sense that the court could not otherwise discharge its duties. Thus, the All Writs Act has been used to produce a prisoner before the court of appeals to personally argue his/her appeal, Price v. Johnson, 334 U.S. 266 (1948); to produce federal prisoners in district courts for hearings under 28 U.S.C. §2255, United States v. Hayman, 342 U.S. 205 (1952); to issue discovery orders in the absence of statutory authority in habeas corpus proceedings, Harris v. Nelson, supra; to order the telephone company to assist the FBI to install pen registers ordered by the court, United States v. New York Telephone Co., supra; United States v. Illinois Bell Telephone Co., 531 F.2d 809 (7th Cir. 1976); Michigan Bell Telephone

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

Co. v. United States, 565 F.2d 385 (6th Cir. 1977); to order the telephone company to assist the FBI to trace telephone calls by performing mechanical and manual traces, In the Matter of the Application of the United States, 610 F.2d 1148 (3d Cir. 1979). The Act may be used by courts to issue orders appropriate to assist them in conducting factual inquiries, Harris v. Nelson, supra, citing American Lithographic Co. v. Werckmeister, 221 U.S. 603, 609 (1911), or for producing documents for pre-trial discovery, Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corp. v. NLRB, 120 F.2d 126, 127 (1st Cir. 1941).

The All Writs Act may be applied to persons who are not parties to the original action or engaged in wrongdoing but may be in a position to frustrate the implementation of a court order or the proper administration of justice. It also encompasses those who have not taken any affirmative action to hinder justice. See United States v. New York Telephone Co., supra; Mississippi Valley Barge Line Co. v. United States, 273 F. Supp. 1 (E.D. Mo. 1967), aff'd, 389 U.S. 579 (1968); Board of Education v. York, 429 F.2d 66 (10th Cir. 1970), cert. denied, 401 U.S. 954 (1971); Field v. United States, 193 F.2d 92 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 342 U.S. 892 (1951). Thus, in Penn Central Transportation Co. v. Irving Trust Co., 594 F.2d 952 (3d Cir. 1979), the All Writs Act was used by a reorganization court under the Bankruptcy Act to enjoin interference with the property of a debtor and to enjoin proceedings in other courts. In United States v. State of Washington, 459 F. Supp. 1070 (W.D. Wash. 1978), the Act was used to close Puget Sound waterways to red salmon fishing during certain times of the year.

In upholding the authority of the district court to order the telephone company to assist the FBI in the installation of court authorized pen registers, the Supreme Court stated:

We are unable to agree with the Company's assertion that 'it is extraordinary to expect citizens to directly involve themselves in the law enforcement process.' . . . The conviction that private citizens have a duty to provide assistance to law enforcement officials when it is required is by no means foreign to our traditions. See Babington v. Yellow Taxi Corp., 250 N.Y. 14, 17, 164 726, 272 (1928) (Cardozo, C.J.) ("Still, as in the days of Edward I, the citizenry may be called upon to enforce the justice of the state, not faintly and with lagging steps, but honestly and bravely and with whatever implements and facilities are convenient and at hand").

See also Michigan Bell Telephone Co. v. United States, 565 F.2d 385, 389, (6th Cir. 1977).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

In applying these principles to the use of the All Writs Act to locate fugitives, it is clear that there must first be a proceeding in the issuing court to give jurisdiction to the court. See Adams v. United States ex rel. McCann, supra, at 273. Thus, any such application, which should be verified, for the use of the All Writs Act to obtain telephone company toll records or any other documents to locate a fugitive should be sought only from the U.S. district court in which a complaint or an indictment for the fugitive has been returned and is pending. It is further clear from the cases that there should be a warrant for the arrest of the fugitive named in the indictment in order that the order sought under 28 U.S.C. §1651 is in aid of and "to effectuate and prevent the frustration of orders . . . previously issued." See United States v. New York Telephone Co., supra, at 172. As the Supreme Court said in that case: "The order issued by the District Court compelling the company to provide technical assistance was required to prevent nullification of the court's warrant and the frustration of the government's right under the warrant to conduct a pen register surveillance." Id. at 175. The order obtained may then direct the production of the documents sought at some designated reasonable time to the appropriate official charged with the responsibility for execution of the warrant. The documents may be ordered produced to the court, or U.S. Attorney if necessary, but the preferred method is to provide the records to the enforcement officers. Sufficient time should be allowed for the affected party to challenge the order by appropriate motion in the district court.

The use of 28 U.S.C. §1651 as a means of obtaining telephone toll records or other documents to locate a fugitive is not a procedure to be used in every fugitive case. The willingness of courts to issue these orders will depend on the selectivity with which applications are made and courts will not condone a wholesale use of the All Writs Act for this purpose. Thus, this procedure should be used only in important cases where a strong showing can be made that the records are likely to lead to the whereabouts of the fugitive. The application should clearly demonstrate the reasonable belief that the records sought may reveal leads to the whereabouts of the fugitive. Telephone toll records of associates and relatives known, to have had recent and frequent contact with the fugitive seem the logical source for such information.

The order sought for such records must not be burdensome, United States v. New York Telephone Co., supra, at 172. In re Application of the United States, supra, where the order under the All Writs Act required the telephone company to use its facilities and manpower to mechanically and manually trace telephone calls, the appellate court said since the tracing order denied the company of the free use of its equipment and employees in a substantial manner, that due process required a hearing on the issue of burdensomeness. If, however, the deprivation of the use of the company's equipment and personnel resources is de minimus, no hearing should be necessary. Thus, in applications for court orders for records to locate a fugitive, the request for records should be narrowly limited both in the types of records sought, the number of individuals involved, and the time period covered.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

In those cases where disclosure by the telephone company to the individuals whose records are sought by the order might impede the fugitive investigation, the court should be requested to include in its order such a finding and an order that the telephone company make no disclosure for ninety days. As an alternative to seeking such an order from the court, the order for production of the telephone company records may be accompanied by a certification from the person making the application for the order stating that the records are sought in an official federal fugitive investigation, that disclosure could impede the investigation and interfere with enforcement of the law, and that the company should not disclose the existence of the order for ninety days. See Department of Justice Memorandum No. 796, February 20, 1974, "American Telephone and Telegraph Company Policy for Release of Toll Information."

Although there are no reported cases in which the All Writs Act has been used for the purpose indicated herein, several United States district courts have approved such orders. It must be reemphasized that this procedure should be used selectively and only in important cases where a demonstrable reasonable belief exists that the records sought should lead to the whereabouts of the fugitive. This procedure should rarely, if ever, be used to locate a state fugitive for whom an arrest warrant has been issued upon a complaint filed under 18 U.S.C. §1073 when there is no intention to prosecute that offense. See USAM 9-69.410, 9-69.450. Although location of such a fugitive is arguably in aid of the jurisdiction of the issuing court, the court might well consider such an application for its assistance an abuse of process. Cf. United States v. Love, 425 F. Supp. 1248 (S.D.N.Y. 1977) (Rule 40, Fed. R. Crim. P., cannot be used to remove a fugitive felon to the state from which he fled in the absence of an intention to prosecute the federal unlawful flight offense). Use of the procedure in unlawful flight cases should be reserved for those in which there has been a long, intensive and unsuccessful effort by state and federal authorities to locate a fugitive in a major and significant case. Any questions regarding the use of this procedure or the form or content of applications and orders thereunder should be addressed to the General Litigation Legal Advice Section, Criminal Division.

In fugitive cases, federal law enforcement agencies frequently seek to obtain telephone toll records or other documents in order to locate the fugitive. It is the Department's position that these records can be obtained through an order issued pursuant to the All Writs Act, 28 U.S.C. §1651. See USAM 9-11.220. But see United States v. Walters, 558 F. Supp. 726 (D. Md. 1980).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Prosecutors who have employed the All Writs Act for this purpose have encountered a recurring question: Can All Writs Act orders be directed to telephone companies or other third parties outside the territorial jurisdiction of the issuing court? This issue is very important because an interpretation of the All Writs Act which denies it extraterritorial effect significantly reduces the effectiveness of this statute as a law enforcement tool in fugitive cases.

28 U.S.C. §1651 is not an independent source of federal jurisdiction. Rather, it simply provides federal courts with the power to issue writs in aid of their existing jurisdiction. See Goodbar v. Banner, 599 F.2d 431, 433-34 (C.C.P.A.), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 927 (1979). Thus, in fugitive cases only the district court where the complaint, indictment, or warrant is pending may issue orders under the All Writs Act. A fugitive is, by definition, a person who is fleeing the jurisdiction of some court. Therefore, in many instances the fugitive will not be found in the district where the complaint or indictment has been filed or warrant has been issued. If All Writs Act orders are construed only to apply within the territorial limits of the issuing district, the Act loses much of its practical significance in fugitive cases.

It is the Department's position that orders obtained pursuant to the All Writs Act, 28 U.S.C. §1651, have extraterritorial effect. Indeed, in criminal cases several courts have expressly held that orders entered under the Act apply beyond the territorial limits of the issuing court. For example, in Carbo v. United States, 277 F.2d 433 (9th Cir. 1960), aff'd on other grounds, 364 U.S. 611 (1961), Carbo, a state prisoner in New York, tried to resist a writ of habeas corpus ad prosequendum issued by a district court in the Southern District of California by arguing that he was beyond the territorial jurisdiction of that court. The court of appeals flatly rejected this argument, concluding that the district court's power under the All Writs Act extended beyond the territorial limits of the district. Carbo v. United States, supra, at 436. The court noted that, in criminal cases, a district court may issue arrest warrants and subpoenas which have extraterritorial effect; id., citing Rules 4 and 17, Fed. R. Crim. P., and reasoned that the district court's power under the All Writs Act must be at least as extensive as its authority under the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. Therefore, in the court's view, the Act, like the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, applied beyond the territorial limits of the district court. Similarly, in Christian v. United States, 394 A.2d 1 (D.C. Cir. 1978), cert. denied sub nom. Clark v. United States, 442 U.S. 944 (1979), a prisoner outside the territorial jurisdiction of the District of Columbia argued that the All Writs Act could not be used to compel his/her presence in the District for a police line-up. The District of Columbia Court of Appeals rejected this narrow construction of 28 U.S.C. §1651, holding instead that, "in aid of its authorized jurisdiction the Superior Court [of the District of Columbia] may issue extraterritorial writs." Christian v. United States, supra, at 45 [emphasis in original].

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

While the Supreme Court has not expressly addressed this question, several cases suggest that the Court would apply 28 U.S.C. §1651 extraterritorially. Indeed, in United States v. Hayman, 342 U.S. 205 (1952), the Supreme Court expressly endorsed an extraterritorial use of the Act. Hayman involved a prisoner's petition, under 28 U.S.C. §2255, to vacate his sentence. At the time the prisoner filed this motion he was confined in a federal penitentiary outside the territorial limits of the sentencing court. In its opinion, the Supreme Court concluded that the prisoner was entitled to a hearing on this motion and held that the All Writs Act authorized the district court to compel his presence since, "[i]ssuance of an order to produce the prisoner is auxiliary to the jurisdiction of the trial court. . . in 28 U.S.C. §2255 itself. . . . Id. at 220.

Similarly, in Carbo v. United States, 364 U.S. 611 (1961), the Supreme Court held that a district court could issue writs of habeas corpus ad prosequendum to persons outside its territorial limits. In reaching this conclusion the court relied exclusively on 28 U.S.C. §2241, the federal habeas corpus statute. Nonetheless, the court's rationale should apply with equal force to writs issued under 28 U.S.C. §1651 since these two sections share a common statutory antecedent. (Both 28 U.S.C. §1651 and 28 U.S.C. §2241 were derived from Section 14 of the Judiciary Act of 1789, 1 Stat. 81-82 (1789). See Carbo v. United States, supra, at 614-17 (1961)).

Indeed, a construction of 28 U.S.C. §1651 which does not give it extraterritorial effect creates a jurisdictional anomaly. District courts would be able to issue arrest warrants, subpoenas and writs of habeas corpus which could be served outside their districts; yet they could not rely upon the All Writs Act to issue orders of similar force and effect.

A more detailed analysis of this issue has been prepared by the General Litigation and Legal Advice Section of the Criminal Division. Prosecutors with questions concerning the extraterritorial effect of All Writs Act orders in fugitive cases are encouraged to contact the Section at FTS 724-7035.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

It should further be noted that Rule 17(c), Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure, should not be used as an alternative to the grand jury subpoena to secure telephone toll records and other evidence to aid in the search for a fugitive even in cases where the fugitive is wanted on a federal indictment. Rule 17 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedures indicates that subpoenas issued under that rule are for the purpose of obtaining witnesses and documents for trial or in anticipation of trial. Use of a Rule 17(c) subpoena before the defendant has been located and arraigned is inappropriate. See United States v. General Department of International Air Services, 420 F. Supp. 98 (S.D.N.Y. 1976), where the court stated:

Rule 17(c) was not intended to provide an additional means of discovery. Bowman Dairy Co. v. United States, 341 U.S. 214 . . . (1951); In re Magnus, Mahee and Reynard, Inc., 311 F.2d 12 (2d Cir. 1962), cert. denied 373 U.S. 902 . . . (1963); United States v. Murray, 297 F.2d 812 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 369 U.S. 828 . . . (1962) . . . . Finally, it is well recognized that 'a motion of this nature [for rule 17 (c) subpoenas] should not be made or entertained before preliminary motions e.g., addressed to the indictment) have been disposed of.' 8 Moore Federal Practice, Par. 17.07 (1975 ed.). See also United States v. Long, 15 F. R.D. 25 (D.C. Pa. 1953).

See also United States v. Standard Oil Co., 316 F.2d 884 (7th Cir. 1963), and United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683 (1974) at 698-99, where the court discussed the requirements for a Rule 17(c) subpoena. The court enumerated the requirements for Rule 17(c) subpoenas: (1) the documents sought are evidentiary and relevant; (2) they were not otherwise procurable in advance of trial; and (3) the party cannot prepare for trial without the documents, and the trial would be unreasonably delayed without production before trial; (4) application is in good faith and not a fishing expedition. It is clear that subpoenas issued before arrest of the defendant and for the sole purpose of locating him/her could not meet the requirements for Rule 17(c) subpoenas set forth in United States v. Nixon, supra, and any attempt to use such subpoena to locate the fugitive would be improper.

Following are sample forms which may be used when making applications for court orders under the All Writs Act, 28 U.S.C. §1651, for the production of telephone company toll records or any other records to be used for locating a federal fugitive. The forms in "Set A" consist of an application which is to be verified by the Assistant U.S. Attorney and an order for the court's signature. The verified application must contain a statement in paragraph 2 setting forth the factual basis for the reasonable belief that the records sought might lead to location of the fugitive.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The forms in "Set B" consist of an application by the Assistant U.S. Attorney which is not verified, and an affidavit to be signed by the investigating agent which sets forth the factual basis for a reasonable belief that the records sought will lead to location of the fugitive. "Set B" also contains a court order.

It is recommended that, when possible, "Set A" forms be used due to their brevity. Many U.S. Attorneys' offices have used forms similar to these which do not require an additional affidavit from the investigating agent.

These forms are suggested forms only. U.S. Attorneys may have already adopted a form for All Writs Act requests which vary in some respects. If the U.S. Attorney's forms contain all of the basic elements of these suggested forms, the U.S. Attorney's existing forms may be used.

Any questions regarding the use of the All Writs Act for the production of records in federal fugitive cases should be addressed to the General Litigation and Legal Advice Section of the Criminal Division, FTS 724-6948.

U.S.A.M. (superseded)

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

The following guidelines should be observed in All Writs Act application:

1. There must be an outstanding arrest warrant for the fugitive from the U.S. District Court or the U.S. Magistrate.

2. The All Writs Act Order can only be issued in the federal district where the criminal case is pending, not in the district where the records are located where that is a different district.

3. The order should be obtained from a judge of the U.S. District Court unless the U.S. District Court has delegated appropriate authority to the U.S. Magistrate. In some districts magistrates have issued such orders, however this authority may vary in some districts.

4. The records will be produced to agents of the field office which has jurisdiction over the city where the records are located.

5. The All Writs Act Order should allow approximately ten to twelve days between the date of the order and the required production of the records. The purpose of this requirement is to allow the affected company sufficient time to challenge the order in the District Court of issuance if it desires to do so. It should be noted that this time requirement does not preclude more timely production of the records if the company is cooperative.

6. The verified application of Set A, and the affidavit of Set B, should clearly demonstrate the reasonable belief that the records sought may reveal leads to the whereabouts of the fugitive. See suggestions in paragraph 2 of the form for a verified application, and paragraph 4 of the form for an affidavit.

7. Although the telephone toll records will probably be the most common records sought with this procedure, All Writs Act orders may be used for the production of other records which might assist in the location of the fugitive. For example, such orders have been used for the production of medical records and utility records. In any event, there must be a showing of a reasonable belief that the records sought will contain information leading to the location of the fugitive.

8. All Writs Act orders may not be utilized to obtain records to locate federal parole violators who are wanted on federal parole violators' warrants for the reason that there is no pending case in the U.S. District Court and the court therefore lacks jurisdiction.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-11.221 Power of a Grand Jury Limited by Venue

A case should not be presented to a grand jury in a district unless venue for the offense lies in that district. Nevertheless, it is common for a grand jury to investigate matters occurring at least partly outside its own district, because federal offenses are often prosecutable in more than one district, and a grand jury is under no obligation to determine venue early in its investigation. A witness should not be heard to challenge the right of a grand jury to inquire into events that happened in other districts. As a general matter, a witness has a duty to testify if the grand jury has a de facto existence and cannot resist questions on the grounds of relevancy or materiality. The matter is discussed more fully below. See United States v. Blair, 250 U.S. 273 (1919); Brown v. United States, 245 F.2d 549 (8th Cir. 1957); United States v. Girgenti, 197 F.2d 218 (3d Cir. 1952).

9-11.222 Power of a Grand Jury Limited by the District Court

It is often said that the grand jury is an arm or appendage of the court. This has a certain significance but is also misleading. The grand jury is dependent on the court in certain respects and independent in other respects.

Lacking powers of its own, the grand jury must rely upon the district court's subpoena and contempt powers if witnesses are to be compelled to attend and to testify in grand jury sessions. See Brown v. United States, 359 U.S. 41 (1959). This presents no problems in the ordinary course. But a court may properly deny a grand jury the use of subpoenas to engage in "the indiscriminate summoning of witnesses with no definite object in mind and in a spirit of meddlesome inquiry"; the court may curb a grand jury when it clearly exceeds "its historic authority." See Hale v. Henkel, 201 U.S. 43, 63 (1906); In re April 1956 Term Grand Jury, 230 F.2d 263, 269 (7th Cir. 1956). In any event, the district court has broad authority to discharge a grand jury impaneled under Rule 6 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, and rather than monitor the issuance of grand jury subpoenas in situations involving a flagrant abuse, the court might more likely put an end to the grand jury by discharging it. See Fed. R. Crim. P. 6(g); Wright, Federal Practice and Procedure, Criminal §§101, 112. Contrast the provisions governing discharge of special grand juries discussed at USAM 9-11.420, infra.

There is a counterbalancing principle. Since the grand jury enjoys Constitutional status, the district court must neither control nor interfere with the grand jury in "the exercise of its essential functions." See United States v. United States District Court for the Southern District of

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

West Virginia, 238 F.2d 713 (4th Cir. 1956), cert. denied, sub nom., Valley Bell Dairy Co. v. United States, 352 U.S. 981 (1957). In that case, the district court was held to have interfered improperly with the grand jury by denying government counsel the use of the grand jury transcript and by instructing the jurors to vote without the benefit of government counsel's summarization of the evidence.

The government attorney also enjoys a constitutionally-based independence. Court, prosecutor, and grand jury--each has its own authority; and a court may not exercise its supervisory power over the grand jury in such a way as to encroach upon the jurors' or the prosecutor's prerogatives, unless there is a clear basis in law and fact for doing so. See United States v. Chanen, 549 F.2d 1306 (9th Cir. 1977).

The subpoena power of the court is limited to an extent under Rule 17 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, and this in turn affects the investigative power of the grand jury. The subject is treated below at USAM 9-11.230.

9-11.223 Power of a Grand Jury Limited by the Government Attorney

No federal grand jury can indict without the concurrence of the attorney for the government. He/she must sign the indictment under Rule 7(c) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure for the indictment to be valid, and the judiciary cannot compel the attorney for the government to sign any indictment. In signing an indictment, the attorney for the government is not just complying with Rule 7; the attorney is exercising a power belonging to the executive branch of the government. See United States v. Cox, 342 F.2d 167 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 391 U.S. 935 (1965); Smith v. United States, 375 F.2d 243 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 391 U.S. 841 (1967).

9-11.224 Power of a Grand Jury Limited By Testimonial Privilege

A witness before a grand jury enjoys the same testimonial privilege he/she would have at any stage of a criminal proceeding. The single rule in the Federal Rules of Evidence that is made applicable to grand jury proceedings is Rule 501 on testimonial privileges; see Fed. R. Evid. 101 and 1101(c) and (d). Federal Rule of Evidence 501 provides that, except as otherwise required by the testimonial privileges of witnesses "shall be governed by the United States in the light of reason and experience." The subject is thus left for case law development. But Rule 501 is clear: federal law (not state law) is controlling on the matter of testimonial privilege before grand juries. See United States v. Woodall, 438 F.2d 1317 (5th Cir. 1970), cert. denied, 403 U.S. 933 (1971). It is emphasized, however, that Rule 501 is only a rule for the witness and does not set a standard for what may be heard and used as a basis for indictment.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

See the Advisory Committee's Note to Rule 1101 of the Federal Rule of Evidence. In short, a grand jury may consider and indict on the basis of testimony that will not necessarily be admissible at trial; and the indictment will not be vitiated because evidence was obtained in violation of a testimonial privilege. See, e.g., United States v. Fultz, 602 F.2d 830 (8th Cir. 1979); United States v. Colasurdo, 453 F.2d 585 (2d Cir. 1971), cert. denied, 406 U.S. 917 (1972); cf. United States v. Franklin, 598 F.2d 954 (5th Cir.), cert. denied 444 U.S. 870 (1970.)

When a grand jury witness invokes a testimonial privilege, the attorney for the government will want to examine the claim very carefully to ascertain whether the privilege, although perhaps available in that state, is properly invoked in a federal proceeding. Each witness is under a broad duty to answer questions; the witness has no privilege to protect others. See United States v. Mandujano, 425 U.S. 564 (1976). To compel a witness to give testimony, resort may be had to the civil contempt remedy under 18 U.S.C. §401, and Rule 42 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure is utilized for punitive purposes. If the privilege against self-incrimination is invoked in appropriate circumstances, it may be necessary to consider whether to seek authority for obtaining an order to compel testimony under 18 U.S.C. §6003, which may be enforced by use of the civil contempt remedy.

One exceptional situation is to be noted. A grand jury witness is entitled, by reason of 18 U.S.C. §2515, to refuse to respond to questions based on illegal interception of oral or wire communications. Gelbard v. United States, 408 U.S. 41 (1972). The decision is based on the statute and not any broader principle.

9-11.230 Limitation on Naming Persons Unindicted Co-Conspirators

The practice of naming individuals as unindicted co-conspirators in an indictment charging a criminal conspiracy has been severely criticized in United States v. Briggs, 514 F.2d 794 (5th Cir. 1974), and other cases. In granting appellants' motion for an order of expungement in Briggs, the court of appeals held that, in charging them with criminal conduct without indicting them, the grand jury exceeded its power and authority and that its action was a denial of due process to appellants since it deprived them of an opportunity to challenge the correctness of the grand jury's accusation. See also United States v. Chadwick, 556 F.2d 450 (9th Cir. 1977); Application of Jordan, 439 F. Supp. 199 (S.D. W.Va. 1977); United States v. Hansen, 422 F. Supp. 430 (E.D.Wis. 1976); cf. In Re Smith, 656 F.2d 1101 (5th Cir. 1981) (accusation in prosecutor's summary).

Primarily on the basis of Briggs, the American Bar Association has recently adopted, as part of its policy on the grand jury, the following statement of principle. "The grand jury shall not name a person in an indictment as an unindicted co-conspirator in a criminal conspiracy. Nothing herein shall prevent supplying such names in a bill of particulars." Principle 7 of 25 principles.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

The Department did not oppose the adoption of this Principle by the ABA and generally concurs in it. As the court in Briggs pointed out, there is no need ordinarily to name a person as an unindicted co-conspirator in an indictment in order to fulfill any legitimate prosecutorial interest or duty. For purposes of indictment itself, it is sufficient, for example, to allege that the defendant conspired with "another person or persons known." The identity of the person can be supplied, upon request, in a bill of particulars. With respect to the trial, the person's identity and status as a co-conspirator can be established, for evidentiary purposes, through the introduction of proof sufficient to invoke the co-conspirator hearsay exception without subjecting the person to the burden of a formal accusation by a grand jury.

Accordingly, in the absence of some sound reason (e.g., where the fact of the person's conspiratorial involvement is a matter of public record or knowledge), it is not desirable for U.S. Attorneys to identify unindicted co-conspirators in conspiracy indictments.

9-11.240 Limitation on Grand Jury Subpoenas

Subpoenas in federal proceedings, including grand jury proceedings, are governed by Rule 17 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. As authorized under the Rule, the clerk of the court makes available to the grand jury (or the attorney for the government) a supply of subpoenas signed and sealed but otherwise in blank. See United States v. Kleen Laundry and Cleaners, Inc., 381 F. Supp. 519 (E.D.N.Y. 1974). Grand jury subpoenas are usually served by the marshals, but service by other persons is authorized if the other persons are not less than 18 years of age (and not parties to the litigation). Grand jury subpoenas may be served at any place within the United States. Under Rule 17(g) of the Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure, a failure by a person without adequate excuse to obey a subpoena served upon him/her may be deemed a contempt of the court.

Rule 17 of the Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure provides that, "on motion made promptly," a court may quash or modify any subpoena duces tecum if compliance therewith would be "unreasonable or oppressive." Unlike Rule 45(b) the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the Criminal Rule allows for the consideration of a motion to quash even if it is made as late as the time set for compliance with the subpoena. See Wright, Federal Practice and Procedure, Criminal §275. The party who files a motion to quash has the burden of showing that a subpoena is unreasonable and oppressive.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

In Re Grand Jury Subpoenas, 391 F. Supp. 991 (D.R.I. 1975) (collecting numerous cases on motions to quash subpoenas).

The breadth of the investigative powers of a grand jury does not justify the issuance of general subpoenas duces tecum. Subpoenas duces tecum must be reasonably specific. Rule 17 does not require a precise identification of the exact documents sought by the grand jury; a reasonable particularity is all that is necessary. The description given is usually in terms of the subjects to which the writings relate and if a subpoena is broader in one respect (covering, for example, a lengthy period of record-keeping), it may have to be more specific or narrower in describing the material sought, depending upon the overall circumstances. Illustrative cases are collected at Wright, Federal Practice and Procedure, Criminal §275.

It is sometimes said that Rule 17 implements the Fourth Amendment prohibition against unreasonable searches and seizures. A subpoena, however, is a process quite distinct from a search warrant. If at all applicable to subpoenas duces tecum, Fourth Amendment considerations simply militate against subpoenas that are sweeping in scope. See United States v. Dionisio, 410 U.S. 1 (1973); Oklahoma Press Publishing Co. v. Walling, 327 U.S. 186 (1946); United States v. Universal Manufacturing Company, 525 F.2d 808 (8th Cir. 1975). A subpoena duces tecum is subject to no more stringent Fourth Amendment requirements than is the "ordinary" subpoena. See United States v. Miller, 425 U.S. 435 (1976), at No. 8. But see United States v. Hilton, 534 F.2d 556, 564-565 (3d Cir. 1976) (concerning irregularly issued subpoenas).

The breadth of the investigative powers of a grand jury does justify the issuance of subpoenas ad testificandum without any fine regard for the relevancy or materiality of the testimony likely to be adduced. It follows that witnesses cannot resist questions by a grand jury on the grounds of relevancy or materiality or require any showing of the reasons why individuals were subpoenaed. A grand jury may, for example, subpoena a large number of witnesses in order to obtain voice exemplars without being limited by Fourth Amendment standards. Only if there was a real abuse of the grand jury's powers--if, for example, the jury were to pry into someone's business or domestic affairs for idle purposes--would a court exercise its inherent power to control the grand jury's use of subpoenas ad testificandum. See Branzburg v. Hayes, 408 U.S. 665 (1972); United States v. Dionisio, supra; Blair v. United States, 250 U.S. 273 (1919); Hale v. Henkel, 201 U.S. 43 (1906); United States v. Doe, 460 F.2d 328 (1st Cir. 1972); In re April 1956 Term Grand Jury, 230 F.2d 263 (7th Cir. 1956).

Motions to quash subpoenas duces tecum may be granted on more specific bases that appear in Rule 17; for example, the privileged character of the material sought may place the material effectively beyond the reach of a subpoena. See Continental Oil Company v. United States, 330 F.2d 347 (9th Cir. 1964); United States v. Guterman, 272 F.2d 344 (2d Cir. 1959); cf. Gelbard v. United States, 408 U.S. 41 (1972), concerning grand jury inquiry based upon an illegal interception of an oral or wire communication. It is emphasized, again, that issues of privilege are determined under federal law, rather than state law. See Rule 501 of the Federal Rules of Evidence.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Grand jury subpoenas may be issued, to be served abroad, to compel the appearance before the grand jury of a national or resident of the United States and the production of "a specified document or other thing by him." The decision to the contrary in United States v. Thompson, 319 F.2d 665 (2d Cir. 1963), was overcome by an amendment of 28 U.S.C. §1783. See Wright, Federal Practice and Procedure, Criminal §277. However, before issuing a subpoena to a witness abroad, the district court is required under 28 U.S.C. §1783(a) to make certain findings regarding the necessity for subpoenaing the witness. The issuance of a grand jury subpoena to an American citizen in a foreign country may at times be obviated by presenting the person's statement to the grand jury in the form of hearsay.

There can be enormous difficulties involved in investigating any matter abroad and in seeking to obtain the testimony of persons located in other countries, even if they are citizens of the United States. See Jones, International Judicial Assistance: Procedural Chaos And A Program For Reform, 62 Yale L.J. 515. Subpoenas cannot be issued and served abroad upon foreign nationals; even to request a foreign national to appear in this country may involve sensitive problems. Accordingly, before making any effort or initiating any process to obtain testimony or evidence from abroad, prior consultation with the Criminal Division is required. Inquiries should be directed to the Office of International Affairs.

All grand jury witnesses should be accorded reasonable advance notice of their appearance before the grand jury. "Forthwith" or "eo instantanter" subpoenas should be used only when swift action is important and then only with the prior approval of the U.S. Attorney. Considerations, among others, which bear upon the desirability of using such subpoenas include the following: 1) the risk of flight; 2) the risk of destruction or fabrication of evidence; 3) the need for the orderly presentation of evidence; and, 4) the degree of inconvenience of the witness.

Policies regarding the issuance of subpoenas to members of the news media and subpoenas for telephone toll records of members of the news media are discussed at USAM 9-2.161 and 1-5.410.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-11.241 Fair Credit Reporting Act and Grand Jury Subpoenas--Special Handling Necessary

The Fair Credit Reporting Act (15 U.S.C. §1681 et seq.) prohibits credit reporting agencies from furnishing consumer reports except, inter alia, "in response to the order of a court" of competent jurisdiction. Authorities are divided on the question whether grand jury subpoenas are court orders within the meaning of the quoted language (at 15 U.S.C. §1681 b(1)). The cases are collected in Matter of Application to Quash Grand Jury Subpoena, 526 F. Supp. 1253 (D. Md. 1981). The only circuit court to rule on the issue held that a subpoena is not a court order within the meaning of the Act. See In re Gren, 633 F.2d 825 (9th Cir. 1980).

Because of the division of opinion on the legal issue and the resulting differences in practices in the various districts, credit reporting agencies are often constrained to resist grand jury subpoenas which they would promptly obey if the subpoenas were specially issued by the district courts. The trouble, expense and delay involved for the agencies and the government seem particularly unwarranted when no definitive resolution of the legal issue is foreseeable at an early date. Heretofore, in order to try to minimize these problems, and the need for litigation, U.S. Attorneys were given discretion to seek court approval of a grand jury subpoena. This policy, however, has not been completely successful in resolving the issue. Accordingly, to provide consistency and uniformity in the various districts, the Department of Justice has determined that henceforth attorneys for the government in seeking to obtain credit reporting agency records, should seek court orders or the endorsement or other special handling of subpoenas by the district court so as to obviate the legal difficulties. See, e.g., In Re Gren, supra, at n. 3.

It is to be noted that this change does not reflect an abandonment or modification of the Department's legal position but is adopted solely for reasons of policy in order to facilitate grand jury access to credit reporting agency records.

It should be sufficient simply to make an in camera, ex parte showing that the information sought from the credit reporting agency is or may be relevant to an ongoing investigation, that it is properly within the grand jury's jurisdiction and that it is not sought primarily for any other purpose. Cf. In Re Grand Jury Proceedings (Larry Smith), 579 F.2d 836 (3d Cir. 1978).

9-11.250 Authority to Arrest Material Witness

It has been inferred from Rule 46(b) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure and from 18 U.S.C. §3149 that federal district courts have the authority to order the arrest of material witnesses and to detain such witnesses or to require them to give bail to insure their future appearance as witnesses. There must be a showing and an independent determination by the court that probable cause exists for the arrest and detention of a material witness. See Bacon v. United States, 449 F.2d 933 (9th Cir. 1971) (and cases cited therein).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-11.260 Advice of "Rights"

The policy concerning advice of rights to be given to grand jury witnesses has been changed. It is now the Department's policy to advise a grand jury witness of the rights described below only if such witness is a "target" or "subject" (as hereinafter defined) of a grand jury investigation.

The Supreme Court declined to decide whether a grand jury witness must be warned of his/her Fifth Amendment privilege against compulsory self-incrimination before his/her grand jury testimony can be used against the witness. See United States v. Washington, 431 U.S. 181, 186 & 190-191 (1977); United States v. Wong, 431 U.S. 174 (1977); United States v. Mandujano, 425 U.S. 564, 582 n.7 (1976). It is important to note, however, that in Mandujano the Court took cognizance of the fact that federal prosecutors customarily warn "targets" of their Fifth Amendment rights before grand jury questioning begins. See United States v. Mandujano, supra. Similarly, in Washington the Court pointed to the fact that Fifth Amendment warnings were administered as negating "any possible compulsion to self-incrimination which might otherwise exist" in the grand jury setting. See United States v. Washington, supra, at 188.

Notwithstanding the lack of a clear constitutional imperative, it is the internal policy of the Department that an "Advice of Rights" form, as set forth below, be appended to all grand jury subpoenas to be served on any "target" or "subject" (as hereinafter defined) of an investigation:

Advice of Rights

A. The grand jury is conducting an investigation of possible violations of federal criminal laws involving: (State here the general subject matter of inquiry, e.g., the conducting of an illegal gambling business in violation of 18 U.S.C. §1955).

B. You may refuse to answer any question if a truthful answer to the question would tend to incriminate you.

C. Anything that you do say may be used against you by the grand jury or in a subsequent legal proceeding.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

D. If you have retained counsel, the grand jury will permit you a reasonable opportunity to step outside the grand jury room to consult with counsel if you so desire.

In addition, these "warnings" should be given by the prosecutor on the record before the grand jury and the witness should be asked to affirm that the witness understands them.

A "target" is a person as to whom the prosecutor or the grand jury has substantial evidence linking him/her to the commission of a crime and who, in the judgment of the prosecutor, is a putative defendant. An officer or employee of an organization which is a target is not automatically to be considered as a target even if such officer's or employee's conduct contributed to the commission of crime by the target organization, and the same lack of automatic target status holds true for organizations which employ, or employed, an officer or employee who is a target. Although the Court in United States v. Washington, supra, held that "targets" of the grand jury's investigation are entitled to no special warnings relative to their status as "potential defendant[s]", the Department continues its longstanding internal practice to advise witnesses who are known "targets" of the investigation that their conduct is being investigated for possible violation of federal criminal law. This supplemental "warning" will be administered on the record when the target witness is advised of the matters discussed in the preceding paragraphs.

