

Exemption 3

Exemption 3 of the Freedom of Information Act incorporates into the FOIA certain nondisclosure provisions that are contained in other federal statutes. Prior to the enactment of the OPEN FOIA Act of 2009,¹ Exemption 3 allowed the withholding of information prohibited from disclosure by another federal statute provided that one of two disjunctive requirements were met: the statute either "(A) requires that the matters be withheld from the public in such a manner as to leave no discretion on the issue, or (B) establishes particular criteria for withholding or refers to particular types of matters to be withheld."² Courts held that a statute fell within the exemption's coverage if it satisfied either of its disjunctive requirements,³ although courts did not always specify under which subpart of Exemption 3 a statute qualified.⁴ The OPEN FOIA Act of 2009

renumbered what used to be referred to as subparts (A) and (B) of Exemption 3,⁵ to subpart (A)(i) and (A)(ii),⁶ respectively, but did not change the substance of those requirements.⁷ The OPEN FOIA Act of 2009 then established an additional requirement that any statute "enacted after the date of enactment of the OPEN FOIA Act of 2009, [must] specifically cite[] to this paragraph" in order to qualify under Exemption 3.⁸ Thus, the text of Exemption 3 now reads as follows:

(b) This section does not apply to matters that are— . . . (3) specifically exempted from disclosure by statute . . . , if that statute— (A)(i) requires that the matters be withheld from the public in such a manner as to leave no discretion on the issue; or (ii) establishes particular criteria for withholding or refers to particular types of matters to be withheld; and (B) if enacted after the date of enactment of the OPEN FOIA Act of 2009, specifically cites to this paragraph.⁹

Agencies are required each year to list all Exemption 3 statutes that they relied upon during the course of the year in their Annual FOIA Reports.¹⁰ Additionally, the FOIA requires agencies to include in their Annual FOIA Reports "the number of occasions on which each statute was relied upon, a description of whether a court has upheld the decision of the agency to withhold information under each such statute, and a concise description of the scope of any information withheld."¹¹

The Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit has held that records may be withheld under the authority of another statute pursuant to Exemption 3 "if – and only if – that statute meets the requirements of Exemption 3, including the threshold requirement that it specifically exempt matters from disclosure."¹² In Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press v. DOJ,¹³ the D.C. Circuit emphasized that:

[A] statute that is claimed to qualify as an Exemption 3 withholding statute must, on its face, exempt matters from disclosure. [The court] must find a congressional purpose to exempt matters from disclosure in the actual words of the statute (or at least in the legislative history of FOIA) – not in the legislative history of the claimed withholding statute, nor in an agency's interpretation of the statute.¹⁴

In Reporters Committee, the D.C. Circuit noted that the breadth and reach of the disclosure prohibition need not be found on the face of the statute,¹⁵ but that the statute must at least "explicitly deal with public disclosure."¹⁶ For example, in 2002, the D.C. Circuit held that the Endangered Species Act of 1973¹⁷ fails to "qualify as a withholding statute under Exemption 3" because "nothing in [the statute's] language refers to nondisclosure of information."¹⁸ At times, however, the D.C. Circuit, as well as other courts, have not strictly adhered to this requirement that the "congressional purpose to exempt matters from disclosure" be found "in the actual words of the statute,"¹⁹ and have looked to the legislative history of the claimed withholding statute in determining whether that statute qualified under Exemption 3.²⁰

The D.C. Circuit looked beyond statutory text and considered congressional intent when determining whether a statute that qualified under Exemption 3 at one time should continue to be recognized as an Exemption 3 statute after that statute has lapsed.²¹ In that situation, the D.C. Circuit has stated that, although "FOIA undoubtedly demands a liberal presumption of disclosure, . . . [an] unduly strict reading of Exemption 3 strangles Congress's intent."²²

Courts have looked to legislative history for guidance in how to interpret statutory terms or phrases subject to multiple interpretations.²³ Additionally, courts sometimes consider the legislative history of a newly enacted Exemption 3 statute in determining whether the statute is applicable to FOIA requests already pending, or litigation already commenced, at the time the statute was enacted,²⁴ and have found Exemption 3 statutes to apply retroactively to the requested records.²⁵

