No. 09-1520

In the Supreme Court of the United States

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, PETITIONER

v.

REGINALD KEITH HAGEN

ON PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI

NEAL KUMAR KATYAL
Acting Solicitor General
Counsel of Record

LANNY A. BREUER
Assistant Attorney General

MICHAEL R. DREEBEN
Deputy Solicitor General

LEONDRA R. KRUGER
Assistant to the Solicitor General

J. CAMPBELL BARKER
Attorney

Department of Justice
Washington, D.C. 20530-0001
SupremeCtBriefs@usdoj.gov
(202) 514-2217

QUESTION PRESENTED

Section 922(g)(9) of Title 18, United States Code, makes it a crime for any person convicted of a "misdemeanor crime of domestic violence" to possess a firearm. The term "misdemeanor crime of domestic violence" is defined to include any federal, state, or tribal misdemeanor offense, committed by a person with a specified domestic relationship to the victim, that "has, as an element, the use or attempted use of physical force, or the threatened use of a deadly weapon." 18 U.S.C. 921(a)(33)(A)(ii). The question presented is:

Whether respondent's Texas conviction for misdemeanor assault by intentionally and knowingly causing bodily injury to a family member qualifies as a conviction for a "misdemeanor crime of domestic violence."

TABLE OF CONTENTS

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Cases:

Cases—Continued: Page

Cases—Continued: Page

Statutes and guidelines:

Statutes and guidelines—Continued: Page

Miscellaneous: Page

In the Supreme Court of the United States

No. 09-1520

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, PETITIONER

v.

REGINALD KEITH HAGEN

ON PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI

The Acting Solicitor General, on behalf of the United States of America, respectfully petitions for a writ of certiorari to review the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit in this case.

OPINIONS BELOW

The per curiam order of the court of appeals (App., infra, 1a-2a) is not published in the Federal Reporter but is available at 349 Fed. Appx. 896. The order of the district court granting respondent's motion to dismiss the indictment (App., infra, 3a-5a) is unreported.

JURISDICTION

The judgment of the court of appeals was entered on October 14, 2009. A petition for rehearing was denied on March 3, 2010 (App., infra, 17a-18a). On May 28, 2010, Justice Scalia extended the time within which to file a petition for a writ of certiorari to and including June 15, 2010. The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U.S.C. 1254(1).

STATUTORY PROVISIONS INVOLVED

The relevant statutory provisions are reprinted in an appendix to this petition. App., infra, 22a-23a.

STATEMENT

Respondent was indicted on two counts of possession of a firearm by a person convicted of a misdemeanor crime of domestic violence, in violation of 18 U.S.C. 922(g)(9), and two counts of making false statements concerning whether he had been convicted of such an offense, in violation of 18 U.S.C. 924(a)(1)(A) and 18 U.S.C. 922(a)(6), respectively. Concluding that respondent's prior Texas conviction for misdemeanor assault on a family member was not a conviction for a "misdemeanor crime of domestic violence," the district court dismissed the indictment. The court of appeals affirmed. App., infra, 1a-2a.

1. Under 18 U.S.C. 922(g)(9), it is unlawful for any person "who has been convicted in any court of a misdemeanor crime of domestic violence * * * [to] possess in or affecting commerce, any firearm or ammunition." Section 921(a)(33)(A) defines "misdemeanor crime of domestic violence" as a misdemeanor under federal, state, or tribal law, committed by a person with a specified domestic relationship with the victim, that "has, as an element, the use or attempted use of physical force, or the threatened use of a deadly weapon." 18 U.S.C. 921(a)(33)(A)(ii); see United States v. Hayes, 129 S. Ct. 1079, 1084 (2009). A person who knowingly violates that provision may be fined, imprisoned for not more than ten years, or both. 18 U.S.C. 924(a)(2).

2. In 2005, respondent was charged in Texas state court with misdemeanor assault in violation of Texas Penal Code § 22.01(a)(1), which punishes any person who "intentionally, knowingly, or recklessly causes bodily injury to another, including the person's spouse." Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.01(a)(1) (West 2003). A violation of Section 22.01(a)(1) is a Class A misdemeanor, punishable by confinement in jail for a term not to exceed one year. Id. § 12.21(a) (West 2003); id. § 22.01(b) (West Supp. 2004). The criminal information alleged that respondent "did * * * unlawfully, intentionally and knowingly cause bodily injury to [the victim], a member of the Defendant's FAMILY, and hereafter styled the Complainant by STRIKING THE COMPLAINANT ON THE HEAD WITH THE DEFENDANT'S HAND." App., infra, 19a. Respondent was convicted of the offense, and the state court made an affirmative finding of domestic violence. Id. at 20a-21a.[1] Respondent was sentenced to one year of confinement, which was suspended in favor of two years of probation. His probation was later revoked, and he was sentenced to 60 days of confinement. Ibid.

3. In 2007, law enforcement officials discovered that respondent had possessed and attempted to purchase firearms after his 2005 conviction. Respondent was indicted on two counts of possession of a firearm by a person convicted of a misdemeanor crime of domestic violence, in violation of 18 U.S.C. 922(g)(9) (Counts 1 and 4), and two counts of making false statements concerning whether he had been convicted of such an offense, in violation of 18 U.S.C. 924(a)(1)(A) (Count 2) and 18 U.S.C. 922(a)(6) (Count 3).

---

[1] A domestic relationship between the offender and the victim is not a required element of the assault offense under Texas Penal Code § 22.01(a)(1), but Texas courts include family-violence findings in criminal judgments to facilitate the prosecution of any subsequent assault against a family member as a felony under Texas Penal Code § 22.01(b)(2). See Tex. Code Crim. P. Ann. art. 42.013 (West 2006); State v. Eakins, 71 S.W.3d 443, 444-445 (Tex. App. 2002).

Respondent moved to dismiss the indictment, arguing that his Texas assault offense is not a "misdemeanor crime of domestic violence" because it does not "ha[ve], as an element, the use * * * of physical force." 18 U.S.C. 921(a)(33)(A). The district court granted the motion. App., infra, 3a-5a.

The district court acknowledged that the Fifth Circuit had previously held that a violation of Texas Penal Code § 22.01(a)(1) qualifies as a "misdemeanor crime of domestic violence" because the offense has as an element the use of physical force. App., infra, 4a, 5a (citing United States v. Shelton, 325 F.3d 553 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 540 U.S. 916 (2003), and 543 U.S. 1057 (2005)). But the district court concluded that Shelton had been superseded by subsequent circuit precedent, as recognized in United States v. Villegas-Hernandez, 468 F.3d 874 (2006), cert. denied, 549 U.S. 1245 (2007). App., infra, 5a.[2]

In Villegas-Hernandez, the Fifth Circuit held that a violation of Texas Penal Code § 22.01(a)(1) is not a "crime of violence" under 18 U.S.C. 16(a)—which, much like Section 921(a)(33)(A), defines the term to mean an offense "that has as an element the use * * * of physical force against the person or property of another"—because assault by causing bodily injury does not have as an "element" the use of "physical force." 468 F.3d at 878-883. Understanding Section 16(a)'s reference to "physical force" to mean "'destructive or violent force,'" the court reasoned that injury "could result from any of a number of acts, without use of 'destructive or violent force,'" such as "making available to the victim a poisoned drink while reassuring him the drink is safe, or telling the victim he can safely back his car out while knowing an approaching car driven by an independently acting third party will hit the victim." Id. at 879.

