

From: Jeffrey Clark (b) (6)
Sent: Thursday, December 31, 2020 9:26 AM
To: Clark, Jeffrey (CIV) <jefclark@CIV.USDOJ.GOV>
Subject: Emailing: Gohmert v. Pence - PI Opp - Civ. No. 20-0660 (E.D. Tex.) 2020.12.30 11 p.m_+jvc CLEAN JBC.docx
Attach: Gohmert v. Pence - PI Opp - Civ. No. 20-0660 (E.D. Tex.) 2020.12.30 11 p.m_+jvc CLEAN JBC.docx

---

Attached.

(b) (6), (b) (5)

---

From: Lewis Sessions <lsessions@sessionslaw.net>

Sent: Tuesday, December 29, 2020 5:21 PM

To: Healy, Christopher (CIV) (b) (6) Senanayake, Tanya (CIV) (b) (6)

Subject: FW: Activity in Case 6:20-cv-00660-JDK Gohmert et al v. Pence Order

---

From: txedCM@txed.uscourts.gov <txedCM@txed.uscourts.gov>

Sent: Tuesday, December 29, 2020 4:14 PM

To: txedcmcc@txed.uscourts.gov

Subject: Activity in Case 6:20-cv-00660-JDK Gohmert et al v. Pence Order

This is an automatic e-mail message generated by the CM/ECF system. Please DO NOT RESPOND to this e-mail because the mail box is unattended.

***NOTE TO PUBLIC ACCESS USERS*** Judicial Conference of the United States policy permits attorneys of record and parties in a case (including pro se litigants) to receive one free electronic copy of all documents filed electronically, if receipt is required by law or directed by the filer. PACER access fees apply to all other users. To avoid later charges, download a copy of each document during this first viewing. However, if the referenced document is a transcript, the free copy and 30 page limit do not apply.

U.S. District Court

Eastern District of TEXAS [LIVE]

Notice of Electronic Filing

The following transaction was entered on 12/29/2020 at 4:13 PM CST and filed on 12/29/2020

Case Name: Gohmert et al v. Pence

Case Number: 6:20-cv-00660-JDK

Filer:

Document Number: No document attached

Docket Text:

MINUTE ORDER: The Court ORDERS that a briefing schedule will be set on Plaintiffs emergency motion (Docket No. 2) after Plaintiffs file proof of service in accordance with Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 4(i). (ksd)

6:20-cv-00660-JDK Notice has been electronically mailed to:

William Lewis Sessions lsessions@sessionslaw.net

Howard Kleinhendler howard@kleinhendler.com (b) (6)

Lawrence J Joseph ljoseph@larryjoseph.com, info@larryjoseph.com

Timothy P Dowling (b) (6)

Timothy P Dowling

6:20-cv-00660-JDK Notice will not be electronically mailed to:

(b) (5)

From: (b) (6)
Sent: Friday, January 1, 2021 12:49 PM
To: Coghlan, John (CIV) <jcoghlan@civ.usdoj.gov>
Subject: Gohmert v. Pence: Dowling motion to intervene

Happy New Year, Mr. Coghlan.

I have read Defendant's response filed yesterday (Document No. 18). I see that we both share the belief that Plaintiffs' request for declaratory and injunctive relief should be denied.

Please let me know if you have any objection to me filing a pleading in this case stating that Defendant has no objection to my motion to intervene. Thank you.

Tim
1/1/21, 11:49am Central

(b) (6), (b) (5)

From: DCD_ECFNotice@dcd.uscourts.gov<mailto:DCD_ECFNotice@dcd.uscourts.gov>
<DCD_ECFNotice@dcd.uscourts.gov<mailto:DCD_ECFNotice@dcd.uscourts.gov>>
Sent: Tuesday, November 03, 2020 12:29 PM
To: DCD_ECFNotice@dcd.uscourts.gov<mailto:DCD_ECFNotice@dcd.uscourts.gov>

Subject: Activity in Case 1:20-cv-02295-EGS NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF COLORED PEOPLE v. UNITED STATES POSTAL SERVICE et al Order on Motion for Order

This is an automatic e-mail message generated by the CM/ECF system. Please DO NOT RESPOND to this e-mail because the mail box is unattended.

***NOTE TO PUBLIC ACCESS USERS*** Judicial Conference of the United States policy permits attorneys of record and parties in a case (including pro se litigants) to receive one free electronic copy of all documents filed electronically, if receipt is required by law or directed by the filer. PACER access fees apply to all other users. To avoid later charges, download a copy of each document during this first viewing. However, if the referenced document is a transcript, the free copy and 30 page limit do not apply.

U.S. District Court

District of Columbia
Notice of Electronic Filing

The following transaction was entered on 11/3/2020 at 12:28 PM EDT and filed on 11/3/2020

Case Name:

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF COLORED PEOPLE v. UNITED STATES POSTAL SERVICE et al

Case Number:

1:20-cv-02295-EGS<<https://ecf.dcd.uscourts.gov/cgi-bin/DktRpt.pl?221243>>

Filer:

Document Number:

No document attached

Docket Text:

MINUTE ORDER granting [67] Motion for Further Relief. It is hereby ORDERED that, beginning no later than 12:30 PM EST today, Defendants shall send Postal Service inspectors or their designees, to processing facilities in the following Districts and direct them to sweep the facilities between 12:30 PM EST and 3:00 PM EST to ensure that no ballots have been held up and that any identified ballots are immediately sent out for delivery: Central Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, Detroit, Colorado/Wyoming, Atlanta, Houston, Alabama, Northern New England, Greater South Carolina, South Florida, Lakeland, and Arizona. Alternatively, Defendants may satisfy this paragraph if inspectors from the USPS Office of Inspector General ("OIG") are available to oversee the sweep of processing facilities described in the previous sentence. No later than 4:30 PM EST today, Defendants shall file a status update certifying compliance with this paragraph upon confirming, in the most efficient manner available, that sweeps were conducted and that no ballots were left behind. To be clear, the inspectors themselves need not provide any certifications to the Court. It is FURTHER ORDERED that by no later than 4:30 PM EST today, Defendants shall identify the 27 processing centers at which the OIG was onsite and the list of facilities that the Postal Inspectors have observed since October 19, 2020, unless OIG raises an objection to the identification of these sites. Signed by Judge Emmet G. Sullivan on 11/3/2020. (lcegs3)

1:20-cv-02295-EGS Notice has been electronically mailed to:

Allison Marcy Zieve azieve@citizen.org<<mailto:azieve@citizen.org>>, LitFileNotify@citizen.org<<mailto:LitFileNotify@citizen.org>>

Samuel Spital sspital@naacpldf.org<<mailto:sspital@naacpldf.org>>

Joseph Evan Borson (b) (6) <mailto:(b) (6)>

John Robinson (b) (6) <mailto:(b) (6)>

Brianne Jenna Gorod brianne@theusconstitution.org<mailto:brianne@theusconstitution.org>, dayna@theusconstitution.org<mailto:dayna@theusconstitution.org>

Douglas N. Letter douglas.letter@mail.house.gov<mailto:douglas.letter@mail.house.gov>, ogc.ecf@mail.house.gov<mailto:ogc.ecf@mail.house.gov>

Kuntal Virendra Cholera (b) (6) <mailto:(b) (6)>

1:20-cv-02295-EGS Notice will be delivered by other means to::

(b) (6), (b) (5)

From: txedCM@txed.uscourts.gov <txedCM@txed.uscourts.gov>

Sent: Friday, January 1, 2021 11:04 AM

To: txedcmcc@txed.uscourts.gov

Subject: Activity in Case 6:20-cv-00660-JDK Gohmert et al v. Pence Response in Support of Motion

This is an automatic e-mail message generated by the CM/ECF system. Please DO NOT RESPOND to this e-mail because the mail box is unattended.

***NOTE TO PUBLIC ACCESS USERS*** Judicial Conference of the United States policy permits attorneys of record and parties in a case (including pro se litigants) to receive one free electronic copy of all documents filed electronically, if receipt is required by law or directed by the filer. PACER access fees apply to all other users. To avoid later charges, download a copy of each document during this first viewing. However, if the referenced document is a transcript, the free copy and 30 page limit do not apply.

U.S. District Court

Eastern District of TEXAS [LIVE]

Notice of Electronic Filing

The following transaction was entered by Sessions, William on 1/1/2021 at 10:04 AM CST and filed on 1/1/2021

Case Name: Gohmert et al v. Pence

Case Number: 6:20-cv-00660-JDK

Filer: Tyler Bowyer
Nancy Cottle
Louie Gohmert
Jake Hoffman
Anthony Kern
James R. Lamon
Robert Montgomery
Sam Moorhead
Loraine Pellegrino
Greg Safsten
Kelli Ward
Michael Ward

Document Number: 30

Docket Text:

RESPONSE in Support re [2] Emergency MOTION for Preliminary Injunction AND EXPEDITED DECLARATORY JUDGMENT, [27] Unopposed MOTION for Extension of Time to File Plaintiff's Reply Brief filed by Tyler Bowyer, Nancy Cottle, Louie Gohmert, Jake Hoffman, Anthony Kern, James R. Lamon, Robert Montgomery, Sam Moorhead, Loraine Pellegrino, Greg Safsten, Kelli Ward, Michael Ward. (Attachments: # (1) Exhibit Exhibit A, # (2) Exhibit Exhibit B, # (3) Exhibit Exhibit C, # (4) Errata Exhibit D, # (5) Exhibit Exhibit E)(Sessions, William)

6:20-cv-00660-JDK Notice has been electronically mailed to:

Alan Hamilton Kennedy alan.kennedy@aya.yale.edu

Douglas N. Letter douglas.letter@mail.house.gov

Howard Kleinhendler howard@kleinhendler.com, (b) (6)

John V. Coghlan john.coghlan2@usdoj.gov

Julia Zsuzsa Haller (b) (6)

Lawrence J Joseph ljoseph@larryjoseph.com, info@larryjoseph.com

Timothy P Dowling (b) (6)

Timothy P Dowling

William Lewis Sessions lsessions@sessionslaw.net

Wm. Charles Bundren charles@bundrenlaw.net

6:20-cv-00660-JDK Notice will not be electronically mailed to:

The following document(s) are associated with this transaction:

Document description:Main Document

Original filename:n/a

Electronic document Stamp:

[STAMP dcecfStamp_ID=1041545818 [Date=1/1/2021] [FileNumber=12765936-0]
][023c4a74367d1755be7c51043b95dae93b30938d28c01f82e3fc7c515074be26a8a
84ace51150fe9b2516e816a6a694131d6cb905c66975d28b804bd6c2d943c]]

Document description:Exhibit Exhibit A

Original filename:n/a

Electronic document Stamp:

[STAMP dcecfStamp_ID=1041545818 [Date=1/1/2021] [FileNumber=12765936-1]
][7523b5ad64b4bd24967cdfb4a76604a1eb0418635e310889c4d1cee855420bf58d2 b79b92f8600299f50e48ee91e3c1130c874f6747a6b755a9500fb7af4a4c5]]

Document description:Exhibit Exhibit B

Original filename:n/a

Electronic document Stamp:

[STAMP dcecfStamp_ID=1041545818 [Date=1/1/2021] [FileNumber=12765936-2]
][267c3252ada311e38f000e7b66ec65392ce8f085954d48886f7ba58076b7b2023d5
33971f6a41ed79665a31a77b31f8e7e972bb6b4318ed6b7623f773ae990b3]]

Document description:Exhibit Exhibit C

Original filename:n/a

Electronic document Stamp:

[STAMP dcecfStamp_ID=1041545818 [Date=1/1/2021] [FileNumber=12765936-3]
][1d58370b42e877837038e64654b3b8a5798dda5751dacc51fadb6961949c53d7ded a5fe5c31f766a70a10afcb81ab03414eb43597501c91652ccb60d4de7222e]]

Document description:Errata Exhibit D

Original filename:n/a

Electronic document Stamp:

[STAMP dcecfStamp_ID=1041545818 [Date=1/1/2021] [FileNumber=12765936-4]
][7dc8c822a4b22a878f83d97b636bd3870ec0e4400e2ad6d47e79c935af6e2de159a d65442e86093a5a1c3c1a92504f33bc764be411a657126a332f61494e5d42]]

Document description:Exhibit Exhibit E

Original filename:n/a

Electronic document Stamp:

[STAMP dcecfStamp_ID=1041545818 [Date=1/1/2021] [FileNumber=12765936-5]
][37b49a0ab892273259fb52734d631cd1378f43f47d1582c82a2bb9c96154f3c143a 23e65c15a294322e59f8b6f983d135cfdcd6a6d7d56c8d385e26d673395f]]

From: txedCM@txed.uscourts.gov <txedCM@txed.uscourts.gov>
Sent: Friday, January 1, 2021 8:58 AM
To: txedcmcc@txed.uscourts.gov
Subject: Activity in Case 6:20-cv-00660-JDK Gohmert et al v. Pence Motion to Intervene

This is an automatic e-mail message generated by the CM/ECF system. Please DO NOT RESPOND to this e-mail because the mail box is unattended.

***NOTE TO PUBLIC ACCESS USERS*** Judicial Conference of the United States policy permits attorneys of record and parties in a case (including pro se litigants) to receive one free electronic copy of all documents filed electronically, if receipt is required by law or directed by the filer. PACER access fees apply to all other users. To avoid later charges, download a copy of each document during this first viewing. However, if the referenced document is a transcript, the free copy and 30 page limit do not apply.

U.S. District Court

Eastern District of TEXAS [LIVE]

Notice of Electronic Filing

The following transaction was entered by Bundren, Wm. on 1/1/2021 at 7:58 AM CST and filed on 1/1/2021

Case Name: Gohmert et al v. Pence
Case Number: 6:20-cv-00660-JDK
Filer: Michele Lundgren
Marian Sheridan
Meshawn Maddock
Mari-Ann Henry
Amy Facchinello

Document Number: 25

Docket Text:

Unopposed MOTION to Intervene INTERVENORS MICHELE LUNDGREN ET.AL.S UNOPPOSED MOTION TO INTERVENE by Michele Lundgren, Marian Sheridan, Meshawn Maddock, Mari-Ann Henry, Amy Facchinello. (Attachments: # (1) Exhibit Intervenor Lundgren's Original Complaint, # (2) Text of Proposed Order)(Bundren, Wm.)

6:20-cv-00660-JDK Notice has been electronically mailed to:

Alan Hamilton Kennedy alan.kennedy@aya.yale.edu

Douglas N. Letter douglas.letter@mail.house.gov

Howard Kleinhendler howard@kleinhendler.com, (b) (6)

John V. Coghlan john.coghlan2@usdoj.gov

Lawrence J Joseph ljoseph@larryjoseph.com, info@larryjoseph.com

Timothy P Dowling

Timothy P Dowling

(b) (6)

William Lewis Sessions lsessions@sessionslaw.net

Wm. Charles Bundren charles@bundrenlaw.net

6:20-cv-00660-JDK Notice will not be electronically mailed to:

The following document(s) are associated with this transaction:

Document description:Main Document

Original filename:n/a

Electronic document Stamp:

[STAMP dcecfStamp_ID=1041545818 [Date=1/1/2021] [FileNumber=12765918-0]
] [236a03dbc446d554242c3ed3302025dd3a2267df597dd33d73fa3dc5b4bf6ce2c7e
265ade6a59dcabdd5657415943cfc4e07554d490b4856d35928f53b5f10f4]]

Document description:Exhibit Intervenor Lundgren's Original Complaint

Original filename:n/a

Electronic document Stamp:

[STAMP dcecfStamp_ID=1041545818 [Date=1/1/2021] [FileNumber=12765918-1]
] [1937b2fb4d9c0b9c61fbff732b869b473dbb0551f7d821d48739fb78bb97a092a76 b4bee1994cfc06a2440591973664d8aafe964fb2a58f8f43ddb0e0498b3bc]]

Document description:Text of Proposed Order

Original filename:n/a

Electronic document Stamp:

[STAMP dcecfStamp_ID=1041545818 [Date=1/1/2021] [FileNumber=12765918-2]
] [63e181ecd5eec963bb71306fcb4425f19d267fa50a031d687b53f9b840f88776c28
18008afe79617f2dbe6809c7ed1788cbc4dbd6933d2e5e738861a4d8ca624]]

(b) (6), (b) (5)

From: txedCM@txed.uscourts.gov <txedCM@txed.uscourts.gov>
Sent: Thursday, December 31, 2020 6:06 PM
To: txedcmcc@txed.uscourts.gov
Subject: Activity in Case 6:20-cv-00660-JDK Gohmert et al v. Pence Trial Brief

This is an automatic e-mail message generated by the CM/ECF system. Please DO NOT RESPOND to this e-mail because the mail box is unattended.

***NOTE TO PUBLIC ACCESS USERS*** Judicial Conference of the United States policy permits attorneys of record and parties in a case (including pro se litigants) to receive one free electronic copy of all documents filed electronically, if receipt is required by law or directed by the filer. PACER access fees apply to all other users. To avoid later charges, download a copy of each document during this first viewing. However, if the referenced document is a transcript, the free copy and 30 page limit do not apply.

U.S. District Court

Eastern District of TEXAS [LIVE]

Notice of Electronic Filing

The following transaction was entered by Letter, Douglas on 12/31/2020 at 5:05 PM CST and filed on 12/31/2020

Case Name: Gohmert et al v. Pence
Case Number: 6:20-cv-00660-JDK
Filer: U.S. House of Representatives
Document Number: 22

Docket Text:

TRIAL BRIEF Proposed Amicus Brief by U.S. House of Representatives. (Letter, Douglas)

6:20-cv-00660-JDK Notice has been electronically mailed to:

Alan Hamilton Kennedy alan.kennedy@aya.yale.edu

Douglas N. Letter douglas.letter@mail.house.gov

Howard Kleinhendler howard@kleinhendler.com (b) (6)

John V. Coghlan john.coghlan2@usdoj.gov

Lawrence J Joseph ljoseph@larryjoseph.com, info@larryjoseph.com

Timothy P Dowling (b) (6)

Timothy P Dowling

William Lewis Sessions lsessions@sessionslaw.net

6:20-cv-00660-JDK Notice will not be electronically mailed to:

The following document(s) are associated with this transaction:

Document description:Main Document

Original filename:n/a

Electronic document Stamp:

[STAMP dcecfStamp_ID=1041545818 [Date=12/31/2020] [FileNumber=12765858-0] [57b0230c09d0dd35995a7aa324e06908331530313d101cad93fe24d1428eb5dec198dd2a05fc86fceb0f0af1d910b6f6787a8ac412b9fe08771ad7097da8e2d]]

(b) (6), (b) (5)

---

From: ljoseph@larryjoseph.com <ljoseph@larryjoseph.com>

Sent: Wednesday, January 6, 2021 11:39 AM

To: SupremeCtBriefs (SMO); (b) (6)

Cc: 'Howard Kleinhendler' <howard@kleinhendler.com>; 'Lewis Sessions' <lsessions@sessionslaw.net>; 'Sidney Powell' <sidney@federalappeals.com>; Coghlan, John (CIV) <jcoghlan@civ.usdoj.gov>; (b) (6)

Subject: Gohmert v. Pence, No. __A__

Dear counsel,

Attached please find a copy of an emergency application for interim relief against the Vice President of the United States.

To ensure timely notice to the respondent, we also copy the respondent's federal counsel from the Court of Appeals and the Counsel to the Office of the Vice President.

Please do not hesitate to contact me with any questions on this matter, but Sidney Powell (copied here) is the applicants' counsel of record.

Best regards,

Larry

*Law Office of Lawrence J. Joseph
1250 Connecticut Ave., NW, Ste. 700-1A
Washington, DC 20036
Tel: 202-355-9452
Fax: 202-318-2254
Email: ljoseph@larryjoseph.com*

From: Clark, Jeffrey (CIV)
To: Letter, Douglas
Cc: Griffiths, John (CIV); Coghlan, John (CIV)
Subject: Re: Gohmert suit in Texas
Date: Wednesday, December 30, 2020 9:06:28 PM

---

I'm sure Doug. I've no doubt.

Jeff

Sent from my iPhone

On Dec 30, 2020, at 8:28 PM, Letter, Douglas (b) (6) wrote:

Jeff

Thank you so much for your message and your consent.

I hope that the SG memo that was giving you trouble today was not one from Civil Appellate!!!! And if it was, I can assure you that, had I still been the Civil Appellate Director, you would have had no problem at all with it!

*Douglas N. Letter
General Counsel
Office of General Counsel
U.S. House of Representatives
219 Cannon House Office Building
Washington, DC 20515*

(b) (6)

From: Clark, Jeffrey (CIV) (b) (6)
Sent: Wednesday, December 30, 2020 8:24 PM
To: Letter, Douglas (b) (6)
Cc: Griffiths, John (CIV) (b) (6); Coghlan, John (CIV) (b) (6)
Subject: Re: Gohmert suit in Texas

Doug,

Thanks. You and I have met once or twice in the past going back to my 2001-2005 stint at DOJ.

We will back in touch on your questions when we can. But I can say now that we consent to you seeking amicus status.

Apologies for delay. I meant to message you earlier but it is a busy time and I got deep into revising an SG memo and that was occupying all of the space in my mind this afternoon.

Best regards,

Jeff

Sent from my iPhone

On Dec 30, 2020, at 7:51 PM, Letter, Douglas

(b) (6) wrote:

Jeff and John

I am checking in on this first to make sure you saw my message. Second, I would like to see if there is any chance of conferring, either tonight or tomorrow morning. Third, can you at least tell me that you consent to a motion by the House to file an amicus brief?

I look forward to hearing from you.

All the best --

*Douglas N. Letter
General Counsel
Office of General Counsel
U.S. House of Representatives
219 Cannon House Office Building
Washington, DC 20515*

(b) (6)

From: Letter, Douglas

Sent: Wednesday, December 30, 2020 12:26 PM

To: Griffiths, John (CIV) (b) (6)

(b) (6) John Coghlan (b) (6) Jeffrey Clark

Subject: Gohmert suit in Texas

Jeff and John

I don't know if we ever dealt with each other while I was at DOJ (I was there for 40 years in the Civil Division, and retired in early 2017, as the Director of Civil Appellate; in 2018, I became the General Counsel of the House of Representatives).

I am getting in touch because I would like to discuss with you (or other appropriate people) as soon as possible what DOJ will be saying in its briefing due tomorrow afternoon in the case brought by Rep. Gohmert and others. As you can imagine, this case is of immense interest to the House as an institution, particularly because it asserts that the Electoral Count Act is unconstitutional, despite the fact that all of the states and the House and Senate have been operating under that statute for more than 130 years. And the complaint is attempting to get the court to interfere with the Joint Session that the House and Senate will shortly be convening, with defendant Vice President Pence as the presiding official.

The House is contemplating filing a short amicus brief, either when your brief for VP Pence is due or very soon thereafter. If we file such a brief, we would be arguing that the relief sought by the complaint should be denied. We would be focusing primarily on jurisdictional/justiciability points. Our primary argument would likely be based on some combination of laches and res judicata (although we would probably not use the latter term) – the claims here or ones like them were already raised by the sham Arizona electors in the state and federal courts in Arizona and rejected; it is clearly wrong for them to now go to a court in Texas to ask that court to override what the Arizona courts did. We also will probably make some standing arguments based on lack of cognizable injury and redressability. We will also likely include a short discussion of the merits.

Depending on what DOJ will be arguing for defendant VP Pence, it might be that there is no reason for the House to file any amicus brief at all. In particular, we hope that DOJ will be making a strong laches argument.

Is it possible for us to have a discussion as early as possible this afternoon about these matters? I am currently available at almost any time. I am best reached at this point on (b) (6)

In any event, if we do decide to file an amicus brief for the House, can we tell the court that (following DOJ policy) DOJ consents to such a filing?

In addition, I hope that you can tell me now if DOJ will be declining to defend the constitutionality of the ECA. If DOJ will be doing that, as you know, there is an obligation under 28 USC 530D to timely notify me and other House/Senate officials of that.

If my message should be forwarded to others in DOJ, please do so. I look forward to hearing from you soon. Thank you for "listening."

Douglas N. Letter
General Counsel
Office of General Counsel
U.S. House of Representatives
219 Cannon House Office Building
Washington, DC 20515

(b) (6)

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF TEXAS
TYLER DIVISION

THE HONORABLE LOUIE
GOHMERT, et al.,

Plaintiffs,

V.

THE HONORABLE MICHAEL R.
PENCE, in his official capacity as Vice President of the United States,

Defendant.

Case No. 6:20-cv-660-JDK

ORDER OF DISMISSAL

This case challenges the constitutionality of the Electoral Count Act of 1887, as codified at 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 15. The Court cannot address that question, however, without ensuring that it has jurisdiction. See, e.g., U.S. CONST. art. III, § 2; Cary v. Curtis, 44 U.S. 236, 245 (1845). One crucial component of jurisdiction is that the plaintiffs have standing. This requires the plaintiffs to show a personal injury that is fairly traceable to the defendant’s allegedly unlawful conduct and is likely to be redressed by the requested relief. See, e.g., U.S. CONST. art. III, § 2; Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560–61 (1992). Requiring plaintiffs to make this showing helps enforce the limited role of federal courts in our constitutional system.

The problem for Plaintiffs here is that they lack standing. Plaintiff Louie Gohmert, the United States Representative for Texas’s First Congressional District, alleges at most an institutional injury to the House of Representatives. Under well-settled Supreme Court authority, that is insufficient to support standing. Raines v.

Byrd, 521 U.S. 811, 829 (1997).

The other Plaintiffs, the slate of Republican Presidential Electors for the State of Arizona (the “Nominee-Electors”), allege an injury that is not fairly traceable to the Defendant, the Vice President of the United States, and is unlikely to be redressed by the requested relief.

Accordingly, as explained below, the Court lacks subject matter jurisdiction over this case and must dismiss the action.

I.

A.

The Electors Clause of the U.S. Constitution requires that each state appoint, in the manner directed by the state’s legislature, the number of presidential electors to which it is constitutionally entitled. U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1, cl. 2. Under the Twelfth Amendment, each state’s electors meet in their respective states and vote for the President and Vice President. U.S. CONST. amend XII. The electors then certify the list of their votes and transmit the sealed lists to the President of the United States Senate—that is, the Vice President of the United States. The Twelfth Amendment then provides that, “[t]he President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and the votes shall then be counted.” Id. A candidate winning a majority of the electoral votes wins the Presidency. However, if no candidate obtains a majority of the electoral votes, the House of Representatives is to choose the President—with each state delegation having one vote. Id.

The Electoral Count Act, informed by the Hayes-Tilden dispute of 1876, sought to standardize the counting of electoral votes in Congress. Stephen A. Siegel, The Conscientious Congressman's Guide to the Electoral Count Act of 1887, 56 FLA. L. REV. 541, 547–50 (2004). Section 5 makes states' determinations as to their electors, under certain circumstances, "conclusive" and provides that these determinations govern the counting of electoral votes. 3 U.S.C. § 5. Section 15 requires a joint session of Congress to count the electoral votes on January 6, with the President of the Senate presiding. Id. § 15.

During that session, the President of the Senate calls for objections on the electoral votes. Written objections submitted by at least one Senator and at least one Member of the House of Representatives trigger a detailed dispute-resolution procedure. Id. Most relevant here, Section 15 requires both the House of Representatives and the Senate—by votes of their full membership rather than by state delegations—to decide any objection. The Electoral Count Act also gives the state governor a role in certifying the state's electors, which Section 15 considers in resolving objections. Id. § 6.

It is these dispute-resolution procedures that Plaintiffs challenge in this case.

B.

On December 14, 2020, electors convened in each state to cast their electoral votes. Id. § 7; Docket No. 1 ¶ 5. In Arizona, the Democratic Party's slate of eleven electors voted for Joseph R. Biden and Kamala D. Harris. These votes were certified by Arizona Governor Doug Ducey and Arizona Secretary of State Katie Hobbs and submitted as required under the Electoral Count Act. Docket No. 1 ¶ 22. That same day, the Nominee-Electors state that they also convened in Arizona and voted for Donald J. Trump and Michael R. Pence. Id. ¶ 20. Similar actions took place in Georgia, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin, and Michigan (with Arizona, the “Contested States”). Id. ¶ 20–21. Combined, the Contested States represent seventy-three electoral votes. See id. ¶ 23.

On December 27, Plaintiffs filed this lawsuit, alleging that there are now “competing slates” of electors from the Contested States and asking the Court to declare that the Electoral Count Act is unconstitutional and that the Vice President has the “exclusive authority and sole discretion” to determine which electoral votes should count. Id. ¶ 73. They also ask for a declaration that “the Twelfth Amendment contains the exclusive dispute resolution mechanisms” for determining an objection raised by a Member of Congress to any slate of electors and an injunction barring the Vice President from following the Electoral Count Act. Id. On December 28, Plaintiffs filed an Emergency Motion for Expedited Declaratory Judgment and Emergency Injunctive Relief (“Emergency Motion”). Docket No. 2. Plaintiffs request “an expedited summary proceeding” under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 57. Id.

On December 31, the Vice President opposed Plaintiffs’ motion. Docket No. 18.

II.

As mentioned above, before the Court can address the merits of Plaintiff’s Emergency Motion, it must ensure that it has subject matter jurisdiction. See, e.g., Cary, 44 U.S. at 245 (“The courts of the United States are all limited in their nature and constitution, and have not the powers inherent in courts existing by prescription or by the common law.”); DaimlerChrysler Corp. v. Cuno, 547 U.S. 332, 340–41 (2006)

(“If a dispute is not a proper case or controversy, the courts have no business deciding it, or expounding the law in the course of doing so.”). Article III of the U.S. Constitution limits federal courts to deciding only “cases” or “controversies,” which ensures that the judiciary “respects ‘the proper—and properly limited—role of the courts in a democratic society.’” DaimlerChrysler, 547 U.S. at 341 (quoting Allen v. Wright, 468 U.S. 737, 750 (1984)); see also Raines, 521 U.S. at 828 (quoting United States v. Richardson, 418 U.S. 166, 192 (1974)) (“Our regime contemplates a more restricted role for Article III courts . . . ‘not some amorphous general supervision of the operations of government.’”).

“[A]n essential and unchanging part of the case-or-controversy requirement of Article III” is that the plaintiff has standing. Lujan, 504 U.S. at 560. The standing requirement is not subject to waiver and requires strict compliance. E.g., Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 349 n.1 (1996); Raines, 521 U.S. at 819. A standing inquiry is “especially rigorous” where the merits of the dispute would require the Court to determine whether an action taken by one of the other two branches of the Federal Government is unconstitutional. Raines, 521 U.S. at 819–20 (citing Bender v. Williamsport Area Sch. Dist., 475 U.S. 534, 542 (1986), and Valley Forge Christian Coll. v. Ams. United for Separation of Church & St., Inc., 454 U.S. 464, 473–74 (1982)). This is because “the law of Art. III standing is built on a single basic idea—the idea of separation of powers.” Allen, 468 U.S. at 752, abrogated on other grounds by Lexmark Int’l, Inc. v. Static Control Components, Inc., 572 U.S. 118, 128 (2014). Article III standing “enforces the Constitution’s case-or-controversy requirement.”

DaimlerChrysler Corp., 547 U.S. at 342 (quoting Elk Grove Unified Sch. Dist. v. Newdow, 542 U.S. 1, 11 (2004)). And “[n]o principle is more fundamental to the judiciary’s proper role in our system of government than the constitutional limitation of federal-court jurisdiction to actual cases or controversies.” Raines, 521 U.S. at 818.

Article III standing requires a plaintiff to show: (1) that he “has suffered an ‘injury in fact’ that is (a) concrete and particularized and (b) actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical”; (2) that “the injury is fairly traceable to the challenged action of the defendant”; and (3) that “it is likely, as opposed to merely speculative, that the injury will be redressed by a favorable decision.” El Paso Cnty. v. Trump, 982 F.3d 332, 336 (5th Cir. 2020) (quoting Friends of the Earth, Inc. v. Laidlaw Env’t. Servs. (TOC), Inc., 528 U.S. 167, 180–81 (2000)). “The party invoking federal jurisdiction bears the burden of establishing these elements,” and “each element must be supported in the same way as any other matter on which the plaintiff bears the burden of proof, i.e., with the manner and degree of evidence required at the successive stages of the litigation.” Lujan, 504 U.S. at 561. “At the pleading stage, general factual allegations of injury resulting from the defendant’s conduct may suffice.” Id.

III.

Here, Plaintiffs have failed to demonstrate that they have standing to bring the claim alleged in Count I of their complaint.

A.

The first Plaintiff is the Representative for Texas’s First Congressional District, the Honorable Louie Gohmert. Congressman Gohmert argues that he will be injured because “he will not be able to vote as a Congressional Representative in accordance with the Twelfth Amendment.” Docket No. 2 at 4. Specifically, Congressman Gohmert argues that on January 6, 2021, when Congress convenes to count the electoral votes for President and Vice President, he “will object to the counting of the Arizona slate of electors voting for Biden and to the Biden slates from the remaining Contested States.” Docket No. 1 ¶ 6. If a member of the Senate likewise objects, then under Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act, each member of the House and Senate is entitled to vote to resolve the objections, which Congressman Gohmert argues is inconsistent with the state-by-state voting required under the Twelfth Amendment. Docket No. 2 at 5. Congressman Gohmert argues that the Vice President’s compliance with the procedures of the Electoral Count Act will directly cause his alleged injury. Id. at 7. And he argues that a declaration that Sections 5 and 15 of the Electoral Count Act are unconstitutional would redress his alleged injury. Id. at 9–10.

Congressman Gohmert’s argument is foreclosed by Raines v. Byrd, which squarely held that Members of Congress lack standing to bring a claim for an injury suffered “solely because they are Members of Congress.” 521 U.S. at 821. And that is all Congressman Gohmert is alleging here. He does not identify any injury to himself as an individual, but rather a “wholly abstract and widely dispersed” institutional injury to the House of Representatives. Id. at 829. Congressman Gohmert does not allege that he was “singled out for specially unfavorable treatment as opposed to other Members of their respective bodies,” does not claim that he has “been deprived of something to which [he] personally [is] entitled,” and does not allege a “loss of any private right, which would make the injury more concrete.” Id. at 821 (emphasis in original). Congressman Gohmert’s alleged injury is “a type of institutional injury (the diminution of legislative power), which necessarily damages all Members of Congress.” Id. Under these circumstances, the Supreme Court held in Raines, a Member of Congress does not have “a sufficient ‘personal stake’” in the dispute and lacks “a sufficiently concrete injury to have established Article III standing.” Id. at 830.

For the first time in their reply brief, Plaintiffs assert that Congressman Gohmert has standing as a Texas voter, relying on League of United Latin Am. Citizens, Dist. 19 v. City of Boerne, 659 F.3d 421, 430 (5th Cir. 2011). Docket No. 30 at 30, 33–34. The Court disagrees. In LULAC, the Fifth Circuit held that an individual voter had standing to challenge amendments to the City of Boerne’s city council election scheme that would allegedly deprive him of a “pre-existing right to vote for certain offices.” 659 F.3d at 430. That is not the case here. Congressman Gohmert does not allege that he was denied the right to vote in the 2020 presidential election. Rather, he asserts that under the Electoral Count Act, “he will not be able to vote as a Congressional Representative in accordance with the Twelfth Amendment.” Docket No. 2 at 4 (emphasis added). Because Congressman Gohmert is asserting an injury in his role as a Member of Congress rather than as an individual voter, Raines controls.

Further weighing against Congressman Gohmert's standing here is the speculative nature of the alleged injury. "To establish Article III standing, an injury must be 'concrete, particularized, and actual or imminent.'" Clapper v. Amnesty Int'l USA, 568 U.S. 398, 409 (2013) (quoting Monsanto Co. v. Geertson Seed Farms, 561 U.S. 139, 149 (2010)); see also Lujan, 504 U.S. at 560 (quoting Whitmore v. Arkansas, 495 U.S. 149, 155 (1990)) (alleged injury cannot be "conjectural" or "hypothetical"). "Although imminence is concededly a somewhat elastic concept, it cannot be stretched beyond its purpose, which is to ensure that the alleged injury is not too speculative for Article III purposes—that the injury is certainly impending." Clapper, 568 U.S. at 409 (quoting Lujan, 504 U.S. at 565 n.2).

Here, Congressman Gohmert's alleged injury requires a series of hypothetical—but by no means certain—events. Plaintiffs presuppose what the Vice President will do on January 6, which electoral votes the Vice President will count or reject from contested states, whether a Representative and a Senator will object under Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act, how each member of the House and Senate will vote on any such objections, and how each state delegation in the House would potentially vote under the Twelfth Amendment absent a majority electoral vote. All that makes Congressman Gohmert's alleged injury far too uncertain to support standing under Article III. Id. at 414 ("We decline to abandon our usual reluctance to endorse standing theories that rest on speculation about the decisions of independent actors.").

Accordingly, the Court finds that Congressman Gohmert lacks standing to bring the claim alleged here.

B.

The Nominee-Electors argue that they have standing under the Electors Clause “as candidates for the office of Presidential Elector because, under Arizona law, a vote cast for the Republican Party’s President and Vice President is cast for the Republican Presidential Electors.” Docket No. 2 at 6 (citing ARIZ. REV. STAT. § 16-212). The Nominee-Electors were injured, Plaintiffs contend, when Governor Ducey unlawfully certified and transmitted the “competing slate of Biden electors” to be counted in the Electoral College. Id. at 7.

This alleged injury, however, is not fairly traceable to any act of the Vice President. Nor is it an injury likely to be redressed by a favorable decision here. See Friends of the Earth, 528 U.S. at 180–81.<sup>1</sup> Plaintiffs do not allege that the Vice President had any involvement in the “certification and transmission of a competing

---

<sup>1</sup> The Court need not decide whether the Nominee-Electors were “candidates” under Arizona law. Plaintiffs cite Carson v. Simon, in which the Eighth Circuit held that prospective presidential electors are “candidates” under Minnesota law and have standing to challenge how votes are tallied in Minnesota. 978 F.3d 1051, 1057 (8th Cir. 2020). But the U.S. District Court for the District of Arizona has distinguished Carson, holding that presidential electors in Arizona are ministerial and are “not candidates for office as the term is generally understood” under Arizona law. Bowyer v. Ducey, — F. Supp. 3d —, 2020 WL 7238261, at *4 (D. Ariz. Dec. 9, 2020); see also Feehan v. Wis. Elections Comm’n, No. 20-CV-1771-PP, 2020 WL 7250219, at *12 (E.D. Wis. Dec. 9, 2020) (nominee-elect is not a candidate under Wisconsin law). “Arizona law makes clear that the duty of an Elector is to fulfill a ministerial function, which is extremely limited in scope and duration, and that they have no discretion to deviate at all from the duties imposed by the statute.” Bowyer, 2020 WL 7238261, at *4 (citing ARIZ. REV. STAT. § 16-212(c)). Arizona voters, moreover, vote “for their preferred presidential candidate,” not any single elector listed next to the presidential candidates’ names. Id. (citing ARIZ. REV. STAT. § 16-507(b)). The court in Bowyer therefore held that nominee-electors in Arizona lacked standing to sue state officials for alleged voting irregularities. See id. In any event, even if the Nominee-Electors had standing to sue state officials to redress the injury alleged here, they have not done so. Plaintiffs have named only the Vice President, and they have not shown “a fairly traceable connection between [their] injury and the complained-of conduct of defendant.” E.g., Steel Co. v. Citizens for a Better Env’t, 523 U.S. 83, 103 (1998).

slate of Biden electors.” Docket No. 2 at 7. Nor could they. See 3 U.S.C. § 6. That act is performed solely by the Arizona Governor, who is a “third party not before the court.” Lujan, 504 U.S. at 560–61 (quoting Simon v. Eastern Ky. Welfare Rts. Org., 426 U.S. 26, 41–42 (1976)). Indeed, Plaintiffs acknowledge that their injury was caused by Arizona officials in Arizona, the “Vice President did not cause [their] injury,” and their “unlawful injuries [were] suffered in Arizona.” Docket No. 2 at 7.

The Nominee-Electors argue that their injury is nevertheless fairly traceable to the Vice President because he will “ratify and purport to make lawful the unlawful injuries that Plaintiffs suffered in Arizona.” Id. For support, Plaintiffs cite Sierra Club v. Glickman, in which the Fifth Circuit held that an environmental injury was fairly traceable to the Department of Agriculture, even though the injury was directly caused by third-party farmers, because the Department had “the ability through various programs to affect the pumping decisions of those third party farmers to such an extent that the plaintiff’s injury could be relieved.” 156 F.3d 606, 614 (5th Cir. 1998). Nothing like that is alleged here. The Vice President’s anticipated actions on January 6 will not affect the decision of Governor Ducey regarding the certification of presidential electors—which occurred more than two weeks ago on December 14. Even “ratifying” or “making lawful” the Governor’s decision, as Plaintiffs argue will occur here, will not have any “coercive effect” on Arizona’s certification of electoral votes. See Bennett v. Spear, 520 U.S. 154, 168–69 (1997).

For similar reasons, the Nominee-Electors’ claimed injury is not likely to be redressed here. To satisfy redressability, Plaintiffs must show that it is “likely” their alleged injury will be “redressed by a favorable decision.” Lujan, 504 U.S. at 561. But here, Plaintiffs seek declaratory and injunctive relief as to the manner of the Vice President’s electoral vote count. See Docket No. 1 ¶ 73. Such relief will not resolve their alleged harm with respect to Governor Ducey’s electoral vote certification. See Docket No. 2 at 7. As the Supreme Court has long held, “a federal court can act only to redress injury that fairly can be traced to the challenged action of the defendant, and not injury that results from the independent action of some third party not before the court.” Simon, 426 U.S. at 41–42; see also El Paso Cnty., 982 F.3d at 343 (plaintiff lacks standing where an order granting the requested relief “would not rescind,” and “accordingly would not redress,” the allegedly harmful act).

Even if their injury were the loss of the right to vote in the Electoral College, see Docket No. 2 at 6, Plaintiffs’ requested relief would not redress that injury. Plaintiffs are not asking the Court to order the Vice President to count the Nominee-Electors’ votes, but rather that the Vice President “exercise the exclusive authority and sole discretion in determining which electoral votes to count for a given State,” or alternatively, to decide that no Arizona electoral votes should count. See Docket No. 1 ¶ 73. It is well established that a plaintiff lacks standing where it is “uncertain that granting [the plaintiff] the relief it wants would remedy its injuries.” Inclusive Comtys. Project, Inc. v. Dep’t of Treasury, 946 F.3d 649, 657–58 (5th Cir. 2019).

Accordingly, the Court finds that the Nominee-Electors lack standing.<sup>2</sup>

---

<sup>2</sup> Plaintiffs Hoffman and Kern claim without supporting argument that they have standing as members of the Arizona legislature. Docket No. 2 at 4. This claim fails for the reasons Congressman Gohmert’s standing argument fails. See supra Part III.A.

IV.

Because neither Congressman Gohmert nor the Nominee-Electors have standing here, the Court is without subject matter jurisdiction to address Plaintiffs' Emergency Motion or the merits of their claim. HSBC Bank USA, N.A. as Tr. for Merrill Lynch Mortg. Loan v. Crum, 907 F.3d 199, 202 (5th Cir. 2018). The Court therefore DISMISSES the case without prejudice.

So ORDERED and SIGNED this 1st day of January, 2021.

_____
JEREMY D. KERNODLE
UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF TEXAS
TYLER DIVISION

LOUIE GOHMERT, et al.,

Plaintiffs,

v.

THE HONORABLE MICHAEL R. PENCE,
VICE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, in his official capacity,

Defendant.

Civil Action No. 6:20-cv-00660-JDK

BRIEF OF THE U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES AS AMICUS CURIAE
IN SUPPORT OF DISMISSAL

TABLE OF CONTENTS

INTRODUCTION AND INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE .....	1
BACKGROUND .....	3
A.    The Relevant Constitutional And Statutory Scheme .....	3
B.    The 2020 Election .....	5
C.    Plaintiffs’ Suit Before This Court .....	8
ARGUMENT .....	8
I.    Plaintiffs Lack Standing.....	9
A.    Representative Gohmert Lacks Standing.....	9
B.    The Arizona Plaintiffs Lack Standing.....	12
II.   The Laches Doctrine Bars Plaintiffs’ Claims .....	14
III.  Plaintiffs Are Not Entitled To The Extraordinary Equitable Relief They Seek.....	19
CONCLUSION.....	22
CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE

INTRODUCTION AND INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE

Amicus curiae, the United States House of Representatives, has a direct and immediate interest in this case.<sup>1</sup> Plaintiffs ask this Court to displace Congress’s longstanding role in counting the votes of the Electoral College in Presidential elections. The unprecedented relief plaintiffs seek would invalidate the primary role of Congress in counting electoral votes—a role that Congress has played in our constitutional system for more than two hundred years and has been embodied in a federal statute since 1887. In a radical departure from our constitutional procedures and consistent legislative practices, it would authorize the Vice President to ignore the will of the Nation’s voters and to choose the winner in an election in which the holder of the office will often be a candidate, as is true in the 2020 election. To achieve this extraordinary result, plaintiffs filed suit on the eve of the Joint Session of Congress, when electoral votes are counted, to ask this Court to strike down an Act of Congress—“the gravest and most delicate duty that this Court is called on to perform,” Blodgett v. Holden, 275 U.S. 142, 148 (1927) (opinion of Holmes, J.). This belated and disruptive effort to impose a novel legal rule is at odds with sound judicial process, the limited role of the Article III courts, constitutional text, and American history.

Pursuant to the Twelfth Amendment, following each Presidential election, each state’s properly designated electors meet in their respective states, certify lists of all electors who voted for President and Vice President, and transmit their lists to the President of the United States Senate. After that process, “[t]he President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and the votes shall then be counted.” U.S. Const. amend. XII.

---

<sup>1</sup> The Bipartisan Legal Advisory Group (BLAG) of the U.S. House of Representatives, which “speaks for, and articulates the institutional position of, the House in all litigation matters,” has authorized the filing of an amicus brief in this matter. Rules of the U.S. House of Representatives (116th Cong.), Rule II.8(b), <https://perma.cc/M25F-496H>. The BLAG comprises the Honorable Nancy Pelosi, Speaker of the House, the Honorable Steny H. Hoyer, Majority Leader, the Honorable James E. Clyburn, Majority Whip, the Honorable Kevin McCarthy, Republican Leader, and the Honorable Steve Scalise, Republican Whip. Representative McCarthy and Representative Scalise dissented.

This Court should reject plaintiffs’ effort to overturn Congress’s centuries-old role in counting electoral votes and resolving disputes about them in the constitutionally mandated Joint Session. In 1865, Congress formalized its primacy in counting electoral votes with the passage of the 22d Joint Rule, which specified a procedure for resolving objections.<sup>2</sup> Since the Presidential election of 1888, Congress has conducted the Joint Session pursuant to procedures set forth in the Electoral Count Act of 1887. Consistent with the text of the Twelfth Amendment, the Electoral Count Act assigns a ministerial role to the Vice President as President of the Senate. The Vice President opens the electors’ certificates, but does not count the votes. Congress designed the Electoral Count Act to ensure an orderly process for it to count the electoral votes and thus enhance public confidence in Presidential elections. Traditionally, Congress has also adopted a concurrent resolution before each such electoral count that incorporates the Electoral Count Act’s provisions by reference.<sup>3</sup>

Plaintiffs’ motion should be denied and their complaint dismissed for multiple reasons. This Court has no jurisdiction over plaintiffs’ claims because plaintiffs lack standing. Plaintiffs’ delay in bringing their claims independently warrants dismissal based on the doctrine of laches. Their constitutional challenges have no merit. And the public interest and equities cut strongly against a first-of-its-kind injunction that would rewrite longstanding procedural rules for Congressional vote counting and create confusion just days before the required Joint Session.

---

<sup>2</sup> Subcomm. on Compilation of Precedents, Counting Electoral Votes, H.R. Misc. Doc. No. 44-13, at 148 (1877) (House of Representatives); id. at 224 (Senate). Compare 3 U.S.C. § 15.

<sup>3</sup> See Dechsler’s Precedents, ch. 10, § 2.6.

Setting aside Representative Gohmert’s claims—for which he clearly lacks standing—this case is simply another attempt by defeated Arizona electoral nominees to overturn the results of the popular vote in their state. The Arizona plaintiffs have tried and failed to overturn the election in suits they filed in federal and state courts in Arizona. Thus, they now ask this Court in Texas to help them achieve what they failed to do in Arizona. This Court should reject plaintiffs’ bid to overturn a cornerstone of our Nation’s democratic processes.

BACKGROUND

A. The Relevant Constitutional And Statutory Scheme

1. Every four years, voters nationwide cast their ballots in the Presidential election. See U.S. Const., Art. II, § 1, cl. 3; 3 U.S.C. § 1. Those votes “go toward selecting members of the Electoral College.” Chiafalo v. Washington, 140 S. Ct. 2316, 2319 (2020). The Constitution provides that the electors are, in turn, empowered to elect the President and Vice President. U.S. Const. amend. XII. “Each State shall appoint, in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a Number of Electors, equal to the whole Number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress[.]” U.S. Const., Art. II, § 1, cl. 2. This constitutional power to appoint electors “gives the States far-reaching authority over presidential electors.” Chiafalo, 140 S. Ct. at 2324; accord McPherson v. Blacker, 146 U.S. 1, 27 (1892) (states have “broadest power of determination” over who may serve as an elector).