FTC,³⁷ "the Supreme Court has never applied a rule of [either] narrow or deferential construction to withholding statutes."³⁸ Consequently, the Second Circuit declined "to choose sides in the conflict between [its] sister circuits," and instead opted to "follow the approach taken by the Supreme Court in construing withholding statutes, looking to the plain language of the statute and its legislative history, in order to determine legislative purpose."³⁹

Judicial review under the FOIA of agency assertions of Exemption 3 is generally limited to determinations of whether the withholding statute qualifies as an Exemption 3 statute and whether the records fall within the statute's scope.⁴⁰ With respect to subpart (A)(ii) statutes – which permit agencies some discretion to withhold or disclose records – the agency's exercise of its discretion under the withholding statute has been found to be governed not by the FOIA, but by the withholding statute itself.⁴¹

Agencies and courts ordinarily specify the nondisclosure statutes upon which Exemption 3 withholdings are based, but the District Court for the District of Columbia has on occasion concealed the nondisclosure statute that formed the basis for its ruling that the agency properly invoked Exemption 3, and in one case stated that "national security would be compromised and threats to the safety of individuals would arise" if the court engaged in a specific discussion of the legal basis for Exemption 3's use in that exceptional case.⁴²

qualifies, instead simply determining whether a statute qualifies, or does not qualify, as an Exemption 3 statute generally.⁴⁶

For example, one district court has held that section 7332 of the Veterans Health Administration Patient Rights Statute,⁴⁷ which generally prohibits disclosure of even the abstract fact that medical records on named individuals are maintained pursuant to that section, but which also provides specific criteria under which particular medical information may be released, satisfies the requirements of Exemption 3, but the court did not specify whether the statute qualifies under subpart (A)(i) or subpart (A)(ii) of Exemption 3.⁴⁸ Similarly, one district court found that records created by the VA as part of a medical quality-assurance program⁴⁹ qualify for Exemption 3 protection, without specifying whether the Exemption 3 protection was pursuant to subpart (A)(i) or (A)(ii).⁵⁰ Likewise, "[m]edical quality assurance records created by or for the Department of Defense"⁵¹ have also been found to qualify under Exemption 3 generally.⁵²

In 2008, one district court held that 18 U.S.C. § 701,⁸⁴ which criminalizes unauthorized reproduction of official badges, identification cards, and other insignia, is an Exemption 3 statute without identifying the subpart under which the statute qualifies.⁸⁵

Similarly, in 2009, one district court held that 42 U.S.C. § 14132(b)(3),⁸⁶ a statutory provision that prohibits disclosure of National DNA Index System records except under four circumstances, qualifies as an Exemption 3 statute without specifying the subpart under which the provision qualifies.⁸⁷ In another case, the same district court determined that section 306(i) of the Convention on Cultural Property Implementation Act,⁸⁸ which pertains to certain records submitted to the advisory committee or to the United States and certain other individuals, also qualifies under

Exemption 3 without clearly identifying the subpart or subparts under which the section qualifies.⁸⁹

In 2011, one district court found that 42 U.S.C. § 300aa-12(d)(4)(A),⁹⁰ a provision of the National Childhood Vaccine Injury Act of 1986 prohibiting the disclosure of information provided to a special master of the court in a proceeding on a petition without written consent of the person who submitted the information, qualified as an Exemption 3 statute.⁹¹ The court did not specify whether it considered 42 U.S.C. § 300aa-12(d)(4)(A) to qualify under subpart (A)(i) of Exemption 3, based on the provision's prohibition on disclosure of the information, or subpart (A)(ii) of Exemption 3, based on the criteria for withholding, specifically, failure to provide written consent of the individual who submitted the information.⁹²

In 2012, one district court held that 7 U.S.C. § 2018(c),⁹³ which calls for regulations to limit the disclosure of certain information provided by certain applicants to the Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program and provides that "[a]ny person who publishes, divulges, discloses, or makes known in any manner or to any extent not authorized by Federal law . . . any information obtained under this subsection shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both,"⁹⁴ qualifies "as a withholding statute under [E]xemption 3" without identifying the Exemption 3 subpart under which the statute qualifies.⁹⁵

Subpart (A)(i): Statutes Requiring Withholding

Many statutes have been held to qualify as Exemption 3 statutes under the exemption's first subpart, (A)(i), which "requires that the matters be withheld from the public in such a manner as to leave no discretion on the issue."⁹⁶ A primary example is