[2] In so concluding, the district court adopted the more extensive analysis of an earlier memorandum and order in the case of United States v. King, No. H-06-0363 (S.D. Tex. July 10, 2007). App., infra, 6a-14a; see id. at 5a.

The Villegas-Hernandez court acknowledged that Shelton had earlier held that Texas Penal Code § 22.01(a)(1) had a use-of-force element for purposes of the definition of "misdemeanor crime of violence" in Section 921(a)(33)(A). 468 F.3d at 880. The court, however, declined to rely on Shelton. The court relied instead on an intervening en banc decision, United States v. Vargas-Duran, 356 F.3d 598 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 541 U.S. 965, and 543 U.S. 995 (2004), in which the court held that the crime of driving under the influence and causing bodily injury is not a "crime of violence" under a similarly worded definition of the term in Sentencing Guidelines § 2L1.2. See Sentencing Guidelines § 2L1.2, comment. (n.1(B)(iii)). In so holding, the en banc court in Vargas-Duran had explained that "[t]here is . . . a difference between a defendant's causation of an injury and the defendant's use of force." Villegas-Hernandez, 468 F.3d at 880 (quoting Vargas-Duran, 356 F.3d at 606).

The Villegas-Hernandez court also acknowledged that the defendant in that case had been charged with and admitted to hitting a family member. It held, however, that it could not rely on the charging document or plea-colloquy admission to conclude that the defendant had been convicted of an assault offense involving the use of force. 468 F.3d at 882-883; see, e.g., Nijhawan v. Holder, 129 S. Ct. 2294, 2302-2303 (2009) (describing the so-called modified categorical approach, which permits courts to consult certain judicial records to narrow the basis for a defendant's conviction under a criminal statute that sweeps more broadly than a generic federal definition). The court explained that, "if statutory language is wholly result-oriented, as here, an offense is not a crime of violence under subsection 16(a) simply because an indictment or information describes force being used in a particular commission of that offense." Villegas-Hernandez, 468 F.3d at 883.

Concluding that Villegas-Hernandez resolved the issue, the district court in this case agreed with respondent that his conviction under Texas Penal Code § 22.01(a)(1) did not qualify as a predicate "misdemeanor crime of domestic violence" for purposes of Section 922(g)(9). App., infra, 5a. The court accordingly dismissed the indictment. Ibid.

4. The United States appealed and sought initial hearing en banc, but the court of appeals denied en banc review. App., infra, 15a-16a. The court of appeals then affirmed in an unpublished ruling. Id. at 1a-2a. In a per curiam order, the court held that the district court had correctly relied on Villegas-Hernandez in concluding that assault in violation of Texas Penal Code § 22.01(a)(1) does not qualify as a "misdemeanor crime of domestic violence" under Section 922(g)(9). Id. at 2a. The United States sought en banc rehearing, but the court declined to reconsider its decision. Id. at 17a-18a.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE PETITION

The Fifth Circuit has concluded that a person convicted of misdemeanor assault by causing bodily injury to a family member has not been convicted of a "misdemeanor crime of domestic violence" under 18 U.S.C. 922(g)(9), because, in the court's view, it is possible to cause bodily injury without "us[ing] * * * physical force" against the victim. 18 U.S.C. 921(a)(33)(A)(ii). That conclusion misinterprets the statute. It disregards the statute's language, overlooks its common-law background, and elevates hypothetical examples over prototypical applications of the covered offense. The decision also conflicts with the decisions of other courts of appeals to address the issue. If left unreviewed, the court's decision threatens to impede effective and uniform enforcement of Section 922(g)(9), since domestic abusers are routinely prosecuted under assault and battery statutes that punish the causation of bodily injury without specifying the means by which the victim's injury must have been caused. This Court's review is warranted.

A. The Decision Below Incorrectly Constricts The Scope Of Section 922(g)(9)

In Section 922(g)(9), Congress extended the longstanding federal prohibition on firearm possession by any person convicted of a felony, 18 U.S.C. 922(g)(1), to persons convicted of "misdemeanor crime[s] of domestic violence." See United States v. Hayes, 129 S. Ct. 1079, 1082 (2009). Congress defined the term "misdemeanor crime of domestic violence" to mean an offense that is a misdemeanor under state, federal, or tribal law, that "has, as an element, the use or attempted use of physical force, or the threatened use of a deadly weapon, committed by" a person with a specified domestic relationship with the victim. 18 U.S.C. 921(a)(33)(A); see Hayes, 129 S. Ct. at 1087.

The court of appeals in this case concluded that the federal prohibition on firearm ownership by persons convicted of misdemeanor crimes of domestic violence had no application to an individual convicted of assaulting a family member by intentionally and knowingly causing her bodily injury.[3] The court relied on the view expressed in United

[3] Although Texas Penal Code § 22.01(a)(1) also punishes any individual who "recklessly causes bodily injury to another," Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.01(a)(1) (West 2003), respondent was specifically charged with the intentional and knowing causation of bodily injury, see States v. Villegas-Hernandez, 468 F.3d 874 (2006), cert. denied, 549 U.S. 1245 (2007), that bodily injury can be caused without the use of force—by, for example, "making available to the victim a poisoned drink while reassuring him the drink is safe, or telling the victim he can safely back his car out while knowing an approaching car driven by an independently acting third party will hit the victim." Id. at 879; see App., infra, 2a. That analysis is seriously flawed in at least three respects.

1. First, as a matter of ordinary usage, the defendant's "use" of "physical force" is an "element" of the offense of assault by causing bodily injury because physical force is the means by which injury is necessarily produced. As the First Circuit reasoned in United States v. Nason, 269 F.3d 10 (2001), "to cause physical injury, force necessarily must be physical in nature." Id. at 20. A person who intentionally or knowingly causes injury to another must "use," or actively employ, physical force to achieve that result. See Leocal v. Ashcroft, 543 U.S. 1, 9 (2004) (explaining that the word "use" in the context of the definition of "crime of violence" in 18 U.S.C. 16(a) means "active employment") (citing Bailey v. United States, 516 U.S. 137, 144 (1995)). To convict a defendant of bodily-injury assault, the prosecution must therefore prove that the defendant used physical force against the victim.