The Constitution also addresses the process for electoral voting: The Twelfth Amendment requires that electors “meet in their respective states,” cast ballots for President and Vice President, “sign and certify” their votes, and transmit the results “sealed to the seat of government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate.” U.S. Const. amend. XII. The Amendment further provides that “[t]he President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and the votes shall then be counted.” Id.

2. Consistent with these constitutional requirements, Congress has long established the process needed to carry out the Twelfth Amendment responsibilities of casting and counting electoral votes. See generally Stephen A. Siegel, The Conscientious Congressman’s Guide to the Electoral Count Act of 1887, 56 Fla. L. Rev. 541, 551-53 (2004) (Conscientious Congressman’s Guide) (describing historical understanding of electoral vote counting).

Although Congress had been responsible for counting electoral votes and resolving disputes about them since the early days of our Nation, the Electoral Count Act, 24 Stat. 373, 3 U.S.C. §§ 5-6, 15-18, sought to clarify—and codify—Congress’s role in the wake of the disputed 1876 Presidential election. See Siegel, Conscientious Congressman’s Guide, 56 Fla. L. Rev. at 547-50. For more than 130 years, the Electoral Count Act has governed the electoral voting process, and its procedures have been followed in every election since its enactment. See Cong. Rsch. Serv., RL32717, Counting Electoral Votes: An Overview of Procedures at the Joint Session, Including Objections by Members of Congress (Dec. 8, 2020), <https://perma.cc/8TS3-8873>.

The Electoral Count Act, as revised and in conjunction with other statutes, establishes procedures by which electoral votes must be cast and counted, culminating with the final count in the Joint Session of Congress on January 6. See 3 U.S.C. §§ 5-8, 15. The statute assigns primary responsibility to the states for resolving challenges to electoral slates, id. § 5; requires state executives to certify final vote counts and send those counts to the Archivist of the United States in “a certificate of such ascertainment,” id. § 6; specifies when electors shall meet to ensure uniformity, id. §§ 7-9; and provides that, during the Joint Session, the President of the Senate will open and present the vote certificates to the House and Senate for counting, id. § 15. The Electoral Count Act also establishes a process by which objections to slates of electors may be made and considered by Congress. See id. §§ 15, 17.

3. Under Arizona law, electors are chosen by popular vote. See Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212(A). Then, after the “secretary of state issues the statewide canvass containing the results of” the election, the electors must “cast their electoral college votes for the [Presidential ticket that] received the highest number of votes in [the] state as prescribed in the canvass.” Id. § 16-212(B). Indeed, Arizona law specifically prohibits the electors from voting for other candidates, stating that any “elector who knowingly refuses” to vote for the winner of the state’s popular vote “is no longer eligible to hold the office of presidential elector” and shall be replaced with a qualified elector (who must vote for the ticket that won the popular vote). Id. § 16-212(C).<sup>4</sup>

B. The 2020 Election

1. On November 3, 2020, more than 3.4 million Arizona voters participated in the general election. See Bowyer v. Ducey, __ F. Supp.3d __, No. CV-20-02321, 2020 WL 7238261, at *1 (D. Ariz. Dec. 9, 2020), appeal filed, No. 20-17399 (9th Cir. Dec. 10, 2020). After the election, all fifteen counties in Arizona performed a hand-count audit, which confirmed that there were no discrepancies with the tabulation equipment (as in the case of Maricopa County,

---

<sup>4</sup> Arizona law does not permit the state legislature to replace electors or appoint new ones. See Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212(A). Rather, if an elector position becomes vacant, the “chairperson of the state committee of the political party represented by that elector shall appoint a person who is otherwise qualified to be a presidential elector.” Id. § 16-212(C).

Arizona’s largest county) or that, if any discrepancies existed, they were “within the acceptable margin.” Ariz. Sec’y of State, Summary of Hand Count Audits—2020 General Election (Nov. 17, 2020), <https://perma.cc/VJD8-6YL8>; see also Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-602; Bowyer, 2020 WL 7238261, at *1. Following the audits, each county’s Board of Supervisors timely canvassed the election results and transmitted them to the Arizona Secretary of State Katie Hobbs. See Arizona 2020 General Election County Canvass Returns, <https://perma.cc/6SU9-D239>; Ariz. Rev. Stat. §§ 16-642(A), 16-645(B).

On November 30, 2020, Secretary Hobbs certified the statewide canvass, reporting that President-Elect Joseph Biden had prevailed over President Donald Trump by 10,457 votes. See 2020 General Election Official Canvass Certification (Nov. 30, 2020), <https://perma.cc/N7NT-43EP>; Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-648. On the same day, Arizona Governor Douglas Ducey signed the state’s Certificate of Ascertainment for the Biden electors. See Certificate of Ascertainment for Presidential Electors (Nov. 30, 2020), <https://perma.cc/WQ9D-FRDF>.

On December 14, 2020, pursuant to federal and state law, Arizona’s electors met and cast Arizona’s electoral votes for President-Elect Biden and Vice President-Elect Kamala Harris. See 3 U.S.C. § 7; Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212; Arizona Presidential Elector Ballot Certificate of Vote (Dec. 14, 2020), <https://perma.cc/KWS2-E8D6>.

2. Before, during, and in the immediate aftermath of the general election, the Arizona state courts heard numerous challenges to the conduct of the election—all of which were rejected. The courts rejected an attempt to redo the hand-count audit. See Arizona Republican Party v. Fontes, No. CV2020-014553 (Ariz. Super. Ct., Maricopa Cnty. Dec. 21, 2020). The Trump Campaign dismissed its own case that had initially challenged the performance of the tabulation machines. See Donald J. Trump for President v. Hobbs, No. CV2020-014248 (Ariz.

Super. Ct., Maricopa Cnty. Nov. 13, 2020). The courts found no merit to challenges based on the purported misuse of “Sharpies” to fill out ballots. See Aguilera v. Fontes, No. CV2020-014562 (Ariz. Super. Ct., Maricopa Cnty. Nov. 30, 2020); Aguilera v. Fontes, No. CV2020-014083 (Ariz. Super. Ct., Maricopa Cnty. Nov. 7, 2020). And another lawsuit challenging the election results was voluntarily dismissed even before an initial hearing in court. See Stevenson v. Ducey, No. CV2020-096490 (Ariz. Super. Ct., Maricopa Cnty. filed Dec. 4, 2020).

After the electoral slate was certified, putative Republican elector Kelli Ward—who is also a plaintiff in this suit—filed an election contest challenging the statewide canvass. The trial court rejected her claims, finding no fraud, no misconduct, and no illegal votes. The court entered an order “confirming” that President-Elect Biden had won the state’s electoral votes. See Ward v. Jackson, No. CV2020-015285 (Ariz. Super. Ct., Maricopa Cnty. Dec. 4, 2020). The Arizona Supreme Court unanimously affirmed that ruling, finding that “the challenge fails to present any evidence of ‘misconduct,’ ‘illegal votes’ or that the Biden Electors ‘did not in fact receive the highest number of votes for office,’ let alone establish any degree of fraud or a sufficient error rate that would undermine the certainty of the election results.” Ward v. Jackson, CV-20-0343-AP/EL, slip op. at 6 (Ariz. Dec. 8, 2020), pet. for cert. filed, No. 20-809 (U.S. Dec. 11, 2020). The court therefore “confirm[ed] the election of the Biden Electors” under state law. Id.

At nearly the same time, Ward and others (including many of the plaintiffs here) filed suit in federal district court, alleging fraud and seeking to “decertify” Arizona’s election results. The district court rejected the challenge. Bowyer, 2020 WL 7238261, at *16. The court found that, among other things, the plaintiffs lacked standing because they alleged only a generalized grievance, id. at *2-*5, and that their claims were barred by laches, id. at *9-*11.

C. Plaintiffs' Suit Before This Court

Plaintiffs in this suit are Louie Gohmert, United States Representative for the First Congressional District of Texas, and eleven individuals. Compl. ¶¶ 16-17. The individual plaintiffs are all unsuccessful electors in Arizona; they allege that they constitute a putative slate of Arizona electors that also met on December 14, 2020—and, contrary to the state's popular vote, cast electoral votes for President Trump and Vice President Pence. Id. ¶ 20. But see Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (providing that electors must vote for the party of the candidate who won the statewide popular vote; failure to do so renders one ineligible to serve as an elector). Their purported slate was not certified by the Governor and did not otherwise comply with the state statutory scheme (as enacted by the Arizona legislature) or the Electoral Count Act.

Plaintiffs waited until December 27, 2020, to file this complaint against Vice President Michael Pence. Compl. Plaintiffs allege that Sections 5 and 15 of the Electoral Count Act are unconstitutional because, among other reasons, the Vice President assertedly has “exclusive authority and sole discretion under the Twelfth Amendment to determine which slates of electors for a State, or neither, may be counted.” Id. ¶¶ 2, 3. Plaintiffs seek emergency declaratory relief that those sections of the Electoral Count Act are unconstitutional and an injunction prohibiting Vice President Pence “from following any Electoral Count Act procedures in 3 U.S.C. §§ 5 and 15.” Doc. 2, at 3 (Mot. for Expedited Declaratory Judgment and Emergency Injunctive Relief).

ARGUMENT

This Court should dismiss the complaint and deny the extraordinary and unprecedented relief requested: a declaration that the Electoral Count Act is unconstitutional and an injunction that would interfere with the time-honored procedures of Congress for counting electoral votes.

Plaintiffs lack standing; their claims are barred by laches; and their legal and constitutional claims—which this Court should not reach—lack merit. At bottom, this litigation seeks to enlist the federal courts in a belated and meritless assault on longstanding constitutional processes for confirming the results of a national election for President. The Court should reject this improper and legally unfounded effort.

I. Plaintiffs Lack Standing

“The familiar elements of standing are (1) an injury in fact, (2) that is fairly traceable to the challenged conduct of the respondent, and (3) that is likely to be redressed by a favorable judicial decision.” Shrimpers & Fishermen of RGV v. Texas Comm’n on Env’tl. Quality, 968 F.3d 419, 424 (5th Cir. 2020). The standing inquiry is “especially rigorous” when, as here, plaintiffs ask the court to declare a statute unconstitutional. Raines v. Byrd, 521 U.S. 811, 819-20 (1997); Clapper v. Amnesty Int’l USA, 568 U.S. 398, 408 (2013) (“The law of Article III standing, which is built on separation-of-powers principles, serves to prevent the judicial process from being used to usurp the powers of the political branches.”). Plaintiffs do not satisfy the requirements for standing.

A. Representative Gohmert Lacks Standing

Under established Supreme Court precedent, individual legislators like Representative Gohmert lack standing to assert abstract injuries to their legislative interests. In Raines, the Supreme Court addressed the standing of legislators who brought suit alleging that a statute was unconstitutional because it “diluted their Article I voting power.” 521 U.S. at 817 (alteration omitted). The Court held that the legislators lacked standing because their alleged injury was “wholly abstract and widely dispersed.” Id. at 829. It was abstract because the plaintiffs had not “claim[ed] that they ha[d] been deprived of something to which they personally [were] entitled.”

Id. at 821. And it was widely dispersed because the plaintiffs had “not been singled out for specially unfavorable treatment as opposed to other Members of their respective bodies.” Id. In addition, the suit was “contrary to historical experience,” and “ha[d] not been authorized” by the legislators’ “respective Houses of Congress.” Id. at 829.

Following Raines, courts have repeatedly rejected individual legislators’ claims to standing when they are “not singled out” and when “their claim is based entirely on the loss of political power.” Blumenthal v. Trump, 949 F.3d 14, 19 (D.C. Cir. 2020); Chenoweth v. Clinton, 181 F.3d 112, 115 (D.C. Cir. 1999); Campbell v. Clinton, 203 F.3d 19, 22 (D.C. Cir. 2000); see also Maloney v. Murphy, __F.3d__, No. 18-5305, 2020 WL 7702700, *1 (D.C. Cir. Dec. 29, 2020) (reiterating that “generalized injuries claimed by legislators that are tied broadly to the law-making process and that affect all legislators equally” are “non-cognizable”). Each of these cases, like Raines itself, stressed “the need for the judiciary to avoid meddling in the internal affairs of the legislative branch by entertaining a lawsuit by an individual legislator whose rights could be vindicated by congressional repeal of the offending statute.” Comm. on Judiciary of U.S. House of Reps. v. McGahn, 968 F.3d 755, 770 (D.C. Cir. 2020) (en banc) (alterations, quotation marks, and citations omitted).

Representative Gohmert’s claim is even weaker than the claims to legislator standing that the Supreme Court and other courts have rejected. The complaint contains no specific allegations of injury to Representative Gohmert at all. In the motion for a preliminary injunction, Representative Gohmert asserts an interest in “vot[ing] as a Congressional Representative” under the Twelfth Amendment, which establishes procedures for the House to select a President if no candidate receives an electoral college majority. Mot. 4-5. Representative Gohmert appears to contend that the Electoral Count Act, by giving States and the Senate a role in selecting the electoral college winner, makes it less likely that the House will be called upon to select the President under the Twelfth Amendment, which in turn he claims “eviscerates [his] constitutional right and duty to vote for President.” Mot. 7.

This standing argument fails for several reasons. Representative Gohmert’s asserted interest in voting for President under the Twelfth Amendment is “wholly abstract.” Raines, 521 U.S. at 829. As in Raines, Representative Gohmert alleges the “dilution of institutional legislative power” rather than the “loss of any private right.” Id. at 821, 826. And he alleges “no injury to [himself] as [an] individual[.]” as opposed to the body in which he serves. Id. at 829. There is thus a “mismatch” between Representative Gohmert—an individual legislator—and the entity to whom his alleged injury belongs—the House as a whole. See Virginia House of Delegates v. Bethune-Hill, 139 S. Ct. 1945, 1953 (2019). Indeed, Representative Gohmert’s asserted injury is yet more abstract than the injury rejected in Raines, because the gravamen of Representative Gohmert’s complaint is that the Electoral Count Act diminishes the power of the Vice President, as distinct from the legislative body in which Representative Gohmert serves. See Compl. ¶¶ 42-44 (arguing that the Electoral Count Act violates the Twelfth Amendment by depriving the Vice President of the power to count Electoral College votes).

Representative Gohmert’s asserted injury fails under Raines for additional reasons. It is “widely dispersed,” Raines, 521 U.S. at 829, because it is shared by every Member of the House, each of whom is affected by the Electoral Count Act in the same way. As in Raines, his claims are contrary to historical practice and opposed by the House. And, also as in Raines, rejecting his claim to standing will not deprive him of an adequate remedy, because he may always work to repeal the Electoral Count Act through the legislative process.

Finally, Representative Gohmert’s alleged injury is neither “actual” nor “imminent.” See Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560 (1992). Even if—contrary to constitutional text, logic, and history—the procedures of the Congressional Joint Session were altered as Representative Gohmert seeks, he makes no plausible claim that the Presidential election would be thrown to the House under the Twelfth Amendment. Nor could he, as that remarkable outcome has not happened in nearly 200 years and there is no plausible basis for questioning the state-certified electoral votes in this Presidential election.

Representative Gohmert therefore lacks a cognizable injury and must be dismissed as a plaintiff. Because venue in this Court is supported only by Representative Gohmert’s residency in this district (see Compl. ¶ 15), dismissal of the case on venue grounds or transfer to a more appropriate venue may be warranted. See 28 U.S.C. § 1406(a) (providing that the district court in “a case laying venue in the wrong division or district shall dismiss, or if it be in the interest of justice, transfer such case to any district or division in which it could have been brought”).

B. The Arizona Plaintiffs Lack Standing

The eleven plaintiffs purporting to be “Arizona Electors” (Compl. ¶¶ 17-18) also lack standing. They have not suffered an injury that is “concrete and particularized” or “actual or imminent.” Lujan, 504 U.S. at 560. A “grievance that amounts to nothing more than an abstract and generalized harm to a citizen’s interest in the proper application of the law does not count as an ‘injury in fact’” and “does not show standing.” Carney v. Adams, — S. Ct. —, No. 19-309, 2020 WL 7250101, at *3 (U.S. Dec. 10, 2020).

The Arizona plaintiffs have merely alleged just such a generalized grievance. They assert injury from “having a competing slate of electors take their place and their votes in the Electoral College” and from the use of the Electoral Count Act at the Joint Session “to resolve the dispute over which slate of Arizona electors is to be counted.” Compl. ¶¶ 57-58. But, as Plaintiffs themselves appear to concede (see id. ¶ 57), they have no special status at the Joint Session. Under Arizona law, the only individuals entitled to cast electoral college votes are the electors for the “candidate for president and the candidate for vice president who jointly received the highest number of votes in this state,” Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212(B)—here, President-Elect Biden and Vice President-Elect Harris. The appointment of the Biden electors was certified by Governor Ducey on November 30, and was “confirm[ed]” by the Arizona Supreme Court on December 8. See supra pp. 6-7. Thus, by binding operation of Arizona law, the Arizona plaintiffs are not “candidates for office” (Compl. ¶ 56); nor are they Presidential electors, see Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212(C); and they cannot assert any interests that might be available to lawful electors. They instead stand in the same position as the other 3.4 million Arizona voters with “no particularized stake in the litigation.” Lance v. Coffman, 549 U.S. 437, 442 (2007).

The Arizona plaintiffs’ alleged injury from the Electoral Count Act is therefore “precisely the kind of undifferentiated, generalized grievance about the conduct of government that [courts] have refused to countenance in the past.” Id.; see also Bowyer, 2020 WL 7238261, at *4-*5. While plaintiffs invoke (Mot. 6) Carson v. Simon, 978 F.3d 1051 (8th Cir. 2020) (per curiam), that case actually undermines their standing. Carson held that prospective Minnesota electors had standing because Minnesota law gave them a “cognizable interest” in ensuring the integrity of an election in which they were candidates. Id. at 1057. Here, by contrast, even if their nominations rendered them “candidates” prior to the election, now that the election has occurred, Arizona law makes clear that the plaintiffs are not and may not serve as electors representing the state. See Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212(B)-(C). They therefore lack any special interest in the administration of the Joint Session.

The Arizona plaintiffs have likewise not met their burden as to causation. To establish causation for purposes of standing, a plaintiff must show “a causal connection between the injury and the conduct complained of.” Lujan, 504 U.S. at 560. But plaintiffs acknowledge (Mot. 7) that the “Vice President did not cause [their] initial injury,” which they concede “happened in Arizona.” Their complaint and motion for a preliminary injunction repeatedly emphasize that their injury is caused by the “conduct of Arizona executive branch and Maricopa County officials” in certifying the election results (Compl. ¶ 57), and that they are challenging “unlawful injuries that Plaintiffs suffered in Arizona” (Mot. 7). Their true grievance is not with Vice President Pence or the functioning of the Electoral Count Act, but with the operation of Arizona law and the decisions of Arizona officials who are not parties to this suit. They nonetheless seek to establish causation (Mot. 7) on the ground that Vice President Pence may “ratify” their state-law injury at the Joint Session, but they fail to explain how any such ratification would render their state-law injury legally traceable to him.

For the same reason, an order from this Court invalidating the Electoral Count Act would provide no redress to the Arizona plaintiffs. It would have no bearing on the Arizona law that determined the slate of Biden electors to be presented to the President of the Senate at the Joint Session, and it could not require Arizona to appoint them as electors instead. See Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212(B).

II. The Laches Doctrine Bars Plaintiffs’ Claims

Even if plaintiffs had standing, the doctrine of laches would bar their claims. Laches bars equitable relief when a plaintiff’s inexcusable delay in asserting a claim unduly prejudices the defendant. See Save Our Wetlands, Inc. v. U.S. Army Corps of Eng’rs, 549 F.2d 1021, 1026 (5th Cir. 1977); see also, e.g., Elvis Presley Enters. v. Capece, 141 F.3d 188, 205 (5th Cir. 1998).

Those criteria are plainly met here.<sup>5</sup>

Federal courts have long recognized that the laches doctrine bars untimely claims for equitable relief in election challenges. See, e.g., Lopez v. Hale County, 797 F. Supp. 547, 550 (N.D. Tex. 1992) (three-judge district court) (plaintiff was “guilty of laches” in waiting until after the primary election to file suit), aff’d, 506 U.S. 1042 (1993); Dulcan v. Martin, 64 F.R.D. 327, 328-29 (D.D.C. 1974) (three-judge district court) (per curiam) (“plaintiffs have waited too long in bringing their allegations of unconstitutionality of the Act for this court to act responsibly without interfering” with upcoming election); see also Toney v. White, 488 F.2d 310, 314 (5th Cir. 1973) (“[T]he law imposes the duty on parties . . . to bring [their] grievances forward for pre-election adjudication. . . . [T]he failure to require prompt pre-election action in such circumstances as a prerequisite to post-election relief may permit, if not encourage, parties who could raise a claim to lay by and gamble upon receiving a favorable decision of the electorate and then, upon losing, seek to undo the ballot results in a court action.” (internal quotation marks and citation omitted)).

---

<sup>5</sup> This Court may in its discretion choose to dismiss this case on laches grounds before addressing Article III jurisdiction. “[A] federal court has leeway to choose among threshold grounds for denying audience to a case on the merits.” Sinochem Int’l Co. v. Malaysia Int’l Shipping Corp., 549 U.S. 422, 431 (2007) (quotation marks omitted). Numerous courts have held that laches is one such threshold ground, and have accordingly denied claims on laches grounds without addressing standing. See Memphis A. Phillip Randolph Inst. v. Hargett, 473 F. Supp. 3d 789, 802 n.18 (M.D. Tenn. 2020) (“the Court can decide the applicability of laches before deciding whether it has subject-matter jurisdiction”); Singh v. Joshi, 152 F. Supp. 3d 112, 121 (E.D.N.Y. 2016) (because laches and standing were both threshold issues “distinct from the merits,” the court may “address them in any order”); Collins v. W. Digital Techs., Inc., 2011 WL 3849310, at *6 (E.D. Tex. 2011) (similar). And this Court may deny plaintiffs’ request for equitable relief on laches grounds regardless of whether the Vice President invokes it. Cf. Day v. McDonough, 547 U.S. 198, 209 (2006).

Indeed, federal and state courts in Arizona, Georgia, Michigan, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin have held that laches barred post-election challenges to the 2020 Presidential election in suits filed well before this one—including in a suit brought in Arizona federal district court by the same purported Arizona Republican electors who filed suit here. Bowyer, 2020 WL 7238261, at *10-*11 (applying laches to lawsuit filed nearly one month after Election Day and two days after Governor certified results, where basis for claimed violations of the Electors Clause “was either known well before Election Day or soon thereafter” and “the prejudice to the Defendants and the nearly 3.4 million Arizonans who voted in the 2020 General Election would be extreme, and entirely unprecedented”).<sup>6</sup>

Plaintiffs inexcusably delayed filing this suit—which they initiated only after the Arizona federal district court and the Arizona Supreme Court rejected other attempts to invalidate the election (including by the same Arizona plaintiffs who filed suit here). Plaintiffs filed this complaint on December 27, 2020, and effectuated service on December 29. Doc. Nos. 1, 5, 11. Plaintiffs thus waited almost an entire month after November 30, when the Arizona Secretary of State certified the election and the Secretary and Governor signed the Certificate of Ascertainment for the Biden electors; almost twenty days after December 8, when the Arizona

---

<sup>6</sup> See Trump v. Wisconsin Elections Comm’n, – F.3d. –, No. 20-3414, 2020 WL 7654295, at *3-4 (7th Cir. Dec. 24, 2020) (explaining that “[t]he President’s delay alone is enough to warrant affirming” dismissal because “[a]ny claim against a state electoral procedure must be expressed expeditiously” and “[a]llowing the President to raise his arguments, at this late date, after Wisconsin has tallied the votes and certified the election outcome, would impose unquestionable harm on the defendants, and the State’s voters”); King v. Whitmer, – F. Supp. 3d. –, No. CV 20-13134, 2020 WL 7134198, at *7 (E.D. Mich. Dec. 7, 2020), appeal filed, No. 20-2205 (6th Cir. Dec. 8, 2020); Wood v. Raffensperger, No. 1:20-CV-04651-SDG, 2020 WL 6817513, at *7-8 (N.D. Ga. Nov. 20, 2020), aff’d on other grounds, 981 F.3d 1307 (11th Cir. 2020); Trump v. Biden, No. 2020AP2038, 2020 WL 7331907 ¶ 32 (Wis. Dec. 14, 2020); Kelly v. Commonwealth, 240 A.3d 1255, 1257 (Pa. 2020).

Supreme Court confirmed the election of the Biden electors, see Ward, CV-20-0343-AP/EL, at *6; and almost two weeks after December 14, when the Biden electors voted pursuant to Arizona state law. Plaintiffs could have brought their claims weeks ago, if not earlier. See Bowyer, 2020 WL 7238261, at *10 (“When contesting an election, any delay is prejudicial, but waiting until a month after Election Day and two days after certification of the election is inexcusable.”).

In addition, the provisions of the Electoral Count Act that plaintiffs challenge have been in force since 1887. See Pub. L. No. 49-90, 24 Stat. 373 (1887). Plaintiffs have thus known from the start what rules would govern the Joint Session and, to the extent they could ever have standing to bring this suit, they could have done so earlier. Representative Gohmert—who has been a Member of Congress for four previous Joint Sessions (in 2005, 2009, 2013, and 2017)—was well aware of the rules governing that proceeding and could have brought this challenge immediately after the 2020 election, if not earlier. And the putative elector plaintiffs could have filed at the same time.<sup>7</sup> They did not do so, attempting to reserve their claims for extreme relief sought here until the many other legal challenges to the Arizona election were explored unsuccessfully. Plaintiffs offer no justification—nor could they—for their eleventh-hour resort to this Court.

The prejudice to Congress, the states, millions of voters—and, indeed, to the Vice-President himself—that would result from entertaining plaintiffs’ claims at this late date would be immense. Plaintiffs request a declaration that the challenged provisions of the Electoral Count Act are unconstitutional and that the Vice President (in his capacity as President of the Senate) “may exercise the exclusive authority and sole discretion in determining which electoral votes to count for a given State.” Compl. ¶ 73(C); see also Mot. 3, 27. Such relief would upend the electoral count system that has governed Presidential elections, and that has clearly defined the role and responsibilities of the President of the Senate in a manner that no prior Vice President has found objectionable, for well over a century. See Republican Nat’l Comm. v. Democratic Nat’l Comm., 140 S. Ct. 1205, 1207 (2020) (per curiam) (“This Court has repeatedly emphasized that lower federal courts should ordinarily not alter the election rules on the eve of an election.” (citing Purcell v. Gonzalez, 549 U.S. 1 (2006) (per curiam))).

---

<sup>7</sup> Presidential elector nominations were due in Arizona by August 14, 2020. See <https://perma.cc/TJ9X-XS5Z>.

If plaintiffs obtain the relief they seek, they would drastically unsettle expectations about the Vice President’s role at the Joint Session in a manner calculated to turn a ministerial duty into one fraught with peril and controversy. Moreover, their arguments could result in the disenfranchisement of millions of voters, if (as plaintiffs intend) the Vice President went on to disregard certified slates of electors or to refuse to accept any slates at all from a particular state. Cf. Wood, 2020 WL 6817513, at *8 (“[The] requested relief could disenfranchise a substantial portion of the electorate and erode the public’s confidence in the electoral process.”). Plaintiffs effectively ask this Court to turn over determination of the 2020 Presidential election in its entirety to Vice President Pence, and they would have him make that determination in the absence of any governing rules. This would create chaos at the Joint Session, present intractable conflicts of interest, and prejudice the Vice President in the execution of his duties. Plaintiffs should not be permitted, at this late date, to pursue such “extreme, and entirely unprecedented” relief. Bowyer, 2020 WL 7238261, at *11.

Plaintiffs’ delay has also prejudiced this Court’s ability to decide this case before the Joint Session on January 6. See id. (“[T]he challenges that Plaintiffs assert quite simply could have been made weeks ago, when the Court would have had more time to reflect and resolve the issues.”); Dulcan, 64 F.R.D. at 329 (“[P]laintiffs have waited too long in bringing their allegations of unconstitutionality of the Act for this court to act responsibly without interfering with the date of the November 5, 1974 election. A court must have time for study and reflection.”). Courts have cautioned against “taking action in a case where the election was imminent, even where constitutional defects in the election process have already been found.” Dulcan, 64 F.R.D. at 330; see also Sw. Voter Registration Educ. Project v. Shelley, 344 F.3d 914, 919 (9th Cir. 2003) (per curiam) (en banc) (“Interference with impending elections is extraordinary, and interference with an election after voting has begun is unprecedented.” (citing Reynolds v. Sims, 377 U.S. 533, 585 (1964))). “Unreasonable delay can prejudice the administration of justice by compelling the court to steamroll through delicate legal issues in order to meet election deadlines.” Bowyer, 2020 WL 7238261, at *11 (alteration and quotation marks omitted). That principle applies with even greater force where—as here—plaintiffs’ constitutional claims have profound ramifications for the Nation and yet lack any colorable support in constitutional text, precedent, or practice.

III. Plaintiffs Are Not Entitled To The Extraordinary Equitable Relief They Seek

For the reasons noted above, the Court should not reach the merits of plaintiffs’ claims. But if the Court reaches the merits, it should reject plaintiffs’ erroneous arguments.

1. To the extent that plaintiffs contend (see Mot. 18-22) that the Twelfth Amendment endows the Vice President with substantive authority concerning the counting of electoral votes, that contention is belied by the Amendment’s text.

The relevant portion of the Twelfth Amendment states: “The President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and the votes shall then be counted.” The Amendment’s use of the active voice and mention of the Vice President in the first clause—“The President of the Senate shall ... open all the certificates”—in contrast with its use of the passive voice and omission of the Vice President from the second clause—“the votes shall then be counted”—demonstrates that the Amendment assigns the Vice President the task of opening the certificates and leaves the counting of the votes to others.

In other words, the text does not say that the Vice President shall “open all the certificates and then count the votes.” Significantly, it separates those two actions through distinct grammatical constructions and assigns only the first of them to the Vice President. The linguistic formulation used in the Amendment would be an extremely odd way to describe in common speech an intent for the Vice President to open the certificates and for him to also count the votes. The Amendment’s text thus provides no support for the claim that the Vice President has unreviewable discretion to decide which slate of electors shall be counted from each State.

This conclusion is reinforced by constitutional understandings and consistent practice, dating back to the Nation’s early days, of the Vice President presiding at the Joint Session and the House and Senate themselves resolving any substantive disputes over counting electoral votes. See, e.g., Siegel, Conscientious Congressman’s Guide, 56 Fla. L. Rev. at 551-53. Such a “[l]ong settled and established practice [carries] great weight in a proper interpretation of constitutional provisions.” Chiafalo, 140 S. Ct. at 2326 (quoting The Pocket Veto Case, 279 U.S. 655, 689 (1929)). This conclusion is further supported by the structure of the Constitution, which cannot reasonably be understood to assign to the sitting Vice President the momentous decision of who shall be elected to the Presidency and Vice Presidency—offices for which he might in that very election actually be a candidate. Granting such power to the Vice President would be at odds with the Constitution’s numerous provisions designed to avoid conflicts of interest of this type and with basic principles of democratic governance.

Plaintiffs' claim (Mot. 22-23) that Congress lacks the authority to create procedures for implementing the Twelfth Amendment is equally misconceived. From the beginning of the Republic, Congress has been understood to have the power to establish the procedures for electoral vote counting, whether by resolution or by statute. See also U.S. Const., Art. I, § 8, cl. 18 ("Congress shall have Power ... [t]o make all Laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into Execution ... all ... Powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any ... Officer thereof."). The Electoral Count Act is only one example of Congress's exercise of that power.<sup>8</sup>

To the extent plaintiffs argue that the Electoral Count Act violates the Electors Clause (Mot. 21, 22 n.3), that argument also fails. The Electoral Count Act is entirely consistent with the Electors Clause, which provides that each State shall appoint electors "in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct." U.S. Const., Art. II § 1, cl. 2. The Electoral Count Act is grounded in deference to the laws and procedures of the states. And any assertion that the statute deprives the Arizona legislature of its constitutionally assigned role in the process of selecting electors is incorrect: The Arizona legislature exercised its authority to create the system of popular election and gubernatorial certification that was used to appoint Arizona's electors. Cf. Wisconsin Elections Comm'n, 2020 WL 7654295, at *4 (rejecting a similar Electors Clause argument). The procedures followed here effectuate, rather than undermine, the Electors Clause.

---

<sup>8</sup> Congress's consistent practice of establishing procedures for electoral vote counting—typically based on the recommendations of a joint committee—can be traced in Hinds' Precedents of the House of Representatives ch. 59, §§ 1929, 1952 (counts of 1793-1873); id. at ch. 60 (counts of 1877-1905); see also House Practice: A Guide to the Rules, Precedents, and Procedures of the House (2017) ch. 24 §§ 1-3.

2. The balance of equities and the public interest strongly support denial of declaratory and injunctive relief. Courts have repeatedly warned of the dangers of altering election rules on the eve of elections “absent a powerful reason for doing so.” Crookston v. Johnson, 841 F.3d 396, 398 (6th Cir. 2016) (citing Purcell, 549 U.S. at 5-6). Principles of judicial restraint apply with special force where plaintiffs seek to alter the established rules governing the constitutionally prescribed Joint Session to count the electoral votes after millions of voters have cast their ballots and the electoral results have been duly certified.

Plaintiffs ask this Court to authorize the Vice President to ignore the will of the Nation’s voters and determine the winner in an election in which he is a candidate. Granting plaintiffs this extraordinary relief just days before the Joint Session would not only reward their inexcusably delayed filing; it would also risk upending the orderly rules that have governed Congressional counting of electoral votes for more than a century and undermining the public’s confidence in the constitutionally prescribed processes for confirming—not overturning—the results of the election.

CONCLUSION

The Court should deny plaintiffs’ motion for expedited declaratory judgment and emergency injunctive relief, and dismiss plaintiffs’ complaint.

Respectfully submitted,

Caitlin Halligan (NY Bar No. 3933447)
Samuel Breidbart (NY Bar No. 5783352)
Adam K. Hersh (NY Bar No. 5693064)
Max H. Siegel (NY Bar No. 5652235)
SELENDY & GAY PLLC
1290 Avenue of the Americas
New York, New York 10104

/s/ Douglas N. Letter
Douglas N. Letter (DC Bar No. 253492)
General Counsel
Todd B. Tatelman (VA Bar No. 66008)
Megan Barbero (MA Bar No. 668854)
Josephine Morse (DC Bar No. 1531317)
William E. Havemann (VA Bar No. 86961)
Eric R. Columbus (DC Bar No. 487736)
Lisa K. Helvin (DC Bar No. 988143)

Michael R. Dreeben (DC Bar No. 370586)
GEORGETOWN UNIVERSITY LAW CENTER
600 New Jersey Avenue NW
Washington, D.C. 20001

Jonathan B. Schwartz (DC Bar No. 342758)
OFFICE OF GENERAL COUNSEL
U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
219 Cannon House Office Building
Washington, DC 20515
Telephone: (202) 225-9700
Facsimile: (202) 226-1360
douglas.letter@mail.house.gov

December 31, 2020

Counsel for Amicus U.S. House of Representatives

CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE

I certify that on December 31, 2020, I caused the foregoing document to be filed via the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Texas CM/ECF system, which I understand caused a copy to be served on all registered parties.

/s/ Douglas N. Letter
Douglas N. Letter

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

CATHOLIC LEGAL IMMIGRATION
NETWORK, INC., 8757 Georgia Ave., Suite
850, Silver Spring, MD 20910;

BROOKLYN DEFENDER SERVICES, 177
Livingston Street, 7th Floor, Brooklyn, NY 11201;

FLORENCE IMMIGRANT AND REFUGEE
RIGHTS PROJECT,* P.O. Box 86299, Tucson, AZ
85754-6299;

HIAS, 1300 Spring Street, Suite 500, Silver Spring, MD 20910; and

NATIONAL IMMIGRANT JUSTICE CENTER,
224 South Michigan Ave, Suite 600, Chicago, IL
60604,

Plaintiffs,

v.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE FOR IMMIGRATION
REVIEW, 20 Massachusetts Ave., NW,
Washington, D.C. 20529;

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, 950
Pennsylvania Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20530;

JEFFREY A. ROSEN, in his official capacity as Acting Attorney General of the United States, U.S.
Department of Justice, 950 Pennsylvania Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20530; and

JAMES McHENRY, in his official capacity as Director of the Executive Office for Immigration Review, 20 Massachusetts Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20529,

Defendants.

Case No.: 21-cv-094

COMPLAINT

Submitted Electronically

**Motion to proceed without physical address forthcoming*

COMPLAINT FOR DECLARATORY AND INJUNCTIVE RELIEF

TABLE OF CONTENTS

TABLE OF CONTENTS .....	i
INTRODUCTION .....	1
JURISDICTION AND VENUE .....	4
THE PARTIES .....	4
FACTUAL ALLEGATIONS .....	8
I. EOIR’s Appellate and Adjudicatory Process .....	8
A. Overview of Proceedings for Relief from Removal .....	8
1. Proceedings Before EOIR .....	8
2. Proceedings Before USCIS and Other Fora .....	9
B. Due Process Protections and Other Rights Codified in the INA .....	10
C. Existing Procedural Mechanisms at EOIR .....	11
1. Motions to Remand .....	11
2. Administrative Closure .....	12
3. Sua Sponte Motions to Reopen .....	13
4. Voluntary Departure .....	13
D. Appeals to the BIA .....	14
E. EOIR’s Recent Politicization and Substantive Restrictions on Access to Immigration Courts .....	16
F. Effects of Recent Changes at EOIR .....	20
II. Promulgation of the Rule and Overview of the Rule’s Flaws .....	22
III. The Rule Must Be Vacated Because Defendant McHenry Had No Statutory or Regulatory Authority to Issue It. ....	24
IV. The Rule Must Be Vacated Because It Is Contrary to Law and Arbitrary and Capricious, in Violation of the APA .....	25
A. Defendants’ Significant Changes to EOIR Procedures Are Unlawful. ....	25
1. The Rule Hamstrings Appellate Briefing Schedules .....	26
2. The Rule Eviscerates the BIA’s Remand Authority .....	34
a. Limitation of BIA Remands for Further Factfinding and Consideration of New Evidence .....	34
b. Limitation on Scope of Remands .....	43
3. The Rule Unlawfully “Enhances” the BIA’s Factfinding Powers .....	44
a. Expansion of BIA Factfinding Abilities .....	44

b.	Authority for BIA to Affirm on Any Basis in the Record .....	49
4.	The Rule Upends EOIR Procedures for Voluntary Departure Requests and Background Checks .....	50
a.	Elimination of BIA Remands for Voluntary Departure.....	50
b.	Limitation on BIA Remand for Background Checks & Deemed Abandonment.....	55
5.	The Rule Eliminates Critical Procedural Mechanisms, Upending Noncitizens’ Ability to Seek Relief .....	57
a.	Elimination of Sua Sponte Authority to Reopen.....	58
b.	Elimination of BIA Self-Certification Authority .....	64
c.	Elimination of Administrative Closure.....	66
6.	The Rule Implements Measures that Further Politicize EOIR and Undermine Timely, Neutral Decisionmaking.....	74
a.	IJ Certification of BIA Decisions .....	74
b.	Referral of Pending BIA Appeals to the EOIR Director. ....	80
c.	Mandatory Timelines & Other Changes for Adjudication of BIA Appeals .....	85
B.	Defendants Failed to Consider the Effect of Contemporaneously-Issued Rules and Failed to Provide the Public an Opportunity to Comment on the Effect of Subsequently-Proposed Rules.....	87
C.	Defendants Failed to Comply With the Certification Requirements Under the Regulatory Flexibility Act. ....	92
V.	The Rule Must Be Vacated Because It Was Issued Without a Sufficient Notice and Comment Period or a Reasoned Explanation for Providing a Shortened Comment Period. ....	94
VI.	The Rule Irreparably Harms Plaintiffs by Frustrating their Respective Missions, Jeopardizing Funding, and Forcing them to Divert Resources, as Well as by Harming Their Existing Clients. ....	97
	CLAIMS FOR RELIEF .....	101
	PRAYER FOR RELIEF .....	111

Plaintiffs Catholic Legal Immigration Network, Inc., Brooklyn Defender Services, Florence Immigrant and Refugee Rights Project, HIAS, and National Immigrant Justice Center sue Defendants the Executive Office for Immigration Review, U.S. Department of Justice, Jeffrey A. Rosen, in his official capacity as Acting Attorney General of the United States, and James McHenry, in his official capacity as Director of the Executive Office for Immigration Review, and allege as follows:

INTRODUCTION

1. In an unlawfully promulgated rule, rushed through in the waning days of an outgoing administration by an official acting beyond his authority, Defendants have erected devastating and, in some cases, insuperable barriers to the ability of noncitizens to seek relief before the courts overseen by the Executive Office for Immigration Review (“EOIR”). See Appellate Procedures and Decisional Finality in Immigration Proceedings; Administrative Closure, 85 Fed. Reg. 81,588 (Dec. 16, 2020) (hereinafter, “the Rule”).

2. The Rule grafts a laundry list of unjustifiable procedural changes onto the already byzantine immigration court system. Among other changes, the Rule:

- a. Curtails briefing schedules and extensions before the Board of Immigration Appeals (“BIA”) in an inflexible manner that ignores already-existing barriers, all but eliminates the ability of noncitizens to retain counsel and mount an appeal, and impedes counsel from taking on cases and providing meaningful representation;
- b. Eviscerates the BIA’s ability to remand cases to the immigration judge (“IJ”), even where further factfinding is required, and even where new facts or law would make an individual eligible for relief;
- c. Authorizes the BIA to make findings of fact and introduce evidence in the first instance, contrary to the system designed by Congress and contrary to the BIA’s proper role as an appellate body;
- d. Upends procedures for determining voluntary departure, a form of relief that avoids the devastating consequences of a removal order, such as prolonged family separation;

- e. Eliminates the IJ's and the BIA's authority to reopen cases sua sponte or to administratively close proceedings, depriving EOIR of important case-management tools that are designed to promote efficiency and due process, choosing instead a system that will rush through the senseless deportation of individuals who qualify for congressionally mandated forms of relief;
- f. Politicizes EOIR by impermissibly assigning to the Director of EOIR, an unconfirmed non-judicial official, drastic new adjudicatory powers;
- g. Turns IJs into advocates by giving them the opportunity to countermand opinions reversing them; and
- h. Imposes on the BIA adjudication timeframes that will result in summary and erroneous dismissals and deportation orders.

3. Each of these changes—which cut off avenues to legal relief and result in deportation despite eligibility for protection—irreparably harms Plaintiffs, who are nonprofit legal service providers working to serve and secure justice for as many noncitizens as possible. The Rule will undermine their missions by making it impossible to represent potential clients and eliminating options the Plaintiffs would otherwise use to serve existing clients.

4. Left unaddressed, the Rule will make it exceedingly difficult for noncitizens to vindicate their rights in immigration court and, accordingly, Plaintiffs have already been forced to divert precious resources to respond and stave off the worst effects of the Rule's changes. Plaintiffs will be forced by the Rule to contribute even more resources toward existing cases, all while being cut off from serving as many noncitizens as they previously did.

5. The Rule should be vacated as unlawful for several reasons. First, as a threshold matter, the Rule is null and void because it was published solely by the Director of EOIR, who does not have the authority to issue a final rule.

6. Second, the Rule eviscerates procedural protections enshrined in the Immigration and Nationality Act (“INA”), including the right to counsel and to a full and fair hearing, which underpin substantive protections against persecution or torture. The Rule runs roughshod over these congressionally provided rights and is therefore not in accordance with law, violating the Administrative Procedure Act (“APA”).

7. Third, the Rule is arbitrary and capricious under the APA. Despite numerous comments from Plaintiffs and others, Defendants: (a) failed to consider the significant harms the Rule will cause to noncitizens and those who advocate for them in removal proceedings, like Plaintiffs; (b) failed to adequately explain the Rule’s departure from decades of longstanding practice and appellate norms; (c) failed to meaningfully consider the significant reliance interests of more than one million noncitizens in removal proceedings and their advocates, like Plaintiffs; (d) failed to explain how radically altering EOIR procedures, at the expense of noncitizens’ due process rights, will achieve their purported ends of improving “efficiency” and “finality;” (e) failed to consider obvious alternatives proposed by commenters; and, ultimately, (f) ignored facts that plainly show that these changes will breed chaos and expand case backlogs.

8. Fourth, the Rule is the product of rushed rulemaking that failed to provide a meaningful opportunity for the public to comment, in violation of the APA. Indeed, the Rule, which massively dismantles the EOIR system, was promulgated with only a thirty-day comment period despite its publication during a global pandemic, and amid a deluge of other final and proposed rules on inextricably related subjects. Commenters could not possibly provide full, informed commentary to the agency under these circumstances.

9. Fifth, the Rule fails to comply with the certification requirements under the Regulatory Flexibility Act (“RFA”), and the agency’s basis for determining that the Rule will not have a significant impact on small entities was arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law.

10. Finally, the rule violates due process of the constitution in myriad ways by eviscerating the rights of noncitizens to present evidence and denying them a fair opportunity to be heard.

11. Ultimately, “executive branch officials may not circumvent clear legal requirements in the eleventh hour to achieve goals they couldn’t accomplish in the normal course,” which is exactly what has happened with this piece of midnight rulemaking. Cal. Life Scis. Ass’n v. Ctr. for Medicare & Medicaid Servs., No. 20-cv-8603, 2020 WL 7696050, at *2 (N.D. Cal. Dec. 28, 2020). For these reasons, Plaintiffs ask this Court to reject Defendants’ last-ditch attempt to eviscerate the immigration court system and the tools legal services providers, like Plaintiffs, use to represent noncitizens. The Rule should be found unlawful in its entirety, set aside, and vacated.

JURISDICTION AND VENUE

12. This Court has subject matter jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1331, as this action arises under the laws of the United States, including the APA, 5 U.S.C. §§ 701 et seq.

13. The publication of the final Rule in the Federal Register on December 16, 2020, constitutes final agency action within the meaning of 5 U.S.C. § 704.

14. Venue is proper under 28 U.S.C. § 1391(e) because Defendants are agencies and officers of the United States, the action does not involve real property, and Defendants reside in this District. Plaintiffs NIJC and HIAS have offices in this District.

THE PARTIES

15. Plaintiffs are legal services organizations that serve immigrants around the country. Plaintiff Catholic Legal Immigration Network, Inc. (“CLINIC”) is a nonprofit organization incorporated in Washington, D.C., and headquartered in Silver Spring, Maryland. Pursuant to its mission to protect the dignity and rights of low-income and vulnerable populations, CLINIC coordinates and provides technical support and services to approximately 400 affiliate organizations, spread out across 48 states and the District of Columbia. CLINIC also provides legal representation directly and in partnership with pro bono attorneys to vulnerable adults, children, and families in proceedings in immigration courts and before the BIA. That representation includes applications, motions, and appeals that are subject to the Rule. CLINIC operates the BIA Pro Bono Project, an official collaboration with EOIR that connects detained, unrepresented individuals with appellate pro bono representation before the BIA and the U.S. Courts of Appeals. CLINIC also operates a Motion to Reopen Project that represents noncitizens seeking to reopen their removal proceedings in order to pursue protection, such as asylum, for themselves and their children. CLINIC trains and mentors pro bono counsel through these projects and other programs. CLINIC and its affiliates serve approximately 500,000 noncitizens each year.

16. Plaintiff Brooklyn Defender Services (“BDS”) is a public defender organization in Brooklyn, New York, that provides multi-disciplinary and client-centered criminal defense, family defense, immigration, and civil legal services, along with social work and advocacy support. BDS seeks to advance access to legal representation for low-income noncitizens as they navigate the immigration system in order for them to stabilize their immigration status, particularly for those with contacts with the criminal and family court legal systems. BDS is a provider in the New York Immigration Family Unity Project, the country’s first universal representation program for indigent and low-income detained immigrants in removal proceedings. BDS’s 75-person immigration practice also provides legal services and representation to noncitizens in non-detained removal proceedings and in affirmative applications for relief before the Department of Homeland Security (“DHS”), as well as immigration screenings, advisals, consultations with respect to the consequences of criminal convictions, and “Know Your Rights” presentations. BDS regularly litigates appeals at the BIA and in the U.S. Courts of Appeals, placing a significant number with pro bono counsel. Since 2009, BDS has counseled, advised, or represented approximately 15,000 clients in immigration matters.