Rule 6(e) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, which regulates disclosure of matters occurring before a grand jury.⁹⁷ Courts have found that this rule satisfies the basic "statute" requirement of Exemption 3 because Rule 6(e) was amended by Congress in 1977.⁹⁸ It is well established that "Rule 6(e) embodies a broad sweeping policy of preserving the secrecy of grand jury material regardless of the substance in which such material is contained."⁹⁹

Defining the parameters of Rule 6(e) protection, however, is not always a simple task and has been the subject of much litigation. In Fund for Constitutional

Supp. 2d at 776 (declaring that "[Rule 6(e)] is not discretionary"; rather, Rule 6(e) "covers not just grand jury transcripts, but all matters that could tend to reveal what occurred or was occurring in the grand jury, including identities of witnesses, questions asked by prosecutors or grand jurors, testimony of witnesses, or anything that could reveal the course of the investigation"); Tel. U.S. Dep't of Treasury, 10 F. Supp. 2d 3, 27-28 (D.D.C. 1998) (permitting agency to withhold transcripts of conversations that were taped during course of FBI investigation and were subsequently subpoenaed by grand jury); McQueen v. Government v. NARA,¹⁰⁰ the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit stated that the scope of the secrecy that must be afforded grand jury material "is necessarily broad" and that, consequently, "it encompasses not only the direct revelation of grand jury transcripts but also the disclosure of information which would reveal 'the identities of witnesses or jurors, the substance of the testimony, the strategy or direction of the investigation, the deliberations or questions of the jurors, and the like.'"¹⁰¹ Subsequent to the Fund for Constitutional Government decision, many courts have adopted approaches similar to that of the D.C. Circuit, and have protected an array of information pertaining to grand jury proceedings pursuant to Exemption 3.¹⁰²

In its scrutiny of the scope of Rule 6(e) in Senate of Puerto Rico v. DOJ,¹⁰³ however, the D.C. Circuit held that neither the fact that information was obtained pursuant to a grand jury subpoena, nor the fact that the information was submitted to the grand jury, is sufficient, in and of itself, to warrant the conclusion that disclosure is necessarily prohibited by Rule 6(e).¹⁰⁴ Rather, an agency must establish a nexus between the release of that information and "revelation of a protected aspect of the

Traditionally, most Exemption 3 cases have involved what is now termed subpart (A)(ii), which provides for the withholding of information prohibited from disclosure by another federal statute if that "statute . . . establishes particular criteria for withholding or refers to particular types of matters to be withheld."¹⁴⁸ In other words, where "[sub]art A[(i)] [of Exemption 3] embraces only those statutes leaving no room for administrative discretion to disclose,"¹⁴⁹ federal statutes allowing for administrative discretion may qualify under subpart (A)(ii) of Exemption 3, provided that the statute "either limit[s] discretion to a particular item or to a particular class of items that Congress has deemed appropriate for exemption, or . . . limit[s] it by prescribing guidelines for its exercise."¹⁵⁰

For example, a provision of the Consumer Product Safety Act¹⁵¹ has been held to set forth sufficiently definite withholding criteria for it to fall within the scope of what is now subpart (A)(ii) of Exemption 3.¹⁵² Likewise, the provision which prohibits the Consumer Product Safety Commission from disclosing any information that is submitted to it pursuant to section 15(b) of the Act¹⁵³ has been held to meet the requirements of subpart (A)(ii) by referring to particular types of matters to be withheld.¹⁵⁴

Section 777 of the Tariff Act of 1930, which governs the withholding of certain "proprietary information,"¹⁵⁵ has been held to refer to particular types of information to be withheld and thus to be a subpart (A)(ii) statute.¹⁵⁶ Section 12(d) of the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act¹⁵⁷ refers to particular types of matters to be withheld – specifically, information which would reveal employees' identities -- and thus has been

Section 12(c)(1) of the Export Administration Act of 1979,¹⁶⁴ governing the disclosure of information from export licenses and applications, authorized the withholding of a sufficiently narrow class of information to satisfy the requirements of subpart (A)(ii) and thus qualifies as an Exemption 3 statute.¹⁶⁵ Similarly, the D.C. Chong v. DEA,¹⁷⁷ the D.C. Circuit, finding that the statute "clearly identifies intercepted communications as the subject of its disclosure limitations," held that "Title III falls squarely within the scope of subsection (B)'s second prong, as a statute referring to 'particular matters to be withheld.'"¹⁷⁸ Following the D.C. Circuit's Lam Lek Chong decision, a number of courts have recognized Title III as an Exemption 3 statute.¹⁷⁹

