21	COMPLAINT
22	The United States of America, acting under the direction of the Attorney General
23	of the United States, brings this civil antitrust action to obtain equitable relief against
24	Defendant eBay, Inc. ("eBay"), alleging as follows:
25	NATURE OF THE ACTION
26	1. This action challenges under Section 1 of the Sherman Act a no-
27	solicitation and no-hiring agreement between eBay and Intuit, Inc. ("Intuit"), pursuant
28	to which eBay and Intuit agreed not to recruit each other's employees and eBay agreed

not to hire Intuit employees, even those that approached eBay for a job. This agreement harmed employees by lowering the salaries and benefits they might otherwise have commanded, and deprived these employees of better job opportunities at the other company. Meg Whitman, then the CEO of eBay, and Scott Cook, Founder and Chairman of the Executive Committee at Intuit, were intimately involved in forming, monitoring, and enforcing this anticompetitive agreement.

- 2. Senior executives at eBay and Intuit entered into an evolving "handshake" agreement to restrict their ability to recruit and hire employees of the other company. The agreement, which was entered into no later than 2006, prohibited either company from soliciting one another's employees for employment opportunities, and, for over a year, prevented at least eBay from hiring any employees from Intuit at all. The agreement was enforced at the highest levels of each company.
- 3. The agreement reduced eBay's and Intuit's incentives and ability to compete for employees and restricted employees' mobility. This agreement thus harmed employees by lowering the salaries and benefits they otherwise would have commanded, and deprived these employees of better job opportunities at the other company.
- 4. This agreement between eBay and Intuit is a naked restraint of trade that is per se unlawful under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. The United States seeks an order prohibiting any such agreement and other relief.

JURISDICTION AND VENUE

5. eBay hires specialized computer engineers, scientists, and other employees throughout the United States, and sells products and services throughout the United States. Such activities, including the recruitment and hiring activities at issue in this Complaint, are in the flow of and substantially affect interstate commerce. The Court has subject matter jurisdiction under Section 4 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 4, and under 28 U.S.C. §§ 1331 and 1337 to prevent and restrain the Defendant from violating Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1.

6. Venue is proper in this judicial district under Section 12 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 22, and under 28 U.S.C. § 1391(b)(2), (c). eBay transacts or has transacted business in this district and has its principal place of business here. A substantial part of the events that gave rise to this action occurred here.

INTRADISTRICT ASSIGNMENT

7. Venue is proper in the San Jose Division because this action arose primarily in Santa Clara County. Civil L.R. 3-2(c), (e). A substantial part of the events that gave rise to the claim occurred in Santa Clara County, and eBay has its principal place of business in Santa Clara County. Judge Koh in the San Jose Division is currently presiding over a case that is similar in certain respects. In addition, the Attorney General of the State of California is filing a Complaint that is related to the United States' Complaint, pursuant to the requirements of Local Rule 3-12(a).

DEFENDANT

8. eBay is a Delaware corporation with its principal place of business in San Jose, California.

CO-CONSPIRATORS

9. Various other corporations and persons not made defendants in this Complaint, including Intuit and senior executives at Intuit and eBay, participated as co-conspirators in the violation alleged and performed acts and made statements in furtherance of the violation alleged. Intuit is not named as a defendant in this action because Intuit is subject to a court order in United States v. Adobe Systems, No. 10-01629 (D.D.C. judgment entered Mar. 17, 2011), barring it from entering into or enforcing any agreement that improperly limits competition for employee services.

TRADE AND COMMERCE

10. Firms in the same or similar industries often compete to hire and retain talented employees. This is particularly true in technology industries in which particular expertise and highly specialized skills sought by one firm can often be found at another firm. Solicitation of skilled employees at other companies is an effective method of competing for needed employees. For example, Beth Axelrod, eBay's Senior Vice President for Human Resources at the time the agreement with Intuit was in effect, co-authored a book, "The War for Talent," which emphasizes the importance of "cold-calling" as a recruitment tool: "The recruiting game is changing for yet another reason: It's no longer sufficient to target your efforts to people looking for a job; you have to reach people who aren't looking."