17. Plaintiff Florence Immigrant and Refugee Rights Project (“FIRRP” or “the Florence Project”) is a nonprofit organization headquartered in Tucson, Arizona, with offices in Phoenix and Florence, Arizona. The Florence Project provides free legal and social services to adults and unaccompanied children in immigration custody in Arizona, including at the U.S.-Mexico border. Its vision is to ensure that all noncitizens facing removal have access to counsel, understand their legal rights, and are treated fairly and humanely. FIRRP directly represents detained immigrants before the IJs and the BIA, including noncitizens deemed incompetent to represent themselves due to mental health needs or disabilities. FIRRP also runs multiple Legal Orientation Programs (“LOPs”), which provide pro se assistance to noncitizens detained in Arizona. FIRRP writes pro se materials for the LOP program, which are distributed nationally. In 2019, FIRRP served over 10,000 detained adults and children; placed over 100 cases with pro bono attorneys; and provided over 500 noncitizens with social services.

18. Plaintiff HIAS is a global, Jewish nonprofit organization and resettlement agency headquartered in Silver Spring, Maryland, that is dedicated to ensuring that forcibly displaced people find welcome, safety, and freedom. HIAS operates in sixteen countries, including the United States, supporting refugees and other forcibly displaced persons with services to ensure legal protection, economic inclusion, protection from gender-based violence, and access to mental health services. HIAS’s U.S.-based team has provided immigration legal services for more than fifty years. In addition, through its domestic Pro Bono Program, HIAS helps detained noncitizens at the U.S.-Mexico border find representation in appeals before the BIA. HIAS relies on its pro bono network, which includes over 700 solo practitioners and small- or medium-sized firm attorneys, plus attorneys at nearly 50 large law firms and corporations, to expand its capacity.

19. Plaintiff National Immigrant Justice Center (“NIJC”) is a program of Heartland Alliance, a nonprofit organization headquartered in Chicago, Illinois. NIJC provides comprehensive legal services to noncitizens around the country. In addition to its Chicago headquarters, NIJC maintains offices in Washington, D.C.; San Diego, California; and Goshen and Indianapolis, Indiana. NIJC’s mission is to vindicate and defend the legal rights of immigrants, regardless of background, and transform the immigration system to one that affords equal opportunity for all. To advance that mission, NIJC provides high quality immigration legal services for as many low-income immigrants as it can possibly reach. NIJC’s priority areas are (a) ensuring access to counsel in immigration proceedings, which includes providing counsel and advocating for a guaranteed right to counsel in all immigration proceedings; (b) defending, maintaining, and expanding access to asylum and other forms of immigration relief; and (c) decriminalizing immigration and reducing the detention of noncitizens. In 2020, NIJC provided consultations or legal information to more than 12,000 noncitizens and represented more than 5,000 clients in their immigration cases, including in appeals before the BIA and U.S. Courts of Appeals.

20. Defendant EOIR is a sub-agency of Defendant U.S. Department of Justice (“DOJ” or the “Department”) responsible for adjudicating administrative claims concerning federal immigration laws, including proceedings before the immigration courts and BIA. EOIR issued the instant Rule.

21. Defendant DOJ is a cabinet-level department of the federal Government.

22. Defendant Jeffrey A. Rosen is the Deputy Attorney General of the United States. He became the Acting Attorney General of the United States on December 24, 2020. As such, he is responsible for the administration of the immigration laws and oversees EOIR. He is sued in his official capacity.

23. Defendant James McHenry is sued in his official capacity as the Director of EOIR. He is responsible for the direction and supervision of the immigration courts and the BIA. Defendant McHenry issued the instant Rule.

FACTUAL ALLEGATIONS

I. EOIR’s Appellate and Adjudicatory Process

A. Overview of Proceedings for Relief from Removal

1. Proceedings Before EOIR

24. Immigration law is well known for its complexity. See, e.g., Ardestani v. INS, 502 U.S. 129, 138 (1991); Castro-O’Ryan v. INS, 847 F.2d 1307, 1312 (9th Cir. 1987). The INA governs custodial detention, the steps DHS must take to seek removal of a noncitizen, noncitizens’ access to dozens of immigration remedies that ultimately confer the right to remain in the United States, and the procedural mechanisms that allow applicants to pursue these remedies. The consequences that flow from immigration proceedings are also notably severe, often involving matters of life or death. See, e.g., Padilla v. Kentucky, 559 U.S. 356, 365 (2010) (“[D]eportation is a particularly severe ‘penalty.’” (citation omitted)); Nken v. Holder, 556 U.S. 418, 436 (2009) (“Of course there is a public interest in preventing aliens from being wrongfully removed, particularly to countries where they are likely to face substantial harm.”).

25. When DHS wishes to deport a noncitizen, it must obtain an order of removal from an IJ (with exceptions not relevant to this case). An IJ conducts removal proceedings, finds facts, and grants relief or orders removal. See 8 U.S.C. §§ 1229a(a)(1), (c)(1)(A). Proceedings before the IJ “shall be the sole and exclusive procedure for determining whether an alien may be . . . removed from the United States.” Id. § 1229a(a)(3) (emphasis added).

26. IJ decisions are appealable to the BIA, and “become final upon the earlier of” (1) “a determination by the [BIA] affirming such order,” or (2) the expiration of an appeal period. 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(47) (emphasis added). The INA does not permit the BIA to determine removability or issue a removal order in the first instance. See Mejia Galindo v. Sessions, 897 F.3d 894, 897 (7th Cir. 2018) (assessing whether the INA permits the BIA to issue removal orders and “conclud[ing] that it does not”); Sosa-Valenzuela v. Gonzales, 483 F.3d 1140, 1147 (10th Cir. 2007) (The INA “plainly place[s] with the IJ the initial responsibility of ordering deportation”).

27. Consistent with these obligations, and like any appellate body, “the [BIA] will not engage in factfinding in the course of deciding appeals.” 8 C.F.R. § 1003.1(d)(3)(iv). And its review of an IJ’s factfinding is limited to identifying clear errors. Id. § 1003.1(d)(3)(i). Thus, the BIA must remand if further factfinding is needed, and a party arguing that further factfinding is needed “must file a motion for remand.” Id. § 1003.1(d)(3)(iv).

2. Proceedings Before USCIS and Other Fora

28. While the INA and related regulations allow IJs to grant some forms of relief, others may be pursued only before U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services (“USCIS”). These include T or U visa petitions, for survivors of human trafficking or certain crimes, respectively, see 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(15); petitions for survivors of abuse under the Violence Against Women Act (“VAWA”), id. § 1154; and certain family-based petitions, id. §§ 1151(b), 1153. Therefore, when a noncitizen is pursuing a remedy before USCIS, but is also in removal proceedings before EOIR, he or she often must continue on both tracks, unless the IJ agrees to “administratively close” the EOIR track. See infra Part I.C.2. When USCIS grants an application, the noncitizen may move to terminate proceedings before EOIR or seek other relief based on the grant. Denial of relief by EOIR results in a removal order, even if an application for relief is pending before USCIS.

29. In some situations, a noncitizen may also pursue relief from state courts that will ultimately translate to relief before EOIR. For example, they can seek post-conviction relief in state court, which may impact removability or eligibility for relief, or special findings in family court, which may make a child eligible to apply for Special Immigrant Juvenile Status (“SIJS”), 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(27)(J). These proceedings occur in parallel with proceedings before EOIR. Denial of relief by EOIR results in a removal order, even if concurrent proceedings remain pending.

B. Due Process Protections and Other Rights Codified in the INA

30. “[D]ue process requires that [deportation] hearings be fundamentally fair.” Rosales v. ICE, 426 F.3d 733, 736 (5th Cir. 2005) (citation omitted); see also Biwot v. Gonzales, 403 F.3d 1094, 1098 (9th Cir. 2005); Borges v. Gonzales, 402 F.3d 398, 408 (3d Cir. 2005).

31. The INA effectuates these rights. Noncitizens are entitled to be “represented, at no expense to the Government, by counsel of the [applicant’s] choosing.” 8 U.S.C. §§ 1229a(b)(4)(A); 1362. In addition, “the alien shall have a reasonable opportunity to examine the evidence against the alien, [and] to present evidence on the alien’s own behalf.” Id. § 1229a(b)(4)(B).

32. The INA also addresses the right to apply for and be granted certain forms of relief. For example, the INA implements the United States’ treaty obligations to refugees by providing that “[a]ny alien who is physically present in the United States . . . irrespective of such alien’s status, may apply for asylum.” 8 U.S.C. § 1158(a)(1). Additionally, the INA instructs that “the Attorney General may not remove an alien to a country if the Attorney General decides that the alien’s life or freedom would be threatened in that country” based on membership in a protected group. Id. § 1231(b)(3) (emphasis added); see INS v. Stevic, 467 U.S. 407, 422 (1984).

33. Despite these protections, the nature of immigration proceedings and the barriers experienced by noncitizens—especially the most vulnerable—present obstacles to seeking relief from removal. Thus, these safeguards, while crucial, are not always implemented as designed.

C. Existing Procedural Mechanisms at EOIR

34. The current system for adjudicating immigration cases is rife with flaws. For example, as discussed below, EOIR lacks an electronic case management system, and nearly all of immigration practice remains paper-based. There is also no right to appointed counsel, so many noncitizens participate in hearings with life-or-death consequences without representation.

35. Against the backdrop of these and many other flaws, existing procedural tools provide a measure of protection against the injustices inherent in the system. These tools are vital to account for changes in fact or law, to correct for ineffective assistance of counsel, and to enable noncitizens to pursue alternative relief before USCIS. Such tools include:

1. Motions to Remand

36. Under existing regulations, if new and material evidence becomes available while an appeal is pending before the BIA, either party can file a motion to remand. See Matter of Coelho, 20 I. & N. Dec. 464 (BIA 1992). The evidence might alert the BIA to changes in an applicant's eligibility for relief. It could include: notice of an approved application by USCIS or evidence of a new familial relationship that would authorize new relief; new evidence that an applicant suffers from mental health conditions of which the IJ was unaware; a significant change in country conditions or personal facts in an asylum case; or a change in law that impacts eligibility for relief.

37. Unlike a motion to reopen, a motion to remand can be filed while an appeal is pending before the BIA, and, though the standards are identical, movants do not need to file them within a certain time, nor are they limited to only one, as is the case with statutory motions to reopen. See

8 C.F.R. § 1003.2(c)(2) (limiting noncitizens to one motion to reopen (the “number bar”), which must be filed within 90 days of a removal order (the “time bar”)). A motion to remand thus allows noncitizens to present material, previously unavailable evidence before their order of removal becomes final and before the BIA must expend resources on the underlying appeal. See id.; Matter of Coelho, 20 I. & N. Dec. at 471. Without this mechanism, many noncitizens would be precluded from presenting evidence that would materially change the outcome of their removal proceedings.

2. Administrative Closure

38. At least since the 1980s, IJs and the BIA have been permitted to administratively close cases to temporarily remove them from the active docket. See Matter of Avetisyan, 25 I. & N. Dec. 688 (BIA 2012); Matter of Amico, 19 I. & N. Dec. 652 (BIA 1988).

39. Administrative closure is “a procedural device that temporarily takes a removal case off of an [IJ’s] calendar, preventing it from moving forward,” which enables a “noncitizen to pursue alternative relief—such as a U visa—from USCIS.” Meza Morales v. Barr, 973 F.3d 656, 664 (7th Cir. 2020) (internal citations omitted). This tool allows IJs to prioritize cases in need of immediate resolution. Without administrative closure, EOIR would need to conduct many additional hearings and order many persons removed, even when that person is likely to receive alternative immigration relief from USCIS or a state court that would protect against deportation.

40. In 2018, the Attorney General eliminated the ability to order administrative closure except in very limited circumstances and despite nearly 40 years of regular use. See Matter of Castro Tum, 27 I. & N. Dec. 271 (A.G. 2018). The Fourth and Seventh Circuits, however, rejected the rule of Castro Tum and reinstated the IJ and BIA’s authority to order administrative closure, recognizing in part that administrative closure was an effective case management tool. See Meza Morales, 973 F.3d at 664; Romero v. Barr, 937 F.3d 282, 287 (4th Cir. 2019).

3. Sua Sponte Motions to Reopen

41. The existing regulations have also long authorized the IJ and the BIA to reopen final orders of removal sua sponte, and, like motions to remand, allow them to reopen proceedings outside of the time and number bars required by the statutory motion to reopen. See 8 C.F.R. § 1003.2(a). IJs and the BIA reopen cases sua sponte only where “exceptional situations,” such as new eligibility for relief or identification of errors in the prior proceedings, exist. See, e.g., Matter of G-D-, 22 I. & N. Dec. 1132, 1133-34 (BIA 1999). IJs and the BIA may exercise this discretion on their own action or in response to motions filed by noncitizens. This sua sponte authority protects many noncitizens from orders of removal where outcome-determinative relief is available but they are otherwise not yet eligible to seek it.

4. Voluntary Departure

42. Unlike the other procedural mechanisms outlined above, voluntary departure is a substantive grant of relief authorized by the INA. It allows noncitizens to depart the United States without receiving a removal order. 8 U.S.C. § 1229c. The ability to depart without a removal order is significant, because a removal order can bar noncitizens from seeking “any relief” in the future or require a person to remain abroad for a prolonged period before reuniting with a U.S. citizen or permanent resident family member in the United States. See 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(5) (bar to seeking relief); id. § 1182(a)(9)(A)(ii) (ten-year reentry bar).

43. Eligibility for voluntary departure is a highly factual inquiry, thus far only determined by an IJ through a hearing conducted in immigration court. Qualification for voluntary departure requires, among other things, a finding that the noncitizen is “a person of good moral character” with “the means to depart the United States.” 8 U.S.C. § 1229c(b)(1). Additionally, voluntary departure may only be granted after the IJ provides instructions, or “advisals,” regarding compliance with the grant, which must be accepted by the noncitizen. See 8 C.F.R. § 1240.26(b)(3).

D. Appeals to the BIA

44. Since long before the issuance of the Rule, the BIA has been “unable to adjudicate immigration appeals in removal proceedings effectively and efficiently.” See BIA: Procedural Reforms To Improve Case Management, 67 Fed. Reg. 54,878 (Aug. 26, 2002).

45. In 2016, EOIR tasked the independent consulting firm Booz Allen Hamilton with review of the BIA’s internal processes and recommended, as one of the most important changes, that the BIA implement an electronic case management system.<sup>1</sup> The BIA has not done so. Nor has it implemented other recommendations to improve efficiency.<sup>2</sup> Accordingly, as described below, litigants continue to face a system that is rife with delays and unpredictability on the one hand, but exceptional inflexibility in terms of its demands on noncitizens on the other.

46. Appellate proceedings before the BIA commence with the filing of the notice of appeal within thirty days of the IJ’s decision. 8 C.F.R. § 1003.3(a).

47. Next—at an uncertain time weeks, months, or even years into the future, see 67 Fed. Reg. at 54,895—the BIA provides the IJ’s decision, the transcript of the hearing, and a briefing schedule. See 8 C.F.R. § 1003.3(c)(1). The BIA does not provide a copy of the evidentiary record

---

<sup>1</sup> Public Comment of Catholic Legal Immigration Network, Inc. at 5–6 (Sept. 25, 2020), <https://bit.ly/3pIWWhXP> (hereinafter “CLINIC Comment”); Department of Justice, Executive Office for Immigration Review, Legal Case Study Summary Report, Booz Allen Hamilton at 26 (Apr. 6, 2017), <https://bit.ly/35td6yo> (hereinafter, “Booz Allen Hamilton Report”).

<sup>2</sup> U.S. Gov’t Accountability Off., GAO-18-469T, Testimony Before the Subcommittee on Border Security and Immigration, Committee on the Judiciary, Immigration Courts: Observations on Restructuring Options and Actions Needed to Address Long-Standing Management Challenges at 9 (Apr. 18, 2018), <https://bit.ly/3rQDIqm> (“EOIR could take several actions to address long-standing management and operational challenges and reduce the case backlog. . . . Overall, EOIR has fully implemented 1 recommendation” of eleven total).

or any other materials. Accordingly, unless the noncitizen has her own copy, which is particularly unlikely in cases involving pro se respondents and detained individuals, litigants must write their briefs without reviewing the record.

48. The parties have 21 days to file their briefs, starting from the date on which the briefing schedule is issued.<sup>3</sup> The briefing schedule is consecutive for non-detained litigants (i.e., appellee files its brief after appellant) and concurrent when the noncitizen is detained (i.e., briefs are filed simultaneously). 8 C.F.R. § 1003.3(c)(1). Even within the limited 21-day time period, a week or more is often lost on the front end because the BIA sends the materials by U.S. mail, and a few days or more are lost on the back end because the brief must be received in paper by the deadline. After accounting for these delays, noncitizens typically have fewer than two weeks to prepare and file their appellate briefs. This time frame can be even further abbreviated for detained individuals due to delays in mail processing and other complications in immigration detention centers.

49. Currently, either party may seek an extension of the briefing deadline of up to 90 days, which the BIA may grant in its discretion. See id. The BIA's current practice is to grant "an additional 21 days to file a brief regardless of the amount of time requested." BIA Practice Manual §§ 4.7(c)(i)(A), (B). The current regulations permit multiple extensions, which the Practice Manual states should be granted "only in rare circumstances." Id.

50. Under existing procedures, meeting deadlines is difficult for noncitizens and counsel alike. When noncitizens are represented by the same counsel before the BIA and IJ, these procedures require counsel to rearrange their workload without notice upon receipt of the transcript and briefing schedule, and then review the record and prepare a brief in, at most, a month's time.

---

<sup>3</sup> Pursuant to the BIA Practice Manual, these briefing deadlines "remain in effect" even where the transcript provided by EOIR was defective in some manner. See U.S. Dep't of Justice, BIA Practice Manual § 4.2(f)(iii) (Oct. 5, 2020), <https://bit.ly/351icSa>.

51. And since there is no right to counsel before EOIR, approximately 70% of individuals proceed pro se before the IJ and must seek out appellate counsel for BIA representation on this tight timeline.<sup>4</sup> That process requires copying and mailing the paper transcripts, determining whether counsel has the available resources to comply with the swift briefing schedule, and time for potential counsel to evaluate the merits of the case. These steps are likely to occupy all or most of the briefing timeline. If the noncitizen is lucky enough to secure counsel, their attorney is left with very little time to prepare and file the brief. And when these pro se noncitizens are unable to identify counsel, they must navigate the process on their own.

52. Unlike in federal court practice, the BIA disfavors reply briefs. See BIA Practice Manual § 4.6(h). They must be accompanied by a motion asserting surprise at opposing party's assertions and are granted only in the BIA's discretion. Id.

53. After the completion of briefing a case on the merits, the wait for a decision is arbitrary and unpredictable. For detained individuals, the BIA might issue a decision anywhere from three to six months later, though it can often take up to a year or longer. For non-detained individuals, it routinely takes a year or even several years to receive a decision.

E. EOIR's Recent Politicization and Substantive Restrictions on Access to Immigration Courts

54. Though Defendants adopted the Rule in the purported name of efficiency, there is reason to doubt Defendants' commitment to that goal. Indeed, the Rule is another in a string of actions taken by Defendants to curtail access to the judicial system, none of which has contributed to EOIR's overall function or efficiency. Rather, foreclosing access to relief—not to efficiently administer justice—has been central to the Trump administration's immigration policy.

---

<sup>4</sup> Noncitizens were pro se in 136,592 out of 191,633 (69.2%) cases initiated in FY 2020. Transactional Records Access Clearinghouse at Syracuse University ("TRAC"), State and County Details on Deportation Proceedings in Immigration Court, (last updated Nov. 2020), <https://bit.ly/3s8wZnV> (hereinafter "TRAC Representation Rates"). The percentage is even higher for detained noncitizens.

55. President Trump himself has called for limits on due process, stating that immigrants should be immediately deported “with no Judges or Court Cases.”<sup>5</sup> Overall, the administration's explicit strategy has been to “present[] aliens with multiple unsolvable dilemmas to impact their calculus for choosing to make the arduous journey to begin with.”<sup>6</sup>

56. Defendants and their counterparts at DHS have adopted an onslaught of changes in furtherance of this goal, including, paradoxically, measures that have directly contributed to existing backlogs. In particular, Defendants have increased pressure on IJs “to speed adjudications to reduce the court's sizable backlog,” while making it increasingly difficult for IJs to “efficiently manage their dockets.”<sup>7</sup> For example, in July 2017, EOIR issued an Operating Policies and Procedures Memorandum (“OPPM”) restricting IJs' continuance authority, particularly when the purpose of the continuance is to retain counsel.<sup>8</sup> Defendant McHenry followed that OPPM with a

---

<sup>5</sup> @realDonaldTrump, Twitter (June 24, 2018), <https://bit.ly/3qbArN6>; see also Public Comment of Aaron Reichlin-Melnick at 4–5 (Sept. 27, 2020), <https://bit.ly/3hDvPfr> (collecting quotations) (hereinafter, “Reichlin-Melnick Comment”).

<sup>6</sup> See Julia Ainsley, Stephen Miller Wants Border Patrol, Not Asylum Officers, to Determine Migrant Asylum Claims, NBC News (Jul. 29, 2019), <https://nbcnews.to/3mq1lc5> (quoting a White House National Security Council official) (emphasis added).

<sup>7</sup> See Migration Policy Inst., Dismantling and Reconstructing the U.S. Immigration System: A Catalog of Changes under the Trump Presidency at 50 (July 2020), <https://bit.ly/3hBIGi6>.

<sup>8</sup> MaryBeth Keller, Chief Immigration Judge, EOIR, Memorandum re: Operating Policies and Procedures Memorandum 17-01: Continuances (July 31, 2017), <https://bit.ly/3g7IPdU> (“OPPM 17-01”); see also National Immigrant Justice Center, Policy Brief: The Weaponization of the Immigration Court System (Apr. 2018), <https://bit.ly/391N3PT>.

new memo on January 8, 2021, reversing long-standing policy to state for the first time that “EOIR has no policy mandating or requiring [IJs] to grant a continuance for any reason.”<sup>9</sup>

57. EOIR’s push for speedier IJ case adjudications is at odds with DHS’s routine refusal to exercise prosecutorial discretion not to pursue removal cases, which could remove non-priority cases from the court’s docket.

58. The crisis within EOIR has drawn the attention of legal organizations, including the American Bar Association (“ABA”), which has decried the lack of due process in the immigration courts.<sup>10</sup> In January 2020, Congress convened an oversight hearing titled “Courts in Crisis: the State of Judicial Independence and Due Process in U.S. Immigration Courts,” where members of the ABA, National Association of Immigration Judges, and the American Immigration Lawyers Association (“AILA”) testified about due process concerns and systemic flaws.

59. The changes adopted over the last several years have affected all aspects of the immigration system. As most relevant here, EOIR has limited and threatened to eliminate programs that serve otherwise unrepresented individuals like the Legal Orientation Program (“LOP”) and the BIA Pro Bono Project. It has restricted IJ authority over docket management by limiting or eliminating most procedural mechanisms that IJs use to balance efficiency and fairness. And DOJ has concentrated significantly more power at the top of EOIR, particularly in the EOIR Director, which is an un-confirmed political position, with certain operational authorities, who now yields influence second only to the Attorney General himself in actions ranging from IJ hiring to the substantive adjudication of appeals.

---

<sup>9</sup> EOIR Dir. James McHenry, Continuances: Procedural Memorandum (Jan. 8, 2021), <https://bit.ly/38udq1T>; compare with OPPM 17-01, supra n. 8, (“With regard to granting a continuance to give a respondent the opportunity to obtain legal counsel, it remains general policy that at least one continuance should be granted for that purpose.”).

<sup>10</sup> American Bar Association, ABA President to Congress: Fix the Immigration Courts (Jan. 29, 2020), <https://bit.ly/3bBSzMN>.

60. The dismantling of the BIA Pro Bono Project is particularly notable. That program was created by EOIR and administered by Plaintiff CLINIC. The program identified meritorious appeals and recruited pro bono counsel to staff them. The program also included various measures to facilitate that representation, such as providing newly engaged counsel with the full record of proceedings and automatically re-setting the 21-day briefing schedule.<sup>11</sup> Without adequate justification, the Trump administration all but discontinued this project, creating numerous procedural hurdles that led to a 90% cut in project participation—from over 120 cases to 12.

61. These changes exist in addition to many substantive changes, particularly to the asylum system, that have eliminated or curtailed access to an IJ. For example, the Government has promulgated regulations to bar asylum to individuals who enter outside of a port of entry, who do not first seek asylum in a country through which they transit, and who have even minor exposure to portions of the criminal justice system.<sup>12</sup> The Government has also forced approximately 60,000 asylum seekers to remain in Mexico, in often life-threatening conditions and with inadequate procedural protections, to await their U.S. asylum proceedings.<sup>13</sup>

62. Indeed, in the second half of December 2020 alone, the Government issued six final and two proposed rules occupying more than 400 pages of the Federal Register to curtail access to

---

<sup>11</sup> See DOJ BIA Pro Bono Project, <https://bit.ly/3o4XkB0> (acknowledging that “Legal representation has had a meaningful impact in many . . . cases” on appeal before the BIA).

<sup>12</sup> See National Immigrant Justice Center, A Timeline Of The Trump Administration’s Efforts To End Asylum (Nov. 2020), <https://bit.ly/3nariH6> (describing these and other policies).

<sup>13</sup> Id.

the immigration courts and to substantive immigration remedies. In addition to the Rule at issue here, DHS and DOJ have finalized rules that:

- a. Radically altered substantive eligibility grounds for asylum, withholding of removal, and protection under the Convention Against Torture (“CAT”) while also narrowing the criteria for who will be able to see an IJ to present these claims. See Procedures for Asylum and Withholding of Removal; Credible Fear and Reasonable Fear Review, 85 Fed. Reg. 80,274 (Dec. 11, 2020) (hereinafter, “Omnibus Asylum Rule”).
- b. Instructed IJs to deny asylum, without an evidentiary hearing if an asylum application is filed more than 15 days after an initial hearing, fails to include proof of payment of a newly imposed fee, or leaves any field on the application blank (even if that field is inapplicable). See Procedures for Asylum and Withholding of Removal, 85 Fed. Reg. 81,698 (Dec. 16, 2020) (hereinafter, “Asylum Procedures Rule”).
- c. Finalized a prior interim final rule that barred access to asylum for those who do not first seek asylum and receive a final adjudication in another country while en route to this country. See Asylum Eligibility and Procedural Modifications, 85 Fed. Reg. 82,260 (Dec. 17, 2020) (hereinafter, “Transit Ban Rule”);
- d. Imposed new fees that did not previously exist and increased nine-fold others for applications filed before EOIR. See Executive Office for Immigration Review; Fee Review, 85 Fed. Reg. 82,750 (Dec. 18, 2020) (hereinafter, “EOIR Fee Rule”).
- e. Created new rules to block and deport asylum seekers as purported security and public health risks. See Security Bars and Processing, 85 Fed. Reg. 84,160 (Dec. 23, 2020) (hereinafter, “Security Bar Rule”).

63. The two proposed rules in this flurry significantly compound the changes made by this Rule because they eliminate or curtail other remedies that Defendants used to justify this Rule. See Good Cause for a Continuance in Immigration Proceedings, 85 Fed. Reg. 75925 (Nov. 27, 2020) (hereinafter, “Continuance NPRM”); Motions To Reopen and Reconsider; Effect of Departure; Stay of Removal, 85 Fed. Reg. 75942 (Nov. 27, 2020) (hereinafter, “Motion to Reopen NPRM”).

F. Effects of Recent Changes at EOIR

64. These changes—both cumulatively and individually—eviscerate due process rights before EOIR, upset settled reliance interests, and hinder rather than help efficiency goals.

65. For example, the elimination of administrative closure will cause the premature deportation of many individuals with meritorious claims for relief, while causing more inefficiencies by removing an important tool used by IJs and the BIA to manage their caseloads. About 60% of noncitizens who had their cases administratively closed between FY 1986-2020 were ultimately granted relief or had their removal proceedings terminated altogether, usually within just four months after the case was re-calendared.<sup>14</sup> Administrative closure has reduced EOIR's growing backlog, and eliminating it completely would "result in a considerable rise in the number of cases" in that backlog.<sup>15</sup>

66. Another example of reducing due process without achieving any actual efficiencies is EOIR's introduction of case completion metrics in 2018. Under these metrics, IJs are subject to a case completion quota requiring completion of 700 cases each year, a remand rate requiring fewer than 15% of their decisions to be reversed, and speed-related adjudication benchmarks constraining the time that an IJ may spend on a given case.<sup>16</sup> Failure to meet these benchmarks can result in discipline, reassignment, or termination.

67. Yet, in significant part because of these changes, as well as chronic understaffing, IJ workloads continue to burgeon.<sup>17</sup> Fiscal Year 2021 started with the largest immigration court

---

<sup>14</sup> TRAC, The Life and Death of Administrative Closure (Sept. 10, 2020), <https://bit.ly/38cJMOB> (hereinafter "TRAC Administrative Closure Report").

<sup>15</sup> Id.

<sup>16</sup> EOIR Performance Plan – Adjudicative Employees, <https://bit.ly/388BjM7> (hereinafter "EOIR Performance Plan").

<sup>17</sup> TRAC, Burgeoning Immigration Judge Workloads (May 23, 2019), <https://bit.ly/3pLV4iw>; see also Marisa Esthimer, Crisis in the Courts: Is the Backlogged U.S. Immigration Court System at Its Breaking Point? Migration Policy Institute (October 3, 2019), <http://bit.ly/3s8iPU9>.

backlog on record.<sup>18</sup> As former IJs explained in their comment on the proposed Rule, EOIR’s recent policymaking has actually caused the “crushing backlogs” it allegedly is trying to fix, while eroding due process.<sup>19</sup> Without tools like administrative closure, continuances, and prosecutorial discretion, it will be impossible to tackle this backlog, let alone provide noncitizens with a meaningful adjudicatory process.

68. Since March 2020, the Trump administration has also used COVID-19 to advance its agenda of undermining due process protections and expediting deportation. For example, EOIR refuses to extend deadlines or continue cases despite acute access to counsel issues the pandemic has created, particularly for detained noncitizens. As a group of senators writing to the Government Accountability Office (“GAO”) in August 2020 explained, “[w]hile the Trump administration has justified its incursions into the independence of immigration courts as efficiency measures, . . . EOIR’s response to the COVID-19 pandemic demonstrates how the agency can use seemingly neutral measures to tip the scales of justice against noncitizens.”<sup>20</sup>

II. Promulgation of the Rule and Overview of the Rule’s Flaws

69. In August 2020, the Department issued an NPRM proposing sweeping changes to EOIR’s appellate and adjudicatory systems. NPRM, Appellate Procedures and Decisional Finality

---

<sup>18</sup> TRAC, FY 2021 Begins with Largest Immigration Court Backlog on Record, (Nov. 24, 2020), <https://bit.ly/3Sc4MTD>.

<sup>19</sup> Public Comment of Round Table of Immigration Judges at 3 (Sept. 24, 2020), <http://bit.ly/3oFfRE8>.

<sup>20</sup> Senators Call for GAO Investigation of Trump Politicization of Immigration Courts as COVID-19 Crisis Rages, Sheldon Whitehouse, U.S. Senator for Rhode Island (Press Release, Aug. 21, 2020), <https://bit.ly/2LADvmW>.

in Immigration Proceedings; Administrative Closure, 85 Fed. Reg. 52,491 (Aug. 26, 2020). Then-Attorney General William Barr signed the NPRM. Id. at 52,514.

70. Defendants gave the public only 30 days to comment on the proposed Rule, despite requests to extend the comment period, despite the COVID-19 pandemic, and despite other immigration-related rulemaking proposals and decisionmaking issued days before the comment period closed. See, e.g., infra ¶ 312 (discussing the Asylum Procedures Rule, which was issued two days before the close of comments), ¶ 313 (discussing AG decision issued one day before the close of comments). Defendants subsequently issued two closely related rules on which the public was deprived from commenting: the Continuance NPRM and the Motion to Reopen NPRM.

71. On December 16, 2020, the Department published the Rule under Defendant McHenry's signature, with an effective date of January 15, 2021. Despite comments raising significant concerns with the proposed changes, the final Rule is nearly identical to the proposed version. And, as discussed below, see infra Part III, Defendant McHenry lacked authority to issue the Rule at all, and particularly lacked authority to assign himself new adjudicatory powers.

72. The Rule was published with a barrage of other immigration-related rulemakings that were either proposed or finalized in the last few weeks of December 2020 alone, see supra ¶¶ 62–63. This staggered process made it exceedingly difficult, if not impossible, for Plaintiffs to meaningfully comment on the Rule.

73. As reflected in the Rule, Defendants failed to meaningfully analyze how the Rule would affect small entities, including but not limited to nonprofit organizations like certain Plaintiffs that provide legal services to immigrants and whose missions and operations will be upended by the Rule's radical changes to EOIR procedures.

74. Substantively, in promulgating the Rule, Defendants failed to meaningfully confront the profound structural flaws that exist within EOIR and the extensive comments addressing them, instead improperly putting in place measures that will exacerbate many of these structural flaws and justifying these changes with false claims of increased efficiency.

75. Far from advancing efficiency, the Rule will exacerbate existing flaws and result in further backlogs and appeals to address the Rule's changes and undo erroneous decisionmaking, while imposing devastating barriers to noncitizens' rights to fair proceedings. That will, in turn, undercut the missions of Plaintiffs and force them to divert resources, spending more time and effort on each case and able to take on fewer and fewer cases.

76. Yet, Defendants failed to account for these significant impediments or consider reasonable alternatives; failed to provide a reasoned explanation that justified their significant departure from prior factual findings, legal conclusions, and policy positions; failed to consider alternatives proposed by commenters; and failed to consider the significant reliance interests, including meaningful access to seek relief from deportation, the Rule undermines.

77. Indeed, the poor fit between the Rule and Defendants' purported justifications for it suggests that those justifications were pretextual. It is reasonable to conclude that the Rule was designed not to improve efficiency, but to foreclose meritorious motions, appeals, and relief altogether—as the Trump administration has repeatedly made clear is its goal. See supra ¶ 55.

III. The Rule Must Be Vacated Because Defendant McHenry Had No Statutory or Regulatory Authority to Issue It.

78. The INA provides that “[t]he Attorney General shall establish such regulations, . . . delegate such authority, and perform such other acts as the Attorney General determines to be necessary for carrying out” his authority under the INA. 8 U.S.C. § 1103(g)(2). And by statute, EOIR is made “subject to the direction and regulation of the Attorney General.” 6 U.S.C. § 521.

79. The Attorney General by regulation has delegated certain powers to the EOIR Director. 8 C.F.R. § 1003.0(b). But that regulation does not delegate to the EOIR Director any rulemaking authority. See id.

80. Instead, that regulation allows the EOIR Director to “[i]ssue operational instructions and policy, including procedural instructions regarding the implementation of new statutory or regulatory authorities.” Id. § 1003.0(b)(1)(i). It thus distinguishes between “operational instructions,” “policy,” and “procedural instructions,” on the one hand, and “new regulatory authorities,” on the other, and do not allow the EOIR Director to issue regulations. Id.

81. The Rule does not describe any other source of delegated authority for the Director of EOIR to issue the Rule, and Plaintiffs are aware of none. Nor does the Rule indicate that then-Attorney General Barr otherwise approved the Rule. Nor does the Rule point to any instance in which an EOIR Director has issued a rule. That is because, at least as far as Plaintiffs are aware and on information and belief, it had never occurred before December 2020.

82. Because Defendant McHenry was without statutory or delegated authority to issue the Rule, the issuance of the rule was ultra vires, “in excess of statutory jurisdiction, authority, or limitations,” 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(C), and not in accordance with law, id. § 706(2)(A), and the Rule in its entirety should be set aside.

IV. The Rule Must Be Vacated Because It Is Contrary to Law and Arbitrary and Capricious, in Violation of the APA.

A. Defendants’ Significant Changes to EOIR Procedures Are Unlawful.

83. Additionally, the substantive changes effectuated by the Rule violate the APA because they are arbitrary and capricious and contrary to law.

1. The Rule Hamstrings Appellate Briefing Schedules

84. First, the Rule hamstrings BIA briefing processes, purportedly to expedite appeals. But it does so by shifting the burden to noncitizens and those working on their behalf without reducing the duration that an appeal is pending. The effect is to limit noncitizens' ability to mount appeals.

85. The Rule introduces four substantive changes to the briefing schedule for appeals. First, it reduces the maximum allowable time for an extension of the opening brief from 90 to 14 days, regardless of circumstances. 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,654 (new 8 C.F.R. § 1003.3(c)(1)). Second, it limits the parties to one extension, again regardless of circumstances. Id. Next, it eliminates consecutive briefing for non-detained BIA appeals, instead adopting a concurrent briefing schedule, as is the practice for detained appeals. Id. Finally, it shortens the deadline for submitting reply briefs, requiring briefs to be filed within 14 days of the brief in chief, instead of 21 days. Id.

86. For the 70% of noncitizens who were unrepresented before the IJ,<sup>21</sup> and especially for pro se noncitizens who are detained at the time of their appeal, the Rule makes retaining appellate counsel virtually impossible. Even for noncitizens who are fortunate enough to retain counsel on appeal, the Rule exacerbates existing difficulties, limiting the ability of prospective counsel, like Plaintiffs, to accept cases and imposing significant barriers to representation. And these restrictions also significantly limit Plaintiffs' ability to refer cases to pro bono counsel, further impairing their ability to carry out their missions. The Rule imposes these harms in the following ways.

87. First, the BIA's mail-based system, unpredictable briefing schedules, and the short timeline to file a brief already limit the ability of noncitizens to obtain counsel. Noncitizens who are unrepresented before the IJ or need new counsel for appeal are often unable to obtain counsel prior to receipt of the briefing schedule, transcript, and any written decision, as attorneys generally will not take on a case without evaluating the merits and considering deadlines. Thus, many noncitizens expend the majority of their appeal timeline waiting to receive materials in the mail and seeking out appellate counsel. By the time prospective counsel receives these materials, counsel often has less than two weeks to review the record, ascertain the merits of a claim, finalize representation agreements, and prepare an appellate brief.

---

<sup>21</sup> See TRAC Representation Rates, supra n.4.

88. Additionally, because the Attorney General recently issued a decision requiring the BIA to examine substantive issues on all statutory elements de novo without deference to the parties' stipulations below, the process of writing a BIA brief is now more substantively complex and cumbersome. See Matter of A-C-A-A-, 28 I. & N. Dec. 84 (A.G. 2020). This is further exacerbated by the Rule's new authority for the BIA to affirm on any basis in the record. See infra Part IV.A.3.b.

89. These hurdles will make it exceptionally difficult for prospective counsel, like Plaintiffs, to accept new cases for BIA representation. For example, Plaintiff NIJC accepts BIA cases from previously pro se litigants consistent with its mission to provide representation and improve access to counsel. But NIJC will not be able to do so, or at least will need to accept far fewer cases, under the Rule's unreasonable and unpredictable timeline. Plaintiff CLINIC's affiliates will similarly be unable to continue to accept BIA cases under these time constraints.

90. Moreover, because Plaintiffs and other nonprofit legal service providers have limited resources, they often engage pro bono attorneys in the private bar to take on appellate representation. The Rule will severely curtail such efforts to place cases with pro bono attorneys, who are ordinarily not experienced in immigration law. This change will especially harm CLINIC's BIA Pro Bono Project and HIAS's BIA Project, which exist to screen meritorious BIA appeals and place them with pro bono counsel.

91. Even where pro bono representation might be possible, Plaintiffs will have to recruit, train, and mentor pro bono counsel within a more limited timeframe, which will require a significant diversion of resources from other projects and acceptance of fewer cases. These changes will thus frustrate Plaintiffs' missions to ensure access to counsel for as many noncitizens as possible, particularly those who are indigent or detained.

92. Similarly, the Rule will make self-representation unrealistic. Pro se litigants already struggle to represent themselves before the BIA given language barriers and limited access to resources that would aid in appellate brief writing. As such, a few days can be dispositive in pro se litigants' ability to pursue their appeals. To further reduce their time to file a brief makes self-representation nearly impossible. These challenges are especially profound for detained pro se noncitizens. For these individuals, their mail is further delayed, their access to a law library limited, and their ability to send and receive mail or make phone calls to prospective counsel is curtailed.

93. The Rule thus directly undermines the entire point of LOP programs, such as those operated by Plaintiffs FIRR and NIJC: to ensure pro se individuals have a shot at success. To avoid the harms imposed by the Rule, Plaintiffs FIRR and NIJC will need to divert more resources to teaching pro se individuals about the appellate process and brief writing—concepts that are already exceptionally difficult to explain in a pro se support model—and to do so under significant, new time pressures.

94. Even with counsel at the appeals stage, the single-extension provision leaves counsel, like Plaintiffs, with no room for additional timing constraints, such as competing workload requirements inherent in immigration practice (e.g., briefing in other appeals), natural disasters, illness, or unforeseen life events. And because it is not possible to predict when the BIA will issue the briefing schedule, there is no ability for Plaintiffs' staff, affiliates, or pro bono teams to plan for foreseen circumstances like long-standing court deadlines or scheduled medical procedures.

95. The truncated briefing schedule will also increase Plaintiffs' mailing expenses. The BIA requires hard-copy-only filing, and Plaintiffs anticipate a greater need to use more expensive expedited mailing options, including same-day couriers that charge at least $150 per case, in light of the shorter timelines under the Rule.

96. Timing aside, the Rule imposes substantive hurdles for Plaintiffs. Plaintiffs must attempt to anticipate the Government's arguments in their briefing as well as any ground in the record upon which the BIA may affirm the IJ's decision, even if not raised by either party. As a result of this uncertainty, Plaintiffs will need to file many more reply briefs, even though such briefs are disfavored by the BIA. The increased burden per case will further reduce Plaintiffs' capacity to take on additional cases. And though the Rule purports to apply equally to DHS and noncitizens alike, the burden of this change will fall dramatically on noncitizens and their advocates, like Plaintiffs, who cannot follow DHS's routine practice of filing boilerplate, truncated briefs, even though DHS is always represented by counsel.

97. These changes, which irreparably harm Plaintiffs, are contrary to law because they deprive noncitizens of the right to appeal to the BIA, the right to counsel of their choosing (at no expense to the Government), and a reasonable opportunity to present arguments and evidence. See 8 U.S.C. §§ 1229a(b), 1362. These changes similarly undermine various provisions in the INA contemplating pro bono legal services by organizations like Plaintiffs. See, e.g., 8 U.S.C. §§ 1229(a)(1), (b)(2) (requiring that noncitizens in removal proceedings be provided a list of pro bono attorneys); id. § 1443(h) (requiring the Attorney General to work with "relevant organizations" to "broadly distribute information concerning" the immigration process).

Additionally, the Due Process Clause, which applies to noncitizens in removal proceedings, affords noncitizens an opportunity to be heard. These changes eviscerate these rights.

98. Furthermore, the Rule's concurrent briefing requirement, which forces the noncitizen to anticipate what the Government will argue and also disprove any possible ground upon which the BIA could affirm the IJ's decision, conflicts with noncitizens' rights to counsel and a meaningful opportunity to confront arguments against them.

99. These provisions are also arbitrary and capricious under the APA. Defendants' justifications for these changes do not pass muster. First, Defendants claim that these changes would curb "gamesmanship" and end "last-minute delay tactics." See 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,637. But Defendants provide no evidence of such gamesmanship. To the contrary, modest briefing extensions, reply briefs, and consecutive briefing are hallmarks of ordinary appellate processes. Noncitizens' use of these mechanisms reflect a reasonable, indeed common, response to the myriad procedural barriers that preclude them, particularly those who are detained and/or pro se, from meaningfully participating in the appellate process. Tellingly, Defendants did not identify any existing judicial procedures whereby judges are forbidden from giving extensions for briefing in their cases regardless of circumstances.

100. Second, Defendants claim that these provisions will make the BIA's adjudication process more efficient. See 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,637. Yet they provide no evidence that shortening extensions or requiring concurrent briefing will meaningfully impact existing delays, which largely occur before the briefing schedule is issued and after the briefs are filed. The Rule merely increases the noncitizen's need to "hurry up" without changing the "wait" that inevitably follows.

101. In fact, the Rule’s mandate that the BIA conduct an individualized good cause analysis for every extension request, where extensions were previously granted as a matter of course, will offset any timing benefits the Rule purportedly provides.

102. Defendants’ responses to relevant comments further fail to meaningfully address these issues. For instance, Defendants’ response to the harm caused to pro se individuals who struggle to retain counsel was simply to assert that no rationale had been offered for why this problem exists. 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,637. This non-response is belied by both Plaintiffs’ comments and those submitted by numerous other legal service providers, which offered detailed, concrete facts explaining the barriers discussed above.

103. Additionally, Defendants’ response that noncitizens may overcome any timing restrictions by beginning to prepare their appeal while they await a briefing schedule ignores the BIA’s own practice. Without access to the IJ decision and the transcripts, which arrive with the briefing schedule, noncitizens and/or their counsel, like Plaintiffs, have no reasonable way to meaningfully prepare an appeal in advance. Here again, Defendants did not acknowledge this fact despite the numerous comments explaining it.

104. Belying Defendants’ feigned disbelief that noncitizens and their counsel must await a transcript to begin briefing, EOIR previously acknowledged these hurdles when it created the BIA Pro Bono Project. That program provided counsel with a full copy of the record of proceedings and automatically reset the briefing schedule to allow sufficient time for newly engaged pro bono counsel to adequately prepare an appellate brief. It did so with the understanding that such accommodations actually “enable[ ] the BIA to provide a more effective and timely case review.”<sup>22</sup> Despite previously acknowledging the utility of such procedures, Defendants restricted those same procedures in the Rule, dismissing out of hand commenters' concerns and failing to explain its departure from its previous view.

---

<sup>22</sup> EOIR DOJ Pro Bono Project, supra n.11.

105. Moreover, as Plaintiff CLINIC explained in its comment, the changes will be devastating to the viability of the BIA Pro Bono Project.<sup>23</sup> Defendants did not dispute this point, despite relying on the existence of the Project as evidence that the Rule would not have “any negative impact on representation before the BIA.” See 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,637. Nor did Defendants acknowledge that they have effectively dismantled the BIA Pro Bono Project even before this Rule, see supra ¶ 60. Defendants' failure to acknowledge changes in the Project both before and as a result of this Rule undermines their reliance on the project to justify the Rule.

106. Defendants' reasoning for concurrent briefing (as opposed to the parties filing consecutively) is likewise arbitrary. Defendants claim that there is not a “legal or operational reason to adjudicate non-detained cases in a less efficient manner than detained cases.” 85 Fed. Reg. at 52,499 (NPRM); see also 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,636. Yet, in the detained context, a noncitizen's liberty interests and the Government's expense related to detention at least weigh in favor of speedier adjudications (though, speedier adjudication does not require concurrent briefing). Indeed, when EOIR previously created concurrent briefing for detained cases nearly 20 years ago, it considered but then reversed its proposal to implement a concurrent briefing schedule in non-detained appeals, too. See 67 Fed. Reg. 54,895. Defendants provided no rationale for departing from this practice, or justification for changing their prior decision.

107. Defendants' justification for concurrent appeals and limits on reply briefs is even more irrational when DHS appeals. Defendants assume, incorrectly, that DHS's notices accurately preview the arguments to be raised on appeal, and suggest that noncitizens' interests are protected if they brief all issues on the notice. 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,636. But DHS routinely reserves the right to raise additional arguments, and it does in fact develop, add, or change arguments based on a review of the transcript. Defendants do not account for this fact.

---

<sup>23</sup> CLINIC Comment, supra n.1 at 14.

108. Defendants suggest that EOIR's plan to institute an electronic filing system at the BIA should mitigate these various concerns. See 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,638. As a preliminary matter, they provide no evidence that the electronic filing system will actually be implemented in the near future. But even assuming that it is, they did not explain why they are codifying and effectuating these changes, as well as the changes to briefing extensions, before that system is operational. Defendants provided no reason for declining to consider the obvious alternative of deferring the changes until an electronic filing system is in place. Nor did Defendants confront the fact that, in many cases, an e-filing system will not improve matters. Many immigration detention centers deny detained noncitizens any access to the internet, which will eliminate the mitigating effect of any electronic filing system for pro se, detained noncitizens.

109. Finally, Defendants failed to consider how these changes in the BIA's briefing procedures interact with other changes in the Rule and with BIA practice generally. For example, the Rule's provision granting the BIA new authority to affirm on any basis in the record and the Attorney General decision disallowing the BIA's reliance on IJ-level stipulations, see supra ¶ 88, will require appellate briefs that not only challenge the IJ's errors, but also anticipate the Government's response and disprove any other reasoning that the BIA could offer. Defendants also fail to consider the compound effect of numerous other sub-regulatory changes that Defendants made, including limiting BIA briefs and motions to 25 pages, and adopting a policy that disfavors granting extensions.<sup>24</sup> These changes make the Rule’s restrictions even more burdensome on noncitizens and Plaintiffs.