The Supreme Court has held that section 102(d)(3) of the National Security Act of 1947,¹⁸⁰ which required the Director of the CIA to protect "sources and methods,"¹⁸¹

Reno, 193 F.3d 550, 553-54 (D.C. Cir. 1999) (noting that "wiretapped recordings obtained pursuant to Title III . . . are ordinarily exempt from disclosure under Exemption 3" with no mention made of Exemption 3 subpart under which statute qualified, but ultimately holding that Exemption 3 protection was waived when FOIA requester identified specific tapes that had been played in open court by prosecution as evidence during criminal trial); Willis v. The Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit has held that a portion of the Patent Act²⁰⁵ satisfies subpart (A)(ii) because it identifies the types of matters -- specifically, patent applications and information concerning them -- intended to be withheld.²⁰⁶ Likewise, the Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit has suggested that the Juvenile Delinquency Records Statute,²⁰⁷ which generally prohibits disclosure of the existence of records compiled pursuant to that section, but which does provide specific criteria for releasing the information, qualifies as a subpart (A)(ii) statute.²⁰⁸

Statutes Both Requiring Withholding and Establishing Criteria or

Some statutes have been found to satisfy both Exemption 3 subparts by "requir[ing] that the matters be withheld from the public in such a manner as to leave no discretion on the issue" and "establish[ing] particular criteria for withholding or refer[ring] to particular types of matters to be withheld."²³⁴ For example, the Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit and other district courts have held that section 222(f) of the Immigration and Nationality Act²³⁵ sufficiently limits the category of information it covers -- records pertaining to the issuance or refusal of visas and permits to enter the United States -- to qualify as an Exemption 3 statute under subpart (A)(ii),²³⁶ and other district courts have held that section 222(f) qualifies under subpart (A)(i),²³⁷ while the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit and the District Court for the District of Columbia have held that the section satisfies both Exemption 3 subparts.²³⁸ In addition, many courts, including some in the aforementioned circuits, have acknowledged that section 222(f) qualifies as an Exemption 3 statute while declining to identify the statute as qualifying under subpart (A)(i) or subpart (A)(ii) of Exemption 3.²³⁹ In some instances, this statute has been recognized as an Exemption 3 statute, but the particular records at issue were found not to fall within its scope.²⁴⁰

Similarly, the Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit has held that section 301(j) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act²⁴¹ qualifies under both subparts of Exemption 3.²⁴² First, the Tenth Circuit held that section 301(j) qualified under subpart (A)(i) in that its "prohibition against disclosure is absolute and applies to any information within its scope."²⁴³ In addition, the Tenth Circuit determined that section 301(j) met the requirements of subpart (A)(ii) because it "is specific as to the particular matters to be withheld."²⁴⁴ By contrast, the D.C. Circuit found that another portion of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act²⁴⁵ does not qualify under either subpart of Exemption 3 because it does not specifically prohibit the disclosure of records.²⁴⁶

Likewise, many courts have found that section 6 of the CIA Act of 1949, which protects from disclosure intelligence sources and methods and "the organization, that section 6 meets the requirements of subsection (A)(i).²⁴⁹ In some instances this statute has also been found to provide a basis for an agency refusing to confirm or deny the existence of records.²⁵⁰

Tax Return Information

The United States Supreme Court and most appellate courts that have considered the matter have held either explicitly or implicitly that section 6103 of the Internal Revenue Code,²⁵¹ which affords confidentiality to tax returns and tax return information,²⁵² satisfies what is now known as subpart (A)(ii) of Exemption 3 as it refers to particular matters to be withheld.²⁵³ The Courts of Appeals for the District of CIA, 445 F. Supp. 772, 775 (D. Colo. 1978) (same).

Feb. 22, 2012) (finding that "section 6 of the CIA Act of 1949, which requires the CIA to protect from disclosure 'the organization, functions, names, official titles, salaries, or numbers of personnel employed by the Agency,'" is "properly within the bounds of Exemption 3 because it leaves no discretion on the issue of whether the information should be withheld from the public" (quoting 50 U.S.C. § 403(g))).

