I'm no lawyer, but I'm starting to think I'm being taken advantage of as a musician in today's digital streaming climate, where companies take the music rights and intercept all the money paid by the consumer and/or the advertiser.

I especially don't want to have to wonder whether or not I can trust the publishing agency I'm with, as a result of them being forced to engage in any practice by the government, especially if it's going to limit or hinder the artists rights, freedoms, or profits.

Please do not force anyone to anything with their music rights. It's that simple.