2. The Rule Eviscerates the BIA’s Remand Authority

110. Second, in a series of revisions in the name of “finality,” the Rule eviscerates the BIA’s remand authority. Without advancing efficiency or finality, let alone justice, these changes preclude noncitizens from presenting new and material evidence, correcting errors in the proceedings below, and seeking relief from removal while their appeals remain pending. In turn, the Rule will increase the work required of Plaintiffs per case, thereby limiting the overall number of cases each organization will be able to accept and undercutting their respective missions.

a. Limitation of BIA Remands for Further Factfinding and Consideration of New Evidence

111. Under the Rule, the BIA is prohibited from remanding to the IJ for further factfinding unless the party seeking a remand—almost always the noncitizen—meets new criteria. See 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,651 (new 8 C.F.R. § 1003.1(d)(3)(iv)(D)). Specifically, the Rule permits a remand for factfinding only if (1) the noncitizen “preserved the issue” before the IJ and “attempted to adduce the additional facts”; (2) the factfinding would “alter the outcome” of the case; and (3) either the IJ’s factual findings were “clearly erroneous,” or the IJ committed an error of law that requires additional factfinding. Id.

112. The Rule likewise bars remands for the introduction of new evidence. It provides that “the [BIA] shall not receive or review new evidence submitted on appeal, shall not remand a case for consideration of new evidence received on appeal, and shall not consider a motion to remand based on new evidence.” 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,652 (new 8 C.F.R. § 1003.1(d)(7)(v)(A)). The only exception relates to EOIR’s jurisdiction, i.e., evidence that an individual is a U.S. citizen or non-removable immigrant. Id. (new 8 C.F.R. § 1003.1(d)(7)(v)(B)).<sup>25</sup>

---

<sup>24</sup> AILA, Practice Alert: Updates to the BIA Practice Manual, Briefing Extensions Now Disfavored (Dec. 11, 2019), <https://bit.ly/3pOEXkd>.

113. Under the Rule, noncitizens will no longer be able to seek a remand to pursue relief for which they are newly eligible. This includes, for example, where parallel proceedings result in the grant of SIJS, where post-conviction relief renders a lawful permanent resident eligible for cancellation of removal, or where an asylum seeker experiences a new threat to her life.

114. But the Rule is asymmetrical: it allows DHS to seek a remand at any time it obtains new evidence “as a result of identity, law enforcement, or security investigations or examinations.” Id. at 81,590. Even in that instance, the Rule precludes noncitizens from filing rebuttal evidence. See id.; see also id. at 81,617. The Rule also allows that some remands go directly to DHS and not the IJ. The implication of that provision is that an applicant who purportedly has a new aggravated felony conviction will not be able to challenge that finding before an IJ without first clearing a series of hurdles imposed by DHS for individuals who are vulnerable to administrative removal orders. See 8 C.F.R. § 1238.1 (explaining the applicable process before DHS).

115. These changes upend remand practice—whether on the BIA’s own order in a direct appeal or in response to a motion—in a manner that is contrary to law. First, requiring a noncitizen to “preserve[ ] the issue” and “attempt[ ] to adduce the additional facts” in a removal proceeding as a prerequisite to remand is illogical because it would require the noncitizen and/or their advocate to predict the IJ’s legal or factual errors before a decision is rendered. It is also contrary to law, because—particularly in cases involving pro se litigants—the IJs have a duty to develop the record.

---

<sup>25</sup> Likewise, the Rule prohibits the BIA from remanding a case sua sponte except in these same circumstances. 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,652 (new 8 C.F.R. § 1003.1(d)(7)(ii)(C)-(D)).

See, e.g., Jacinto v. INS, 208 F.3d 725, 733 (9th Cir. 2000). This change reassigns that burden to pro se noncitizens. This harm will impact FIRR and NIJC in particular because, in the LOP context, the process of teaching self-representation will have to include instruction on the need to develop the record no matter what. But context matters; if a pro se litigant insists on developing the record, even on issues that DHS does not dispute, she risks irritating the IJ in a way that could impact the outcome. The process for handling this balance cannot be taught in a pro se workshop.

116. Moreover, this provision undermines due process because, under the pressure of existing case completion quotas, see supra ¶ 66, and with virtually no risk of remand for failure to develop the record, there will be little incentive for IJs to take the steps necessary to develop the record. By eliminating the safeguard that remand provides, the Rule leaves those most dependent upon IJs to protect their right to due process without recourse to challenge their failure to do so.

117. Second, restricting the BIA's ability to remand for further factfinding or on the basis of new evidence violates the Due Process Clause and the right to a fair hearing under 8 U.S.C. § 1229a(b). Noncitizens cannot possibly "preserve" issues or "adduce additional facts" when they do not yet exist, nor can they be expected to preserve issues that may only arise once the IJ issues a decision at the end of proceedings. The Rule violates due process by demanding a standard for remands that cannot possibly be met in most circumstances.

118. Third, the Rule's limits on remand violate non-refoulement obligations, which require this country to refrain from deporting noncitizens where there is a substantial risk of persecution or torture abroad. In the context of remand for factfinding, the BIA could be adjudicating an asylum case on an obviously stale record, yet it would be barred from remanding even if a noncitizen's circumstances have changed substantially. Paradoxically, the Rule allows the BIA to rely on "administrative[ly] noticed" facts regarding, say, a civil war in the applicant's home country, see infra Part IV.A.3.a, but it prohibits a remand to assess how these developments would impact the noncitizen. In the context of an applicant-filed motion for remand, the problem is even clearer. The basis for the protection claim may arise while an appeal is pending, yet a motion to remand is unavailable.

119. Fourth, the limits on remand are an especially egregious violation of law in the context of noncitizens with psychiatric conditions or cognitive limitations. These individuals may require certain safeguards to ensure they have access to a full and fair hearing. See Matter of M-A-M-, 25 I. & N. Dec. 474 (BIA 2011). Yet, where the IJ fails to implement those safeguards or otherwise address an applicant's competency, a disability may prevent these noncitizens from eliciting the facts and arguments required to qualify for remand.

120. The BIA cannot order a remand for further factfinding even if its own review of the record raises these concerns of competency or if appellate counsel presents new evidence of that nature. As such, the Rule conflicts with Franco-Gonzalez v. Holder, a case involving safeguards for mentally ill or incompetent noncitizens under the INA, the Rehabilitation Act, and the Due Process Clause. No. 10-cv-02211-DMG, 2013 WL 3674492 (C.D. Cal. Apr. 23, 2013). The permanent injunction in that case provides that when competency concerns arise, "the [BIA] shall order a remand to the [IJ] with instructions to apply the procedures" for safeguards that are afforded to class members. Id., Dkt. 786 at 23 (emphasis added). This Rule prohibits that action.

121. Finally, the remand provision is contrary to law because it disallows remands for changes in law. This prohibition applies even when a federal court declares an immigration provision or decision illegal. For example, the Supreme Court has frequently opined on the definition of the term "aggravated felony" in the immigration context. See, e.g. Moncrieffe v.

Holder, 133 S. Ct. 1678 (2013). Under the Rule, an applicant can seek remand only if such a change vitiates removability. If it merely adds a new avenue to relief from removal, remand is prohibited.

122. These changes present substantial harm to Plaintiffs. They frustrate Plaintiffs' missions of ensuring due process for immigrants and facilitating access to substantive forms of immigration relief for which noncitizens remain legally eligible.

123. The Rule will also complicate, prolong, and require more resources for Plaintiffs' representation of existing and future clients. For example, in place of motions to remand for new evidence, the Rule directs noncitizens to file motions to reopen, which may only be filed after removal proceedings have concluded before the BIA, i.e., when an order of removal becomes final. See 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,611 & n.27. The purported goal of this Rule is efficiency, but this change will delay proceedings by months or even years, and it will force Plaintiffs to litigate and the BIA to adjudicate appeals on possibly outdated facts that would not have previously been necessary with a remand. In addition, this approach ignores the significant consequences that flow from an order of removal, including a substantial risk of removal from the United States, prolonged family separation, and other attendant consequences.

124. The resulting harms from the unavailability of motions to remand are exacerbated by Defendants' parallel efforts to limit the availability of motions to reopen and stays of removal in the Motion to Reopen NPRM. See supra ¶ 63. Without the ability to file motions to remand, noncitizens will be forced to exhaust their sole statutory motion to reopen and potentially forgo any other legally viable basis for reopening their claim after a removal order issues. Moreover, while motions to remand are free of cost, motions to reopen will cost $895 under the EOIR Fee Rule, further inhibiting noncitizens from seeking this relief. See infra ¶ 305.

125. As a result of these changes in the Rule, Plaintiffs will be required to file more motions to reopen, which are subject to time and number bars, and under the EOIR Fee Rule, exorbitant fees. The new fees will also force Plaintiffs to consider assisting noncitizens with finding resources to pay the fees or filing time-consuming waivers. Because filing a motion to reopen uses an applicant's one chance to do so, this change will significantly increase the amount of time and resources Plaintiffs will require to prepare each motion and advise clients.

126. The change is also likely to prolong Plaintiffs' representation by forcing additional circuit court appeals. For example, Plaintiff NIJC currently represents a transgender man before the BIA. This individual identified as a gender nonconforming woman when an IJ denied protection, but during the pendency of his appeal, he came out as transgender and started receiving gender affirming medical care, which NIJC submitted as evidence along with a request to remand. Under the Rule, NIJC would have had to wait until the BIA affirmed the denial of protection on the asylum case to produce this evidence in a motion to reopen. This requirement would prolong NIJC's representation of this client significantly, likely by years. And it would require NIJC to seek a stay of removal, usually within days of the BIA's decision, in order to avoid the client's deportation, which likely would require a concurrent request to the BIA and to the circuit court. Because each of these additional steps takes considerable time and resources, the Rule would have hindered NIJC from advocating for additional clients.

127. Moreover, if noncitizens are removed while seeking a motion to reopen—a risk that is not present in seeking a motion to remand, since the appeal is still pending—Plaintiffs will also have to divert resources to cover the additional costs associated with representing clients from abroad and possibly even assisting the client's return to the United States.

128. Plaintiff CLINIC’s Motion to Reopen Project will be especially harmed by the Rule’s limit on remands. The Rule will increase demand for pro bono representation because many would-be motions to remand will instead have to be filed as motions to reopen, requiring CLINIC to divert resources to its Motion to Reopen Project. This change, combined with the elimination of sua sponte authority, discussed below, will force Plaintiffs, their pro bono attorneys, and their affiliates to pursue more time- and labor-intensive legal arguments, such as equitable tolling. In turn, this will decrease the number of pro bono and affiliate partners who are able or willing to accept cases, while increasing the resources required by Plaintiffs to mentor such cases.

129. The increased burdens on pro se noncitizens also translates to harm for Plaintiffs FIRRP and NIJC, as it will make their work of preparing individuals for self-representation through LOPs far more difficult and resource intensive.

130. For several reasons, these portions of the Rule are also arbitrary and capricious. First, Defendants’ justifications defy logic. Defendants admit that data supporting the Rule’s alleged efficiency gains “is not available and is likely untraceable,” yet Defendants do not explain why efficiency gains will occur. 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,606 & n.31. The Rule’s approach to data gaps is also internally inconsistent: when convenient for their position, Defendants take commenters to task for failing to provide data; when they have no data of their own, they maintain that the changes “are not intended to turn on data.” Id.

131. Second, the Rule fails to provide a reasoned basis for its departure from prior practice, including longstanding agency-level precedent endorsing remand motions. See Matter of Coelho, 20 I. & N. Dec. at 470–71. Defendants repeatedly defend the Rule’s elimination of remands for further factfinding by suggesting that remanding to the IJ would allow the BIA, “in essence, [to] be acting on behalf of a party in order to advance that party’s arguments, which is inappropriate,” and would allow the BIA to “abdicate its role as an impartial or neutral arbiter.” 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,605. Under this illogical view, every time an appellate court corrected a trial court’s error, it would reflect improper partiality. This argument disregards the well-established role of appellate bodies: to remand when further factfinding is needed. See INS v. Ventura, 537 U.S. 12 (2002). It is also, as discussed below, irreconcilable with Defendants’ creation of a new process for IJs to appeal BIA decisions to the EOIR Director, a far greater impingement on the impartiality of EOIR adjudicators.

132. Likewise, in the context of applicant-filed motions to remand for new evidence, Defendants repeatedly state that the elimination of that longstanding remedy would reduce alleged “gamesmanship” by noncitizens, who purportedly seek remands based on evidence that could have been filed previously. See, e.g., 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,611; 81,612. Not only do Defendants provide no evidence of such gamesmanship, but they also they fail to appreciate that the existing standards governing motions to remand (which also govern motions to reopen) allow the BIA to deny motions that are not based on material or previously unavailable evidence.

133. Defendants’ justifications are especially suspect since the Rule creates a significant exception for DHS to present new evidence or seek remand for factfinding at any time based on identity, law enforcement, or security investigations, without any requirement that the evidence be material or previously unavailable. No explanation is provided as to why preserving that right asymmetrically does not promote alleged gamesmanship.

134. Defendants attempt to justify the dramatic change from longstanding practice by repeatedly explaining that motions to remand are created by regulation, not statute. See, e.g., 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,616. That assertion, though, is not contested and does not justify departing from longstanding practice, nor does it excuse the lack of reasoned analysis or explanation for why Defendants would retain remands only for DHS.

135. Defendants also failed to provide a justification for curtailing noncitizens' ability to pursue relief in the event of changes in intervening law. Rather, Defendants claim that remands for new relief based on changes in intervening law would be "irrelevant" unless that relief makes the individual no longer removable. Id. Defendants then conclude, without foundation, that arguments developed from the new, intervening law would have already been presented below in the "vast majority" of cases. Id. In actuality, noncitizens and/or their advocates generally would not raise arguments that are foreclosed by law at the time of the hearing.

136. Finally, Defendants falsely claim that the Rule does not in fact harm pro se populations. This premise is based on Defendants' strawman conclusions (1) that pro se individuals have access to electronic pro se resources even though often they do not, particularly from detention, (2) that most BIA appeals are counseled, even though only 3% of noncitizens without lawyers seek appeal to the BIA precisely because of the challenges presented by appellate self-representation,<sup>26</sup> and (3) that the BIA Pro Bono Project exists as a backstop, 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,606, even though Defendants have effectively dismantled that program.

---

<sup>26</sup> David Hausman, The Failure of Immigration Appeals, 164 U. Pa. L. Rev. 1177, 1193 (2016) ("[O]nly 3% of immigrants without lawyers appeal."). Furthermore, Defendants misstate the data upon which they rely in support of their oft-repeated contention that 86% of individuals are represented before the BIA. See, e.g., 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,606 (citing EOIR, Adjudication Statistics: Current Representation Rates, Oct. 13, 2020, <https://bit.ly/3bkvw8b>). The report reflects that 86% of currently pending appeals at the BIA have representation, but appeals that were completed in 2020 have a lower representation rate of 72%. In any event, that statistic is irrelevant to the fact that Defendants were purporting to rebut: that their changes will make it harder for noncitizens who were pro se before the IJ to find counsel for their appeal.

b. Limitation on Scope of Remands

137. In the same vein, the Rule prohibits the IJ from “consider[ing] any issues outside the scope or purpose” of a limited or qualified BIA remand, unless it pertains to jurisdiction. 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,652 (new 8 C.F.R. § 1003.1(d)(7)(iii)).

138. The Rule thus prevents the noncitizen or the IJ, on remand, from supplementing the record in the case of a change in law or circumstances in the period that a noncitizen is waiting for a new hearing, which could range anywhere from months to several years. The Rule will therefore cause the inefficiency it purportedly seeks to eliminate by requiring otherwise-unnecessary motions to reopen and subsequent proceedings, wasting far more judicial resources than the current system and requiring a significant diversion of Plaintiffs’ resources.

139. Defendants claim that current practices cause inefficiency by “encourag[ing] the re-litigation of issues,” 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,615, but, in the case of new facts or intervening law, the issues would not have been addressed previously. Moreover, because the Rule prohibits the IJ from hearing new facts or legal arguments in the now limited instances when a case is remanded, it produces the absurd result of mandating IJs to ignore controlling law or relevant facts at the time of the hearing. This will also result in orders of removal that are based on outdated law and facts and force Plaintiffs to engage in additional court of appeals litigation to overturn such orders.

140. The Rule also eliminates the BIA’s practice of remanding a case based on the “totality of the circumstances,” 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,652 (new 8 C.F.R. § 1003.1(7)(ii)(B)), a standard of review customarily employed by the BIA where it is clear that the noncitizen did not understand the proceedings, or that the IJ relied on a mistaken belief or demonstrated blatant misconduct, among other examples.

141. A blanket prohibition on such remands will tie the hands of the BIA and force the issuance of denials and removal orders based on undeveloped records or other errors. Especially with the strict limitations imposed by this Rule on other forms of remand and reopening, there are virtually no remaining procedures available to address such miscarriages of justice.

142. Like the other remand provisions, this aspect of the Rule is premised on flawed justifications, ignores commenters' substantial objections and proposals for more targeted changes, and fails to advance Defendants' purported objectives. Taken together, these provisions impermissibly infringe upon noncitizens' statutory and constitutional rights to a fair hearing and access to relief, frustrating Plaintiffs' purposes in serving them and requiring Plaintiffs to expend more resources on the unnecessary motions to reopen this aspect of the Rule will cause.

3. The Rule Unlawfully "Enhances" the BIA's Factfinding Powers

143. Third, the Rule delegates to the BIA new, exceedingly broad authority to make findings of fact appropriate only for the IJ in trial court.

144. The Rule's provisions will create additional burdens for Plaintiffs and their clients, who must relitigate noncitizens' removal proceedings before an appellate body with a limited ability to review adverse evidence or to present counter evidence. These provisions violate the INA, deprive noncitizens of due process, and will force Plaintiffs to undertake more complicated and resource-intensive approaches to appellate representation on behalf of those they serve.

a. Expansion of BIA Factfinding Abilities

145. The Rule allows the BIA to take "administrative notice" of any purported facts "not reasonably subject to dispute," including "[t]he contents of official documents outside the record," "facts that can be accurately and readily determined from official Government sources and whose accuracy is not disputed," and "[u]ndisputed facts contained in the record." 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,651

(new 8 C.F.R. § 1003.1(d)(3)(iv)(A)). The BIA is only required to give notice to the parties or an opportunity to respond if the noticed facts are the explicit basis for overturning a grant of relief or protection issued by the IJ. Id. (new 8 C.F.R. § 1003.1(d)(3)(iv)(B)). But the BIA need not provide any notice or opportunity to respond if the noticed facts are the basis for affirming a removal order, or if those facts merely inform the BIA’s decision to reverse an IJ’s decision without forming the explicit basis. See id.

146. These provisions invert the INA’s framework, and the Department’s own regulations, which commit factfinding to the trial court. See 8 U.S.C. § 1229a(a)(3), (b)(1); 8 C.F.R. § 1003.1(d)(3).<sup>27</sup> The provisions also deprive noncitizens of the opportunity to be heard and present evidence on facts that they reasonably dispute.

147. Official documents or facts from Government sources—which may be submitted by DHS and, under the Asylum Procedures Rule, even the IJ, see infra ¶ 304—may contain incorrect or disputable material. For example, the Rule explicitly contemplates that the BIA will deem State Department Reports an “official government source[],” see 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,602, even though they go to the heart of a matter in a fear-based case, are subject to interpretation and rebuttal, and are not accepted as fact. Cf. Galina v. INS, 213 F.3d 955, 958 (7th Cir. 2000) (stating that it would be inappropriate for the BIA to “give conclusive weight to statements in [State Department] reports that not only are not incontestable, but also are not even facts”); Yuk v. Ashcroft, 355 F.3d 1222, 1236 n.12 (10th Cir. 2004) (“[T]he use of a State Department Report

---

<sup>27</sup> Even IJs lack authority to introduce evidence. The INA provides that IJs “shall administer oaths, receive evidence, and interrogate, examine, and cross-examine the alien and any witnesses.” 8 U.S.C. § 1229a(b)(1). It does not mention the introduction of evidence, a significant departure from this provision’s predecessor, which allowed adjudicators to “present and receive evidence.” 8 U.S.C. § 1252(b) (1994).

‘does not substitute for an analysis of the facts of each applicant’s individual circumstances.’” (quoting Krastev v. INS, 292 F.3d 1268, 1277 (10th Cir. 2002))). Moreover, Department of State reports have become increasingly politicized in recent years.<sup>28</sup> Yet, the Rule does not ensure that noncitizens will have an opportunity to show that these materials are reasonably disputed or to counter their use.

148. The Rule also permits the BIA to consider DHS-issued documents—such as border interviews contained in Form I-213s—as “official documents,” even though those materials are often unreliable and will invariably present adverse facts that the noncitizen has a right to examine and refute.<sup>29</sup> These “official documents” could also include criminal complaints or police reports.

149. Indeed, the Rule provides no administrable definitions for these terms, including what constitutes an “undisputed” fact. Rather, noncitizens, to their detriment and the detriment of overall court efficiency, would be forced to pursue appeals or motions to reopen to test those limits.

150. Even in the Rule’s limited circumstances for when the parties will receive notice and an opportunity to respond to the BIA’s judicially noticed facts, the BIA would not remand to the IJ. Rather, inverting appellate practice, and requiring the noncitizen to respond in writing to the BIA months or years after the IJ issued a decision, the BIA itself will determine the matter in the first instance. See 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,651 (new 8 C.F.R. § 1003.1(d)(3)(iv)(B)).

---

<sup>28</sup> See, e.g., Asylum Research Center, Comparative Analysis of US Department of State Country Reports on Human Rights Practices (2016-2019) (Oct. 21, 2020), <https://bit.ly/35n135K>; Catholic Legal Immigration Network, Inc., Department of State Country Report on Human Rights Practices: Honduras: Comparison Chart: 2016 and 2019 (Oct. 20, 2020), <http://bit.ly/3bmcb6L>.

<sup>29</sup> See Human Rights Watch, You Don’t Have Rights Here (Oct. 16, 2014), <https://bit.ly/39a3cmo> (reporting CBP officers’ failure to screen protection claims and recording wrong information); see also, e.g., Singh v. INS, 292 F.3d 1017, 1021–24 (9th Cir. 2002) (discrediting the reliability of CBP airport interviews as “not sufficient standing alone” to be a reliable impeachment source).

151. While the Rule requires the parties to respond within a period of time of not less than 14 days, see id., it does not ensure that noncitizens or their counsel would receive notice of that opportunity. Nor does it permit a hearing or provide for the submission of rebuttal evidence. In fact, the Rule does not describe any procedures governing this newly minted process.

152. Receiving such a notice will almost certainly prompt pro se noncitizens to seek help in responding from Plaintiffs or other organizations. But as with the timing for filing briefs on appeal, see infra IV.A.1, Plaintiffs will rarely be able to help otherwise pro se individuals respond to such a request. Indeed, this timeline is even worse than the truncated briefing schedule in terms of Plaintiffs' abilities to serve noncitizens—even the ones they already represent—because the Rule does not provide an opportunity to seek extensions. These provisions thus unjustifiably deprive noncitizens of notice and the opportunity to be heard, and create new burdens for Plaintiffs.

153. Despite comments raising these issues, Defendants did not change the Rule, and their final justification is nonsensical. First, Defendants improperly characterize commenters' concerns as attempting to avoid the BIA's consideration of undisputed, adverse facts. 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,602. Not so; the commenters' concern rests in the BIA's authority to find facts at all, particularly possibly disputed ones, without notice and an opportunity to respond.

154. Second, despite "recogniz[ing] that parties may disagree over whether a fact is truly undisputed," Defendants quickly dismiss those concerns, stating that "factual disputes are already a common feature of immigration proceedings and can be resolved under existing law." Id. But resolving factual disputes is not a typical aspect of appellate adjudication and under existing law, the BIA is not empowered to address these factual disputes and lacks a process to resolve them.

155. Third, Defendants shield themselves by arguing that taking "judicial notice" of facts is permitted in federal court, see id., which misstates federal court practice. Federal courts do not generally accept factual submissions on appeal as “truth” without giving the other party notice or an opportunity to respond. Moreover, Article III courts are not positioned in the same way as the BIA, an administrative tribunal, which, even more so through this Rule, has become increasingly politicized. See infra Part IV.A.6.

156. Fourth, Defendants “reject[] any allegation that official documents or government documents contain ‘egregious errors’ and ‘coerced statements,’ or are ‘unreliable,’” 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,603, ignoring well-documented studies and case law to the contrary. See supra ¶¶ 147-48.

157. With such a significant departure from prior practice, under which the BIA was not permitted to find facts, and in direct contravention of the INA and the Department’s own regulations, Defendants were required to have provided a more detailed justification. They did not.

158. Defendants also failed to consider the serious harm the Rule would impose, on noncitizens and their advocates, like Plaintiffs, as they try to prepare a defense to the BIA’s new factfinding and prosecutorial role. Instead, Defendants claim incorrectly that the function is not prosecutorial and that parties will have an opportunity to respond, even though that opportunity is limited to when the BIA reverses on the basis of those facts. 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,604.

159. Finally, despite issuing the Rule in the name of efficiency, Defendants disregard the fact that the noncitizen’s only recourse is to appeal the BIA’s (improper) factfinding to the courts of appeals or pursue otherwise unnecessary motions practice, both of which will only serve to prolong proceedings and undermine the purported efficiency justification for the Rule. This prolonged process will draw additional resources from Plaintiffs, thereby limiting their ability to handle other matters and undermining their respective missions.

b. Authority for BIA to Affirm on Any Basis in the Record

160. The Rule also allows the BIA to affirm the underlying decision of the IJ on “any basis” supported by the record, including on the basis of “undisputed” facts or “facts that are not reasonably subject to dispute, such as undisputed facts in the record,” 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,651 (new 8 C.F.R. § 1003.1(d)(3)(v)), which, as described above, will permit impermissible factfinding by the BIA and deprive the noncitizen of the opportunity to challenge those determinations in the first instance, in violation of due process and the INA.

161. Moreover, there is potentially no limit to the “bases” upon which the BIA may affirm. The Rule even allows the BIA to affirm denials on the basis of facts unrelated to the IJ’s decision, i.e., facts which may have not been developed or potentially even considered by the IJ, much less rebutted by the noncitizen. The Rule therefore permits a second “adjudication” of the case on issues the parties did not address in their appeal.

162. The problems created by the Rule are exacerbated by the Attorney General’s recent decision in Matter of A-C-A-A-, see supra ¶ 88, barring reliance on IJ-level stipulations or concessions by DHS. In combination with this Rule, the BIA could find that an element that was uncontested below was nonetheless insufficiently proven, and then affirm the IJ’s denial on that basis, without ever giving the noncitizen an opportunity to contest or present evidence.

163. The Rule is also arbitrary and capricious because it fails to sufficiently explain its departure from prior practice and fails to consider important aspects of the problem.

164. Defendants’ primary defense is that federal appellate courts, too, may affirm the lower court on any basis in the record. 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,607. Again, the comparison is inapt. Even assuming the systems were comparable, federal appellate courts do not affirm where one party never had notice or the opportunity to respond to a disputed fact.

165. The Rule also fails to consider important aspects of the problem. Defendants completely overlook comments that the Rule would invite improper factfinding on issues reasonably subject to dispute or create absurd results when applied with Matter of A-C-A-A-.

166. Defendants likewise disregard legal service providers' comments that, to avoid negative consequences created by this provision, they would need to brief every issue that could potentially be considered, expanding briefing and requiring more time, more resources, and more requests for extensions, replies, or enlarged briefs—thus undermining the BIA's purported efficiency justifications and compounding the aforementioned barriers to representation on appeal. Side-stepping these implications, Defendants tout that an appealing party must address all relevant issues, 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,608, which not only misses the thrust of the provision but also reveals the extent to which Defendants ignored that noncitizens will, at least sometimes, be the appellee.

167. Likewise, litigants may be forced to seek needless cross-appeals of an IJ decision even when they prevail, to establish that a fact is disputed or that the IJ misstated a fact. Noncitizens and their counsel, like Plaintiffs, will also be forced to file more motions to reopen BIA decisions, due to the inevitability of the BIA relying on facts or theories that neither party saw a need to discuss in their briefs. Defendants fail to account for these eventualities, too.

168. The additional actions required by this provision will increase the burden of client representation, thereby limiting the overall number of cases each Plaintiff will be able to handle.

4. The Rule Upends EOIR Procedures for Voluntary Departure Requests and Background Checks

169. Fourth, the Rule eliminates the power to remand in two other circumstances.

a. Elimination of BIA Remands for Voluntary Departure

170. The Rule eliminates the BIA's ability to remand a case to the IJ "solely to consider a request for voluntary departure" or to provide instructions (i.e., "advisals") for complying with a grant of voluntary departure. 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,589 (new 8 C.F.R. § 1003.1(d)(7)(ii)(E)). Instead, the Rule authorizes the BIA to decide a request for voluntary departure as long as it was preserved below, regardless of which party appealed. Id. (new 8 C.F.R. §§ 1003.1(d)(7)(iv), 1240.26(k)(1)).

171. When the BIA decides to grant voluntary departure, the Rule requires that bond be posted within ten days of the order if served by mail or five days if served electronically. Id. (new 8 C.F.R. § 1240.26(k)(4)). The BIA will also be responsible for advising the recipient of the terms of the voluntary departure order, including, presumably, that non-compliance can convert the voluntary departure grant into a removal order with all its collateral consequences. Id.

172. Voluntary departure is a discretionary benefit for which the noncitizen must show, among other things, five years of “good moral character,” which involves an intensive factual finding. 8 U.S.C. § 1229c(b)(1)(B). These changes not only permit the BIA to consider these factual questions in the first instance, but also allow it to do so based on an incomplete record and without providing noncitizens an opportunity to present evidence in support of their eligibility.

173. Some forms of immigration relief, such as withholding of removal and protection under CAT, do not require a showing of “good moral character,” or any discretionary assessment, and therefore may be based on records before the IJ that might not include a shred of relevant evidence. Moreover, if the IJ grants other relief and does not reach the alternative request for voluntary departure, there will not have been any facts developed in support of the request. Indeed, as discussed above, IJs have a large degree of control over what issues are heard in a hearing and a significant incentive to decide cases quickly, and therefore may not entertain testimony on an issue that they do not intend to reach, especially if they intend to grant a primary application.

174. The only way to avoid this outcome would be to require IJs to develop the record on voluntary departure for all applicants who are prima facie eligible. This would force IJs to develop a record, primarily for circumstances where DHS appeals the grant of some other relief and the BIA sustains, even though there is no need under the IJ's decision to reach the issue. This approach is both inefficient and unlikely to occur, given EOIR's backlog.

175. Given these hurdles, the changes will force Plaintiffs to engage in burdensome and suboptimal litigation strategies. For example, Plaintiffs will frequently have to affirmatively seek voluntary departure before the IJ, even when such a request undercuts a client's primary form of relief, such as asylum. Plaintiff's will have to file evidence and insist on developing a record even when the IJ is planning to grant permanent, alternate relief, which is time intensive and would strain the relationship between Plaintiffs' representatives and the IJ.

176. The Rule is also likely to introduce significant confusion and risk of inadvertent non-compliance. Though the Rule requires the BIA to give advisals about the consequences of failing to comply with voluntary departure, it fails to explain how it will do so meaningfully in the context of a paper-based appellate process in which the noncitizen never appears in person.

177. "Voluntary departure is an agreed-upon exchange of benefits, much like a settlement agreement." Dada v. Mukasey, 554 U.S. 1, 16–17 (2008). As such, IJs "shall advise the [noncitizen]" of all the boilerplate conditions, including the conversion of the voluntary departure order into a removal order for failure to comply, as well as any additional terms "beyond those specifically enumerated" before granting voluntary departure. 8 C.F.R. § 1240.26(b)(3). Only after the conditions are "set forth" can the noncitizen accept or refuse the grant of voluntary departure. Id. The Rule departs from these safeguards, which by definition occur in person, at a hearing.

178. With such important rights at stake, the five- or ten-day bond requirement provided for in the Rule is arbitrary and woefully insufficient to satisfy due process. As described by Plaintiff CLINIC, it is very unlikely that applicants would even receive the BIA order within sufficient time to post the bond, especially factoring in mail delays.<sup>30</sup> Even if the BIA eventually institutes electronic filing (and then reduces the time to post bond from ten days to five), these problems will persist because many indigent noncitizens lack daily access to the internet. And circumstances will be even more challenging for detained noncitizens, who are subject to the vagaries of the detention centers' mail systems and where internet access is rare, if available at all.

179. The burden of this insufficient notice will harm Plaintiffs. For counseled clients, without the benefit of an in-person advisal by the IJ, Plaintiffs will have to take additional time to explain the process, beyond the level of explanation required currently, and react at a moment's notice to the order received by mail—which may be received months or even years after briefing an appeal. For Plaintiffs who provide pro se support, like FIRRP and NIJC, a significant amount of additional time will be required to explain to pro se individuals the meaning of incomprehensible papers that they will receive by mail and helping individuals figure out payment.

180. The Rule's changes present numerous other problems. Though noncitizens may wait months or years for a BIA decision, often without work authorization, they are given just days to pay a considerable sum of money. Yet, a one-week delay in collecting the funds is likely to result in the conversion of voluntary departure into a removal order. For someone who sought voluntary departure in order to pursue family reunification via consular processing from abroad, the consequence of this one-week delay will be ten years of family separation because of a statutory bar to reentry following a removal order. The Rule does not account for that disparity, nor the time and resources required to undo an erroneous decision deeming an application abandoned.

181. The timeline for posting voluntary departure bonds also harm Plaintiffs. In many instances, to avoid losing the benefit of voluntary departure for their clients, Plaintiffs will have to urgently seek assistance from a bond fund or similar group or consider ways to pay the bond themselves. That is because many noncitizens will be unable to gather the money in the time the Rule prescribes. In addition, because there are strict requirements regarding who may post a bond (DHS requires bond to be posted by a U.S. citizen or permanent resident, and ethics rules make it questionable whether an attorney can pay for their client), Plaintiffs will have to seek out others to post the bond. This process would require Plaintiffs to expend considerable time and potential funds to respond to the challenges that this provision creates, to the detriment of other priority work and client representations they would otherwise accept.

---

<sup>30</sup> CLINIC Comment, supra n.1 at 14.

182. Nor does the Rule provide any opportunity to challenge lack of notice, seek additional time, or request an appropriate amendment to the terms of a voluntary departure order. With just a written advisal, BIA members will not even be able to ensure that the noncitizen can read and understand the order, which may be in a language the individual does not speak.

183. Collectively, these obstacles will cause countless voluntary departure applications to be denied on an insufficient record or converted to removal orders for non-compliance. Yet if an applicant wanted to challenge the denial of voluntary departure for any reason, she cannot: the INA bars further appeal to a circuit court. See 8 U.S.C. §§ 1229c(f); 1252(a)(2)(B)(i). Requests for amendments are also impossible because filing a motion to reopen or reconsider at the BIA will result in termination of voluntary departure. 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,656 (new 8 CFR § 1240.26(k)(4)).

184. These changes deprive applicants of proper notice and a meaningful opportunity to be heard, and fail to provide adequate procedures to ensure that those bound by the order understand how to comply, in violation of due process.

185. The Rule is also arbitrary and capricious. Commenters raised the issues described above, yet Defendants failed to recognize or flatly ignored those comments. To the contrary, Defendants relied on the incorrect assumption that the noncitizen would have necessarily developed the record for voluntary departure before the IJ, and that the “[t]he requirements for [voluntary departure] . . . involve determinations that the [BIA] already makes.” 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,640. This statement is false: while the BIA may review questions relating to good moral character, there is no context in which it makes such a determination in the first instance.

186. Defendants’ slight revision to the proposed Rule—to allow the BIA to grant voluntary departure even where the request was not developed before the IJ because alternate relief was granted, see id. at 81,641, is insufficient as the BIA will still be unable to determine a noncitizen’s eligibility for relief in cases where the relevant fact questions, e.g., good moral character, were not at issue before the IJ.

187. Finally, Defendants entirely disregard concerns that issuing a written notice, in English, and via mail—which requires possibly indigent individuals to post a bond within days—will lead to unjust conversions of voluntary departure grants to orders of removal. See id. And Defendants fail to appreciate why the existing process before the IJ cannot be replicated at the BIA, even though the Rule purports to “incorporate” the requirements of 8 C.F.R. § 1240.26(b)(3) and apply them identically to the BIA. Nowhere do Defendants acknowledge the difference between an oral advisal, with an interpreter and the ability to ask questions, and a letter received in the mail (likely in English) months or years after the individual last appeared before the IJ.

b. Limitation on BIA Remand for Background Checks & Deemed Abandonment

188. Background checks (often referred to in immigration parlance as biometrics) are required for most forms of immigration relief. 8 C.F.R. § 1003.47(b). Currently, if background checks are incomplete, the general practice is to remand cases to the IJ for the checks to be verified by DHS. Id. § 1003.1(d)(6)(ii)(A).

189. Under the Rule, instead of remanding to the IJ, the BIA must now “hold” a noncitizen’s case for up to 180 days until DHS reports the results of the background checks. 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,651–652 (new 8 C.F.R. § 1003.1(d)(6)(ii)). Respondents must await instruction from DHS to complete background checks. Id. If the respondent fails to respond to DHS’s instructions within 90 days (or 120 days, with one 30-day extension), the application will be deemed abandoned. 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,651–652 (new 8 C.F.R. § 1003.1(d)(6)(ii)).

190. The Rule is asymmetrical. It provides no recourse if the application is wrongfully deemed abandoned. See id. If DHS fails to timely complete background checks, on the other hand, the case will be remanded to the IJ. Id.

191. These changes create a significant departure from current safeguards, which require DHS to notify the respondent in person at an immigration court hearing of the background check requirements and provide instructions for compliance, and for the IJ to “specify for the record when the respondent receives” this information, along with a warning about the consequences of failing to do so. 8 C.F.R. § 1003.47(d). Under the Rule, if background checks are outstanding months or even years after relief was first sought before the IJ, DHS will mail out instructions.

192. Completing background checks requires travel to a particular law enforcement agency or DHS office. It is understandable that someone—especially a non-English speaker—would be unable to navigate those processes or require more time to do so. The notice may get lost in the mail or be mailed to the wrong address, or be mailed with insufficient time for completion.

193. The Rule therefore authorizes the BIA to order removal based on noncompliance with a technical requirement of which there has been no or insufficient notice for noncitizens who have fought their case, litigated an appeal, and prevailed, all while depriving them of the ability to meaningfully contest that technicality. This is patently arbitrary.

194. Deeming a fully adjudicated and granted application, such as asylum, abandoned in these circumstances is unnecessarily harsh and will prevent many noncitizens from receiving the relief they have already been granted, in violation of due process, the individual's right to present evidence and seek relief under the INA, and the United States' non-refoulement obligations.

195. The Rule will also harm Plaintiffs by requiring that they divert resources to provide additional counseling to represented and pro se individuals regarding these consequences, and may require otherwise unnecessary motions practice to undo an erroneously abandoned application. Even now, in the existing system, it often requires Plaintiffs to repeatedly call DHS or even talk to them in person in court to get them to take the steps necessary to even begin the process.

196. The Rule also heightens Plaintiffs' obligations to assist noncitizens with completing background checks or pursuing an extension, and at a moment's notice months or years into the pendency of an appeal.

197. This process is also arbitrary and capricious because Defendants fail to justify or consider alternatives in lieu of the significant consequences imposed by the Rule, and they fail to explain the Rule's asymmetric consequences for non-compliance.

5. The Rule Eliminates Critical Procedural Mechanisms, Upending Noncitizens' Ability to Seek Relief

198. Fifth, compounding the effect of stripping the aforementioned remedies, the Rule eliminates other critical procedural mechanisms, including sua sponte reopening or reconsideration, the BIA's self-certification authority, and administrative closure. These changes significantly limit, or may preclude altogether, noncitizens' ability to correct miscarriages of justice in their proceedings or pursue forms of relief that Congress made available to them.

a. Elimination of Sua Sponte Authority to Reopen

199. The Rule prohibits both IJs and the BIA from reopening or reconsidering a case sua sponte—a vital mechanism for curing later-discovered injustices or seeking forms of relief for which the noncitizen becomes eligible outside the time or number limitations of a statutory motion to reopen. The only exception is to correct minor mistakes such as typographical errors. See 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,654 (new 8 C.F.R. § 1003.2(a)); cf. 8 C.F.R. §§ 1003.2(a), 1003.23(b)(1).

200. Sua sponte authority allows IJs and the BIA to reopen a case due to “exceptional” circumstances, like ineffective assistance of counsel or the emergence of new facts or law rendering a noncitizen eligible for relief after an order of removal has issued. See 8 C.F.R. § 1003.2(a); Mata v. Lynch, 576 U.S. 143, 145 (2015) (“[T]he BIA’s regulations provide that, separate and apart from acting on the [noncitizen’s] motion, the BIA may reopen removal proceedings “on its own motion”—or, in Latin, sua sponte—at any time.”); Matter of Beckford, 22 I. & N. Dec. 1216, 1219 (BIA 2000) (en banc) (“To warrant our taking this untimely motion sua sponte, the respondent needed to show the existence of an exceptional situation.”) (internal citations omitted). IJs and BIA often exercise this authority after noncitizens alert them to relevant facts via motion.

201. In place of this traditional authority, the Rule permits sua sponte reopening on the noncitizen’s motion in just two circumstances: (a) where the individual claims U.S. citizenship, or, (b) subject to a three-member BIA decision only, where the individual’s “removability is vitiated in toto prior to the execution of the removal order” and he or she exercised due diligence in pursuit of the motion. 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,591 (new 8 C.F.R. §§ 1003.2(c)(3)(v)-(vi), 1003.23(b)(4)(v)).

202. Individuals who are newly eligible for relief based on a change of law or facts, or who are no longer removable but have already been removed, are not covered by this exception.

This means that applicants for asylum or other mandatory refugee protections whose changed personal circumstances form the basis for their claims will not be able to seek sua sponte reopening. The same will be true for individuals who were victims of fraud or ineffective assistance of counsel in their prior proceedings, or the mentally ill who never received a proper competency assessment.

203. Even individuals with approved petitions from USCIS do not qualify under the Rule's limited exception to the sua sponte reopening bar. Take for example, the spouse of a U.S. citizen with an approved family-based petition, a woman whose VAWA petition was approved by USCIS because she demonstrated that she suffered extreme cruelty by her U.S. citizen spouse, or a child whose SIJS petition was approved because he demonstrated that he had been abandoned by his parents. These individuals would not be able seek sua sponte reopening to obtain the legal benefits that flow from approved applications, effectively voiding the relief that USCIS granted.

204. In each of these scenarios, the due process rights of noncitizens to be heard on their claims to relief would be curtailed, thwarting the ability of legal service providers like Plaintiffs to seek relief that would secure noncitizens protection from persecution and harm.

205. To add to these injuries, this element of the Rule is immediately effective regardless of posture, meaning that individuals with pending motions before an IJ or the BIA to exercise their authority to reopen sua sponte can be ordered removed as soon as the Rule takes effect, even if those motions have been pending for years. This change will have a substantial retroactive effect on many of thousands of people who filed motions to reopen with EOIR in 2020 alone, yet Defendants did not provide the "more detailed justification" required when changing a policy that has engendered reliance interests. Fox Television v. FCC, 556 U.S. 502, 515–16 (2009).

206. These substantive changes will frustrate Plaintiffs' respective missions. For Plaintiffs that strive to protect and expand access to immigration remedies for noncitizens, this change directly undermines their ability to do so. The result is the removal of noncitizens who qualify for congressionally authorized forms of relief, including some mandatory forms of protection. Indeed, Plaintiffs currently represent numerous clients who have pending sua sponte motions to reopen. Those motions are vulnerable to denial on January 15, 2021, and those denials will force Plaintiffs to expend time and resources counseling these clients, advising them of their legal rights, and pursuing other extraordinary remedies that may not have been necessary under current law. Plaintiffs will also be required to expend considerable resources seeking stays of their clients' removals or assisting pro se individuals with the same, as well as possible representation and advisal of clients in the country to which they were removed.

207. Moreover, this sudden batch of denied motions to reopen will cause deterioration in clients' mental and emotional health, which will tax Plaintiffs' limited social services resources. In particular, the Rule will burden the social work programs of Plaintiff BDS and force all Plaintiffs to dedicate more staff time and resources to support these individuals, to the exclusion of other noncitizens they would otherwise be able to serve.

208. Every justification proffered by Defendants in support of this drastic change is arbitrary and capricious. In the words of the National Association for Immigration Judges ("NAIJ"), "[t]his [provision] too is a solution in search of a problem."<sup>31</sup>

209. First, Defendants argue that "meaningful standard[s]" do not exist to govern sua sponte reopening, because the standards, particularly the "exceptional circumstances" standard, have led to "inconsistent application or even abuse." 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,628, 81,630; see also 85 Fed. Reg. at 52,505. Yet, Defendants cite no examples. Nor do they identify any shortcomings or ambiguities in the precedential decisions that set forth the standards that Defendants acknowledges currently govern sua sponte reopening. See 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,630; 85 Fed. Reg. at 52,497 (citing Matter of J-J-, 21 I. & N. Dec. 976, 984 (BIA 1997); Matter of G-D-, 22 I. & N. Dec. 1132, 1133–34 (BIA 1999); Matter of Beckford, 22 I. & N. Dec. at 1221)).

---

<sup>31</sup> Public Comment of NAIJ at 6 (Sept. 25, 2020), <http://bit.ly/2JO6OBU>.

210. Defendants are also incorrect that there is no clear definition for “exceptional circumstances.” The standard is guided by the precedent that Defendants cited. Moreover, IJs and the BIA regularly make similar determinations. See, e.g., 8 U.S.C. § 1158(a)(2)(D) (“extraordinary circumstances” exception to the one-year filing deadline in asylum); id. § 1229b(b)(1)(D) (“exceptional and extremely unusual hardship” standard for cancellation of removal). Defendants thus do not demonstrate that EOIR is unable to follow its own precedent relating to sua sponte reopening or that “exceptional circumstances” presents an unadministrable standard. And if the lack of a standard were the true problem, Defendants could have—by regulation or a precedential decision—created one. They did not, nor did they explain why they did not.

211. Second, Defendants repeatedly aver that sua sponte reopenings that follow a motion to reopen are not properly considered “sua sponte” because they are by motion. 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,628. But that semantic quibbling does not justify the elimination of sua sponte authority; the authority could simply be called by a different name, an alternative Defendants did not consider.

212. Moreover, all of the Rule’s purported rationales apply (if at all) only to sua sponte reopening by the BIA. Defendants never explain why IJs should be prohibited from exercising sua sponte authority—yet the Rule terminates their authority, too. Defendants’ purported rationales are further contradicted by their decision to allow DHS to file a potentially infinite number of motions to reopen with the BIA, at any time. 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,591. This allowance undercuts Defendants’ alleged purpose of promoting finality and undermines EOIR’s requirement to adjudicate cases fairly and uniformly.

213. Nor do Defendants adequately explain why they now consider sua sponte authority unnecessary to cure injustices. IJs and the BIA have long held limited discretionary powers to reopen or reconsider cases sua sponte where it would “serve the interest of justice.” Matter of X-G-W-, 22 I. & N. Dec. 71, 73 (BIA 1998). The Rule thus contradicts decades of BIA precedent stating that it “is a basic concept of the BIA’s appellate jurisdiction that it must do complete justice for the [noncitizen] in a given case.” In re Shaar, 21 I. & N. Dec. 541, 553 (BIA 1996) (internal quotations omitted); see also Matter of Farinas, 12 I. & N. Dec. 467, 471 (BIA 1967) (ordering reopening, and noting that a deportation order is not “clothed with the armor of immunity” and that the interests of justice may require reopening for “a change in facts or in the law”).

214. Defendants further conclude, without adequate explanation, that the purported negatives of sua sponte reopening outweigh the positives. Yet they do so without meaningfully engaging with the harms imposed, the avoidance of which is the positive in favor of sua sponte reopening. In particular, Defendants fail to confront the fact that EOIR will be foreclosed from undoing miscarriages of justice and that many noncitizens will have no avenue to obtain relief for which they are eligible based on circumstances that arise after an order of removal is issued. Indeed, Defendants reject the notion that the Rule would “affect any specific populations.” 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,628–630. Yet, as commenters explained, the elimination of sua sponte reopening is particularly damaging to the most vulnerable noncitizens, including unaccompanied children and survivors of battery or extreme cruelty by their U.S. citizen spouses. Despite these examples of impacted groups, which were discussed at length by Plaintiffs and other providers in comments, Defendants flatly stated that the Rule would “not affect any specific populations.” Id. at 81,630.

215. Defendants further downplayed the harms that will inevitably impact vulnerable groups by pointing to the availability of “equally functional alternatives,” id. at 81,629, but these alternatives are completely unavailable in many cases and cannot adequately address the identified harms. For example, Defendants suggest repeatedly that noncitizens may file a joint motion to reopen with DHS. Id. But DHS is an adversarial party that rarely agrees to join such motions. In fact, in recent years, DHS instructed its prosecutors their discretion against noncitizens.<sup>32</sup>

216. Defendants also offer repeatedly that an individual may seek a statutory motion to reopen, along with equitable tolling, despite acknowledging that such motions are strictly limited in time and number. Moreover, equitable tolling covers a limited category of circumstances and may not be satisfied in circumstances where the individual could not have filed the motion until long after the 90-day window.