A "subject" of an investigation is a person whose conduct is within the scope of the grand jury's investigation.

Where a local district court insists that the notice of rights may not be appended to a grand jury subpoena, the advice of rights may be set forth in a separate letter and mailed to or handed to the witness when the subpoena is served.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-11.261 Subpoenaing Targets of the Investigation

A grand jury may properly subpoena a subject or a target of the investigation and question him/her about his/her involvement in the crime under investigation. See United States v. Wong, 431 U.S. 174, 179 n.8 (1977); United States v. Washington, 431 U.S. 181, 190 n.6 (1977); United States v. Mandujano, 425 U.S. 564, 573-75 and 584 n.9 (1976); United States v. Dionisio, 410 U.S. 1, 10 n.8 (1973); Kastigar v. United States, 406 U.S. 441, 446 (1972); Murphy v. Waterfront Commission of New York Harbor, 378 U.S. 52, 102 (1964) (concurring opinion); Brown v. Walker, 161 U.S. 591, 610 (1896); United States v. Friedman, 445 F.2d 1076 (9th Cir. 1971); United States v. Capaldo, 402 F.2d 821 (2d Cir. 1968); United States v. Scully, 225 F.2d 113 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 350 U.S. 897 (1955). However, in the context of particular cases such a subpoena may carry the appearance of unfairness. Because the potential for misunderstanding is great, before a known "target" (as defined in USAM 9-11.260, supra) is subpoenaed to testify before the grand jury about his/her involvement in the crime under investigation, an effort should be made to secure his/her voluntary appearance. If a voluntary appearance cannot be obtained, he/she should be subpoenaed only after the grand jury and U.S. Attorney or the responsible Assistant Attorney General have approved the subpoena. In determining whether to approve a subpoena for a "target," careful attention will be paid to the following considerations:

A. The importance to the successful conduct of the grand jury's investigation of the testimony or other information sought;

B. Whether the substance of the testimony or other information sought could be provided by other witnesses; and

C. Whether the questions the prosecutor and the grand jurors intend to ask or the other information sought would be protected by a valid claim of privilege.

9-11.262 Requests by Subjects and Targets to Testify before the Grand Jury

It is not altogether uncommon for subjects or targets of the grand jury's investigation, particularly in white-collar cases, to request or

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

demand the opportunity to tell the grand jury their side of the story. While the prosecutor has no legal obligation to permit such witnesses to testify (United States v. Leverage Funding System, Inc., 637 F.2d 645 (9th Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 452 U.S. 961 (1981); United States v. Gardner, 516 F.2d 334 (7th Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 861 (1976)), a refusal to do so can create the appearance of unfairness. Accordingly, under normal circumstances, where no burden upon the grand jury or delay of its proceedings is involved, reasonable requests by a "subject" or "target" of an investigation (as defined in USAM 9-11.260, supra) personally to testify before the grand jury ordinarily should be given favorable consideration, provided that such witness explicitly waives his/her privilege against self-incrimination and is represented by counsel or voluntarily and knowingly appears without counsel and consents to full examination under oath.

Some such witnesses undoubtedly will wish to supplement their testimony with the testimony of others. The decision whether to accommodate such requests, reject them after listening to the testimony of the target or the subject, or to seek statements from the suggested witnesses is a matter which is left to the sound discretion of the grand jury. When passing on such requests, it must be kept in mind that the grand jury was never intended to be and is not properly either an adversary proceeding or the arbiter of guilt or innocence. See, e.g., United States v. Calandra, 414 U.S. 338, 343 (1974).

9-11.263 Notification of Targets

Where a target is not called to testify pursuant to USAM 9-11.261, supra, and does not request to testify on his/her own motion (see USAM 9-11.262, supra), the prosecutor, in appropriate cases, is encouraged to notify such person a reasonable time before seeking an indictment in order to afford him/her an opportunity to testify (subject to the conditions set forth in USAM 9-11.262, supra) before the grand jury. Of course, notification would not be appropriate in routine clear cases nor where such action might jeopardize the investigation or prosecution because of the likelihood of flight, destruction or fabrication of evidence, endangerment of other witnesses, undue delay or otherwise would be inconsistent with the ends of justice.

9-11.264 Advance Assertions of an Intention to Claim the Fifth Amendment Privilege Against Compulsory Self-Incrimination

A question frequently faced by federal prosecutors is how to respond to an assertion by a prospective grand jury witness that if called to testify he/she will refuse to testify on Fifth Amendment grounds. Some argue that unless the prosecutor is prepared to seek an order pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §6003, the witness should be excused from testifying. However, such a broad rule would be improper and too convenient for witnesses to avoid testifying truthfully to their knowledge of relevant facts. Moreover, once compelled to appear, the witness may be willing and able to answer some or all of the grand jury's questions without incriminating himself/herself. However, if a "target" of the investigation (as defined in USAM 9-11.260, supra) and his/her attorney state in a writing, signed by both, that the "target" will refuse to testify on Fifth Amendment grounds, the witness ordinarily should be excused from testifying unless the grand jury and the U.S. Attorney agree to insist on the appearance. In determining the desirability of insisting on the appearance of such a person, consideration should be given to the factors which justified the subpoena in the first place, i.e., the importance of the testimony or other information sought, its unavailability from other sources, and the applicability of the Fifth Amendment privilege to the likely areas of inquiry. (See USAM 9-11.261, supra.)

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-11.270 Limitation on Resubpoenaing Contumacious Witnesses before Successive Grand Juries

While the Supreme Court in Shillitani v. United States, 384 U.S. 364, 371 n.8 (1965), appears to approve the reimposition of civil contempt sanctions in successive grand juries, it is the general policy of the Department not to subpoena and seek contempt citations in a successor grand jury against a witness who refused to testify before the prior grand jury and was consequently incarcerated for such refusal. The resubpoenaing of a contumacious witness may, however, be justified in certain limited situations such as when the questions to be asked the witness relate to matters not covered in the previous proceedings or when there is an indication from the witness or his/her legal counsel that the witness will in fact testify if called before the new grand jury. If the witness is believed to possess information essential to the investigation, resubpoenaing may also be justified when the witness himself/herself is involved to a significant degree in the criminality about which he can testify. In such cases, prior authorization must be obtained from the Assistant Attorney General, Criminal Division, to subpoena the witness before the successive grand jury as well as to seek civil contempt sanctions if the witness continues to persist in his/her refusal to testify.

Since the coercive effect of a civil contempt adjudication is substantially diluted when the grand jury's term is about to expire, it is recommended that a subpoena ordinarily not be issued to a witness who it is anticipated will refuse to testify before such grand jury. This, of course, is a matter of judgment for the U.S. Attorney and there may well be situations when it is necessary to subpoena a witness and institute contempt proceedings for recalcitrance in such circumstances. In most situations, however, it would seem preferable to subpoena the witness before a new grand jury.

9-11.300 THE PROVISIONS OF FEDERAL RULES OF CRIMINAL PROCEDURE 6

9-11.310 Summoning Grand Juries (Fed. R. Crim. P. 6(a) and (b))

Rule 6(a) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure authorizes courts to impanel as many grand juries "as the public interest requires." Each grand jury must consist of not less than 16 nor more than 23 members. The jury selection process is discussed below at USAM 9-11.326 infra. Either the clerk of the court or a jury commission (depending upon the type of plan adopted for the random selection of jurors) manages the jury selection process under the Jury Selection and Service Act.

Rule 6 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure does not state explicitly what constitutes a quorum to enable a grand jury to operate. However, since a grand jury cannot be impaneled with less than sixteen members, it is considered that 16 jurors constitute a quorum. A grand jury should not function with less than 16 members in attendance.

9-11.320 Objection to Grand Jury and to Grand Jurors

The U.S. Attorney's primary concern with the grand jury selection process arises under Rule 6(b) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. Rule 6(b) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure allows for the making of two basic types of objections: Objections to the array (that the jurors were not selected, drawn, or summoned in accordance with law); and objections to individual jurors (that they are not legally qualified to serve). The Rule provides two methods for making these objections.

9-11.321 Challenges

Rule 6(b)(1) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure permits the attorney for the government or a defendant held to answer in the district court to make challenges before the administration of the oath to the grand jurors. The rule was recognized, when framed, as being of limited practical value and was not meant to prevent objections being made instead by means of motions to dismiss. See the original note to subdivision (b) of Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure 6.

9-11.322 Motions to Dismiss, in General

If not previously determined upon challenge, objections to the array or to individual jurors may be made under Rule 6(b)(2) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure 6(b)(2) by means of motions to dismiss the indictment. Objections will usually be raised by this method. It is expressly provided in the Rule that such motions to dismiss should be made and granted as provided in 28 U.S.C. §1867(e).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-11.323 Tests for Determining Motions to Dismiss

Under Federal Rule Criminal Procedure 6(b)(2), an indictment shall not be dismissed because one or more of the grand jurors was not legally qualified to serve if it appears from the record (discussed below) that, after deducting the number not legally qualified, there were still twelve or more jurors who concurred in finding the indictment. Nor (as discussed below) shall an indictment be dismissed because of any other objection to an individual juror if his/her vote cannot have been decisive in returning an indictment.

Motions to dismiss on the basis of objections to the array must rest, under 28 U.S.C. §1867, "on the ground of substantial failure to comply" with the Jury Selection and Service Act; and the burden of proof rests with the party attacking the jury selection procedure. See United States v. Goodlow, 597 F.2d 159 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 442 U.S. 913 (1979); Mobley v. United States, 379 F.2d 768 (6th Cir. 1967); United States v. Smaidone, 485 F.2d 1333 (10th Cir. 1973), cert. denied, 416 U.S. 936 (1974).

9-11.324 Standing to Object

Only a defendant "who has been held to answer" is permitted under the Rule to challenge the grand jury prior to his indictment. See, e.g., United States v. Barone, 311 F. Supp. 496 (W.D. Pa. 1970). Any defendant has standing to object when a jury has been selected on an impermissible basis whether or not the defendant was a member of the excluded class or group. Peters v. Kiff 407 U.S. 492 (1972); Pallard v. United States, 329 U.S. 187 (1946). There is no standing to object, however, in a witness who is resisting a grand jury subpoena or court order to testify. United States v. Fitch, 472 F.2d 548 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, sub nom. Meisel v. United States, 412 U.S. 954 (1973); United States v. Duncan, 456 F.2d 1401 (9th Cir. 1972).

9-11.325 Motion to Dismiss Because of Objections to Individual Jurors

Section 1865 of Title 28 enumerates the legal qualifications for jurors. Every person is to be considered qualified to serve on a jury (grand or petit) unless: (1) he/she is not a United States citizen eighteen years of age who has resided for one year within the judicial district; (2) he/she is unable to read, write, and understand English sufficiently to fill out the juror qualification form in a satisfactory manner; (3) he/she is unable to speak English; (4) he/she is incapable of rendering satisfactory jury service due to mental or physical infirmity; or (5) he/she has been convicted in a state or federal court of record of a felony and has not had his/her civil rights restored, or he/she is under a pending felony charge.

An individual may be legally qualified and still excluded from serving as a juror, by reason, e.g., of an inability to be impartial or a tendency to be disruptive. See 28 U.S.C. §1866(c). Even if a motion to dismiss an indictment involves a complaint about a juror for reason other than his/her legal qualifications, the problem may be obviated, just as it is when the complaint concerns a juror's legal qualifications, by showing that at least twelve other jurors concurred in finding the indictment. See United States v. Anzelmo, 319 F. Supp. 1106 (E.D. La. 1970); United States v. Brandt, 139 F. Supp. 349 (N.D. Ohio 1955).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-11.326 Motions to Dismiss Based Upon Objections to the Array

An objection to the array under Rule 6(b) is an objection that the grand jury was not selected, drawn, or summoned according to law. Incorporated by reference into Rule 6, the provisions of 28 U.S.C. §1867 are made the exclusive means for raising objections to the array. A motion to dismiss based upon an objection to the array must, pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §1867(a) and (b), allege a "substantial failure" to comply with the Jury Selection and Service Act. The "substantial failure" should involve some frustration of the goals of the Jury Selection and Service Act. See United States v. Evans, 526 F.2d 701 (5th Cir. 1976).

It is declared federal policy under the Jury Selection and Service Act (specifically 28 U.S.C. §1861 and §1862) that grand and petit jurors shall be "selected at random from a fair cross section of the community in the district or division wherein the court convenes," and no citizen shall be excluded from serving on account of race, color, religion, sex, national origin, or economic status. Pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §1863, each U.S. District Court has placed into operation a written plan for random selection of jurors. This jury selection plan generates, in accordance with 28 U.S.C. §§1864-1866, first a "master jury wheel" of names selected at random from particular sources (generally voter registration lists and certain supplemental sources); and then (on the basis of juror qualification forms executed by the persons on the master jury wheel, and "other competent evidence") a "qualified jury wheel" of names of legally qualified and non-exempt persons. From time to time, random (and usually public) drawings are conducted and subpoenas issued to a certain number of persons on the qualified jury wheel. These prospective jurors are examined further in court and, as needed, grand and petit juries are impaneled. (18 U.S.C. §3321 of Title 18 allows for the summoning of additional jurors to complete a grand jury when less than sixteen of the persons summoned attend or remain after the court allows challenges.) It is a practice in certain districts to designate alternate grand jurors, but they do not sit like their counterparts on petit juries; they sit only to replace a grand juror who is permanently excused.

Every grand jury plan must, under 28 U.S.C. §1863(b)(6), exempt the following from serving on juries: (1) members in active service in the armed forces of the United States; (2) members of the fire or police departments of any state, district, territory, possession, or subdivision thereof; and

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

(3) public officers in any of the three branches of the federal government or of any state, district, territory, possession, or subdivision thereof, who are actively engaged in the performance of official duties. Under 28 U.S.C. §1866(e), no person can be required to serve on more than one grand jury, or on both a grand jury and petit jury, within any two-year period.

There can be no proper reason for disqualifying, excluding, excusing, or exempting a person from jury service unless that reason can be found in one of the following: (1) 28 U.S.C. §1865; (2) 28 U.S.C. §1866 (note particularly the provision in §1866(c)); or (3) provisions of jury selection plans adopted in accordance with 28 U.S.C. §1863(b)(5), (6), or (7). In this connection, it is noted that the administration of the jury selection process rests within the sound discretion of the courts and their officers. See United States v. Hoffa, 349 F.2d 20 (6th Cir. 1965), aff'd. 385 U.S. 293 (1966); United States v. Anderson, 509 F.2d 312 (D. D.C. 1974), cert. denied, 420 U.S. 991 (1975).

The Jury Selection and Service Act was intended to guarantee a random selection of jurors from a fair cross section of the community, but it was recognized that the process could hardly result in jury panels that actually mirror the makeup of the community. See 1968 U.S. Code Congressional and Administrative News, 1794. The Act does not require that the selection be from a fair cross section of the total population of a district without any qualifications; to the contrary, the Act allows for and contemplates the imposition of certain restrictions that are not compatible with a statistically balanced representation in jury panels of all elements of a community. See United States v. Hoffa, 349 F.2d 20 (6th Cir. 1965), aff'd. 385 U.S. 293 (1966); United States v. McVean, 436 F.2d 1120 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 404 U.S. 822 (1971); United States v. Gast, 457 F.2d 141 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 406 U.S. 969 (1972).

While U.S. Attorneys have no responsibility for administering the Jury Selection and Service Act, they have an obvious stake in the Act's being properly administered. The requirement in 28 U.S.C. §1863(b)(4) that the master jury wheel be emptied and refilled periodically (at least every four years) affords an opportunity for reflecting upon the jury selection system and the possible effect of changed circumstances in the community. See, e.g., United States v. Gooding, 473 F.2d 425 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 412 U.S. 928 (1973); United States v. Guzman, 468 F.2d 1245 (2d Cir. 1972), cert. denied, 410 U.S. 937 (1973). While it is contemplated that voter lists will be the primary source of jurors, it is also contemplated that supplemental sources will be used at times as a corrective in the system. See United States v. Ross, 468 F.2d 1213 (9th Cir. 1972), cert. denied, 410 U.S. 989 (1973); United States v. Lewis, 472 F.2d 252 (3d Cir. 1973); 1968 U.S. Code Congressional and Administrative News, 1974.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-11.327 Giving the Court Information Pertinent to Jury Selection

Especially when a grand jury is to be selected to conduct a highly sensitive investigation, a U.S. Attorney will want to inform the district court of all facts that may be pertinent to the matter of excluding jurors under 28 U.S.C. §1866(c). Care should be taken especially to prevent the impaneling of a juror who might "be unable to render impartial jury service." If provided for in the jury selection plan, in accordance with 28 U.S.C. §1863(b)(8), the court may vary from its customary practice and keep the names drawn from the qualified jury wheel confidential "in any case where the interests of justice so require."

9-11.328 Dismissal Required by Substantial Failure to Comply

Motions challenging compliance with selection procedures shall, under 28 U.S.C. §1867(d), contain a sworn statement of the facts making out a substantial failure to comply. The moving party is entitled, in support of his/her motion, to utilize the testimony of the clerk or jury commissioner, any relevant records and papers of the jury commission or clerk that are not public or otherwise available, and any other relevant evidence. If the court finds that there has been a substantial failure to comply with the law in selecting the grand jury, the court shall stay the proceedings pending the proper selection of a grand jury, or dismiss the indictment, whichever is appropriate. See 18 U.S.C. §3288 and §3289 alleviating problems with statutes of limitation in returning new indictments.

Under 28 U.S.C. §1867(a) and (b), the rule applicable to the Attorney General and to defendants in criminal cases is that motions to dismiss or to stay the proceedings shall be made either before voir dire examination begins, or within seven days after discovery of grounds or the time when grounds could have been discovered by the exercise of diligence, whichever of these times is earlier.

Parties challenging compliance with selection procedures are entitled, under 28 U.S.C. §1867(f), to inspect records and papers used by the jury commission or clerk in connection with the jury selection process. United States v. Test, 420 U.S. 28 (1975).

A failure to make timely objection to the jury selection procedure constitutes a waiver of the objection. United States v. Jones, 687 F.2d 1265 (8th Cir. 1982); United States v. Bearden, 659 F.2d 590 (5th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 102 S. Ct. 1993; United States v. Noah, 475 F.2d 688 (9th Cir. 1973), cert. denied, sub nom., Ross v. United States, 414 U.S. 821 (1973); United States v. Owen, 492 F.2d 1100 (4th Cir. 1974). The only proper way for a party to be heard is by means of a sworn statement of facts which, if true, would establish a substantial failure to comply with the law. United States v. Guzman, 468 F.2d 1245 (2d Cir. 1972), cert. denied, 410 U.S. 937 (1973); United States v. Jones, 480 F.2d 1135 (1st Cir. 1973); United States v. James, 453 F.2d 27 (9th Cir. 1971).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

Waiver of the technical objection that jury selection requirements were not substantially complied with does not necessarily preclude a court from granting relief on the broader ground of an actual prejudice to a defendant. Thus, in United States v. Silverman, 449 F.2d 1341 (2d Cir. 1971), cert. denied, 405 U.S. 918 (1972); the court held that the defendant had waived an objection that a juror was disqualified from serving due to an inability to read; but the court indicated in dictum that, had the juror's disqualification extended to an inability to decide the case intelligently, appropriate relief should have been granted even in the absence of a timely objection.

Defendants may seek to avoid a waiver of the statutory grounds for objections by casting their objections in Constitutional terms. See Taylor v. Louisiana, 419 U.S. 522 (1975); United States v. Jones, supra; United States v. Geelan, 509 F.2d 737 (8th Cir. 1974), cert. denied, 421 U.S. 999 (1975); United States v. Dellinger, 472 F.2d 340 (7th Cir. 1972), cert. denied, 410 U.S. 970 (1973); United States v. DeAlba Conrado, 481 F.2d 1266 (5th Cir. 1973). There is a specific provision in subsection (e) of 28 U.S.C. §1867 saving "any other" available remedy from the requirements set out in 28 U.S.C. §1867. It should be noted, however, that defenses and objections based on defects in the institution or the prosecution, or on defects in the indictment or information, must be raised prior to trial to comply with Rule 12 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. Accordingly, whether the objection be on procedural or constitutional grounds, it is raised too late after trial. A waiver will be enforced on the basis either of 28 U.S.C. §1867 or Rule 12. Davis v. United States, 411 U.S. 233 (1973); Little v. United States, 524 F.2d 335 (8th Cir. 1975).

9-11.329 Effect of a Dismissal Because of Objection to the Array

It was pointed out above that what happens before one grand jury does not limit investigation by a subsequent grand jury. A dismissal of an indictment because of a challenge to the array does not mean that the evidence obtained under subpoena duces tecum was illegally obtained, and the dismissal does not prevent any subsequent subpoenaing of or use of the evidence. See United States v. Wallace and Tiernan Co., 336 U.S. 739 (1948).

9-11.330 Objections to Grand Jury And Grand Jurors (Cont'd)

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-11.331 Motions to Dismiss on Other Bases; Illegally Obtained Evidence Before a Grand Jury

Apart from objections to individual jurors and objections to the array, other kinds of objections related to the grand jury have been made by means of motions to dismiss but, in general, they have been rejected by the courts. Objections have been made, for example, about the effect upon the grand jury of adverse publicity regarding the defendant, the use in the grand jury of illegally obtained or otherwise incompetent evidence, and the misconduct of the attorney for the government before the grand jury. See, Silverthorn v. United States, 400 F.2d 627 (9th Cir. 1968), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 1022 (1971); United States v. Bruzgo, 373 F.2d 383 (3d Cir. 1967); Beatrice Foods Co. v. United States, 312 F.2d 29 (8th Cir. 1963); Back v. Washington, 369 U.S. 541 (1962); United States v. Gardner, 516 F.2d 334 (7th Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 861 (1975); 8 Moore Federal Practice—Cipes, Criminal Rules §6.03[2]-6.04. It should be observed in this connection, that Rule 6(e) allows for pre-trial discovery of the grand jury transcript upon a showing that grounds may exist for a motion to dismiss the indictment because of matters "occurring before the grand jury."

There are few principles of more importance in the administration of criminal justice than the principle announced in Costello v. United States, 350 U.S. 359, 363 (1956): an indictment returned by a legally constituted and unbiased grand jury, if valid on its face, is sufficient to call for trial of the charges on the merits. The fact that illegally obtained, privileged, or otherwise incompetent evidence was presented to the grand jury is no cause for abating the prosecution under the indictment, or for inquiring into the sufficiency of the competent evidence before the grand jury, even if the defendant may be expected to have the illegally obtained evidence suppressed or incompetent evidence excluded at trial. See United States v. Dionisio, 410 U.S. 1 (1973); United States v. Ryan, 402 U.S. 530 (1971); Lawn v. United States, 355 U.S. 359 (1956); United States v. Blue, 384 U.S. 251 (1966); United States v. Short, 671 F.2d 178 (6th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 102 S. Ct. 932, United States v. Colasurdo, 453 F.2d 585 (2d Cir. 1971), cert. denied, 406 U.S. 917 (1972); West v. United States, 359 F.2d 50 (8th Cir. 1966); Federal Rule of Evidence 1101(d)(2). Despite some argument that the Costello rule has been eroded by cases calling for a more limited use of hearsay in grand jury proceedings, it appears that the rule is entitled to its full force today in light of the broad bases for decision in United States v. Calandra, 414 U.S. 338 (1974).

In Calandra, the Supreme Court held that a grand jury witness cannot properly refuse to answer questions based upon evidence obtained from an unlawful search and seizure. The court reasoned that a contrary rule would deter police misconduct in only a speculative and minimal way while it would exact a prohibitive price by impeding the grand jury's investigation.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

Permitting witnesses to invoke the exclusionary rule before a grand jury would precipitate adjudication of issues hitherto reserved for the trial on the merits and would delay and disrupt grand jury proceedings. Orderly progress of an investigation and might necessitate extended litigation of issues only tangentially related to the grand jury's primary objective. The probable result would be 'protracted' interruption of grand jury proceedings, '***effectively transforming them into preliminary trials on the merits.'

The Court cited United States v. Dionisio, supra, as reaffirming "our disinclination to allow litigious interference with grand jury proceedings." The Court also recognized the existence of an internal control in that prosecutors will hardly seek indictments where convictions cannot be obtained. At 414 U.S. 349-351.

It is in recognition of this principle that the Department has formulated the following internal policy of self-restraint regarding presentation to the grand jury of unconstitutionally obtained evidence: A prosecutor should not present to the grand jury for use against a person whose constitutional rights clearly have been violated evidence which the prosecutor personally knows was obtained as a direct result of the constitutional violation.

The Calandra decision would be virtually meaningless without Costello to prevent the same sort of issues from being raised and litigated after indictment. It remains, however, that there is an exceptional situation. The Supreme Court has construed 18 U.S.C. §2515 as preventing a witness from being questioned on the basis of an illegal interception of an oral or wire communication. Gelbard v. United States, 409 U.S. 41 (1972). Still, there is dictum in Gelbard, at 409 U.S. 59-60, indicating that if a witness does not contest the questioning or answers questions based on an illegal interception, any resulting indictment is invulnerable to a motion to dismiss. See S. Rep. No. 1097, 90th Cong., 2d Sess. 106 (1968).

9-11.332 Use of Hearsay in a Grand Jury Proceeding

There has been considerable criticism voiced that hearsay evidence is relied upon too much in grand jury proceedings. From the perspective, however, that a grand jury is a layman's inquiry, conducted ex parte to determine probable cause rather than guilt or innocence, and that in certain forms hearsay is highly creditable evidence, there is a justification for using hearsay in grand jury proceedings. Each U.S. Attorney should be accountable to him/herself in this regard and to the grand jurors. Worthy of consideration are guidelines on the use of hearsay in grand jury proceedings set out in A.B.A. Standards For Criminal Justice, Standards Relating To The Prosecution Function 3.6(a) (Approved Draft, 1971). Hearsay evidence should be presented on its merits so that the jurors are not misled into believing that the witness is giving his/her own personal account. See United States v. Leibowitz, 420 F.2d 39 (2d Cir.1969); but see United States v. Trass, 644 F.2d 791 (9th Cir.1981). The question should not be so much whether to use hearsay evidence, but whether, at the end, the presentation was in keeping with the professional obligations of attorneys for the government, and afforded the grand jurors a substantial basis for voting upon an indictment. Government attorneys are charged with a high duty in presenting matters to grand juries but are also entitled to a constitutionally-based independence. See United States v. Chanen, 549 F.2d 1306 (9th Cir. 1977).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-11.333 Presumption of Regularity

A presumption of regularity attaches to grand jury proceedings, to grand jury subpoenas, and to the actions of the attorneys for the government in making grand jury presentations. See United States v. Leverage Funding System, Inc., 637 F.2d 645 (9th Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 452 U.S. 961 (1981); In re Lopreato, 511 F.2d 1150 (1st Cir. 1975); In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 486 F.2d 85 (3d Cir. 1973); Beverly v. United States, 468 F.2d 732 (5th Cir. 1972). The requirement in 28 U.S.C. §1867(c) that a motion to dismiss contain a sworn statement of the facts constituting a substantial failure to comply with the law on grand jury selection reflects this presumption of regularity and serves to minimize the incidence of litigation not involving the essential question of guilt or innocence.

9-11.334 Presentation of Exculpatory Evidence

Although neither statutory nor case law imposes upon the prosecutor a legal obligation to present exculpatory evidence to the grand jury (United States v. Leverage Funding System, Inc., supra; United States v. Y. Hata Co., 535 F.2d 508, 512 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 828 (1976); Lorraine v. United States, 396 F.2d 335, 339 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 393 U.S. 933 (1968)), it is the Department's internal policy to do so under many circumstances. For example, when a prosecutor conducting a grand jury inquiry is personally aware of substantial evidence which directly negates the guilt of a subject of the investigation, the prosecutor must present or otherwise disclose such evidence to the grand jury before seeking an indictment against such a person.

9-11.340 Foreman, Deputy Foreman, and Secretary (Fed. R. Crim. P. 6(c))

Rule 6(c) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure provides that the

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

court shall appoint one of the jurors to be the foreman and another to be deputy foreman, who will act during the absence of the foreman. The foreman is empowered to administer oaths and affirmations. He/she signs all indictments. He/she or another juror designated by him/her maintains a record of the number of jurors who concurred in finding indictments. The record is filed with the clerk of the court and may be made public only upon order of the court. It is by means of this record that an indictment may be saved under Federal Rule Criminal Procedure 6(b)(2) if it should appear that one or more of the grand jurors was not qualified to serve, and the record will be the primary source of information if an issue arises regarding the number of votes for indictment. See United States v. Bullock, 448 F.2d 728 (8th Cir. 1975).

The foreman should control the sessions of the grand jury and be its spokesman vis-a-vis the witnesses in such matters as continuing subpoenas to another day or in directing recalcitrant witnesses to respond to questions. The foreman has authority to direct a witness to appear before the grand jury at a later day, under peril of contempt. See United States v. Germann, 370 F.2d 1019 (2d Cir. 1967), vacated, 389 U.S. 329 (1967). While the foreman should sign every indictment returned by the grand jury, any failure to do so is considered merely an irregularity that does not vitiate the indictment. On this point, the framers of the Rule adopted the decision in Frisbie v. United States, 157 U.S. 160 (1895). See the Advisory Committee's Note under Rule 6 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure.

A grand juror designated to keep a record of the voting is usually called the secretary of the grand jury. Although not required by Rule 6, it is customary in many districts for the secretary to keep a record showing (in addition to the voting) the attendance of the jurors at each session, the particular matters presented to the jury, the witnesses who were called, and other matters. This record may be of critical importance in settling issues raised about grand jury proceedings, such as whether there was a quorum present at a particular session of the grand jury.

9-11.350 Who May be Present at Grand Jury Sessions (Fed. R. Crim. P. 6(d))

Under Rule 6(d) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, no person may be present while a grand jury is in session other than attorneys for the government, the witness under examination, interpreters when needed, and stenographers or operators of recording devices who are making a record of the evidence. No one at all other than the jurors may be present while the grand jury is deliberating or voting. (Eavesdropping upon the deliberations or voting of a grand jury is punishable as an obstruction of justice under 18 U.S.C. §1508.)

The importance of a rigid adherence to this Rule is well recognized, since the presence of an unauthorized person at a grand jury session may vitiate an indictment. See, e.g., United States v. Computer Sciences Corp., 689 F.2d 1181 (4th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 32 Cr. L. 4146 (1983); United States v. Echols, 542 F.2d 948 (5th Cir. 1976). The rule does not apply to the grand jury room as such, but only to a grand jury session. Martin v. United States, 266 F.2d 770 (5th Cir. 1959). A brief and unintentional interruption of a session by a person not permitted to be present may not be a sufficient reason for invalidating the proceedings. United States v. Rath, 406 F.2d 757 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 394 U.S. 920 (1969). Other courts, however, have recognized a per se rule that any unauthorized intrusion into a grand jury session may be grounds for the dismissal of the indictment. United States v. Computer Sciences Corp., 511 F. Supp. 1125 (E.D. Va. 1981); United States v. Phillips Petroleum Corp., 435 F. Supp. 610, 618 (N.D. Okla. 1977); United States v. Furman, 507 F. Supp. 848 (D. Md. 1981).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-11.351 DOJ Attorneys Authorized to Conduct Grand Jury Proceedings

Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure 6(d) authorizes attorneys for the government to appear before the grand jury. For purposes of that Rule, "attorney for the government" is defined in Federal Rules Criminal Procedure 54(c) as the Attorney General, an authorized assistant of the Attorney General, a U.S. Attorney, an authorized assistant of a U.S. Attorney, and certain other persons in cases arising under the laws of Guam.

The authority for a U.S. Attorney to conduct grand jury proceedings is set forth in the statute establishing U.S. Attorney duties, 28 U.S.C. §547. U.S. Attorneys are directed in that statute to "prosecute for all offenses against the United States." Assistant U.S. Attorneys similarly derive their authority to conduct grand jury proceedings in the district of their appointment from their appointment statute, 28 U.S.C. §542.

When a U.S. Attorney or Assistant U.S. Attorney needs to appear before a grand jury in a district other than the district in which he/she is appointed, the U.S. Attorney for either the district of appointment or the district of the grand jury should submit a request to the Executive Office for U.S. Attorneys for an appointment as a Special Assistant U.S. Attorney. The request should identify the attorney, and the reasons therefor. The Executive Office will send the notice of appointment to the U.S. Attorney in the district in which the grand jury is sitting.

Departmental attorneys, other than U.S. Attorneys and Assistant U.S. Attorneys, may conduct grand jury proceedings when authorized to do so by the Attorney General or a delegee pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §515(a). The Attorney General has delegated this authority to direct Department of Justice Attorneys to conduct grand jury proceedings to all Assistant Attorneys General and Deputy Assistant Attorneys General in matters by them. (Order No. 725-77.)

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

In the Criminal Division, requests for grand jury authorizations are processed by the Office of Enforcement Operations, FTS 724-7184. See USAM 9-1.161. Departmental attorneys directed to conduct grand jury proceedings will be provided with the following letter of authorization to evidence their designation:

Dear _____:

As an attorney for the government employed full time by the Department of Justice and assigned to the _____ Division, you are hereby authorized and directed to file informations and to conduct in the District of _____ and any other judicial district any kind of legal proceedings, civil or criminal, including grand jury proceedings and proceedings before United States Magistrates, which United States Attorneys are authorized to conduct.

You may file a copy of this letter with the clerk of the District Court to evidence this a authorization.

_____
Assistant Attorney General
_____
Division

Courts have upheld the delegation of the Attorney General's authority under 28 U.S.C. §515(a) to direct attorneys to conduct grand jury proceedings. See In re Persico, 522 F.2d 41 (2d Cir. 1975); United States v. Agrusa, 520 F.2d 370 (8th Cir. 1975). The courts have also upheld broadly worded directions to attorneys to conduct such proceedings. See United States v. Prueitt, 540 F.2d 995 (9th Cir. 1976); United States v. Morris, 532 F.2d 436 (5th Cir. 1976); Infelice v. United States, 528 F.2d 204 (7th Cir. 1975); In re Persico, 522 F.2d 41 (2d Cir. 1975); United States v. Wrigley, 520 F.2d 362 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 987 (1975).

9-11.352 Non-Department of Justice Government Attorneys

Federal Rules Criminal Procedure 6(d) provides that the only prosecutorial personnel who may be present while the grand jury is in session are "attorneys for the government." Rule 54(c) defines attorney for the government for Federal Rules Criminal Procedure purposes as "the

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Attorney General, an authorized assistant of the Attorney General, a United States Attorney, (and) an authorized assistant of a United States Attorney."

An agency attorney or other non-Department of Justice attorney must be appointed as a Special Assistant or a Special Assistant to the Attorney General, pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §515, or a Special Assistant to a U.S. Attorney, pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §543, in order to appear before a grand jury in the district of appointment. Normally the Special Assistant to a U.S. Attorney appointment is employed. Where the less common Special Assistant or Special Assistant to the Attorney General appointment is to be used in cases or matters within the jurisdiction of the Criminal Division, the Office of Enforcement Operations should be contacted at FTS 724-7184 for information.

Appointments as Special Assistants to U.S. Attorneys are made by the Associate Attorney General. A letter of appointment is executed and the oath of office as a Special Assistant to a U.S. Attorney must be taken (see 28 U.S.C. §§543, 544). Requests for such appointments must be made in writing through the Director of the Executive Office for U.S. Attorneys and must include the following information:

- A. The facts and circumstances of the case;
- B. The reasons supporting the appointment;
- C. The duration and any special conditions of the appointment;
- D. Whether the appointee may be called as a witness before the grand jury. If such a possibility exists, it ordinarily would be unwise to make the appointment;
- E. How the attorney has been informed of the Fed. R. Crim. P. 6(e) grand jury secrecy requirements.
- F. If the appointee is an agency attorney, whether the agency from which the attorney comes is conducting or may conduct contemporaneous administrative or other civil proceedings. If so, a full description of the substance and status of such proceedings should be included; and
- G. If the appointee is an agency attorney, a full description of the arrangements that have been made to prevent the attorney's agency from obtaining access through the attorney to grand jury materials in the case.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

The request must also state that the agency attorney will be accompanied at all times while before the grand jury by an experienced Department of Justice attorney, the U.S. Attorney, or an Assistant U.S. Attorney. Finally, the request must contain the following statement, signed by the agency attorney:

I understand the restrictions on the grand jury secrecy obligations of this appointment as a Special Assistant to the United States Attorney and do hereby certify that I will adhere to the requirements contained in this letter.