As the court of appeals seems to have acknowledged, see Villegas-Hernandez, 468 F.3d at 882-883, a person employs physical force against another when he causes bodily injury by making direct physical contact with his victim—

App., infra, 19a. Respondent accordingly has conceded that Section 22.01(a)(1) "may, for present purposes, be 'pared down' to exclude consideration of the alternative mens rea of 'recklessly.'" Resp. C.A. Br. 8; see, e.g., Nijhawan v. Holder, 129 S. Ct. 2294, 2302-2303 (2009) (describing the modified categorical approach).

for example, by striking her with his hand. But the same is true in the unusual cases that the court of appeals imagined in Villegas-Hernandez, in which the assailant causes physical harm without making direct physical contact. "If someone lures a poor swimmer into waters with a strong undertow in order that he drown, or tricks a victim into walking toward a high precipice so that he might fall," for example, the offender "has at least attempted to make use of physical force against the person of the target, either through the action of water to cause asphyxiation or by impact of earth on flesh and bone." United States v. Calderon-Pena, 383 F.3d 254, 270 (5th Cir. 2004) (en banc) (Smith, J., dissenting), cert. denied, 543 U.S. 1076 (2005). "However remote these forces may be in time or distance from the defendant, they were still directed to work according to his will, as surely as was a swung fist or a fired bullet." Ibid. (Smith, J., dissenting); cf., e.g., United States v. De La Fuente, 353 F.3d 766, 770-771 (9th Cir. 2003) (concluding that a threat of anthrax poisoning qualifies as a "threatened use of physical force" under Section 16(a), and explaining that "the bacteria's physical effect on the body is no less violently forceful than the effect of a kick or a blow").

A contrary conclusion would lead to absurd consequences. Many States define a range of crimes against the person, from simple assault to murder, by specifying a particular result (e.g., the causation of "bodily injury" or "death"), without explicitly specifying the means by which an offender must have achieved that result. See, e.g., Ala. Code § 13A-6-2(a)(1) (LexisNexis Supp. 2009) ("A person commits the crime of murder if * * * [w]ith intent to cause the death of another person, he or she causes the death of that person or of another person."); Alaska Stat. § 11.41.100(a)(1) (2008) (similar); Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 13-1105(A)(1) (2010) (similar); Colo. Rev. Stat.

§ 18-3-102(1)(a) (2009) (similar); Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 53a-54a(a) (West 2007) (similar). Many such offenses can be committed by means of subtle and indirect uses of physical force, as well as direct physical contact between the offender and the victim. See generally 2 Wayne R. LaFave, Substantive Criminal Law § 14.2(c), at 433 (2d ed. 2003) (LaFave) ("While the method of producing an intentional death is usually some weapon in the hands of the murderer, * * * sometimes more subtle means are used."). Yet under the court of appeals' analysis, even murder would not have as an element the use of force, since it can be accomplished through poisoning. See Villegas-Hernandez, 468 F.3d at 879.

Congress cannot have intended that result. Many federal crime-of-violence provisions, like Section 921(a)(33)(A), define predicate acts to include offenses that have as an element the use of physical force. See, e.g., 18 U.S.C. 16(a) (defining "crime of violence"); Leocal, 543 U.S. at 7 (noting that Section 16 has been "incorporated into a variety of statutory provisions, both criminal and noncriminal"); 18 U.S.C. 373(a), 521(c)(2), 924(c)(3)(A), 924(e)(2)(B)(i); 20 U.S.C. 1161w(f)(3)(A)(ii) (Supp. II 2008); 28 U.S.C. 540A(c)(1). Congress undoubtedly intended the use-of-force language of those statutes to encompass quintessential violent crimes such as murder. An interpretation that excludes them is highly suspect. Cf. Calderon-Pena, 383 F.3d at 270-271 (Smith, J., dissenting) (noting that "it would be absurd" to believe that murder would not involve the "use of physical force" because "the crime of murder in many states may be satisfied by subtle and indirect uses of force").

2. The court of appeals' interpretation also conflicts with the "more specialized legal usage" of the phrase "use . . . of physical force" to describe the common-law crime of battery. Johnson v. United States, 130 S. Ct. 1265, 1270-1271 (2010). Battery is defined, in language that tracks the definition of "misdemeanor crime of domestic violence" in Section 921(a)(33)(A), as "the intentional application of unlawful force against the person of another." Id. at 1270. At common law, that phrase was understood to reach conduct resulting in either "a bodily injury or an offensive touching." 2 LaFave § 16.2, at 553; see Johnson, 130 S. Ct. at 1271. And as particularly relevant here, battery was understood to reach indirect as well as direct uses of force against the body of the victim. See 2 LaFave § 16.2, at 554; see also 2 Joel Prentiss Bishop, Bishop on Criminal Law § 72 a at 48-49 (John M. Zane & Carl Zollman eds., 9th ed. 1923) (discussing cases). A person thus committed a battery when, for example, he "administer[ed] a poison" or "[told] a blind man walking toward a precipice that all is clear ahead." 2 LaFave § 16.2, at 554-555; see also, e.g., State v. Monroe, 28 S.E. 547 (N.C. 1897) (druggist who sold candy laced with sufficient croton oil to cause injury, knowing that the candy would be administered to another as a trick, was guilty of assault and battery); Commonwealth v. Stratton, 114 Mass. 303, 304-305 (1874) (defendant, who offered the victim figs that had been drugged without the victim's knowledge, was guilty of assault and battery); Rollin M. Perkins, Non-Homicide Offenses Against the Person, 26 B.U. L. Rev. 119, 122 (1946) (explaining that battery, "an application of force to the person of another," may be committed by, inter alia, "threatening sudden violence and thereby causing another to jump from a window or a moving vehicle or other place") (footnote omitted).

This Court has recognized that, when Congress uses a term having an established common-law meaning, it ordinarily intends the term to bear that common-law meaning. See, e.g., Johnson, 130 S. Ct. at 1270 (citing United States

v. Turley, 352 U.S. 407, 411 (1957)). Here, where Congress has employed the common-law definition of misdemeanor battery to define the term "misdemeanor crime of domestic violence," the most natural conclusion is that Congress intended to describe generic, common-law battery crimes, including crimes involving the causation of bodily injury by subtle and indirect uses of physical force. Cf. id. at 1271-1272.[4]

---

[4] In Johnson, the Court considered whether the Florida felony offense of recidivist battery, defined in part as intentionally touching or striking another person against her will, qualified as a "violent felony" under the provision of the Armed Career Criminal Act of 1984 (ACCA) that covers crimes that "ha[ve] as an element the use * * * of physical force against the person of another." 18 U.S.C. 924(e)(2)(B)(i). The Court acknowledged that, at common law, the "force" element of battery was "satisfied by even the slightest offensive touching." Johnson, 130 S. Ct. at 1270. The Court concluded, however, that the common-law meaning of the term "force" was not controlling because that meaning "does not fit" in the context of the ACCA's definition of the term "violent felony." Ibid. The Court reasoned that the term "violent," particularly when "attached to the noun 'felony,'" connotes "strong physical force." Id. at 1271. The Court also considered it "unlikely" that Congress would employ the common-law definition of battery—a crime punishable as a misdemeanor at common law, and still generally punishable as a misdemeanor today—in defining the term "violent felony." Id. at 1271-1272 (emphasis added).