Although infrequently addressed in FOIA cases involving section 6103, one district court stressed that "FOIA's segregability rule requires an agency [to] disclose non-exempt portions of a document so long as the information is not 'inextricably intertwined with exempt portions,'"²⁶² and ordered that the agency "disclos[e] employees' names . . . , along with any other information contained in the . . . documents that can be segregated from the taxpayer data."²⁶³ Other courts have found that the FOIA's segregation requirement does not apply to cases involving requests for tax information of third parties, which "are . . . entirely exempt from disclosure."²⁶⁴

As the D.C. Circuit explained in Tax Analysts v. assistance in tax matters."²⁷³ The Ninth Circuit and one district court have held that section 6105 qualifies as an Exemption 3 statute.²⁷⁴

The D.C. Circuit several decades ago rejected the argument that the tax code "displaced" the FOIA, ruling instead that the procedures in section 6103 for members of the public to obtain access to IRS documents do not duplicate, and thus do not displace, those of the FOIA.²⁷⁵

FOIA-Specific Nondisclosure Statutes

With the passage of the Open FOIA Act,²⁷⁶ all statutes enacted after 2009 that are intended by Congress to operate as Exemption 3 statutes must specifically cite to the Exemption.²⁷⁷ Prior to this statutory mandate there were examples of nondisclosure statutes that specifically stated that they prohibited disclosure under the FOIA and, when such statutes were challenged, courts found that they qualified as Exemption 3 statutes.²⁷⁸

Antitrust Civil Process Act states that "[a]ny documentary material, answers to written interrogatories, or transcripts of oral testimony provided pursuant to any demand issued under this chapter shall be exempt from disclosure under section 552 of title 5."²⁸³ One district court has determined that the statute qualifies as a proper withholding statute pursuant to Exemption 3.²⁸⁴ Likewise, 31 U.S.C. § 5319,²⁸⁵ a provision of the Bank Secrecy Act, requires that reports pertaining to monetary instruments transactions be made available to certain agencies and organizations, but provides that "a report [filed under the Act] and records of reports are exempt from disclosure under section 552 of title 5."²⁸⁶ Courts addressing the question of whether 31 U.S.C. § 5319 qualifies under Exemption 3 have concluded that it does.²⁸⁷

Nondisclosure Results Under Appropriations Acts

Congress has at times enacted legislation that achieves an Exemption 3 effect in an indirect fashion -- i.e., by limiting the funds that an agency may expend in responding to a FOIA request. The first such statute enacted was section 630 of the Agricultural, Rural Development, and Related Agencies Development Act, 1989,²⁹⁷ which states that "none of the funds provided in this Act may be expended to release information acquired from any handler under" the Act.²⁹⁸ When section 630 was tested in Cal-Almond, Inc. v. USDA,²⁹⁹ the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit did not decide whether this statute had the effect of triggering Exemption 3, but the Ninth Circuit did observe that "if Congress intended to prohibit the release of the list under FOIA -- as opposed to the expenditure of funds in releasing the list -- it could easily have said so."³⁰⁰

More recently, during the course of litigation in City of Chicago v. U.S. Department of the Treasury,³⁰¹ Congress enacted three appropriations bills that specifically prohibited ATF from using appropriated funds to comply with any FOIA request seeking records relating to the contested firearms sales databases that are maintained by ATF.³⁰² The first of these laws was enacted shortly before the scheduled requirement "any information contained in the determination that would be exempt from disclosure under section 552 of title 5").

oral argument before the Supreme Court, whereupon the Supreme Court vacated the Seventh Circuit disclosure order that was on appeal and remanded the case for the lower court to consider the effect of this newly enacted provision.³⁰³ By the time the case reached the circuit court for consideration on remand, Congress had enacted the Consolidated Appropriations Act, 2004, that likewise prohibited ATF's use of appropriated funds to disclose the same type of firearms database information,³⁰⁴ and as a result, both appropriations laws were taken into consideration by the Seventh Circuit.³⁰⁵

On remand, the appeals court determined that although both appropriations bills prohibited ATF from expending federal funds on retrieval of the information, there was no "irreconcilable conflict" between prohibiting such expenditure and granting plaintiff access to the databases.³⁰⁶ While ATF's petition for rehearing en banc was pending, Congress passed the Consolidated Appropriations Act, 2005,³⁰⁷ which likewise prohibited the use of appropriated funds to disclose the same type of firearms database information, but added an appropriations rider providing that such data "shall be immune from judicial process."³⁰⁸ The Seventh Circuit granted ATF's petition for rehearing en banc and ordered the parties to submit briefs on the impact of this new legislation.³⁰⁹ On rehearing, the Seventh Circuit held that this new language "exempts from disclosure [firearms] data previously available to the public" and that, as such, the new law qualified as an Exemption 3 statute.³¹⁰