The use of agency attorneys as Special Assistants before the grand jury has been upheld by the courts. See United States v. Wencke, 604 F.2d 607 (9th Cir. 1979); United States v. Birdman, 602 F.2d 547 (3rd Cir. 1979); In re Perlin, 589 F.2d 260 (7th Cir. 1978). The U.S. Attorney or Departmental attorney with responsibility for the case retains such full responsibility. Cf. D.C. Cir. 1979 Judicial Conference Proceedings, 85 F.R.D. 180-181.

9-11.353 Presence of the Witness Under Examination

As the wording of the Rule indicates, witnesses should be called one at a time to testify before the grand jury. See United States v. Bowdach, 324 F. Supp. 123 (S.D. Fla. 1971); but see United States v. Echols, 542 F.2d 948 (5th Cir. 1976) (movie projectionist). If it is necessary for an expert witness to be utilized, for example, to analyze a set of records produced by another witness, the expert should be called into the grand jury session separately and asked by the foreman to undertake an examination of the records and to report the results to the grand jury. See In re April 1956 Term Grand Jury, 239 F.2d 263 (7th Cir. 1956). On the matter of grand jury secrecy and disclosure to government agents to aid an investigation, see USAM 9-11.368, infra.

9-11.354 Presence of a Stenographer--Recording Required

Federal Rules Criminal Procedure 6(e)(1) requires that all grand jury proceedings be recorded, except when the grand jury is deliberating or voting. Government attorneys should not have any conversations, even of a casual nature, with grand jurors unless they are being recorded. The recording, however, is not required to be transcribed and transcripts should not be prepared unless there is a specific need for them.

Reporters and stenographers are bound by the grand jury secrecy requirements under Rule 6(e)(2). It is important that they be made aware of this requirement. For further information on grand jury reporters see USAM 10-3.324.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-11.355 Presence of an Interpreter

Federal Rules Criminal Procedure 6(d) permits the presence of an interpreter when needed in grand jury proceedings. Such interpreters should be obtained in accordance with 28 U.S.C. §1827 and Rule 28. An interpreter is bound not to disclose matters occurring before the grand jury without judicial authority; see the discussion of Fed. R. Crim. P. 6(e) below. It is suggested that attorneys for the government make certain that any interpreter used in a grand jury proceeding is fully aware of his/her obligation of secrecy. See also USAM 10-3.240.

9-11.356 Counsel for Witnesses Excluded

A witness before a federal grand jury is not entitled to have his/her attorney accompany him/her into the grand jury room; indeed, the Rule forbids that. See United States v. Mandujano, 425 U.S. 564 (1976). However, the witness may leave the grand jury room from time to time, as reasonable, in order to consult with his/her counsel. In re Taylor, 567 F.2d 1183 (2d Cir. 1977); In re Tierney, 465 F.2d 806 (5th Cir. 1972).

9-11.357 No Exceptions

Federal Rules Criminal Procedure 6(d) does not admit of any exception under which persons not usually authorized to be present are allowed to attend a grand jury session under extraordinary circumstances. As noted in USAM 9-11.350, supra, the presence of any unauthorized person during a grand jury session may be grounds for dismissal of the indictment. Thus, a parent may not accompany a child who is to testify, nor may a marshal be present to control a potentially unruly witness. United States v. Borys, 169 F. Supp. 366 (D. Alaska 1959); see United States v. Carper, 116 F. Supp. 817 (D. D.C. 1953).

9-11.360 Grand Jury Secrecy: Purpose

It is a matter of fundamental importance to the criminal justice system, especially in preserving the vitality of the investigative function of the grand jury, that grand jury proceedings be kept secret to the fullest extent practicable. Grand jury secrecy is maintained principally: (1) to encourage witnesses to come forward and to testify freely and confidentially; (2) to minimize the risks that prospective defendants will flee or use corrupt means to thwart investigations and escape punishment; (3) to safeguard the grand jurors themselves and the proceedings from extraneous pressures and influences; (4) to avoid unnecessary disclosures that may make persons appear to be guilty of misconduct without their being afforded adequate opportunity to challenge the allegations; and (5) to prevent information adduced under compulsion and for purposes of public justice from being used for insubstantial purposes, such as gossip, to the detriment of the criminal justice system. See Douglas Oil Co. v. Petrol Stops Northwest, 441 U.S. 211 (1979); United States v. Procter and Gamble Co., 356 U.S. 677, 681-2, n.6 (1953). Grand jury secrecy has also traditionally been invoked to justify the limited procedural safeguards available to targets and witnesses. Illinois v. Abbott & Associates, Inc., ___ U.S. ___ at note 11 103 S.Ct. 1356, n.11 (1983) (51 L.W. 4311).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

The reasons for grand jury secrecy may lose some of their force after the proceedings have been concluded. Nevertheless, grand jury secrecy may never be breached, for example, to spare private litigants or even public agencies from making their own investigations, unless the disclosure is authorized under the rule. See, e.g., United States v. Short, 671 F.2d 178 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 102 S.Ct. 932 (1982).

The rule for grand jury secrecy is Rule 6(e)(2) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. The rule of secrecy is subject to the three major exceptions discussed in the following three sections: a grand jury witness cannot be obliged to keep the proceedings secret; courts may order disclosure of grand jury proceedings; and disclosures may be made to the attorneys for the government for use in the performance of their duties and to subordinate government personnel to assist a government attorney to enforce federal criminal law. Under no circumstances, however, may any disclosure be made of the grand jury's deliberations or voting, and no one but grand jurors may be present during the deliberations and voting. It is only required, under Federal Rules Criminal Procedure 6(c), that a record be kept of the number of votes cast for indictment; the individual juror's vote is not recorded.

9-11.361 Who is Covered by Fed. R. Crim. P. 6(e): Persons Other Than Witnesses

All persons present at a session of a grand jury other than a witness are subject to a requirement of secrecy and can be relieved of that obligation only by a court. It is implicit in the rule, however, that the person who records the grand jury proceedings may utilize other persons as typists to transcribe the recorded testimony, because Federal Rules Criminal Procedure 6(e) includes such typists among those who are prohibited generally from making disclosures.

9-11.362 Who is not Covered by Fed. R. Crim. P. 6(e): Only Witnesses

Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure 6(e) specifically prohibits any obligation of secrecy from being imposed "upon any person except in accordance with this rule." Witnesses, therefore, cannot be put under any obligation of secrecy. See Application of Eisenberg, 654 F.2d 1107, 1113 n.9 (5th Cir. 1981). This, however, should not prevent the grand jury foreman from requesting a witness not to make unnecessary disclosures when those disclosures or the attendant publicity might hinder an investigation.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

One of the purposes of grand jury secrecy--and a purpose it serves extremely well--is to foster the cooperation of witnesses. Only by making witnesses aware of the protection afforded them can the full value of grand jury secrecy be realized. It is suggested that in an appropriate situation the witness be told that the proceedings will remain secret until such time as disclosure is required in court, and, therefore, that the witness's cooperation with grand jury will not be known publicly unless the witness chooses to make it known. A witness may be helped in fending off unwelcome questions if the witness is requested by the grand jury not to make disclosures.

9-11.363 What is Covered by Fed. R. Crim. P. 6(e)

Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure 6(e)(2) prohibits the disclosure to any person of "matters occurring before the grand jury," except when made in accordance with one of the exceptions contained in the rule. The phrase "matters occurring before the grand jury" is not further defined and its meaning has developed through case law. Its purpose has been described as being:

. . . to prevent disclosure of the way in which information was presented to the grand jury, the specific questions and inquiries of the grand jury, the deliberations and vote of the grand jury, the targets upon which the grand jury's suspicion focuses, and specific details of what took place before the grand jury. In re Grand Jury Investigation of Ven-Fuel, 441 F. Supp. 1299, 1302-3 (M.D. Fla. 1977).

This concept has been applied as described in the following sections.

9-11.364 Grand Jury Transcripts

Transcripts of the testimony of witnesses, statements made by attorneys for the government before the grand jury, and any other statements made by or before the grand jury while in session incontrovertibly constitute "matters occurring before the grand jury." Cf., United States v. Proctor and Gamble Co., 356 U.S. 677 (1958); Douglas Oil Co. v. Petrol Stops Northwest, 441 U.S. 211 (1979). Consequently, grand jury transcripts may not be released except in conformity with one of the Federal Rules Criminal Procedure 6(e) exceptions as discussed in USAM 9-11.364 to 9-11.369, infra.

Some courts have held that witnesses may be shown the transcript of their own testimony without a court order. United States v. Bazzano, 570 F.2d 1120 (3d Cir. 1970); King v. Jones, 319 F. Supp. 653 (N.D. Ohio 1970). Other courts require a court order. United States v. Scrimgeour, 636 F.2d

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

1019, 1025 (5th Cir. 1981). However, there is agreement that a witness does not have a right to see his/her own transcript, and that such access will be granted over government objection only where is a special showing of need. United States v. Clavey 565 F.2d 111 (7th Cir. en banc, 1977); In re Bianchi, 542 F.2d 98 (1st Cir. 1976); Bost v. United States, 542 F.2d 893 (4th Cir. 1976).

9-11.364(a) Disclosure of a Defendant's Own Grand Jury Testimony

Rule 16(a)(1)(A) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure mandates a pre-trial disclosure to a defendant, on request, of any recorded testimony given by him/her before a grand jury. The testimony must relate to the offense charged before disclosure is required under the Rule.

If the defendant is a corporation, partnership, association, or labor union, and so requests by motion, the court may grant the defendant pre-trial discovery of any relevant recorded testimony of any grand jury witness who was either: (1) at the time of his/her testimony, so situated as an officer or employee as to have been able legally to bind the defendant in respect to conduct constituting the offense; or (2) at the time of the offense, personally involved in the alleged conduct constituting the offense and so situated as an officer or employee as to have been able legally to bind the defendant in respect to the alleged conduct in which he/she was involved. By implication, the corporation, partnership, association, or labor union is entitled to no broader discovery of grand jury testimony.

It is important to note that Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure 16 gives courts a discretion to grant or deny corporations and other business entities the pre-trial discovery of the grand jury testimony of its principal officers and employees. There is also considerable latitude given to the courts under Rule 16(d)(1) to restrict, defer, or otherwise regulate the discovery called for under Rule 16. The Rule, it is to be noted further, provides for discovery only of relevant testimony.

By cooperating with a grand jury investigation, an officer or employee of one of the business entities named in Rule 16(a)(1)(A) may risk serious prejudice to himself/herself in his/her employment, profession, or associations. To minimize such risks is one of the purposes for grand jury secrecy. The least that can be done to help protect such witnesses is to prevent disclosure of any testimony given that is not relevant to the charges in the indictment. Postponing disclosure may increase the possibility that disclosure will be obviated under a guilty plea or some other disposition of the case. This is not to suggest that Rule 16 offers a ready means of protecting witnesses from unnecessary injuries; to the contrary, it will require considerable skill and ingenuity to utilize the special features of Rule 16 effectively to protect witnesses. There is a clear advantage to be derived in preventing discovery when the witness was not legally able to bind the defendant or otherwise does not fit the descriptions employed in Rule 16(a)(1)(A).

TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-11.364(b) Disclosure to Defendant of the Grand Jury Testimony of Government Witnesses

A defendant may have access to the grand jury testimony of government witnesses only in the circumstances set out in 18 U.S.C. §3500. A grand jury transcript is a "statement" for purposes of the statute, and, under subsections (a) and (b) of 18 U.S.C. §3500, a defendant is entitled to the transcript of grand jury testimony of government witnesses only after they have testified on direct examination in the trial of the case. The court is authorized under 18 U.S.C. §3500(c) to inspect the grand jury transcript in camera before turning it over to the defendant and to excise any portion of the transcript that does not relate to the subject matter of the witness's testimony on direct examination. If a part is excised and the trial continues to an adjudication of guilt, the excision is subject to appellate review.

9-11.364(c) Pre-trial Discovery of Grand Jury Testimony Strictly Limited

Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure 16(a)(3) states specifically that the Criminal Rules do not relate to the discovery or inspection of grand jury transcripts other than as provided for in Rule 6 and in Rule 16(a)(1)(A). This is an important provision. Under the previous formulation of Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure 16, there was confusion and conflict among the courts regarding the proper scope of pre-trial discovery of grand jury transcripts. Pre-trial discovery of grand jury transcripts is now clearly limited under Rule 16. The limitations are underscored in 18 U.S.C. §3500(a).

9-11.364(d) Disclosure of Government Memoranda

A government document that records or summarizes any statement made or action taken before or by a grand jury is covered by the secrecy requirements of Rule 6(e). In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 613 F.2d 501, 505 (5th Cir. 1980); U.S. Industries, Inc. v. U.S. District Court, 345 F.2d 18 (9th Cir. 1965); United States v. Armco Steel Corp., 458 F. Supp. 784 (W.D. Mo. 1978). On the other hand, government documents that relate information provided by grand jury witnesses outside of the grand jury room to government attorneys or other government personnel ordinarily are not covered by Rule 6(e). But see In re the Special February 1975 Grand Jury, 652 F.2d 1302 (7th Cir. 1981). However, where a witness is interviewed by the government after appearing before a grand jury and relates what was said before the grand jury, any record of that interview should be considered to be grand jury material and covered by Rule 6(e).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-11.365 Documents: Generally Not Covered by Fed. R. Crim. P. 6(e)

Individual documents subpoenaed by the grand jury have come to be held by the courts ordinarily not to constitute "matters occurring before the grand jury." Hence, they are not usually covered by the restrictions of Rule 6(e). The rule that has become generally accepted is that Rule 6(e) does not restrict the release of subpoenaed documents that are sought for the information they contain, rather than to reveal the direction or strategy of the grand jury investigation. SEC v. Dresser Industries, 628 F.2d 1368, 1382-3 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 993 (1980); United States v. Stanford, 589 F.2d 285 (7th Cir. 1978), cert. denied, 440 U.S. 983 (1979); United States v. Interstate Dress Carriers, 230 F.2d 52, 54 (2d Cir. 1960). But see Index Fund v. Hagopian, 512 F. Supp. 1122, 1127-9 (S.D. N.Y. 1981).

The most commonly denied requests for grand jury documents are requests for the disclosure of or access to all the documents subpoenaed by a particular grand jury or a list or inventory of all such documents. United States v. Stanford, supra, at n.6; In re Grand Jury Impanelled October 2, 1978, 510 F. Supp. 112 (D. D.C. 1981). While recent cases have generally favored disclosure, the best argument for resisting a disclosure request is to demonstrate how such disclosure would frustrate one or more of the purposes of grand jury secrecy set forth in USAM 9-11.360, supra. See Fund for Constitutional Government v. National Archives and Records Service, 656 F.2d 856, 868-70 (D.C. Cir. 1981); Iglasias v. Central Intelligence Agency, 525 F.Supp. 547, 554-7 (D. D.C. 1981).

9-11.366 Documents: Court Order Still Necessary for Public Disclosure

While Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure 6(e) ordinarily does not apply to the release of documents subpoenaed by the grand jury, a court order nevertheless is required for their public disclosure. Such documents have been held to remain the property of the persons from whom they were subpoenaed, with the grand jury merely having taken temporary custody. Where the owner of the documents does not consent to their release, disclosure must be court authorized. The standard for such authorization, however, is not the Rule 6(e) exception. Rather, the test is whether the party seeking the documents is lawfully entitled to access to them. United States v. Interstate Dress Carriers, Inc., 280 F.2d 52 (2d Cir. 1960); Capitol Indemnity Corp. v. First Minnesota Construction Co., 405 F. Supp. 929 (D. Mass. 1975); Davis v. Romney, 55 F.R.D. 337 (E.D. Pa. 1972). Note that disclosure may also be restricted by other laws; e.g., the Right To Financial Privacy Act of 1978 requires that protected financial records subpoenaed by a grand jury be accorded the same protections as Rule 6(e) material (12 U.S.C. §3420; USAM 9-4.844), and the Tax Reform Act of 1976

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

restricts disclosures of tax information obtained from the Internal Revenue Service irrespective of whether it has been presented to a grand jury (26 U.S.C. §6103; USAM 9-4.900 et seq.).

9-11.367 Disclosure Under Fed. R. Crim. P. 6(e): To Attorneys for the Government, Including for Civil Use

Disclosure of materials covered by Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure 6(e) may be made "to an attorney for the government for use in the performance of such attorney's duty." See Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure 6(e)(3)(A)(i). "Attorney for the government" is defined in Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure 54(c). Disclosure to government attorneys and their assistants for use in a civil suit is permissible only with a court order under Rule 6(e)(3)(C)(i). United States v. Sells Engineering, Inc., 103 S.Ct. 3133 (1983). See Guide on Rule 6(e) after Sells and Baggot 6-8, 18-32 (January 1984).

From the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure 54(c) definition it is clear that Rule 6(e) does not authorize disclosure to attorneys for other federal government agencies. See United States v. Bates, 627 F.2d 349, 351 (D.C. Cir. 1980). Nor is disclosure permitted under this section to attorneys for state or local governments. In re Holovachka, 317 F.2d 834 (7th Cir. 1963); Corona Construction Co. v. Ampress Brick Co., Inc., 376 F. Supp. 598 (N.D. Ill. 1974).

When disclosure is authorized by court order under Rule 6(e)(3)(C)(i), of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, for use in civil proceedings, there is a danger of misuse, or the appearance thereof, when such disclosure is made during the pendency of the grand jury investigation. There is no rule of law that would require a civil disclosure within the Department to be deferred until the relevant criminal investigation has been completed; but unless there is a genuine need for disclosure during the pendency of the grand jury investigation, it is the better practice to forestall the disclosure until the criminal investigation is completed.

9-11.368 Disclosure Under Fed. R. Crim. P. 6(e): To Other Government Personnel

Disclosure of materials covered by Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure 6(e) may be made to "government personnel...to assist an attorney for the government. . . to enforce federal criminal law." "Government personnel" includes not only federal criminal investigators such as the FBI, but also employees of any federal agency who are assisting the prosecutor. See S. Rep. No. 95-354, 95th Cong., 1st Sess., reprinted in [1977] U.S. Code Cong. & Ad. News 530. The decision to use government personnel to assist the grand jury investigation is within the discretion of the prosecutor and need not be justified. In re Perlin, 589 F.2d 260, 268 (7th Cir. 1978). Such personnel may use the material disclosed in conducting interviews. Cf United States v. Stanford, 589 F.2d 285 (7th Cir. 1978), cert. denied, 440 U.S. 983 (1979).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

As stated in the legislative history of the 1977 amendment to Rule 6(e), it is not necessary to obtain a court order to make the above-described disclosures nor to make investigators "agents of the grand jury" by having them take an oath in the grand jury. It is necessary, however, to "promptly" provide the supervising judge with a list of those agents to whom disclosure has been made. Although not required by the Rule, Congress contemplated that the list of names generally be furnished to the court before the information is disclosed. S. Rep. No. 95-354, 95th Cong., 1st Sess., reprinted in [1977] U.S. Code Cong. & Ad. News 530. Failure to comply with the requirement that government personnel be listed with the court is not grounds to quash a grand jury subpoena. In re Grand Jury Proceedings (Larry Smith), 579 F.2d 836, 840 (3d Cir. 1978).

Strict precautions should be taken when employing personnel from agencies which have a civil function, such as the Securities and Exchange Commission, the Environmental Protection Agency, or the Internal Revenue Service, to ensure that knowledge of the grand jury investigation or documents subpoenaed by the grand jury are not used improperly for civil purposes by the agency. Grand jury documents should be segregated and personnel assisting the grand jury investigation should not work on a civil matter involving the same subjects unless a court order has been obtained authorizing such use. It may be valuable to issue written precautionary instructions which can be used in any hearing challenging the grand jury procedures. See Robert Hawthorne, Inc. v. Director of Internal Revenue, 406 F. Supp. 1098, 1126 (E.D. Pa. 1975).

Courts have differed over whether employees of state and local government are included under the "government personnel" exception. In re 1979 Grand Jury Proceedings, 479 F. Supp. 93, 95 (E.D. N.Y. 1979) (state and local personnel included); In re Miami Federal Grand Jury No. 79-9, 478 F. Supp. 490, 492 (S.D. Fla. 1979), and In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 445 F. Supp. 349 (D. RI.), appeal dismissed, 580 F.2d 13 (1st Cir. 1978) (state and local personnel not included). Rather than relying solely on this provision, it is preferable to have the state or local personnel sworn as agents of the grand jury (see United States v. Stanford, supra,) and to seek a court order authorizing release under Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure 6(e)(3)(C)(i), which allows for release "preliminarily to . . . a judicial proceeding," as discussed in the next section. See In re Grand Jury Matter, 516 F. Supp. 27 (E.D. Pa. 1981).

9-11.369 Disclosure Under Fed. R. Crim. P. 6(e): Preliminarily to or in Connection with a Judicial Proceeding

Under subsection (3)(C)(i) of Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure 6(e), grand jury materials may be disclosed by order of a court preliminarily to or in connection with a judicial proceeding." A court must make two determinations before entering such an order.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

The first is whether the requested disclosure is indeed preliminarily to or in connection with a judicial proceeding. The leading definition of judicial proceeding is that provided by Judge Learned Hand:

The term 'judicial proceeding' includes any proceeding determinable by a court, having for its object the compliance of any person, subject to judicial control with standards imposed upon his conduct in the public interest, even though such compliance is enforced without the procedure applicable to the punishment of crime. An interpretation that should not go at least so far, would not only be in the teeth of the language employed, but would defeat any rational purpose that can be imputed to the Rule. Poe v. Rosenberg, 255 F.2d 118, 120 (2d Cir. 1958).

However, the courts have not been consistent in the application of this concept. The following proceedings have been found to fall within the definition of judicial proceedings: the grand jury's own proceedings, In re 1979 Grand Jury Proceedings, 479 F. Supp. 93 (E.D. N.Y. 1979); other grand juries, United States v. Stanford, 589 F.2d (7th Cir. 1978), cert. denied, 440 U.S. 983 (1979); attorney discipline proceedings, United States v. Sobotka, 623 F.2d 764 (2d Cir. 1980); United States v. Salanitro, 437 F. Supp. 240 (D. Neb. 1977), aff'd, 580 F.2d 281 (8th Cir. 1978); police officer discipline proceedings, Special February 1971 Grand Jury v. Conlisk, 490 F.2d 894 (7th Cir. 1973); In re Grand Jury Transcripts, 309 F. Supp. 1050 (S.D. Ohio 1970); Internal Revenue Service proceedings, Patrick v. United States, 524 F.2d 1109 (7th Cir. 1975); impeachment hearings, Haldeman v. Sirica, 501 F.2d 714 (D.C. Cir. 1974); and state criminal trials, In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 654 F.2d 268, 271-2 (3d Cir. 1981); In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 483 F. Supp. 422 (E.D. Pa. 1979).

On the other hand, courts have denied disclosure of grand jury materials for use in: a U.S. Parole Commission parole revocation hearing, Bradley v. Fairfax, 634 F.2d 1126 (8th Cir. 1980); a Federal Energy Regulatory Commission preliminary investigation, In re J. Ray McDermott and Co., Inc., 622 F.2d 166 (5th Cir. 1980); a Federal Maritime Commission adjudicatory hearing, United States v. Bates, 627 F.2d 349 (D.C. Cir. 1980); a state medical board investigation, United States v. Young, 494 F. Supp. 57 (E.D. Tex. 1980); and a Federal Trade Commission investigation, In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 309 F.2d 440 (3d Cir. 1962).

State grand jury proceedings have been held to constitute proceedings preliminarily to or in connection with a judicial proceeding. In Re Petition for Disclosure of Evidence Taken Before the Special Grand Jury, 650

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

F.2d 599 (5th Cir. 1981). One court has held that a state investigation not involving a grand jury may be "preliminarily to or in connection with a judicial proceeding," provided particularized need is shown. In re Grand Jury Matter, 516 F. Supp. 27 (E.D. Pa. 1981).

The courts have split also on whether Internal Revenue Service civil proceedings are preliminarily to or in connection with a judicial proceeding. Because IRS has unique powers to assess and collect taxes without resort to litigation, its tax audits and other proceedings may not qualify for disclosure under Rule 6(e)(3)(C)(i) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedures. United States v. Baggot, ___ U.S. ___, 103 S.Ct. 3164 (1983).

The second determination the courts make before authorizing disclosure of grand jury materials to private parties is to weigh the particularized need of the party seeking disclosure against the public interest in grand jury secrecy. See Douglas Oil Co. v. Petrol Stops Northwest, 441 U.S. 211, 216-219 (1979); Guide on Rule 6(e) after Sells and Baggot at 22-27 (January 1984). A failure to demonstrate sufficient need can result in the denial of a request for otherwise permissible disclosure. See United States v. Young, supra (state medical board); and In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 483 F. Supp. 422 (E.D. Pa. 1979) (state prosecutor). The Department takes the position that the particularized need requirement is inapplicable when grand jury materials are sought for federal law enforcement purposes. See In re Grand Jury Subpoenas, April 1978, 581 F.2d 1103, 1110 (4th Cir. 1978), cert. denied, 440 U.S. 971 (1979); In re Grand Jury (LIV), 583 F.2d 128, 130-31 (5th Cir. 1978).

As with disclosure to Department of Justice attorneys for use in civil proceedings, discussed supra, it is preferable to await the completion of a grand jury investigation before seeking disclosure to another government agency for civil purposes. Capitol Indemnity Corp. v. First Minnesota Construction Co., 405 F. Supp. 929 (D. Mass. 1975).

9-11.370 Penalty for Breach of Grand Jury Secrecy

Despite a significant incidence of unlawful breaches of grand jury secrecy, see, e.g., In re Biaggi, 478 F.2d 489 (2d Cir. 1973), no criminal statute exists to cover the problem adequately (see 18 U.S.C. §1508). Therefore, the contempt remedy, while not always wholly adequate, must be relied upon. Strict security should, of course, be maintained over grand jury transcripts and memoranda reflecting matters that occurred before the grand jury. Every unlawful breach of grand jury secrecy should be viewed as a very serious matter requiring attention, if not with a view toward punitive action, at least with the objective of preventing future breaches of grand jury secrecy. Special precautions may be considered at the start of a particularly sensitive investigation to safeguard against breaches of grand jury secrecy.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-11.380 Sealing the Indictment Pending Arrest

A district court may, under Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure 6(e), direct that an indictment be kept secret until a defendant is in custody or has given bail (except insofar a disclosure of the indictment is necessary for issuance and execution of a warrant under Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure 4). Indictments have been kept sealed for lengthy periods of time under this provision. An indictment found within the period of limitations prescribed in chapter 213 of title 18 is not barred because it is kept sealed until the statutory period has expired. See United States v. Michael, 180 F.2d 55 (3d Cir. 1949), cert. denied, 339 U.S. 978 (1950).

9-11.381 Jurors not Continuously Present May Nevertheless Vote

Under Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure 6(f) an indictment may be found only upon the concurrence of 12 or more jurors. Indictments are not defective because jurors voted who had not been present during the entire investigation. See United States v. Garner, 663 F.2d 834 (9th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 102 S.Ct. 1750 (1982); United States v. Provenzano, 688 F.2d 194, 201-202 (3d Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 103 S.Ct. 492 (1982); United States v. Lang, 644 F.2d 1232, 1235-1239 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 870 (1981); United States v. Leverage Funding Systems, Inc., 637 F.2d 645, 647-648 (9th Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 452 U.S. 961 (1981); United States v. Colasurdo, 453 F.2d 585, 596 (2d Cir. 1971), cert. denied, 406 U.S. 917 (1972); Lustiger v. United States 386 F.2d 132, 139 (9th Cir. 1967), cert. denied, 390 U.S. 951 (1968). It is good practice, however, to cause a juror who was absent during a significant part of a grand jury presentation to read (or be read) the transcript of the testimony the juror did not hear, or, depending upon the circumstances, some lesser measure can be taken to have the gist of the testimony communicated to a juror who had not been present for the testimony. The record should be made to reflect whatever is done in this regard.

9-11.382 Duty to Report a No Bill to the Court

When a defendant is in custody or has been released on bail and less than 12 jurors concur in finding an indictment, a duty is placed on the foreman of the grand jury by Rule 6(f) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure to report the no bill to a federal magistrate "in writing forthwith." As indicated in the original Advisory Committee note, the purpose is to allow for the necessary release of a defendant or an exoneration of a defendant's bail as promptly as possible.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-11.390 Tenure and Discharge of a Grand Jury

Under Rule 6(g) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, the tenure and powers of a grand jury are not affected by the beginning or the expiration of a term of court, and the grand jury serves until discharged by the court, provided, however, that no grand jury impaneled under Rule 6 may serve for more than 18 months. See United States v. Armored Transport, Inc., 629 F.2d 1313 (9th Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 450 U.S. 965 (1981); United States v. Fein, 504 F.2d 1170 (2d Cir. 1974).

It is within the discretion of the district court, without assigning any reason, to discharge a grand jury before the expiration of its term. In re Texas Co., 201 F.2d 177 (D.D.C.), cert. denied, 344 U.S. 904 (1952). The discharge or expiration of the term of a grand jury usually warrants the return to the appropriate parties of subpoenaed materials, but this does not prevent making and retaining copies of documents or subsequently subpoenaing the same materials. See United States v. Wallace & Tiernam Co., 336 U.S. 793 (1948); In re Petroleum Industry Investigation, 152 F. Supp. 646 (E.D.Va. 1957); Virginia Milk Producers Ass'n. v. United States 250 F.2d 425 (D.D.C. 1957).

9-11.391 Replacing a Grand Juror

Rule 6(g) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure authorizes the district court, at any time for cause shown, to excuse a juror, either temporarily or permanently; and if a juror is excused permanently, the court may impanel another person to take the place of the juror who was excused. It is noted, however, that 28 U.S.C. §1866(c) governs the excusing of jurors, and the "cause shown" must be consistent with 28 U.S.C. §1866(c). When a juror is replaced, it is advisable to have the new juror in some manner apprised of the evidence already before the grand jury. There is no necessity for replacing a juror who was excused, provided that a sufficient number remains to constitute a quorum of sixteen jurors. If a bare quorum remains, however, it is well to impanel a new juror (or jurors) to obviate future quorum problems.

9-11.400 THE SPECIAL GRAND JURY - 18 U.S.C. §3331

It has been common for investigative grand juries and for grand juries other than the first of two or more impaneled in a district to be called "special" grand juries. The term is now ambiguous. Legislation enacted in 1970 has created "special" grand juries primarily to meet the special needs of organized crime investigations. These statutory grand juries differ in several significant respects from grand juries impaneled under Federal Rules Criminal Procedure 6. Care should be taken in using the term special grand jury to avoid any misunderstanding. The term may be used, for example, with a parenthetical reference to the statute or the Rule, if the meaning is not otherwise clear from the context.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

The distinctive features of special grand juries are discussed below. To the extent these distinctive features permit, the special grand juries are governed by the same statutes, rules, and case law applicable to regular grand juries. See 18 U.S.C. §3334. In a very large measure, special grand juries and regular grand juries are alike.

9-11.410 Impaneling Special Grand Juries

As provided in 18 U.S.C. §3334(a), the district court in every judicial district having more than four million inhabitants must impanel a special grand jury at least once every eighteen months (unless a special grand jury is then sitting); and the district court must also impanel a special grand jury when the Attorney General, Deputy Attorney General, or a designated Assistant Attorney General certifies in writing to the chief judge of the district that in his/her judgment, a special grand jury is necessary "because of criminal activity in the district." (See 28 C.F.R. §0.59 under which the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Criminal Division is designated to make certifications under 18 U.S.C. §3331.)

9-11.411 Request for Certification

U.S. Attorneys who want certification made to cause the impaneling of special grand juries should direct their requests for certification to the Chief of the Organized Crime and Racketeering Section of the Criminal Division, explaining briefly the reasons for the request and the nature and scope of the criminal activities to be investigated.

9-11.412 Districts Where Special Grand Juries Must be Impaneled

At this writing, the following districts have more than four million inhabitants and are, therefore, to have special grand juries impaneled at least once in every eighteen months in addition to the regular grand juries impaneled: the Central, Eastern, and Northern Districts of California, the Middle District of Florida, the Northern District of Illinois, the District of Maryland, the District of Massachusetts, the Eastern District of Michigan, the District of Minnesota, the District of New Jersey, the Eastern and Southern Districts of New York, the Northern and Southern Districts of Ohio, the Eastern and Western Districts of Pennsylvania, and the Northern and Southern Districts of Texas. This list is based upon estimates made by the Bureau of the Census and is, of course, subject to revision from time to time as newer estimates become available.

9-11.413 Additional Special Grand Juries

District courts are authorized under 18 U.S.C. §3332(b) to impanel

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

additional special grand juries when the special grand juries already impaneled have more business than they can properly handle. When impaneling additional special grand juries, a court should make a finding as to the need; and a court should always make it clear that the special grand jury is being impaneled under 18 U.S.C. §3331 (and is therefore not subject to the limitations of a regular grand jury). See Wax v. Motley, 510 F.2d 318 (2d Cir. 1975); United States v. Lawson, 507 F.2d 433 (7th Cir. 1974), cert. denied, 420 U.S. 1004 (1975); Korman v. United States 486 F.2d 926 (7th Cir. 1973); United States v. Fein, 370 F. Supp. 466 (E.D.N.Y. 1974), aff'd. 504 F.2d 1170 (2d Cir. 1974).

9-11.420 Terms and Extensions of Terms of Special Grand Juries

Like regular grand juries, special grand juries serve a basic term of eighteen months, unless they are discharged earlier. Here the similarity ends, however, because 18 U.S.C. §3331 limits the authority of the courts to discharge grand juries and provides for extensions of service well beyond the initial term of eighteen months.

A special grand jury may be discharged before it has served its initial term of eighteen months only if the jurors themselves (by majority vote) determine that the grand jury's business has been completed. For the grand jury to serve longer than eighteen months requires a finding by the district court. If at the end of eighteen months or any extended period, the district court finds that the grand jury's business has not been completed, the court may extend its service, in increments of six months, for a maximum period of thirty-six months (subject to one exception discussed below). (Note that under 18 U.S.C. §1826 a recalcitrant witness confined for civil contempt may in no event be confined for longer than eighteen months.)

9-11.421 Appeals to Continue the Service of Special Grand Juries

Under 18 U.S.C. §3331(b), if a district court fails to extend the term of a special grand jury or orders the discharge of a special grand jury before the jurors determine that their business has been completed, the jurors may, by majority vote, apply to the chief judge of the circuit court for an order continuing the term of the special grand jury. While any such application is pending, the term of the special grand jury continues by operation of law, but the maximum term of service permissible is still thirty-six months.

9-11.430 Special Duties Imposed Upon Attorneys for the Government

The special grand jury has a duty under 18 U.S.C. §3332(a) "to inquire into offenses against the criminal laws of the United States alleged to have been committed within the district." Such alleged offenses may be brought to the jury's attention by the court or by any attorney appearing for the United States to present evidence to the jury. It is incumbent upon any such government attorney to whom it is reported that a federal offense was committed within the district, if the source of information so requests, to refer the information to the special grand jury, naming the source and apprising the jury of the attorney's action or recommendation regarding the information.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-11.440 Reports of Special Grand Juries

At the conclusion of its service, a special grand jury is authorized under 18 U.S.C. §3333, by a majority vote of its members, to submit to the district court, potentially for public release, a grand jury report, which must concern either: (1) noncriminal misconduct, malfeasance, or misfeasance in office involving organized crime activity by an appointed public officer or employee, as the basis for a recommendation or removal or disciplinary action; or (2) organized crime conditions in the district, without however being critical of any identified person. ("Public officer or employee" is defined broadly in 18 U.S.C. §3333(f) to include federal, state and local officials.)