- harmed employees by reducing the salaries, benefits, and employment opportunities they might otherwise have earned if competition had not been eliminated. The agreement also misallocated labor between eBay and Intuit—companies that drove innovation based in no small measure on the talent of their employees. In a well-functioning labor market, employers compete to attract the most valuable talent for their needs. Competition among employers for skilled employees may benefit employees' salaries and benefits, and facilitates employee mobility. The no-solicitation and no-hiring agreement between Intuit and eBay distorted this competitive process and likely resulted in some of eBay's and Intuit's employees remaining in jobs that did not fully utilize their unique skills. Ms. Axelrod and her co-authors described how the "structural forces fueling the war for talent" have resulted in power "shift[ing] from the corporation to the individual," giving "talented individuals . . . the negotiating leverage to ratchet up their expectation for their careers."
- and Intuit called a truce in the "war for talent" to protect their own interests at the expense of their employees. eBay initially sought a limited no-solicitation agreement aimed at high-level executives. eBay ultimately agreed to an expansive no-solicitation and no-hire agreement in large part to placate Intuit's Mr. Cook, who was serving as a member of eBay's Board of Directors and who, at the same time, was making several complaints on behalf of Intuit about eBay's hiring practices. eBay elevated the interests of Mr. Cook above the welfare of its own employees. Similarly, Mr. Cook was willing to sacrifice the welfare of Intuit's employees in order to advance his own personal interests in serving on eBay's Board.

agreement or ensured that all potentially affected employees were aware of the agreement. Disclosure of the agreement could have created substantial legal problems for eBay and Intuit under California law and significant embarrassment for the executives and other individuals who entered into, and monitored compliance with, the agreement on behalf of the two firms. Many eBay and Intuit employees reside in California, a state with a strong public policy prohibiting firms from restricting employee movement by, among other things, barring employers from enforcing "no compete" agreements. California law provides that "every contract by which anyone is restrained from engaging in a lawful profession, trade, or business of any kind is to that extent void." California Business & Professions Code § 16600.

THE UNLAWFUL AGREEMENT

- 14. Beginning no later than 2006, and lasting at least until 2009, Intuit and eBay maintained an illegal agreement that restricted their ability to actively recruit employees from each other, and for some part of that time, further restricted eBay from hiring any employees from Intuit. As alleged in more detail below, this agreement was entered into and enforced at the most senior levels of these two companies.
- 15. In November 2005, eBay's Chief Operating Officer, Maynard Webb, wrote to Scott Cook, Intuit's Founder and Chairman of its Executive Committee, to "get [Mr. Cook's] advice on a specific hiring situation and then see if we could establish some guidelines on an ongoing basis." Mr. Webb asked Mr. Cook for "permission to proceed" with hiring an Intuit employee who had contacted eBay regarding a job, and then proposed a "structure" to Mr. Cook for future situations, whereby eBay would "not actively recruit from Intuit." Under Mr. Webb's proposal, for Intuit candidates "below Senior Director level" who contacted eBay regarding employment, eBay would be permitted to hire them and would give Intuit "notice" only after a candidate accepted a job offer. For Intuit candidates "at Senior Director level or above," eBay would not make an offer unless Intuit was notified in advance. Mr. Cook rejected this proposal insofar as it allowed hiring of any employees without prior notice to Intuit, saying that "we don't recruit from board companies, period" and "[w]e're passionate on this." In other words, because Mr. Cook served on eBay's board, Intuit employees should be denied any chance to work for eBay. Mr. Cook committed that Intuit would not make an offer to anyone from eBay without first notifying eBay, and said "[w]e would ask the same."