The Court in Johnson reserved the question whether the term "physical force" has the same meaning in the context of Section 922(g)(9)'s definition of "misdemeanor crime of domestic violence." 130 S. Ct. at 1273. Since then, one court of appeals has relied on Johnson to conclude that a conviction for common-law battery of a family member does not qualify as a "misdemeanor crime of domestic violence" because that offense need not have involved the use of "violent force." United States v. White, No. 09-4114, 2010 WL 2169487 (4th Cir. June 1, 2010). The government disagrees with that extension of Johnson, and the Acting Solicitor General has authorized the filing of a petition for rehearing. This case, however, provides no occasion to consider that question. The

3. In any event, even if Section 921(a)(33)(A) were read to exclude any assault crime capable of commission by indirect and subtle uses of physical force, the court of appeals identified no evidence that Texas Penal Code § 22.01(a)(1) would be applied in that manner. See United States v. Shelton, 325 F.3d 553, 561 (5th Cir.) (noting "the absence of a Texas case that indicates that a defendant could be convicted of misdemeanor assault for causing bodily injury without using physical force"), cert. denied, 540 U.S. 916 (2003), and 543 U.S. 1057 (2005). Rather than cite cases, the Villegas-Hernandez court simply hypothesized that Section 22.01(a)(1) could be used to punish individuals who lured their victims into harm's way.

The court of appeals' approach is inconsistent with this Court's guidance. In Gonzales v. Duenas-Alvarez, 549 U.S. 183 (2007), this Court made clear that "to find that a state statute creates a crime outside the generic definition of a listed crime in a federal statute requires more than the application of legal imagination to a state statute's language"; it requires a "realistic probability," and not just a "theoretical possibility," that the state statute would be applied in a "nongeneric" way. Id. at 193. To establish the requisite probability, this Court instructed that an offender "must at least point to his own case or other cases in which the state courts in fact did apply the statute in the special (nongeneric) manner for which he argues." Ibid.

Texas bodily-injury assault offense at issue in this case categorically involves "violent force" as this Court interpreted the term in Johnson: that is, "force capable of causing physical pain or injury to another person." 130 S. Ct. at 1271; see Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 1.07(a)(8) (West 2003) (defining the term "[b]odily injury," as required by Section 22.01(a)(1), to mean "physical pain, illness, or any impairment of physical condition").

Here, respondent could not contend that he was convicted under Texas Penal Code § 22.01(a)(1) for conduct not involving the use of physical force. See App., infra, 19a. And the Fifth Circuit has identified no case in which Texas's assault statute has been applied to conduct of the sort it imagined in Villegas-Hernandez. The court erred by relying on nothing more than highly stylized hypothetical applications of the statute to hold that Texas bodily-injury assault on a family member is not a "misdemeanor crime of domestic violence" under Section 922(g)(9).

B. The Decision Below Conflicts With The Decisions Of Other Courts Of Appeals

The court of appeals' conclusion that misdemeanor assault by causing bodily injury to a family member is not a "misdemeanor crime of domestic violence" squarely conflicts with the decisions of other courts of appeals. Both the First and the Eighth Circuits have held, in decisions contrary to the decision below, that bodily-injury assault qualifies as a "misdemeanor crime of domestic violence" within the meaning of Section 921(a)(33)(A). See Nason, 269 F.3d at 12, 20 (holding that the provision of the Maine assault statute that prohibits "intentionally, knowingly, or recklessly caus[ing] bodily injury . . . to another," "unambiguously involves the use of physical force" within the meaning of Section 921(a)(33)(A)(ii)); United States v. Smith, 171 F.3d 617, 620-621 (8th Cir. 1999) (holding that the provision of the Iowa assault statute that prohibits "[a]ny act which is intended to cause pain or injury to * * * another," Iowa Code § 708.1(2) (West 1993), has a use-of-force element within the meaning of Section 921(a)(33)(A)(ii)).[5] The Fifth

[5] The First Circuit in Nason cited a Maine Supreme Court decision describing the bodily-injury provision of Maine's assault statute as reaching the "use of unlawful force against another causing bodily in-

Circuit had relied in part on those decisions in its earlier decision in Shelton, 325 F.3d at 558-559, in which it had concluded that a violation of Texas Penal Code § 22.01(a)(1) does qualify as a "misdemeanor crime of domestic violence." By reversing course here, the Fifth Circuit has brought itself into direct conflict with the First and Eighth Circuits.

The court of appeals' decision is, on the other hand, consistent with the Second Circuit's construction of a parallel provision of law. See Chrzanoski v. Ashcroft, 327 F.3d 188, 194-196 (2003) (holding that assault by intentionally causing physical injury to another "does not necessarily involve the use of force" for purposes of 18 U.S.C. 16(a) because a defendant could be convicted "for injury caused not by physical force, but by guile, deception, or even deliberate omission").[6] jury." Nason, 269 F.3d at 20 (quoting State v. Griffin, 459 A.2d 1086, 1091 (Me. 1983)). The court in Griffin did not, however, suggest that bodily-injury assault under Maine law is limited to some acts involving the intentional or knowing infliction of bodily injury but not others, and the conclusion that all such acts involve the "use of unlawful force" is consistent with the prevailing use of that phrase in describing the common-law crime of battery. See pp. 10-12, supra.

---

[6] In addition, courts have reached conflicting results under Sentencing Guidelines provisions that classify offenses by reference to the use of force. Compare, e.g., United States v. Alexander, 543 F.3d 819, 823 (6th Cir. 2008) (concluding that the element of causing bodily injury under Michigan's resisting-arrest statute involves the "use of physical force against the person of another" within the meaning of Sentencing Guidelines § 4B1.2(a)(1)), cert. denied, 129 S. Ct. 2175 (2009), with United States v. Perez-Vargas, 414 F.3d 1282, 1285-1287 (10th Cir. 2005) (holding that assault by knowingly or recklessly causing bodily injury to another, Colo. Rev. Stat. § 18-3-204(1)(a) (1986), does not have a use-of-force element for purposes of Sentencing Guidelines § 2L1.2 because defendants could be convicted for acts such as "intentionally placing a

The division in authority is unlikely to be resolved without this Court's intervention. The government twice in this case sought en banc review in the Fifth Circuit and that court declined to reconsider its position. The division is of particular practical significance because it means that application of Section 922(g)(9) to a particular individual will vary depending on the State he or she resides. If, for example, respondent were to move from Texas to Missouri, the same assault conviction held insufficient in the Fifth Circuit would bar respondent from possessing firearms in the Eighth Circuit. This Court's review is warranted.