Upon receiving a report from a special grand jury, the district court must examine it, together with the minutes of the special grand jury, and accept it, for eventual filing as a public record, if the report is: (1) one of the two types authorized by 18 U.S.C. §3333(a); (2) based upon facts discovered in the course of an authorized criminal investigation; (3) supported by a preponderance of the evidence; and if (4) each public officer or employee named in the report was afforded a reasonable opportunity to testify and present witnesses on his/her own behalf before the special grand jury, prior to its filing the report. (It would seem that 18 U.S.C. §3333(a) necessitates a recording of the proceedings if a special grand jury may issue a grand jury report.)

The wording and the legislative history of 18 U.S.C. §3332(a) and §3333(b)(1) indicate that a special grand jury should not investigate for the sole purpose of writing a report; the report must emanate from the criminal investigation. At bottom, then, a special grand jury functions essentially like a regular grand jury. It is only after the "completion" of the criminal investigation, when the time is near for discharging the jury, that a report may be submitted to the court under 18 U.S.C. §3333(a). The grand jury will by that time have exhausted all investigative leads and have found all appropriate indictments.

The "misconduct," "malfeasance," or "misfeasance" that may be the subject of a report (provided it is related to organized criminal activity)

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

must, to some degree, involve willful wrongdoing as distinguished from mere inaction or lack of diligence on the part of the public official. Nonfeasance in office, however, if it is of such serious dimensions as to be equitable with misconduct, may be a basis for a special grand jury report. See S. Rep. No. 91-617, 91st Cong., 1st Sess. (1969); 1970 U.S. Code Cong. & Ad. News 4007.

Reports involving public officials must connect "misconduct," "malfeasance," or "misfeasance" with "organized criminal activity." "Organized criminal activity" should be interpreted as being much broader than "organized crimes;" it includes "any criminal activity collectively undertaken." This statement is based upon the legislative history of 18 U.S.C. §3503(a), not of 18 U.S.C. §3333, but both sections were part of the Organized Crime Control Act of 1970, making it logical to construe the term the same way for both sections. See 116 Cong. Rec. 35293 (October 7, 1970).

Before the district court may enter as a public record a special grand jury report concerning appointed public officers or employees, a complex procedure must be followed as set down in 18 U.S.C. §3333(c). The court begins by sealing its order accepting the report and the report itself. The report may not be made public or disclosed under subpoena until at least 31 days after a copy has been served upon each public officer or employee named in the report, and an answer has been filed or the time for filing an answer has expired. (Despite use of the singular in the legislation, the Criminal Division takes the position that no report should be made public until all the answers have been filed or the time for filing has elapsed as to all the public officers or employees named.) Furthermore, the report may not be made public if an appeal is taken from the court's determination that the report is supported by the evidence until all rights of review of the public officers or employees have expired or terminated in an order accepting the report. In addition, the order accepting the report may not be entered until 30 days after delivery of the report to the public officer or body as prescribed in 18 U.S.C. §3333(c)(3).

The court is empowered to make appropriate orders to prevent unauthorized publication of the report and to punish for contempt anyone who does publish it without authorization.

Within 20 days after service of the order and report on him/her, a public officer or employee may file with the clerk a verified answer to the report in accordance with 18 U.S.C. §3333(c)(2). The court may extend the time within which the answer may be filed and may also order such limited publication of the report as may be necessary for the preparation of an answer. The answer should concisely state the facts and law constituting the accused's defense to the charges, and shall become the appendix to the report. The court may order that those portions of the answer which have been inserted scandalously, prejudiciously, or unnecessarily be omitted from the appendix.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

The court is authorized, under 18 U.S.C. §3333(d), to put off the filing of the report as a public record if the court finds that the filing may prejudice the fair consideration of a pending criminal matter. In that situation, the court shall order that the report be sealed. The report will not be subject to subpoena or public inspection during the pendency of the criminal matter, except upon order of the court.

If a court decides that a report submitted to it by a special grand jury regarding a public officer or employee does not comply with the law, the court may seal the report and keep it secret or, for remedial purposes, order the same grand jury to take additional testimony. For purposes of taking additional testimony, a special grand jury may be extended to serve for longer than thirty-six months (but this is the only exception to the thirty-six months limitation).

If the district court feels that the filing of a special grand jury report as a public record would prejudice the fair consideration of a pending criminal matter, the court is authorized under 18 U.S.C. §3333(d) to keep the report sealed during the pendency of that matter. Sealed for such a reason, the report would not be subject to subpoena.

When appropriate, U.S. Attorneys will deliver copies of grand jury reports, together with the appendices, to the governmental bodies having jurisdiction to discipline the appointed officers and employees whose involvement in "organized criminal activity" is the subject of the report. See 18 U.S.C. §3333(c)(3). (The prospect of such disciplinary action does not prevent the officer's or employee's being compelled to testify under a grant of immunity; see In re Reno, 331 F. Supp. 507 (E.D.Mich. 1971)).

9-11.441 Consultation with the Criminal Division about Reports

If a special grand jury will be considering the issuance of a report at the culmination of its service, U.S. Attorneys are requested to notify the Chief of the Organized Crime and Racketeering Section promptly of the fact and explain why an indictment cannot be found to obviate the issuance of a grand jury report. It should also be explained how the facts developed during a criminal investigation support one of the authorized types of reports. Before any draft report is furnished to the grand jury, it must be submitted to the Chief of the Organized Crime and Racketeering Section for approval.

It is not clear what remedy the government would have if a court was wrong in sealing a special grand jury report and refusing to make it public. The Chief of the Organized Crime and Racketeering Section should be notified promptly if a court finally determines for any reason that a grand jury report is deficient or not properly to be released, so that consideration may be given to the possibility of taking the matter to the court of appeals.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-12.340 Forfeiture

Rule 7(c) (2), Fed. R. Crim. P., as amended in 1979, provides:

No judgment of forfeiture may be entered in a criminal proceeding unless the indictment or the information shall allege the extent of the interest or property subject to forfeiture.

To accomplish the criminal forfeiture of property pursuant to one of the statutes providing for such forfeiture, among which are 18 U.S.C. §1963(c), RICO; 21 U.S.C. §848, controlled substance; 17 U.S.C. §605(b), copyright infringement; the indictment has to include a paragraph listing the property or interest that is subject to forfeiture. Absent such an allegation, there can be no special verdict concerning the property to be forfeited, Rule 31(e), Fed. R. Crim. P.

United States v. Grammatikos, 633 F.2d 1013 (2d Cir. 1980), is instructive as to what constitutes a sufficient forfeiture allegation. The Court of Appeals did not require the indictment to identify each of the properties which would be the subject of a special verdict. Rule 7 (c)(2) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure only required an allegation of the extent of the interest to be forfeited. The rule was satisfied in this instance since the indictment advised the defendant that all of his interest in the illicit enterprise was to be forfeited. Each item of property subject to forfeiture did not have to be considered by the grand jury since forfeiture was not an essential element of the offense, but was merely intended to serve an additional penalty for its violation.

Furthermore, the Court of Appeals in United States v. Peacock, 654 F.2d 334, 351 (5th Cir. 1981), refused to limit its determination of compliance with Rule 7 (c)(2) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure to just the paragraph reciting the property subject to forfeiture, but considered all the listed acts constituting the pattern of racketeering activity to see if the defendants were given adequate notice, as it so found, of the property the government sought to have forfeited.

Note that the Department of Justice no longer recommends including a forfeiture provision in an indictment even when the government does not intend to pursue the criminal forfeiture. The case which originally prompted this recommendation by the Department, United States v. Hall, 521 F.2d 406 (9th Cir. 1975) (indictment dismissal for violation, of Rule 7 (c)(2)) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure should have no further application. Rule 7 (c)(2) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure has since been amended in specific response to the Hall decision. See Advisory Committee Notes to 1979 amendment. Additionally, subsequent case law has further negated Hall's authority. See United States v. Bolar, 569 F.2d 1071 (9th Cir. 1978); United States v. Brigance, 472 F. Supp. 1177 (S.D. Tex. 1979).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-12.000 INDICTMENTS AND INFORMATIONS

An indictment, as defined in Black's Law Dictionary (4th ed.), is:

An accusation in writing found and presented by a grand jury, legally convoked and sworn, to the court in which it is impaneled, charging that a person therein named has done some act, or been guilty of some omission, which, by law, is a public offense, punishable on indictment.

An information, as defined in Black's, id., is:

A formal accusation of crime, differing from an indictment only in that it is preferred by a prosecuting officer instead of by a grand jury.

Together with the pleas of guilty, not guilty, or nolo contendere, the indictment and information constitute the pleadings in federal criminal proceedings. See Rule 12(a), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure.

9.12.010 Obtaining an Indictment

See USAM 9-11.000.

9-12.020 Obtaining an Information

An information, drawn up by a prosecutor, may be filed without leave of court. See Rule 7(a), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. See also ABA Standards Relating To The Administration of Criminal Justice, "The Prosecution Function," 3.7 (1974). The information need not be supported by affidavit unless an arrest warrant is sought. See Rule 9(a), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure.

9-12.100 USE OF AN INDICTMENT OR INFORMATION

Rule 7(a), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, provides in pertinent part:

An offense which may be punished by death shall be prosecuted by indictment. An offense which may be punished by imprisonment for a term exceeding one year or at hard labor shall be prosecuted by indictment or,

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

if indictment is waived, it may be prosecuted by information. Any other offense may be prosecuted by indictment or by information.

9-12.110 When an Indictment is Required

The Fifth Amendment commands that no person be held to answer for "a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury." As with a capital crime, whether a crime is "infamous" depends upon its punishment rather than upon the character of the criminal act. Any crime that may be punished by imprisonment in a penitentiary or at hard labor is an infamous crime. See Green v. United States, 356 U.S. 165, 183 (1958); Catlette v. United States, 132 F.2d 902 (4th Cir. 1943). Title 18, United States Code, classifies offenses whose penalty is death or imprisonment exceeding one year as felonies and classifies all other crimes as misdemeanors. See 18 U.S.C. §1. Imprisonment in a penitentiary may be imposed upon conviction of a felony. See 18 U.S.C. §4083. Although the penalty for a misdemeanor may be imprisonment for one year, a misdemeanor is not an "infamous" crime because the defendant cannot be placed in a penitentiary without his/her consent. See 18 U.S.C. §4083. Therefore, unless an indictment is waived, see USAM 9-12.200, infra, its use is required to charge a felony.

9-12.120 When an Information May be Used

An information may be used where indictment is waived. See USAM 9-12.200, infra.

If the defendant is a corporation, it may be prosecuted by information since corporations are not amenable to imprisonment, but only to a monetary penalty. See United States v. Yellow Freight Sys., 637 F.2d 1248, 1253-55 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 815 (1980). A fine, even one potentially of a million dollars, cannot be considered an infamous punishment. See United States v. Armored Transport, Inc., 629 F.2d 1313 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 450 U.S. 965 (1980).

An information may also be used where the offense charged is punishable by imprisonment for one year or less. See Duke v. United States, 301 U.S. 492 (1937). Where several misdemeanor offenses are charged in separate counts, the fact that the aggregate penalty upon conviction may exceed one year does not require prosecution by indictment. See United States v. Johnson, 585 F.2d 374, 377 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 440 U.S. 921 (1978); United States v. Kahl, 583 F.2d 1351, 1355 (5th Cir. 1978).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Although an indictment is not required, a grand jury may return an indictment for a misdemeanor. See Hammond v. Brown, 323 F. Supp. 326, 332 (N.D. Ohio), aff'd, 450 F.2d 480 (6th Cir. 1971). However, having chosen to proceed by indictment rather than by information in such a case, the prosecution is bound by the principles governing indictments. See United States v. Goldstein, 502 F.2d 526 (3d Cir. 1974). See also USAM 9-12.420, infra. But see United States v. Pandilidis 524 F.2d 644 (6th Cir. 1975), where amendment of a misdemeanor indictment by a bill of particulars was held to be harmless error. See USAM 9-12.430, infra.

9-12.130 When Neither an Indictment Nor an Information is Required

The Fifth Amendment specifically excepts from the indictment requirement those cases "arising in the land or naval forces, or in the militia, when in actual service in time of war or public danger." In fact, all offenses arising under the Uniform Code of Military Justice in which the accused is on active duty in the military service may be prosecuted by court-martial, provided that the offense is "service-connected." See O'Callahan v. Parker, 395 U.S. 258 (1969).

Criminal contempt represents another exception to the rule that prosecutions must be initiated by an indictment or information. Proceedings under 18 U.S.C. §401 may be initiated summarily by the court or upon notice and hearing in accordance with Rule 42, Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. See Green v. United States, 356 U.S. 165 (1958). An indictment, although not required, may be used. See United States v. Mensik, 440 F.2d 1232 (4th Cir. 1971). However, in the case of contempt of Congress under 2 U.S.C. §194, the use of an indictment is required by statute and must be employed. See Russell v. United States, 369 U.S. 749 (1962).

9-12.140 Presentments

Rule 7, Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, does not recognize the use of a presentment, a charge preferred by a grand jury on its own initiative. While a grand jury may itself investigate, call witnesses, and make a presentment charging a crime, the presentment so returned cannot serve to initiate a prosecution. To initiate a prosecution, a presentment would first have to be submitted to the grand jury in the form of an indictment and be voted for in accordance with Rule 6(f), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. See Gaither v. United States, 413 F.2d 1061 (D.C. Cir. 1969).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-12.200 WAIVER OF INDICTMENT

Rule 7(b), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, provides:

An offense which may be punished by imprisonment for a term exceeding one year or at hard labor may be prosecuted by information if the defendant, after he has been advised of the nature of the charge and of his rights, waives in open court prosecution by indictment.

Unless the offense is one which "may be punished by death" within the meaning of Rule 7(a), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, the defendant may waive his/her right to be indicted by a grand jury for any felony. See USAM 9-12.201, infra.

9-12.201 Effect of Furman v. Georgia

Furman v. Georgia, 408 U.S. 238 (1971), raised the issue of whether offenses which are statutorily punishable by death must be prosecuted by indictment pursuant to Rule 7(a), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, or whether a post-Furman defendant may waive indictment as in the case of other non-capital offenses. Furman has not been uniformly viewed as necessarily having the effect of invalidating all statutes and procedural rules that were tied to the concept of a "capital" case. If the statute's purpose derived from the nature of the offense and not from the potential severity of the punishment, the statute remains in effect. See United States v. Kennedy, 618 F.2d 557 (9th Cir. 1980). Once a case has clearly lost its "capital" character, one court has held that the defendant was no longer entitled to twenty preemptory challenges under Rule 24(b), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, United States v. Maestas, 523 F.2d (10th Cir. 1975), and another held that the government was no longer required to comply with the disclosure requirement of 18 U.S.C. §3432, United States v. Trapnell, 638 F.2d 1016, 1029 (7th Cir. 1980). But another circuit has held that even though the death penalty could not be constitutionally imposed, the defendant had an absolute right to two attorneys pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §3005. See United States v. Watson, 496 F.2d 1125 (4th Cir. 1973).

In view of the uncertainty as to the effect of Furman on Rule 7, Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, prosecution of all offenses having a capital penalty should be prosecuted by indictment, notwithstanding a

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

defendant's willingness to waive his/her right to be indicted by a grand jury. Post-Furman legislation which provides for a death penalty such as the air piracy statute, 49 U.S.C. §1472, requires an indictment to initiate prosecution.

9-12.210 Waiver Procedure

There is no formal procedure for obtaining a waiver of indictment. Rule 7, Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, merely requires that it be waived "in open court." However, the court must be satisfied that the defendant knowingly, voluntarily, and understandingly waives his/her right to be indicted by a grand jury. See Bartlett v. United States, 354 F.2d 745, (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 384 U.S. 945 (1966); Farr v. United States, 314 F. Supp. 1125 (W.D. Mo. 1970) adopted, 436 F.2d 975 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 402 U.S. 947 (1971). However, a waiver of indictment, being merely a waiver of a finding of probable cause by a grand jury, does not call for all the protections associated with the entry of a guilty plea. See United States v. Montgomery, 628 F.2d 414 (5th Cir. 1980).

Where a waiver form is used, the fact that the defendant does not actually sign the waiver in court is not objectionable where the form is filed of record before arraignment. See Ching v. United States, 292 F.2d 31 (10th Cir. 1965).

A waiver may be executed in a district other than that in which the crime was committed. Boyes v. United States, 298 F.2d 828 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 370 U.S. 948 (1962). United States v. Scavo, 593 F.2d 837 (8th Cir. 1979). The fact that the defendant waives indictment before the information is actually filed does not affect the information thereafter filed. The court acquires jurisdiction upon the filing of the information at which time the waiver becomes effective. Young v. United States, 354 F.2d 449 (10th Cir. 1965).

9-12.220 Prosecutorial Discretion to Allow

Although Rule 7, Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, allows a defendant to waive his/her right to be indicted by a grand jury, the prosecutor retains the discretion to proceed by indictment regardless of the defendant's preference. See Rattley v. Ireland, 197 F.2d 585 (D.C. Cir. 1952).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-12.230 Judicial Discretion to Set Aside

The court may set aside a valid waiver of indictment, and, as in the case of a motion to set aside a plea of guilty, the court's exercise of discretion will be upheld on appeal unless it is clearly erroneous. However, the courts are not as likely to set aside a waiver of indictment as a guilty plea, for the right to be indicted, though valuable, involves only the procedure for initiating a criminal prosecution. Setting aside a guilty plea, on the other hand, is fundamental to determining the defendant's guilt. See Bartlett v. United States, 354 F.2d 745 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 384 U.S. 945 (1966); Williams v. United States, 410 F.2d 370 (3d Cir. 1969). Note that a court's allowance of the withdrawal of a guilty plea does not compel the withdrawal of a waiver of indictment entered in conjunction with the plea. See United States v. Scavo, 593 F.2d 837 (8th Cir. 1979).

9-12.240 Effect at New Trial

A waiver of indictment will be effective at a new trial upon the same information following reversal of the case on appeal because of an error in the admission of evidence, at least in the absence of a request to withdraw the waiver prior to the second trial. See Brooks v. United States, 351 F.2d 282 (10th Cir. 1965), cert. denied, 383 U.S. 916 (1966).

9-12.300 DRAFTING INDICTMENTS AND INFORMATIONS

The Sixth Amendment commands that the accused in a criminal prosecution "be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation." This is comprehended by the language of Rule 7(c), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, requiring an indictment to be "a plain, concise and definite written statement of the essential facts constituting the offense charged." Thus, the drafter of indictments and informations must afford the defendant not only a document that contains all of the elements of the offense, whether or not such elements appear in the statute, but one that is sufficiently descriptive to give the defendant notice of the particular offense.

9-12.310 Formalities

Rule 7(c), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, deals with the drafting formalities discussed, infra.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-12.311 Caption

Rule 7(c), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, specifically provides that the indictment or the information need not contain a "formal commencement," or a "formal conclusion," or any other matter not necessary to a plain, concise, and definite statement of the essential facts of the charge. The Appendix of Forms referred to in Rule 58, Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, for example, is an indictment for murder in the first degree under 18 U.S.C. §§1111, 1114. The caption "in the United States District Court for the . . . District of . . . Division" merely identifies the court in which the indictment is returned. The caption is not a part of the body of the indictment and erroneous information contained in the caption will not affect the validity of the indictment. See Stillman v. United States, 177 F.2d 607 (9th Cir. 1949).

9-12.312 Subscription

Rule 6(c), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, provides, among other things, that the foreperson of the grand jury "shall sign indictments." This requirement is satisfied by his/her signature below the endorsement, "A True Bill," Jones v. Pescor, 169 F.2d 853 (8th Cir. 1948). The fact that by inadvertence the indictment is unsigned when handed to the clerk is not fatal where the foreperson appears thereafter in open court and signs it in the presence of the grand jury. See United States v. Long, 118 F. Supp. 857 (D. P.R. 1954).

Rule 7(c), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, provides that the indictment and information "shall be signed by the attorney for the government." If the attorney for the government refuses to sign, which is within his/her discretion, there is no indictment. This provision of Rule 7, recognizes the power of government counsel "to permit or not to permit the initiation of a prosecution." See United States v. Cox, 342 F.2d 167 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 381 U.S. 935 (1965); In Re Grand Jury January, 1969, 315 F. Supp. 662 (D. Md. 1970).

Rule 54(c), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, defines the phrase "attorney for the government" to include the Attorney General, an authorized assistant of the Attorney General, and an authorized assistant of a U.S. Attorney. An indictment may be signed in the name of the U.S. Attorney by an assistant who is authorized to sign the U.S. Attorney's name. See United States v. Funkhouser, 198 F. Supp. 708 (D. Md. 1961), opinion adopted, 299 F.2d 940 (4th Cir.), cert. denied 370 U.S. 939, reh'g denied, 371 U.S. 854 (1962); Wheatley v. United States, 159 F.2d 599 (4th Cir. 1946); United States v. Keig, 334 F.2d 823 (7th Cir. 1964). In turn, there is nothing impermissible in having a high ranking Justice Department official's signature on an indictment. See United States v. Climatemp, Inc., 482 F. Supp. 376 (N.D. Ill. 1979).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The fact that the name of the attorney for the government is typewritten does not affect the indictment where the question is not raised before trial. See Wiltsey v. United States, 222 F.2d 600 (4th Cir. 1955). The courts have reasoned that the signature of the U.S. Attorney, like the caption, is not a part of the indictment and serves only to evidence the authenticity of the indictment and the government's consent to prosecution. The manner in which it is signed is therefore not such a defect as would invalidate the indictment. See United States v. Keig, supra.

9-12.313 Incorporation by Reference

Rule 7(c)(1), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, provides that "[a]llegations made in one count may be incorporated by reference in another count." The device of incorporating material from other counts is useful to avoid repetition such as is typical in fraud, conspiracy, and bankruptcy cases. For example, in a mail fraud case an introductory paragraph to one count was employed to charge all of the necessary elements represented by individual mailings, which may be incorporated by reference and set out in columnar form to avoid repetition. See United States v. McGuire, 381 F.2d 306 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 389 U.S. 1053 (1967).

Form 3 of the Appendix of Forms referred to in Rule 58, Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, illustrates incorporation of material from another count: "The Grand Jury realleges all of the allegations of the first count of this indictment, except those contained in the last paragraph thereof." The safe course to follow in incorporating material from another county is to employ the term "incorporate" unless the reference is otherwise clear. If, for example, one count describes a particular election, a reference in subsequent counts to "said election" properly refers to the same election. See Blitz v. United States, 153 U.S. 308 (1894). Incorporation should not be made to the point of incorporating the allegations of a count in one indictment into a count of a different indictment as was done in United States v. Bergdoll, 442 F. Supp. 1308, 1318 n.16 (D.D.C. 1981).

Each count is viewed as a separate indictment whose sufficiency must be determined without reference to any other count. See Dunn v. United

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

States, 284 U.S. 290 (1932). If a count does not expressly incorporate allegations of another count, such allegations cannot be considered. For example, where count one properly described a controlled substance but count two omitted the numbers "3, 4," describing the same substance, the second count did not state an offense, a defect that could not be cured by reference to the first count. See United States v. Huff, 512 F.2d 66 (5th Cir. 1975). The same result obtained where counts two and four of an indictment incorporated allegations of counts one and three, but the latter did not incorporate the allegations of the former. Allegations necessary to counts one and three could not be supplied from counts two and four. See United States v. Gordon, 253 F.2d 177 (7th Cir. 1958).

Even though a count has been dismissed and is no longer a viable part of the indictment, allegations of such counts may be incorporated by reference in another count. See United States v. Shavin, 287 F.2d 647 (7th Cir.); United States v. Weiner, 578 F.2d 757, 776 (9th Cir. 1978).

9-12.314 Citation of the Statute Violated

Rule 7(c)(1), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, provides:

The indictment or information shall state for each count the official or customary citation of the statute, rule, regulation or other provision of law which the defendant is alleged therein to have violated.

The above provision is limited by paragraph 7(c)(3), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure:

Harmless Error. Error in the citation or its omission shall not be grounds for dismissal of the indictment or information or for reversal of a conviction if the error or omission did not mislead the defendant to his prejudice.

At the time the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure were adopted, current law did not regard citation to statutes or regulations as part of the indictment; convictions could, therefore, be sustained on the basis of a statute or rule other than that cited, as in Williams v. United States, 168 U.S. 382 (1897), and United States v. Hutcheson, 312 U.S. 219 (1941). The Court stated in Hutcheson, supra, that the designation of the statute is immaterial. "He [the prosecutor] may have conceived the charge under one statute which would not sustain the indictment but it may nevertheless come within the terms of another statute." Id. at 229. Rule 7(c)(1), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, is for the benefit of the defendant, but is likewise not intended to cause a dismissal; it is simply to provide a means properly to inform the defendant without endangering the prosecution. Thus the mis-citation of a statute will not warrant reversal where the language of an indictment makes the charge clear and the defendant can show no prejudice. See United States v. Fekri, 650 F.2d 1044 (9th Cir. 1981). Moreover, the fact that the citation is in the heading rather than in the body of the indictment, unless it misleads the defendant to his/her prejudice, will not affect the indictment. See Huizar v. United States, 339 F.2d 173 (5th Cir. 1964), cert. denied, 410 U.S. 926 (1965). Nor did the erroneous citation of a state statute in setting forth a predicate RICO act prove fatal where the reference to the state offense served to identify generally the kind of activity made illegal by the federal statute. See United States v. Welch, 656 F.2d 1039, 1058 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 456 U.S. 915 (1982).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Citation of the statute charged should be distinguished from a reference to a statute that is an element of the offense. Here the reference must be sufficient to apprise the defendant of its identity. Thus, where the indictment charges that the defendant unlawfully imported diamonds "contrary to law," the words "contrary to law" refer to legal provisions outside the offense of smuggling that is being charged, and the law must be identified to determine the basis for the prosecution. See Keck v. United States, 172 U.S. 434 (1899).

9-12.315 Grammar, Spelling, and Typographical Errors

The indictment will not be defective merely because the wrong tense of a verb is used or because of similar discrepancies in language. The test of an indictment remains whether it states the elements of the offense intended to be charged with sufficient particularity to enable the defendant to prepare his/her defense and to plead the judgment as a bar to any subsequent prosecution for the same offense. See United States v. Logwood, 360 F.2d 905 (7th Cir. 1966).

An indictment will not be dismissed due to typographical errors unless a defendant can affirmatively show that some prejudice resulted from the errors. See United States v. Rich, 518 F.2d 980, 986 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 427 U.S. 907 (1976). There was no prejudice to the defendant where an indictment misspelled the word "coca" to read "cocoa" in a distribution of cocaine count, Coppola v. United States, 217 F.2d 155 (9th Cir. 1954); where it was apparent from the face of the indictment that the use of "1972" rather than "1973" was a typographical error,

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

United States v. Akins, 542 F.2d 70 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 430 U.S. 908 (1976); or where an indictment omitted the defendant's first name in one count, United States v. Lerma, 657 F.2d 786, 789 (5th Cir. 1981).

One court, though, refused to allow the date of an offense to be amended from "1981" to "1980" where the government only offered the subjective conclusion that the error was attributable to typographical error without any affidavit supporting such an allegation, as required by the local rules. See United States v. Randolph, 542 F. Supp. 11 (E.D. Tenn. 1982).

9-12.320 Sufficiency

Rule 7(c)(1), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, provides;

The indictment or the information shall be a plain, concise and definite written statement of the essential facts constituting the offense charged.

The true test of an indictment is not whether it might possibly be made more certain but whether it contains:

Every element of the offense intended to be charged, and sufficiently apprises the defendant of what he must be prepared to meet, and, in the case any other proceedings are taken against him for a similar offense, whether the record shows with accuracy to what extent he may plead a former acquittal or conviction.

Cochran and Sayre v. United States, 157 U.S. 286, 290 (1895).

The information must conform to the same rules regarding sufficiency as does an indictment. See England v. United States, 174 F.2d 466 (5th Cir. 1949); Southern Ry Co. v. United States, 88 F.2d 31 (5th Cir. 1937).

9-12.321 Elements of the Offense

The first component of the suggested test calls for all of the elements of the offense charged. This is founded upon the Fifth Amendment's requirement that prosecution for an infamous crime be instituted by a grand jury. If an essential element of the offense is omitted from the indictment, it cannot, consistent with the principle

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

underlying the Amendment, be supplied by the prosecutor or by the courts. As stated in Russell v. United States, 369 U.S. 749, 770 (1962):

To allow the prosecution, or the court, to make a subsequent guess as to what was in the minds of the grand jury at the time they returned the indictment would deprive the defendant of a basic protection which the guaranty of the intervention of a grand jury was designed to secure. For a defendant could then be convicted on the basis of facts not found by, and perhaps not even presented to, the grand jury which indicted him.

In United States v. Outler, 659 F.2d 1306 (5th Cir. 1981), it was fatal to an indictment which charged a physician with prescribing drugs, in violation of 21 U.S.C. §841(a), not to allege that the prescriptions lacked legitimate medical reasons as an element of the offense. The court acknowledged that this factor was not a statutory element of the violation, that the defendant was clearly aware of the nature of the charges, and that the grand jurors had likely considered the legitimacy issue in returning the indictment. Nonetheless, the Fifth Amendment did not allow the Court to speculate whether the grand jury had considered this omitted element in determining whether there was probable cause for the indictment.

9-12.322 Requirement of Specificity

The second part of the sufficiency test, apprising the defendant of what he/she must be prepared to meet, incorporates the specificity requirement of the Sixth Amendment.

The specificity requirement serves to insure that a defendant only has to answer to charges actually brought by the grand jury and not a prosecutor's interpretation of the charges, that the defendant is apprised of the charges against him/her in order to permit preparation of his/her defense, and that the defendant is protected against double jeopardy. See United States v. Haas, 583 F.2d 216 (5th Cir.), reh'g denied, 588 F.2d 829, cert. denied, 440 U.S. 981 (1978).

An example of indictment which failed this test is provided by United States v. Nance, 533 F.2d 699 (D.C. Cir. 1976). The indictment charged a false pretense violation pursuant to the D.C. Code. It listed the name of each victim, the date of the false representation, the amount each victim lost, and the date the sum was paid to the defendants, but was fatally defective as a consequence of its failure to specify the false representation which induced the victims to pay the money to the defendants.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The indictment, though, need only satisfy a defendant's constitutional right to know what he/she is charged with and not his/her need to know the evidentiary details which will be used to establish her/her commission of the offense. See United States v. Diecidue, 603 F.2d 535, 547 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, Gispert v. United States, 449 U.S. 946 (1979). Therefore, an explicit discussion of a RICO enterprises' effect on interstate commerce was not required since it would contribute nothing to the defendant's understanding of the nature of the offense which was that of conducting an enterprise's affairs through racketeering activity.

9-12.323 Plea of Former Jeopardy

The third ingredient of the test of sufficiency, whether the record shows with accuracy to what extent the defendant may plead a former acquittal or conviction, is, as a practical matter, satisfied by compliance with the essential elements and specificity tests. Moreover, the record of the entire case, not just the indictment, is available when the defense of double jeopardy is raised. See Bartell v. United States, 227 U.S. 427 (1913). As the court pointed out in United States v. Covington, 411 F.2d 1087, 1089 (4th Cir. 1969): "The transcript is available . . . and, should it ever be necessary to do so, it may readily be determined from the transcript whether a newly charged offense was one 'which would have supported a conviction under the earlier indictment.'"

9-12.324 Charging in the Language of the Statute

In United States v. Carll, 105 U.S. 611 (1881), the indictment followed the language of the statute but was found insufficient for failure to allege that the defendant knew that the instruments he uttered were forged or counterfeited. As the Court pointed out, "it is not sufficient to set forth the offense in the words of the statute, unless those words of themselves fully, directly, and expressly, without any uncertainty or ambiguity, set forth all the elements necessary to constitute the offense intended to be punished." Id. at 612.

The rule reiterates the Court's views in United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U.S., 542, 558 (1875):

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

It is an elementary principle of criminal pleading, that where the definition of the offense, whether it be at common law or by statute, "includes generic terms, it is not sufficient that the indictment shall charge the offense in the same generic terms as in the definition; but it must descend to particulars."

See also United States v. Simmons, 96 U.S. 360 (1877).

In Russell v. United States, 369 U.S. 749 (1962), the indictments charged defendants with contempt of Congress under 2 U.S.C. §192 in that they failed and refused to answer questions "pertinent to the question under inquiry" before a committee of Congress. The defendants challenged the sufficiency of the inquiry. In holding the indictments insufficient, the Court stated that where "guilty depends so critically upon such a specific identification of fact, our cases have uniformly held that an indictment must do more than simply repeat the language of the criminal statute." See Russell, supra, at 764.

The issue in Russell was raised by a motion to dismiss. The Court viewed the defect in the indictment as being one of specificity rather than omission of an essential element. In this situation the Court might have been expected to follow the rule in Hagner v. United States, 285 U.S. 427 (1932), and to overlook the defect as harmless error. However, the Court held that because of the omission of the subject of the inquiry, the indictments wholly failed to inform the defendants of the nature of the accusation against them and were not salvageable by a bill of particulars. "[I]t is a settled rule that a bill of particulars cannot save an invalid indictment." See Russell, supra, at 770.

In Hamling v. United States, 418 U.S. 87 (1974) the Court considered the sufficiency of an indictment under 18 U.S.C. §1461 making it a crime to mail obscene matter. Defendants challenged the sufficiency of the indictment, which charged them in the language of the statute, for failure to define obscenity. The Court distinguished Russell, supra, holding that the generic term "obscene" is not merely a generic or descriptive term but "a legal term of art," raising a question not of fact, as in Russell, supra, but of law. See Hamling, supra, at 118. See also United States v. Debrow, 346 U.S. 374 (1953). But, reliance on the language of the statute was fatal to an indictment in a case in which the defendant was charged with involuntary manslaughter under 18 U.S.C. §1112. Relevant case law had held that gross negligence and actual knowledge of potential harm were additional elements of the offense. The absence of such allegations in the indictment was not cured by the government's proof at trial of these elements or their inclusion in the court's instructions to the jury. See United States v. Opsta, 659 F.2d 848 (8th Cir. 1981).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-12.325 Negating Statutory Exceptions

Neither the indictment nor the information is required to negate defensive matter such as the statute of limitations or exceptions to the class of persons or objects set out in the statutes defining the offense.

[I]t has come to be a settled rule...that an indictment or other pleading founded on a general provision defining the elements of an offense, need not negate the matter of an exception made by a proviso or other distinct clause...[I]t is incumbent on one who relies on such an exception to set it up and establish it.

McKelvey v. United States, 260 U.S. 353, 357 (1922); United States v. Cook, 84 U.S. 168 (1872).

Thus, an indictment for assault with a dangerous weapon need not, following the statute, also allege that the assault was "without just cause." See Hockenberry v. United States, 422 F.2d 171 (9th Cir. 1970); United States v. Messina, 481 F.2d 878 (2d Cir. 1973). In United States v. Outler, 659 F.2d 1306 (5th Cir. 1981), the court though, rejected the government's argument that a lack of legitimate medical reason was a statutory exception rather than an essential element of a count charging a physician with prescribing drugs in violation of 21 U.S.C. §841.

9-12.326 Conjunctive and Disjunctive Elements

To avoid uncertainty in charging an offense in which the statute enumerates several different acts in the alternative, the practice is to plead the offense by substituting the conjunction "and" for the disjunctive "or."

When a statute specifies several alternative ways in which an offense may be committed, the indictment may allege the several ways in the conjunctive, and this fact neither makes the indictment bad for duplicity nor precludes a conviction if only one of the several allegations linked in the conjunctive in the indictment is proven.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

United States v. McCann, 465 F.2d 147, 162 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 412 U.S. (1972); Fields v. United States, 408 F.2d 885 (5th Cir. (1969)).