- 16. A month later, in December 2005, Meg Whitman, the CEO of eBay at the time, and Mr. Cook discussed the competition for two employees with an eye toward eliminating that competition altogether. As Ms. Whitman told Ms. Axelrod, Mr. Cook was "slightly miffed by our recent hire of two Intuit executives."
- 17. No later than August 2006, the initial agreement between eBay and Intuit restricting the hiring of each other's employees was put into effect. In August 2006, when eBay considered hiring an Intuit employee for an opening at its PayPal subsidiary, Ms. Axelrod said that while she was "happy to have a word with Meg [Whitman] about it," Ms. Axelrod was "quite confident she will say hands off because Scott [Cook] insists on a no poach policy with Intuit." When the PayPal executive asked Ms. Axelrod to confer with Ms. Whitman, Ms. Axelrod reported back that "I confirmed with Meg [Whitman] that we cannot proceed without notifying Scott Cook first." eBay does not appear to have pursued the potential candidate beyond this point as everyone agreed "that it's to[o] awkward to call Scott [Cook] when we don't even know if the candidate has interest," demonstrating that the non-solicitation agreement had a distinct chilling effect on recruitment and hiring between the two companies.
- 18. On or about April 2007, eBay's commitment metastasized into a no-hire agreement. The impetus was a complaint from Mr. Cook to Ms. Whitman that he was "quite unhappy" about a potential offer that eBay was going to make to an Intuit employee who had approached eBay. Ms. Axelrod spoke with Ms. Whitman regarding

Mr. Cook's concerns, and instructed David Knight, then eBay's Vice President, Internal Communications, to hold off on making the offer. Mr. Knight urged Ms. Axelrod to find a way to make the offer happen, as the decision put the applicant "in a tough position and us in a bad place with California law" and left eBay "another 6 months away from getting another candidate" for the position. A week later, Mr. Knight wrote to Ms. Axelrod and Ms. Whitman pleading with them to at least "negotiate" any shift from a "no poaching" agreement to a "no hiring" agreement after this particular applicant was hired, as eBay "desperately need[ed] this position filled."

- 19. While Ms. Axelrod ultimately authorized Mr. Knight to extend an offer to this Intuit employee, eBay did expand the agreement to prohibit eBay from hiring any employee from Intuit, regardless of how that employee applied for the job. A few months later, for example, an eBay human resources manager alerted Ms. Axelrod to a potential "situation" and wanted to know if eBay "continue[d] to be sensitive to Scott [Cook]'s request" or if there was "any flexibility on hiring from Intuit." The Intuit candidate was "getting a lot of responses from managers directly" before the human resource manager's team was involved as his "education is fantastic." Ms. Axelrod confirmed, however, that even when an Intuit employee was "dying" to work for eBay and had proactively reached out to eBay, hiring managers had "no flexibility" and must keep their "hands off" the potential applicant.
- 20. Two eBay staffers sought to clarify the situation with Ms. Axelrod shortly thereafter. Ms. Axelrod said: "We have an explicit hands of[f] that we cannot violate with any Intuit employee. There is no flexibility on this." The staff asked for further amplification: "This applies even if the Intuit employee has reached out and specifically asked? If so then I assume that person could NEVER be hired by ebay unless they quit Intuit first." Ms. Axelrod confirmed this was "correct." Ms. Axelrod similarly explained the impact of the agreement to Ms. Whitman: "I keep getting inquiries from our folks to recruit from Intuit and I am firmly holding the line. No exceptions even if the candidate proactively contacts us." In another email exchange,

Ms. Axelrod explained that she was responding to all inquiries regarding hiring from Intuit by "firmly holding the line and saying absolutely not (including to myself since their comp[ensation] and ben[efits] person is supposed to be excellent!)."