217. Commenters also explained that the Rule would make it impossible for IJs or the BIA to remedy inappropriate in absentia removal orders, yet Defendants insist that existing statutory exceptions adequately cover these individuals. See id. at 81,630. This is not so. The existing statutory exceptions only apply (a) where there is lack of notice regarding the initiation or time or place of proceedings or (b) where exceptional circumstances exist and only if filed within 180 days of the date of the removal order. 8 U.S.C. § 1229a(b)(5)(C). These exceptions do not cover many other circumstances where an in absentia order may result. For example, a neglected child may have no knowledge that a removal order was issued against her years prior if she appeared pro se or was abandoned by the parent who appeared with her.

218. Nor are the Rule's narrow exceptions for permitting a sua sponte motion to reopen, see supra ¶ 200, adequate as an alternative, since they exclude individuals who have already been removed or who are eligible for relief from removal. Moreover, because this exception requires individuals to prove “due diligence,” the same showing required in seeking a statutory motion to reopen, the additional protection provided by this provision is extraordinarily limited.

---

<sup>32</sup> American Immigration Council, The End of Immigration Enforcement Priorities Under the Trump Administration (Mar. 2018), <http://bit.ly/3hUgWJ> (describing expanded enforcement priorities so broad the term becomes “meaningless”).

219. Thus, while these “equally functional alternatives” may preserve remedies for a few individuals, many noncitizens would be foreclosed from relief altogether.

220. These are particularly bad alternatives when considering that the Rule also severely restricts the BIA’s authority to remand pending cases and prohibits IJs and the BIA from administratively closing cases while a respondent is petitioning for concurrent relief for USCIS. Defendants fail to meaningfully consider the compound effect of these measures, which in many cases will serve to eviscerate a noncitizen’s ability to seek relief designed by Congress and result in avoidable orders of removal and, perhaps, permanent family separation.

b. Elimination of BIA Self-Certification Authority

221. In addition, the Rule eliminates the BIA’s self-certification authority, a remedy the BIA can use to cure untimely appeals or other filing defects based on extraordinary circumstances, such as delays caused by the U.S. Postal Service. See 8 C.F.R. § 1003.1(c).

222. This change will make it more difficult and at times impossible to access the appellate process. As a result, many noncitizens—especially those who are detained or pro se—will be denied the opportunity to appeal adverse decisions. Others will need to use their single motion to reopen to challenge technical defects and unavoidable delays outside their control.

223. The elimination of the BIA’s self-certification authority harms Plaintiffs by restricting the pool of noncitizens Plaintiffs are able to represent on appeal or by causing Plaintiffs to divert significantly more resources to filing, or to assisting pro se individual in filing, statutory motions to reopen to correct these minor technicalities.

224. Defendants’ rationalization for eliminating the BIA’s ability to cure minor defects of this kind does not justify the wholesale elimination of that authority.

225. Specifically, as with sua sponte reopening, Defendants claim that such authority lacks clear standards, despite the longstanding limitation to “exceptional circumstances,” and assert without evidence that the authority has been applied inconsistently or abusively. 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,596. As commenters showed, this is incorrect; in fact, the authority is “uncommonly used” and “allows the BIA to correct injustices” like mail delays outside the parties’ control.<sup>33</sup>

226. But even if Defendants had substantiated their purported concern, it would not justify their refusal to consider obvious alternatives, like issuing a clearer standard. Defendants reject this suggestion by commenters, allegedly because BIA members have “disregard[ed]” the standard, and because there is “no effective check on its usage.” 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,596. As with sua sponte reopening, none of these justifications is supported with evidence. Even so, it defies logic to burden noncitizens and their counsel to solve a problem of the BIA’s own making.

227. Moreover, commenters explained that the Rule would disproportionately impact pro se individuals, who are least likely to be able to comply with appellate procedures. In response, Defendants merely repeated the same assertions that it did throughout, including that most noncitizens are represented on appeal and that the BIA Pro Bono Project is an effective backstop. See 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,596–97. As discussed above, see supra ¶ 136, these excuses for burdening pro se litigants are both false and flawed.

228. Defendants also fail to consider the Rule’s impact on detained noncitizens. Indeed, there are many factors beyond the control of noncitizens in detention that might prevent them from timely filing a notice of appeal, such as mail processing delays, lockdowns due to illness, or the inability to access the commissary to purchase stamps. Without self-certification of appeals, and particularly in combination with the elimination of the BIA's sua sponte authority, there might not be any available remedy for these situations.

---

<sup>33</sup> See, e.g., Public Comment of AILA at 13 (Sept. 25, 2020), <http://bit.ly/3pNe14r> (hereinafter “AILA Comment”).

229. As with sua sponte authority, Defendants' justifications for the changes made in the Rule are inadequate, fail to address a myriad of problems the Rule would create, and suggest that Defendants' true purpose was to foreclose even meritorious applications for relief.

c. Elimination of Administrative Closure

230. As explained above, IJs and the BIA have used administrative closure for decades to defer cases while respondents await USCIS decisions on applications that are likely to provide relief from removal. See supra Part I.C.2. The Rule amends the regulations at 8 C.F.R. §§ 1003.1(d)(1)(ii) and 1003.10(b) to prohibit IJs or the BIA from exercising this authority.

231. The elimination of administrative closure—especially in combination with the elimination of motions to remand for new evidence and EOIR's sua sponte reopening authority—makes it impossible for many noncitizens to pursue various forms of relief that Congress made available by statute, depriving them of an opportunity to be heard on such remedies.

232. The outright prohibition on administrative closure is also arbitrary and capricious. Defendants purportedly base the elimination of administrative closure on a belief that administrative closure (1) decreases the efficiency of the immigration courts, (2) conflicts with the immigration courts' duty to resolve cases in a timely fashion, (3) is not authorized by, or even conflicts with, existing regulations, and (4) infringes on DHS's prosecutorial discretion. 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,598–99. None of these rationales justifies Defendants' action. These concerns largely echoed the decision in Matter of Castro-Tum, 27 I. & N. Dec. 271, which interpreted the existing regulations as forbidding administrative closure—but that decision has now been rejected twice by courts of appeals. See Meza Morales, 973 F.3d at 664–67; Romero, 937 F.3d at 287–97.

233. First, as numerous commenters, the BIA, NAIJ, EOIR consultants, and multiple federal courts have explained, administrative closure improves efficiency and facilitates timely resolution of cases.

234. The BIA has itself explained that administrative closure facilitates “efficient[] management of the resources” of the immigration courts by allowing IJs and the BIA to manage their dockets. Matter of Avetisyan, 25 I. & N. Dec. at 694. It is typically employed in cases where the respondent is seeking relief in another forum that would moot or otherwise dispositively affect the proceedings before EOIR. In such cases, “in which two coordinate offices in the executive branch are simultaneously adjudicating collateral applications, closing one proceeding might help advance a case toward resolution.” Meza Morales, 973 F.3d at 665.

235. Far from advancing the “efficient and timely administration of immigration proceedings,” eliminating administrative closure “would in fact serve to lengthen and delay many of these proceedings by: (1) depriving IJs and the BIA of flexible docketing measures sometimes required for adjudication of an immigration proceeding, as illustrated by Avetisyan, and (2) leading to the reopening of over 330,000 cases upon the motion of either party, straining the burden on immigration courts.” Romero, 937 F.3d at 297.

236. This efficiency has long been clear to IJs themselves. As the NAIJ has explained, administrative closure benefits “[e]fficient and fair management of a docket” because it “allows for cases to be held in abeyance, without unnecessary use of court time and resources, when preliminary matters need to be completed for the case to become ripe for further adjudication.”<sup>34</sup> It thereby “permits the [IJ] to attend to and resolve cases that are ready for resolution and allows [IJs] to complete more cases.”<sup>35</sup> As a result, IJs are typically able to render decision within four months of recalendaring an administratively closed case.<sup>36</sup> Even the independent study by Booz Allen Hamilton, which EOIR commissioned, recommended working with DHS “to administratively close cases awaiting adjudication in other agencies or courts” as a way to improve EOIR’s processes.<sup>37</sup>

237. In the face of this evidence, Defendants cite an increase in cases pending before the immigration courts after Matter of Avetisyan in 2012 to imply that administrative closure was the cause. 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,599. As multiple commenters pointed out, this assertion is fatally flawed, as it makes no attempt to control for the numerous other factors increasing the immigration court backlog during that time—including the historic rise in asylum seekers arriving at the border, a years-long EOIR hiring freeze that reduced the number of IJs, and changes in DHS’s enforcement practices during that time.<sup>38</sup>

238. Defendants’ next rationale, that administrative closure is inconsistent with existing regulations, was incorrect, as both the Fourth Circuit and Seventh Circuit have concluded. See Romero, 937 F.3d at 292 (“[T]he authority of IJs and the BIA to administratively close cases is conferred by the plain language of 8 C.F.R. §§ 1003.10(b) and 1003.1(d)(1)(ii).”); accord Meza

---

<sup>34</sup> NAIJ, Letter to Attorney General Sessions, Re: Administrative Closure of Removal Cases (Jan. 30, 2018), <https://bit.ly/398PYX6>.

<sup>35</sup> Id.

<sup>36</sup> TRAC Administrative Closure Report, supra n.14.

<sup>37</sup> Booz Allen Hamilton Report, supra n.1, at 26.

<sup>38</sup> See, e.g., Reichlin-Melnick Comment, supra n.5, at 7–8.

Morales, 973 F.3d at 665. The Rule claimed that administrative closure conflicts with the regulatory requirement that IJs and the BIA resolve cases in a “timely” manner, but did not address the fact that, as then-Judge Barrett explained, “some cases are more complex and simply take longer to resolve,” Meza Morales, 973 F.3d at 665. Tabling cases that are not ripe for adjudication can facilitate resolution of other cases—a strategic consideration undercut by the Rule and unacknowledged by Defendants.

239. Similarly, the Rule claimed that the general authorization of administrative closure would render superfluous other regulatory provisions that specify situations in which administrative closure is appropriate. 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,599. Here again, Defendants did not consider the explicit rejection of this argument by the Seventh Circuit, which explained that these provisions “mandate administrative closure in specific circumstances with ‘shall’ language,” as distinct from the discretionary availability of administrative closure in other circumstances. Meza Morales, 973 F.3d at 666 (emphasis added).

240. Nor was EOIR correct that IJs’ and the BIA’s authority to manage their own docket conflicts with the EOIR Director’s, BIA Chairman’s, and Chief Immigration Judge’s authority to “[d]irect that the adjudication of certain cases be deferred.” 8 C.F.R. §§ 1003.0(b)(1)(ii), 1003.1(a)(2)(i)(C), 1003.9(b)(3). The fact that those supervising officials have the authority to order deferrals in cases whose result they cannot otherwise direct, see 8 C.F.R. §§ 1003.0(c), 1003.1(a)(2)(ii), 1003.9(c), says nothing about the authority of the adjudicators hearing those cases, who are tasked with “exercis[ing] their independent judgment and discretion and ... tak[ing] any action ... that is appropriate and necessary for the disposition of such cases,” 8 C.F.R. § 1003.10(b); accord 8 C.F.R. § 1003.1(d)(1)(ii).

241. Defendants' remaining rationale, that administrative closure interferes with prosecutorial discretion, is equally baseless. As the Rule repeatedly acknowledges, administrative closure does not terminate proceedings; it defers their resolution until they are ripe for adjudication.

242. The Rule also incorrectly dismissed or failed to consider several crucial negative consequences of eliminating administrative closure. First, the Rule failed to consider fairness to noncitizens in removal proceedings who are likely to obtain relief from removal through proceedings outside of EOIR. To the contrary, it explicitly rejected such considerations as "of little relevance to the rule." 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,648. But fairness to litigants is an essential component of any judicial system, making it an "important aspect of the problem" that the Rule needed to address. Motor Veh. Mfrs. Ass'n v. State Farm Ins., 463 U.S. 29, 43 (1983); see also Meza Morales, 973 F.3d at 665 ("[C]ases must be disposed of fairly, and granting a noncitizen the opportunity to pursue relief to which she is entitled may be appropriate and necessary for a fair disposition."). Because prohibiting administrative closure is likely to result in some noncitizens being removed, even though they would have been able to obtain relief, the risk of unfairness and injustice is high, yet Defendants discounted this important consideration altogether.

243. This change harms noncitizens seeking many forms of immigration relief, including SIJS; visas for victims of crimes, trafficking, or spousal abuse; family-based petitions; temporary protected status for individuals from designated disaster-stricken countries; post-conviction relief; Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals status; or access to relief or procedural protections due to mental incompetency, among others.

244. Defendants also fail to meaningfully engage with the reliance interests affected by this change. Countless individuals currently in proceedings before EOIR are pursuing relief before USCIS or state courts while their proceedings are administratively closed, or on the understanding that they will be able to request that the IJ consider administratively closing their case so that they can complete that parallel process. On day one of the Rule, either EOIR or DHS can move to re-calendar all cases that are currently administratively closed, and individuals in the Fourth and Seventh Circuit, including Plaintiffs NIJC and HIAS, can no longer pursue administrative closure despite recent judicial decisions sanctioning the use of this procedural device. Defendants dismiss or ignore these interests with little explanation. See, e.g., 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,645 (finding concerns about reliance interests with respect to administrative closure “misplaced”); see also id. at 81,601 (same). Indeed, Defendants absurdly suggest that noncitizens and their counsel can still seek administrative closure, id., even though such requests would be frivolous in many cases.

245. The harm extends to Plaintiffs by expanding their workload in numerous ways. First, every case that is currently administratively closed is vulnerable to being calendared as soon as January 15, 2021. If this happens, Plaintiffs workload will expand dramatically in a short amount of time on duplicative proceedings.

246. Specifically, Plaintiffs must expend resources to simultaneously represent clients in their removal proceedings and before USCIS. Plaintiffs will need to repeatedly seek continuances before EOIR and prepare to argue every issue in the case in the event that the continuance is denied—a likely scenario given Defendants’ recent OPPMs restricting the IJs’ authority to grant continuances and Defendants’ recently-promulgated NPRM on the same.<sup>39</sup>

247. The need for parallel-track representation before EOIR and USCIS will also hinder Plaintiffs’ ability to place cases with pro bono or affiliate partners, who tend to limit their representation to one form of relief. While harming noncitizens’ access to counsel, this limitation will also require Plaintiffs to divert resources and hire more staff for direct representation and, for those cases they are unable to absorb in-house, pro se support. Even in cases that Plaintiffs do place with pro bono attorneys or affiliates, mentoring resources will grow considerably.

---

<sup>39</sup> See supra n.9.

248. Finally, the elimination of administrative closure will completely prevent Plaintiffs from seeking an important substantive benefit on behalf of noncitizens with approved family-based petitions: a hardship waiver of unlawful presence required to return to the United States after obtaining the approved visa from the U.S. consulate abroad. 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(9)(B)(v). As EOIR acknowledged, noncitizens in removal proceedings can obtain this waiver only if their removal proceedings are administratively closed. See 8 C.F.R. § 212.7(e)(4)(iii). Eliminating administrative closure makes it impossible for many noncitizens to apply for the waiver. Defendants justify their approach by asserting that individuals could take voluntary departure and then seek a provisional waiver before DHS. 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,644. In effect, EOIR has tried to pass the buck to DHS. But Defendants' assertion is contradicted by DHS regulations, see Expansion of Provisional Unlawful Presence Waivers of Inadmissibility, 81 Fed. Reg. 50,243, 50,256 (July 29, 2016) (“[I]ndividuals granted voluntary departure will not be eligible for provisional waivers.”), and, in any event, an agency regulates against the background of existing law, and must consider the effect of the changes it is making.

249. Defendants' elimination of administrative closure, despite these consequences, is therefore contrary to law, in violation of the APA. Defendants' refusal to consider whether this harm (together with the other negative consequences of the Rule) outweighed the supposed benefits of the Rule was therefore arbitrary and capricious.

250. These barriers to obtaining relief—much of it statutorily authorized—are even more significant when considering the interaction between the elimination of administrative closure and the other changes in the Rule. Restricting motions to reopen, motions to remand, and the BIA's authority to act sua sponte makes it more difficult and often impossible to alter an order of removal or other IJ decision when a noncitizen subsequently obtains relief from USCIS or another agency. The Rule did not consider this combined effect.

251. EOIR sought to downplay any harm by noting that Castro-Tum has been enjoined only in the Fourth and Seventh Circuits. 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,600. But even assuming that Castro-Tum would be upheld in the nine Circuits where it has not been addressed, the Fourth and Seventh Circuits govern the immigration courts in Arlington, Baltimore, Charlotte, and Chicago, where DHS files as many as 51,000 cases per year.<sup>40</sup>

252. While EOIR seeks to minimize the unfairness of the Rule by suggesting that IJs can simply issue repeated continuances instead, the Rule fails to consider the burden of such a process. By requiring regular court appearances and motions for continuances, the Rule imposes a substantial burden on noncitizens and their representatives, like Plaintiffs. Plaintiffs, noncitizens, DHS, and the IJs all must prepare for those appearances and substantiate or evaluate the showing required for a continuance anew each time. The Rule's reliance on continuances is especially disingenuous given that on January 8, 2021, Defendant McHenry issued a memo restricting access to continuances.<sup>41</sup> Since EOIR's restrictions on continuances are increasingly severe, Plaintiffs and noncitizens now must be prepared to address all issues when a continuance is denied.

253. As the BIA noted in Avetisyan, this process can even delay the ultimate relief that the noncitizen will receive, forcing them to live in continued uncertainty and prolonging the drain on the courts' and DHS's resources. See Avetisyan, 25 I. & N. Dec. at 689–90 (explaining that the continuances required DHS to transfer the file back and forth between DHS's visa petition unit and litigating counsel, leading to six continuances while the visa petition was pending).

---

<sup>40</sup> See EOIR, Statistics Yearbook—Fiscal Year 2018 at Table 2, <https://bit.ly/38pLRqW>.

<sup>41</sup> See supra n.9

6. The Rule Implements Measures that Further Politicize EOIR and Undermine Timely, Neutral Decisionmaking

254. Sixth, and finally, the Rule unlawfully effectuates several changes to EOIR processes that will further politicize EOIR and cause wrongful denials of immigration relief, while harming efficiency and finality.

a. IJ Certification of BIA Decisions

255. The Rule establishes a so-called "quality assurance certification process" that permits "an [IJ] to certify BIA decisions" that reverse the IJ's prior decision "for further review by the Director in situations in which the [IJ] alleges that the BIA made an error." 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,590. The Rule permits the Director, a non-judicial executive charged with the day-to-day management of EOIR,<sup>42</sup> to then decide the legal dispute between the IJ and the BIA, including "the authority to issue a precedent decision." 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,653. This provision contravenes existing regulations as well as Defendants' supposed interest in efficiency and finality.

256. By permitting the Director to either dismiss certifications and return a case to the IJ or to remand to the BIA, the Rule calls upon the Director to adjudicate cases arising under the INA. This process harms Plaintiffs by prolonging appeals and obligating them to spend time and staff resources contesting or at least participating in the EOIR Director's process, without making it clear how to do so and thus making it impossible for Plaintiffs to allocate resources accordingly.

257. Absent specific delegation of authority from the Attorney General, the EOIR Director is prohibited from adjudicating cases. 8 C.F.R. § 1003.0(c). This new "quality assurance certification process” created by the Rule establishes a substantive process of reviewing and reversing BIA decisions, see 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,590, and thus falls squarely within section 1003.0(c)’s prohibition on Directorial adjudication without delegation by the Attorney General.

---

<sup>42</sup> See 8 C.F.R. § 1003.0(b); see also supra Part III.

258. On information and belief, no prior delegation from the Attorney General—and certainly not those cited in the Rule—confers on the Director the authority to adjudicate cases.

259. The Rule asserts that “[r]eviewing certified cases falls within the ‘such other authorities’ provided to the Director by the Attorney General,” contained in 8 C.F.R. § 1003.0(b)(1)(ix), and also points to 8 C.F.R. § 1003.1(e)(8)(ii). 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,626. Neither provision delegates to the Director the authority to review BIA decisions in this manner.

260. In particular, 8 C.F.R. § 1003.0(b)(1)(ix) provides that the Director may “[e]xercise such other authorities as the Attorney General may provide.” This general statement merely leaves open the possibility that the Attorney General will delegate additional powers to the Director. It does not itself delegate any authority, let alone the authority that the Rule attempts to grant to the Director. See 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,590. Moreover, the recognition that the Attorney General could delegate other authorities in no way overrides section 1003.0(c)’s explicit prohibition on the Director adjudicating immigration cases.

261. Nor does the Rule itself constitute a delegation, because it was signed by the Director of EOIR rather than the Attorney General. 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,656; see 8 C.F.R. § 1003.0(c) (limiting the authority of the Director to adjudicate cases “[e]xcept as provided by statute, regulation, or delegation of authority from the Attorney General”).

262. The other authority Defendants cite, 8 C.F.R. § 1003.1(e)(8)(ii), similarly fails to authorize the Director to adjudicate cases, as the Rule contemplates. That delegation merely allows the Chairman of the BIA to refer cases to the Director for a decision if none has been rendered “within the established time limits,” id., in order to “ensure that adjudications are conducted in a timely manner.” 84 Fed. Reg. at 44,539. This exception to the general prohibition on the Director’s ability to adjudicate cases is narrow and confined to cases referred by the Chairman that have remained pending for longer than is permitted by regulation. Id.

263. The new “quality assurance certification process” is not limited to such cases, however, and is therefore not authorized by 8 C.F.R. 1003.1(e)(8)(ii).

264. Because no existing delegation authorizes the Director to review of BIA decisionmaking as the “quality assurance certification process” requires, it conflicts with 8 C.F.R. § 1003.0(c)’s prohibition on the Director engaging in such adjudication and was promulgated in excess of the Director’s authority and in a manner contrary to law. 5 U.S.C. § 706(2).

265. The “quality assurance certification process” is also arbitrary and capricious. First, Defendants incorrectly claim that the Rule “do[es] not create a higher secondary appellate review body.” 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,625. That is exactly what it does: it grants the Director power to reverse BIA decisions and “issue a precedent decision” or “remand the case back to the BIA for further proceedings.” Id. Defendants do not explain how this process could be anything other than a new form of appellate review, and instead simply insist that they have not done what they in fact did.

266. Second, the certification process is in direct conflict with the goals of finality and timely adjudication that the EOIR espouses throughout the Rule. The certification process lacks any timetable for the Director’s decision. The risk of significant delay when a case is certified is especially high given that the Rule simultaneously assigns to the Director (with few exceptions) every case that has been pending for more than 335 days from the notice of appeal—a group that would include most if not the vast majority of non-detained case in the past four years. 85 Fed.

Reg. at 81,653. Despite the plain tension between the certification process and EOIR’s stated goals,<sup>43</sup> the Rule did not evaluate the certification process’s effect on timeliness and finality at all.

267. Third, Defendants assert that IJs cannot “simply certify cases with which they disagree” and that “merely disagreeing . . . is not a basis for certification.” Id. at 81,626. But the plain text of the change allows IJs to certify based on, among other things, their belief that “the BIA decision is clearly contrary to a provision of the INA, any other immigration law or statute, any applicable regulation, or a published, binding decision,” that “the BIA decision is vague, ambiguous, internally inconsistent, or otherwise did not resolve the basis for the appeal,” or that “a material factor pertinent to the issue(s) before the [IJ] was clearly not considered.” Id. at 81,625.

268. The Rule asserts that these are “narrow situations . . . tailored to quality control,” id., but this statement is conclusory ipse dixit rather than a reasoned explanation. In order to make even this conclusory statement, the Rule must ignore most of the grounds on which it authorizes certification, and mischaracterize others. For example, in response to the concern that “an [IJ] could solely object to a particular legal interpretation and still certify the case,” the Rule states only that this would not justify certification under the “vagueness” criteria—ignoring that it is permitted by the provision allowing certification where an IJ believes the BIA decision is contrary to law, regulation, or published decision. Id. at 81,626.

269. Defendants provide no mechanism to ensure that IJs will not abuse this process and instead speculate “that these procedures will be employed infrequently” because of IJs’ busy docket. See id. But, in baldly asserting this conclusion, Defendants fail to acknowledge that having cases remanded negatively reflects on the IJ’s job performance, which creates an incentive to certify remanded cases in hopes of reducing their remand rate. See supra ¶ 66.

---

<sup>43</sup> See CLINIC Comment, supra n.1, at 23.

270. Fourth, Defendants arbitrarily refused to allow the parties to file objections or responses to IJ certifications. Defendants contend that such an opportunity is not required because “the case was likely already briefed to the [BIA] prior to the certification to the Director.” Id. at 81,627. This conclusion fails to recognize that new issues or arguments might be presented in the certification to which the parties may wish to respond, just as parties routinely submit briefs to an appellate body despite having discussed many of the same issues before the lower court. It also fails to account for the possibility that the certification may omit an important procedural or substantive fact, relying instead on the Director (or his “support staff,” id. at 81,626) to scour the entire record of a case to ensure that he is aware of all material facts. Tellingly, the Rule fails to identify any situations anywhere in U.S. law where a ruling can routinely be referred for review by a higher adjudicator without an opportunity for the parties to provide response and context.

271. Defendants also claimed that providing an opportunity for the parties to submit briefs opposing the certification would “plac[e] an additional burden on the parties.” Id. at 81,627. This conclusion fails to consider the reasonable alternative of allowing optional response briefs, rather than mandatory ones. This process would allow parties to stand on their arguments to the Board if they so choose, mitigating any supposed burden.

272. Fifth, Defendants erroneously compared the new certification process to the existing authority of IJs to certify their decisions to the BIA. Id.; see 8 C.F.R. § 1003.7. However, this existing process is simply a means for IJs to refer a decision to the ordinary appellate body for review, much like district judges can certify a case for interlocutory appeal. See 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b). This process bears no resemblance to the Rule’s novel creation whereby a judge whose decision has been reversed can ask a non-judicial arbiter to intervene. 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,590.

273. Sixth, Defendants fail to grapple with the ethical issues raised by converting IJs into advocates seeking to overturn BIA decisions in the cases they are adjudicating. Defendants seek to minimize the IJ's role in the certification process as merely "flagging an issue and relaying it to the Director for examination," but fail to harmonize that characterization with the requirement that the IJ, in making the certification, "specify the regulatory basis for the certification and summarize the underlying procedural, factual, or legal basis . . . necessary to relay the [IJ]'s determination of error by the BIA." Id. at 81,627 (quotation marks omitted).

274. Moreover, the ability for an IJ to attempt to overturn a ruling in favor of one the parties before it places the IJ in the position of advocating against one of the litigants before it. As former IJs explained in their comment, "[i]t is wholly inappropriate for a trial judge to have the authority to appeal from an appellate tribunal's decision which reverses her/him. . . . [IJs] are neutral arbitrators, not parties in the cases they hear."<sup>44</sup>

275. Nor did the Rule consider the relevance of the performance metrics established for IJs in October 2018, under which they must maintain a low remand rate or risk discipline, reassignment, or termination.<sup>45</sup> This creates a significant incentive for IJs to certify cases.

276. Defendants' rejection of these concerns is also irreconcilable with their insistence elsewhere in the Rule that the BIA should be prohibited from remanding for factfinding because it would interfere with the BIA's "role as an impartial or neutral arbiter." 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,605; see supra ¶ 131. If the unremarkable judicial function of requiring further factfinding is improperly partial, an IJ petitioning the Director to overrule an opinion in a case before her—a case that could affect her continued employment—cannot possibly be defended as “impartial or neutral.” Defendants nowhere explain this internal inconsistency.

---

<sup>44</sup> Public Comment of Round Table of Immigration Judges at 10–11, <http://bit.ly/3oFfRE8>.

<sup>45</sup> See supra n.16, EOIR Performance Plan.

277. This arbitrary and capricious certification process will harm Plaintiffs who must divert resources to engaging with it. Though the Rule prohibits formal briefing in the certification process, Plaintiffs will be compelled to file briefs anyway, in order to preserve issues for federal court review, or risk having to make time-consuming and potentially dispositive arguments at the federal courts regarding exhaustion of remedies.

b. Referral of Pending BIA Appeals to the EOIR Director.

278. The Rule, with limited exceptions, “instructs the [BIA] Chairman to refer appeals pending beyond 335 days to the Director for adjudication,” even if that appeal is days away from a determination or is particularly complex. 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,591.

279. This provision conflicts with the INA, which provides that removal orders shall be final only upon the expiration of a noncitizen’s right to appeal the order or “a determination by the Board of Immigration Appeals affirming such order.” 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(47)(B) (emphasis added). Under the Rule, timely appealed removal orders would become final without affirmance by the BIA, but by the Director in the BIA’s place, despite the INA’s unambiguous requirement.

280. Additionally, as with the IJ certification process, this provision conflicts with the prohibition on the Director adjudicating immigration cases, absent a specific delegation of authority from the Attorney General. See 8 C.F.R. § 1003.0(c).

281. The Rule purports to find this delegated authority through 8 C.F.R. § 1003.1(e)(8) on the theory that this section, which grants the Director “authority . . . to adjudicate BIA cases that have otherwise not been timely adjudicated,” constitutes “such other authorit[y]” within the meaning of section 1003.0(b)(1)(ix). See 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,621.

282. Section 1003.1(e)(8), however, provides authority for the Director to adjudicate cases on far narrower grounds than those provided for in the Rule. Under that section, the Director is permitted to adjudicate cases only when an appeal has been pending before the BIA for more than 90 or 180 days (depending on whether the case is before a single BIA judge or a three-judge panel) from the “completion of the record on appeal.” 8 C.F.R. § 1003.1(e)(8)(i). Even then, the Director may only adjudicate the case if the Chair of the BIA elects to refer the case to the Director instead of referring it to itself or to the Vice Chair. See id. § 1003.1(e)(8)(ii).

283. The Rule purports to provide the Director authority to adjudicate cases that exceed the Attorney General’s delegation in section 1003.1(e)(8). As noted, section 1003.1(e)(8) authorizes the Director only to adjudicate cases that have been pending 90 or 180 days from the time the record is completed—i.e., after the transcript and record are submitted to the BIA and “any briefs, motions, or other submissions” have been filed. 8 C.F.R. § 1003.1(e)(8)(i). The Attorney General was explicit in memorializing this authority that it was “limited to only a narrow subset of EOIR cases.” 85 Fed. Reg. at 69,475; see ¶ 262. The Rule conflicts with that provision and exceeds the explicit limits of that delegation, granting the Director authority to adjudicate any case more than 335 days from the filing of the notice of appeal. See 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,622 (335-day period includes “time for transcription, briefing, and adherence to the exiting [sic] 90- or 180-day time frames for decision”). Through the Rule, EOIR grants itself authority that violates the delegation from the Attorney General and is therefore contrary to law.

284. In so doing, EOIR has assigned itself authority in a large number of cases. As discussed above, Defendants often do not produce the briefing schedule in non-detained cases for months or even years after a notice of appeal is filed. See supra ¶ 47. In such cases, the Rule would shift adjudication from the BIA to the Director even in situations where the BIA never issued a briefing schedule, or where the BIA had fewer than 90 or 180 days to consider briefs.

285. More generally, the median time from a notice of appeal to a BIA decision is approximately 323 days and, as a result of COVID-19-related delays, it has become increasingly common for appeals to remain pending for 335 days or longer. See 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,619 (acknowledging the “323-day median case appeal time period”). In fact, a 2015 report shows that appeals of removal decisions averaged around 500 days.<sup>46</sup> The Director has thus not only given himself adjudicatory authority that the Attorney General has not granted, but has also taken it away from the BIA in the vast majority of non-detained cases.

286. This provision is also arbitrary and capricious. Beyond the flawed legal basis for the Director’s authority, Defendants responded to comments with erroneous arguments, failed to adequately explain various aspects of the change, failed to consider important aspects of the problem, and overlooked important reliance interests impacted by the change.

287. Far from reducing the time to decision, referral to the EOIR Director will likely lengthen it. When the EOIR Director receives a case, he (or his support staff, as discussed below) will need to begin review of the case from scratch—even if the BIA has been working on the case for weeks or months. Nor does the Rule suggest any reason to believe that the EOIR Director and his staff will be able to adjudicate cases more quickly than BIA members, whose sole responsibility is to adjudicate cases. Tellingly, the Rule places no time limits on the EOIR Director’s consideration of a case. It is thus entirely implausible to assume that adjudication by the EOIR Director will be any swifter than BIA adjudication, and the Rule provides no justification for this assumption. This change, in turn, will harm Plaintiffs because it will lengthen the amount of time it takes them to resolve cases while heightening the amount of unpredictability in outcomes.

---

<sup>46</sup> Government Accountability Office (GAO), Immigration Courts, Actions Needed to Reduce Case Backlog and Address Long-Standing Management and Operational Challenges at 33, Fig. 7, (June 2017), <https://bit.ly/2Xsp7Qi>.

288. To quell concerns about the potentially large volume of cases that will be mandatorily referred to the Director under this change, Defendants further incorrectly state that the Director will decide “few, if any” appeals under the new Rule. 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,619. But as discussed, Defendants acknowledge that the median case appeal takes 323 days, 85 Fed. Reg. at 52,508 n.39, meaning the Director could potentially decide thousands of appeals each year.

289. Even if Defendants’ speculative prediction proves true and the Director does not actually handle many appeals under this new referral authority, that only undercuts Defendants’ rationale for expanding the Director’s referral authority in the first place. If the change will result in few referrals, then, by Defendants’ own logic, it will also do little if anything to address backlogs.

290. Defendants also attempt to rebut concerns that many appeals, especially complex ones, will take longer than 335 days and so will be referred to the Director by suggesting that, “for such cases that are atypical” or where “it would be appropriate for the BIA to devote additional time to completing adjudication,” the BIA can take extra time without triggering the referral obligation. Id. at 81,622 (citing 8 C.F.R. § 1003.1(e)(8)(ii)). That assertion is misguided. Section 1003.1(e)(8)(ii) permits the BIA to extend the amount of time it has to render a decision only once the record has been completed, only for exigent circumstances as determined by the BIA Chairman, and only for 60 days. Moreover, as noted, the 335-day clock runs from the time the appeal is filed, not from the time the record has been completed. See 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,653. The Rule identifies no general authority that would permit the BIA to stop the 335-day clock where delays occur during the completion of the record.

291. The Rule does identify certain reasons for delay that are exempt from the 335-day referral requirement, such as cases administratively closed pursuant to settlement or on “hold” for background checks, see id. at 81,622, but fails to discuss why these exceptions were established and not others. It further fails to discuss whether these exceptions reach a significant number of cases, such as by describing what portion of the BIA caseload will be affected by these exceptions.

292. Defendants likewise fail to consider the costs that adjudication by a non-BIA member will create. Indeed, the Director, with no formal training or expertise in adjudicating appeals, and who need not even be an attorney (as BIA members must, see 8 C.F.R. § 1003.1(a)(1)), may issue erroneous decisions on some of the most complicated issues pending before the BIA.

293. The Rule also fails to address how the Director will deal with the volume of cases that will be mandatorily referred, except to say that the Director will rely on qualified staff. See 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,621. That is no answer, however, because, as the Rule acknowledges, the Director is also responsible for “ensuring the [BIA] itself has sufficient staff,” id. The Rule fails to explain why the caseload concerns that purportedly animate the Rule would not be better addressed by the addition of staff at the BIA, as opposed to the imposition of a new referral authority that will direct cases to the Director, where the same backlog concerns will become an issue.

294. Finally, Defendants failed to take seriously the concerns expressed by commenters that the referral to the Director will deepen the politicization of the various immigration agencies and cast doubt on the BIA’s impartiality. Instead of grappling with this concern, Defendants dismiss it out of hand as nothing more than “ad hominem dislike, crude suppositions, and unfounded, tendentious accusations of bias.” 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,621.

295. Defendants’ aspersions are misplaced. Defendants assume the worst of Plaintiffs and similar commenters, inferring from their plea for fair process that they secretly want a system set up to guarantee success for their clients. That is hardly the case. Plaintiffs are organizations that seek fairness in the immigration process, and each is sufficiently sophisticated to know that fairness is not necessarily outcome determinative. Yet these changes place case adjudications squarely in the hands of a policymaker. Such a system is fundamentally contrary to the neutral judicial process that Defendants purport to uphold and Plaintiffs seek to defend.

c. Mandatory Timelines & Other Changes for Adjudication of BIA Appeals

296. In addition, the Rule imposes mandatory internal deadlines for adjudicating BIA appeals. Among other things, it requires initial screening for summary dismissals to be completed within 14 days of filing and a decision to be issued within 30 days, and a single BIA member to determine within 14 days whether to adjudicate the case in a single-member decision or assign it to a three-member panel, reserved for more complex review. See 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,652–53 (new 8 C.F.R. § 1003.1(e)(8)(i)). A single BIA member can affirm the IJ in a two-sentence boilerplate opinion (known as an “affirmance without opinion” or “AWO”)—a practice that Defendants recently expanded despite widespread criticism—which is ordinarily not issued in a three-member decision.<sup>47</sup> The Rule also eliminates the requirement for IJs to review the transcript of an oral decision to correct mis-transcribed language or other errors before it is sent to the parties, which is currently required to be completed with 14 days of receipt. Id. at 81,638 (new 8 C.F.R. § 1003.5).

297. These changes prioritize speed at the expense of due process, in violation of the APA. Imposing arbitrary adjudication timelines pressures screeners to review cases quickly rather than thoroughly, causing erroneous summary dismissals and AWOs. This is especially true since the BIA is already incentivized to adjudicate cases quickly in light of the 90- and 180-day adjudication requirements and other case management procedures, and therefore would more likely suggest that a case may be summarily dismissed or decided by a single BIA member. This process will ultimately lead to more federal court appeals and remands back to the BIA.

---

<sup>47</sup> See 8 C.F.R. §§ 1003.1(e)(4)–(6); Affirmance Without Opinion, Referral for Panel Review, and Publication of Decisions as Precedents, 84 Fed. Reg. 31,463 (July 2, 2019).

298. Rather than respond to comments on this provision, Defendants deflect allegations that BIA members will be unable to properly adjudicate cases on this timeline by again mischaracterizing the commenters' concerns as attacks on the BIA members' competency and integrity. 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,617. Defendants also claimed that there was no meaningful difference between requiring screeners to adjudicate cases "promptly," which the previous regulations required, and a fixed, 14- or 30-day deadline. Id. Finally, Defendants dismissed comments that the recently issued case management procedures, which already established the Rule's timelines, failed to result in improved efficiency. Id. None of these justifications survive scrutiny or adequately respond to commenters' objections.

299. In addition, the elimination of the IJ transcript review is counterproductive. EOIR contractor Booz Allen Hamilton reported that the issuance of oral decisions—which are often inaccurate or contain gaps in law or reason—actually contributes to inefficiencies in adjudicating cases, rather than alleviating them, because it prevents the parties and the BIA from deliberating on the issues of the case.<sup>48</sup> Conspicuously absent from the Rule is any mention of this countervailing data, which is also supported by the comments; in fact, Defendants stated that removing the transcript review process "will not affect the quality of transcriptions" at all. 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,639. Nor did Defendants explain why limiting the 14-day review process would reduce inefficiencies in lieu of more effective alternatives, such as hiring more transcribers to produce transcripts in a timely manner after the IJ's review.

---

<sup>48</sup> See Booz Allen Hamilton Report, supra n.1, at 18, 25.

300. Similarly, Defendants outright dismissed concerns that litigation at the courts of appeals would increase on the basis of inaccurate or defective transcripts—which is especially true since the BIA can now affirm the IJ on any basis in the record, even if that basis is erroneous, see supra ¶ 161—harming noncitizens and their advocates, like Plaintiffs.

B. Defendants Failed to Consider the Effect of Contemporaneously-Issued Rules and Failed to Provide the Public an Opportunity to Comment on the Effect of Subsequently-Proposed Rules.

301. Defendants’ rulemaking process also violates the APA because Defendants failed to consider the cumulative impact of closely related final and proposed rules and deprived the public of a meaningful opportunity to submit informed comments.

302. Defendants, either independently or along with DHS, issued six immigration rules and two NPRMs for future rulemaking in the second half of December 2020 alone. All of the final Rules are scheduled to take effect in January 2021, yet EOIR did not consider the compound impact of any of these rules. Specifically:

303. Defendants’ and DHS’s joint Omnibus Asylum Rule will radically alter the substance and procedure of asylum adjudications. See 85 Fed. Reg. 80, 274. Because the Omnibus Asylum Rule gives IJs more authority to summarily deny asylum claims, EOIR can expect more appeals to the BIA, where asylum seekers will now face heightened barriers in seeking representation and correcting errors. In addition, the Omnibus Asylum Rule curtails the discretion of the IJ or the BIA to consider motions to reopen even based on changed country conditions, yet the Rule at issue in this case repeatedly rests on the availability of such motions to justify limiting other procedural remedies like sua sponte reopening and motions to remand. See, e.g., 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,629; 81,632; 81,634. Defendants did not consider the interactions between these rules.

304. Likewise, the Asylum Procedures Rule imposes a strict 15-day timeline for filing an asylum application for those in asylum-only and withholding-only proceedings, which will include every asylum seeker who has gone through the credible fear process, making it more difficult to apply for asylum, withholding of removal, and protection under CAT. See 85 Fed. Reg. 82,698. Because individuals denied asylum under that Rule are to have their cases “returned to DHS,” it is unclear what appellate rights they will have at all. For those who can appeal, the Asylum Procedures Rule will generate more appeals. For others, the availability of sua sponte reopening by an IJ will become all the more critical to prevent miscarriages of justice. The Asylum Procedures Rule also allows, for example, IJs to submit evidence in proceedings, which has profound implications for “undisputed” facts the BIA may now “administratively notice” under the instant Rule. Yet, Defendants did not consider the interactions between these rules.

305. Next, the EOIR Fee Rule increases the fee from $110 to $975 for BIA appeals, and from $110 to $895 for BIA motions to reopen or reconsider. See 85 Fed. Reg. 82,750. Defendants acknowledge the EOIR Fee Rule but refuse to consider its implications because it could be enjoined. See 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,594. Thus, Defendants did not meaningfully consider the deterrence effect of the EOIR Fee Rule before overhauling the EOIR system in the name of “efficiency,” nor the burden of seeking fee waivers or other sources of funding for appeals while also meeting an expedited timeframe for briefing. Nor did Defendants consider the harm in eliminating the BIA’s self-certification and sua sponte reopening authority, which are often used to accept appeals and motions that are rejected after denial of a fee waiver.

306. The two other final rules issued in December 2020 also impact the substantive issues in this case. Specifically, the Transit Ban Rule, 85 Fed. Reg. 82,260, bars individuals from seeking asylum if they transited through another country and did not seek and receive a denial of protection in that country, and the Security Bar Rule, 85 Fed. Reg. 84,160, bars access to the United States, the asylum process, and the immigration courts in the purported name of national security and public health, but is so sweeping in nature that anyone who traveled through a country where COVID-19 is prevalent or manifests minor symptoms could be barred from immigration relief, id. at 84,196. Both of these rules are likely to be declared substantively illegal.<sup>49</sup> Yet, even if those rules are vacated, individuals will not be able to seek remand of a pending appeal at the BIA to address the change in law, due to changes made by the Rule at issue here.

307. Defendants’ failure to consider the implications of these rules—though they were issued “by the same agency, at the same time, on overlapping topics”—reflects arbitrary and capricious rulemaking. Immigrant Legal Res. Ctr. v. Wolf, 2020 WL 5798269, at *14 (N.D. Cal. Sept. 29, 2020) (preliminarily enjoining DHS-issued rule under APA in part because DHS “fail[ed] to consider the combined impact” of another DHS-issued rule); see also Casa de Maryland, Inc. v. Wolf, 2020 WL 5500165, at *26 (D. Md. Sept. 11, 2020) (preliminarily enjoining DHS-issued rule under APA in part because DHS staggered rulemaking, precluding the public from considering the cumulative impact of the rules).

308. Separately, Defendants’ rulemaking also violates the APA because Defendants published two other NPRMs after the comment period on the Rule at issue here closed but before its effective date, which deprived the public of the opportunity to comment on the significant cumulative effects of the subsequently-proposed rules.

---

<sup>49</sup> As to the Transit Ban, Judge Timothy Kelly of this District vacated the interim final rule that preceded that rule because it violates the APA, Capital Area Immigrants’ Rights Coal. v. Trump, 471 F. Supp. 3d 25, 57 (D.D.C. 2020) (on appeal), and the Ninth Circuit has also signaled its view that the same interim final rule violates the INA and the APA. See East Bay Sanctuary Covenant v. Barr, 964 F. 3d 832 (9th Cir. 2020). As to the Security Bar Rule, a D.C. District Court has recently concluded that COVID-19 cannot be the basis for expedient deportation of children. See P.J.E.S. v. Wolf, No. 20-cv-2245 (EGS), 2020 WL 6770508 (D.D.C. Nov. 18, 2020). Though P.J.E.S. does not directly involve the Security Bar Rule, the decision signals a judicial rejection of its underlying approach and reasoning.

309. Specifically, weeks before Defendants published the final Rule, Defendants issued notices of proposed rulemaking on two closely related, if not inextricably connected, matters.<sup>50</sup>

310. Defendants' Motion to Reopen NPRM significantly heightens the standards and burdens of proof for adjudicating statutory motions to reopen, including claims regarding ineffective assistance of counsel. See 85 Fed. Reg. 75,942. Though the Rule at issue here justifies the elimination of various procedural mechanisms by pointing to the availability of statutory motions to reopen,<sup>51</sup> Defendants prevented the public from commenting on the impact of the Motion to Reopen NPRM's proposed restrictions and did not address that impact themselves. For example, the Motion to Reopen NPRM prohibits IJs from receiving evidence outside the scope of relief for which reopening was granted, see id. at 75,953, which compounds the harms caused by the instant Rule in eviscerating the IJ's ability to consider new evidence. The Motion to Reopen NPRM also proposes significant hurdles to obtaining a stay of removal and consequences to departing the United States, which will exacerbate the harm caused by many of the changes in this Rule, such as authorization of BIA-issued removal orders and the requirement that respondents await a final order of removal before seeking remand or reopening in many cases.

---

<sup>50</sup> DHS, too, issued a proposed rule affecting individuals impacted by the instant Rule during this period. See Employment Authorization for Certain Classes of Aliens With Final Orders of Removal, 85 Fed. Reg. 74,196 (eliminating work authorization for individuals with final orders).

<sup>51</sup> See, e.g., 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,616 (in eliminating BIA's ability to remand for new evidence, noting that "[b]ecause the sole statutorily created process to consider new evidence is still available, the Department finds that [noncitizens]' due process rights regarding the submission of new evidence remain intact"); id. at 81,611 (stating that, in lieu of motions to remand for new facts or law, noncitizens should "simply rely on the established motion to reopen procedure"); id. at 81,615 (relying on the availability of motions to reopen in limiting scope of remands to the IJ); id. at 81,628-630; 81,633 (same, in eliminating sua sponte motions to reopen); id. at 81,639 (same, with respect to changes to the BIA's voluntary departure authority).

311. Defendants' other proposed rule, the Continuance NPRM, further restricts continuances before the immigration court. See 85 Fed. Reg. 75,925. It therefore makes seeking parallel relief before EOIR and USCIS or state courts even more difficult, adding to the erosion of procedural protections at issue in this Rule. The Rule at issue in this case also relies on the existence of continuances to justify the elimination of remedies like administrative closure and sua sponte reopening. See, e.g., 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,647. But Defendants deprived commenters of the ability to discuss the interplay of these two rules, and did not consider it themselves.

312. Similarly, Defendants' notice of proposed rulemaking for the Asylum Procedures Rule was issued only two days before the comment period for this Rule ended, after the vast majority of comments were submitted, depriving the public of the opportunity to meaningfully comment on the rules' interrelated effect.

313. The public was also precluded from submitting comments based on other changes to the EOIR system, such as the Attorney General's decision in Matter of A-C-A-A-, 28 I. & N. Dec. 84, which was issued about 24 hours before the Rule's comment period closed and fundamentally intersects with the instant Rule. See infra ¶ 332.

314. This piecemeal, staggered rulemaking hides the full scope of the expected harm of each rule on the EOIR system, allowing Defendants to disregard "'inconvenient facts' about the combined impact of these rules." Immigrant Legal Res. Ctr., 2020 WL 5798269, at *14 (quoting Fox Television, 556 U.S. at 537).

315. Rather, by information and belief, Defendants rushed the promulgation of these interrelated rules without due deliberation in order to codify changes to EOIR before a transition of presidential power. The Rule is therefore arbitrary and capricious because it was promulgated "without observance of procedure required by law," in violation of 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(D).

C. Defendants Failed to Comply With the Certification Requirements Under the Regulatory Flexibility Act.

316. The Regulatory Flexibility Act (“RFA”), 5 U.S.C. § 601 et seq., requires federal agencies to conduct a “regulatory flexibility analysis” analyzing how rules they promulgate will affect “small entities,” and to publish final versions of that analysis. 5 U.S.C. § 604.