Thus, when the statute punishes taking, carrying away, or concealing, the indictment properly charged taking, carrying away, and concealing. See United States v. Gunter, 546 F.2d 861 (10th Cir.), cert. denied 430 U.S. 947 (1977). Likewise, where the statute reads "prostitution or debauchery," the indictment should be phrased, "prostitution and debauchery." See Bayless v. United States, 365 F.2d 694 (10th Cir. 1966); United States v. Uco Oil Co., 546 F.2d 833 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 430 U.S. 966 (1976). The consequence of charging in the alternative may lead to rendering the indictment insufficient for uncertainty, as in United States v. MacKenzie, 170 F. Supp. 797, 799 (D. Me. 1959).

It is equally well settled, however that an indictment which alleges the several acts constituting the statutory offense in the disjunctive or alternative lacks the necessary certainty and is wholly insufficient.

See also United States v. Hicks, 619 F.2d 752 (8th Cir. 1980).

9-12.330 Particular Allegations

9-12.331 Time and Date

Except where time is an essential element of the offense, the time allegation is not material to the sufficiency of the indictment if the error or variance in proof is within reasonable limits. Time was material to an indictment charging a willful failure to file an income tax return by the April 15 deadline. Therefore, evidence showing that the defendant had obtained a filing extension until May 7 of that year caused a fatal variance. See United States v. Goldstein, 502 F.2d 526 (3d Cir. 1974). It is well settled that proof of any date, within reason, before the return of the indictment and within the statute of limitations is sufficient. See Russell v. United States 429 F.2d 237 (5th Cir. 1970).

Courts have allowed considerable leeway as to the specificity of the alleged date of an offense in an indictment. One court reasoned that the more specific the time allegation, stronger is the inference that the grand jury was only indicting a defendant for acts occurring on the specific dates charged, whereas use of the qualifying phrase, "on or about" indicated a grand jury unwillingness to pinpoint the date of the offense charged. See United States v. Somers, 496 F.2d 723, 745 (3d Cir. 1974). A fatal variance occurred when an indictment charged that the subject extortinate acts occurred "on October 7 and October 8, 1962," but the proof showed such acts occurred on August 10 and October 5, 1962. See United States v. Critchley, 353 F.2d 358 (3d Cir. 1965). In contrast, the court in United States v. Grapp, 653 F.2d 189 (5th Cir. 1981), readily rejected a variance claim where the proof at trial showed that the time of the offense was the middle of 1977 and the indictment charged it had occurred "on or about May 27, 1977."

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Citing hornbook law that great generality is allowed as to the alleged date of an offense in an indictment, it was held that a count charging that an alien smuggling offense took place "on or about 1977, the exact date to the grand jury unknown" was within reasonable limits. See United States v. Nunez, 668 F.2d 10 (1st Cir. 1981).

9-12.332 Place of Offense

The indictment or information need not allege a place where the offense occurred. The Appendix of Forms uniformly alleges that the crime took place "in the ... District of ..." but omits any reference to such particulars as state, county, city, or township. Where place is an element of the offense, however, it must be set out. Form 6 illustrates an indictment under 18 U.S.C. §2312, interstate transportation of a stolen motor vehicle, naming the state from which the vehicle was taken and into which it was transported, these being essential to the offense.

Under early English law, when jurors were also witnesses summoned from the vicinage, the sheriff needed to know where the crime was committed in order to summon the proper jury. In this country "most authorities assume that an allegation is sufficient after verdict which shows it [the crime] to have been done within the jurisdiction of the court." See Ledbetter v. United States, 170 U.S. 606, 613 (1898).

An allegation that the bank robbery occurred "in the State and District of New Jersey" met the requirements of an indictment. See United States v. Bujese, 371 F.2d 120 (3d Cir. 1967). Likewise, it was sufficient that acts of bribery occurred in "the Western District of Texas." See United States v. Sutherland, 656 F.2d 1181 (5th Cir. 1981). "[I]t is well established that an indictment is not legally insufficient for failure to include such an allegation (place where the crime occurred)." See United States v. Honneus, 508 F.2d 566 (1st Cir. 1974), cert. denied, 95 S. Ct. 1677 (1975). Even when an indictment alleged that a murder took place in the town of Popular instead of Brackton, and the indictment was therefore dismissed by the government after the jury had been impaneled, the indictment was sufficient to support a defense of double jeopardy against the subsequent, corrected indictment. See United States v. LeMay, 330 F. Supp. 628 (D. Mont. 1971).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-12.333 Means

Rule 7(c)(1), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, provides:

It may be alleged in a single count that the means by which the defendant committed the offense are unknown or that he committed it by one or more specified means.

This provision is intended to eliminate the use of multiple counts for the purpose of alleging the commission of the offense by different means or in different ways.

While it is permissible to allege several means in a single count, it is duplicitous to allege more than one offense in a single count. See Fed. R. Crim. P., Rule 8(a). It is therefore essential to distinguish between separate means and separate offenses. A count charging a single continuing offense does not offend the rule against duplicity because more than one means, each of which could constitute an offense standing alone, is joined in a single count. See United States v. Berardi, 675 F.2d 894, 897 (7th Cir. 1982).

A single conspiracy having as its object the commission of numerous offenses is but a single offense. See United States v. Crummer, 151 F.2d 958 (10th Cir. 1945), cert. denied, 327 U.S. 785 (1946). "The allegation in a single count of a conspiracy to commit several crimes is not duplicitous, for 'The conspiracy is the crime, and this is one, however diverse its objects.'" See Braverman v. United States, 317 U.S. 49, 54, (1942), (quoting in part from Frohwerk v. United States, 249 U.S. 204, 210 (1919)).

9-12.334 Venue

A defendant has a right to be tried in a forum where the crime was committed. See Article III, Section 2, Constitution of the United States; Sixth Amendment, Constitution of the United States; Rule 18, Fed. R. Crim. P. As discussed, infra, this "right" may be waived, but absent a waiver, the government's case fails for lack of proof of venue. See United States v. Branan, 457 F.2d 1062, 1065-66 (6th Cir. 1972). The necessity of proving venue, however, does not require it to be alleged in the indictment. Rule 7(c)(1), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, does not require venue to be alleged in an indictment: United States v. Votteller, 544 F.2d 1355 (6th Cir. 1976). In fact, the Appendix of Forms referred to in Rule 58, Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, does provide for a statement of the district in which the offense occurred. See USAM 9-12.332, supra. To avoid the filing of a bill of particulars to discover where the offense was committed, the better practice is to include such information in the indictment. See Hemphill v. United States, 392 F.2d 45, 48 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 393 U.S. 877 (1968).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Venue must be proved at trial by the government by a preponderance of the evidence, and proof may be by direct or circumstantial evidence. See United States v. Powell, 498 F.2d 890, 891 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 866 (1974); United States v. McDonough, 603 F.2d 19 (7th Cir. 1979); United States v. Luton, 486 F.2d 1021, 1023 (5th Cir. 1973), cert. denied, 417 U.S. 920 (1974). A division of a district, however, is not a unit of venue. See United States v. Burns, 662 F.2d 1378 (11th Cir. 1981). Any defect in venue apparent from the indictment will be waived if the defendant fails to object before pleading guilty or before trial. See United States v. Semel, 347 F.2d 228, 229 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 382 U.S. 840 (1965); United States v. Jones, 162 F.2d 72, 73 (2d Cir. 1947); Fed. R. Crim. P. 12(b)(2). A claim of insufficient evidence to support a finding of venue will be waived if not specifically raised in a motion for acquittal. See United States v. Menendez, 612 F.2d 51 (2d Cir. 1979); United States v. Roberts, 618 F.2d 530 (9th Cir.), appeal after remand, 640 F.2d 225, cert. denied, 452 U.S. 942 (1980).

A number of statutes regulate the venue of particular criminal proceedings in the district courts. See, e.g., 18 U.S.C. §§1073 (flight to avoid prosecution or giving testimony), 3236 (murder or manslaughter), 3237(a) (continuing offenses and offenses committed in more than one district), 3239 (threatening communications).

9-12.335 Intent

It is difficult to formulate a rule of general application that will safely avoid all of the hazards associated with charging scienter. This is because statutes very often do not provide a reliable guide. Traditionally, crime consists of an act coupled with intent. While this is typically the case with conduct that was regarded as criminal at common law, it is not necessarily true of a significant number of offenses that are regulatory in nature. In the case of statutes that do not specify intent, it becomes necessary to determine whether scienter is an element of the offense. This may be difficult. "Neither this Court nor, so far as we are aware, any other has undertaken to delineate a precise line or set forth comprehensive criteria for distinguishing between crimes that require a mental element and crimes that do not." See Morissette v. United States, 342 U.S. 246, 260 (1951).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Where intent is required, the indictment need not contain formal words such as "knowingly," "willfully," "feloniously," or "unlawfully." See United States v. Zarra, 293 F. Supp. 1074 (M.D. Pa. 1969), aff'd, 423 F.2d 1227 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 826 (1970). Thus in an indictment for bail jumping, in which "willfully" is a necessary element of the offense, an express allegation that the bail jumping was willful was not required so long as other words or facts contained in the indictment necessarily or fairly imported guilty knowledge. See United States v. McLennan, 672 F.2d 239 (1st Cir. 1982).

An indictment for bank robbery in the language of 18 U.S.C. §2113(a) that the defendant "by force and violence and by intimidation did take" was not fatally defective for failure to charge intent. 18 U.S.C. §2113(a) does not include intent and the court, on a motion to vacate sentence, held that the words used implied intent. See Walker v. United States, 439 F.2d 1114 (6th Cir. 1971). The same issue was raised in United States v. Purvis, 580 F.2d 853 (5th Cir.), reh'g denied, 585 F.2d 520, cert. denied, 440 U.S. 914 (1978), concerning an indictment charging conspiracy to violate constitutional rights in violation of 18 U.S.C. §241. While the statute does not explicitly require specific intent, such intent is nonetheless an essential element of proof to sustain a conviction. The court reviewed the indictment from a common sense viewpoint rather than one of "petty precision, pettifogging technicality" to find that the indictment clearly set forth a charge of specific intent without recitation of the words "knowing," "willful," "intentional," or one of their derivations.

Although the element of criminal intent is not specified in 18 U.S.C. §1711, an indictment for conversion of postal funds must allege criminal intent because the word "convert" itself does not imply that criminal intent is a necessary element of the offense. See United States v. Morrison, 536 F.2d 286 (9th Cir. 1976).

Intent is often not an element of offenses that are regulatory in nature, that is, offenses aimed not so much at punishment of crime as the achievement of some social objective.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Such legislation dispenses with the conventional requirement for criminal conduct--awareness of some wrongdoing. In the interest of the larger good it puts the burden of acting at hazard upon a person otherwise innocent but standing in responsible relation to a public danger.

United States v. Dotterweich, 320 U.S. 277, 281 (1943).

Such offenses flow from an exercise of the government's police power to protect public health and safety. Pure food and drug, traffic, and liquor offenses are typical of this class of legislation. But, as indicated by the Court in Morissette, supra, there is no certain guide classifying offenses into those which require scienter and those which do not.

This is well illustrated by cases involving impersonation of a federal officer under both parts of 18 U.S.C. §912, that is, (1) acting as such or (2) employing such means in order to obtain money or something of value. Before its revision in 1948, 18 U.S.C. §912 included the phrase "with intent to defraud." The fraudulent intent language was deleted. Subsequently, in Honea v. United States, 344 F.2d 798 (5th Cir. 1965), the Fifth Circuit addressed the issue of the sufficiency of an indictment under 18 U.S.C. §912 that did not allege that the defendant acted with fraudulent intent, an issue first raised by the defendant's motion to dismiss. The Fifth Circuit held that the indictment was fatally defective for failure to allege fraudulent intent. In United States v. Guthrie, 387 F.2d 569 (4th Cir. 1967), the Fourth Circuit, however, held that an allegation of fraudulent intent was unnecessary, distinguishing Honea supra, on the ground that the latter described an offense under the second part of 18 U.S.C. §912. But in United States v. Randolph, 460 F.2d 367 (5th Cir. 1972), the Fifth Circuit reaffirmed its view, holding that an allegation of fraudulent intent was required to charge an offense under both parts of the statute.

The Ninth Circuit followed Guthrie, supra, United States v. Mitman, 459 F.2d 451 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 409 U.S. 863 (1972). The Second Circuit at first refused to "enter the fray," United States v. Harmon, 496 F.2d 21 (2d Cir. 1974), but finally did so in United States v. Rose, 500 F.2d 12 (2d Cir. 1974), where it held, following Guthrie, supra, that an allegation of fraudulent intent was not required. Forms 8 and 9 of the Appendix of Forms referred to in Rule 58, Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, allege intent to defraud under both parts of the impersonation statute.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Where intent is not indicated in the statute, the case law and legislative history of the offense must be consulted to determine whether intent should be charged. While a safe general rule might be to charge intent if the issue is in doubt, such a practice in many cases could serve to increase the government's burden of proof. It is believed that most courts would hold allegations of intent to be surplussage where the statute did not require intent as an element of the offense.

9-12.336 Aiding and Abetting

18 U.S.C. §2 provides that whoever "aids, abets, counsels, commands, induces or procures," the commission of an offense against the United States "is punishable as a principal." The statute also punishes as a principal whoever causes an act to be done which if directly performed by him/her or another would be an offense. The statute on principals is not itself a specific criminal offense. The statute abolishes the distinction that formerly existed between principals and accessories before the fact.

Since 18 U.S.C. §2 applies implicitly to all federal offenses, an indictment or information need not include the words "aid and abet" in order to sustain a conviction of that charge. See United States v. Masson, 582 F.2d 961 (5th Cir. 1978). Even though the defendant is charged with commission of the substantive offense, proof that he/she only aided or abetted the commission of the crime will support the indictment. See Latham v. United States, 407 F.2d 1 (8th Cir. 1969); Theriault v. United States, 401 F.2d 79 (8th Cir. 1968); United States v. Trollinger, 415 F.2d 527 (5th Cir. 1969).

9-12.340 Forfeiture

Rule 7(c)(2), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, provides:

When an offense charged may result in a criminal forfeiture, the indictment or the information shall allege the extent of the interest or property subject to forfeiture.

The Notes of the Advisory Committee on Rules indicate that this provision was added "to provide procedural implementation of the recently enacted criminal forfeiture provisions of the Organized Crime Control Act of 1970

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

. . . .(18 U.S.C. 1963), and the Comprehensive Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Act of 1970. . . .(21 U.S.C. 848 (a))."

The Ninth Circuit in United States v. Hall, 521 F.2d 406 (9th Cir. 1975), however, has ruled that Rule 7(c)(2), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, is applicable to prosecutions brought under 18 U.S.C. §545. In Hall, the defendant was indicted for smuggling two diamond rings into the United States in violation of 18 U.S.C. §545. Prior to trial, defendant moved to dismiss the indictment for failure to comply with Rule 7(c)(2), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. The District Court ruled that while the indictment was defective, the defect would not vitiate the indictment if the court ruled in advance that the government would be prohibited from instituting forfeiture proceedings. The defendant was subsequently convicted and sentenced to one year's imprisonment but the district judge suspended the sentence of imprisonment and placed defendant on probation on the condition that he would consent to civil forfeiture of the smuggled merchandise. On appeal, the Ninth Circuit reversed on the grounds that the District Court's actions "taken together, deprived Hall of the mandatory notice to which he was entitled under Rule 7(c)(2) and the concomitant opportunity to defend against a forfeiture." See Hall, supra. Although the court noted that Rule 7(c), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, was added primarily to implement the newly enacted criminal forfeiture penalties contained in 18 U.S.C. §1963 and 18 U.S.C. §848(a)(2), the court stated that since it was written in specific terms for general application, it must be applied to the criminal forfeiture penalty of 18 U.S.C. §545.

On appeal, the primary issue of contention in Hall was whether dismissal of the indictment was the appropriate remedy for a violation of Rule 7(c)(2), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. The Criminal Division, after further review of this case, has concluded that not only was the remedy of dismissal inappropriate, but the underlying ruling that Rule 7(c)(2), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, is applicable to prosecutions brought under 18 U.S.C. §545 was also erroneous. In all the other provisions in Title 18, United States Code, which contain forfeiture provisions, a separate in rem proceeding is necessary before the property in question is forfeited. Since there is a separate libel proceeding, the defendant is given adequate notice that the government seeks forfeiture of the property and he/she can defend against forfeiture at that time. Furthermore, unlike under 18 U.S.C. §1963 and 21 U.S.C. §848(a)(2) where the property subject to forfeiture is not seized until after the defendant's conviction and imposition of sentence, under the other sections which contain forfeiture provisions, the property is seized before the institution of forfeiture provisions and thus the defendant is put on notice that the property is subject to forfeiture.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The legislative history to the Organized Crime Control Act of 1970, 18 U.S.C. §1961 et seq., and the Comprehensive Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Act of 1970, 21 U.S.C. §841 et seq., makes clear that Congress intended that the forfeiture provisions contained in those two acts were to be different from the other forfeiture provisions found in Title 18, United States Code. In a letter to Senator McClellan, Chairman of the Subcommittee on Criminal Laws and Procedures, then Deputy Attorney General Kleindienst, in commenting on the provisions of the Organized Crime Control Act of 1970, stated:

Section 1963 contains criminal penalties for violation of section 1962. These include, in addition to a fine of not more than $10,000, or imprisonment for not more than 20 years, or both, forfeiture of all interest in the enterprise. The concept of forfeiture as a criminal penalty which is embodied in this provision differs from other presently existing forfeiture provisions under Federal statutes where the proceeding is in rem against the property and the thing which is declared unlawful under the statute, or which is used for an unlawful purpose, or in connection with the prohibited property or transaction, is considered the offender, and the forfeiture is no part of the punishment for the criminal offense. Examples of such forfeiture provisions are those contained in the customs, narcotics, and revenue laws.

Under the criminal forfeiture provision of section 1963, however, the proceeding is in personam against the defendant who is the party to be punished upon conviction of violation of any provision of the section, not only by fine and/or imprisonment, but also by forfeiture of all interest in the enterprise. The concept is derived from the practice well known in the early law where upon conviction of treason and certain other felonies the party forfeited his goods and chattels to the crown. The Palmyra, 12 Wheat. 1, 25 U.S. 1 (1827), opinion of Mr. Justice Storey at 14. According to Blackstone, the only valid reason for this type of forfeiture is that since all property is derived from society, any member of society who violates the fundamental contract of his association by transgressing society's laws forfeits his right to that property, and the state may justly resume that portion of the property which the laws have previously assigned him. Commentaries, Ch. 8, 229-300, XVI.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

While there is some indication that this concept of criminal forfeiture was in usage in the colonies, the First Congress by act of April 20, 1790, abolished forfeiture of estate and corruption of blood, including in cases of treason. That statute, as revised, is found in 18 U.S.C. 3563, which states: "No conviction or judgment shall work corruption of blood or any forfeiture of estate." From that date to the present, therefore, no Federal statute has provided for a penalty of forfeiture as a punishment for violation of a criminal statute of the United States. Section 1963(a), therefore, would repeal 18 U.S.C. 3563 by implication.

It is felt that this revival of the concept of forfeiture as a criminal penalty, limited as it is in section 1963(a) to one's interest in the enterprise which is the subject of the specific offense involved here, and not extending to any other property of the convicted offender, is a matter of congressional wisdom rather than a constitutional power. See Kingsley Books, Inc. v. Brown, 354 U.S. 436 (1957), opinion of Mr. Justice Frankfurter at 441, holding that whether proscribed conduct is to be visited by a criminal prosecution or by other remedies is a matter of legislative choice.

9-12.400 AMENDMENT

9-12.410 Amendment of Information

Since an information is prepared by the prosecuting attorney, he/she should be able to amend it in form or substance, provided the rights of the defendant are not prejudiced. This is recognized by Rule 7(e), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, which provides:

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The court may permit an information to be amended at any time before verdict or finding if no additional or different offense is charged and if substantial rights of the defendant are not prejudiced.

Leave of court is required for the prosecutor to amend. However, the court may also amend on its own motion. See United States v. Blanchard, 495 F.2d 1329 (1st Cir. 1974).

9-12.420 Amendment of Indictments

The general rule is that indictments cannot be amended in substance. This follows from the fundamental distinction between the information and the indictment, see USAM 9-12.410, infra, which must be returned by a grand jury. If the indictment could be changed by the court or by the prosecutor, then it would no longer be the indictment returned by the grand jury. The Supreme Court, reviewing the history of the grand jury, quotes Lord Mansfield on the subject:

[T]here is a great difference between amending indictments and amending informations. Indictments are found upon the oaths of a jury, and ought only to be amended by themselves; but informations are as declarations in the King's suit. An officer of the Crown has the right of framing them originally; he may, with leave, amend in like manner, as any plaintiff may do.

Ex parte Bain, 121 U.S. 1, 6 (1887).

In Russell v. United States, 369 U.S. 749, 770 (1962), the Court pointed out that a consequence of amending the indictment is that the defendant "could then be convicted on the basis of facts not found by, and perhaps not even presented to, the grand jury which indicted him."

In one case, Stirone v. United States, 361 U.S. 212 (1960), the defendant was convicted of unlawful interference with interstate commerce in violation of the Hobbs Act, 18 U.S.C. §1951. The indictment charged that the victim's contract was to supply ready-mix concrete from his Pennsylvania plant to be used in the erection of a steel mill in Allenport, Pennsylvania. Performance of the contract involved, according to the indictment, shipment of sand from various points in the United States to the victim's ready-mix concrete plant. The Court permitted the government to offer evidence of the effect upon interstate commerce not only of the sand thus brought into Pennsylvania but also the interstate shipment of steel from the steel mill to be constructed from the ready-mix concrete.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The Supreme Court reversed the defendant's conviction on the ground that he was convicted of a different crime from that charged, in violation of his Fifth Amendment right to be indicted by a grand jury:

The grand jury which found the indictment was satisfied to charge that Stirone's conduct interfered with interstate shipment of sand. But neither this nor any other court can know that the grand jury would have been willing to charge that Stirone's conduct would interfere with interstate exportation of steel from a mill later to be built with Rider's concrete....Although the trial court did not permit a formal amendment of the indictment, the effect of what it did was the same.

Stirone, supra, at 217.

An amendment for the excising of surplussage that has the effect of narrowing a defendant's liability without changing the meaning of the charge as it was presented to the grand jury is permissible. In United States v. Whitman, 665 F.2d 313 (10th Cir. 1981), it was proper for the government to strike the references to overvaluation of property in an 18 U.S.C. §1014 (making false statements to a federally insured bank) count. A similar deletion was approved of in United States v. Ramirez, 670 F.2d 27 (5th Cir. 1982), even though the defendant's theory of defense was thereby altered.

9-12.430 Amendment of Indictments for Offenses That Could Have Been Initiated by Informations

An issue, as yet unresolved, is raised concerning amendment of an indictment for an offense that could have been initiated by an information. In United States v. Goldstein, 502 F.2d 522 (3d Cir. 1974), the Third Circuit considered the issue in the case of an indictment for failure to file an income tax return by April 15, a misdemeanor. The evidence showed that the defendant had obtained an extension until May 7. The government argued that had the offense been prosecuted by information, it could have been amended and therefore similar liberality should apply to the indictment. The court relied in part upon the fact that Rule 7(e), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, permitting amendment of informations is silent about indictments and by implication prohibits their amendment. The court also cites United States v. Fischetti, 450 F.2d 34, 39 (5th Cir. 1971), where the Fifth Circuit indicated that having chosen to proceed by indictment, the government is bound by the principles applicable to indictments.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

In United States v. Pandilidis, 524 F.2d 644 (6th Cir. 1975), the Sixth Circuit, confronting the issue in virtually an identical case, upheld amendment of the indictment. The indictment alleged a failure to file by April 15 and the government corrected this with a bill of particulars setting out the extensions to file. The Sixth Circuit identified the rights involved as: (1) fair notice under the Sixth Amendment, (2) protection from double jeopardy under the Fifth Amendment, and (3) the right not to be held for an infamous crime except upon an indictment by a grand jury. The court held that the defendant's right to fair notice was not infringed because he was apprised by a bill of particulars before trial of what the government would prove. The same was true of the defendant's right to be protected from double jeopardy, since the record of the case provided full protection. As for the right of the defendant to be indicted by a grand jury, the court pointed out that the defendant had no constitutional right to be indicted except for an infamous crime, which the offense involved was not. "[S]ince the error permitting amendment to the indictment in this case did not reach constitutional dimensions, the appropriateness of reversal must be determined under Rule 52(a) [harmless error]." Pandilidis, supra, at 649.

9-14.000 REMOVALS AND TRANSFERS

9-14.100 RULE 20. TRANSFER FROM THE DISTRICT FOR PLEA AND SENTENCE

9-14.101 Nature Of The Rule

Rule 20, Fed. R. Crim. P. providing for the transfer of criminal cases among districts for the limited purposes of acceptance of guilty or nolo contendere pleas and sentencing is intended to accord a defendant an opportunity to be relieved of the hardship of being removed to the district where the prosecution is pending. Advisory Committee on Rules, Note to Rule 20, U.S.C. Hutto v. United States, 309 F. Supp. 489 (S.C. 1970).

Under Rule 20, Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, the transferee court acquires limited jurisdiction to take a guilty or nolo contendere plea and pronounce sentence only. A plea of not guilty, after transfer, ends the transferee court's jurisdiction and requires transfer of the matter back to the original jurisdiction. However, defendant's statement that he/she wished to plead guilty or nolo contendere shall not be used against him/her. Refusal of transferee court to receive nolo contendere plea does not remove its jurisdiction if defendant then enters plea of guilty. Singleton v. Clemmer, 166 F.2d 963 (D.C. Cir 1948). One court held that only a plea of not guilty can oust the jurisdiction of the transferee court in a Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 20 proceeding, that a Rule 20 transfer cannot be revoked by the withdrawal by both U.S. Attorneys of consent to transfer even though a plea has not yet been entered by the defendant. United States v. Binion, 107 F. Supp. 680 (D. Nev. 1952). Compare Hutto v. United States, supra, where transferee court having jurisdiction after consent of both U. S. Attorneys but before papers transferred or plea received by the transferee court, relinquished jurisdiction by allowing its U. S. Attorney to withdraw consent; see also In re Richard Arvedon, 523 F.2d 914 (1st Cir. 1975) holding that a transferee court may reject an involuntary or improvident plea of guilty, but a guilty plea attributed only to defendant's desire not to return to the indicting district, is, by itself, an impermissible reason to refuse the plea and to return the case.

Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 20 has been held to be constitutional against challenges that Article 3, Section 2, Clause 3 of the Constitution and the Sixth Amendment both provide that the trial shall be held in the state where the crime has been committed. In each case, place of venue has been held to be a personal privilege which may be waived. Hilderbrand v. United States, 304 F.2d 716 (10th Cir. 1962); Yeloushan v. United States, 339 F.2d 533 (5th Cir. 1964).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-14.102 Who Is Covered

Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 20 transfers are available to any defendant who is arrested, held, or present in a district other than a district in which there is an indictment, information or complaint against the person. Changes in the Rule have the effect of expanding its formerly narrow coverage, to include persons who are not arrested or otherwise in custody, e.g. persons who turn in themselves in a district other than that in which the matter is pending. (Note of Advisory Committee on Rules, Rules 20, 28 U.S.C.A.) Rule 20 is available in multiple defendant prosecutions. Yeloushan v. United States, supra; Snowden v. Smith, 413 F.2d 914 (7th Cir. 1969).

9-14.110 Procedure Under Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 20

When an indictment is pending against a person in another district, the person may state in writing that he/she wishes to plead guilty, to waive trial, and consent to a disposition in the district in which he/she finds himself/herself. In this situation, counsel is not necessary to validate the defendant's consent to a transfer, as defendant may, by a not guilty plea, later nullify the proceeding; and the statement in that even may not be used against him. Snowden v. Smith, supra; White v. United States, 443 F.2d 26 (9th Cir. 1971).

After the defendant signs a written election to proceed under Rule 20, the U. S. Attorney in the district in which the defendant is present executes a consent and forwards both documents to the U. S. Attorney in which the indictment is pending. Either U. S. Attorney may, under the Rule, refuse consent, such consent being discretionary. In such a case, the defendant may be proceeded against under Rule 40.

If both U. S. Attorneys consent, the U. S. Attorney in the district in which the indictment is pending should forward the signed consents to the clerk of his/her district court, who will transfer the court file to the district court for the district in which the defendant is present. The case will then proceed to arraignment in that plea is contemplated, the provisions of Rule 11, Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure pertaining thereto apply in the Rule 20 context.

9-14.111 Indictment Or Information Pending

When an indictment or information is pending against a person in another district, the person may state in writing that he/she wishes to plead guilty, or nolo contendere, to waive a trial in the district in which the indictment or information is pending, and consent to a disposition in the district in which he/she finds him or herself. In this situation, counsel is not necessary to validate the defendant's consent to a transfer, as defendant may, by a not guilty plea, later nullify the proceeding; Snowden v. Smith, supra; Farr v. United States, 166 F.2d 963 (D.C. Cir. 1948).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The indictment or information need not be pending in another district at the time of arrest in order to be subject to a Rule 20 disposition. Hornbrook v. United States, 216 F.2d 112 (5th Cir. 1954); O'Brien v. United States, 233 F.2d 246 (5th Cir. 1956).

After the defendant signs (his) written election to proceed under Rule 20, the U. S. Attorney in the district in which the defendant is present executes a consent and forwards both documents to the U. S. Attorney in the district in which the indictment or information is pending. Either U. S. Attorney may, under the Rule, refuse the consent, such consent being discretionary. In such a case, the defendant may be proceeded against under Rule 40.

If both U. S. Attorneys consent, the U. S. Attorney in the district in which the indictment or information is pending should forward the signed consents to the clerk of his/her district court, who will transfer the court file to the district court for the district in which the defendant is present. The case will then proceed to arraignment in that district for pleading under Rule 11, Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure.

9-14.112 Complaint Only Pending

If a complaint only is pending in another district, Rule 20 may still be used. The person arrested, held or present must state in writing that he/she wishes to plead guilty or nolo contendere, to waive venue and trial in the district in which the warrant was issued, and to consent to disposition of the case in the district where arrested, held, or present, subject to approval of the U. S. Attorney for each district. Upon filing the written waiver of venue in the district in which defendant is present, the prosecution may proceed as if venue were in such district, i.e., charges may be filed there.

9-14.113 Juveniles

A juvenile, as defined in 18 U.S.C. §5031, against whom a criminal matter not punishable by death or life imprisonment is pending, may invoke Rule 20. The juvenile, however, must first be advised by counsel before consenting, in writing, to a Rule 20 proceeding and the district court as well as the U. S. Attorney in each district must consent. Furthermore, unlike the case of an adult defendant, a juvenile must consent before the court, after being advised by the court of his/her rights, and of the consequences of his/her consent.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-14.114 Partial Pleas

The transferee Court, in a Rule 20 proceeding, has jurisdiction to receive a plea of guilty to less than all the counts of an indictment or information and may dismiss the remainder on motion of the U. S. Attorney. Warren v. Richardson, 333 F.2d 781 (9th Cir 1964). Such procedure should be with the approval of the U.S. Attorney in the district of offense.

9-14.115 Use of Fed. R. Crim. P. 20 and 7 Together he/she → Rule 20 provides that a defendant may state in writing that (he) wishes to plead guilty or nolo contendere, to waive trial in the district in which an indictment or information is pending or in which a warrant was issued, and to consent to the disposition of the case in the district in which he/she is present, subject to the approval of the U.S. Attorney for each district. This statement need not be made in open court. But when the transfer is completed and the defendant may at that time waive indictment in open court as provided in Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 7(b).

9-14.200 RULE 21. TRANSFER FROM THE DISTRICT FOR TRIAL

9-14.201 Nature Of The Rule

Rule 21, Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, allows a defendant to initiate a motion, dependent upon the court's discretion, for transfer of a criminal case for trial in another district, if (a) the atmosphere is so prejudicial the defendant cannot obtain a fair and impartial trial within the district in which the action is brought or (b) for the convenience of the parties and witnesses, if in the interest of justice.

Article 3, Section 2, Clause 3, and the Sixth Amendment to the Constitution provide the right of trial in the vicinity of the offense as a safeguard against unfairness and hardship if the accused were prosecuted against his/her will in a remote place; but where venue lies in several districts, the constitutional provisions are not intended to provide a defendant absolute right to be tried in his/her home district or any particular place. Platt v. Minnesota Mining and Manufacturing Co., 376 U.S. 240 (1964); United States v. Hinton, 268 F. Supp. 728 (E.D. La 1967). A Rule 21 motion by the defendant automatically is a waiver of the constitutional right to be tried in the district of offense. United States v. Angiulo, 497 F.2d 440 (1st Cir. 1974), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 896;

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

United States v. Marcello, 280 F. Supp. 510 (E.D. La. 1968); Jones v. Gasch 404 F.2d 1231 (D.C. Cir. 1967), cert. denied, 390 U.S. 1029 (1968).

Purpose of the rule is to secure a fair trial to the defendant when circumstances in the district where the action is brought would place an undue risk of unfairness upon the defendant if tried within that district. United States v. Hinton, supra; United States v. Marcello, supra; Sheppard v. Maxwell, 384 U.S. 333 (1965); Jones v. Gasch, supra.

9-14.210 Procedure Under Rule 21

9-14.211 Procedure Factors Determining Transfer

Only the defendant can initiate a motion for transfer to another district. Jones v. Gasch, supra; United States v. Clark, 360 F. Supp. 936 (S.D.N.Y. 1973); United States v. Parr, 17 F.R.D. 512 (S.D.Tex. 1955). If there has been no waiver by the defendant and venue lies elsewhere, the proper course is dismissal. United States v. Hinton, supra; also see, dissent, United States v. Griesa, 481 F.2d 276, 285 (2d Cir. 1973).

The cases are clear that once made, defendant's motion for transfer to another district is directed to the sound discretion of the court, United States v. Garza, 664 F.2d 135 (7th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 933; United States v. Noland, 495 F.2d 529 (5th Cir. 1974), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 966; United States v. Polizzi, 500 F.2d 856 (9th Cir. 1974), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 1120; Jones v. Gasch, supra; including the selection of the district to which the transfer is made, United States v. Hinton, supra; United States v. Holder, 399 F. Supp. 220 (S. Dak. 1975), holding also that a superseding indictment is a new case and transfer of venue is not controlled by a previous order in the original but dismissed indictment.

In a multi-defendant and multi-count criminal action, it is well established that one or more of the defendants may have all or part of the case transferred "as to him," United States v. Choate, 276 F.2d 724 (5th Cir. 1960), 86 ALR 2d 1353; nor can such transfer be denied by a co-defendant's opposition to the transfer, Yeloushan v. United States, supra; nor can non-moving defendants be transferred, United States v. Clark, supra.

Rules 21(a) and 21 (b) are to be considered separately, and local prejudice insufficient for transfer under Rule 21(a) is not to be weighed in determining "in the interest of justice" under Rule P. 21(b), Jones v. Gasch, supra; nor are factors bearing on the ability to get a fair and impartial trial to be considered in determining "the interest of justice," Platt v. Minnesota Mining & Manufacturing Co., supra.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Initial choice of venue is up to the prosecution, United States v. Lueros, 243 F. Supp. 160 (N.D. Iowa 1965), cert. denied 382 U.S. 956; and see dissent, United States v. Griesa, supra at 285; and defendant must demonstrate substantial inconvenience to nullify the prerogative, though venue may be influenced by congressional interest shown by statute, United States v. Lueros, supra; United States v. Johnson, 323 U.S. 273 (1944); United States v. National City Lines, Inc., 334 U.S. 573 (1948).

9-14.212 Transfer For Prejudice In The District

After motion by defendant under Rule 21(a) is made and once the court is satisfied that a transfer is necessary to insure a fair and impartial trial, the order of transfer may not be revoked by the defendant's change in mind (though the court may have the authority to rescind the transfer in its sound discretion), United States v. Marcello, 423 F.2d 993 (5th Cir. 1970), cert. denied 398 U.S. 959, reh'g. denied 399 U.S. 938; United States v. Anguilo, supra.