C. The Question Presented Is Of Recurring Importance

Review is also warranted because the question is one of recurring importance in federal prosecutions and to the administration of a significant federal law.

1. Congress enacted Section 922(g)(9) to provide a nationwide solution to what it regarded as a nationwide problem: the possession of firearms by those convicted of violent crimes against their families. Hayes, 129 S. Ct. at 1087. When Congress enacted Section 922(g)(9) in 1996, "domestic abusers were (and are) routinely prosecuted under generally applicable assault or battery laws." Ibid. Many States, following the Model Penal Code's approach, define the crime of assault as the unlawful causation of bodily injury. See Model Penal Code § 211.1(1) (1985); see also, e.g., Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 53a-61(a) (West 2007); Del. Code Ann. tit. 11, § 611 (2007). And many more States, following the common-law approach, define assault or battery as involving either the causation of bodily injury or offensive physical contact. See, e.g., Fla. Stat. Ann. § 784.03(1)(a) (West 2007); 720 Ill. Comp. Stat. Ann.

---

barrier in front of a car causing an accident, or intentionally exposing someone to hazardous chemicals").

5/12-3(a)(1) (West 2002). As a consequence, in much of the country, the intentional or knowing causation of bodily injury, without more, is punishable as simple assault or battery.

If, as the court of appeals concluded, convictions under such injury-focused statutes do not have as an element the use of physical force, then it is likely that Section 922(g)(9) will have no application to many persons convicted of misdemeanor domestic-violence crimes in much of the country. Congress would not have intended that result. See Hayes, 129 S. Ct. at 1087-1088 (rejecting an interpretation of Section 921(a)(33)(A) that would have rendered Section 922(g)(9) "'a dead letter' in some two-thirds of the States from the very moment of its enactment") (citation omitted); see also Nijhawan v. Holder, 129 S. Ct. 2294, 2302 (2009) (rejecting a reading of 8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(43)(M)(i) that would leave the provision with little application, doubting "Congress would have intended (M)(i) to apply in so limited and so haphazard a manner"); Taylor v. United States, 495 U.S. 575, 594 (1990) (declining to construe the Armed Career Criminal Act's reference to "burglary" as meaning "common-law burglary," explaining that such a construction "would come close to nullifying that term's effect in the statute, because few of the crimes now generally recognized as burglaries would fall within the common-law definition"). This Court's review is warranted to forestall that dramatic curtailment of the statute.

2. The Fifth Circuit's erroneous interpretation of the use-of-force language common to Section 921(a)(33)(A) and other federal crime-of-violence definitions is likely significantly to impede enforcement of Section 922(g)(9) in that circuit. Two of the three States within the Fifth Circuit's jurisdiction punish the unlawful causation of bodily injury, without more, as simple assault. Miss. Code Ann.

§ 97-3-7(1)(a) (West Supp. 2009); Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.01(a)(1) (West 2003). The third State, Louisiana, defines simple battery as "the intentional use of force or violence upon the person of another; or the intentional administration of a poison or other noxious liquid or substance to another." La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 14.33 (2007); cf. Villegas-Hernandez, 486 F.3d at 879 (suggesting that assault by poisoning would not qualify as a "misdemeanor crime of domestic violence").

The practical effects of the Fifth Circuit's interpretation are not mitigated by the availability of the so-called modified categorical approach, cf. Johnson, 130 S. Ct. at 1273, because the Villegas-Hernandez court concluded that the Texas offense of assault by causing bodily injury cannot be narrowed by reliance on charging documents and plea-colloquy admissions describing the offense as one involving the use of force, see 468 F.3d at 882-883. Resort to the modified categorical approach would not in any event offer a full response to the practical difficulties associated with the court of appeals' approach, since charging documents often simply track the language of the statute and do not as a general rule set forth a specific factual recitation of the means by which the defendant committed his crime. Cf. Johnson, 130 S. Ct. at 1273 (acknowledging that "in many cases state and local records from battery convictions will be incomplete"); id. at 1278 (Alito, J., dissenting) (noting it "will often be impossible" to employ the modified categorical approach to narrow the basis of a particular battery conviction).

3. The conflict among the circuits is likely to prove a source of confusion for defendants as well. Defendants with convictions like respondent's may not be subject to federal prosecution for possession of firearms when they live in the jurisdiction of the Fifth Circuit but can be prosecuted if they later move to a State within the jurisdictions of the First or Eighth Circuits—and they will be uncertain about their status in other jurisdictions.

The conflict will also have an adverse impact on officials reviewing the lawfulness of certain firearms purchases by out-of-state buyers. See 18 U.S.C. 922(s)-(t). Because of the conflict, officials will have to consider not only the whether the transaction complies with the law of the State in which the transaction occurs, but also whether buyers are permitted to possess firearms under the interpretation of Section 921(a)(33)(A) prevailing in their State of residence—an interpretation that may or may not be consistent with the interpretation prevailing in the State in which the transaction occurs. See 18 U.S.C. 922(a)(3) and (b)(3).

For all of these reasons, this Court's intervention is warranted.

CONCLUSION

The petition for a writ of certiorari should be granted.

Respectfully submitted.

NEAL KUMAR KATYAL
Acting Solicitor General
LANNY A. BREUER
Assistant Attorney General
MICHAEL R. DREEBEN
Deputy Solicitor General
LEONDRA R. KRUGER
Assistant to the Solicitor General
J. CAMPBELL BARKER
Attorney

JUNE 2010

APPENDIX A

UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS
FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT

No. 07-20798

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, PLAINTIFF-APPELLANT

v.

REGINALD KEITH HAGEN, DEFENDANT-APPELLEE

[Filed: Oct. 14, 2009]

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Southern District of Texas
(4:07-CR-222-ALL)

Before: HIGGINBOTHAM, and STEWART, Circuit Judges, and FELDMAN, District Judge.[*]

PER CURIAM:[]

On May 31, 2007, Reginald Keith Hagen was charged with possession of firearms and making false statements or representations to a licensed firearms dealer in violation of Title 18 U.S.C. §§ 922(g)(9), 924(a)(2), 922(a)(6),

---

[*] District Judge, Eastern District of Louisiana, sitting by designation.

[] Pursuant to 5TH CIR. R. 47.5, the court has determined that this opinion should not be published and is not precedent except under the limited circumstances set forth in 5TH CIR. R. 47.5.4.

924(a)(2) and 924(a)(1)(A). The government alleged that Hagen had been convicted of a misdemeanor crime of domestic violence, and as a result made a false statement on ATF Form 4473 in order to purchase two firearms.