317. Plaintiffs other than NIJC qualify as “small entities” under the RFA because each is a “not-for-profit enterprise which is independently owned and operated and is not dominant in its field.” 5 U.S.C. § 601(4).

318. An agency can forgo a regulatory flexibility analysis “if the head of the agency certifies that the rule will not . . . have a significant economic impact on a substantial number of small entities” and publishes that certification, “along with a statement providing the factual basis for such certification,” in the Federal Register when it publishes the final Rule. 5 U.S.C. § 605(b).

319. Defendants did not conduct a regulatory flexibility analysis of the Rule. Rather, “the Department,” not the head of agency, issued an uncertified statement that the Rule “will not have a significant economic impact on a substantial number of small entities.” 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,650. Defendants likewise did not publish “a statement providing the factual basis” for the Department’s claim that the Rule does not significantly impact small entities. See id.

320. Instead, Defendants assert, only in response to one commenter, that the Rule has no adverse impact on small entities because the Rule “does not limit the fees [practitioners] may charge, or the number of cases a representative may ethically accept under the rules of professional responsibility.” 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,645. It adds, “[t]he rule will not economically impact representatives of aliens in immigration proceedings.” Id. at 81,646. Defendants’ response does not meaningfully address the significant, adverse impacts the Rule will have on the number of cases that small entities are able to handle, their ability to secure ongoing funding, and other consequences—points that the not-for-profit Plaintiffs and others made in their comments.

321. Defendants also claim that portions of the Rule apply only to individuals and not entities, such that there can be no adverse impact to small entities. See 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,646. This conclusion misses the impacts that Plaintiffs face both directly and through their representation of their clients. “Congress took steps to ensure that pro bono legal services of the type that the Organizations provide are available to asylum seekers.” E. Bay Sanctuary Covenant v. Trump, 932 F.3d 742, 768 (9th Cir. 2018) (citing 8 U.S.C. § 1158(d)(4)(A)-(B)); see also 8 U.S.C. § 1229(a)(1)(E), (b)(1)-(2). This disregards the point that Plaintiffs and similar organizations will be hindered in their efforts to provide this congressionally contemplated pro bono service. Moreover, courts recognize that “small entities” can be a party affected by or otherwise regulated by a Rule by virtue of their contractual relationships to their clients. See Aeronautical Repair Station Ass’n, Inc. v. F.A.A., 494 F.3d 161, 176-77 (D.C. Cir. 2007) (distinguishing the two Circuit decisions cited by Defendants in the Rule).

322. Defendants, therefore, failed to comply with the certification requirements under § 605(b) of the RFA, and the Defendants’ claims that the Rule does not significantly impact small entities were arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law. See Northwest Min. Ass’n v. Babbitt, 5 F. Supp. 2d 9, 16 (D.D.C. 1998) (remanding Rule to the agency due to violation of § 605(b)).

V. The Rule Must Be Vacated Because It Was Issued Without a Sufficient Notice and Comment Period or a Reasoned Explanation for Providing a Shortened Comment Period.

323. Because the Rule is a legislative rule that has the force and effect of law, Defendants were required to follow the requirements of the APA for notice-and-comment rulemaking in issuing it. See 5 U.S.C. § 553(b).

324. As several courts have noted, 60 or “90 days is the ‘usual’ amount of time allotted for a comment period.” Becerra v. U.S. Dep’t of the Interior, 381 F. Supp. 3d 1153, 1176 (N.D. Cal. 2019) (quoting Prometheus Radio Project v. FCC, 652 F.3d 431, 453 (3d Cir. 2011)); accord Petry v. Block, 737 F.2d 1193, 1201 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (“[A] thirty-day period is, in the Administrative Conference’s view, ‘an inadequate time to allow people to respond to proposals that are complex or based on scientific or technical data.’ The Administrative Conference itself thus suggests a sixty-day period as ‘a more reasonable minimum time for comment.’” (footnotes omitted)); Pangea Legal Servs. v. DHS, No. 20-cv-7721, 2020 WL 6802474, at *20 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 19, 2020) (enjoining immigration rule for, inter alia, providing a 30-day comment period).

325. The executive branch similarly recognizes that a comment period should normally be 60 days or longer. Executive Order 13563 directs that “[t]o the extent feasible and permitted by law, each agency shall afford the public a meaningful opportunity to comment through the Internet on any proposed regulation, with a comment period that should generally be at least 60 days.” Exec. Order 13563, “Improving Regulation and Regulatory Review,” § 2(b) (Jan. 18, 2011) (emphasis added); see also Exec. Order 12866, “Regulatory Planning and Review,” § 6(a) (Sept. 30, 1993) (“[I]n most cases [rulemaking] should include a comment period of not less than 60 days.”). Indeed, other substantial immigration regulations had a 60-day comment period. See NPRM: Inadmissibility on Public Charge Grounds, 83 Fed. Reg. 51,144 (Oct. 10, 2018).

326. Defendants acknowledged that the Rule is a “significant regulatory action” whose issuance must be “consistent with the principles of Executive Orders 12866 and 13563.” 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,643. Accordingly, a 60- or even 90-day comment period would have been an appropriate minimum here. Instead, Defendants provided a mere 30 days for comments on the proposed Rule.

327. Courts have recognized that a 30-day comment period for a complex immigration-related rule is particularly inadequate where it is part of a “staggered” rulemaking process “in which [DOJ and DHS] published this NPRM and several other related proposed rules.” Pangea Legal Servs., 2020 WL 6802474, at *22. This is precisely the case here. See supra Part IV.B.

328. In addition, Defendants issued the Rule in the midst of a global pandemic that has upended the lives of millions and killed hundreds of thousands. Other agencies have acknowledged the difficulties posed by COVID-19 and provided significant extensions of comment periods.<sup>52</sup>

329. There is no permissible reason to rush through this overhaul of the immigration court and appellate system without allowing a standard-length comment period.

330. In violation of the APA, however, Defendants offer no reasoned explanation for providing a shortened comment period. Defendants neither suggest that a 60-day comment period was infeasible, nor that some urgency necessitated the shortened comment period. Indeed, Defendants do not even provide an explanation for why they think a 30-day comment period was preferable to a standard 60-day (or longer) comment period.

331. In lieu of an affirmative, reasoned explanation for their decision to depart from the default minimum comment period length established in Executive Order 13563, Defendants focus on rebutting commenters' numerous requests for an extension. None of these rebuttal arguments supplies a valid basis for Defendants' hurried approach.

---

<sup>52</sup> See, e.g., Bureau of Consumer Financial Protection, Debt Collection Practices (Regulation F); Extension of Comment Period, 85 Fed. Reg. 30,890 (May 21, 2020) (agreeing that “the pandemic makes it difficult to respond to the SNPRM thoroughly” and providing an additional 90 days to comment on a proposal “in light of the challenges posed by the COVID-19 pandemic”).

332. For example, Defendants assert that “commenters did not suggest or indicate what additional issues the comment period precluded them from addressing.” 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,642. This is patently false. Multiple commenters identified issues that they would have addressed given more time, such as the interaction between this Rule and the Asylum Procedures Rules, which was issued just two days before the close of this Rule's comment period; the effect of Matter of A-C-A-A-, 28 I. & N. Dec. 84, which was issued just 24 hours before the close of the comment period; and the implications of domestic and international law.<sup>53</sup>

333. Defendants also point to rulemaking from 2002, where a 30-day comment period was provided for a rule amending certain BIA procedures. See 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,642 & n.72 (citing Board of Immigration Appeals: Procedural Reform to Improve Case Management, 67 Fed. Reg. 54,878 (Aug. 26, 2002)). Setting aside whether a single example of rulemaking from nearly twenty years ago—and which predated implementation of the E-Government Act of 2002 and the surge in newly-permitted electronic comments that followed—has any relevance to the one that produced the Rule, or whether that outweighs the many other more recent examples in which commenters were given substantially more time, Defendants must defend their decisionmaking on its own terms and in the staggered rulemaking, global pandemic context in which the Rule was promulgated. They make no effort to do so.

334. Finally, in response to commenters' concerns that the COVID-19 pandemic made commenting more difficult by, for example, disrupting workplaces, increasing childcare duties, and making it harder to communicate with clients who might have relevant information, Defendants offered a nonresponse. They asserted that allowing a 60-day comment period in light of COVID-19, “would effectively preclude rulemaking by the Department for the duration of the COVID-19 outbreak” because “individual personal circumstances” that make commenting a challenge are present for “every rulemaking.” 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,643. That is a non sequitur. Giving parties more time is not the same thing as saying that rulemaking must cease during that period. Beyond that, conflating circumstances unique to a global pandemic with a typical rulemaking period is the epitome of an agency “entirely fail[ing] to consider an important aspect of the problem,” and “offer[ing] an explanation for its decision that runs counter to the evidence before” it. Motor Vehicle Mfrs. Ass’n, 463 U.S. at 43.

---

<sup>53</sup> See AILA Comment, supra n.33, at 2-3; Reichlin-Melnick Comment, supra n.5, at 2-4; Public Comment of Center for Gender and Refugee Studies at 4 (Sept. 25, 2020), <http://bit.ly/3s6c2tW>.

VI. The Rule Irreparably Harms Plaintiffs by Frustrating their Respective Missions, Jeopardizing Funding, and Forcing them to Divert Resources, as Well as by Harming Their Existing Clients.

335. Plaintiffs CLINIC, BDS, FIRRP, HIAS, and NIJC are nonprofit organizations that provide legal services to immigrant communities. Absent declaratory and injunctive relief, the Rule will cause Plaintiffs severe, irreparable harm. The Rule will jeopardize ongoing programs and existing and future relationships, force Plaintiffs to divert resources, and put their funding at risk. By impeding noncitizens’ access to counsel and eroding due process protections in immigration proceedings, the Rule frustrates Plaintiffs’ respective missions to protect against these harms. And by denying their clients the protections of the INA and fair proceedings consistent with due process, the Rule harms third parties with whom Plaintiffs have a close relationship.

336. Plaintiffs’ missions are, at their core, to help immigrants seeking safety and security in the United States, to vindicate their legal rights, and to pursue relief for which they are eligible.

In addition to the myriad harms to Plaintiffs described above, the Rule presents a number of global harms to Plaintiffs' respective missions.

337. Impeding Orderly Case Management. First, the Rule makes immigration representation more uncertain, costly, time- and labor-intensive, and complex, all while restricting or eliminating the legal and administrative tools Plaintiffs have historically employed to facilitate orderly litigation, manage their workloads, and seek relief on behalf of noncitizens.

338. Reduced Capacity. Second, the Rule will force Plaintiffs to substantially decrease the range and amount of services they provide. The Rule will increase the time and expense associated with each case, requiring Plaintiffs to accept fewer cases. The Rule will also require Plaintiffs to file more appeals, preserve more issues for appeal, and simultaneously litigate both removal defense cases and alternate avenues for relief where previously the latter would have been sufficient. Each of these developments will reduce Plaintiffs' capacity to help as many noncitizens as they have in the past.

339. The Rule will increase Plaintiffs' obligation in other ways as well. For example, Plaintiffs will likely be required to meet with and advise clients with pending appeals on a more regular basis to ensure that clients receive background check notices and attend their appointments, as the Rule now considers applications abandoned if such appointments are not completed within 90 days. And in the absence of administrative closure, Plaintiffs will need to seek repeated continuances and prepare to argue the case on the merits if a continuance is denied.

340. The Rule will also dramatically undermine Plaintiffs' pro bono programming and, in the case of CLINIC, the strength of its affiliate network. As mentioned above, the Rule dramatically complicates pro bono representation by condensing timelines at the BIA, requiring concurrent representation before the BIA and IJ, and eliminating many of the procedural mechanisms that pro bono attorneys use to serve their clients. This will reduce the pool of suitable pro bono counsel and require Plaintiffs to expend more resources to find counsel.

341. New Training Obligations. Third, the Rule will require Plaintiffs to retrain staff, pro bono partners, and volunteers on representation before the BIA and to develop new training and programmatic materials. For example, the Rule will force CLINIC to revise or rewrite numerous written materials and publications, including its 500-page guide to immigration representation authored with AILA, numerous practice advisories, and its trial skills training materials. CLINIC will also be forced to re-record recently finished webinars. Relatedly, FIRRP is a leader among providers of legal services to detained noncitizens, and it develops materials that are used by pro se litigants around the country. Like CLINIC, FIRRP will have to re-do many of these materials.

342. Plaintiffs will likewise be required to develop new practice advisories for noncitizens in light of the Rule, such as the new constraints on appellate representation and changes to noncitizens' remedies they are able to seek in removal proceedings.

343. Plaintiffs, such as NIJC, that have both public education and policy advocacy programs will have to re-educate stakeholders on the substantive changes to EOIR procedures and their consequences. In doing so, Plaintiffs have and will continue to expend resources on training and informational materials.

344. Jeopardized Funding. Fourth, the reduced case capacity caused by the Rule is likely to put Plaintiffs' funding at risk. Plaintiffs receive funding from a variety of sources, including private foundations, governmental funds (federal, state, and local), and private donors. In some instances, the metrics that determine funding are tied to the number of clients the organization serves. Plaintiffs anticipate that, because the Rule will decrease the number of clients they can serve, their funding will similarly decrease.

345. In particular, Plaintiff CLINIC operates on a membership model, and CLINIC anticipates that this Rule will cause a decrease in affiliate membership due to the complexity it introduces into immigration representation. As the number of affiliates declines, so too will the membership fees that enable CLINIC to provide removal defense training programs, practice advisories, and other written training materials.

346. Plaintiff NIJC runs a robust federal court litigation practice, which includes many appeals from the BIA. For many of NIJC's appeals, it begins representation at the BIA to properly preserve issues. When NIJC takes on new cases at the court of appeals level, the cases will be more time-consuming and complicated because each appeal will require considering issues presented by the Rule's injustices. As a result, NIJC will be less able to accept appeals from the BIA and correspondingly less able to receive funding associated with this work.

347. Increased Demand on Funding. Fifth, just as the Rule jeopardizes Plaintiffs' funding, the need for that funding will increase. Plaintiffs anticipate needing to hire new staff to accommodate for the additional demands required in each case, and pay for new training materials. Additionally, because the Rule creates so many timing pitfalls (e.g., in the appellate process and in the voluntary departure context), Plaintiffs are likely to absorb more costs for clients than would have been necessary before.

348. Overburdened Pro Se Programming. Sixth, as a result of this reduced capacity and the greater difficulty of recruiting pro bono attorneys, the Rule will force Plaintiffs to expand or develop pro se programs and redesign existing ones. This change will require them to divert resources to programs from other important programs. Plaintiffs will be required to develop intricate and robust materials explaining the timelines and limitations under the Rule, along with its impact with the many other restrictions and pitfalls created by DOJ's and DHS's recent flurry of regulations. Plaintiffs will also have to spend more staff time with these individuals to help them understand procedures at the BIA.

349. Frustration of Mission. Finally, and perhaps most fundamentally, the Rule upends access to a fair and just removal process with every provision it enacts. The Rule eliminates critical procedural devices that are currently used to correct fundamental miscarriages of justice, allow individuals to receive relief from deportation for which they qualify, and to avoid dramatic consequences like deportation to death or torture.

350. While taking away many of the devices designed to ensure fairness in the system and used by Plaintiffs to that end, the Rule creates new injustices for the noncitizens Plaintiffs serve. As described at length above, many of the Rule's changes deny noncitizens a fair opportunity to present evidence, create systemic biases against obtaining relief, destroy adjudicators' ability to manage their proceedings and avoid miscarriages of justice, and deprive noncitizens of a neutral adjudicator. These changes are likely to result in more denials of relief for represented individuals and pro se respondents alike.

CLAIMS FOR RELIEF

COUNT ONE

(Violation of the APA, 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(A) – Contrary to Law)

351. Plaintiffs repeat and incorporate by reference each of the foregoing paragraphs as if fully set forth herein.

352. The APA provides that a “reviewing court shall—hold unlawful and set aside agency action, findings, and conclusions found to be . . . not in accordance with law.” 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(a)(A).

353. The Rule is not in accordance with the INA. Among other things, it:

- a. Violates 8 U.S.C. §§ 1229a(b)(4)(A) and 1362 and 8 U.S.C. §§ 1229(a)(1), (b)(2), 1443(h). The first group of provisions afford noncitizens the right to counsel of their choosing, as long as it is not at the Government's expense. By reducing the timetable for briefing at the BIA, the Rule, all but eliminates the right to counsel before the BIA. Likewise, the elimination of administrative closure will cause many immigration practitioners to refuse to accept cases where they will have to pursue relief simultaneously before EOIR and USCIS. The second set of provisions, along with numerous other portions of the INA, contemplate the role of pro bono service providers like Plaintiffs in ensuring access to counsel for noncitizens.
- b. Violates 8 U.S.C. § 1229a(b)(4)(B). Under that provision, noncitizens have a right to a "reasonable opportunity to examine evidence" against them and to present evidence of their own. The Rule violates this provision by eliminating critical devices that exist for noncitizens to present evidence: motions to remand and sua sponte reopening; by vesting in the BIA the authority to adjudicate voluntary departure claims, which require factfinding; and by allowing IJs to challenge a BIA decision when they disagree with it.
- c. Violates 8 U.S.C. §§ 1229a(a)(1), (a)(3), (c)(1)(A). Under these provisions, an IJ and not the BIA shall conduct removal hearings and order removal. The Rule violates this provision by vesting factfinding authority with the BIA; by allowing the BIA to rely on evidence not in the record through "administrative notice" of undefined, "undisputed" facts; and by authorizing the BIA to deny voluntary departure requests (or convert grants into an order of removal for noncompliance), and deem applications abandoned.
- d. Violates 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(47)(B). This provision require "a determination by the [BIA]" or the expiration of a noncitizen's time to appeal before an order of removal becomes final. The Rule violates this provision by purporting to replace BIA determinations with determinations by the Director of EOIR, who is not a member of the BIA.
- e. Violates 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(9)(B)(v). This provision allows noncitizens to seek a provisional hardship waiver of unlawful presence in the United States. Under current regulations that the Rule does not change, see 8 C.F.R. § 212.7(e)(4)(iii), such requests are only possible for individuals subject to removal proceedings if those proceedings are administratively closed. The Rule makes it impossible for an entire class of noncitizens to seek a provisional unlawful presence waiver that are contemplated by statute, frustrating congressional purpose.
- f. Violates 8 U.S.C. §§ 1158(a)(1) and 1231(b)(3). The first of these provisions allows "any alien" to apply for asylum if she is present in the United States, and the second provides mandatory relief from deportation in cases where there is a clear probability that the individual will be persecuted abroad. By eliminating motions to remand and sua sponte reopening, the Rule eliminates two mechanisms that enable noncitizens to pursue these forms of relief.

354. The Rule also violates 8 C.F.R. § 1003.0(c), which prohibits the EOIR Director from adjudicating cases except as authorized by the Attorney General. As explained above, the Attorney General has not authorized the EOIR Director to adjudicate cases certified to him by an IJ, nor has the Attorney General authorized the EOIR Director to adjudicate cases whenever they have been pending more than 335 days from the notice of appeal.

355. The Rule also violates international treaty obligations requiring the United States to refrain from returning individuals to places where they face a significant possibility of persecution or torture. Article 33.1 of the 1951 United Nations Convention Relating to the Status of Refugees, “imposed a mandatory duty . . . not to return an alien to a country where his ‘life or freedom would be threatened’ on account of one of the enumerated reasons.” INS v. Cardoza-Fonseca, 480 U.S. 421, 429 (1987) (quoting the Refugee Convention, 19 U.S.T. 6223, 6259-6276, T.I.A.S. No. 6577 (1968)). Likewise, the Foreign Affairs Reform and Restructuring Act of 1998 (FARRA), Pub. L. No. 105-277, div. G, Title XXII, § 2242, 112 Stat. 2681, 2681-822 (1998) (codified as Note to 8 U.S.C. § 1231), codified the United States’ prohibition on deportation to countries where there are substantial grounds for believing that the person would face torture. See also 8 C.F.R. §§ 1208.16-1208.18. By eliminating key mechanisms that will enable noncitizens to seek protection from deportation to persecution or torture, the Rule violates the United States’ obligation to provide avenues for all noncitizens to apply for these mandatory protections.

356. Finally, the Rule is contrary to law in that it violates the Due Process Clause, see infra Count Six, and the Regulatory Flexibility Act, see infra Count Five.

COUNT TWO
(Violation of the APA, 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(A) – Arbitrary & Capricious)

357. Plaintiffs repeat and incorporate by reference each of the foregoing paragraphs as if fully set forth herein.

358. The APA provides that a “reviewing court shall—hold unlawful and set aside agency action, findings, and conclusions found to be arbitrary, capricious, [or] an abuse of discretion.” 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(A). The Rule, which lacks the hallmarks of reasoned decisionmaking, is arbitrary and capricious.

359. In promulgating the Rule, Defendants “failed to consider an important aspect of the problem, offered an explanation for [their] decision that runs counter to the evidence before the agency, or is so implausible that it could not be ascribed to a difference in view or the product of agency expertise.” Motor Vehicle Mfrs. Ass’n., 463 U.S. at 43.

360. The Rule purports to seek to improve operational efficiency when in fact many of its provisions will make EOIR less efficient. Among other problems:

- a. The elimination of administrative closure will require IJs to keep cases open while USCIS processes pending applications for relief, causing more work for IJs and additional appeals flowing from premature removal orders.
- b. By eliminating motions to remand, the Rule will require the BIA to adjudicate pending appeals even when the evidence presented in a motion to remand could eliminate the need to do so.
- c. The concurrent briefing requirement will increase the size of principal briefs and the frequency of reply briefs, which will add volume to the materials the BIA must review.
- d. The new extension procedure established in the Rule imposes a requirement that each extension request to the BIA be adjudicated on individualized facts, thereby requiring additional resources.
- e. By automatically transferring appeals from the BIA to the EOIR Director, the Rule will require the appellate adjudication process to be restarted before a new adjudicator with substantial, unrelated responsibilities who must review the case from scratch, slowing the resolution of appeals.

- f. By creating a process for IJs to certify BIA decisions with which they disagree to the EOIR Director, the Rule will increase IJs' work, disrupt the orderly process of litigation, and reduce the certainty and finality of BIA decisions.

For these and the other reasons, stated above, the Rule's purported efficiency justification is pretext for the Rule's actual goal: allowing fewer noncitizens to access the immigration courts and pursue relief from removal. By pursuing this objective, Defendants "relied on factors which Congress has not intended [them] to consider." Motor Vehicle Mfrs. Ass'n, 463 U.S. at 43. Defendants' failure to consider other, less restrictive methods for improving efficiency further illustrates this fact.

361. Additionally, Defendants failed to adequately justify the departure from longstanding policies. When an agency substantially alters its position, it must "supply a reasoned analysis for the change." Id. at 42. Likewise, it may not "depart from a prior policy sub silentio or simply disregard rules that are still on the books." Fox Tele. Studios, 556 U.S. at 515. Among other things, in issuing the Rule, Defendants failed to explain or justify the elimination of longstanding procedural remedies like sua sponte reopening, motions to remand, and administrative closure. Defendants similarly failed to justify their conversion to universal concurrent briefing schedules, a policy they had previously considered and explicitly rejected.

362. Defendants likewise ignored the interaction between the Rule and other changes they were proposing or finalizing contemporaneously. Many of these changes curtailed the availability of remedies or procedural devices that the Rule relied on as justifications for rejecting commenters' objections, yet Defendants did not account for concurrent plans to limit them.

363. As explained throughout this Complaint, Defendants failed to analyze many other substantial issues and reasonable alternatives raised in comments. For example, Defendants ignored the devastating impact of the Rule on noncitizens, misstating the impact on their ability to obtain counsel for appeals or obtain statutorily created relief on meritorious claims; failed to provide a sufficient justification for applying parts of the Rule retroactively and in detriment to noncitizens' and Plaintiffs' reliance interests; and failed to rebut the substantial effect on the operations of legal service organizations such as Plaintiffs and on the BIA's own Pro Bono Project.

364. Finally, Defendants ignored the significant reliance interests that are implicated by the Rule. Among other examples, Plaintiffs have accepted cases expecting that they will be able to undertake representation in a specific fashion under longstanding procedures. Plaintiffs have also accepted appeals with the expectation that they would also file a motion to remand to present new, previously unavailable evidence. And Plaintiffs—particularly NIJC and HIAS—have accepted cases expecting that they would be able to pursue administrative closure concurrently with an application for relief to USCIS.

365. For these and the other reasons stated above, the Rule is arbitrary and capricious and unlawful under the APA.

COUNT THREE
(Violation of the APA, 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(D) – Failure to Observe Required Procedure)

366. Plaintiffs repeat and incorporate by reference each of the foregoing paragraphs as if fully set forth herein.

367. The APA provides that a “reviewing court shall—hold unlawful and set aside agency action, findings, and conclusions found to be . . . without observance of procedure required by law.” 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(D). Specifically, the APA provides that agencies must “give interested persons an opportunity to participate in the rule making,” id. § 553(c), which requires a meaningful opportunity to comment.

368. Defendants failed to comply with the APA's requirement of an adequate opportunity to comment by imposing a 30-day comment period. “[A] thirty-day period is . . . ‘an inadequate time to allow people to respond to proposals that are complex or based on scientific or technical data.’ The Administrative Conference itself thus suggests a sixty-day period as ‘a more reasonable minimum time for comment.’” Petry v. Block, 737 F.2d 1193, 1201 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (footnotes omitted); see also Becerra v. U.S. Dep’t of the Interior, 381 F. Supp. 3d 1153, 1176 (N.D. Cal. 2019); Prometheus Radio Project v. FCC, 652 F.3d 431, 453 (3d Cir. 2011); Pangea Legal Servs. v. DHS, No. 20-cv-7721, 2020 WL 6802474, at *20 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 19, 2020).

369. Defendants violated the APA by allowing the public only 30 days to comment on this sprawling Rule in the midst of a global pandemic and in close succession to the comment periods for numerous other related NPRMs and relevant decisions. This abbreviated comment period deprived the public of the ability to comment on the interaction between the Rule and the other proposed (and subsequently enacted) rules, among other infringements on the right to an adequate opportunity to comment.

COUNT FOUR
(Violation of the APA, 5 U.S.C. § 706(2) – Agency Action in Excess of Statutory Jurisdiction or Authority)

370. Plaintiffs repeat and incorporate by reference each of the foregoing paragraphs as if fully set forth herein.

371. The APA provides that a “reviewing court shall—hold unlawful and set aside agency action, findings, and conclusions found to be . . . not in accordance with law” or “in excess of statutory jurisdiction, authority, or limitations, or short of statutory right.” 5 U.S.C. §§ 706(2)(A), (C).

372. Under the INA and Homeland Security Act, Congress has vested all of EOIR’s rulemaking authority in the Attorney General. 8 U.S.C. § 1103(g); 6 U.S.C. § 521.

373. The final Rule was signed solely by Defendant McHenry as Director of EOIR, and not by the Attorney General or acting Attorney General.

374. The Attorney General has never delegated authority to the Director of EOIR to engage in notice and comment rulemaking. See 8 C.F.R. § 1003.0(b).

375. Because Defendant McHenry lacked statutory or delegated authority to issue the Rule, doing so was “in excess of statutory jurisdiction, authority, or limitations,” 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(C), and not in accordance with law, id. § 706(2)(A), and the Rule should be set aside.

COUNT FIVE
(Violation of the Regulatory Flexibility Act, 5 U.S.C. 601, et seq.)

376. Plaintiffs repeat and incorporate by reference each of the foregoing paragraphs as if fully set forth herein.

377. The RFA, as amended, requires federal administrative agencies to analyze how rules they promulgate will affect “small entities,” and to publish final versions of that analysis. 5 U.S.C. § 604.

378. Plaintiffs CLINIC, FIRRP, HIAS, and BDS are small entities within the meaning of the RFA, as each is a “not-for-profit enterprise which is independently owned and operated and is not dominant in its field.”<sup>54</sup> 5 U.S.C. § 601(4).

379. An agency can forgo a regulatory flexibility analysis if “the head of the agency certifies that the rule will not . . . have a significant economic impact on a substantial number of small entities” and publishes that certification, “along with a statement providing the factual basis for such certification,” in the Federal Register. 5 U.S.C. § 605(b).

380. Defendants did not publish a regulatory flexibility analysis concerning the Rule.

---

<sup>54</sup> Plaintiff NIJC is an entity of a larger nonprofit organization, Heartland Alliance. Because NIJC is not an independent nonprofit, this claim is not being brought on behalf of NIJC or Heartland Alliance.

381. Rather, “the Department,” not the head of agency, issued an uncertified statement that the Rule will not significantly impact small entities in violation of the certification requirements under the RFA. 85 Fed. Reg. at 81,650.

382. Defendants also did not publish a “a statement providing the factual basis” for the Department’s purported certification. See id.

383. Defendants’ few statements did not address the significant, adverse impacts the Rule will have on small entities as raised by Plaintiffs in their comments. Also, Defendants’ statements that portions of the Rule impact only individuals and not entities is incorrect. If the Rule goes into effect, it will regulate Plaintiffs, both directly and through their representation of their clients. As explained above and in numerous comments, the Rule will have a significant economic impact on a substantial number of small entities.

384. Defendants, therefore, violated the RFA by failing to comply with the certification requirements under 5 U.S.C. § 605(b), and the Defendants’ claims that the Rule does not significantly impact small entities were arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law.

COUNT SIX
(Violation of the Fifth Amendment Due Process Clause)

385. Plaintiffs repeat and incorporate by reference each of the foregoing paragraphs as if fully set forth herein.

386. The Due Process Clause of the Constitution provides that no person shall “be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law.” U.S. Const. Amend.. V, cl.4.

387. “The fundamental requirement of due process is the opportunity to be heard at a meaningful time and in a meaningful manner.” Mathews v. Eldridge, 424 U.S. 319, 333 (1976) (internal quotations and citations omitted). Procedural due process also “protect[s] a substantive interest to which the individual has a legitimate claim of entitlement.” Olim v. Wakinekona, 461 U.S. 238, 250 (1983). The provisions of this Rule, both separately and collectively, undermine that fundamental right.

388. The provisions limiting extension requests, eliminating consecutive briefing, and shortening reply brief deadlines violate due process by depriving noncitizens—particularly those who are detained and/or appeared pro se before the IJ—of a reasonable opportunity to meaningfully challenge the IJ’s decision and the government’s assertions on appeal.

389. The provisions implementing expedited adjudication timeframes and delegating appeals to the EOIR Director violate due process by incentivizing summary dismissals or affirmances and fundamentally unfair decisionmaking.

390. The provisions authorizing the BIA to find facts and introduce evidence and authorizing IJs to seek certification to the EOIR Director when they disagree with BIA decisions interfere with noncitizens’ right to confront evidence against them and their right to be heard by a neutral arbiter.

391. The provisions eliminating a noncitizen’s ability to seek remand or reopening to correct miscarriages of justice violate due process because they withdraw critical tools upon which noncitizens rely to present their evidence and to correct fundamental errors in the adjudication of their cases. Indeed, under the Rule, remand will not be allowed even if the IJ’s decision was based on precedent that has been overturned or a regulation that has been vacated as unlawful. Likewise, under the Rule, IJs will have no incentive to develop the record for pro se respondents since the Rule effectively strips the BIA of its ability to remand on this basis.

392. The Rule’s changes to voluntary departure processing, which require payment of voluntary departure bond on an expedited timeframe, with no advance notice, violate due process because this change authorizes the outright denial of a substantive right without sufficient notice to comply with a procedural requirement.

393. The Rule's elimination of various procedural vehicles that are used to pursue substantive relief—administrative closure, motions to remand, and sua sponte reopening—violate due process by depriving noncitizens of their liberty and property interests in pursuing statutorily prescribed relief including forms of relief that are mandatory for whomever qualifies to receive them. Additionally, the retroactive nature of the sua sponte provision further violates due process.

394. Each of the foregoing violations is an independent and sufficient reason that the Rule should be set aside.

PRAYER FOR RELIEF

WHEREFORE, Plaintiffs respectfully pray for the following relief:

- a. A preliminary injunction under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 65 or an order under 5 U.S.C. § 705 to preserve status and rights pending the Court's final adjudication of the claims herein;
- b. A stay of the implementation of the Rule pending a remand to the agency under 5 U.S.C. § 611(a)(4) in order for the agency to comply with the RFA;
- c. A declaration pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 2201 setting aside the Rule in its entirety because it is contrary to law, arbitrary and capricious, in excess of statutory authority, and/or unconstitutional;
- d. Vacatur of the Rule in its entirety;
- e. An injunction prohibiting Defendants, their officials, agents, employees, assigns, and all persons acting in concert with them from implementing or enforcing the Rule;
- f. An order requiring Defendants to return cases before EOIR to the status quo ante;
- g. An order enjoining Defendants from applying this Rule retroactively to cases pending before EOIR on or before the effective date of the Rule.
- h. An order awarding Plaintiffs the costs of suit and reasonable attorneys' fees and expenses pursuant to any applicable law; and
- i. Such other and further relief as the Court deems equitable, just, and proper.

Dated: January 11, 2021

Respectfully submitted,

By: s/ Keren Zwick

---

Mary Van Houten Harper**
NATIONAL IMMIGRANT JUSTICE CENTER
1099 New York Ave. NW
Washington, DC 20001
(312) 660-1370
mharper@heartlandalliance.org

Sarah Thompson (D.D.C. Bar No.
CA00073)
NATIONAL IMMIGRANT JUSTICE CENTER
PO Box 124975
San Diego, CA 92112
(312) 660-1370
sthompson@heartlandalliance.org

\* Application for admission pro hac vice forthcoming; Limited to practice before the federal courts pending reinstatement to
D.C. Bar*

\ Application for admission pro hac vice forthcoming*

Keren Zwick (D.D.C. Bar. No. IL0055)
Mark Fleming*
Tania Linares Garcia
NATIONAL IMMIGRANT JUSTICE CENTER
224 S. Michigan Ave., Suite 600
Chicago, IL 60604
(312) 660-1370
kzwick@heartlandalliance.org mfleming@heartlandalliance.org tlinaresgarcia@heartlandalliance.org

Jeffrey Dubner (D.C. Bar No. 1013399)
Benjamin Seel (D.C. Bar No. 1035286)
Sean A. Lev (D.C. Bar. No. 449936)
DEMOCRACY FORWARD FOUNDATION
P.O. Box 34553
Washington, DC 20043
(202) 448-9090
jdubner@democracyforward.org bseel@democracyforward.org slev@democracyforward.org

Counsel for Plaintiffs

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF TEXAS
TYLER DIVISION

LOUIE GOHMERT, TYLER BOWYER, NANCY
COTTLE, JAKE HOFFMAN, ANTHONY KERN,
JAMES R. LAMON, SAM MOORHEAD, ROBERT
MONTGOMERY, LORAIN PELLEGRINO, GREG
SAFSTEN, KELLI WARD and MICHAEL WARD,

Plaintiffs,

v.

THE HONORABLE MICHAEL R. PENCE, VICE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, in his official capacity,

Defendant.

Civil Action No. 6:20-cv-00660

(Election Matter)

PLAINTIFFS' EMERGENCY MOTION FOR EXPEDITED
DECLARATORY JUDGMENT AND EMERGENCY INJUNCTIVE RELIEF

COME NOW Plaintiffs, U.S. Rep. Louie Gohmert (TX-1), Tyler Bowyer, Nancy Cottle, Jake Hoffman, Anthony Kern, James R. Lamon, Sam Moorhead, Robert Montgomery, Loraine Pellegrino, Greg Safsten, Kelli Ward, and Michael Ward, by and through their undersigned counsel, and file this Motion for Expedited Declaratory Judgment and Emergency Injunctive Relief ("Motion"), and Memorandum of Law In Support Thereof, pursuant to Rules 57 and 65 of the FEDERAL RULES OF CIVIL PROCEDURE to request the following relief.

As explained in the Complaint, Plaintiffs seek an expedited declaratory judgment declaring that Sections 5 and 15 of the Electoral Count Act of 1887, PUB. L. NO. 49-90, 24 Stat. 373 (codified at 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 15), are unconstitutional because these provisions violate the Electors Clause and the Twelfth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1, cl. 1 & amend. XII. The Complaint and this Motion address a matter of urgent national concern that involves only issues of law—namely, a determination that Sections 5 and 15 of the Electoral Count Act violate the Electors Clause and the Twelfth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution—where the relevant facts concerning the Plaintiffs’ standing, the justiciability of Plaintiffs’ claims by this Court, and this Court’s ability to grant the relief requested are not in dispute.

Further, the purpose of this Complaint is a declaratory judgment regarding the rights and legal relations of Plaintiffs and of Defendant, namely, that Vice President Michael R. Pence, acting in his capacity as President of the Senate and Presiding Officer for the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress to count Arizona and other States’ electoral votes for choosing President, is free to exercise his exclusive authority and sole discretion under the Twelfth Amendment to determine which slate of electoral votes to count, or neither, and must disregard any provisions of the Electoral Count Act that conflict with the Twelfth Amendment, U.S. CONST. amend. XII.

Because the requested declaratory judgment will terminate the controversy arising from the conflict between the Twelfth Amendment and the Electoral Count Act, and the facts are not in dispute, it is appropriate for this Court to grant this relief in a summary proceeding without an evidentiary hearing or discovery. See FED. R. CIV. P. 57, Advisory Committee Notes. Accordingly, Plaintiffs request an expedited summary proceeding under Rule 57 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure to grant the relief requested herein no later than Thursday, December 31, 2020, and for emergency injunctive relief under FED. R. CIV. P. 65 consistent with the declaratory judgment requested herein on that same date. Plaintiffs style their motion as an emergency motion under Local Civil Rule 7(l) because there is not enough time before December 31 to move for an expedited briefing schedule under Local Civil Rule 7(e).

Plaintiffs adopt all allegations contained in their Complaint.

Plaintiffs respectfully request an opportunity for oral argument. A proposed Order is attached.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Table of Contents .....	iii
Table of Authorities .....	iv
Introduction .....	1
Facts .....	1
Argument .....	3
I. This court has jurisdiction for Plaintiffs' claims.....	3
A. Plaintiffs have standing.....	3
1. Plaintiffs have suffered an injury in fact .....	4
2. The Defendant has caused Plaintiffs' injuries. ....	7
3. This Court can redress Plaintiffs' injuries. ....	9
4. Plaintiffs' procedural injuries lower the constitutional bar for immediacy and redressability.....	11
B. The Speech or Debate Clause does not insulate the Vice President.....	12
C. Sovereign immunity does not bar this action.....	13
D. The political-question doctrine does not bar this suit. ....	14
E. This case presents a federal question, and abstention principles do not apply.....	15
F. Plaintiffs are entitled to an expedited declaratory judgment. ....	16
II. Plaintiffs are entitled to an emergency injunctive relief. ....	17
A. Plaintiffs have a substantial likelihood of success.....	17
1. Unconstitutional laws are nullities.....	17
2. The Electoral Count Act violates the Electors Clause and the Twelfth Amendment. ....	18
3. The Electoral Count Act violates the Constitution's structural protections of liberty.....	22
B. Plaintiffs will suffer irreparable injury. ....	23
C. Plaintiffs need not demonstrate irreparable harm for declaratory relief.....	24
D. The balance of equities favors Plaintiffs.....	25
E. The public interest favors Plaintiffs.....	25
Conclusion .....	26

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

CASES

ACLU v. Ashcroft , 322 F.3d 240 (3d Cir. 2003) .....	26
Baker v. Carr , 369 U.S. 186 (1962).....	6, 15,
Bond v. United States , 564 U.S. 211 (2011) .....	11
Brown v. Maryland , 25 U.S. (12 Wheat.) 419 (1827) .....	18
Bush v. Gore , 531 U.S. 98 (2000).....	15
Carson v. Simon , 978 F.3d 1051 (8th Cir. 2020).....	6
Clinton v. New York , 524 U.S. 417 (1998) .....	12
Commissioner v. Shapiro , 424 U.S. 614 (1976) .....	24
Common Cause v. Biden , 748 F.3d 1280 (D.C. Cir. 2014) .....	12
Cook v. Gralike , 531 U.S. 510 (2001) .....	16
Ctr. for Biological Diversity v. United States EPA , 937 F.3d 533 (5th Cir. 2019).....	8
Davis v. Passman , 442 U.S. 228 (1979) .....	14
FEC v. Akins , 524 U.S. 11 (1998).....	10
Franklin v. Massachusetts , 505 U.S. 788 (1992).....	9
Harman v. Forssenius , 380 U.S. 528 (1965) .....	18
Heckler v. Mathews , 465 U.S. 728 (1984).....	10
Hurley v. Reed , 288 F.2d 844 (D.C. Cir. 1961) .....	24
Jackson Women’s Health Org. v. Currier , 760 F.3d 448 (5th Cir. 2014) .....	25
League of Women Voters of the United States v. Newby , 838 F.3d 1 (D.C. Cir. 2016).....	26
Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife , 504 U.S. 555 (1992) .....	4, 7, 11
Marine Chance Shipping v. Sebastian , 143 F.3d 216 (5th Cir. 1998).....	24
McPherson v. Blacker , 146 U.S. 1 (1892).....	15
Minton v. St. Bernard Par. Sch. Bd. , 803 F.2d 129 (5th Cir. 1986) .....	12
Murphree v. Winter , 589 F. Supp. 374 (S.D. Miss. 1984) .....	23
Nat’l Treasury Employees Union v. U.S. , 101 F.3d 1423 (D.C. Cir. 1996) .....	11
Obama for Am. v. Husted , 697 F.3d 423 (6th Cir. 2012).....	23
Pac. Frontier v. Pleasant Grove City , 414 F.3d 1221 (10th Cir. 2005) .....	26
Powell v. McCormack , 395 U.S. 486 (1969) .....	10, 12-13, 17-18
Reynolds v. Sims , 377 U.S. 533 (1964).....	23

Rowan Cos. v. Griffin , 876 F.2d 26 (5th Cir. 1989) .....	24
Russian Standard Vodka (USA), Inc. v. Allied Domecq Spirits &amp; Wine USA, Inc. , 523 F.Supp.2d 376 (S.D.N.Y. 2007).....	24
Sierra Club v. Glickman , 156 F.3d 606 (5th Cir. 1998) .....	8, 11
Simon v. Eastern Kentucky Welfare Rights Org. , 426 U.S. 26 (1976) .....	8
Synthetic Organic Chem. Mfrs. Ass’n v. Sec’y, Dep’t of Health &amp; Human Servs. , 720 F.Supp. 1244 (W.D. La. 1989).....	8
Tel. &amp; Data Sys. v. FCC , 19 F.3d 42 (D.C. Cir. 1994).....	8
Tex. Democratic Party v. Benkiser , 459 F.3d 582 (5th Cir. 2006) .....	25-26
Tierney v. Schweiker , 718 F.2d 449 (D.C. Cir. 1983).....	24
Trump v. Wis. Elections Comm’n , No. 20-cv-1785, 2020 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 233765 (E.D. Wis. Dec. 12, 2020).....	6
United States v. Morrison , 529 U.S. 598 (2000) .....	18
United States v. Winstar Corp. , 518 U.S. 839 (1996).....	22
Verizon Md. Inc. v. Pub. Serv. Comm’n of Maryland , 535 U.S. 635 (2002).....	14
Washington v. Reno , 35 F.3d 1093 (6th Cir. 1994) .....	26
Webster v. Doe , 486 U.S. 592 (1988).....	25
Wesberry v. Sanders , 376 U.S. 1 (1964).....	6
Williams v. Brooks , 945 F.2d 1322 (5th Cir. 1991) .....	12
Winter v. Natural Resources Defense Council, Inc. , 555 U.S. 7 (2008).....	17
Wood v. Raffensperger , No. 20-14418, 2020 WL 7094866 (11th Cir. Dec. 5, 2020) .....	6

STATUTES

U.S. CONST. art. I, § 5, cl. 2 .....	23
U.S. CONST. art I, § 6, cl. 1 .....	12-13
U.S. CONST. art. I, § 7, cl. 3 .....	22
U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1, cl. 1.....	1, 6, 17-18, 21, 23, 26
U.S. CONST. art. III .....	3, 6-8, 10-11, 15
U.S. CONST. art. III, § 2 .....	15
U.S. CONST. amend. XII .....	passim
3 U.S.C. § 5.....	1-5, 14, 18-19, 21-22, 26
3 U.S.C. § 6.....	21
3 U.S.C. § 15.....	1, 4-5, 10-12, 14, 16, 19-21, 26
28 U.S.C. § 1331.....	3

28 U.S.C. §2201 .....	24
Electoral Count Act of 1887, PUB. L. NO. 49–90, 24 Stat. 373 .....	passim
ARIZ. REV. STAT. § 16-212 .....	6

RULES

FED. R. CIV. P. 57 .....	16, 24
FED. R. CIV. P. 57 Advisory Committee Notes .....	16

LEGISLATIVE HISTORY

2 M. Farrand, RECORDS OF THE FEDERAL CONVENTION OF 1787 (1911) .....	9
--	---

OTHER AUTHORITIES

10 Fed. Proc., L. Ed. §23:4 .....	24
A.B.A. Section of Admin. Law & Regulatory Practice, A Blackletter Statement of Federal Administrative Law , 54 ADMIN. L. REV. 1 (2002) .....	13
Louis L. Jaffee, The Right to Judicial Review I , 71 HARV. L. REV. 401 (1958) .....	13
Chris Land & David Schultz, On the Unenforceability of the Electoral Count Act , 13 Rutgers J.L. & Pub. Policy 340 (2016) .....	23
J. Story, 1 COMMENTARIES ON THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES § 627 (3d ed. 1858) .....	16
Laurence H. Tribe, Erog v. Hsub and Its Disguises: Freeing Bush v. Gore from Its Hall of Mirrors , 115 HARV. L. REV. 170 (2001) .....	22

INTRODUCTION

Plaintiffs, U.S. Representative Louie Gohmert (TX-1) (“Rep. Gohmert”), Tyler Bowyer, Nancy Cottle, Jake Hoffman, Anthony Kern, James R. Lamon, Sam Moorhead, Robert Montgomery, Loraine Pellegrino, Greg Safsten, Kelli Ward and Michael Ward seek an expedited declaratory judgment declaring that Sections 5 and 15 of the Electoral Count Act of 1887, PUB. L. NO. 49–90, 24 Stat. 373 (codified at 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 15), are unconstitutional because these provisions violate the Electors Clause and the Twelfth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1, cl. 1 & Amend. XII.

FACTS

The facts relevant to this motion are set forth in the Complaint and its accompanying exhibit are incorporated herein by reference. Plaintiffs present here only a summary.

The Plaintiffs include Rep. Louie Gohmert—a Member of the U.S. House of Representatives, representing Texas’s First Congressional District in both the current and the next Congress—who seeks to enjoin the operation of the Electoral Count Act to prevent a deprivation of his rights—and the rights of those he represents—under the Twelfth Amendment. The Plaintiffs also include the entire slate of Republican Presidential Electors for the State of Arizona, as well as an outgoing and incoming member of the Arizona Legislature. On December 14, 2020, pursuant to the requirements of applicable state laws, the Constitution, and the Electoral Count Act, the Plaintiff Arizona Electors, with the knowledge and permission of the Republican-majority Arizona Legislature, convened at the Arizona State Capitol, and cast Arizona’s electoral votes for President Donald J. Trump and Vice President Michael R. Pence. On the same date, the Republican Presidential Electors for the States of Georgia, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin met at their respective State Capitols to cast their States’ electoral votes for President Trump and Vice President Pence

(or in the case of Michigan, attempted to do so but were blocked by the Michigan State Police, and ultimately voted on the grounds of the State Capitol).

There are now competing slates of Republican and Democratic electors in five States with Republican majorities in both houses of their State Legislatures—Arizona, Georgia, Michigan, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin (i.e., the Contested States)—that collectively have 73 electoral votes, which are more than sufficient to determine the winner of the 2020 General Election. On December 14, 2020, in Arizona and the other Contested States, the Democratic Party’s slate of electors convened in the State Capitol to cast their electoral votes for former Vice President Joseph R. Biden and Senator Kamala Harris. On the same day, Arizona Governor Doug Ducey and Secretary of State Katie Hobbs submitted the Certificate of Ascertainment with the Biden electoral votes to the National Archivist pursuant to the Electoral Count Act.

Republican Senators and Republican Members of the House of Representatives have also expressed their intent to oppose the certified slates of electors from the Contested States due to the substantial evidence of voter fraud in the 2020 General Election. Multiple Senators and House Members have stated that they will object to the Biden electors at the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress. These public statements by legislators, combined with the fact that President Trump has not conceded and has given no indication that he will concede and political pressure from his nearly 75 million voters and other supporters, make it a near certainty that at least one Senator and one House Member will follow through on their commitments and invoke the (unconstitutional) Electoral Count Act’s dispute resolution procedures.