The court must be sensitive to prejudicial publicity, Estes v. States of Texas, 381 U.S. 532 (1965); Sheppard v. Maxwell, supra; Rideau v. State of Louisiana, 373 U.S. 723 (1963); Irvin v. Dowd, 366 U.S. 717 (1961); Marshall v. United States, 360 U.S. 310 (1959). But the court may disregard prospective jurors' assurances of impartiality if there is danger of well grounded fear of a prejudicial atmosphere preventing a fair trial, United States v. Marcello, supra; Irvin v. Dowd, supra; Sheppard v. Maxwell, supra.

While a showing of actual prejudice is not a prerequisite, Estes v. State of Texas, supra, there must be showing of identifiable prejudice, United States v. Hinton, supra.

Although many cases suggest that voir dire is the proper time for the court to determine the question of whether a fair and impartial trial can be had because of the claim of prejudice against a defendant in the district, there is no requirement that the determination be made at voir dire, rather whenever the court "is satisfied", United States v. Marcello, supra; United States v. Mandel, 415 F. Supp. 1033 (Md. 1976); United States v. Corallo, 281 F. Supp. 24 (S.D.N.Y. 1968); United States v. Florio, 13 F.R.D. 296 (S.D.N.Y. 1952). However, voir dire helps to confirm the court's decision and buttress the showing of no abuse in the court's decision, Greenhill v. United States, 298 F.2d 405 (5th Cir. 1962), cert. denied, 371 U.S. 830; Bearden v. United States, 320 F.2d 99 (5th Cir. 1963); Murphy v. State of Florida, 363 F. Supp. 1224 (S.D. Fla. 1973) reh'g. denied 497 F.2d 1368; United States v. Smaldone, 485 F.2d 1333 (10th Cir. 1973) cert. denied 416 U.S. 936, reh'g. denied, 416 U.S. 1000; Estes v. United States, 335 F.2d 609 (5th Cir. 1964) cert. denied 379 U.S. 964, reh'g. denied 380 U.S. 926; United States v. Green, 373 F. Supp. 149 (E.D. Pa. 1974), aff'd 505 F.2d 731 (3rd Cir. 1974);

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

United States v. Mandel, supra; Blumenfield v. United States, 284 F.2d 46 (8th Cir. 1960), cert. denied 365 U.S. 812. Dismissal on a showing of prejudicial pretrial publicity of the government is not a proper remedy on motion of a transfer nor has voir dire been employed to test whether a fair trial can be held in the district, United States v. Abbott Laboratories, 505 F.2d 565 (4th Cir. 1974), cert. denied 420 U.S. 990.

9-14.213 Transfer In Other Cases

As amended in 1966, Rule 21(b) allows the transfer to any district without being limited to transfer to a district in which venue would lie as under the original rule, Jones v. Gasch, supra.

The court's determination of the motion to transfer lies in the court's sound discretion, unlike transfer under Rule 21(a) which is mandatory (after the court is satisfied that prejudice makes transfer necessary), (see dissent in United States v. Griesa, supra at 284). The trial court's discretion will not be overturned unless clearly abused, Jones v. Gasch, supra; United States v. Jessup, 38 F.R.D. 42 (M.D.Tenn 1965); thus defendant carries the burden of showing substantial balance of inconvenience to warrant transfer in the interest of justice, United States v. Jones, 43 F.R.D. 511 (D.C. 1967).

Further, an appellate court cannot substitute its judgment for that of the trial court by exercising de novo examination of the motion to transfer, Platt v. Minnesota Mining & Manufacturing Co., supra. And a mandamus action by the government to vacate a transfer order, being an extraordinary action reserved for extraordinary causes, will not prevail except upon a clear showing that the trial court has acted in excess of its authority or clearly abused its discretion, United States v. Clark, supra, at 278 suggesting that the 1966 amendment deemphasizing venue in Rule 21(b) transfers should eliminate any occasion for the use of mandamus. Compare, Auerbach v. United States, 347 F.2d 742 (5th Cir. 1965), cert. denied, 382 U.S. 958 (1965), in which it was held defendant had no relief from court's order retransferring back the case on its own motion, where the defendant appealed the retransfer order and it was held the order was not final and thus not appealable; also United States v. Garber, 413 F.2d 285 (2nd Cir. 1969); and see, Holdsworth v. United States, 179 F.2d 933 (1st Cir. 1950) dismissing defendant's appeal of retransfer order and holding transferee court cannot review transfer order.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-15.000 EXTRADITION

9-15.001 International Extradition in General

9-15.100 PROCEDURES FOR REQUESTING EXTRADITION FROM A FOREIGN COUNTRY TO THE UNITED STATES

International extradition is the process by which a person found in one country is surrendered to another country for trial or punishment. It is a formal process, regulated by treaty and conducted between the federal government of the United States and the government of a foreign country. Thus, it has a legal basis different from that of interstate rendition (frequently referred to as "interstate extradition"), which is mandated by Article 4, Section 2 of the Constitution, and regulated chiefly by state law and 18 U.S.C. §3182. Every request for international extradition must be approved by the Department of Justice, and formally presented to the foreign government by the Department of State through diplomatic channels. It is important to remember that the terms of an extradition treaty can only be invoked by the Department of State or persons authorized by it to do so. Prosecutors, police officers, or investigators are generally free to communicate directly with their foreign counterparts for the purpose of giving or receiving information on law enforcement matters, but they may not request the arrest of a fugitive for extradition. Unauthorized requests for foreign arrests cause serious diplomatic difficulties, and can subject the requestor to heavy financial liability or other sanctions. Cf. Sami v. United States, 617 F.2d 755 (D.C. Cir. 1979).

9-15.110 Determining if Extradition is Possible

A prosecutor or investigator interested in arranging for extradition should first contact the Office of International Affairs ("OIA"), Criminal Division, Department of Justice, Washington, D.C., telephone number: (202) 724-7600. Extradition specialists in OIA determine whether the extradition request can succeed, taking into account the facts of the particular case, the language of the applicable treaties, and the law of the foreign country involved. In order for OIA to make this determination, the inquirer should be prepared to provide the following information:

A. The country in which the fugitive is believed to be located, and his/her address or location there. OIA will need to know his/her status (i.e., at large, incarcerated for another offense, etc.);

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

B. The citizenship of the fugitive and whether the fugitive is a citizen of the foreign country from which extradition is contemplated. (It is not enough to determine that the fugitive is a United States citizen, since many persons have dual citizenship);

C. The precise crime for which the fugitive has been charged or convicted, including the citation to the specific statute involved;

D. The full title of the court in which criminal proceedings are pending, the name of the judge, the date on which the indictment or conviction was obtained, and the docket number of the proceedings;

E. A brief description of the specific acts committed in connection with the offense, i.e., who did what to whom, when, where, and why; and

F. A brief description of how the prosecutor intends to prove the violation (e.g., witness testimony, documentary evidence, undercover agents, codefendants who agreed to cooperate with the government). Based on this information, OIA determines whether an extradition request can be made, taking the following factors into account:

1. Whether there is an extradition treaty in force with the country in which the fugitive is located. (A list of the treaties on extradition to which the United States is a party (as of November 1, 1983) will be set out at USAM 9-15.111, infra, in the near future);

2. Whether the treaty provides for extradition for the crime in question;

3. Whether the offense in question is punishable under the law of the requested country;

4. Whether there is sufficient evidence to justify extradition in accordance with the terms of the treaty;

5. Whether the fugitive is a national of the requested country (many foreign countries do not extradite their own citizens); and

6. Whether extradition is in the interests of justice in light of all the circumstances.

9-15.120 Provisional Arrest

If OIA concludes that extradition is in order, it is possible in many cases to arrange for the immediate arrest of the fugitive in order to prevent any further flight while the documents and evidence in support of a formal request for extradition are being prepared. This procedure is known as "provisional arrest." Provisional arrest should not be regarded as the ordinary method of initiating extradition proceedings. Rather, it should only be considered in emergency situations, where there is a real danger of the fugitive fleeing further before the extradition documents can be completed. Under some of the newer treaties--for example, those with Canada and Germany--the Department of Justice can arrange provisional arrest directly with the authorities abroad by telephone, telex, or via INTERPOL. In other cases, OIA asks the Department of State to instruct the appropriate U.S. Embassy or consulate to make the request. All requests for provisional arrest should be made to OIA and should be supported by the information called for on the attached form. The request should be in writing, but in urgent cases it can be made by phone with written confirmation immediately thereafter.

Because provisional arrest is reserved for exceptional cases, OIA requires that if the fugitive is wanted for federal charges the Section within the Criminal Division of the Department of Justice which has oversight responsibility for the case must also agree that provisional arrest is appropriate before further action is taken. For example, a request for the provisional arrest of a wanted narcotics trafficker must be approved by the Narcotic and Dangerous Drug Section. If the fugitive is wanted on state or local charges, the state extradition officer must support the request by attesting that the necessary documentation will be submitted on time, and that all of the expenses of the extradition request will be covered.

Please remember that when provisional arrest is effected, the time available to prepare, review, authenticate, translate, and transmit the documents in support of the extradition request is drastically reduced. The maximum period for provisional arrest under most treaties is shown on the following chart:

Time	Country
30 days	Denmark
40 days	Belgium, France, Germany, Guatemala, Sweden
45 days	Argentina, Australia, Canada, Italy, Japan, New Zealand, Paraguay, United Kingdom, Spain

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL

2 months	Albania, Bolivia, Chile, Costa Rica, Czechoslovakia, Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Finland, Greece, Honduras, Liberia, Panama, Peru, South Africa, Switzerland, Venezuela, Yugoslavia
3 months	Austria, Bulgaria, Iraq, Poland

In most countries, the fugitive will be released from custody if the documents do not arrive within a deadline prescribed by treaty, and in some countries the fugitive can never be surrendered or extradited thereafter. Therefore, when provisional arrest is involved the documents must be completed and sent to OIA within 14 days.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-15.130 Documents Needed for Extradition

In general, extradition documents are prepared by the federal or state authorities responsible for prosecuting the charges for which extradition is requested. It should be noted that the authority which prepares the papers must also pay all the expenses incurred in connection with the request, including the cost of translating the documents, any cost of legal representation in the foreign country, any charges levied by the asylum country for boarding the fugitive pending extradition, the transportation and other expenses of the escort officers handling the fugitive's physical return to this country, and the cost of transportation for the fugitive to the United States. In federal cases, the U.S. Attorney or Strike Force Office should resolve any questions regarding costs with the Executive Office for U.S. Attorneys in Washington, D.C.

The documents needed for extradition are:

1. An affidavit from the prosecutor describing the case;
2. Authenticated copies of the indictment and arrest warrant;
and
3. Evidence establishing the crime or proving that the fugitive was convicted, including sufficient evidence to identify the fugitive.

9-15.131 Prosecutor's Affidavit

Every extradition must be accompanied by an affidavit describing the state or federal laws applicable to the case, including the statute of limitations. Since this affidavit is sometimes the only opportunity that any United States authority will have to assist the foreign court in deciding whether extradition should be granted, it should be tailored to serve as a sort of "cover letter," introducing and explaining the rest of the documents.

The affiant (usually the prosecutor assigned to the case) should set forth enough of his/her background to assure foreign authorities that he/she is familiar with the case and with United States criminal law. If the documents are destined for Canada or England, the affiant's goal should be to qualify as an expert on federal criminal law or on the criminal law of his/her state. The affiant then should accomplish three major objectives:

First, he/she must identify and attest to the authenticity of any court papers, depositions, or other documents submitted in support of the extradition request.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Second, he/she should clearly identify the offenses with which the fugitive is charged, and the penalties prescribed for the offenses. He/she should also indicate that the statutes involved were in force when the offenses occurred and are currently in full force and effect. If the laws are not still in effect--e.g., Title 21, United States Code, Sections 173 and 174--an explanation should be given. He/she must also specifically state that the applicable statute of limitations has not expired. The affiant should set forth the text of each statute involved, including the applicable statute of limitations. If the statutes are relatively short ones, they can be set out in the affidavit itself, as shown in USAM 9-15.190, infra. If the statutes are lengthy, the text should be typed (not photocopied from an annotation) and attached as an exhibit to the affidavit. See USAM 9-15.185, infra.

Third, the prosecutor should give a brief description of the facts underlying the charges, indicating in general who is accused of doing what. This description of the crime should not simply track the language of the indictment, the applicable statute, or the treaty.

It is important that the language in the affidavit be as clear and lucid as possible. This is especially true when the extradition request is going to a non-English speaking country, because the papers will have to be translated into the language of that country. Please remember that the translators, who are usually from the State Department Language Services Division, are frequently unfamiliar with the precise meaning of jargon that attorneys take for granted, and hence will be unable to reproduce it accurately in the language of the country of refuge, which may not have an exactly equivalent term anyway. The following pointers are worth remembering:

1. Use plain language;
2. Use short sentences;
3. Avoid legal terms of art, even ones which sound simple in English (e.g., "due process of law");
4. Avoid "alleged," "purported," "aforementioned," "foregoing," "hereinafter," etc.; and
5. Avoid flowery expressions (most of it will be lost in translation anyway).

The prosecutor's affidavit may be executed before any person lawfully authorized to administer oaths, but it is highly desirable that the affidavit be executed before a judge or magistrate. In some jurisdictions, judges decline to execute affidavits, and insist that the clerk or deputy clerk of the court perform this task. Where this is the case, the signature of a judicial official must appear somewhere on the affidavit. The preferred method is to have the judge or magistrate sign a jurat attesting to the signature and authority of the clerk or deputy clerk. See USAM 9-15.183, infra. Please make sure that the judge or magistrate certifies the signature that actually appears on the affidavit. Sometimes a deputy clerk signs in place of a clerk, and in such cases the judicial official must certify the signature, title and authority of the deputy clerk--not the clerk. See USAM 9-15.190, infra.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-15.132 Indictment and Warrant

A fugitive can only be extradited on the basis of a formal criminal charge. Moreover, a person who has been extradited can be prosecuted or punished only for the specific charge for which he/she was surrendered--even if there are other charges which could otherwise have been brought against him/her. See United States v. Rauscher, 119 U.S. 907 (1886); Johnson v. Brown, 205 U.S. 309 (1907). Therefore, it is important to include in the extradition documents a copy of the outstanding indictment or complaint concerning all charges on which the fugitives will be tried or punished after his/her surrender.

The packet should also contain copies of the outstanding warrant of arrest for each offense for which the fugitive is sought. If the fugitive is merely accused of a crime, the outstanding warrant will usually show that it was unexecuted and any contrary indication should be explained. Where the fugitive has already been convicted, it is the outstanding warrant for bond jumping, jail break, etc.--not the executed warrant for the offense underlying the conviction--which must be submitted. Since the original indictment or complaint and warrant usually remain among the records of the court, the copies of those documents included in the extradition packet should show that they are true copies of the original. There are several ways to indicate this fact. The best way is to have the clerk of the court apply a stamp or seal to the document itself authenticating it as a true copy of original court records. Then the document should be attached as an exhibit to the prosecutor's affidavit. Alternatively, federal district court clerks have a standard form, A.O. Form 132, which is frequently used to achieve this end. See USAM 9-15.191, infra. Many state court clerks, too, use a standard form for this task; for example, California State court clerks use DA/8110-P76CL194C-REV.4/76. These forms are usually filled out by a clerk of the court, whose signature, title and authority are certified by the judge of the court.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-15.133 Evidence Establishing the Case

All of the treaties condition the extradition of an accused person on the presentation of evidence sufficient to justify committal for trial under the law of the requested country. England, Canada and other common law countries usually demand that the documents show a prima facie case. A prima facie case for extradition exists when the court believes that "if the evidence before the (extradition) magistrate stood alone at trial, a reasonable jury properly directed could accept it and find a verdict of guilty." STANBROOK AND STANBROOK, EXTRADITION: THE LAW AND PRACTICE 28 (1980), citing Schtraks v. Government of Israel (1964) AC 556.

The preferred method for demonstrating to the foreign government that this requirement has been satisfied is for the prosecutor to attach to his/her affidavit enough sworn statements from investigating agents, witnesses, co-conspirators, or experts to indicate that each crime in question was committed and that the fugitive committed it. The affidavits, read together, should contain evidence on each charge for which extradition is sought.

Extradition affidavits should be prepared with formal captions showing the title of the case and the court in which the prosecution is pending. Each affiant should clearly and concisely set out the facts which he/she knows, avoiding hearsay if at all possible. The courts in England, Canada and other common law countries do not accept hearsay in extradition proceedings. In other countries, hearsay is admissible, but is accorded considerably less weight than statements based upon personal knowledge. Since the affidavits will be presented as exhibits to the prosecutor's affidavit, it is not absolutely necessary that they be signed by a judge, and they can be executed before any person authorized to administer an oath (including a notary public). It is also not necessary that all of the affidavits be executed within the state or federal district from which the request for extradition emanates. Where a witness resides or is located elsewhere, his/her affidavit can be taken wherever it is most convenient, then forwarded to the prosecutor preparing the request for inclusion in the packet. See, e.g., USAM 9-15.188, infra.

The other method of documenting the case is for the prosecutor to forward excerpts from the grand jury transcripts establishing that the fugitive committed the offense. We try to avoid using grand jury transcripts unless it is impossible to obtain affidavits, because the authorities in many foreign countries do not understand the purpose or function of a grand jury, and tend to accord grand jury transcripts less weight than affidavits or sworn statements containing the same information. Indeed, at least one country--Canada--has occasionally refused to accept grand jury transcripts as evidence. When grand jury transcripts are used, permission from the court for their release is generally required by Rule 6(e), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. Grand jury transcripts are best presented as an exhibit accompanying a short affidavit from the witness who testified attesting that the transcript in fact reflects what he/she said before the grand jury. See USAM 9-15.189, infra. Alternatively, the prosecutor who appeared before the grand jury can identify the transcripts and attach them as an exhibit to his/her own affidavit.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

When the fugitive has already been convicted in this country, the extradition packet generally need not contain evidence of a prima facie case. Instead, it should contain proof that the fugitive was convicted after having been present at trial, and that he/she is unlawfully at large without having fully served his/her sentence. In federal cases, the Judgment and Committal Order (CR Form 25) is the best proof of conviction and sentence. A copy of that document should be authenticated like the indictment and warrant of arrest and included as an attachment to the affidavit by the prosecutor. A similar judicial document proving conviction is available in state proceedings, and it should be submitted in state cases. Special problems arise when the defendant in a federal case is convicted but becomes a fugitive before any sentence is imposed. Since Rule 43, Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, requires that the defendant be personally present at sentencing, United States v. Brown, 456 F.2d 1112 (5th Cir. 1972), there is usually no CR Form 25 available in these cases. One solution to this problem is to ask the court to complete the top half of CR Form 25 anyway, crossing out the phrase "and the defendant appeared in person and" in the second line and leaving blank the portion of the form describing the term of imprisonment. Another possible solution is for the court to actually impose sentence in absentia, with the understanding that the sentence will be vacated and the defendant resentenced after he/she is returned to the jurisdiction. See U.S. v. Brown, supra. Still another solution: obtain copies of the jury's verdict forms as proof of conviction. In any event, the prosecutor must explain in his/her affidavit exactly what occurred, and detail the procedural quirk involved, since in most foreign countries the defendant is sentenced immediately upon conviction. See USAM 9-15.190, infra.

Proof that a convicted and sentenced person is unlawfully at large can generally be presented in the form of an affidavit from the warden of the prison from which he/she escaped, or from his/her probation officer. Since some extradition treaties provide that a convicted person need not be surrendered unless a specified minimum period of imprisonment remains to be served, the affidavit should also indicate the portion of the sentence remaining to be served, and how the prisoner came to be at large. Please recall that in cases involving convicted persons the foreign government will still need a clear explanation of what the fugitive was convicted of doing, and since there will be no affidavits from witnesses,

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

the explanation of the case in the prosecutor's affidavit assumes special importance.

The affidavits or grand jury transcripts must leave no room for any doubt about the identity of the fugitive. "Mistaken identity" is a universally accepted defense to extradition, so it is crucial that the documents establish (1) that the person who is accused or convicted indeed committed the crime, and (2) that the person whose extradition is sought is the person accused or convicted. This is usually done by having the witnesses identify a photograph of the accused, which the foreign authorities can compare to the person arrested for extradition. However, fingerprint cards, photocopies of passports or other identity evidence can be used, provided they are accompanied by sufficient proof to tie them to the accused.

Do not have the witness recount having picked the fugitive's photo out of a photo spread, and do not include an entire photo spread in the extradition documents. The practice of using a photo spread instead of a single photo to avoid unduly suggestive identification wholly is a creature of United States constitutional law, and is inappropriate in the extradition context. Attaching a photo spread simply invites an argument into the extradition proceedings which can and should be avoided. All exhibits should be initialed by the affiant, dated, and attached to the upper left-hand corner of a separate page of the affidavit, in order that the ribbon attaching the certificates containing the State Department's seal may pass through them. The evidence establishing the identity of the fugitive can be included in the same affidavit or grand jury testimony setting out the evidence of the offense.

9-15.140 Transmission of the Completed Documents to Washington, D.C.

In cases prepared by federal prosecutors, the original and four copies of the documents should be sent directly to OIA, which reviews them for sufficiency and arranges for the seal of the Department of Justice to be affixed to them.

In cases prepared by state and local prosecutors, there are two paths the documents can take. In most jurisdictions, the original and four copies of the papers are first sent to the extradition officer for the state. The extradition officer reviews the documents, attaches to them a requisition bearing the seal of the state, and sends them to OIA for review. Alternatively, the original and four copies of the prosecutor's affidavit and its attachments can be sent directly to OIA for review, with a copy sent to the state extradition officer. OIA will then affix the Department of Justice seal to the papers (instead of the seal of the state) before sending them forward to the State Department. This latter procedure is particularly useful when a provisional arrest has been made and it is essential that the documents get to the foreign authorities as soon as possible. Please remember that OIA will not take action on a non-federal extradition case until it receives assurances from the state's extradition officer that the state supports the request and will be responsible for expenses incurred in the case.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Once OIA is satisfied that the documents are in order, it forwards them to the Department of State for final screening (chiefly to detect possible foreign policy or political problems which might stem from the request) and action. The Department of State affixes its seal to the documents, and, if necessary, arranges for translation of the documents, or for authentication of the documents at the foreign country's embassy in Washington. The State Department then sends the documents to the appropriate United States diplomatic post abroad, along with instructions for formally requesting extradition.

9-15.150 Presentation of the Extradition Request

United States diplomatic agents abroad present the documents to the foreign country's equivalent of the Department of State. What happens to the extradition case beyond this point depends upon the extradition laws of the requested country. Usually, the requested country's diplomats forward the case to their country's equivalent of the Department of Justice, which directs the appropriate authorities to make arrangements for the fugitive's arrest.

In most cases, the courts of the requested country must also consider the matter, and judicial proceedings are conducted to determine whether the extradition request should be granted. The United States prosecutor, investigator and witnesses generally do not participate in these proceedings. If the foreign authorities require any evidence in addition to that already submitted, it is supplied by way of authenticated affidavits or depositions. If the court rules in favor of extradition, the fugitive may be able to appeal the decision in a higher court; in other countries, he/she can challenge the decision through habeas corpus or its equivalent; and in a few countries, the fugitive can do both. When the foreign court's approval of an extradition request has survived all review, the request goes back to the Executive authorities of the country where the ultimate decision whether or not to order the fugitive turned over to us is made.

United States embassies abroad are obliged to report all developments in connection with extradition requests to the Department of State, which passes this information on to OIA and the interested prosecutor.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

In some countries the United States must retain an attorney to handle the arrangements for the arrest, detention, and extradition of the fugitive. Where this is the case, United States foreign service officers abroad aid in the selection and retention of foreign counsel. (See 22 C.F.R. 92.82) In federal cases, OIA assists the prosecutor in seeing to it that the foreign counsel is compensated by the Department of Justice. State authorities must make their own arrangements--and pay the necessary expenses--in cases involving the extradition of state fugitives.

9-15.160 Arrangements for Taking Custody After Extradition

Once the authorities in the foreign country indicate that they are ready to surrender the fugitive, OIA notifies the prosecutor and coordinates the logistics of the formal surrender. The law in many countries provides that a fugitive found extraditable is freed if he/she is not removed within a specified time. See, e.g., Article 12 of the English Extradition Act of 1870 (two months after committal for extradition); Article 16 of Denmark's Extradition of Offenders Law (Act No. 249, 1967) (30 days after committal for extradition). Several of the newer extradition treaties contain similar provisions. Therefore, these steps must be accomplished as quickly as possible.

First, agents must be selected to go to the foreign country, take custody of the fugitive, and return with him/her to the United States. Since the Marshals Service maintains a cadre of officers with special training and experience in international escort duty of this kind, OIA generally arranges for the Enforcement Operations Division of the United States Marshals Service headquarters in Washington to designate the agents. Usually, at least two escort agents are dispatched for each federal or state fugitive to be guarded. In exceptional circumstances the prosecutor handling the case may request that a state or federal law enforcement officer familiar with the case be permitted to assist the Marshals in the transfer.

Once OIA is notified of the names of the escort agents, it arranges for the Department of State to issue a President's Warrant, the special authorization law enforcement officers need to accept custody of the fugitive on behalf of the United States and to convey the fugitive to his/her place of trial. As the name implies, these warrants were formerly issued by the President of the United States in accordance with 18 U.S.C. §3193. Now they are issued by the Secretary of State pursuant to Executive Order 11517. After the warrant has been signed, arrangements are made for its delivery to the escort agents before their departure.

When all the arrangements have been made, OIA should be informed of the agents' travel plans so that this information can be transmitted to the foreign government and the relevant United States diplomatic or consular post. This notification assures that the agents will receive the assistance and cooperation of United States officials in the requested country upon their arrival. The agents should plan their return trip to be nonstop if at all possible, since a stop in a third country may provide an opportunity for the fugitive to arrange to have counsel or friends there to obtain a local court order for his/her release and necessitate new extradition proceedings. If a stop in a third country is unavoidable, OIA must be notified so that appropriate arrangements can be made with the authorities in that country. Many extradition treaties contain clauses obliging each country to assist the other in the transit of prisoners being extradited from third states. By properly invoking these provisions, many of the problems of transit can be reduced.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

If the foregoing has been handled smoothly, someone from the United States embassy or the investigative agency's liaison office in the requested country will meet the escort agents at the airport, see them through customs, and introduce them to the appropriate authorities in the requested country's law enforcement establishment. Custody of a fugitive is usually handed over at the airport just before the escort agents and their prisoner leave for their return to the United States.

Most treaties provide that evidence or fruits of the offense seized in the course of the fugitive's arrest are to be surrendered when extradition is granted. The agents may be asked to accept custody of such articles at the time the extraditee is surrendered. However, frequently the requested country chooses to make other arrangements, particularly if the articles are of significant value.

9-15.170 Alternatives to Extradition

If extradition is not possible, there are often alternative courses of action which can help bring the fugitive to justice. For example, OIA sometimes can arrange for the fugitive to be deported from the country of refuge to the United States, or to a third country from which extradition is available. If the fugitive is a citizen of the country of refuge, OIA can sometimes persuade that country to prosecute him/her there on the charges developed in the United States, because many countries have jurisdiction over their nationals' extraterritorial offenses.

IN THE MATTER OF THE EXTRADITION

OF JOHN SMITH, A/K/A

NO. CR. 82-3456

"MAD DOG"

---

Washington )
District of Columbia )

HAMILTON BURGER, being duly sworn, deposes and says that:

1. I am a citizen of the United States and a resident of Alexandria, Virginia.

2. I am 31 years old. In June, 1975, I received a Doctor of Law Degree, with Distinction, from Harvard University, and was admitted in that same year to the bar of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts. In September, 1976, I was admitted to the bar of the District of Columbia Court of Appeals. From July, 1976, to July, 1977, I was a law clerk to Judge John Marshall of the District of Columbia Court of Appeals.

3. From July 1977 until the present I have been an Assistant United States Attorney in the District of Columbia. My duties include the prosecution of persons charged with violations of federal and District of Columbia laws. I have personally participated in the preparation and trial of over three hundred cases involving alleged violations of these laws. Based upon my training and experience, I am an expert in the criminal laws and procedures of this District and of the United States.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

4. I am currently assigned to the Superior Court Division of the United States Attorney's Office, and I am responsible for the preparation for trial of felony cases. In the course of my duties I have become familiar with the charges and the evidence in the case of United States v. John Smith, Docket Number 82-3456, and with the contents of the files of the Superior Court and of the United States Attorney's Office regarding this matter.

5. On May 15, 1982 John Smith was formally accused by Complaint of murder while armed with a dangerous and deadly weapon, in violation of Sections 22-2401 and 22-3202 of the District of Columbia Code. Based on these charges, Judge Dresden Black signed a warrant for Mr. Smith's arrest that same day.

6. Basically, the Complaint charges that Mr. Smith murdered one Fred Luckless on April 31, 1982. Mr. Smith is accused of shooting Mr. Luckless in the chest with a pistol after an altercation over admission to a house party at Mr. Luckless' home.

7. It is the practice of the Superior Court of the District of Columbia to retain the original Complaint and Warrant of Arrest on file among the records of the Court. Therefore, I have obtained a true and accurate copy of the Complaint and of the Warrant of Arrest from the Clerk of the Court, marked it Exhibit "A", and attached it to this affidavit.

8. I have also attached to this affidavit as Exhibit "B" a true and accurate copy of the text of Sections 22-2401, 22-2404, and 22-3202 of the District of Columbia Code, which are the statutes cited in the Complaint and applicable to this case. I have thoroughly reviewed these statutes, and attest that each was duly enacted and in force at the time that the offense occurred, at the time that the Complaint was filed, and is currently in full force. A violation of any of these laws is a felony under United States law.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

I have also included in Exhibit "B" a true and accurate copy of the text of Title 18, United States Code, Section 3281, which is the statute of limitations on prosecuting the crimes charged in the Complaint. I have thoroughly reviewed this statute, and attest that prosecution of the charges in this case is not barred by the statute of limitations.

9. I have attached to this affidavit a true and accurate copy of the statements of Mr. Charles Bystander (Exhibit C), Metropolitan Police Officer Joseph Friday (Exhibit D), former Assistant Medical Examiner Vinodbhai Patel (Exhibit E), and Mr. Stu L. Pidgeon (Exhibit F). Each of these affidavits was sworn to before a notary public duly and legally authorized to administer an oath for this purpose. I have thoroughly reviewed these statements and the attachments to them, and attest that this evidence indicates that JOHN SMITH is guilty of the offenses charged in the Complaint.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-15.185 Text of Statutes Cited in Affidavit in Support of Extradition Request

Section 22-2401, District of Columbia Code, provides:

§22-2401. Murder in the first degree -- Purposeful killing -- Killing while perpetrating certain crimes.

Whoever, being of sound memory and discretion, kills another purposely, either of deliberate and premeditated malice or by means of poison, or in perpetrating or attempting to perpetrate any offense punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary, or without purpose so to do kills another in perpetrating, or in attempting to perpetrate any arson, as defined in section 22-401 or 22-402, rape, mayhem, robbery, or kidnaping, or in perpetrating or attempting to perpetrate any housebreaking while armed with or using a dangerous weapons, is guilty of murder in the first degree.

Section 22-2404, District of Columbia Code, provides:

§22-2404. Punishment for murder in first and second degrees.

The punishment of murder in the first degree shall be death by electrocution unless the jury by unanimous vote recommends life imprisonment; or if the jury, having determined by unanimous vote the guilt of the defendant as charged, is unable to agree as to punishment it shall impose either a sentence of death by electrocution or life imprisonment.

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, a person convicted of first degree murder and upon whom a sentence of life imprisonment is imposed shall be eligible for parole only after the expiration of twenty years from the date he commences to serve his sentence.

Whoever is guilty of murder in the second degree shall be imprisoned for life or not less than twenty years.

Cases tried prior to March 22, 1962, and which are before the court for the purpose of sentence or resentence shall be governed by the provisions of law in effect prior to March 22, 1962: Provides, That the judge may, in his sole discretion, consider circumstances in mitigation and in aggravation and make a determination as to whether the case in his opinion justifies a sentence of life imprisonment, in which event he shall sentence the defendant to life imprisonment. Such a sentence of life imprisonment shall be in accordance with the provisions of this Art.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

In any case tried under this Act as amended where the penalty prescribed by law upon conviction of the defendant is death except in cases otherwise provided, the jury returning a verdict of guilty may by unanimous vote fix the punishment at life imprisonment; and thereupon the court shall sentence him accordingly; but if the jury shall not thus prescribe the punishment the court shall sentence the defendant to suffer death by electrocution unless the jury by its verdict indicates that it is unable to agree upon the punishment in which case the court shall sentence the defendant to death or life imprisonment.

Section 22-3202, District of Columbia, states:

§22-3202. Committing crime when armed — Added punishment.

(a) Any person who commits a crime of violence in the District of Columbia when armed with or having readily available any pistol or other firearm (or limitation thereof) or other dangerous or deadly weapon (including a sawed-off shotgun, shotgun, machinegun, rifle, dirk, bowie knife, butcher knife switchblade knife, razor, blackjack, billy, or metallic or other false knuckles) —

(1) may, if he is convicted for the first time of having so committed a crime of violence in the District of Columbia, be sentenced, in addition to the penalty provided for such crime, to a period of imprisonment which may be up to life imprisonment; and

(2) shall, if he is convicted more than once of having so committed a crime of violence in the District of Columbia, be sentenced, in addition to the penalty provided for such crime, to a minimum period of imprisonment of not less than five years and a maximum period of imprisonment which may not be less than three times the minimum sentence imposed and which may be up to life imprisonment.

(b) Where the maximum sentence imposed under this section is life imprisonment, the minimum sentence imposed under subsection (a) may not exceed fifteen years' imprisonment.

(c) Any person sentenced under subsection (a) (2) of this section may be released on parole in accordance with chapter 2 of title 24, at any time after having served the minimum sentence imposed under that subsection.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

(d) (1) Chapter 402 of title 18 of the United States Code (Federal Youth Corrections Act) shall not apply with respect to any person sentenced under paragraph (2) of subsection(a).

(2) The execution or imposition of any term of imprisonment imposed under paragraph(2) of subsection(a) may not be suspended and probation may not be granted.

(e) Nothing contained in this section shall be construed as reducing any sentence otherwise imposed or authorized to be imposed.

(f) No conviction with respect to which a person has been pardoned on the ground of innocence shall be taken into account in applying this section.

Title 18, United States Code, Section 3281, states:

§ 3281. Capital offenses

An indictment for any offenses punishable by death may be found at any time without limitation except for offenses barred by the provisions of law existing on August 4, 1939.

CHARLES O. BYSTANDER, being duly sworn, deposes and says that:

1. I am a citizen of the United States and a resident of Washington, D.C.

2. On April 31, 1982 I attended a party given by Fred Luckless at his home at 315 Ninth Street N.W., Washington, D.C. The purpose of the party was to raise money to donate to Fred's church, and the admission fee was six dollars. About thirty people were present.

3. At about 10:00 p.m. JOHN SMITH, whose nickname I know to be "MAD DOG," came to the door and asked to be admitted. "MAD DOG" said that he wanted to come in without paying the six dollars, but Fred would not let him. I saw them scuffle briefly, and saw Fred hit "MAD DOG" in the face. Then "MAD DOG" left.

4. At about 11:30 p.m. "MAD DOG" and three other men I do not know came to the door. One of them had a shotgun. They forced their way in, and one held the shotgun aimed at the guests while the others grabbed Fred and dragged him out on the porch. Though the open doorway:

I saw the two men hold Fred while "MAD DOG" beat him in the face and chest with his fists. Then "MAD DOG" took a silver colored pistol out of his pocket and held it against Fred's chest. "MAD DOG" said, "This is it buddy, I'll teach you not to say 'no' to a sociopath like me." Then he shot Fred. As Fred fell, the four men ran away.

5. I went immediately to Fred's side, but I could see at once that he was dead. I shouted for someone to call the police.

6. I know JOHN SMITH, or "MAD DOG," quite well because he once lived in the same apartment building I live in. I have signed and dated a photograph of him, and attached it to this affidavit.

1. I am a citizen of the United States and a resident of Washington, D.C. Since January 1972 I have been employed as a police officer with the Metropolitan Police. I hold the rank of Sargent.