Following the City of Chicago litigation, courts continue to recognize the Consolidated Appropriations Act, 2005, as an Exemption 3 statute.³¹¹ Additionally,

"Operational Files" Provisions

A closely related but somewhat different form of statutory protection is found in special FOIA provisions that Congress has enacted to cover the "operational files" of individual intelligence agencies. For example, the CIA Information Act of 1984³¹⁵ provides that "[t]he Director of the Central Intelligence Agency, with the coordination of the Director of National Intelligence, may exempt operational files of the Central Intelligence Agency from the provisions of section 552 of Title 5 (Freedom of Information Act) which require publication or disclosure, or search or review in connection therewith."³¹⁶ The CIA Information Act established the CIA as the first intelligence agency to obtain such exceptional FOIA treatment for its "operational files."³¹⁷ To the extent that the issue has been addressed in litigation, courts have recognized the CIA Information Act as a qualifying statute under Exemption 3 of the FOIA.³¹⁸

³¹⁴ See McRae, 869 F. Supp. 2d at 163 (finding that agency "properly withheld all information derived from the Firearms Trace System Database" pursuant to Exemption 3 and Consolidated Appropriations Act, 2005; Skinner, 2010 WL 3832602, at *16 (finding "Firearm Trace Reports" properly protected pursuant to Exemption 3 and Consolidated Appropriations Act, 2005. Following the enactment of the CIA Information Act, Congress enacted similar "operational files" statutes pertaining to records maintained by three other intelligence agencies: the National Security Agency,³¹⁹ the National Reconnaissance Office,³²⁰ and the National Geospatial-Intelligence Agency.³²¹ These special statutory protections are modeled after, and quite similar to, the CIA Information Act.³²² For example, 50 U.S.C. § 432a provides that "[t]he Director of the National Reconnaissance Office, with the coordination of the Director of National Intelligence, may exempt operational files of the National Reconnaissance Office from the provisions of section 552 of title 5 which require publication, disclosure, search, or review in connection therewith."³²³

Statutes Found Not to Qualify Under Exemption 3

Certain statutes have been found to fail to meet the requisites of Exemption 3.³²⁶ For instance, in Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press v. DOJ,³²⁷ the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit held that the statute governing the FBI's release of criminal record information, commonly referred to as "rap sheets,"³²⁸ does not qualify under Exemption 3 because the statute does not expressly prohibit the records' disclosure.³²⁹ Specifically, the Reporters Committee court found that the statute failed to fulfill subpart (A)(i)'s requirement of absolute withholding because the statute, which "gives the Department discretion, apparently unbounded, to withhold records from authorized government officials who disseminate the records to the public," implies that "it might also give the Department discretionary authority to withhold such records directly from the general public" and, in fact, the FBI had exercised such discretion by its inconsistent manner of releasing rap sheets to the public.³³⁰ Furthermore, the D.C. Circuit noted that "[e]ven if [28 U.S.C. §] 534 met Exemption 3's threshold requirement ('specifically exempted from disclosure') it would not appear to satisfy either prong[, subpart (A)(i) or subpart (A)(ii),] of the exemption's proviso."³³¹

Likewise, the Copyright Act of 1976³³² has been held to satisfy neither Exemption 3 subpart because, rather than prohibiting disclosure, it specifically permits public inspection of copyrighted documents.³³³ The D.C. Circuit has also held that section 520 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act³³⁴ is not an Exemption 3 statute because it does not specifically prohibit the disclosure of records.³³⁵ Similarly, a provision of the Postal Reorganization Act, 39 U.S.C. § 410(c)(6),³³⁶ has been found not to qualify because the broad discretion afforded the Postal Service to release or withhold records is not sufficiently specific.³³⁷ Similarly, section 1106 of the Social Security Act³³⁸ has been found not to be an Exemption 3 statute because it gives the Secretary of Health and Human Services wide discretion to enact regulations specifically permitting disclosure.³³⁹