Defendant Vice President Pence, in his capacity as President of the Senate and Presiding Officer at the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress to select the next President, will be presented with the following circumstances: (1) competing slates of electors from the State of Arizona and the other Contested States, (2) that represent sufficient electoral votes (a) if counted, to determine the winner of the 2020 General Election, or (b) if not counted, to deny either President Trump or former Vice President Biden sufficient votes to win outright; and (3) objections from at least one Senator and at least one Member of the House of Representatives to the counting of electoral votes from one or more of the Contested States and thereby invoking the unconstitutional procedures set forth in Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act.

As a result, Defendant Vice President Pence will necessarily have to decide whether to follow the unconstitutional provisions of the Electoral Count Act or the Twelfth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution at the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress. This approaching deadline establishes the urgency for this Court to issue a declaratory judgment that Sections 5 and 15 of the Electoral Count Act are unconstitutional and provide the undisputed factual basis for this Court to do so on an expedited basis, and to enjoin Defendant Vice President Pence from following any Electoral Count Act procedures in 3 U.S.C. §§ 5 and 15 because they are unconstitutional under the Twelfth Amendment.

ARGUMENT

I. THIS COURT HAS JURISDICTION FOR PLAINTIFFS' CLAIMS.

Before entertaining the merits of this action, the Court first must establish its jurisdiction over the subject matter and the parties. This action obviously raises a federal question, 28 U.S.C. § 1331, so Plaintiffs establish below that this action presents a case or controversy for purposes of Article III and their entitlement to seek relief in this Court via this action.

A. Plaintiffs have standing.

Article III standing presents the tripartite test of whether the party invoking a court's jurisdiction raises an "injury in fact" under Article III: (a) a legally cognizable injury (b) that is both caused by the challenged action, and (c) redressable by a court. Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 561-62 (1992). The task of establishing standing varies, depending “considerably upon whether the plaintiff is himself an object of the action (or forgone action) at issue.” Id. at 561. If so, “there is ordinarily little question that the action or inaction has caused him injury, and that a judgment preventing or requiring the action will redress it.” Id. at 562. If not, standing may depend on third-party action:

When ... a plaintiff’s asserted injury arises from the government’s allegedly unlawful regulation (or lack of regulation) of someone else, much more is needed. In that circumstance, causation and redressability ordinarily hinge on the response of the regulated (or regulable) third party to the government action or inaction – and perhaps on the response of others as well.

Id. (emphasis in original). Here, Plaintiffs can assert both first-party and third-party injuries, with the showing for standing easier for the first-party injuries. Specifically, Vice President Pence’s action under the unconstitutional Electoral Count Act would have the effect of ratifying injuries inflicted—in the first instance—by third parties in Arizona.

1. Plaintiffs have suffered an injury in fact.

Plaintiffs have standing as a member of the United States House of Representatives, Members of the Arizona Legislature, and as Presidential Electors for the State of Arizona.

Rep. Louie Gohmert is a Member of the U.S. House of Representatives, representing Texas’s First Congressional District in both the current and the next Congress. Rep. Louie Gohmert requests declaratory relief from this Court to prevent action as prescribed by 3 U.S.C. § 5, and 3 U.S.C. §15 and to give the power back to the states to vote for the President in accordance with the Twelfth Amendment. Otherwise he will not be able to vote as a Congressional Representative in accordance with the Twelfth Amendment, and instead, his vote in the House, if there is disagreement, will be eliminated by the current statutory construct under the Electoral Count Act, or diluted by votes of the Senate and ultimately by passing the final determination to the state Executives.

In the event that objections occur leading to a vote in the House of Representatives, then under the Twelfth Amendment, on January 6, in the new House of Representatives, there will be twenty-seven states led by Republican majorities, and twenty states led by Democrat majorities, and three states that are tied. Twenty-six seats are required for a victor under the Twelfth Amendment, and further that, under the Twelfth Amendment, in the event neither candidate wins twenty-six seats by March 4, then the then-current Vice President would be declared the President. However, if the Electoral Count Act is followed, this one vote on a state-by-state basis in the House of Representatives for President simply would not occur and would deprive this Member of his constitutional right as a sitting member of a Republican delegation, where his vote matters.

The Twelfth Amendment specifically states that “if no person have such majority, then from the persons having the highest numbers not exceeding three on the list of those voted for as President, the House of Representatives shall choose immediately, by ballot, the President. But in choosing the President, the votes shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote.” The authority to vote with this authority is taken from the House of Representatives, of which Mr. Gohmert is a member, and usurped by statutory construct set forth in 3 U.S.C. § 5 and 3 U.S.C. §15. Therein the authority is given back to the state’s executive branch in the process of counting and in the event of disagreement – while also giving the Senate concurrent authority with the House to vote for President. As a result, the application of 3 U.S.C. § 5 and 3 U.S.C. §15 would prevent Rep. Gohmert from exercising his constitutional duty to vote pursuant for President to the Twelfth Amendment.

Prior to December 14, 2020, Plaintiff Arizona Electors had standing under the Electors Clause as candidates for the office of Presidential Elector because, under Arizona law, a vote cast for the Republican Party's President and Vice President is cast for the Republican Presidential Electors. See ARIZ. REV. STAT. § 16-212. Accordingly, Plaintiff Arizona Electors, like other candidates for office, “have a cognizable interest in ensuring that the final vote tally reflects the legally valid votes cast,” as “[a]n inaccurate vote tally is a concrete and particularized injury to candidates such as the Electors.” Carson v. Simon, 978 F.3d 1051, 1057 (8th Cir. 2020) (affirming that Presidential Electors have Article III and prudential standing under Electors Clause); see also Wood v. Raffensperger, No. 20-14418, 2020 WL 7094866, *10 (11th Cir. Dec. 5, 2020) (affirming that if Plaintiff voter had been a candidate for office “he could assert a personal, distinct injury” required for standing); Trump v. Wis. Elections Comm’n, No. 20-cv-1785, 2020 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 233765 at *26 (E.D. Wis. Dec. 12, 2020) (President Trump, “as candidate for election, has a concrete particularized interest in the actual results of the election.”). Plaintiffs suffer a “debasement” of their votes, which “state[s] a justiciable cause of action on which relief could be granted” Wesberry v. Sanders, 376 U.S. 1, 5-6 (1964) (citing Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186 (1962)).

The Twelfth Amendment provides as follows:

The electors shall meet in their respective states and vote by ballot for President and Vice President, one of whom, at least, shall not be an inhabitant of the same state with themselves; they shall name in their ballots the person voted for as President, and in distinct ballots the person voted for as Vice-President, and they shall make distinct lists of all persons voted for as President, and of all persons voted for as Vice-President, and of the number of votes for each, which lists they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the seat of the government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate.

U.S. CONST. amend. XII (emphasis added).

2. Plaintiffs' injuries are traceable to Defendant.

Rep. Gohmert faces imminent threat of injury that the Defendant will follow the unlawful Electoral Count Act and, in so doing, eviscerate Rep. Gohmert's constitutional right and duty to vote for President under the Twelfth Amendment. With injuries directly caused by a defendant, plaintiffs can show an injury in fact with "little question" of causation or redressability. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. at 561-62. Although the Defendant did not cause the underlying election fraud, the Defendant nonetheless will directly cause Rep. Gohmert's injury, which is causation—and redressability—under Defenders of Wild.

By contrast, the Arizona Electors suffer indirect injury vis-à-vis this Defendant. But for the alleged wrongful conduct of Arizona executive branch officials under color of law, the Plaintiff Arizona Electors would have been certified as the presidential electors for Arizona, and Arizona's Governor and Secretary of State would have transmitted uncontested votes for Donald J. Trump and Michael R. Pence to the Electoral College. The certification and transmission of a competing slate of Biden electors has resulted in a unique injury that only Plaintiff Arizona Electors could suffer, namely, having a competing slate of electors take their place and their votes in the Electoral College. While the Vice President did not cause Plaintiffs' initial injury—that happened in Arizona—the Vice President stands in the position at the Joint Session on January 6 to ratify and purport to make lawful the unlawful injuries that Plaintiffs suffered in Arizona. That is causation enough for Article III:

According to the USDA, the injury suffered by Sierra Club is caused by the independent actions (i.e., pumping decisions) of third party farmers, over whom the USDA has no coercive control. Although we recognize that causation is not proven if the injury complained of is the result of the independent action of some third party not before the court, this does not mean that causation can be proven only if the governmental agency has coercive control over those third parties. Rather, the relevant inquiry in this case is whether the USDA has the ability through various programs to affect the pumping decisions of those third party farmers to such an extent that the plaintiff's injury could be relieved.

Sierra Club v. Glickman, 156 F.3d 606, 614 (5th Cir. 1998) (interior quotation marks, citations, and alterations omitted, emphasis in original); Tel. & Data Sys. v. FCC, 19 F.3d 42, 47 (D.C. Cir. 1994); Synthetic Organic Chem. Mfrs. Ass'n v. Sec'y, Dep't of Health & Human Servs., 720 F.Supp. 1244, 1248 n.2 (W.D. La. 1989) (“any traceable injury will provide a basis for standing, even where it occurs through the acts of a third party”).

When third parties inflict injury—even private third parties—that injury is traceable to government action if the injurious conduct “would have been illegal without that [governmental] action.” Simon v. Eastern Kentucky Welfare Rights Org., 426 U.S. 26, 45 n.25 (1976). As explained below, Vice President Pence stands ready to ratify Plaintiffs’ injuries via the unconstitutional Electoral Count Act, which is causation enough to enjoin his actions. Alternatively, “plaintiff’s injury could be relieved” within the meaning of Sierra Club v. Glickman if the Vice President rejected the Electoral Count Act as unconstitutional.

A procedural-rights plaintiff must also show that “fixing the alleged procedural violation could cause the agency to ‘change its position’ on the substantive action,” Ctr. for Biological Diversity v. United States EPA, 937 F.3d 533, 543 (5th Cir. 2019), which is easy enough here/ Under the Electoral Count Act, the “Blue” or “Biden” states have a bare House majority in the Congress that will vote on January 6. Under the Twelfth Amendment, however, the “Red” or “Trump” states have a 27-20-3 majority where each state delegation gets one vote in the House’s election of the President. That distinction satisfies both third-party causation and procedural-rights tests for Article III standing.

The Twelfth Amendment gives Defendant exclusive authority and sole discretion as to which set of electors to count, or not to count any set of electors. If no candidate receives a majority of electoral votes, then the President is to be chosen by the House, where “the votes shall be taken by States, the representation from each state having one vote.” U.S. CONST. amend. XII. If Defendant Pence instead follows the procedures in Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act, Plaintiffs’ electoral votes will not be counted because (a) the Democratic majority House of Representatives will not “decide” to count the electoral votes of Plaintiff Republican electors; and (b) either the Senate will concur with the House not to count their votes, or the Senate will not concur, in which case, the electoral votes cast by Biden’s electors shall be counted because the Biden slate of electors was certified by Arizona’s executive. Under the Constitution, by contrast, the Vice President counts the votes and—if the count is indeterminate—the vote proceeds immediately to the House for President and to the Senate for Vice President. See U.S. CONST. amend. XII.<sup>1</sup>

3. This Court can redress Plaintiffs’ injuries.

Even if this Court would lack jurisdiction to enjoin the Vice President, but see Sections I.B-I.C, infra (immunity does not bar this action), this Court’s authoritative declaration would provide redress enough. See Franklin v. Massachusetts, 505 U.S. 788, 803 (1992) (“we may assume it is substantially likely that the President and other executive and congressional officials would abide by an authoritative interpretation of the census statute and constitutional provision by the District Court, even though they would not be directly bound by such a determination”). The

---

<sup>1</sup> This intent that the Vice President count the votes is borne out by a unanimous resolution attached to the final Constitution that described the procedures for electing the first President (i.e., for the one time when there would not already be a sitting Vice President), stating in relevant part “that the Senators should appoint a President of the Senate, for the sole Purpose of receiving, opening and counting the Votes for President.” 2 M. Farrand, RECORDS OF THE FEDERAL CONVENTION OF 1787, at 666 (1911). For all subsequent elections, when there would be a Vice President to act as President of the Senate, the Constitution vests the opening and counting in the Vice President.

Electoral Count Act is blatantly unconstitutional in many respects, see Section I.A, infra, and “it is the province and duty of the judicial department to determine in cases regularly brought before them, whether the powers of any branch of the government, and even those of the legislature in the enactment of laws, have been exercised in conformity to the Constitution.” Powell v. McCormack, 395 U.S. 486, 506 (1969) (interior quotations omitted).

Even if Plaintiffs do not ultimately prevail under the process that the Twelfth Amendment requires, the relief requested would nonetheless redress their injuries from the unconstitutional Electoral Count Act process in two respects . First, with respect to seeking to follow the Twelfth Amendment procedure over that of 3 U.S.C. § 15, it would redress Rep. Gohmert’s procedural injuries enough to proceed under the correct procedure, even if they do not prevail substantively. FEC v. Akins, 524 U.S. 11, 25 (1998). Second, with respect to the Arizona Electors, it would redress their unequal-footing injuries to treat all rival elector slates the same, even if the House and not the electors choose the next President. Heckler v. Mathews, 465 U.S. 728, 739-40 (1984) (“when the right invoked is that to equal treatment, the appropriate remedy is a mandate of equal treatment, a result that can be accomplished by withdrawal of benefits from the favored class as well as by extension of benefits to the excluded class”) (citations and footnotes omitted, emphasis in original). In each respect, Article III does not require that Plaintiffs show that they will prevail in order to show redressability.

The declaratory relief that Plaintiffs request would redress their injuries enough for Article III and in the chart as set forth:

Event/Issue	3 U.S.C. § 15	Twelfth Amendment
One Congress purports to bind future Congresses	Yes	No

Event/Issue	3 U.S.C. § 15	Twelfth Amendment
Rival slates of electors	Bicameral dispute resolution with no presentment; state executive breaks ties	Vice President counts; House and Senate respectively elect President and Vice President if inconclusive
Violates Presentment Clause	Yes	No
Role for state governors	Yes	No
House voters	Each member votes ( e.g. , CA gets 53 votes, ND gets 1)	Each state delegation votes ( e.g. , CA and ND get 1 vote)

As is plain from these material—and, here, dispositive—differences between the Twelfth Amendment and 3 U.S.C. § 15, the two provisions cannot be reconciled.

4. Plaintiffs’ procedural injuries lower the constitutional bar for immediacy and redressability.

Given that Plaintiffs suffer a concrete injury to their voting rights, Plaintiffs also can press their procedural injuries under the Electoral Count Act. For procedural injuries, Article III’s redressability and immediacy requirements apply to the procedural violation that will (or someday might) injure a concrete interest, rather than to the concrete future injury. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. at 571-72 & n.7. Specifically, the injuries that Plaintiffs assert affect the procedure by which the status of their votes will be considered, which lowers the thresholds for immediacy and redressability under this Circuit’s and the Supreme Court’s precedents. Id.; Glickman, 156 F.3d at 613 (“in a procedural rights case, ... the plaintiff is not held to the normal standards for [redressability] and immediacy”); accord Nat’l Treasury Employees Union v. U.S., 101 F.3d 1423, 1428-29 (D.C. Cir. 1996). Similarly, a plaintiff with concrete injury can invoke Constitution’s structural protections of liberty. Bond v. United States, 564 U.S. 211, 222-23 (2011).

Finally, voters from smaller states like Arizona suffer an equal-footing injury and a procedural injury vis-à-vis larger states like California because the Electoral Count Act purports to replace the process provided in the Twelfth Amendment. Under the Electoral Count Act,

California has five times the votes that Arizona has, but under the Twelfth Amendment California and Arizona each have one vote. Compare 3 U.S.C. § 15 with U.S. CONST. amend. XII. That analysis applies in third-party injury cases. See Clinton v. New York, 524 U.S. 417, 433 & n.22 (1998) (unequal-footing analysis applies to indirect-injury plaintiffs); cf. id. at 456-57 (that analysis should apply only to equal-protection cases) (Scalia, J., dissenting). Nullification of a procedural protection and any related bargaining power is injury enough, even in third-party cases. Clinton, 524 U.S. at 433 & n.22.

B. The Speech or Debate Clause does not insulate the Vice President.

The Speech or Debate Clause provides that “Senators and Representatives” “shall not be questioned in any other Place” “for any Speech or Debate in either House”:

The Senators and Representatives ... for any speech or debate in either House, ... shall not be questioned in any other place.

U.S. CONST. art I, § 6, cl. 1. “Not everything a Member of Congress may regularly do is a legislative act within the protection of the Speech or Debate Clause,” Minton v. St. Bernard Par. Sch. Bd., 803 F.2d 129, 134-35 (5th Cir. 1986) (interior quotations omitted), because the “clause has been interpreted to protect only purely legislative activities,” Williams v. Brooks, 945 F.2d 1322, 1326 (5th Cir. 1991) (internal quotation marks omitted), which renders it inapposite here. Where it applies, the Clause poses a jurisdictional bar not only to a court reaching the merits but also to putting the defendant to the burden of putting up a defense. Powell, 395 U.S. at 502-03. But “Legislative immunity does not, of course, bar all judicial review of legislative acts,” Powell, 395 U.S. at 503, and the Speech or Debate Clause does not even apply—by its terms—to the Vice President in his role as President of the Senate or to the Joint Session on January 6.

First, the Clause does not protect the Vice President acting in his role as President of the Senate. See U.S. CONST. art I, § 6, cl. 1; cf. Common Cause v. Biden, 748 F.3d 1280, 1284 (D.C.

Cir. 2014) (declining to decide whether or not the Speech or Debate Clause protects the Vice President). At best for the Vice President, the question is an open one, but Plaintiffs respectfully submit that the Constitution's plain language should govern: The Clause does not apply to the Vice President. Instead, as here, where an unprotected officer of the House or Senate implements an unconstitutional action of the House or Senate, the judiciary has the power to enjoin the officer, even if it would lack the power to enjoin the House, the Senate, or their Members. Powell, 395 U.S. at 505. In short, the Speech or Debate Clause does not protect Vice President Pence at all.

Second, even if the Speech or Debate Clause did protect the Vice President acting as President of the Senate for legislative activity in the Senate, the Joint Session on January 6 is no such action. See U.S. CONST. art I, § 6, cl. 1. This is an election, and the Vice President has no more authority to disenfranchise voters via unconstitutional means as any other person.

C. Sovereign immunity does not bar this action.

The Defendant is Vice President Pence named as a defendant in his official capacity as the Vice President of the United States. With respect to injunctive or declaratory relief, it is a historical fact that at the time that the states ratified the federal Constitution, the equitable, judge-made, common-law doctrine that allows use of the sovereign's courts in the name of the sovereign to order the sovereign's officers to account for their unlawful conduct (i.e., the rule of law) was as least as firmly established and as much a part of the legal system as the judge-made, common-law doctrine of federal sovereign immunity. Louis L. Jaffee, The Right to Judicial Review I, 71 HARV. L. REV. 401, 433 (1958); A.B.A. Section of Admin. Law & Regulatory Practice, A Blackletter Statement of Federal Administrative Law, 54 ADMIN. L. REV. 1, 46 (2002) (it is blackletter law that "suits against government officers seeking prospective equitable relief are not barred by the doctrine of sovereign immunity").

In determining whether the doctrine of Ex parte Young avoids immunity, a court need only conduct a “straightforward inquiry into whether [the] complaint alleges an ongoing violation of federal law and seeks relief properly characterized as prospective.” Verizon Md. Inc. v. Pub. Serv. Comm’n of Maryland, 535 U.S. 635, 645 (2002) (citations omitted). That is enough to survive a motion to dismiss on jurisdictional grounds: “The inquiry into whether suit lies under Ex parte Young does not include an analysis of the merits of the claim[.]” Id. at 638. Sovereign immunity poses no bar to jurisdiction here.<sup>2</sup>

The prayer for injunctive relief—that the Vice President be restrained from enforcing 3 U.S.C. §5 and §15 in contravention of the Twelfth Amendment of the Constitution—to instead follow the Twelfth Amendment, clearly satisfies the “straightforward inquiry.” Plaintiffs request declaratory relief to prevent unconstitutional action under 3 U.S.C. § 5 and § 15 and to give the power back to the states to vote for the President in accordance with the Twelfth Amendment. Therefore, the Defendant should be enjoined from proceeding to certify or count dueling electoral votes under the unconstitutional dispute resolution procedures in 3 U.S.C. § 5 and § 15, and instead to follow the constitutional process as set forth in the Twelfth Amendment of the Constitution.

D. The political-question doctrine does not bar this suit.

The “political questions doctrine” can bar review of certain issues that the Constitution delegates to one of the other branches, but that bar does not apply to constitutional claims related to voting (other than claims brought under the Guaranty Clause of Article IV, §4):

---

<sup>2</sup> Indeed, the sovereign immunity afforded a Member of Congress is co-extensive with the protections afforded by the Speech or Debate Clause. In all other respects, Members of Congress are bound by the law to the same extent as other persons. Davis v. Passman, 442 U.S. 228, 246 (1979) (“although a suit against a Congressman for putatively unconstitutional actions taken in the course of his official conduct does raise special concerns counseling hesitation, we hold that these concerns are coextensive with the protections afforded by the Speech or Debate Clause”).

We hold that this challenge to an apportionment presents no nonjusticiable “political question.” The mere fact that the suit seeks protection of a political right does not mean it presents a political question. Such an objection “is little more than a play upon words.”

Baker, 369 U.S. at 209. As in Baker, litigation over political rights is not the same as a political question.

E. This case presents a federal question, and abstention principles do not apply.

Article III, § 2, of the Federal Constitution provides that, “The judicial Power shall extend to all Cases, in Law and Equity, arising under this Constitution, the Laws of the United States, and Treaties made, or which shall be made, under their Authority[.]” It is clear that the cause of action is one which “arises under” the Federal Constitution. Baker, 369 U.S. at 199. In Baker, the Plaintiffs alleged that, by means of a 1901 Tennessee statute that arbitrarily and capriciously apportioned the seats in the General Assembly among the State’s 95 counties and failed to reapportion them subsequently notwithstanding substantial growth and redistribution of the State’s population, they suffered a “debasement of their votes” and were thereby denied the equal protection of the laws guaranteed them by the Fourteenth Amendment. They sought, inter alia, a declaratory judgment that the 1901 statute is unconstitutional and an injunction restraining certain state officers from conducting any further elections under it. Id. The Baker line of cases recognizes that “that voters who allege facts showing disadvantage to themselves as individuals have standing to sue.”

The federal and constitutional nature of these controversies deprives abstention doctrines of any relevance whatsoever. First, state laws for the appointment of presidential electors are federalized by the operation of The Electoral Count Act of 1887. McPherson v. Blacker, 146 U.S. 1, 27 (1892); Bush v. Gore, 531 U.S. 98, 113 (2000) (Rehnquist, C.J., concurring) (“A significant departure from the legislative scheme for appointing Presidential electors presents a federal constitutional question.”). Second, “[i]t is no original prerogative of State power to appoint a representative, a senator, or President for the Union.” J. Story, 1 COMMENTARIES ON THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES § 627 (3d ed. 1858). Logically, “any state authority to regulate election to [federal] offices could not precede their very creation by the Constitution,” meaning that any “such power had to be delegated to, rather than reserved by, the States.” Cook v. Gralike, 531 U.S. 510, 522 (2001) (internal quotations omitted).

A more quintessentially federal question than which slate of electors will be counted under the 12th Amendment and 3 U.S.C. § 15 to elect the President and Vice President can scarcely be imagined.

F. Plaintiffs are entitled to an expedited declaratory judgment.

Under Rule 57, an expedited declaratory judgment is appropriate where, as here, it would “terminate the controversy” based on undisputed or relatively undisputed facts. See FED. R. CIV. P. 57, Advisory Committee Notes. The facts relevant to this controversy are not in dispute, namely: (1) there are competing slates of electors for Arizona and the other Contested States that have been or will be submitted to the Electoral College; (2) the Contested States collectively have sufficient (contested) electoral votes to determine the winner of the 2020 General Election—President Trump or former Vice President Biden; (3) legislators in Arizona and other Contested States have contested the certification of their State’s electoral votes by State executives, due to substantial evidence of voter fraud that is the subject of ongoing litigation and investigations; and (4) Senators and Members of the House of Representatives have expressed their intent to challenge the electors and electoral votes certified by State executives in the Contested States.

As a result, Defendant Vice President Pence, in his capacity as President of the Senate and as the Presiding Officer for the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress will be have to decide between (a) following the requirements of the Twelfth Amendment, and exercising his exclusive authority and sole discretion in deciding which slate of electors and electoral votes to count for Arizona, or neither, or (b) following the distinct and inconsistent procedures set forth in Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act. The expedited declaratory judgment requested, namely, declaring that Section 5 and 15 of the Electoral Count Act are unconstitutional to the extent they conflict with the Twelfth Amendment and the Electors Clause, and that Defendant Pence may not follow these unconstitutional procedures, will terminate the controversy. Further, as discussed below, the requested declaratory judgment would also establish that Plaintiffs meet all of the requirements for any additional injunctive relief required to effectuate the declaratory judgment by enjoining Defendant Pence from violating the Twelfth Amendment.

II. PLAINTIFFS ARE ENTITLED TO EMERGENCY INJUNCTIVE RELIEF.

“A plaintiff seeking a preliminary injunction must establish that he is likely to succeed on the merits, that he is likely to suffer irreparable harm in the absence of preliminary relief, that the balance of equities tips in his favor, and that an injunction is in the public interest.” Winter v. Natural Resources Defense Council, Inc., 555 U.S. 7, 21 (2008). If this Court grants the requested declaratory judgment, then all elements required for injunctive relief will have been met.

A. Plaintiffs have a substantial likelihood of success.

The first—and most important—Winter factor is the likelihood of movants’ prevailing. Winter, 555 U.S. at 20. Plaintiffs are likely to prevail because this Court has jurisdiction for this action, see Section I, supra, and because the Electoral Count Act is blatantly unconstitutional.

1. Unconstitutional laws are nullities.

At the outset, if the Electoral Count Act violates the Constitution, the Electoral Count Act is a nullity:

[I]t is the province and duty of the judicial department to determine in cases regularly brought before them, whether the powers of any branch of the government, and even those of the legislature in the enactment of laws, have been exercised in conformity to the Constitution; and if they have not, to treat their acts as null and void.

Powell, 395 U.S. at 506 (interior quotations omitted, emphasis added). “Due respect for the decisions of a coordinate branch of Government demands that we invalidate a congressional enactment only upon a plain showing that Congress has exceeded its constitutional bounds.” United States v. Morrison, 529 U.S. 598, 607 (2000) (finding Congress exceeded its authority under the Commerce Clause in regulating an area of the law left to the States. “Constitutional deprivations may not be justified by some remote administrative benefit to the State.” Harman v. Forssenius, 380 U.S. 528, 542-43 (1965). Put simply, “that which is not supreme must yield to that which is supreme.” Brown v. Maryland, 25 U.S. (12 Wheat.) 419, 448 (1827). Although Brown arose in a federal-versus-state context, the same simple truth applies in a constitution-versus-statute context: the supreme enactment controls the lesser enactment.

2. The Electoral Count Act violates the Electors Clause and the Twelfth Amendment.

The requested expedited summary proceeding granting declaratory judgment will address the merits of Plaintiffs’ claims, which raise only legal issues as to whether the provisions of Sections 5 and 15 of the Electoral Count Act addressing the counting of electoral votes from competing slates of electors for a given state are in conflict with the Twelfth Amendment and the Electors Clause and are therefore unconstitutional. In other words, if the Court grants the requested relief, that holding and relief will be granted because the Court has found that these provisions of the Electoral Count Act are unconstitutional and that Plaintiffs have in fact succeeded on the merits.

Under 3 USC § 5, the Presidential electors of a state and their appointment by the State shall be conclusive:

If any State shall have provided, by laws enacted prior to the day fixed for the appointment of the electors, for its final determination of any controversy or contest concerning the appointment of all or any of the electors of such State, by judicial or other methods or procedures, and such determination shall have been made at least six days before the time fixed for the meeting of the electors, such determination made pursuant to such law so existing on said day, and made at least six days prior to said time of meeting of the electors, shall be conclusive, and shall govern in the counting of the electoral votes as provided in the Constitution, and as hereinafter regulated, so far as the ascertainment of the electors appointed by such State is concerned.

3 USCS § 5.

This statutory provision takes away the authority given to the Vice-President under the Twelfth Amendment in determining which electoral votes are conclusive. 3 U.S.C. §15 in relevant part states that both Houses, referencing the House of Representatives and the Senate, may concurrently reject certified votes, and further that if there is a disagreement, then, in that case, the votes of the electors who have been certified by the Executive of the State shall be determinative:

...When all objections so made to any vote or paper from a State shall have been received and read, the Senate shall thereupon withdraw, and such objections shall be submitted to the Senate for its decision; and the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall, in like manner, submit such objections to the House of Representatives for its decision; and no electoral vote or votes from any State which shall have been regularly given by electors whose appointment has been lawfully certified to according to section 6 of this title [3 USCS § 6] from which but one return has been received shall be rejected, but the two Houses concurrently may reject the vote or votes when they agree that such vote or votes have not been so regularly given by electors whose appointment has been so certified. If more than one return or paper purporting to be a return from a State shall have been received by the President of the Senate, those votes, and those only, shall be counted which shall have been regularly given by the electors who are shown by the determination mentioned in section 5 [3 USCS § 5] of this title to have been appointed, if the determination in said section provided for shall have been made, or by such successors or substitutes, in case of a vacancy in the board of electors so ascertained, as have been appointed to fill such vacancy in the mode provided by the laws of the State; but in case there shall arise the question which of two or more of such State authorities determining what electors have been appointed, as mentioned in section 5 of this title [3 USCS § 5], is the lawful tribunal of such State, the votes regularly given of those electors, and those only, of such State shall be counted whose title as electors the two Houses, acting separately, shall concurrently decide is supported by the decision of such State so authorized by its law; and in such case of more than one return or paper purporting to be a return from a State, if there shall have been no such determination of the question in the State aforesaid, then those votes, and those only, shall be counted which the two Houses shall concurrently decide were cast by lawful electors appointed in accordance with the laws of the State, unless the two Houses, acting separately, shall concurrently decide such votes not to be the lawful votes of the legally appointed electors of such State. But if the two Houses shall disagree in respect of the counting of such votes, then, and in that case, the votes of the electors whose appointment shall have been certified by the executive of the State, under the seal thereof, shall be counted. When the two Houses have voted, they shall immediately again meet, and the presiding officer shall then announce the decision of the questions submitted. No votes or papers from any other State shall be acted upon until the objections previously made to the votes or papers from any State shall have been finally disposed of.

3 U.S.C. § 15.

This expressly conflicts with the Twelfth Amendment which has already set what role the House and the Senate play in addressing the votes of electors:

The electors shall meet in their respective states and vote by ballot for President and Vice-President, one of whom, at least, shall not be an inhabitant of the same state with themselves; they shall name in their ballots the person voted for as President, and in distinct ballots the person voted for as Vice-President, and they shall make distinct lists of all persons voted for as President, and of all persons voted for as Vice-President, and of the number of votes for each, which lists they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the seat of the government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate;--The President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and the votes shall then be counted;--the person having the greatest number of votes for President, shall be the President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of electors appointed; and if no person have such majority, then from the persons having the highest numbers not exceeding three on the list of those voted for as President, the House of Representatives shall choose immediately, by ballot, the President. But in choosing the President, the votes shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote; a quorum for this purpose shall consist of a member or members from two-thirds of the states, and a majority of all the states shall be necessary to a choice. And if the House of Representatives shall not choose a President whenever the right of choice shall devolve upon them, before the fourth day of March next following, then the Vice-President shall act as President, as in the case of the death or other constitutional disability of the President. The person having the greatest number of votes as Vice-President, shall be the Vice-President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of electors appointed, and if no person have a majority, then from the two highest numbers on the list, the Senate shall choose the Vice-President; a quorum for the purpose shall consist of two-thirds of the whole number of Senators, and a majority of the whole number shall be necessary to a choice. But no person constitutionally ineligible to the office of President shall be eligible to that of Vice-President of the United States.

U.S. CONST. amend. XII. (emphasis added).

The Constitution is unambiguously clear that: “The President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and the votes shall then be counted” “... and if no person have such majority, then from the persons having the highest numbers not exceeding three on the list of those voted for as President, the House of Representatives [who] shall choose immediately, by ballot, the President. But in choosing the President, the votes shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote.” Whereas 3 U.S.C. §15 and the incorporated referenced to 3 U.S.C. §5 delegate the authority to the Executive of the State in the event of disagreement, in direct conflict with the Twelfth Amendment and directly taking the opportunity of Presidential Electors’ competing slates from being counted.<sup>3</sup>

---

<sup>3</sup> Similarly, 3 U.S.C. § 6 is inconsistent with the Electors Clause—which provides that electors “shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the seat of the government of the United States” the results of their vote, U.S. Const. art. II, § 1, cl. 2-3—because § 6 relies on state executives to forward the results of the electors’ vote to the Archivist for delivery to Congress. 3 U.S.C. § 6. Although the means of delivery are arguably inconsequential, the Constitution vests state

(Footnote cont'd on next page)

3. The Electoral Count Act violates the Constitution’s structural protections of liberty.

The Electoral Count Act exceeds the power of Congress to enact because “one legislature may not bind the legislative authority of its successors,” United States v. Winstar Corp., 518 U.S. 839, 872 (1996), which is a foundational and “centuries-old concept,” id., that traces to Blackstone’s maxim that “Acts of parliament derogatory from the power of subsequent parliaments bind not.” Id. (quoting 1 WILLIAM BLACKSTONE, COMMENTARIES *90). “There is no constitutionally prescribed method by which one Congress may require a future Congress to interpret or discharge a constitutional responsibility in any particular way.” Laurence H. Tribe, Erog v. Hsub and Its Disguises: Freeing Bush v. Gore from Its Hall of Mirrors, 115 HARV. L. REV. 170, 267 n.388 (2001). Thus, the Electoral Count Act is a nullity because it exceeded the power of Congress to enact.

The Electoral Count Act also violates the Presentment Clause by purporting to create a type of bicameral order, resolution, or vote that is not presented to the President:

Every Order, Resolution, or Vote, to Which the Concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary (except on a question of Adjournment) shall be presented to the President of the United States; and before the Same shall take Effect, shall be approved by him, or being disapproved by him, shall be repassed by two thirds of the Senate and House of Representatives, according to the Rules and Limitations prescribed in the Case of a Bill.

U.S. CONST. art. I, § 7, cl. 3 (emphasis added). The House and Senate cannot resolve the issues that the Electoral Count Act asks them to resolve without either a supermajority in both houses or presentment.

---

executives with no role whatsoever in the process of electing a President. A state executive lends no official imprimatur to a given slate of electors under the Constitution.

The Electoral Count Act similarly improperly restricts the authority of the House of Representatives and the Senate to control their internal discretion and procedures pursuant to Article I, Section 5 which provides that “[e]ach House may determine the Rules of its Proceedings ...” U.S. CONST. art. I, § 5, cl. 2. The Electoral Count Act also delegates tie-breaking authority to State executives (who have no agency under the Electors Clause or election amendments) when a State presents competing slates that Congress cannot resolve. As such, the Electoral Count Act also violates the non-delegation doctrine, the separation-of-powers and anti-entrenchment doctrines. See generally Chris Land & David Schultz, On the Unenforceability of the Electoral Count Act, 13 Rutgers J.L. & Pub. Policy 340, 364-377 (2016).

As indicated, Plaintiffs have standing to press these structural protections of liberty because Plaintiffs also suffer concrete injury through the debasement of their votes. See Section I.A.4, supra.

B. Plaintiffs will suffer irreparable injury.

Plaintiffs’ votes will be counted or not counted at the January 6 joint session. The failure to count a lawful vote is an irreparable injury. See, e.g., Obama for Am. v. Husted, 697 F.3d 423, 436 (6th Cir. 2012) (“A restriction on the fundamental right to vote . . . constitutes irreparable injury.”). Indeed, the deprivation of any fundamental right constitutes irreparable injury, Murphree v. Winter, 589 F. Supp. 374, 381 (S.D. Miss. 1984) (citing Elrod v. Burns, 427 U.S. 347, 373-74 (1976)), and voting rights are “a fundamental political right, because preservative of all rights.” Reynolds v. Sims, 377 U.S. 533, 561-62 (1964) (internal quotations omitted). Moreover, if the counting of votes proceeds under the Electoral Count Act, Plaintiffs’ votes will be adjudicated via an unconstitutional procedure, which also qualifies as irreparable harm: there will be no opportunity to revisit the issue. As with standing for procedural injuries, irreparable harm from a procedural violation requires an underlying concrete injury or due-process interest, which Plaintiffs have and which will be irretrievably lost if the Vice President proceeds under the Electoral Count Act. Under the circumstances, Plaintiffs' procedural harms also are irreparable. Commissioner v. Shapiro, 424 U.S. 614, 629-30 (1976).

C. Plaintiffs need not demonstrate irreparable harm for declaratory relief.

"The traditional prerequisite for the granting of injunctive relief, demonstration of irreparable injury, is not a prerequisite to the granting of a declaratory relief" because the Declaratory Judgments Act "provides an adequate remedy and at law, and hence a showing of irreparable injury is unnecessary." 10 FED. PROC., L. ED. §23 :4 (citing 28 U.S.C. § 2201 and Steffel v. Thompson, 415 U.S. 452 (1974)). "The existence of another adequate remedy does not preclude a declaratory judgment that is otherwise appropriate." FED. R. CIV. P. 57. In fact, the central purpose of the Declaratory Judgments Act is to enable parties to adjudicate their rights without waiting until after the injury has occurred or damages have accrued. See, e.g., Russian Standard Vodka (USA), Inc. v. Allied Domecq Spirits & Wine USA, Inc., 523 F.Supp.2d 376, 381 (S.D.N.Y. 2007) (citing In re Combustion, 838 F.2d 35, 36 (2d Cir. 1988)).

In any event, the irreparable-harm requirement for injunctive relief does not apply to declaratory relief. The fact that another remedy would be equally effective affords no ground for declining declaratory relief: "Rule 57 ... expressly states that the availability of an alternative remedy does not prevent the district court from granting a declaratory judgment." Marine Chance Shipping v. Sebastian, 143 F.3d 216, 218-19 (5th Cir. 1998); see also 28 U.S.C. §2201; Hurley v. Reed, 288 F.2d 844, 848 (D.C. Cir. 1961); Tierney v. Schweiker, 718 F.2d 449, 457 (D.C. Cir. 1983). A prior formal or informal demand to the defendant is not a prerequisite to seeking declaratory relief, Rowan Cos. v. Griffin, 876 F.2d 26, 28 (5th Cir. 1989), and showing "irreparable injury... is not necessary for the issuance of a declaratory judgment." Tierney, 718 F.2d at 457

(citing Steffel v. Thompson, 415 U.S. 452, 471-72 (1974)). Thus, even if not entitled to injunctive relief, Plaintiffs still would be entitled to declaratory relief.

The requested declaratory judgment would terminate the controversy, offer relief from uncertainty, and eliminate the need for Plaintiffs to suffer the irreparable harm from the certainty that their electoral votes would be disregarded that would occur if Defendant Vice President Pence were to count electoral votes, and resolve disputes regarding competing slates of electors, under the unconstitutional provisions of the Electoral Count Act, rather than the procedures set forth in the Twelfth Amendment.

D. The balance of equities favors Plaintiffs.

“Traditional equitable principles requiring the balancing of public and private interests control the grant of declaratory or injunctive relief in the federal courts.” Webster v. Doe, 486 U.S. 592, 604-05 (1988). The scope of requested injunctive relief—directing Defendant Pence to carry out his duties as President of the Senate and as Presiding Officer for the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress in compliance with the U.S. Constitution—is drawn as narrowly as possible and does not require Defendant Pence to take any affirmative action apart from those he is authorized to take under the Twelfth Amendment. Moreover, it is difficult to imagine how the relief requested, which expands rather than restricts Defendant’s discretion and authority, by eliminating facially unconstitutional restrictions on the same could cause any hardship to Defendant.

E. The public interest favors Plaintiffs.

The last stay criterion is the public interest. Where the parties dispute the lawfulness of government actions, the public interest collapses into the merits: “It is always in the public interest to prevent the violation of a party’s constitutional rights.” Jackson Women’s Health Org. v. Currier, 760 F.3d 448, 458 n.9 (5th Cir. 2014) (alterations omitted); cf. Tex. Democratic Party v.

Benkiser, 459 F.3d 582, 595 (5th Cir. 2006) (“injunction serves the public interest in that it enforces the correct and constitutional application of Texas’s duly-enacted election laws”) League of Women Voters of the United States v. Newby, 838 F.3d 1, 12 (D.C. Cir. 2016) (“no public interest in the perpetuation of unlawful [government] action”); accord ACLU v. Ashcroft, 322 F.3d 240, 247 (3d Cir. 2003) (“the public interest [is] not served by the enforcement of an unconstitutional law”) (interior quotation omitted); Washington v. Reno, 35 F.3d 1093, 1103 (6th Cir. 1994) (recognizing “greater public interest in having governmental agencies abide by the federal laws”); Pac. Frontier v. Pleasant Grove City, 414 F.3d 1221, 1237 (10th Cir. 2005).

Here the declaratory and injunctive relief sought vindicates both Defendant Vice President’s plenary authority as President of the Senate and Presiding Officer to count electoral votes, as well as the constitutional rights of the Plaintiffs to have their electoral votes counted in the manner that the Constitution provides, the rights of the Arizona legislative Plaintiffs under the Electors Clause to appoint Presidential Electors for the State of Arizona, and the right of Rep Gohmert and those he represents to have their vote counted in the manner that the Twelfth Amendment provides.

CONCLUSION

Therefore, it is respectfully requested that the Court grant Plaintiffs’ Motion and the Court grant a declaratory judgment declaring 3 U.S.C. §5 - §15 unconstitutional on its face for violating the specific delegated authorities of the Twelfth Amendment of the Constitution.

Dated: December 28, 2020

Respectfully submitted,

Howard Kleinhendler
Howard Kleinhendler Esquire
NY Bar No. 2657120
369 Lexington Ave., 12th Floor
New York, New York 10017
Tel: (917) 793-1188
Fax: (732) 901-0832
Email: howard@kleinhendler.com

---

William Lewis Sessions
Texas Bar No. 18041500
Sessions & Associates, PLLC
14591 North Dallas Parkway, Suite 400
Dallas, TX 75254
Tel: (214) 217-8855
Fax: (214) 723-5346 (fax)
Email: lsessions@sessionslaw.net

Lawrence J. Joseph
DC Bar No. 464777
Law Office of Lawrence J. Joseph
1250 Connecticut Ave, NW, Suite 700-1A
Washington, DC 20036
Tel: (202) 355-9452
Fax: 202) 318-2254
Email: ljoseph@larryjoseph.com

Julia Z. Haller
DC Bar No. 466921
Brandon Johnson
DC Bar No. 491370
Defending the Republic
601 Pennsylvania Ave., NW
Suite 900
South Building
Washington, DC 20004
Tel: (561) 888-3166
Fax:
Email: hallerjulia@outlook.com
Email: brandoncjohnson6@aol.com

Counsel for Plaintiffs

CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE

I hereby certify that on the date specified below, I electronically filed the foregoing motion (together with its accompanying proposed order) with the Clerk of the Court using the CM/ECF system. In addition, because counsel for the defendant has not yet filed an appearance, I served one true and correct copy via Federal Express, next-day delivery, on the defendant and on the United States Attorney for the Eastern District of Texas at the following addresses, with a courtesy copy via facsimile and/or email to the addresses specified:

Gregory F. Jacob
Counsel to the Vice President
Office of the Vice President
Eisenhower Executive Office Building
Washington, DC 20501
Tel. (202) 456-3228
Email: gregory.f.jacob@ovp.eop.gov

Stephen J. Cox
United States Attorney
350 Magnolia Ave., Suite 150
Beaumont, Texas 77701
Tel. (409) 839-2538
Fax: (409) 839-2550
Email: stephen.j.cox@usdoj.gov

Dated: December 28, 2020

---

William Lewis Sessions,
Texas Bar No. 18041500
Sessions & Associates, PLLC
14591 North Dallas Parkway, Suite 400
Dallas, TX 75254
Tel: (214) 217-8855
Fax: (214) 723-5346
Email: lsessions@sessionslaw.net

Counsel for Plaintiffs

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF TEXAS
TYLER DIVISION

LOUIE GOHMERT, TYLER BOWYER, NANCY
COTTLE, JAKE HOFFMAN, ANTHONY KERN,
JAMES R. LAMON, SAM MOORHEAD, ROBERT
MONTGOMERY, LORAIN PELLEGRINO, GREG
SAFSTEN, KELLI WARD and MICHAEL WARD,

Plaintiffs,

v.

THE HONORABLE MICHAEL R. PENCE, VICE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, in his
official capacity,

Defendant.

Civil Action No. 6:20-cv-00660

(Election Matter)

[PROPOSED] ORDER GRANTING EMERGENCY INJUNCTIVE RELIEF

The Court has before it Plaintiffs' Emergency Motion for Expedited Declaratory Judgment and Emergency Motion for Injunctive Relief filed December 28, 2020 ("Motion") and the Plaintiffs' December 27, 2020 Complaint for Expedited Declaratory Judgment and Emergency Injunctive Relief ("Complaint") seeking:

1. A declaratory judgment finding that:
  - a. Sections 5 and 15 of the Electoral Count Act, 3 U.S.C. §§ 5 and 15, are unconstitutional insofar as they conflict with and violate the Electors Clause and the Twelfth Amendment, U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1, cl. 1 & amend. XII;
  - b. That Defendant Vice-President Michael R. Pence, in his capacity as President of Senate and Presiding Officer of the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress under the Twelfth Amendment, is subject solely to the requirements of the Twelfth Amendment and may exercise the exclusive authority and sole discretion in determining which electoral votes to count for a given State, and must ignore and may not rely on any provisions of the Electoral Count Act that would limit his exclusive authority and at his sole discretion to determine which of two or more competing slates of electors' votes are to be counted for President;

- c. That, with respect to competing slates of electors the State of Arizona or other Contested States, the Twelfth Amendment contains the exclusive dispute resolution mechanisms, namely, that (i) Vice-President Pence determines which slate of electors' votes shall be counted, or neither, for that State and (ii) if no person has a majority, then the House of Representatives (and only the House of Representatives) shall chose the President where "the votes [in the House of Representatives] shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote," U.S. CONST. amend. XII;
- d. That, also with respect to competing slates of electors, the alternative dispute resolution procedure or priority rule in 3 U.S.C. § 15, is null and void insofar as it nullifies and replaces the Twelfth Amendment rules above by with an entirely different procedure in which the House and Senate each separately "decide" which slate is to be counted, and in the event of a disagreement, then only "the votes of the electors whose appointment shall have been certified by the executive of the State ... shall be counted," 3 U.S.C. § 15; and

2. An order granting any other declaratory or injunctive relief necessary to support or effectuate the foregoing declaratory judgments.

The Court has reviewed the terms and conditions of the December 28, 2020 Motion and Complaint, and the Court's Declaratory Judgment issued December 31, 2020, granting the requested expedited declaratory judgments in Paragraphs 1(a)-1(d) above and for good cause shown IT IS HEREBY ORDERED THAT:

1. Defendant Vice President Michael R. Pence shall, in his capacity as President of the Senate and as Presiding Officer for the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress ("Joint Session"), solely follow the terms of the Twelfth Amendment in counting the electoral votes at the Joint Session and any other proceedings addressing the counting of electoral votes for choosing the next President in connection with the 2020 General Election;
2. Defendant Vice President Pence shall not follow the provisions of Sections 5 or 15 of the Electoral Count Act that this Court has found to be unconstitutional and in conflict with the Twelfth Amendment, and in particular, Defendant Vice President Pence
  - a. Shall not "call for objections" from Senators or House Members following the reading of any certificate or paper from electors for a given State, and instead shall exercise his exclusive authority and sole discretion under the Twelfth Amendment to "count" the electoral votes for a given state, including the decision as to which of the competing slates of electors' electoral votes to count, or not to count, for that State;

- b. Shall not give any preference or priority in counting electors certified by the State's executive over any other slate of electors, and shall instead give effect to the provisions of the Electors Clause for electors appointed by the State Legislature in whatever manner indicated by that State's legislatures;
- c. Shall not submit any disputes between competing slates of electors to be resolved under the procedures set forth in Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act, nor as Presiding Officer shall he permit any such objections or disputes to interrupt the counting of electoral votes at the Joint Session or delegate his exclusive authority under the Twelfth Amendment to Congress to determine which electoral votes are to be counted; and
- d. If and only if neither President Trump nor former Vice President Biden fails to receive a majority of electoral votes at the Joint Session, is he relieved of his exclusive authority to count electoral votes for choosing the President, at which point he shall direct the House of Representatives to "choose immediately by ballot" the President where "the votes shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote," as required under the Twelfth Amendment.

SO ORDERED.