2. At about 11:30 p.m. on April 31, 1982 I was on routine patrol in a police car with my partner, fellow officer Frank Erskine, when we received a radio transmission indicating that shots had been fired in the vicinity of Ninth and "D" Streets N.W. We activated our police lights and siren, and proceeded to the scene. As we arrived, I noticed four males running down Ninth Street in the opposite direction, and radioed for other officers to apprehend them.

3. When we arrived, we found the body of Mr. Fred Luckless sprawled on porch, his wife weeping by his side. There was a large gunshot wound in the body's chest area. I immediately checked the body for a pulse, a heartbeat, or other signs of life, but there were none.

Whereupon,

STEWART L. PIDGEON was called as a witness, and after being first duly sworn by the Foreman of the Grand Jury, was examined and testified as follows:

By MR. BURGER:

Q: Would you tell the Grand Jury your name, please?

A: Stewart L. Pidgeon.

Q: Mr. Pidgeon, in return for your cooperation in this matter, the Government has promised that you will not be prosecuted for first degree murder; is that correct?

A: Yeah.

Q: Have any other promises been made to you by the Government?

A: No, they have not.

Q: Now, directing your attention to the night of April 31, 1982. Where were you?

A: Look, man, you know all this. At around 11:00 p.m. I was in the Cutthroat Bar and Grill, shooting pool, when Mad Dog comes in, mad as can be.

Q: Wait a minute, who is "Mad Dog?"

A: John Smith.

Q: Where is he now?

A: He got away. I hear he left the country. Anyway "Mad Dog" said some guy embarrassed him by not letting him into a party. Said he wanted to teach the guy a lesson. He gave me and "Fingers" Bailey and Rick Thomas twenty-five bucks apiece to help him.

Q: Did he say what he wanted you to do "to help" him.

A: Naw, but I thought I knew: hold the guy so Mad Dog -- he's kinda short -- could work him over.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Q: Did you agree to this proposal?

A: Yeah.

Q: Did you then proceed to the home of Fred Luckless?

A: Yeah.

Q: What happened when you arrived?

A: It started out fine. "Fingers" held a shotgun on the people in the party, so they wouldn't get any smart ideas, and Rick and I held the dude Mad Dog was after by his arms, and Mad Dog whacked him around a couple of times.

Then Mad Dog pulls out a pistol, says something to the guy, and shoots him. Just like that. I was so surprised I almost died, too.

Q: What happened then?

A: We all ran like hell. The cops picked me up five blocks away, down Ninth Street.

MR. BURGER: I have no further questions. Any questions from the Grand Jury? No? All right, Mr. Pidgeon, thank you very much. You may step outside.

(Witness excused.)

I, HAMILTON BURGER, being duly sworn, depose and state:

1. I am a citizen of the United States, residing in San Francisco, California.
2. I am 31 years old. In June 1973, I received a Doctor of Laws Degree from the University of California, and I was admitted in the same year to the Bar of the State of California. From December 1973, to November 1979, I was employed by the United States Securities and Exchange Commission as an enforcement attorney in San Francisco, California.
3. From November 1979, until the present, I have been employed by the United States Department of Justice as an Assistant United States Attorney for the Northern District of California. My duties are to prosecute persons charged with criminal violations of the laws of the United States.
4. During my practice in the Office of the United States Attorney for the Northern District of California, I have become knowledgeable about criminal statutes and case law of the United States, and more particularly in that area of the criminal law relating to violations of the Federal Counterfeiting Statutes. I also represented the Government in the case of United States v. Joe Doaks, CR-80-1234-SC (N.D. Cal.). Thus, I am familiar with the evidence and charges in the case, and the contents of the files of the United States District Court and of the Office of the United States Attorney regarding this matter.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

5. On November 5, 1980, a grand jury formally accused Joe Doaks of violating the criminal laws of the United States. This indictment was replaced by a new or "superceding" indictment on January 7, 1981.

I have obtained true copies of the two indictments from the Clerk of Court, and attached them to this affidavits as Exhibits A and B.

6. The statutes cited in the indictment and applicable to this case are Title 18, United States Code, Sections 471 and 472.

Section 471 states:

Whoever, with intent to defraud, falsely makes, forges, counterfeits, or alters any obligation or other security of the United States, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than fifteen years, or both.

Section 472 states:

Whoever, with intent to defraud, passes, utters, publishes or sell, or attempts to pass, utter, publish or sell, or with like intent brings into the counterfeited, or altered obligations or other security of the United States, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than fifteen years, or both.

A violation of either of these statutes is a felony under United States law. Each of these statutes was the duly enacted law of the United States at the time that the offenses were committed, at the time that the indictment was filed, and is now in full force.

The statute of limitations on prosecuting these offenses is

Section 3282 of Title 18, United States Code, which states:

Except as otherwise expressly provided by law, no person shall be prosecuted, tried, or punished for any offense, not capital, unless the indictment is found or the information is instituted within five years next after such offense shall have been committed.

Since the applicable statute of limitations is five years, the indictments, which charged criminal violations beginning in July 1980, were filed within the prescribed time.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

7. The superseding indictment charged three offenses. Count one charged that Mr. Doaks manufactured counterfeit obligations of the United States (in this case, money) and did so knowingly, willfully, and with the intent to defraud. Specifically, the indictment charged that Mr. Doaks printed counterfeit United States money appearing to be worth approximately $462,444.

Count Two charged that on November 6, 1980, Mr. Doaks knowingly and willfully and with intent to defraud, sold approximately $1,000 of the counterfeit obligations (money) of the United States which he had manufactured to one Roger Able. Roger Able is a Special Agent of the United States Secret Service, the United States government agency responsible for investigating the manufacture and distribution of counterfeit United States money.

Count three charged that on November 7, 1980, the defendant, Joe Doaks, attempted to sell $100,000 of the counterfeit obligations (money) which he had manufactured to Roger Able.

8. I was present in Court on February 2 through 5, 1981, as Mr. Doaks was tried before presiding Judge Samuel Conti and a jury. Mr. Doaks, who had been released from custody on bail, was present and was represented by his attorney, Joyce Davenport. I saw Mr. Doaks present in Court on each day of trial until the afternoon of February 5, 1981, when the jury began its deliberations. On February 9, 1981, the Court found Mr. Doaks guilty on all three charges of the indictment. I have attached a true copy of the jury's verdict form to this affidavit as Exhibit C.

9. Although he was required to appear in Court on February 5, 6 and 9, 1981, Mr. Doaks did not appear in Court those days, and has not returned for sentencing. Under United States law, a defendant who is present at the beginning of the trial but leaves the jurisdiction of the Court after the evidence in the case has been presented to the jury, and thereafter fails to return to court, can be found guilty by the jury without being personally present. However, under United States law the defendant may not be sentenced unless he is personally present. Accordingly, while Mr. Doaks has been convicted of the offenses as charged in the indictment, he has not been sentenced yet.

10. When Mr. Doaks failed to appear on February 9, 1981, United States District Judge Samuel Conti ordered the Clerk of the Court to issue a warrant for Mr. Doak's arrest. I have attached a true copy of this warrant to this affidavit as Exhibit D.

11. Attached as Exhibit E is the original affidavit of Richard Baker, Special Agent of the United States Secret Service. This affidavit is sworn to before a Clerk of the United States District Court, Northern District of California, who is a person duly empowered to administer an oath for this purpose. On November 7, 1980, Agent Baker, together with Agent Roger Able, placed Mr. Doaks under arrest shortly after Mr. Doaks attempted to sell the counterfeit money to Agent Able. Mr. Baker transported Mr. Doaks to the Secret Service offices, where he photographed Mr. Doaks and took his fingerprints. Attached as Exhibit 1 to the affidavit of Richard Baker is the photograph of Joe Doaks. Mr. Doak's fingerprints are attached as Exhibit 2 to Richard Baker's affidavit.

I, RICHARD BAKER, being duly sworn, depose and state:

1. I am a citizen of the United States, residing in San Francisco, California.

2. I am a Special Agent with the United States Secret Service. I have been employed by the Secret Service for eleven (11) years. The Secret Service is the United States government agency responsible for protecting the President of the United States of America and other elected officials. In addition, the Secret Service is responsible for enforcement of the laws of the United States relating to the manufacture and distribution of counterfeit United States currency.

2. My duties included assisting Special Agent Roger Able in the investigation of Joe Doaks, suspected of counterfeiting U.S. Currency. On November 6, 1980 I placed on Agent Able a remote monitoring device. I then observed from a distance as Agent Able met with Mr. Doaks (who believed that Agent Able was a prospective purchaser of counterfeit money) and listened at my receiver as they talked. I heard Mr. Doaks brag that he had printed up "nearly half a million dollars" in counterfeit money, which he claimed "is so perfect even Secret Service would be fooled." He then offered to sell Agent Able a sample of the counterfeit money. I then saw him give Agent Able counterfeit bills apparently worth one thousand dollars in return for one hundred dollars

9-16.000 PLEAS - RULE 11 - FED. R. CRIM. P.

A defendant may plead guilty, not guilty or, with the consent of the court, nolo contendere. If the defendant refuses to plead, or if a defendant corporation fails to appear, the court must enter a plea of not guilty. Fed. R. Crim. P. 11(a). In a criminal case, the plea of nolo contendere has the effect of a guilty plea. United States v. Norris, 281 U.S. 619 (1930). Under Rule 11 a plea of nolo contendere shall be accepted by the court only with its consent and only after it gives due consideration to the views of the parties and the interest of the public in the effective administration of justice. The court does not have the authority to accept either a plea of guilty or a plea of nolo contendere until the court has first determined that the defendant has a requisite understanding and that the plea is voluntary, in accordance with Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 11(c) and (d). See Boykin v. Alabama, 395 U.S. 238 (1969).

9-16.010 Cases on Pleas

Particularly noteworthy on the subject of pleas are the three cases of North Carolina v. Alford, 400 U.S. 25; United States v. Gray, 438 F. 2d 1160 (9th Cir. 1971); and United States v. (1970) McCarthy, 445 F.2d 587 (7th Cir. 1971). In Alford, the Supreme Court held that the defendant's protestations of innocence did not bar acceptance of a second degree murder guilty plea, made with the advise of counsel, supported by substantial evidence of guilt, and motivated by a desire to avoid the death penalty. The Court, in Gray, held that a plea to a lesser included offense is not proper unless the offense charged has been reduced with the consent of the government. In McCarthy, the Court held that where two counts of a three-count indictment had been dismissed after the defendant pleaded guilty to one count, from which he/she successfully appealed, the government, which did not move to reinstate the dismissed counts until after the statute of limitations had run, was not entitled to reinstate those counts.

9-16.100 ACCEPTING THE PLEA

9-16.110 Rule 11 (c)

Rule 11(c) requires that, before accepting a plea of guilty or nolo contendere, the court must address the defendant personally in open court and inform (him) of, and determine that (he) understands, the following: (1) ← him/he he/she the nature of the charge to which the plea is offered, the mandatory minimum penalty provided by law, if any, and the maximum possible penalty provided by law, including the effect of any special parole term; (2) if the defendant is not represented by an attorney, that he/she has the right to be represented by an attorney at every stage of the proceeding against him/her and, if necessary, one will be appointed to represent him/her; (3)

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

that he/she has the right to plead not guilty or to persist in that plea if it has already been made, and that he/she has the right to be tried by a jury and at that trial has the right to the assistance of counsel, the right to confront and cross-examine witnesses against him/her, and the right not to be compelled to incriminate himself/herself; (4) that if his/her plea of guilty or nolo contendere is accepted by the court there will not be a further trial of any kind, so that by pleading guilty or nolo contendere he/she waives the right to a trial; and (5) that if the court intends to question the defendant under oath, on the record, and in the presence of counsel about the offense to which he/she has pleaded, that his/her answers may later be used against him/her in a prosecution for perjury or false statement.

9-16.120 Rule 11(d)

Rule 11(d) requires that the court not accept a plea of guilty or nolo contendere without first, by addressing the defendant personally in open court, determining that the plea is voluntary and not the result of force or threats or of promises apart from a plea agreement. The court shall also inquire as to whether the defendant's willingness to plead guilty or nolo contendere results from prior discussions between the attorney for the government and the defendant or his/her attorney.

9-16.130 Youth Correction Act

United States Attorneys are also urged to be aware, that the defendant be fully advised of the maximum sentence that he/she may receive under the Youth Correction Act, 18 U.S.C. §5005, et. seq., before the defendant makes a guilty plea under such Act. Pilkington v. United States, 315 F.2d 204 (4th Cir. 1963).

9-16.200 PLEA AGREEMENTS

9-16.210 Rule 11(e)

Rule 11(e) recognizes and codifies the concept of plea bargaining. The plea agreement procedure, however, is not mandatory; a court is free to disallow the presentation of the parties' plea agreements. H.R. REP. No. 93-247, 94th Cong., 1st Sess. 6 (1975). To the extent that a court permits plea agreements, Rule 11(e) shall regulate such agreements. Rule 11(e) recognizes the possibility that the attorney for the government and either the attorney for the defendant or the defendant pro se may enter into an agreement whereby the attorney for the government would do any of three listed options upon the defendant's entering of a plea of guilty or nolo contendere to a charged offense or to a lesser or related offense.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

Those three listed options of the attorney for the government, included in Rule 11(e)(1)(A)-(C) are as follows: he/she may move for dismissal of other charges; he/she may make a recommendation or an agreement not to oppose the defendant's request for a particular sentence, with the understanding that such recommendation or request shall not be binding upon the court; or he/she may agree that a specific sentence is the appropriate disposition of the case. However, Rule 11(e), though not explicitly stating so, does contemplate that the plea agreement may bind the defendant to do more than just plead guilty or nolo contendere. The plea agreement, for example, may also require that the defendant further co-operate with the prosecution in another case or in another investigation. H.R. REP. No. 93-247, 94th Cong., 1st Sess. 6 (1975). The courts are forbidden under the Rule from participating in discussions looking toward plea agreements.

If the parties reach a plea agreement, the court, under the mandate of Rule 11(e)(2) shall, on the record, require the disclosure of the agreement in open court or, on a showing of good cause, in camera, at the time that the plea is offered. Although there must be a showing of good cause before the court conducts a disclosure proceeding in camera, Rule 11(e)(2) does not address itself to whether the showing of good cause may be made in open court or in camera. That issue is probably left for the courts to solve on a case-by-case basis. H.R. REP. No. 93247, 94th Cong., 1st Sess. 6 (1975).

After the plea agreement has been disclosed, the court may either accept or reject the plea agreement. If the court accepts the plea agreement, the court must inform the defendant that it will embody in the judgment and sentence the disposition provided for in the plea agreement.

As amended in 1982, the Rule requires that the court, in appropriate cases, explain to the defendant the effect of any special parole term. In this regard, the Advisory Committee Note cites with approval the following procedure as recommended in Moore v. United States, 592 F.2d 753 (4th Cir. 1979):

[The defendant must be informed]

(1) that a special parole term will be added to any prison sentence he receives;

← he/she

(2) of the minimum length of the special parole term that must be imposed and the absence of a statutory maximum;

(3) that special parole is entirely different from -- and in addition to--ordinary parole; and

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

his/her →
his/her →
(4) that if the special parole is violated, the defendant can be returned to prison for the remainder of his sentence and the full length of his special parole term.

This advise must be given on the record by the court prior to accepting the plea. The Assistant U. S. Attorney should make sure that the sentencing judge advises the defendant of the special parole provision in the terms cited above and that the defendant acknowledges a full understanding of the concepts so conveyed. A court's failure to comply will not, however necessarily entitle a defendant to relief. See United States v. Timmreck, 441 U.S. 780 (1979). It is not necessary that every conceivable consequence of sentencing be communicated to the defendant. See Bunker v. Wise, 550 F.2d 1155 (8th Cir. 1977).

This procedure will help to assure the continued viability of pleas entered pursuant to Rule 11. Additionally, it is the better practice for a defendant and his counsel to be advised of the special parole provisions in the course of plea negotiations.

Rule 11(e), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, contains an ambiguity that could prove troublesome with respect to plea agreements pursuant to subparagraph (e)(1)(B) in which the prosecutor agrees to "make a recommendation, or ... not to oppose the defendant's request, for a particular sentence, with the understanding that such recommendation or request shall not be binding upon the court." Under paragraph (e)(3), if the court "accepts" a plea agreement, it must "embody in the judgment and sentence the disposition provided for in the plea agreement." Under paragraph (e)(4), if the court rejects a plea agreement, it must afford the defendant the opportunity to withdraw the plea and advise him/her that if he/she persists in the plea, "the disposition of the case may be less favorable to [him/her] than that contemplated by the plea agreement."

It may be thought that, since a plea agreement under subparagraph 11 (e)(1)(B) involves merely a recommendation by the prosecutor, there is not the "disposition provided for" in the agreement within the meaning of paragraph (e)(3) 11, so that a court could "accept" the agreement and still impose a greater than recommended sentence, without affording the defendant the opportunity to withdraw his/her plea under paragraph (e)(4) 11.

Although such a scheme would be sensible and was espoused by the Department before Congress, the structure of the rule as enacted, and its legislative history, seem to support the contrary view that an acceptance of a Rule 11(e)(1)(B) agreement obligates the court to impose a sentence no more severe than that recommended or not opposed by the government. See Statement of Representatives of the Judicial Conference of the United States before the Subcommittee on Criminal Justice, House Committee on the Judiciary, March 26, 1975, with respect to the provisions of FED. R. CRIM. P. 11 (e) as submitted to Congress (reprinted in hearings of the subcommittee, at 211); and see H. Conf. REP. No. 94-414, 94th Cong., 1st Sess. characterizing the addition of the phrase in FED. R. CRIM. P. 11 (e)(1)(B) beginning with the words "with the understanding that" as a "nonsubstantive change."

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

Since many district judges may labor under the impression that they may accept a FED. R. CRIM. P. 11 (b) agreement and yet impose a more onerous sentence upon the defendant than that recommended by the government, without affording the defendant an opportunity to withdraw his/her plea, it is important that prosecutors be aware and, where deemed necessary, advise judges that a subsequent imposition of a greater sentence may lead to a reversal of the conviction and a remand with instruction to permit the defendant the opportunity to replead. Cf. United States v. Hammerman, 528 F.2d 320 (4th Cir. 1975); United States ex. rel. Culbreath v. Rundle, 466 F.2d 730, 735 (3rd Cir. 1975).

The court may be informed that, if it wished to reserve the option of imposing a more severe sentence, the safer course is to follow the procedures of Rule 11(e)(4) in the first instance. The court should "reject" the plea agreement, advise the defendant that if he/she persists in the plea the sentence may be more severe than that recommended, and afford the defendant the opportunity to then withdraw his/her plea. Alternatively, the court may seek a waiver from the defendant of his/her right under Rule 11(e)(4) to object to a greater sentence. In order to be able to later demonstrate an intelligent and voluntary waiver the defendant should be warned of his/her right to withdraw the plea and his/her written or oral waiver thereof should be made to appear on the record.

It should be noted that FED. R. CRIM. P. 11 may be contended by defendants to apply to statements of intention by prosecutors not in the course of plea agreements. For example, a merely informative statement to defense counsel by the prosecutor (after learning of the defendant's intention to plead guilty to the charges) that the prosecutor does not intend to make any recommendation as to sentence may be alleged to be an agreement "not to oppose the defendant's request" within the meaning of Rule 11 (e)(1)(B), even though the general practice in the district is one of non-allocation by the government. Attorneys, therefore, should not indiscriminately convey such information to defendants or their counsel outside the plea bargaining context and should be alert to the need to make an adequate record both to preserve traditional judicial discretion with respect to sentencing (unless the agreement is otherwise) and to prevent successful attacks upon judgments based upon guilty pleas.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

If the court rejects the plea agreement, the court is mandated by rule 11(e)(4) to inform the parties of its rejection, on the record, and to advise the defendant either personally in open court or, on a showing of good cause, in camera that the court is not bound by the plea agreement. The court must then afford the defendant the opportunity to withdraw his/her plea, and also must advise the defendant that if he/she persists in his/her guilty plea or plea of nolo contendere, the court may dispose of the case less favorably than what was contemplated by the plea agreement. Again, as in the somewhat similar situation of Rule 11(e)(2), Rule 11(e)(4) does not address itself to whether the showing of good cause is to be made in open court or in camera. As in the situation of Rule 11(e)(2) the issue is better left for the courts to solve on a case-by-case basis. H.R. Rep. No. 93-247, 94th Cong., 1st Sess., 6 (1975).

The court must be notified, except when good cause has been shown, of a plea agreement's existence either at the arraignment or at some other time, prior to trial, as may be fixed by the court. FED. R. CRIM. P. 11(e)(5). Even though the court accepts a guilty plea, it is prohibited under FED. R. CRIM. P. 11(f) from entering a judgment upon that plea unless it first makes a satisfactory inquiry that the plea has a factual basis. See United States v. Rafael Navedo, 516 F. 2d 293 (2nd Cir. 1975); United States v. Bethany, 489 F. 2d 91 (5th Cir. 1974). Rule 11(g) requires that a verbatim record be made of the proceedings at which the defendant enters a plea. In addition, if the plea is one of guilty or nolo contendere, the record must include, without any limitations, the following: the court's advice to the defendant; the inquiry into the voluntariness of the plea including any plea agreement; and the inquiry into the accuracy of a guilty plea. FED. R. CRIM. P. 11(g).

9-16.220 Plea of Nolo Contendere - Consent To U.S. Attorneys are instructed not to consent to a plea of nolo contendere except in the most unusual circumstances and then only after a recommendation for so doing has been approved by the Assistant Attorney General responsible or by the Office of the Attorney General.

9-16.230 Approval Required for Certain Agreements

U.S. Attorneys should also be cognizant of the sensitive area where plea agreements involve either extradition or deportation. No U.S. Attorney or Assistant has the authority to negotiate regarding an extradition or deportation other in connection with any case. If extradition has been requested or there is reason to believe that such a request will be made, or if a deportation action is pending or completed, U.S. Attorneys or Assistants, before entering negotiations regarding such matters, must seek specific approval from the Assistant Attorney General, Criminal Division.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The Department continues to advocate severe penalties for aircraft hijackers as a deterrent to future acts or piracy. Consequently, authorization from the Criminal Division must be obtained by the U. S. Attorney before he enters into any agreement to forego an air piracy prosecution in return for a guilty plea to a lesser offense, or decides to otherwise not to fully prosecute an act of air piracy. ← he/she

9-16.240 Investigative Agency to be Consulted

Although U. S. Attorneys have wide discretion in negotiating guilty pleas in criminal cases, this power should be exercised only after appropriate consultation with the federal investigative agency provided.

9-16.241 Plea Bargains in Fraud Cases

Whenever possible, U. S. Attorneys should require an explicit stipulation of all the facts of a defendant's fraud against the United States government when agreeing to a plea bargain, including acknowledgement of the financial consequences or damages to the government. A good example of this approach and its usefulness in ensuing civil litigation may be found in United States v. Podell, 436 F. Supp. 1039, 1042-1044 (S.D. N.Y. 1977), aff'd. 572 F.2d 31, 36 (2d Cir. 1978). Concerning such pleas, U. S. Attorneys should also be aware of USAM 9-2.159, 4-1.218, 9-42.451, and 9-16.240.

9-16.250 Plea Negotiations with Public Officials

In United States v. Richmond, 550 F. Supp. 144 (E.D. N.Y. 1982), the Chief Judge for the Eastern District of New York questioned the propriety of using the plea bargaining process to negotiate the resignation from office of a Congressman. The Criminal Division believes that this decision is incorrect on the merits. U. S. Attorney personnel are therefore encouraged to continue to consider voluntary offers of resignation from office as a desirable feature in plea agreements with elected and appointed public officials at all levels of government, in accordance with the considerations and procedures described below. ← member of Congress

The Richmond case involved a former Congressman from New York who, during 1982, became the subject of a federal criminal investigation. In an ← member of Congress

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Congress-
person → effort to dispose of his criminal liability, Congressman Richmond voluntarily agreed to resign his seat in the Congress, and to plead guilty to federal tax, narcotics and conflict of interest offenses. Thereafter, Richmond resigned his seat, took appropriate measures to withdraw his candidacy in the 1982 Congressional election, and entered guilty pleas to the aforementioned charges. At his sentencing a month later, the judge announced that, in his judgment, the resignation and withdrawal conditions of the plea agreement violated the Separation of Powers Doctrine, and infringed upon the constitutional right of the public to select Congressmen of their choosing as articulated in Powell v. McCormack, 395 U.S. 486 (1969).

of
Congress → The Court's Separation of Powers concern focused on a non-specific fear that a hypothetical future federal prosecutor might maliciously abuse his prosecutorial powers to harass Congressmen into resigning, thereby subverting the sovereign independence of the legislative branch. This same basic argument has been unsuccessfully advanced on numerous prior occasions in support of the proposition that the Separation of Powers Doctrine limits the latitude of federal prosecutors to initiate criminal prosecutions of federal judges and members of Congress. In these instances, the federal courts have consistently and firmly rejected the notion that the Separation of Powers Doctrine protects Congressmen and federal judges against hypothetical prosecutorial overreaching. See e.f. United States, 202 U.S. 344 (1906); United States v. Hastings, 681 F. 2d 706 (11th Cir. 1982); United States v. Myers, 635 F. 2d 932 (2d Cir. 1980); Diggs v. United States, 613 F.2d 988 (D.C. Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 466 U.S. 982 (1980). As a practical matter, the power to initiate a criminal charge is more susceptible to abuse than the power to settle a charge already brought. Thus, it follows that if the Separation of Powers Doctrine does not limit the initiation of criminal charges, it also does not limit the disposition of them.

of
Congress → Powell v. McCormack, supra, involved a refusal by the Congress to seat a properly qualified member-elect who had tendered the requisite proof of his/her election and who desired to be seated. The Supreme Court held that the qualifications for Congressmen listed in the Constitution were exclusive, that the Congress lacked the constitutional authority to add to them, and that it was therefore obliged to seat a member-elect who produced sufficient evidence of his/her election. The McCormack Court did not imply that either the exclusive nature of the list of Congressional qualifications contained in the Constitution, or a Member of Congress' duty to his/her constituents, limit his/her freedom to voluntarily tender his/her resignation for personal reasons attending the settlement of personal criminal liability.

Finally, the Richmond case did not address the propriety of negotiating the resignation of defendants who are not Members of Congress of federal judges. In that regard, the controlling authority is United States v. Tonry, 605 F. 2d 144 (5th Cir. 1979), which upheld against a federalism argument the propriety of resignation and non-candidacy conditions involuntarily imposed on a convicted federal defendant by the sentencing judge pursuant to the Federal Probation Act.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9—CRIMINAL DIVISION

Although the Criminal Division considers the Richmond decision to have been incorrectly decided on its merits, the unusual procedural and factual setting of the case foreclosed judicial review in the Second Circuit. In this regard, the District Judge's comments concerning the plea bargaining issue were made after the plea agreement terms dealing with resignation and withdrawal from candidacy had been fully performed by Congressman Richmond, and without the issue having been otherwise raised by the defendant. Since the plea agreement was in all other respects enforced, and since the Court's refusal to "accept" the resignation and non-candidacy terms did not demonstrably impact on the sentence imposed, the issue was moot and not easily amenable to appellate review.

The Richmond case is particularly troublesome from the standpoint of the orderly and efficient discharge of the Justice Department's responsibilities to protect the public from criminal abuse of the public trust by high federal officials. It purports to limit, without adequate legal justification, the latitude of federal prosecutors to reach voluntary settlements with defendants in significant corruption cases which equitably address and protect the important public interests that such prosecutions normally entail.

Accordingly, the following principles shall govern the negotiation of resignation and non-candidacy conditions in plea agreements with defendants in federal public corruption cases:

A. As a general proposition, resignation from office, and/or withdrawal from elective candidacy, remain appropriate and desirable objectives in plea negotiations with public officials who are charged with federal offenses that focus on abuse of the office(s) involved.

B. Resignation and non-candidacy with respect to public positions other than those of Members of Congress or federal judges may be enforced involuntarily against the will of the defendant by a sentencing judge pursuant to the Federal Probation Act. United States v. Tonry, supra.

C. Resignation and non-candidacy with respect to Congressional or federal judicial office may be properly made the subject or plea negotiations, and offers of resignation and/or withdrawal for such offices may be incorporated into plea agreements, with incumbent Members of Congress and judges.

D. Resignation and/or withdrawal from candidacy with respect to Congressional or federal judicial office shall not be imposed involuntarily against the will of the judge or Members of Congress involved. Powell v. McCormack, supra.

5. To assure uniformity and fairness, all proposed plea agreements involving defendants who are Members of Congress, candidates for Congress, or federal judges shall be subject to prior approval by the Public Integrity Section of the Criminal Division.

Questions concerning matters discussed herein should be directed to the Public Integrity Section at FTS: 724-6983.

9-16.300 INADMISSIBILITY OF PLEAS - RULE 11(e)(6)

Rule 11(e) bars the use in evidence of the following (with exceptions) in any civil or criminal proceeding against the person who made them: (1) a plea of guilty which was later withdrawn; (2) a plea of nolo contendere; (3) any statement made in the course of any proceeding under Rule 11 regarding a plea of guilty of nolo contendere; and (4) any statement made in the course of plea discussions with an attorney for the government which discussions do not result in a plea of guilty or result in a plea of guilty later withdrawn. Such evidence is admissible, however; (1) in any proceeding wherein another statement made in the course of the same plea or plea discussions has been introduced and the statement ought in fairness to be considered contemporaneously with it; or (2) in a criminal proceeding for perjury or false statement if the statement was made by the defendant under oath, on the record, and in the presence of counsel. This is modeled after Rule 410 of the Federal Rules of Evidence.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-17.000 SPEEDY TRIAL ACT OF 1974, AS AMENDED

The Speedy Trial Act of 1974, Pub. L. No. 93-619, as amended on August 2, 1979, by the Speedy Trial Act Amendments Act of 1979, Pub. L. No. 96-43, has two titles:

Title I, entitled "Speedy Trial," contains 18 U.S.C. §§3161-3174. It sets forth time limitations within which criminal proceedings must be commenced. It is applicable to all criminal proceedings except prosecutions of petty and military offenses (18 U.S.C. §3172(b)). See United States v. Baker, 641 F.2d 1311, 1319 (9th Cir. 1981). It is inapplicable to juvenile delinquency proceedings, which have their own speedy trial provision. See USAM 9-8.000.

Title II, entitled "Pretrial Agencies," contains 18 U.S.C. §§3152-3156. These sections mandate the creation of pilot agencies in ten judicial districts to supervise persons released pending trial on criminal charges. See USAM 9-17.300, infra.

9-17.010 Interpreting the Act

The case law may be found in West's Federal Practice Digest 2d, Criminal Law, at Key Numbers 577.1-577.16, and we hope at the same Key Numbers in its new Digest 3d.

The Federal Judicial Center has prepared a one volume legislative history of the Act that has been distributed to all U.S. Attorneys' offices. See Partridge, A., Legislative History of Title I of the Speedy Trial Act of 1974 (Federal Judicial Center 1980). Among the Congressional reports incorporated in the one volume legislative history are: S. Rep. No. 1021, 93rd Cong., 2d Sess. (1974); H.R. Rep. No. 1508, 93rd Cong., 2d Sess., reprinted in 1974 U.S. Code Cong. & Ad. News 7401; S. Rep. No. 212, 96th Cong., 1st Sess. (1979); H.R. Rep. No. 390, 96th Cong., 1st Sess., reprinted in 1979 U.S. Code Cong. & Ad. News 805. Bear in mind that the legislation actually enacted is not always precisely the same as the bills discussed in the committee reports.

Useful and persuasive, but not binding, authority may be found in the Guidelines to the Administration of the Speedy Trial Act of 1974 as Amended (Revised December 1979), prepared by the Committee on the Administration of Criminal Law of the Judicial Conference of the United States and distributed to all U.S. Attorneys' offices (Judicial Conference Guidelines), and in the guidelines adopted by the Court of Appeals of the Second Circuit (Second Circuit Guidelines). The Second Circuit Guidelines have been strongly approved by Congress. See S. Rep. No. 212, 96th Cong., 1st Sess. 20 (1979).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-17.100 TITLE I - SPEEDY TRIAL

9-17.101 Calendaring

18 U.S.C. §3161(a) requires the appropriate "judicial officer" (defined by 18 U.S.C. §3172(a) to include judges and magistrates) as soon as possible to "set the case for trial on a day certain" or place it on "a weekly or other short-term trial calendar," after consulting with defense and government counsel. The government and the district court share the responsibility for speedy trial enforcement and the government is obligated to call the court's attention to defense delays. See United States v. Turner, 725 F.2d 1154 (8th Cir. 1984), United States v. Piteo, 726 F.2d 50 (2d Cir. 1983); United States v. Perez-Reveles, 715 F.2d 1348, 1353 (9th Cir. 1983). The Fourth Circuit has held the Speedy Trial Act constitutional, rejecting an argument that the Act usurps a trial judge's scheduling authority in violation of Article III. United States v. Brainer, 691 F.2d 691 (4th Cir. 1982).

9-17.102 Securing the Presence of the Defendant

After a decision has been made to charge an individual with an offense a variety of procedures are available to secure that person's presence before the court, including one that may trigger the application of the Interstate Agreement on Detainers Act, 18 U.S.C. app. Both this Act and the Speedy Trial Act may affect the choice of the procedure to be used. The principal circumstances in which a defendant may be found and the applicable procedures are:

A. Defendant located within district.

1. Defendant at large. The presence of a defendant located physically within the district may be secured by: arrest on a complaint (see USAM 9-17.121, infra); service of a summons on a complaint (see USAM 9-17.122, infra); or, for cases initiated by the filing of an indictment or information, provision of notice pursuant to local practice, service of summons, or execution of a warrant. (See Fed. R. Crim. P. 9). For cases initiated by pre-indictment arrest or summons, the 30-day arrest to indictment clock is triggered by the arrest or the service of the summons. For cases initiated by indictment or information, the 70-day post-indictment clock is triggered by the defendant's first appearance before a judicial officer in the district on the case. See USAM 9-17.130, infra. Note that where a defendant is arrested on an indictment warrant, the 70-day clock is triggered by any appearance before a judicial officer in the district, including an appearance before a magistrate for bail purposes.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

2. Defendant in state custody.

a. Serving term of imprisonment. The Speedy Trial Act requires that where the attorney for the government knows that a defendant charged with an offense is serving a term of imprisonment, the attorney must promptly seek to obtain the presence of the defendant (see 18 U.S.C. §3161(j)(1) and USAM 9-17.160, infra). The presence of such a defendant in state custody serving a term of imprisonment may be secured by the use of either a detainer under the Interstate Agreement on Detainers Act, 18 U.S.C. app. (See USAM 9-2.145 and Speedy Trial Act, 18 U.S.C. §3161(j)) and a writ of habeas corpus ad prosequendum, or only a writ of habeas corpus ad prosequendum. A detainer serves to prevent that defendant's release by the state authorities. Relinquishment of the custody of the defendant is obtained by a subsequent written request from your court, ordinarily a writ of habeas corpus ad prosequendum.

However, note that the filing of a detainer automatically invokes the Interstate Agreement on Detainers Act. See United States v. Odam, 674 F.2d 228 (4th Cir. 1982). Under Article III of the Speedy Trial Act, a defendant has a right to demand trial within 180 days and to have disposed all federal charges in the district for which detainers have been lodged, and possibly, the federal charges for which detainers have been lodged in all districts (see USAM 9-2.145). Under the Speedy Trial Act, Article IV, if the prosecutor secures the presence of the prisoner, the trial must commence within 120 days unless good cause is shown for a continuance. In light of the requirements imposed by the Interstate Agreement on Detainers Act, it may be preferable to use only a habeas corpus writ. By itself such a writ does not invoke the Interstate Agreement. See United States v. Mauro, 436 U.S. 340 (1978). In all of the foregoing circumstances it is advisable to consult with the United States Marshal, who ordinarily will be responsible for any service on state authorities and for transporting the defendant.

b. In pre-trial custody. The Interstate Agreement on Detainers Act does not apply to defendants in pre-trial incarceration. See United States v. Reed, 620 F.2d 709, 711 (9th Cir. 1980). Consequently, the formal procedures by which the appearance of a defendant in pre-trial state custody may be obtained are use of a writ of habeas corpus ad prosequendum or service of a summons or arrest warrant upon release from custody. Such a writ may not be issued, however, until the state proceedings are completed unless it can be shown that the defendant's absence will not unduly impede the state proceeding. The Supreme Court has stated that "in some circumstances considerations of comity and concerns for the orderly administration of justice requires a federal court to forgo the exercise of its habeas corpus power." Francis v. Henderson, 425 U.S. 536, 539 (1976). The best course of action usually is to await the completion of state proceedings before serving a defendant with federal charges.