Hagen moved to dismiss the indictment on the grounds that he was convicted for "assault of a family member" under Texas Penal Code § 22.01(a)(1) and (b)(2) which he argues does not qualify as a "misdemeanor crime of domestic violence" under 18 U.S.C. § 921(a)(33)(A). The district court granted the motion. The district court relied on this court's ruling in United States v. Villegas-Hernandez,[1] in deciding to not follow United States v. Shelton.[2] We agree with the district court and AFFIRM the dismissal of the indictment.

---

[1] 468 F.3d 874 (5th Cir. 2006).

[2] 325 F.3d 553 (5th Cir. 2003).

APPENDIX B

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF TEXAS
HOUSTON DIVISION

Criminal No. H-07-222

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, PLAINTIFF

v.

REGINALD KEITH HAGEN, DEFENDANT

Sept. 27, 2007

ORDER OF DISMISSAL

I.

Before the Court is the defendant, Reginald Keith Hagen's, motion to dismiss the indictment [#11] against him. Also before the Court are the government's response [#17], and memorandum and the defendant's reply. After a review of the documents, the case law presented and the arguments of counsel, the Court determines that the motion is meritorious and should be granted.

II.

In a four count indictment filed on May 31, 2007, the defendant was charged with possession of firearms and making false statements or representations to a licensed firearms dealer in violation of Title 18 U.S.C. §§ 922(g)(9), 924(a)(2), 922(a)(6), 924(a)(2) and 924(a)(1)(A). The government alleges that the defendant had been convicted of a misdemeanor crime of domestic violence, and as a result made a false statement on ATF Form 4473 in order to purchase two (2) firearms.

III.

The defendant argues that the determination of whether the defendant committed any offense turns on the Court and Fifth Circuit Court's interpretation of Tex. Pen. Code § 22.01(a)(1) and (b)(2), which statute charges the offense of "assault of a family member." For federal prosecution purposes, the question is whether the defendant's conviction for the offense of "assault of a family member" qualifies as a "misdemeanor crime of domestic violence" under federal law. See 18 U.S.C. § 921(a)(33)(A). In this regard, the defendant argues that both this Court and the Circuit Court have addressed this very issue. The defendant cites to United States v. Villegas-Hernandez, 468 F.3d 874 (5th Cir. 2006) and United States v. David Ray King, (Criminal No. 06-0363, 2007). Finally, the defendant points out that the Circuit Court in Villegas-Hernandez acknowledges that it rejected its holding in United States v. Shelton, 325 F.3d 553 (5th Cir. 2003), while sitting en banc in United States v. Vargas-Duran, 319 F.3d 194 (5th Cir. 2003).

IV.

The government argues that what is at issue is the Circuit Court's definition of "use of force" under Title 18. In this regard, the government argues that Circuit Court has fashioned a definition that is too narrow and ignores Congress' intent to broaden the scope of Section 921(a)(33)(A) to include misdemeanor crimes of violence not simply crimes of violence. In this regard, the government argues that United States v. Shelton, 325 F.3d 553 (5th Cir. 2003) is still the law. The government argues that in Shelton, the Circuit Court held that a prior conviction under Texas statute § 22.01(a)(1) is a misdemeanor crime of domestic violence and, therefore, fits the definition set out in Title 18 U.S.C. § 922(a)(33).

V.

The Court is of the opinion that this issue was addressed in Villegas-Hernandez and locally in David Ray King. Therefore, the Court will not further reason between the defendant and the government, but instead, adopt the analysis in David Ray King. Having done so, the Court DISMISSES the indictment in this case.

It is so Ordered.

SIGNED and ENTERED this 27th day of September, 2007.

/s/ KENNETH M. HOYT
KENNETH M. HOYT
United States District Judge

APPENDIX C

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF TEXAS
HOUSTON DIVISION

Criminal No. H-06-0363

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, PLAINTIFF

v.

KENNETH ANDERSON, JR. AND DAVID RAY KING, DEFENDANTS

July 10, 2007

MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

Before the Court is Defendant David Ray King's Motion to Dismiss Count One of the Indictment. After considering the parties' filings and the relevant law, the Court finds that the motion, Docket No. 22, should be GRANTED.

I. BACKGROUND

On October 4, 2006, a two-count indictment was filed against Defendant David Ray King.[1] King pled guilty to Count Two (unlawful possession of an unregistered firearm and aiding and abetting, in violation of 26 U.S.C. §§ 5861(d) and 5871, and 18 U.S.C. § 2) on February 16, 2007.[2] Defendant moves to dismiss Count One of the indictment, which alleges that Defendant, having been convicted of a misdemeanor crime of domestic violence, aided and abetted and knowingly possessed a firearm in violation of 18 U.S.C. §§ 922(g)(9), 924(a)(2), and 2. Defendant argues that his prior conviction for assault of a family member does not constitute a crime of violence.

---

[1] King's co-Defendant, Kenneth Anderson, was indicted on three counts.

II. ANALYSIS

Under 18 U.S.C. § 922(g)(9), "[i]t shall be unlawful for any person who has been convicted in any court of a misdemeanor crime of domestic violence, to ship or transport in interstate or foreign commerce, or possess in or affecting commerce, any firearm or ammunition; or to receive any firearm or ammunition which has been shipped or transported in interstate or foreign commerce." 18 U.S.C. § 922(g)(9) (2006). A misdemeanor crime of domestic violence is a misdemeanor under federal, state, or tribal law that "has, as an element, the use or attempted use of physical force, or the threatened use of a deadly weapon," committed on a current or former family member or domestic partner. 18 U.S.C. § 921(a)(33)(A).

On February 28, 2006, Defendant King was convicted of and sentenced to probation for assault on a family member, in Fayette County, Texas. King was convicted under the Texas assault statute, which provides that "[a] person commits an offense if the person intentionally, knowingly, or recklessly causes bodily injury to another, including the person's spouse." TEX. PENAL CODE ANN.

---

[2] King was sentenced as to Count Two on July 6, 2007.

§ 22.01(a)(1) (Vernon 2007). Defendant argues that a violation of Section 22.01(a)(1) does not categorically constitute a crime of violence;[3] and therefore does not trigger 18 U.S.C. § 922(g)(9).

The Fifth Circuit has addressed on numerous occasions whether particular offenses, including violations of Texas Penal Code § 22.01(a)(l), count as crimes of violence. The government points the Court to United States v. Shelton, 325 F.3d 553 (5th Cir. 2003), in which the Fifth Circuit held that because Section 22.01(a)(l) requires proof of bodily injury, it has as an element the use of force, and a conviction under the statute is a crime of violence triggering Section 922(g)(9). Id. at 561. Defendant counters that intervening en banc authority has effectively overruled Shelton, and that under United States v. Villegas-Hernandez, 468 F.3d 874 (5th Cir. 2006), an assault conviction under Section 22.01(a)(l) no longer counts categorically as a crime of violence. The precise question before the Court, then, is whether Shelton is still good law, or whether it has been overruled by the Fifth Circuit sitting en banc. See, e.g., Foster v. Quarterman, 466 F.3d 359, 367-68 (5th Cir. 2006) ("Absent an en banc, or intervening Supreme Court, decision, one panel of this court may not overrule a prior panel's decision."). Given the admittedly complicated state of the case law, the Court feels compelled briefly to review the relevant precedents.

