

From: mo[REDACTED] [mailto:mo[REDACTED]] ] On Behalf Of Christopher Wilcox
Sent: Monday, June 18, 2012 1:33 PM
To: Read, John
Subject: small business owner opposes DOJ position on agency model pricing of ebooks

John Read
Chief, Litigation III Section
Antitrust Division
U.S. Department of Justice
450 5th Street, NW, Suite 4000
Washington, DC 20530

Dear Mr. Read:

The position taken by the Department of Justice in its suit against Apple and five major publishers with agency model pricing for e-books is bad for consumers of books because it is bad for competition. Placing even more power in the hands of the bookselling monopoly Amazon.com by allowing it to resume predatory pricing of ebooks is a mistake that will have dire consequences including severely limiting the selection of quality books as well as the channels through which readers discover books. As the owner of a rural, independent bookstore with both a downtown and online presence, I am deeply concerned that the DOJ is conflating widgets with intellectual property, thus further tilting the playing field as my business struggles to compete with a behemoth that already has unfair advantages such as selling merchandise to my neighbors on a tax-free basis. Unlike a printed book, an ebook is not a hybrid commodity; with the latter, a buyer purchases only a limited licence to view intellectual property owned by an author and/or publisher. In the case of ebooks, the retailer invests only in promoting the work, not paying the publisher until after a sale is completed. This amounts to a consignment rather than a wholesale arrangement, and so the publisher should be free to set prices for their products without fear of having their content devalued by a mass-merchandise who would use borrowed intellectual property as a loss leader. If there was collusion between certain publishers and Apple to set prices, the DOJ should handle that as a matter separate from the general practice of agency model pricing which promotes competition and reader choice. I respectfully submit that the draft settlement agreement between the DOJ and Hachette, Simon & Schuster and HarperCollins be revised accordingly. Thank you for your consideration.

Cordially,
Chris Wilcox, owner
City Lights Bookstore
Sylva, North Carolina

828-586-9499
3 East Jackson Street
Sylva, NC 28779

more@citylightsnc.com

Open 9 am to 9 pm Monday-Saturday, and 10 am to 3 pm Sunday

* Now you don't have to choose between buying eBooks and supporting your local, independent bookseller! Order e-books for your Nook, iPad, iPhone, Android, Xoom, netbook, notebook, desktop, and more! Shop locally at <http://www.citylightsnc.com>