To avoid inadvertent release of a defendant in state pre-trial custody against whom federal charges are pending, a detainer may be filed with the state custodial authorities. Such a detainer does not come under the Interstate Agreement on Detainers Act. Rather, it is a recognized but informal procedure, not founded on a specific statute, by which federal authorities request to be notified by state authorities before a defendant is released. See Ridgeway v. United States, 558 F.2d 357, 360 (6th Cir. 1977). State authorities generally honor these detainers.

Where federal charges have been served (through arrest, summons, or arraignment) on a defendant who is in state custody at the time of such service or who is placed in state custody subsequent to such service, the Speedy Trial Act clock will be running. In such cases, an exclusion for the period of state custody should be sought under either Speedy Trial Act 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(1)(d) (delay resulting from trial on other charges) or 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(3) (defendant unavailable). See United States v. Garrett, 720 F.2d 705, 707-708 (D.C. Cir. 1983). The trial on other charges provision has been interpreted to cover the entire pre-trial and trial period in another jurisdiction. See United States v. Lopez-Espindola, 632 F.2d 107 (9th Cir. 1980); United States v. Goodwin, 612 F.2d 1103 (8th Cir. 1980); and United States v. Allsup, 587 F.2d 31 (9th Cir. 1978). The Judicial Conference Guidelines, at 30-31, advise that only days actually on trial should be excluded, but this position has not been adopted in the reported decisions.

Under the unavailability of the defendant provision the government has the burden of proof (see 18 U.S.C. §3162(a)(2)). Consequently, a showing must be made to the court that a duly diligent effort was made to secure the defendant's presence. See Lopez-Espindola, supra, at 920, and United States v. Morales, 460 F. Supp. 668 (E.D.N.Y. 1978). It may be advisable to raise with the court, at the time the defendant becomes unavailable, whether the court would issue a writ of habeas corpus ad prosequendum, even though it would disrupt the state proceeding. Unless the possibility is actively explored with the court, the government may have difficulty establishing that the due diligence requirement has been met.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

If 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(3) or (h)(1)(D) exclusions are not available or not allowed, the federal charges can be dismissed until disposition of the state charges.

B. Defendant located outside of district.

1. Defendant at large. A defendant at large outside of the district may be arrested on a warrant, may be served with a summons, or may be provided notice pursuant to local practice. See USAM 9-17.102 A.1., above, for a description of when the Speedy Trial Act clock begins to run in these circumstances.

2. Defendant in state custody. See USAM 9-17.102 A.2., above, with regard to defendant in state custody within district.

C. Defendant in federal custody. The presence in court of a defendant in a federal prison should be obtained by the use of a writ of habeas corpus ad prosequendum, served by the United States Marshals Service. (See also, USAM 9-17.160, infra.) The presence of a defendant in federal pre-trial custody in another district should be arranged through consultation with the U.S. Attorney for the other district and the United States Marshal.

D. Defendant in foreign country. The presence of a defendant located in a foreign country may be obtained by the invocation of extradition treaties or by other diplomatic means such as expulsion. The implementation of these procedures is the responsibility of the Office of International Affairs of the Criminal Division. Once a defendant is ready to be returned, transportation ordinarily is managed by the United States Marshals Service.

9-17.110 Time Limits

9-17.120 The 30-Day Pre-Indictment Interval

18 U.S.C. §3161(b) provides that if a defendant has been arrested or served with a summons in connection with criminal charges, an indictment or

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

information must be filed within 30 days of the arrest or service of summons. Superseding indictments need not be filed within 30 days of arrest. See United States v. Rabb, 680 F.2d 294, 296-297 (3d Cir. 1982); United States v. Wilks, 629 F.2d 669 (10th Cir. 1980); United States v. Mitchell, 723 F.2d 1040 (1st Cir. 1983).

For purposes of the Speedy Trial Act, an arrest must include the filing of a complaint against the defendant. If an individual is taken into custody, but then released without charging, the 30-day period does not begin to run. See United States v. Peterson, 698 F.2d 921, 923 (8th Cir. 1982). Note, however, that if a complaint is filed the next day, the time limits of the Act begin to run on the day of arrest. The Speedy Trial Act does not cover delay that occurs prior to indictment in a non-arrest case. Any defense based on pre-indictment delay in a non-arrest situation still must be based on the Fifth Amendment. See United States v. Lovasco, 431 U.S. 783 (1977); United States v. Marion, 404 U.S. 307 (1977).

The Speedy Trial Act does not apply to the period between the dismissal of a complaint (provided the 30-day first interval has not been exceeded) and the subsequent return of an indictment against the same individual for the same offense. See United States v. Krynicki, 689 F.2d 289 (1st Cir. 1982); United States v. Alfano, 706 F.2d 739, 741 (6th Cir. 1983). However, in some districts judges have expressed disapproval of the use of dismissal and subsequent indictment as a means of avoiding the 30 day first interval time limit. The practice is seen as not being consistent with the spirit of the Speedy Trial Act. It is Departmental policy to comply with the intentions of the Speedy Trial Act as fully as possible. For this reason, and to avoid possible conflict with judges, it is advisable to invoke exclusions when possible where additional time is needed during the first interval. See United States v. Mitchell, supra; United States v. Garrett, 720 F.2d 705, 707-711 (D.C. Cir. 1983). The dismissal-indictment procedure should be employed only where other recourse is not reasonably available.

The excludable time provisions apply to the arrest to indictment interval. See 18 U.S.C. §3161(h). It is important to note that under the "ends of justice" provision 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(8)(B)(iii), excludable time can extend the 30-day limit if, because of the timing of arrest or because the facts of the case are unusual or complex, it is unreasonable to expect the grand jury to return an indictment within 30 days. See S. Rep. No. 212, 96th Cong., 1st Sess. 23 (1979); see USAM 9-17.159, infra; United States v. McGrath, 613 F.2d 361 (2d Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 446 U.S. 967 (1980) (voluminous documents; complex factual determinations). An 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(8) continuance may be appropriate where an arrested defendant cooperates, where investigative or laboratory reports cannot be completed, or where the full scope of the criminal scheme cannot be determined within 30 days. See United States v. Hope, 714 F.2d 1084 (11th Cir. 1983).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

Moreover, although the 30-day interval will begin to run where the defendant is arrested outside the district where charges are pending, the time until the defendant's arrival in the district of prosecution will generally be excludable under 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(G) and (H). See discussion at USAM 9-17.147, and USAM 9-17.148, infra.

9-17.121 Arrest

An arrest by state authorities for proceedings in connection with state charges generally does not constitute an arrest under the Speedy Trial Act. See United States v. Janik, 723 F.2d 537, 542 (7th Cir. 1983); United States v. Manuel, 706 F.2d 908, 914-915 (9th Cir. 1983); United States v. Iaquinta, 674 F.2d 260 (4th Cir. 1982); United States v. Leonard, 639 F.2d 101 (2d Cir. 1981); United States v. Tanu, 589 F.2d 82, 88 (2d Cir. 1979); United States v. Phillips, 569 F.2d 1315 (5th Cir. 1978). An "arrest," however, may be deemed to have taken place when the state arrest was made at the request of federal authorities, and will be deemed to have taken place when a defendant has been transferred from state to federal custody. See Judicial Conference Guidelines, at 3-4; United States v. Shahryar, 719 F.2d 1522 (11th Cir. 1983). But to reiterate, the dismissal sanction for a violation of the 30-day arrest to indictment period does not apply unless the defendant is formally charged in a federal complaint. See 18 U.S.C. §3162(a).

Not all federal arrests will constitute an "arrest" for Speedy Trial Act purposes. If a defendant is arrested for an offense that is not similar to the offense for which he/she is later indicted, then he/she is not deemed to have been under arrest for purposes of indicting within 30 days. See United States v. Lyon, 567 F.2d 777, 781 n.3 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 436 U.S. 918 (1978) (defendant was indicted for bail jumping more than 30 days after his arrest on a bombing charge. The court refused to dismiss the indictment because the two offenses were different). See also, United States v. Antonio, 705 F.2d 1483, 1485 (9th Cir. 1983); United States v. Krynicki, supra; United States v. Brooks, 670 F.2d 148, 151 (10th Cir. 1982); United States v. DeTienne, 468 F.2d 151, 155 (7th Cir. 1972).

Whether a change in the conditions of incarceration of a prisoner as a result of his/her being accused of an in-prison offense will be considered an arrest for purposes of the Act is uncertain. See United States v. Brooks, supra, at 150-151. Compare United States v. Gouveia, 704 F.2d 1116 (9th Cir. 1983) (en banc), cert. granted, (October 17, 1983) (No. 83-128).

9-17.122 Summons

In cases initiated by the service of summons, the 30-day limitation for indictment begins to run on the date of the service of the summons. Thus, the days between the date of service and the initial court appearance count against the 30-day interval. In order to reduce the number of such days that elapse, the United States Marshal should be requested to serve the summons as close as possible to the court date stated on the face of the summons.

9-17.123 Unavailability of Grand Jury

If no grand jury has been in session during the 30-day period succeeding arrest or service of summons upon a felony charge, the time for filing an indictment is extended for another 30 days. It is not clear whether the belated indictment may include or charge only a misdemeanor. Neither is it clear that a delayed indictment may be returned for a felony when the original charge in the complaint was a misdemeanor. It seems fairly clear, however, that where the original charge was for a misdemeanor, 18 U.S.C. §3161(b) does not permit the filing of a belated indictment or information charging a misdemeanor. Plea agreements resulting in such a disposition should be entered into with caution.

9-17.130 The 70-Day Post-Indictment Interval

The 70-day interval between indictment and trial of 18 U.S.C. §3161(c)(1) begins with the filing and publication of the indictment or information, or the defendant's first appearance before a judicial officer in the court where the charge is pending, whichever is later. See United States v. Stafford, 697 F.2d 1368, 1370 (11th Cir. 1983). See also, Judicial Conference Guidelines, at 7-8. Where the defendant has appeared before the court pursuant to an arrest or summons prior to indictment, the 70-day interval should be computed from the date of filing of the indictment or information. If an indictment or information is sealed after filing, the time begins to run from its publication, i.e., its unsealing. See United States v. Villa, 470 F. Supp. 315, 325 (S.D. N.Y. 1979). A superseding indictment that amends the original indictment without adding new charges or defendants does not start the 70-day period anew. See United States v. Brim, 630 F.2d 1307, 1311 (8th Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 452 U.S. 966 (1981).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

If the defendant was not arrested prior to indictment, or was arrested in a different district and did not appear in the charging district prior to indictment, the trial interval does not begin to run until the defendant has appeared before a judicial officer in the district where the indictment or information has been filed. See Judicial Conference Guidelines, at 7-8; see also, United States v. Umbower, 602 F.2d 754, 758 (5th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 1021 (1980); United States v. Taylor, 569 F.2d 448 (7th Cir. 1978), cert. denied, 435 U.S. 952 (1978).

9-17.131 The 30-Day Minimum Preparation Time

Unless the defendant signs a written consent, the trial may not start for at least 30 days after the defendant first appears with counsel or waives the right to counsel and elects to proceed pro se. See 18 U.S.C. §3161(c)(2). See United States v. Mers, 701 F.2d 1321, 1332-1335 (11th Cir. 1983). Any pre-trial defense preparation period shorter than 30 days has been found to be inadequate per se. See United States v. Daly, 716 F.2d 1499, 1506 (9th Cir. 1983).

18 U.S.C. §3161(c)(2) was added by the 1979 amendments, and there are a number of uncertain areas concerning its application. For example, some courts hold that a defendant is not automatically entitled to a new 30-day preparation period when a superseding indictment is returned charging the same offenses. Instead, if additional preparation time is needed defense counsel can request a discretionary ends of justice continuance under 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(8)(b). See United States v. Horton, 676 F.2d 1165 (7th Cir. 1983). The Ninth Circuit has concluded, however, that when a defendant is reindicted after a dismissal on the government's motion, 18 U.S.C. §3161(c)(2) guarantees the defendant an additional 30-day preparation time on the new indictment. See United States v. Arkus, 675 F.2d 245 (9th Cir. 1982); United States v. Harris, 724 F.2d 1452 (9th Cir. 1984), petition for reh'g pending, No. 83-5051. The Solicitor General has taken the position that Arkus and Harris were incorrectly decided. The Solicitor General notes that the courts of appeals have agreed that reindictment after a voluntary dismissal does not trigger a new 70-day indictment to trial period (see, e.g., United States v. Dennis, 625 F.2d 782, 783 (8th Cir. 1980)), and that if the 30-day minimum defense preparation period and the 70-day maximum period are not simultaneous, the 70-day period might expire before a defendant could be brought to trial. See Solicitor General's Brief in United States v. Horton, supra (No. 82-681 OT 1982). This problem, however, could be resolved in a particular case if the trial court grants an ends of justice continuance under 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(8).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

In computing the minimum trial preparation time period, the exclusions provided for under 18 U.S.C. §3161(h) have been found to be inapplicable despite conflicting language in the Senate Report to the 1979 amendments. See United States v. Wooten, 688 F.2d 941, 949-951 (4th Cir. 1982). See also, Judicial Conference Guidelines, at 12-13. It is also stated in the Judicial Conference Guidelines, at 10-11, that when a defendant has appeared with counsel prior to indictment, the 30-day period commences upon the filing of the indictment, rather than the date of the pre-indictment appearance.

9-17.132 Commencement of Trial

For purposes of meeting the 70-day limitation, both the Judicial Conference and Second Circuit Guidelines provide that a jury trial begins when voir dire begins, and that a bench trial begins the day the case is called, provided that some step in the trial procedure immediately follows. See United States v. Whitaker, 722 F.2d 1533, 1535 (11th Cir. 1984); United States v. Howell, 719 F.2d 1258, 1262 (5th Cir. 1983). Judicial Conference Guidelines, at 9; Second Circuit Guidelines, section I E. This reflects the time when a trial is generally deemed to begin, apart from the separate question of when jeopardy attaches. A short delay after the voir dire and the swearing of the jury also does not violate the Speed Trial Act. See United States v. Manfredi, 722 F.2d 519, 524 (9th Cir. 1983); United States v. Howell, supra, at 1262. In cases where juries have been selected in advance of trial, the Second Circuit Guidelines, however, do not deem a trial to have commenced until opening statement or the taking of testimony.

9-17.133 Magistrates' Proceedings

Where a defendant consents in writing to trial before a magistrate upon a complaint (28 U.S.C. §636(a)(3); 18 U.S.C. §3401), trial must commence within 70 days of such consent. See 18 U.S.C. §3161(c)(1). Where a defendant consents to trial before a magistrate upon a previously filed indictment or information, the filing date or date of first appearance rather than the date of consent would appear to control. See Judicial Conference Guidelines, at 8.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-17.134 Reinstitution of Prosecution

As noted, 18 U.S.C. §3161(d)(1) specifically provides that after the dismissal of an indictment or information on defendant's motion or the dismissal of a complaint on the motion of any party, any subsequent charge for "the same offense or an offense based on the same conduct or arising from the same criminal episode" shall be subject to new 30 or 70-day time periods and a new 30-day minimum under 18 U.S.C. §3161(c)(2). See United States v. Dennis, supra.

9-17.135 Superseding Indictment

As we read 18 U.S.C. §3161(d), in conjunction with 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(6), it provides a different rule when an indictment or information is dismissed on a motion by the government. In this situation, new time limits do not begin to run when a superseding indictment is filed; the time between dismissal of the old indictment and filing of the new one is simply excluded. See the discussion in USAM 9-17.131, infra, about minimum preparation time and USAM 9-17.156, infra, about excludable time resulting from dismissal and recharging. The distinctions are set forth in Frase, The Speedy Trial Act of 1974, 43 U. Chi. L. Rev. 667, 696 (1976), wherein Professor Frase states:

Section 3161(d) provides that the time limits for indictment,... and trial begin to run anew when the original charge is dismissed upon motion of the defendant, or if the original charge was a complaint and it is dismissed by either party or on the court's own motion.

If, however, an information or indictment is dismissed upon motion of the Government, the time limits applicable to any refiled charges apparently do not begin to run anew. Section 3161(h)(6) permits an exclusion under the following circumstances:

If the information or indictment is dismissed upon motion of the attorney for the Government and thereafter a charge is filed against the defendant for the same offense, or any offense required to be joined with that offense, any period of delay from the date that the charge was dismissed to the date the time limitation would commence to run as to the subsequent charge had there been no previous charge [is excludable].

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

If the period between the dismissal of the first charge and the filing of the second is excludable, this implies that the "clock" is still running.

Since the filing of superseding charges is entirely within the control of the Government, such a rule makes sense: the Government should not be permitted to obtain additional time simply by filing slightly different charges against the same defendant for the same criminal episode. Yet section 3161(d) clearly permits the Government to do just that with respect to charges in a complaint. [Footnote omitted.]

Id. at 696.

Accord United States v. Hillegas, 578 F.2d 453 (2d Cir. 1978), in which the court states:

Taken together, §§3161(d) and (h)(6) make it clear that Congress' purpose was to disregard the period after dismissal of a complaint and prior to the filing of an indictment for the same offense. Although §3161(h)(6), read literally, suspends the running of the Act's time limits upon the Government's dismissal of an indictment, as distinguished from a complaint, it follows a fortiori that upon a voluntary dismissal of a complaint the period thereafter up to the filing of an indictment should be excluded, if not disregarded entirely pursuant to §3161(d). [Footnote omitted.]

Id. at 459. See also United States v. MacDonald, 456 U.S. 1, 7 n.7 (1982).

In summary, if the court on its own or the defendant's motion dismisses an indictment, information or complaint, the clock starts over; if the government obtains the dismissal of the complaint, the clock starts over; if the government moves to dismiss the indictment or information, then the clock does not start over, and when a new indictment or information is filed the number of days used up before dismissal will be considered already elapsed under the new indictment or information. See discussion at USAM 9-17.131, supra, and USAM 9-17.156, infra.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-17.136 Indictments Reinstated on Appeal

18 U.S.C. §3161(d)(2) provides that when an indictment or information dismissed by the trial court is reinstated on appeal, the trial must start within 70 days of the date "the action occasioning the reinstatement becomes final." If trial within 70 days is impractical, the court has discretion to enlarge the period up to 180 days. The date when the reinstatement becomes final should normally be the date the mandate of the court of appeals is filed with the district court. See United States v. Gilliss, 645 F.2d 1269, 1276 (8th Cir. 1981); Judicial Conference Guidelines, at 16; Second Circuit Guidelines, section I, F(3)(b). The courts of appeals, however, have interpreted the quoted phrases differently, making the starting date run from the date the mandate issues to the date that the district court enforces the mandate by vacating the sentence imposed. See United States v. Ross, 654 F.2d 612, 616 (9th Cir. 1981); United States v. Carreon, 626 F.2d 528, 532 n.7 (7th Cir. 1980). See also, United States v. Mack, 669 F.2d 28, 33 (1st Cir. 1982). In addition, the filing of a certiorari petition by the government has been held to stop the retrial clock even though the mandate has issued. See United States v. Dunn, 706 F.2d 153 (5th Cir. 1983). See also, United States v. Villamonte-Marquez, U.S. ___, 103 S.Ct. 2573, 2584 n.4 (1983) (Brennan, J. dissenting).

The excludable time periods of 18 U.S.C. §3161(h) apply to calculating the 70-day (or longer) period. The dismissal provisions of 18 U.S.C. §3162 also apply. See 18 U.S.C. §3161(d)(2); H.R. Rep. No. 390, 96th Cong., 1st Sess. 11 (1979); S. Rep. No. 212, 96th Cong., 1st Sess. 33 (1979).

9-17.137 Retrials

Pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §3161(e) the government has 70 days to retry a case after a trial judge declares a mistrial or enters an order granting a new trial. A 70-day retrial period will also apply following a defendant's successful appeal or collateral attack. See United States v. Gilliss, supra, at 1275-76. The 70-day period begins to run on "the date the action occasioning the retrial becomes final." The meaning of this phrase is uncertain. The Judicial Conference Guidelines, at 17-18, provide that the period begins to run when a mistrial is declared or when an order granting a new trial is entered, and not when the time for filing any appeal has expired. Cf., Second Circuit Guidelines, section I, F. Where retrial follows appeal or collateral attack, the court retrying the case has the discretion to extend the 70-day period up to 180 days if witnesses are unavailable or if "other factors resulting from the passage of time" make retrial within 70 days impractical.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The excludable time provisions of 18 U.S.C. §3161(h) and the sanctions of 18 U.S.C. §3162 apply to retrials. The filing of a timely motion for reconsideration of an order granting a new trial tolls the running of the 70-day period. See United States v. Spiegel, 604 F.2d 961, 971 (5th Cir. 1979).

9-17.140 Excludable Time

18 U.S.C. §3161(h) defines eight periods of time that are excludable when computing elapsed time for the other subsections of 18 U.S.C. §3161. This list is exclusive, according to United States v. Carrasquillo, 667 F.2d 382, 383 (3d Cir. 1981). Paragraphs 1 through 7 of 18 U.S.C. §3161(h) set forth a list of specific events that create excludable time, while paragraph 8 is a catch-all provision providing for the exclusion of delay resulting from a continuance granted by the judge to further the ends of justice. Significant changes in this section were made by the 1979 amendments.

To forestall unnecessary litigation, care should be taken that the record accurately reflects the commencement and termination of any excludable period, the reasons therefore, and any required findings.

In a number of districts, a judicial order is required before a clerk may enter an exclusion in the case docket. This practice appears to be desirable whether or not it is required, since it forestalls the possibility that the judge will subsequently disallow an exclusion that a court clerk and/or Assistant U.S. Attorney thought to be allowable. Such a disallowance could cause the allowable time for a case to be exceeded and the case dismissed.

It may be necessary to establish new procedures with local district courts for the first 30-day time interval in order to obtain judicial rulings on exclusions during that period. The Judicial Conference Model Speedy Trial Plan recommends that these rulings be secured through routine filing of motions with the court.

9-17.141 Other Proceedings Concerning the Defendant

The specific exclusions listed in 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(1)(A)-(J) are not exhaustive of the proceedings that may be excluded under 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(1). The section explicitly excludes "any period of delay resulting from other proceedings concerning the defendant, including but not limited to ..." the proceedings listed in paragraphs (A)-(J) of 18

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

U.S.C. §3161(h)(1) (emphasis added). The Judicial Conference Guidelines, at 42-43, provide examples of other proceedings which might be excludable: bail hearings, preliminary examinations, arraignment proceedings, pre-trial conferences, and depositions pursuant to Rule 15, Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. See United States v. Severdija, 723 F.2d 791,793 (11th Cir. 1984) (bail hearing); United States v. Garrett, 720 F.2d 705, 709 (D.C. Cir. 1983) (bond violation and bail hearing). See also, United States v. Lopez-Espindola, 632 F.2d 107, 110 (9th Cir. 1980) (state probation revocation proceedings); United States v. Bryant, 612 F.2d 806 (4th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 446 U.S. 920 (1980) (habeas corpus proceeding).

9-17.142 Competency Examinations

Paragraph (1)(A) of 18 U.S.C. §3161(h) covers proceedings, including examinations, concerning the defendant's mental and physical competency to stand trial (18 U.S.C. §4244), and sanity (Fed. R. Crim. P. 12.2). See United States v. Crosby, 713 F.2d 1066, 1077-1079 (5th Cir. 1983). The exclusion applies only to court-ordered examinations.

This exclusion, like paragraph (1)(B) of 18 U.S.C. §3161(h), was amended in 1979 to cover "proceedings" and not only examinations. The Judicial Conference Guidelines, at 27-28, provide that the exclusion covers the entire period between the date the competency proceeding is initiated (usually by motion) and the date that the court receives all materials expected before reaching a decision, i.e., the date that the examination report has been received, briefs have been filed, and any hearing has been completed. In a Rule 12.2, Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, situation, the exclusion would ordinarily end when the examination report is received by the government attorney. Although time taken by the court for decision could arguably be subsumed under this paragraph, for accurate recording purposes such time should be computed under paragraph (1)(J) of 18 U.S.C. §3161(h), which limits automatically excludable time for periods of advisement to 30 days. 9-17.143 Examinations and Deferred Prosecution Under NARA Paragraphs (1)(B) and (C) of 18 U.S.C. §3161(h) deal with deferral of prosecution under 28 U.S.C. §2902 (Narcotics Addict Rehabilitation Act). Paragraph (C) of 18 U.S.C. §3161(h) is a new addition under the 1979 Amendments. 28 U.S.C. §2902 provides for civil commitment to treat narcotics addicts. The program is a voluntary one to which the defendant must elect to submit.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The starting date for the exclusion under paragraph (1)(B) of 18 U.S.C. §3161(h) is the date the court advises the defendant he/she may elect to submit to examination under 28 U.S.C. §2902. The ending date is the date the defendant elects not to participate, or, if he/she participates, the latest of the dates the court receives an examination report, the last day of any hearing, or the submission of briefs. See Judicial Conference Guidelines, at 28-29. Since the exclusion as amended refers to "proceeding," rather than "examinations," additional excludable time is also available for making post-hearing submissions, and for the time in which the court has the matter under advisement, 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(1)(J). See also, USAM 9-17.148 (Transportation), infra.

Paragraph (1)(C) of 18 U.S.C. §3161(h) appears to overlap the exclusion provided in 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(5). If a commitment for treatment is made it would appear, under 28 U.S.C. §2902(c), that the charges would be dismissed when the court receives notice from the Surgeon General that the defendant has successfully completed the program. If the Surgeon General concludes that the defendant is not being helped by the program, he/she is required to notify the court, and presumably upon this notification the excludable time which began with the commitment order ends, both under paragraph (1)(C) of 18 U.S.C. §3161(h) and 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(5). See USAM 9-17.155, infra.

All examinations under paragraphs (1)(A) and (B) of 18 U.S.C. §3161(h) must be conducted within a reasonable period of time.

9-17.144 Trial of Other Charges

"Other charges" as covered under paragraph (1)(D) of 18 U.S.C. §3161(h) include all pending state, (see United States v. Bryant, 612 F.2d 806 (4th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 446 U.S. 920 (1980); United States v. Braunstein, 474 F. Supp. 1, 10 (D.N.J. 1979)), and federal charges, as well as any counts that were severed from the indictment or information by the trial court. Under the catch-all phrase "other proceedings" in 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(1), this exclusion, according to the Second Circuit Guidelines, section II, C, also covers pre-trial motions and trial preparation for the "other charges." See also, United States v. Lopez-Espindola, supra, at 109 (delay between arrest and trial on state charges was excludable under this section). The Criminal Division agrees with this approach. The Judicial Conference Guidelines, at 30-31, however, allow only an exclusion for actual court days, but note that it might be appropriate to exclude preparation time on other charges under 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(8). Either side should also be entitled under 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(8) to a reasonable delay after conclusion of the earlier trial. See United States v. Braunstein, supra, at 10.

TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-17.145 Interlocutory Appeals

The exclusion in 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(1)(E), covers appeals taken by the United States under 28 U.S.C. §3731 from decisions or orders excluding evidence or requiring the return of seized property (see United States v. Saintil, 705 F.2d 415, 417 (11th Cir. 1983); United States v. McGrath, 613 F.2d 361 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 446 U.S. 967 (1980)), and similar appeals by the government under 18 U.S.C. §2518(10)(b) (wire interception). Also included are interlocutory appeals by either party under 28 U.S.C. §1292. See United States v. Tedesco, 726 F.2d 1216 (7th Cir. 1984). See also, United States v. Albert, 595 F.2d 283, 287 (5th Cir. 1979) (Rule 50(b), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, Plan). Where the appeal is followed by a timely certiorari petition the exclusion further includes the period during which the case is pending in the Supreme Court. See United States v. Villamonte-Marquez, ___ U.S. ___ 103 S.Ct. 2573, 2584 n.4 (1983) (Brennan, J. dissenting). Delay resulting from an application for an extraordinary writ, which is technically not an interlocutory appeal, should be excludable as resulting from "other proceedings under (h)(1), or under the provisions of (h)(8)." See Judicial Conference Guidelines, at 31; Second Circuit Guidelines, at 19.

There is some dispute as to whether appeals from conditions of release under 18 U.S.C. §3147(b) are covered under this paragraph. The Judicial Conference Guidelines, at 31-32, state that such appeals are not covered because they have no bearing on the timing of a trial. The Second Circuit Guidelines are to the contrary. See Second Circuit Guidelines, section II, D.

Excludable time under this section will be measured from the date the notice of appeal is filed in the district court, or the date the application for an extraordinary writ is filed with the court of appeals, to the date the mandate of the court of appeals is filed in the district court. See Judicial Conference Guidelines, at 32. Cf. United States v. Ross, 654 F.2d 612, 616 (9th Cir. 1982); United States v. Gilliss, 645 F.2d 1269, 1276 (8th Cir. 1981). Although the Second Circuit Guidelines (section II, D) state that the ending date is either the date the mandate is filed in the district court, or 21 days following the decision of the appellate court, whichever is later, unless similar local circuit guidelines are adopted, the Criminal Division recommends that any additional time beyond the filing of the mandate be sought under 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(8).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-17.146 Pre-Trial Motions

This exclusion, now covered under 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(1)(F), was expanded in the 1979 amendments. The former section, 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(1)(E), covered only the time during which hearings on pre-trial motions were held. Now the exclusion encompasses the period of time from the date the motions are filed through the conclusion of the hearings or "other prompt disposition" of such motions. The Senate Report states that the term "other prompt disposition" applies to situations where no hearing is held, and is not intended to permit circumvention of the 30-day "under advisement" provision of 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(1)(J). See S. Rep. No. 212, 96th Cong., 1st Sess. 34 (1979). The Judicial Conference Guidelines, at 32-33, state that the starting date for this exclusion is the date that the motion is filed or made orally, and the ending date is the date on which the court has received everything expected from the parties before reaching a decision--the date on which all anticipated briefs have been filed and any necessary hearing has been completed.

Some circuits have expressed concern that large periods may elapse between the filing and hearing date of a motion and have limited the length of the exclusion to the time that is "reasonably necessary" to process the motion. See, e.g., United States v. Mitchell, 723 F.2d 1040, 1047-1048 (1st Cir. 1983); New York v. Novak, 715 F.2d 810, 820 (3d Cir. 1983); United States v. Cobb, 697 F.2d 38, 44 (2d Cir. 1982). Yet other circuits have placed no such limitation on the length of the exclusion. See, e.g., United States v. Campbell, 706 F.2d 1138, 1143 (11th Cir. 1983); United States v. Stafford, 697 F.2d 1368, 1373 (11th Cir. 1983); United States v. Brim, 630 F.2d 1307, 1312 (8th Cir. 1980). Especially where the defendant is responsible for the delay in processing the motion, a lengthy exclusion should be granted. See, e.g., United State v. Turner, 725 F.2d 1154, 1160 (8th Cir. 1984); United States v. Bufalino, 683 F.2d 639, 646 (2d Cir. 1982).

Note that 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(8)(B) has also been expanded to cover preparation of motions in those situations where the motions involve novel questions of law or complex facts. See United States v. Molt, 631 F.2d 258, 262 (3d Cir. 1980) (difficult suppression motion); S. Rep. No. 212, 96th Cong., 1st Sess. 34 (1979). The time for preparation of routine motions is not excludable. See USAM 9-17.159, infra.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

9-17.147 Removal and Transfer Proceedings

The original "proceedings related to transfer from other districts" provision (former section 3161(h)(1)(F)) has been expanded to apply clearly both to "transfer of cases" under Rules 20 and 21, Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, and "removal of defendants" under Rule 40, Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. (Commitment to Another District). See 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(1)(G).

In Rule 20, Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, proceedings, the exclusion will commence with the execution by the defendant of the consent to transfer, and will usually end with the receipt of the papers in the originating district after return by the transferee district following failure of the proceedings through the refusal of the defendant to plead guilty or the refusal of the court to accept the plea. See Judicial Conference Guidelines, at 36-38. However, it should be noted that the Criminal Division does not agree with the position taken by the Judicial Conference Guidelines that the legislative history of the Speedy Trial Act precludes an exclusion where the transfer proceedings abort through the action of government counsel. In this situation, the exclusion would end with the refusal of one of the U.S. Attorneys to consent to the transfer. In the ordinary course of events, the need for an exclusion will not arise where the transfer is effected and a plea of guilty entered. It should be noted that while it is arguable that the transportation of the defendant to the district where the charge is pending after failure of the Rule 20, Federal Rules and Criminal Procedure, proceedings could be subsumed under the heading of a delay attributable to those proceedings, it would seem more appropriate to attribute it to the Rule 40, Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, removal proceedings, which is also recognized by paragraph (1)(G) of 18 U.S.C. §3161(h). See United States v. Hendricks, 661 F.2d 38, 42 n. 6 (5th Cir. 1981). Care should be taken that a double exclusion is not recorded. See, e.g., United States v. Pollock, 726 F.2d 1456 (9th Cir. 1984).

In Rule 21, Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, proceedings, the Judicial Conference Guidelines, at 38-39, state that 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(1)(G) excludes the time between the date a motion for change of venue is made and the date the court has received everything expected from the parties before making a decision; if the motion is granted, the time between the grant of the motion and the date the transferee district receives the case papers would also be excluded. See United States v. Wilson, 720 F.2d 608, 609-610 (9th Cir. 1983). The Division believes that it would be appropriate to calculate the excludable time for change of venue motions under 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(1)(F) and (J), and to begin the 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(1)(G) exclusion only when the motion is granted, to exclude the time needed for transfer of the proceedings. But see, United States v. Atkins, 698 F.2d 711, 714 (5th Cir. 1983). More importantly, the Division believes that the time excludable under the Judicial Conference Guidelines when a change of venue motion is granted is too limited. It would seem appropriate to treat the time until the defendant's appearance in the court to which the case has been transferred as attributable to the transfer proceedings and excludable under 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(1)(G). Alternatively, the court could be asked to exclude a specific period of time reasonably necessary under the circumstances of the transfer. See Second Circuit Guidelines, section II, F(6).

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS' MANUAL
TITLE 9--CRIMINAL DIVISION

The exclusion for proceedings under Rule 40, Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, should ordinarily commence with the arrest of the defendant in the district other than that in which the offense is alleged to have been committed, and extend through his/her appearance before a judicial officer of the charging district.

9-17.148 Transportation of Defendant

18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(1)(H) provides an exclusion for transportation of a defendant from another district or to or from hospitals or places of examination. In many instances, such transportation of the defendant will, be subsumed under another exclusion, such as 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(1)(A), (B) or (G); in such instances, a separate exclusion under 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(1)(H) should not be recorded, to avoid double counting.

Under 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(1)(H) any period greater than 10 days between the date the order is entered directing removal or transportation and the arrival at the destination is presumed to be "unreasonable." The Judicial Conference Guidelines, at 39, state that this is a rebuttable presumption. Even assuming it were rebuttable, relief might nevertheless be available under 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(8). Once treatment or examination is completed, the 10-day limitation would appear to apply to the return of the defendant as well.

Where transportation is being recorded as a separate exclusion pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(1)(H), the Judicial Conference Guidelines state that the clerk should not record time in excess of 10 days absent a court order. Where the clerk is recording another exclusion which encompasses transportation, more than 10 days transportation time may be recorded as excludable. See Judicial Conference Guidelines, at 39-40. This does not mean that time consumed in transportation in such cases can simply be ignored, however, or that effort should not be made to transport the defendant as quickly as possible. The U.S. Attorney should brief the United States Marshal on the time constraints imposed by the Speedy Trial Act. The attorney in charge of the case should monitor the defendant's whereabouts and the stage of any examination or hearing and make an