Likewise, in 2008, the District Court for the District of Columbia rejected the argument that section 210(b) of the Investment Advisers Act of 1940³⁴⁰ qualified as a withholding statute under Exemption 3, noting that "[the statute] does not mandate the withholding of any particular type of information," and remarking that, if the court were to adopt the agency's interpretation of the statute, the agency "would have unbridled discretion regarding all information obtained by a subpoena."³⁴¹ That same district court determined that section 10(d) of the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act³⁴² does not qualify as an Exemption 3 statute where withholding of the information in question is entirely discretionary under that Act.³⁴³ Additionally, the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit has held that the early warning disclosure provision in the Transportation Recall Enhancement, Accountability, and Documentation (TREAD) Act³⁴⁴ does not qualify as an Exemption 3 statute because it does not specifically exempt data from disclosure.³⁴⁵

A particularly difficult Exemption 3 issue was addressed by the Supreme Court in 1988. In analyzing the applicability of Exemption 3 to the Parole Commission and Reorganization Act³⁴⁶ and Rule 32 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure,³⁴⁷ each of which governs the disclosure of presentence reports, the Supreme Court held that they are Exemption 3 statutes only in part.³⁴⁸ The Court found that they do not permit the withholding of an entire presentence report, but rather only those portions of a presentence report pertaining to a probation officer's sentencing recommendations, certain diagnostic opinions, information obtained upon a promise of confidentiality, and information which, if disclosed, might result in harm to any person, and that "the remaining parts of the reports are not covered by this exemption, and thus must be disclosed unless there is some other exemption which applies to them."³⁴⁹ To the extent that this issue has arisen since the 1988 decision, courts have followed the Supreme Court precedent.³⁵⁰

Although the Supreme Court has declined to decide whether the Trade Secrets Act³⁵¹ is an Exemption 3 statute,³⁵² most courts confronted with the issue have held that the statute does not meet the requirements of Exemption 3.³⁵³ Significantly, in 1987, the D.C. Circuit issued a decision that definitively resolved the issue by holding that the Trade Secrets Act does not satisfy either of Exemption 3's requirements and thus does not qualify as a separate withholding statute.³⁵⁴ First, the D.C. Circuit found that the Trade Secrets Act's prohibition against disclosure is not absolute, as it prohibits only those disclosures that are "not authorized by law."³⁵⁵ Because duly promulgated agency regulations can provide the necessary authorization for release, the agency "possesses discretion to control the applicability" of the Act.³⁵⁶ The D.C. Circuit found that the existence of this discretion precludes the Trade Secrets Act from satisfying subpart (A)(i) of Exemption 3.³⁵⁷ Moreover, the court held that the Trade Secrets Act fails to satisfy the first prong of subpart (A)(ii) because it "in no way channels the discretion of agency decisionmakers."³⁵⁸ Indeed, as the court concluded, this lack of statutory guidance renders the Trade Secrets Act susceptible to invocation at the "whim of an administrator."³⁵⁹ Finally, the D.C. Circuit held that the Act also fails to satisfy the second prong of subpart (A)(ii) because of the "encyclopedic character" of the material within its scope and the absence of any limitation on the agencies covered or the sources from disclosure under FOIA Exemption 3" in conjunction with Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 32(c)(3)(A) and 18 U.S.C. § 4208 (2006), and finding that "to the extent the . . . [r]eport [at issue] contains this information, [agencies] are justified in withholding it").

of data included.³⁶⁰ Given all these elements, the court held that the Trade Secrets Act does not qualify as an Exemption 3 statute.³⁶¹ This followed the Department of Justice's stated policy position on the issue.³⁶² The D.C. Circuit's decision on this issue is consistent with the legislative history of the 1976 amendment to Exemption 3, which reveals that the Trade Secrets Act was not intended to qualify as a nondisclosure statute under the exemption and that any analysis of trade secrets and commercial or financial information should focus instead on the applicability of Exemption 4.³⁶³

Lastly, at one time there was uncertainty as to whether the Privacy Act of 1974³⁶⁴ could serve as an Exemption 3 statute. When a conflict arose among the circuits that considered the proper relationship between the FOIA and the Privacy Act, the Supreme Court agreed to resolve the issue.³⁶⁵ These cases later became moot, however, when Congress, upon enacting the CIA Information Act in 1984, explicitly provided that the Privacy Act is not an Exemption 3 statute.³⁶⁶ Subsequent to this, the Supreme Court dismissed the appeals in these cases.³⁶⁷