---

[3] The Court must use a categorical analysis, which looks only to the language of the relevant statute, not at Defendant's underlying conduct. E.g., United States v. Bonilla-Mungia, 422 F.3d 316, 320 (5th Cir. 2005). Therefore, regardless of Defendant's actions giving rise to the 2006 conviction, the Court must determine whether all possible violations of the Texas assault statute would constitute crimes of violence, as defined by 18 U.S.C § 921(a)(33)(A).

Vargas-Duran I

In January 2003, the Fifth Circuit examined whether a state court conviction for intoxication assault qualified as a "crime of violence" for the purpose of a sentence enhancement under Section 2LI.2(b)(1)(A)(ii) of the 2001 United States Sentencing Guidelines. United States v. Vargas-Duran, 319 F.3d 194 (5th Cir. 2003) (Vargas-Duran I). Under the 2001 version of Section 2LI.2, an offense counted as a "crime of violence" if it had "as an element the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force against the person of another." Id. at 196. The Texas intoxication assault statute then in effect provided that a defendant was guilty of a third degree felony if he or she "by accident or mistake, while operating an aircraft, watercraft, or motor vehicle in a public place while intoxicated, by reason of that intoxication cause[d] serious bodily injury to another." Id. at 196 n.3. The Fifth Circuit held that 1) because the intoxication assault statute requires bodily injury, it has as an element the use of force; and 2) Section 2L1.2 does not incorporate an intentionality or state of mind requirement in order for an offense to constitute a crime of violence. Id. at 196, 199.

United States v. Shelton

Two months later, the Fifth Circuit addressed precisely the same circumstances presented by the instant case: a challenge to a conviction under 18 U.S.C. § 922(g)(9), on the basis that an assault conviction under Section 22.01(a)(l) of the Texas Penal Code did not qualify as a crime of violence. Citing the reasoning of Vargas-Duran I, the Shelton Court held that because Section 22.01(a)(1) "requires bodily injury it includes as an element the use of physical force." Shelton, 325 F.3d at 561. The Fifth Circuit acknowledged that "Vargas-Duran is not on all fours with Shelton's case . . . [but] the discussion certainly informs the instant question." Id. at 558.

Vargas-Duran II

In 2004, the Fifth Circuit, sitting en banc, reexamined Vargas-Duran I. United States v. Vargas-Duran, 356 F.3d 598 (5th Cir. 2004) (Vargas-Duran II). The Court disagreed with the original panel holding regarding intentionality, concluding that a predicate offense triggering a sentence enhancement under Section 2L1.2 of the Guidelines "requires that a defendant intentionally avail himself of that force." Id. at 602. Because the Texas intoxication assault statute applied explicitly to conduct that occurred "by accident or mistake," the intentional use of force was "simply not an element" of the statute, and an intoxication assault conviction could not categorically qualify as a crime of violence. Id. at 605.

The Court also opined, however, that "the fact that the statute requires that serious bodily injury result from the operation of a motor vehicle by an intoxicated person does not mean that the statute requires that the defendant have used the force that caused the injury. All that the statute requires is that a bodily injury occur and that the injury was causally linked to the conduct of the defendant. . . . There is [] a difference between a defendan's causation of an injury and the defendant's use of force. Consequently, Vargas-Duran's use of force was simply not a fact necessary to support his conviction for intoxication assault." Id. at 606. In other words, even apart from the intentionality issue, there could conceivably be ways of violating the intoxication assault statute (and causing serious bodily injury) without using force, since the statute explicitly requires only proof of injury, not proof of force. For that reason, the Court found that intentional use of force was not an element of the statute.

Section 22.01(a)(1) of the Texas assault statute similarly requires only that a defendant "intentionally, knowingly, or recklessly cause[] bodily injury to another," and does not specify that force is actually used. Therefore, the holding of Vargas-Duran II, which distinguishes causation of injury from use of force, seems to be at odds with Shelton, which reasons that the requirement to show injury under Section 22.01(a)(1) necessarily signifies that force was used. Furthermore, the Vargas-Duran II panel approvingly cited a Second Circuit case finding that "just as risk of injury does not necessarily involve the risk of the use of force, the intentional causation of injury does not necessarily involve the use of force." Chrzanoski v. Ashcroft, 327 F.3d 188, 195 (2d Cir. 2003); see also Vargas Duran II, 356 F.3d at 605 n.10. Vargas-Duran II nowhere cites or even mentions Shelton, however, leaving ambiguous the issue of whether or not it actually overruled that case.

United States v. Villegas-Hernandez

A recent Fifth Circuit opinion, on which Defendant urges the Court to rely, clearly views Shelton as questionable at best in light of Vargas-Duran II. United States v. Villegas-Hernandez, 468 F.3d 874 (5th Cir. 2006). In Villegas-Hernandez, the Fifth Circuit again asked whether a conviction for assault under Section 22.01(a)(1) qualifies as a crime of violence, in that case for the purpose of a sentence enhancement under 2L1.2(b)(1)(C) of the Sentencing Guidelines. According to the Villegas-Hernandez Court, a crime of violence under Section 2L1.2 must involve force that is not only intentional, but also "destructive or violent." Id. at 879. In examining the language of Section 22.01(a)(1), however, the Court found that "[t]he bodily injury required by Section 22.01(a)(1) . . . could result from any of a number of acts, without use of 'destructive or violent force' . . . Thus, use of force is not an element of assault under Section 22.01(a)(1), and the assault offense does not fit [the relevant] definition for crime of violence." Id. For example, a defendant could violate the assault statute without force by "making available to the victim a poisoned drink while reassuring him the drink is safe, or telling the victim he can safely back his car out while knowing an approaching car driven by an independently acting third party will hit the victim." Id. These acts, the Villegas-Hernandez panel reasoned, would violate the assault statute, but would not involve force. Therefore, a conviction under Section 22.01(a)(1) cannot categorically be qualified as a "crime of violence."