- 21. Mr. Cook was a driving force behind eBay's no-hire agreement with Intuit. In one 2007 e-mail, an eBay recruiter confirmed to Intuit that the message to Intuit candidates should be that eBay was "not allowed to hire from Intuit per Scott Cook regardless of whether the candidate applies directly or if we reach out." eBay recruiting personnel understood that "Meg [Whitman] and Scott Cook entered into the agreement (handshake style, not written) that eBay would not hire from Intuit, period." Mr. Cook and Intuit, on the other hand, agreed that Intuit would not recruit from eBay. Mr. Cook explained to one applicant who had decided to work for eBay but expressed a future interest in joining Intuit, that "Intuit is precluded from recruiting you" unless eBay has decided it does not need the employee or where the employee informs his management and then proactively contacts Intuit.
- 22. eBay insisted that Intuit refrain from recruiting its employees in exchange for the limitation on eBay's ability to recruit and hire Intuit employees. On August 27, 2007, Ms. Axelrod wrote Ms. Whitman to complain that while eBay was sticking to its agreement not to hire Intuit employees, "it is hard to do this when Intuit recruits our folks." Ms. Axelrod forwarded Ms. Whitman a recruiting flyer that Intuit had sent to an eBay employee. Ms. Whitman forwarded Ms. Axelrod's e-mail to Mr. Cook the same day asking him to "remind your folks not to send this stuff to eBay people." Mr. Cook responded quickly: "#@!%$#^&!!! Meg my apologies. I'll find out how this slip up occurred again. . . ."
- 23. Throughout the course of the agreement, eBay repeatedly declined opportunities to hire or interview Intuit employees, even when eBay had open positions for "quite some time," when the potential employee "look[ed] great," or when "the only guy who was good was from [I]ntuit." eBay employees were instructed not to pursue potential hires that came from Intuit and to discard their resumes. When a candidate applied for a position and told eBay that she had left Intuit, Ms. Axelrod went so far as to write Mr. Cook to confirm that the applicant had, in fact, left the company.

- 24. The companies acknowledged that throughout the agreement, they "passed" on "talented" applicants, consistent with their anticompetitive agreement. The repeated requests from lower level employees at both companies to be allowed to recruit employees from the other firm demonstrates that the agreement denied employees the opportunity to compete for better job opportunities.
- 25. The agreement between eBay and Intuit remained in effect for at least some period of time after a United States Department of Justice investigation of agreements between technology companies that restricted hiring practices became public. One eBay employee asked another in June 2009 if she had been "able to connect with Beth [Axelrod] re our policies around hiring from Intuit with respect to" a former employee at eBay's PayPal division who "wishes to return" and noted press reports of the Department of Justice investigation. The employee responded: "It's a no go too complicated. We should move to plan b." (Ellipses in original.)

VIOLATION ALLEGED

(Violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act)

- 26. The United States hereby incorporates paragraphs 1 through 25.
- 27. eBay and Intuit are direct competitors for employees, including specialized computer engineers and scientists, covered by the agreement at issue here. eBay and Intuit entered into a naked no-solicitation and no-hire agreement, thereby reducing their ability and incentive to compete for employees. This agreement suppressed competition between eBay and Intuit, thereby limiting affected employees' ability to secure better compensation, benefits, and working conditions.
- 28. eBay's agreement with Intuit is per se unlawful under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. No elaborate industry analysis is required to demonstrate the anticompetitive character of this agreement.

The no-solicitation and no-hire agreement between eBay and Intuit is also 29. an unreasonable restraint of trade that is unlawful under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, under an abbreviated or "quick look" rule of reason analysis. The principal tendency of the agreement between eBay and Intuit is to restrain competition, as the nature of the restraint is obvious and the agreement has no legitimate procompetitive justification. Even an observer with a rudimentary understanding of economics could therefore conclude the agreement would have an anticompetitive effect on employees and harm the competitive process.

REQUESTED RELIEF

The United States requests that:

- the Court adjudge and decree that the Defendant's agreement with Intuit not to (A) compete constitutes an illegal restraint of interstate trade and commerce in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act;
- the Defendant be enjoined and restrained from enforcing or adhering to any (B) existing agreement that unreasonably restricts competition for employees between it and anyone else;
- (C) the Defendant be permanently enjoined and restrained from establishing any similar agreement unreasonably restricting competition for employees except as prescribed by the Court;
- (D) the United States be awarded such other relief as the Court may deem just and proper to redress and prevent recurrence of the alleged violation and to dissipate the anticompetitive effects of the illegal agreement entered into by eBay and Intuit: and
- the United States be awarded the costs of this action. (E)