The panel recognized that its holding directly conflicts with Shelton. Id. at 880. In examining earlier case law, the panel noted Vargas-Duran II and its citation of Chrzanoski, and wrote that "[b]ecause the en banc opinion in Vargas-Duran comes after Shelton, which is itself a panel opinion, and because of Shelton's heavy reliance on the panel opinion in Vargas-Duran which was later reversed en banc, we feel compelled to decide [the instant case] on the basis of the principles set down in Vargas-Duran and Calderon-Pena rather than in reliance on Shelton. On this basis we conclude that although Section 22.01(a)(l) requires that the defendant 'intentionally, knowingly, or recklessly cause[s] bodily injury to another,' that section may be violated by the defendant so causing such injury by means other than the actual, attempted, or threatened 'use of physical force against the person of another,' and hence does not have such use of force as an element . . . ". Id. at 882. Therefore, although Vargas-Duran II did not explicitly overrule Shelton, and without saying outright that it had, the VillegasHernandez panel treated Shelton for all intents and purposes as overruled.

The government argues essentially that the analysis of the Villegas-Hernandez panel was incorrect, and that Vargas-Duran II left Shelton intact. In the face of two conflicting holdings (Villegas-Hernandez and Shelton), then, this Court would be obliged to follow the older opinion. Soc'y of Separationists, Inc. v. Herman, 939 F.2d 1207, 1211 (5th Cir. 1991). In the Court's view, however, the teachings of the en banc opinion in Vargas-Duran II contradict the teachings of Shelton to such an extent that Shelton is no longer good law.

It is true that the principal holding of Vargas-Duran II (regarding the intentionality requirement) is inapplicable to the assault statute examined in Shelton, Villegas-Hernandez, and the instant case. The Court finds it impossible, however, to disregard the language in Vargas-Duran II on the question of whether causation of a bodily injury necessarily signifies the use of force, which is squarely at issue in examining the Texas assault statute. In Vargas-Duran II, the Fifth Circuit sitting en banc found that because there is a difference between a defendant's causation of an injury and the defendant's use of force, "Vargas-Duran's use of force was simply not a fact necessary to support his conviction for intoxication assault." Vargas-Duran II, 356 F.3d at 606. This conclusion appears from all angles to be a holding, not merely dicta, and the Court must recognize its applicability to the assault statute, which similarly requires only causation of "bodily injury," rather than proof that force was actually used. Regardless of whether the Vargas-Duran II Court explicitly mentioned Shelton, it eviscerated Shelton's central holding. For this reason, and until the Fifth Circuit provides clearer guidance on the issue, the Court believes that the most correct course is to treat Shelton as overruled.

Therefore, the Court follows Vargas-Duran II and Villegas-Hernandez in finding that Defendant's conviction for assault under Texas Penal Code § 22.01(a)(l) does not constitute a crime of violence. Because there is no predicate offense, Count One of the indictment, alleging a violation of 18 U.S.C. § 922(g)(9), must be dismissed.

III. CONCLUSION

Defendant's Motion to Dismiss Count One of the Indictment is hereby GRANTED.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

SIGNED at Houston, Texas, on this the 10th day of July, 2007.

/s/ KEITH P. ELLISON
KEITH P. ELLISON
United States District Judge

APPENDIX D

UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS
FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT

No. 07-20798

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, PLAINTIFF-APPELLANT

v.

REGINALD KEITH HAGEN, DEFENDANT-APPELLEE

[Filed: Mar. 3, 2010]

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Southern District ofTexas, Houston

---

ON MOTION FOR HEARING EN BANC

Before: JOLLY, BENAVIDES, and HAYNES, Circuit Judges

(X) No member of the panel nor judge in regular active service of the court having requested that the court be polled on Hearing En Banc (FED. R. APP. P. and 5TH CIR. R. 35), the Motion for Hearing En Banc is DENIED.

( ) The court having been polled at the request of one of the members of the court and a majority of the judges who are in regular active service and not disqualified not having voted in favor (FED. R. APP. P. and 5TH CIR. R. 35), the Motion for Hearing En Banc is DENIED.

ENTERED FOR THE COURT:

ILLEGIBLE
United States Circuit Judge

Order on mot for hearing En Banc-REHG8

APPENDIX E

UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS
FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT

No. 07-20798

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, PLAINTIFF-APPELLANT

v.

REGINALD KEITH HAGEN, DEFENDANT-APPELLEE

[Filed: Mar. 3, 2010]

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Southern District of Texas, Houston

---

ON PETITION FOR REHEARING EN BANC

(Opinion _____, 5 Cir. _____, _____, F.3d _____)

Before: HIGGINBOTHAM, and STEWART, Circuit Judges, and FELDMAN, District Judge.*

PER CURIAM:

(X) Treating the Petition for Rehearing En Banc as a Petition for Panel Rehearing, the Petition for Panel Rehearing is DENIED. No member of the panel nor judge in regular active service of the court having requested that the court be polled on Rehearing En Banc (FED. R. APP. P. and 5TH CIR. R. 35), the Petition for Rehearing En Banc is DENIED.

* District Judge, Eastern District of Louisiana, sitting by designation

( ) Treating the Petition for Rehearing En Banc as a Petition for Panel Rehearing, the Petition for Panel Rehearing is DENIED. The court having been polled at the request of one of the members of the court and a majority of the judges who are in regular active service and not disqualified not having voted in favor (FED. R. APP. P. and 5TH CIR. R. 35), the petition for Rehearing En Banc is DENIED.

ENTERED FOR THE COURT:

ILLEGIBLE
United States Circuit Judge

Order on pet EB treat as pan reh-REHG6A

APPENDIX F

[FOLDOUT]

[FOLDOUT]

APPENDIX G

[FOLDOUT]

APPENDIX H

1. 18 U.S.C. 921 provides in pertinent part:

Definitions

(a) As used in this chapter—

* * * * *

(33)(A) * * * the term "misdemeanor crime of domestic violence" means an offense that—

(i) is a misdemeanor under Federal, State, or Tribal[3] law; and

(ii) has, as an element, the use or attempted use of physical force, or the threatened use of a deadly weapon, committed by a current or former spouse, parent, or guardian of the victim, by a person with whom the victim shares a child in common, by a person who is cohabitating with or has cohabitated with the victim as a spouse, parent, or guardian, or by a person similarly situated to a spouse, parent, or guardian of the victim[.]

* * * * *

2. 18 U.S.C. 922 provides in pertinent part:

Unlawful acts

* * * * *

(g) It shall be unlawful for any person—

* * * * *

---

[3] So in original. Probably should not be capitalized.

(9) who has been convicted in any court of a misdemeanor crime of domestic violence, to ship or transport in interstate or foreign commerce, or possess in or affecting commerce, any firearm or ammunition; or to receive any firearm or ammunition which has been shipped or transported in interstate or foreign commerce.

* * * * *

3. Texas Penal Code § 22.01 (West Supp. 2009) provides in pertinent part:

Assault

(a) A person commits an offense if the person:

(1) intentionally, knowingly, or recklessly causes bodily injury to another, including the person's spouse;

(2) intentionally or knowingly threatens another with imminent bodily injury, including the person's spouse; or

(3) intentionally or knowingly causes physical contact with another when the person knows or should reasonably believe that the other will regard the contact as offensive or provocative.

* * * * *