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF TEXAS
TYLER DIVISION

LOUIE GOHMERT, TYLER BOWYER, NANCY
COTTLE, JAKE HOFFMAN, ANTHONY KERN,
JAMES R. LAMON, SAM MOORHEAD,
ROBERT MONTGOMERY, LORAINÉ
PELLEGRINO, GREG SAFSTEN, KELLI WARD
and MICHAEL WARD,

Plaintiffs,

v.

THE HONORABLE MICHAEL R. PENCE, VICE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, in his official capacity.

Defendant.

Case No.

COMPLAINT FOR EXPEDITED
DECLARATORY AND
EMERGENCY INJUNCTIVE RELIEF

(Election Matter)

NATURE OF THE ACTION

1. This civil action seeks an expedited declaratory judgment finding that the elector dispute resolution provisions in Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act, 3 U.S.C. §§ 5 and 15, are unconstitutional because these provisions violate the Electors Clause and the Twelfth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1, cl. 1 & Amend. XII. Plaintiffs also request emergency injunctive relief required to effectuate the requested declaratory judgment.

2. These provisions of Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act are unconstitutional insofar as they establish procedures for determining which of two or more competing slates of Presidential Electors for a given State are to be counted in the Electoral College, or how objections to a proffered slate are adjudicated, that violate the Twelfth Amendment. This violation occurs because the Electoral Count Act directs the Defendant, Vice President Michael R. Pence, in his capacity as President of the Senate and Presiding Officer over the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress: (1) to count the electoral votes for a State that have been appointed in violation of the Electors Clause; (2) limits or eliminates his exclusive authority and sole discretion under the Twelfth Amendment to determine which slates of electors for a State, or neither, may be counted; and (3) replaces the Twelfth Amendment's dispute resolution procedure – under which the House of Representatives has sole authority to choose the President.

3. Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act unconstitutionally violates the Electors Clause by usurping the exclusive and plenary authority of State Legislatures to determine the manner of appointing Presidential Electors, and instead gives that authority to the State's Executive. Similarly, 3 USC § 5 makes clear that the Presidential electors of a state and their appointment by the State Executive shall be conclusive.

4. This is not an abstract or hypothetical question, but a live “case or controversy” under Article III that is ripe for a declaratory judgment arising from the events of December 14, 2020, where the State of Arizona (and several others) have appointed two competing slates of electors.

5. Plaintiffs include the United States Representative for Texas' First Congressional District and the entire slate of Republican Presidential Electors for the State of Arizona. The Arizona Electors have cast Arizona's electoral votes for President Donald J. Trump on December 14, 2020, at the Arizona State Capitol with the permission and endorsement of the Arizona Legislature, i.e., at the time, place, and manner required under Arizona state law and the Electoral Count Act. At the same time, Arizona's Governor and Secretary of State appointed a separate and competing slate of electors who cast Arizona's electoral votes for former Vice-President Joseph R. Biden, despite the evidence of massive multi-state electoral fraud committed on Biden's behalf that changed electoral results in Arizona and in other states such as Georgia, Michigan,

Pennsylvania and Wisconsin that have also put forward competing slates of electors (collectively, the “Contested States”). Collectively, these Contested States have enough electoral votes in controversy to determine the outcome of the 2020 General Election.

6. On January 6, 2021, when Congress convenes to count the electoral votes for President and Vice-President, Plaintiff Representative Gohmert will object to the counting of the Arizona slate of electors voting for Biden and to the Biden slates from the remaining Contested States. Rep. Gohmert is entitled to have his objection determined under the Twelve Amendment, and not through the unconstitutional impositions of a prior Congress by 3 U.S.C. §§ 5 and 15.

7. Senators have also stated that they may object to the Biden slate of electors from the Contested States.<sup>1</sup>

8. This Complaint addresses a matter of urgent national concern that involves only issues of law – namely, a determination that Sections 5 and 15 of the Electoral Count Act violate the Electors Clause and/or the Twelfth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. The relevant facts are not in dispute concerning the existence of a live case or controversy between Plaintiffs and Defendant, ripeness, standing, and other matters related to the justiciability of Plaintiffs’ claims.<sup>2</sup>

---

<sup>1</sup> See <https://www.forbes.com/sites/jackbrewster/2020/12/17/here-are-the-gop-senators-who-have-hinted-at-defying-mcconnell-by-challenging-election/?sh=506395c34ce3>.

<sup>2</sup> The facts relevant to the justiciability of Plaintiffs’ claims are laid out below and demonstrate the certainty or near certainty that the unconstitutional provisions in Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act will be invoked at the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress to choose the next President, namely: (1) there are competing slates of electors for Arizona and the other Contested States that have been or will be submitted to the Electoral College; (2) the Contested States collectively have sufficient (contested) electoral votes to determine the winner of the 2020 General Election – President Trump or former Vice President Biden; (3) legislators in Arizona and other Contested States have contested the certification of their State’s electoral votes by State executives, due to substantial evidence of election fraud that is the subject of ongoing litigation and investigations; and (4) Senators and Members of the House of Representatives have expressed their intent to challenge the electors and electoral votes certified by State executives in the Contested States.

9. Because the requested declaratory judgment will terminate the controversy arising from the conflict between the Twelfth Amendment and the Electoral Count Act, and the facts are not in dispute, it is appropriate for this Court to grant this relief in a summary proceeding without an evidentiary hearing or discovery. See Notes of Advisory Committee on Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Fed. R. Civ. P. 57.

10. Accordingly, Plaintiffs have concurrently submitted a motion for a speedy summary proceeding under Rule 57 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure (“FRCP”) to grant the relief requested herein as soon as possible, and for emergency injunctive relief under Rule 65 thereof consistent with the declaratory judgment requested herein on that same date.

11. Accordingly, Plaintiffs respectfully request this Court to issue a declaratory judgment finding that:

- A. Sections 5 and 15 of the Electoral Count Act, 3 U.S.C. §§ 5 and 15, are unconstitutional because they violate the Twelfth Amendment, U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1, cl. 1 & amend. XII on the face of it; and further violate the Electors Clause;
- B. That Vice-President Pence, in his capacity as President of Senate and Presiding Officer of the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress under the Twelfth Amendment, is subject solely to the requirements of the Twelfth Amendment and may exercise the exclusive authority and sole discretion in determining which electoral votes to count for a given State, and must ignore and may not rely on any provisions of the Electoral Count Act that would limit his exclusive authority and his sole discretion to determine the count, which could include votes from the slates of Republican electors from the Contested States;

- C. That, with respect to competing slates of electors from the State of Arizona or other Contested States, the Twelfth Amendment contains the exclusive dispute resolution mechanisms, namely, that (i) Vice-President Pence determines which slate of electors' votes count, or neither, for that State; (ii) how objections from members of Congress to any proffered slate of electors is adjudicated; and (iii) if no candidate has a majority of 270 elector votes, then the House of Representatives (and only the House of Representatives) shall choose the President where "the votes [in the House of Representatives] shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote," U.S. CONST. amend. XII;
- D. That with respect to the counting of competing slates of electors, the alternative dispute resolution procedure or priority rule in 3 U.S.C. § 15, together with its incorporation of 3 U.S.C. § 5, shall have no force or effect because it nullifies and replaces the Twelfth Amendment rules above with an entirely different procedure; and
- E. Issue any other declaratory judgments or findings or injunctive relief necessary to support or effectuate the foregoing declaratory judgments.

JURISDICTION AND VENUE

12. This Court has subject matter jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1331 which provides, "The district courts shall have original jurisdiction of all civil actions arising under the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States."

13. This Court also has subject matter jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1343 because this action involves a federal election for President of the United States. "A significant departure from the legislative scheme for appointing Presidential electors presents a federal constitutional question.” Bush v. Gore, 531 U.S. 98, 113 (2000) (Rehnquist, C.J., concurring); Smiley v. Holm, 285 U.S. 355, 365 (1932).

14. The jurisdiction of the Court to grant declaratory relief is conferred by 28 U.S.C. §§ 2201 and 2202 and by Rule 57, Fed. R. Civ. P., and emergency injunctive relief by Rule 65, Fed. R. Civ. P.

15. Venue is proper because Plaintiff Gohmert resides in Tyler, Texas, he maintains his primary congressional office in Tyler, and no real property is involved in the action. 28 U.S.C. § 1391(e)(1).

THE PARTIES

16. Plaintiff Louie Gohmert is a duly elected member of the United States House of Representatives for the First Congressional District of Texas. On November 3, 2020 he won re-election of this Congressional seat and plans to attend the January 6, 2021 session of Congress. He resides in the city of Tyler, in Smith County, Texas.

17. Each of the following Plaintiffs is a resident of Arizona, a registered Arizona voter and a Republican Party Presidential Elector on behalf of the State of Arizona, who voted their competing slate for President and Vice President on December 14, 2020: a) Tyler Bowyer, a resident of Maricopa County and a Republican National Committeeman; b) Nancy Cottle, a resident of Maricopa County and Second Vice-Chairman of the Maricopa County Republican Committee; c) Jake Hoffman, a resident of Maricopa County and member-elect of the Arizona House of Representatives; d) Anthony Kern, a resident of Maricopa County and an outgoing member of the Arizona House of Representatives; e) James R. Lamon, a resident of Maricopa County; f) Samuel Moorhead, a resident of Gila County; g) Robert Montgomery, a resident of Cochise County and Republican Party Chairman for Cochise County; h) Loraine Pellegrino, a resident of Maricopa County; i) Greg Safsten, a resident of Maricopa County and Executive Director of the Republican Party of Arizona; j) Kelli Ward, a resident of Mohave County and Chair of the Arizona Republican Party; and k) Michael Ward, a resident of Mohave County.

18. The above eleven plaintiffs constitute the full slate of the Arizona Republican party's nominees for presidential electors (the "Arizona Electors").

19. The Defendant is Vice President Michael R. Pence named in his official capacity as the Vice President of the United States. The declaratory and injunctive relief requested herein applies to his duties as President of the Senate and Presiding Officer at the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress carried out pursuant to the Electoral Count Act and the Twelfth Amendment.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

20. The Plaintiffs include a United States Representative from Texas, the entire slate of Republican Presidential Electors for the State of Arizona as well as an outgoing and incoming member of the Arizona Legislature. On December 14, 2020, pursuant to the requirements of applicable state laws and the Electoral Count Act, the Arizona Electors, with the knowledge and permission of the Republican-majority Arizona Legislature, convened at the Arizona State Capitol, and cast Arizona's electoral votes for President Donald J. Trump and Vice President Michael R. Pence.<sup>3</sup> On the same date, the Republican Presidential Electors for the States of Georgia,<sup>4</sup>

---

<sup>3</sup> See GOP Elector Nominees cast votes for Trump in Arizona, Georgia, Pennsylvania, by Dave Boyer, The Washington Times, December 14, 2020. <https://www.washingtontimes.com/news/2020/dec/14/gop-electors-cast-votes-trump-georgia-pennsylvania/>.

<sup>4</sup> See id.

Pennsylvania<sup>5</sup> and Wisconsin<sup>6</sup> met at their respective State Capitols to cast their States' electoral votes for President Trump and Vice President Pence.

21. Michigan's Republican electors attempted to vote at their State Capitol on December 14th but were denied entrance by the Michigan State Police. Instead, they met on the grounds of the State Capitol and cast their votes for President Trump and Vice President Pence vote.<sup>7</sup>

22. On December 14, 2020, in Arizona and the other States listed above, the Democratic Party's slate of electors convened in their respective State Capitols to cast their electoral votes for former Vice President Joseph R. Biden and Senator Kamala Harris. On the same day, Arizona Governor Doug Ducey and Arizona Secretary of State Katie Hobbs submitted the Certificate of Ascertainment with the Biden electoral votes pursuant to the National Archivist pursuant to the Electoral Count Act.<sup>8</sup>

23. Accordingly, there are now competing slates of Republican and Democratic electors in five States with Republican majorities in both houses of their State Legislatures – Arizona, Georgia, Michigan, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin (i.e., the Contested States) – that

---

<sup>5</sup> See id.

<sup>6</sup> See Wisconsin GOP Electors Meet to Cast their own Votes Too Just in Case, by Nick Viviani, WMTV, NBC15.com, December 14, 2020, <https://www.nbc15.com/2020/12/14/wisconsin-gop-electors-meet-to-cast-their-own-votes-too-just-in-case/> last visited December 14, 2020.

<sup>7</sup> See Michigan Police Block GOP Electors from Entering Capitol, by Jacob Palmieri, the Palmieri Report, December 14, 2020, <https://thepalmierireport.com/michigan-state-police-block-gop-electors-from-entering-capitol/>.

<sup>8</sup> See Democratic Electors Cast Ballots in Arizona for First Time Since 1996, by Nicole Valdes, ABC15.com, December 14, 2020, available at: <https://www.abc15.com/news/election-2020/democratic-electors-cast-ballots-in-arizona-for-first-time-since-1996>.

collectively have 73 electoral votes, which are more than sufficient to determine the winner of the 2020 General Election.<sup>9</sup>

24. The Arizona Electors, along with Republican Presidential Electors in Georgia, Michigan, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin, took this step as a result of the extraordinary events and substantial evidence of election fraud and other illegal conduct before, during and after the 2020 General Election in these States. The Arizona Legislature has conducted legislative hearings into these voting fraud allegations, and is actively investigating these matters, including issuing subpoenas of Maricopa County, Arizona (which accounts for over 60% of Arizona's population and voters) voting machines for forensic audits.<sup>10</sup>

25. On December 14, 2020, members of the Arizona Legislature passed a Joint Resolution in which they: (1) found that the 2020 General Election “was marred by irregularities so significant as to render it highly doubtful whether the certified result accurately represents the will of the voters;” (2) invoked the Arizona Legislature's authority under the Electors Clause and 5 U.S.C. § 2 to declare the 2020 General Election a failed election and to directly appoint Arizona's electors; (3) resolved that the Plaintiff Arizona Electors' “11 electoral votes be accepted for ... Donald J. Trump or to have all electoral votes nullified completely until a full forensic audit can be conducted;” and (4) further resolved “that the United States Congress is not to consider a slate

---

<sup>9</sup> Republican Presidential Electors in the States of Nevada and New Mexico, which have Democrat majority state legislature, also met on December 14, 2020, at their State Capitols to cast their votes for President Trump and Vice President Pence.

<sup>10</sup> Maricopa County election officials have refused to comply with these subpoenas or to turn over voting machines or voting records and have sued to quash the subpoena. Plaintiff Arizona Electors have moved to intervene in this Arizona state proceeding. See generally Maricopa Cty. v. Fann, Case No. CV2020-016840 (Az. Sup. Ct. Dec. 18, 2020).

of electors from the State of Arizona until the Legislature deems the election to be final and all irregularities resolved.”<sup>11</sup>

26. Public reports have also highlighted wide-spread election fraud in the other Contested States that prompted competing Electors’ slates.<sup>12</sup>

27. Republican Senators and Republican Members of the House of Representatives have also expressed their intent to oppose the certified slates of electors from the Contested States due to the substantial evidence of election fraud in the 2020 General Election. Multiple Senators and House Members have stated that they will object to the Biden electors at the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress.<sup>13</sup> Plaintiff Gohmert will object to the counting of the Arizona electors voting for Biden, as well as to the Biden electors from the remaining Contested States.

28. Based on the foregoing facts, Defendant Vice President Pence, in his capacity as President of the Senate and Presiding Officer at the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress to select the next President, will be presented with the following circumstances: (1) competing slates of electors from the State of Arizona and the other Contested States (namely, Georgia, Michigan, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin) (2) that represent sufficient electoral votes (a) if counted, to determine the winner of the 2020 General Election, or (b) if not counted, to deny either President Trump or former Vice President Biden sufficient votes to win outright; and (3) objections from at

---

<sup>11</sup> See Ex. A, “A Joint Resolution of the 54th Legislature, State of Arizona, To The 116th Congress, Office of the President of the Senate Presiding,” December 14, 2020 (“December 14, 2020 Joint Resolution”).

<sup>12</sup> See The Immaculate Deception, Six Key Dimensions of Election Irregularities, The Navarro Report, <https://bannonswarroom.com/wp-content/uploads/2020/12/The-Immaculate-Deception-12.15.20-1.pdf>

<sup>13</sup> See, e.g., Dueling Electors and the Upcoming Joint Session of Congress, by Zachary Steiber, Epoch Times, Dec. 17, 2020, available at: https://www.theepochtimes.com/explainer-dueling-electors-and-the-upcoming-joint-session-of-congress\_3622992.html.

least one Senator and at least one Member of the House of Representatives to the counting of electoral votes from one or more of the Contested States.

29. The choice between the Twelfth Amendment and 3 U.S.C. § 15 raises important procedural differences. In the incoming 117th Congress, the Republican Party has a majority in 27 of the House delegations that would vote under the Twelfth Amendment. The Democrat Party has a majority in 20 of those House delegations, and the two parties are evenly divided in three of those delegations. By contrast, under 3 U.S.C. § 15, Democrats have a ten- or eleven-seat majority in the House, depending on the final outcome of the election in New York's 22nd District.

30. Accordingly, it is the foregoing conflict between the Twelfth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution and Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act that establish the urgency for this Court to issue a declaratory judgment that Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act is unconstitutional.

RELEVANT CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS

31. Presidential Electors Clause. The U.S. Constitution grants State Legislatures the exclusive authority to appoint Presidential Electors:

Each State shall appoint, in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors, equal to the whole Number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress: but no Senator or Representative, or Person holding an Office of Trust or Profit under the United States, shall be appointed an Elector. U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1 ("Electors Clause").

32. The Supreme Court has affirmed that the “power and jurisdiction of the state [legislature]” to select electors “is exclusive,” McPherson v. Blacker, 146 U.S. 1, 11 (1892); this power “cannot be taken from them or modified” by statute or even the state constitution,” and “there is no doubt of the right of the legislature to resume the power at any time.” Id. at 10 (citations omitted). In Bush v. Gore, 531 U.S. 98 (2000), the Supreme Court reaffirmed McPherson's holding that “the state legislature’s power to select the manner for appointing electors is plenary,” Bush, 531 U.S. at 104 (citing McPherson, 146 U.S. at 35), noting that the state legislature “may, if it so chooses, select the electors itself,” and that even after deciding to select electors through a statewide election, “can take back the power to appoint electors.” Id. (citation omitted).

33. The Twelfth Amendment. The Twelfth Amendment sets forth the procedures for counting electoral votes and for resolving disputes over whether and which electoral votes may be counted for a State. The first section describes the meeting of the Electoral College and the procedures up to the casting of the electoral votes by the Presidential Electors in their respective states, which occurred on December 14, 2020, with respect to the 2020 General Election:

The electors shall meet in their respective states and vote by ballot for President and Vice-President, one of whom, at least, shall not be an inhabitant of the same state with themselves; they shall name in their ballots the person voted for as President, and in distinct ballots the person voted for as Vice-President, and they shall make distinct lists of all persons voted for as President, and of all persons voted for as Vice-President, and of the number of votes for each, which lists they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the seat of the government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate.

U.S. CONST. amend. XII.

34. The second section describes how Defendant Vice President Pence, in his role as President of the Senate and Presiding Officer for the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress, shall “count” the electoral votes.

The President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and the votes shall then be counted[.]

U.S. CONST. amend. XII.

35. Under the Twelfth Amendment, Defendant Pence alone has the exclusive authority and sole discretion to open and permit the counting of the electoral votes for a given state, and where there are competing slates of electors, or where there is objection to any single slate of electors, to determine which electors’ votes, or whether none, shall be counted. Notably, neither the Twelfth Amendment nor the Electoral Count Act, provides any mechanism for judicial review of the Presiding Officer's determinations.<sup>14</sup> Instead, the Twelfth Amendment and the Electoral Count Act adopt different procedures for the President of the Senate (Twelfth Amendment) or both Houses of Congress (Electoral Count Act) to resolve any such disputes and the authority for the final determinations, in the event of disagreement, to different parties; namely, the Electoral Count Act gives it to the Executive of the State; while the Twelfth Amendment vests sole authority with the Vice President.

36. The third section of the Twelfth Amendment sets forth the procedures for selecting the President (solely) by the House of Representatives, in the event that no candidate has received a majority of electoral votes counted by the President of the Senate.

The person having the greatest number of votes for President, shall be the President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of electors appointed; and if no person have such majority, then from the persons having the highest numbers not exceeding three on the list of those voted for as President, the House of Representatives shall choose immediately, by ballot, the President. But in choosing the President, the votes shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote; a quorum for this purpose shall consist of a member or members from two-thirds of the states, and a majority of all the states shall be necessary to a choice. And if the House of Representatives shall not choose a President whenever the right of choice shall devolve upon them, before the fourth day of March next following, then the Vice-President shall act as President, as in the case of the death or other constitutional disability of the President.

U.S. CONST. amend. XII (emphasis added).

---

<sup>14</sup> See, e.g., Nathan L. Colvin & Edward B. Foley, The Twelfth Amendment: A Constitutional Ticking Time Bomb, U. of Miami L. Rev. 64:475, 526 (2010) (discussing reviews of the Electoral Count Act's ("ECA") legislative history and concluding that, "[o]ne of the more thorough reviews of the legislative history of the ECA reveals that Congress considered giving the Court some role in the process but rejected the idea every time, and it was clear that Congress did not think the Court had a constitutional role nor did it believe that the Court should have any jurisdiction at all." Plaintiffs agree that resolution of disputes before Congress, arising on January 6, 2021, over competing slates of electors, or objections to any slate of electors, are matters outside the purview of federal courts; but the federal courts must determine whether the ECA is unconstitutional. This position is fully consistent with the declaratory judgment requested herein.

37. There are four key features of this Twelfth Amendment procedure that should be noted when comparing it with the Electoral Count Act's procedures: (1) the President is to be chosen solely by the House of Representatives, with no role for the Senate; (2) votes are taken by State (with one vote per State), rather than by individual House members; (3) the President is deemed the candidate that receives the majority of States' votes, rather than a majority of individual House members' votes; and (4) there are no other restrictions on this majority rule provision; in particular, no "tie breaker" or priority rules based on the manner or State authority that originally appointed the electors on December 14, 2020 as is the case under the Electoral Count Act (which gives priority to electors' certified by the State's executive).

38. The Electoral Count Act. The Electoral Count Act of 1887, as subsequently amended, includes a number of provisions that are in direct conflict with the text of the Electors Clause and the Twelfth Amendment.

39. Sections 5 and 15 of the Electoral Count Act adopt an entirely different set of procedures for the counting of electoral votes, for addressing situations where one candidate does not receive a majority, and for resolving disputes. Sections 16 to 18 of the Electoral Count Act provide additional procedural rules governing the Joint Session of Congress (to be held January 6, 2021 for the 2020 General Election).

40. The first part of Section 15 is consistent with the Twelfth Amendment insofar as it provides that "the President of the Senate shall be their presiding officer" and that "all the certificates and papers purporting to be certificates of the electoral votes" are to be "opened by the President of the Senate." 3 U.S.C. § 15. However, Section 15 diverges from the Twelfth Amendment by adopting procedures for the President of the Senate to "call for objections," and if there are objections made in writing by one Senator and one Member of the House of Representatives, then this shall trigger a dispute-resolution procedure found nowhere in the Twelfth Amendment.

41. The Section 15's dispute resolution procedures are lengthy and reproduced in their entirety below:

When all objections so made to any vote or paper from a State shall have been received and read, the Senate shall thereupon withdraw, and such objections shall be submitted to the Senate for its decision; and the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall, in like manner, submit such objections to the House of Representatives for its decision; and no electoral vote or votes from any State which shall have been regularly given by electors whose appointment has been lawfully certified to according to section 6 of this title [3 USCS § 6]<sup>15</sup> from which but one return has been received shall be rejected, but the two Houses concurrently may reject the vote or votes when they agree that such vote or votes have not been so regularly given by electors whose appointment has been so certified. If more than one return or paper purporting to be a return from a State shall have been received by the President of the Senate, those votes, and those only, shall be counted which shall have been regularly given by the electors who are shown by the determination mentioned in section 5 [3 USCS § 5] of this title to have been appointed, if the determination in said section provided for shall have been made, or by such successors or substitutes, in case of a vacancy in the board of electors so ascertained, as have been appointed to fill such vacancy in the mode provided by the laws of the State; but in case there shall arise the question which of two or more of such State authorities determining what electors have been appointed, as mentioned in section 5 of this title [3 USCS § 5], is the lawful tribunal of such State, the votes regularly given of those electors, and those only, of such State shall be counted whose title as electors the two Houses, acting separately, shall concurrently decide is supported by the decision of such State so authorized by its law; and in such case of more than one return or paper purporting to be a return from a State, if there shall have been no such determination of the question in the State aforesaid, then those votes, and those only, shall be counted which the two Houses shall concurrently decide were cast by lawful electors appointed in accordance with the laws of the State, unless the two Houses, acting separately, shall concurrently decide such votes not to be the lawful votes of the legally appointed electors of such

---

<sup>15</sup> 3 U.S.C. § 6 is inconsistent with the Electors Clause—which provides that electors “shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the seat of the government of the United States” the results of their vote, U.S. Const. art. II, § 1, cl. 2-3—because § 6 relies on state executives to forward the results of the electors’ vote to the Archivist for delivery to Congress. 3 U.S.C. § 6. Although the means of delivery are arguably inconsequential, the Constitution vests state executives with no role whatsoever in the process of electing a President. A state executive lends no official imprimatur to a given slate of electors under the Constitution.

State. But if the two Houses shall disagree in respect of the counting of such votes, then, and in that case, the votes of the electors whose appointment shall have been certified by the executive of the State, under the seal thereof, shall be counted. When the two Houses have voted, they shall immediately again meet, and the presiding officer shall then announce the decision of the questions submitted. No votes or papers from any other State shall be acted upon until the objections previously made to the votes or papers from any State shall have been finally disposed of.

3 U.S.C. § 15 (emphasis added).

42. First, the Electoral Count Act submits disputes over the “count” of electoral votes to both the House of Representatives and to the Senate. The Twelfth Amendment envisages no such role for both Houses of Congress. The President of the Senate, and the President of the Senate alone, shall “count” the electoral votes. This intent is borne out by a unanimous resolution attached to the final Constitution that described the procedures for electing the first President (i.e., for a time when there would not already be a Vice President), stating in relevant part “that the Senators should appoint a President of the Senate, for the sole Purpose of receiving, opening and counting the Votes for President.” 2 M. Farrand, RECORDS OF THE FEDERAL CONVENTION OF 1787, at 666 (1911). For all subsequent elections, when there would be a Vice President to act as President of the Senate, the Constitution vests the opening and counting in the Vice President.

43. Second, the Electoral Count Act gives both the House of Representatives and the Senate the power to vote, or “decide,” which of two or more competing slates of electors shall be counted, and it requires the concurrence of both to “count” the electoral votes for one of the competing slates of electors.

44. Under the Twelfth Amendment, the President of the Senate has the sole authority to count votes in the first instance, and then the House may do so only in the event that no candidate receives a majority counted by the President of the Senate. There is no role for the Senate to participate in choosing the President.

45. Third, the Electoral Count Act eliminates entirely the unique mechanism by which the House of Representatives under the Twelve Amendment is to choose the President, namely, where “the votes shall be taken by states, the representation for each state having one vote.” U.S. CONST. amend. XII. The Electoral Count Act is silent on how the House of Representatives is to “decide” which electoral votes were cast by lawful electors.

46. Fourth, the Electoral Count Act adopts a priority rule, or “tie breaker,” “if the two Houses shall disagree in respect of counting of such votes,” in which case “the votes of the electors whose appointment shall have been certified by the executive of the State ... shall be counted.” This provision not only conflicts with the President of the Senate’s exclusive authority and sole discretion under the Twelfth Amendment to decide which electoral votes to count, but also with the State Legislature’s exclusive and plenary authority under the Electors Clause to appoint the Presidential Electors for their State.

47. The Electoral Count Act is unconstitutional because it exceeds the power of Congress to enact. It is well settled that “one legislature may not bind the legislative authority of its successors,” United States v. Winstar Corp., 518 U.S. 839, 872 (1996), which is a foundational and “centuries-old concept,” id., that traces to Blackstone’s maxim that “Acts of parliament derogatory from the power of subsequent parliaments bind not.” Id. (quoting 1 WILLIAM BLACKSTONE, COMMENTARIES *90). “There is no constitutionally prescribed method by which one Congress may require a future Congress to interpret or discharge a constitutional responsibility in any particular way.” Laurence H. Tribe, Erog v. Hsub and Its Disguises: Freeing Bush v. Gore from Its Hall of Mirrors, 115 HARV. L. REV. 170, 267 n.388 (2001).

48. The Electoral Count Act also violates the Presentment Clause by purporting to create a type of bicameral order, resolution, or vote that is not presented to the President. See U.S.

CONST. art. I, § 7, cl. 3 (“Every Order, Resolution, or Vote, to Which the Concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary (except on a question of Adjournment) shall be presented to the President of the United States; and before the Same shall take Effect, shall be approved by him, or being disapproved by him, shall be repassed by two thirds of the Senate and House of Representatives, according to the Rules and Limitations prescribed in the Case of a Bill.”)

49. The House and Senate cannot resolve the issues that the Electoral Count Act asks them to resolve without either a supermajority in both houses or presentment. The Electoral Count Act similarly restricts the authority of the House of Representatives and the Senate to control their internal discretion and procedures pursuant to Article I, Section 5 which provides that “[e]ach House may determine the Rules of its Proceedings ...” U.S. CONST. art. I, § 5, cl. 2.

50. Further, the Electoral Count Act improperly delegates tie-breaking authority to State executives (who have no agency under the Electors Clause or election amendments) when a State presents competing slates that Congress cannot resolve, or when an objection is presented to a particular slate of electors.

51. The Electoral Count Act also violates the non-delegation doctrine, the separation-of-powers and anti-entrenchment doctrines. See generally Chris Land & David Schultz, On the Unenforceability of the Electoral Count Act, 13 Rutgers J.L. & Pub. Policy 340, 364-377 (2016).

JUSTICIABILITY AND JURISDICTION

52. This Court Can Grant Declaratory Judgment in a Summary Proceeding. This Court has the authority to enter a declaratory judgment and to provide injunctive relief pursuant to Rules 57 and 65 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and 28 U.S.C. §§ 2201 and 2202. The court may order a speedy hearing of a declaratory judgment action. Fed. Rules Civ. Proc. R. 57,

Advisory Committee Notes. A declaratory judgment is appropriate when it will “terminate the controversy” giving rise to the proceeding. Id. Inasmuch as it often involves only an issue of law on undisputed or relatively undisputed facts, it operates frequently as a summary proceeding, justifying docketing the case for early hearing as on a motion. Id.

53. As described above, Plaintiffs’ claims involve legal issues only – specifically, whether the Electoral Count Act violates the Twelfth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution – that do not require this court to resolve any disputed factual issues.

54. Moreover, the factual issues related to the justiciability of Plaintiffs’ claims are not in dispute. To assist this Court to grant the relief on the expedited basis requested herein, Plaintiffs address a number of likely objections to this Court’s jurisdiction and the justiciability of Plaintiffs’ claims that may be raised by Defendant.

55. Plaintiffs Have Standing. Plaintiffs have standing as including a Member of the House of Representatives, Members of the Arizona Legislature, and as Presidential Electors for the State of Arizona.

56. Prior to December 14, 2020, Plaintiff Arizona Electors had standing under the Electors Clause as candidates for the office of Presidential Elector because, under Arizona law, a vote cast for the Republican Party’s President and Vice President is cast for the Republican Presidential Electors. See ARS § 16-212. Accordingly, Plaintiff Arizona Electors, like other candidates for office, “have a cognizable interest in ensuring that the final vote tally reflects the legally valid votes cast,” as “[a]n inaccurate vote tally is a concrete and particularized injury to candidates such as the Electors.” Carson v. Simon, 978 F.3d 1051, 1057 (8th Cir. 2020) (affirming that Presidential Electors have Article III and prudential standing under Electors Clause). See also Wood v. Raffensperger, No. 20-14418, 2020 WL 7094866, *10 (11th Cir. Dec. 5, 2020) (affirming that if Plaintiff voter had been a candidate for office “he could assert a personal, distinct injury” required for standing); Trump v. Wis. Elections Comm’n, No. 20-cv-1785, 2020 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 233765 at *26 (E.D. Wis. Dec. 12, 2020) (President Trump, “as candidate for election, has a concrete particularized interest in the actual results of the election.”).

57. But for the alleged wrongful conduct of Arizona executive branch and Maricopa County officials under color of law, by certifying a fraudulently produced election result in Mr. Biden’s favor, the Plaintiff Arizona Electors would have been certified as the presidential electors for Arizona, and Arizona’s Governor and Secretary of State would have transmitted uncontested votes for Donald J. Trump and Michael R. Pence to the Electoral College. The certification and transmission of a competing slate of Biden electors has resulted in a unique injury that only Plaintiff Arizona Electors could suffer, namely, having a competing slate of electors take their place and their votes in the Electoral College.

58. The upcoming January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress provides further grounds of standing for the requested declaratory judgment that the Electoral Count Act is unconstitutional. Then, Plaintiffs are certain or nearly certain to suffer an injury-in-fact caused by Defendant Vice President Pence, acting as Presiding Officer, if Defendant ignores the Twelfth Amendment and instead follows the procedures in Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act to resolve the dispute over which slate of Arizona electors is to be counted.

59. The Twelfth Amendment gives Defendant exclusive authority and sole discretion as to which set of electors to count, or not to count any set of electors; if no candidate receives a majority of electoral votes, then the President is to be chosen by the House, where “the votes shall be taken by States, the representation from each state having one vote.” U.S. CONST. amend. XII. If Defendant Pence instead follows the procedures in Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act,

Plaintiffs' electoral votes will not be counted because (a) the Democratic majority House of Representatives will not "decide" to count the electoral votes of Plaintiff Republican electors; and (b) either the Senate will concur with the House not to count their votes, or the Senate will not concur, in which case, the electoral votes cast by Biden's electors will be counted because the Biden slate of electors was certified by Arizona's executive.

60. It is sufficient for the purposes of declaratory judgment that the injury is threatened. The declaratory and injunctive relief requested by Plaintiffs "may be made before actual completion of the injury-in-fact required for Article III standing," namely, the application of Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act, rather than the Twelfth Amendment to resolve disputes over which of two competing slates of electors to count "if the plaintiff can show an actual present harm or significant possibility of future harm to demonstrate the need for pre-enforcement review." 10 FED. PROC. L. ED. § 23.26 ("Standing to Seek Declaratory Judgment") (citations omitted).

61. Plaintiffs have demonstrated above that this injury-in-fact is to occur at the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress, and they seek the requested declaratory and injunctive relief "only in the last resort, and as a necessity in the determination of a vital controversy." Id.

62. Plaintiffs Present a Live "Case or Controversy." Plaintiffs' claims present a live "case or controversy" with the Defendant, rather than hypothetical or abstract dispute, that can be litigated and decided by this Court through the requested declaratory and injunctive relief. Here there is a clear threat of the application of an unconstitutional statute, Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act, which is sufficient to establish the requisite case or controversy. See, e.g., Navegar, Inc. v. U.S., 103 F.3d 994, 998 (D.C. Cir. 1997) ("the threat of prosecution provides the foundation of justiciability as a constitutional and prudential matter, and the Declaratory Judgments Act provides the mechanism for seeking pre-enforcement review in federal court.").

63. First, the events of December 14, 2020, gave rise to two competing slates of electors for the State of Arizona: the Plaintiff Arizona Electors, supported by Arizona State legislators (as evidenced by the December 14, 2020 Joint Resolution and the participation of Arizona legislator Plaintiffs), who cast their electoral votes for President Trump and Vice President Pence, and one certified by the Arizona state executives who cast their votes for former Vice President Biden and Senator Harris. Second, the text of the Twelfth Amendment of the Constitution expressly commits to the Defendant Vice President Pence, acting as the President of the Senate and Presiding Officer for the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress, the authority and discretion to “count” electoral votes, i.e., deciding in his sole discretion as to which one of the two, or neither, set of electoral votes shall be counted. The Electoral Count Act similarly designates Defendant as the Presiding Officer responsible for opening and counting electoral votes, but sets forth a different set of procedures, inconsistent with the Twelfth Amendment, for deciding which of two or more competing slates of electors and electoral votes, or neither, shall be counted.

64. Accordingly, a controversy presently exists due to: (1) the existence of competing slates of electors for Arizona and the other Contested States, and (2) distinct and inconsistent procedures under the Twelfth Amendment and the Electoral Count Act to determine which slate of electors and their electoral votes, or neither, shall be counted in choosing the next President. Further, this controversy must be resolved at the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress. Finally, the Constitution expressly designates Defendant Pence as the individual who decides which set of electoral votes, or neither, to count, and the requested declaratory judgment that the procedures under Electoral Count Act are unconstitutional is necessary to ensure that Defendant Pence counts electoral votes in a manner consistent with the Twelfth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution.

65. The injuries that Plaintiffs assert affect the procedure by which the status of their votes will be considered, which lowers the thresholds for immediacy and redressability under this Circuit's and the Supreme Court's precedents. Nat'l Treasury Employees Union v. U.S., 101 F.3d 1423, 1428-29 (D.C. Cir. 1996); Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 571-72 & n.7 (1992). Similarly, a plaintiff with concrete injury can invoke Constitution's structural protections of liberty. Bond v. United States, 564 U.S. 211, 222-23 (2011).

66. Plaintiffs' Claims Are Ripe for Adjudication. Plaintiffs' claims are ripe for the same reasons that they present a live "case or controversy" within the meaning of Article III. "[T]he ripeness doctrine seeks to separate matters that are premature for review because the injury is speculative and may never occur from those cases that are appropriate for federal court action." Roark v. Hardee LP v. City of Austin, 522 F.3d 533, 544 n.12 (5th Cir. 2008) (quoting ERWIN CHEMERINSEY, FEDERAL JURISDICTION § 2.4.18 (5th Ed. 2007)). As explained above, the facts underlying the justiciability of Plaintiffs' claims are not in dispute. Further, it is certain or nearly certain that Plaintiffs will suffer an injury-in-fact at the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress, if Defendant Pence disregards the exclusive authority and sole discretion granted to him under the Twelfth Amendment to "count" electoral votes, and instead follows the conflicting and unconstitutional procedures in Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act, pursuant to which Plaintiffs' electoral votes will be disregarded in favor of the competing electors for the State of Arizona.

67. Plaintiffs' Claims Are Not Moot. Plaintiffs seek prospective declaratory judgment that portions of the Electoral Count Act are unconstitutional and injunctive relief prohibiting Defendant from following the procedures in Section 15 thereof that authorize the House and Senate jointly to resolve disputes regarding competing slates of electors. This prospective relief would apply to Defendants' future actions at the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress. The requested relief thus is not moot because it is prospective and because it addresses an unconstitutional “ongoing policy” embodied in the Electoral Count Act that is likely to be repeated and will evade review if the requested relief is not granted. Del Monte Fresh Produce v. U.S., 570 F.3d 316, 321-22 (D.C. Cir. 2009).

COUNT I

DEFENDANT WILL NECESSARILY VIOLATE THE TWELFTH AMENDMENT AND THE ELECTORS CLAUSE OF THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION IF HE FOLLOWS THE ELECTORAL COUNT ACT.

68. Plaintiffs reallege all preceding paragraphs as if fully set forth herein.

69. The Electors Clause states that “[e]ach State shall appoint, in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a Number of Electors” for President and Vice President. U.S. Const. art. II, §1, cl. 2 (emphasis added).

70. The Twelfth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution gives Defendant Vice President, as President of the Senate and the Presiding Officer of January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress, the exclusive authority and sole discretion to “count” the electoral votes for President, as well as the authority to determine which of two or more competing slates of electors for a State, or neither, may be counted, or how objections to any single slate of electors is resolved. In the event no candidate receives a majority of the electoral votes, then the House of Representatives shall have sole authority to choose the President where “the votes shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote.” U.S. CONST. amend. XII.

71. Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act replaces the procedures set forth in the Twelfth Amendment with a different and inconsistent set of decision making and dispute resolution procedures. As detailed above, these provisions of Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act are unconstitutional insofar as they require Defendant: (1) to count the electoral votes for a

State that have been appointed in violation of the Electors Clause; (2) limits or eliminates his exclusive authority and sole discretion under the Twelfth Amendment to determine which slates of electors for a State, or neither, may be counted; and (3) replaces the Twelfth Amendment's dispute resolution procedure which provides for the House of Representatives to choose the President under a procedure where "the votes shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote" – with an entirely different procedure in which the House and Senate each separately "decide" which slate is to be counted, and in the event of a disagreement, then only "the votes of the electors whose appointment shall have been certified by the executive of the State ... shall be counted." 3 U.S.C. § 15.

72. Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act also violates the Electors Clause by usurping the exclusive and plenary authority of State Legislatures to determine the manner of appointing Presidential Electors and gives that authority instead to the State's Executive.

PRAYER FOR RELIEF

73. Accordingly, Plaintiffs respectfully request that this Court issue a judgment that:
- A. Declares that Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act, 3 U.S.C. §§5 and 15, is unconstitutional because it violates the Twelfth Amendment on its face, Amend. XII, Constitution;
  - B. Declares that Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act, 3 U.S.C. §§5 and 15, is unconstitutional because it violates the Electors Clause. U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1, cl. 1;
  - C. Declares that Vice-President Pence, in his capacity as President of Senate and Presiding Officer of the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress, is subject solely to the requirements of the Twelfth Amendment and may exercise the exclusive authority and sole discretion in determining which electoral votes to count for a given State;

- D. Enjoins reliance on any provisions of the Electoral Count Act that would limit Defendant's exclusive authority and his sole discretion to determine which of two or more competing slates of electors' votes are to be counted for President;
- E. Declares that, with respect to competing slates of electors from the State of Arizona or other Contested States, or with respect to objection to any single slate of electors, the Twelfth Amendment contains the exclusive dispute resolution mechanisms, namely, that (i) Vice-President Pence determines which slate of electors' votes shall be counted, or if none be counted, for that State and (ii) if no person has a majority, then the House of Representatives (and only the House of Representatives) shall choose the President where "the votes [in the House of Representatives] shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote," U.S. CONST. amend. XII;
- F. Declares that, also with respect to competing slates of electors, the alternative dispute resolution procedure or priority rule in 3 U.S.C. § 15, is null and void insofar as it contradicts and replaces the Twelfth Amendment rules above by with an entirely different procedure in which the House and Senate each separately "decide" which slate is to be counted, and in the event of a disagreement, then only "the votes of the electors whose appointment shall have been certified by the executive of the State ... shall be counted," 3 U.S.C. § 15;

G. Enjoins the Defendant from executing his duties on January 6th during the Joint Session of Congress in any manner that is insistent with the declaratory relief set forth herein, and

H. Issue any other declaratory judgments or findings or injunctions necessary to support or effectuate the foregoing declaratory judgment.

74. Plaintiffs have concurrently submitted a motion for a speedy summary proceeding under FRCP Rule 57 to grant the relief requested herein as soon as practicable, and for emergency injunctive relief under FRCP Rule 65 thereof consistent with the declaratory judgment requested herein on that same date.

Dated: December 27, 2020

Respectfully submitted,

Howard Kleinhendler
Howard Kleinhendler Esquire
NY Bar No. 2657120
369 Lexington Ave., 12th Floor
New York, New York 10017
Tel: (917) 793-1188
Fax: (732) 901-0832
Email: howard@kleinhendler.com

/s/ William Lewis Sessions
William Lewis Sessions
Texas Bar No. 18041500
Sessions & Associates, PLLC
14591 North Dallas Parkway, Suite 400
Dallas, TX 75254
Tel: (214) 217-8855
Fax: (214) 723-5346 (fax)
Email: lsessions@sessionslaw.net

Lawrence J. Joseph
DC Bar No. 464777
Law Office of Lawrence J. Joseph
1250 Connecticut Ave, NW, Suite 700-1A
Washington, DC 20036
Tel: (202) 355-9452
Fax: 202) 318-2254
Email: ljoseph@larryjoseph.com

Julia Z. Haller
DC Bar No. 466921
Brandon Johnson
DC Bar No. 491370
Defending the Republic
601 Pennsylvania Ave., NW
Suite 900
South Building
Washington, DC 20004
Tel: (561) 888-3166
Fax: 202-888-2162
Email: hallerjulia@outlook.com
Email: brandoncjohnson6@aol.com

COUNSEL FOR PLAINTIFFS
LOUIE GOHMERT, TYLER BOWYER,
NANCY COTTLE, JAKE HOFFMAN,
ANTHONY KERN, JAMES R. LAMON,
SAM MOORHEAD, ROBERT
MONTGOMERY, LORAIN
PELLEGRINO, GREG SAFSTEN, KELLI
WARD and MICHAEL WARD

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF TEXAS
TYLER DIVISION

LOUIE GOHMERT, TYLER BOWYER, NANCY
COTTLE, JAKE HOFFMAN, ANTHONY KERN,
JAMES R. LAMON, SAM MOORHEAD,
ROBERT MONTGOMERY, LORAINÉ
PELLEGRINO, GREG SAFSTEN, KELLI WARD
and MICHAEL WARD,

Plaintiffs,

v.

THE HONORABLE MICHAEL R. PENCE, VICE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, in his official capacity.

Defendant.

Case No.

COMPLAINT FOR EXPEDITED
DECLARATORY AND
EMERGENCY INJUNCTIVE RELIEF

(Election Matter)

NATURE OF THE ACTION

1. This civil action seeks an expedited declaratory judgment finding that the elector dispute resolution provisions in Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act, 3 U.S.C. §§ 5 and 15, are unconstitutional because these provisions violate the Electors Clause and the Twelfth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1, cl. 1 & Amend. XII. Plaintiffs also request emergency injunctive relief required to effectuate the requested declaratory judgment.

2. These provisions of Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act are unconstitutional insofar as they establish procedures for determining which of two or more competing slates of Presidential Electors for a given State are to be counted in the Electoral College, or how objections to a proffered slate are adjudicated, that violate the Twelfth Amendment. This violation occurs because the Electoral Count Act directs the Defendant, Vice President Michael R. Pence, in his capacity as President of the Senate and Presiding Officer over the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress: (1) to count the electoral votes for a State that have been appointed in violation of the Electors Clause; (2) limits or eliminates his exclusive authority and sole discretion under the Twelfth Amendment to determine which slates of electors for a State, or neither, may be counted; and (3) replaces the Twelfth Amendment's dispute resolution procedure – under which the House of Representatives has sole authority to choose the President.

3. Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act unconstitutionally violates the Electors Clause by usurping the exclusive and plenary authority of State Legislatures to determine the manner of appointing Presidential Electors, and instead gives that authority to the State's Executive. Similarly, 3 USC § 5 makes clear that the Presidential electors of a state and their appointment by the State Executive shall be conclusive.

4. This is not an abstract or hypothetical question, but a live “case or controversy” under Article III that is ripe for a declaratory judgment arising from the events of December 14, 2020, where the State of Arizona (and several others) have appointed two competing slates of electors.

5. Plaintiffs include the United States Representative for Texas' First Congressional District and the entire slate of Republican Presidential Electors for the State of Arizona. The Arizona Electors have cast Arizona's electoral votes for President Donald J. Trump on December 14, 2020, at the Arizona State Capitol with the permission and endorsement of the Arizona Legislature, i.e., at the time, place, and manner required under Arizona state law and the Electoral Count Act. At the same time, Arizona's Governor and Secretary of State appointed a separate and competing slate of electors who cast Arizona's electoral votes for former Vice-President Joseph R. Biden, despite the evidence of massive multi-state electoral fraud committed on Biden's behalf that changed electoral results in Arizona and in other states such as Georgia, Michigan,

Pennsylvania and Wisconsin that have also put forward competing slates of electors (collectively, the “Contested States”). Collectively, these Contested States have enough electoral votes in controversy to determine the outcome of the 2020 General Election.

6. On January 6, 2021, when Congress convenes to count the electoral votes for President and Vice-President, Plaintiff Representative Gohmert will object to the counting of the Arizona slate of electors voting for Biden and to the Biden slates from the remaining Contested States. Rep. Gohmert is entitled to have his objection determined under the Twelve Amendment, and not through the unconstitutional impositions of a prior Congress by 3 U.S.C. §§ 5 and 15.

7. Senators have also stated that they may object to the Biden slate of electors from the Contested States.<sup>1</sup>

8. This Complaint addresses a matter of urgent national concern that involves only issues of law – namely, a determination that Sections 5 and 15 of the Electoral Count Act violate the Electors Clause and/or the Twelfth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. The relevant facts are not in dispute concerning the existence of a live case or controversy between Plaintiffs and Defendant, ripeness, standing, and other matters related to the justiciability of Plaintiffs’ claims.<sup>2</sup>

---

<sup>1</sup> See <https://www.forbes.com/sites/jackbrewster/2020/12/17/here-are-the-gop-senators-who-have-hinted-at-defying-mcconnell-by-challenging-election/?sh=506395c34ce3>.

<sup>2</sup> The facts relevant to the justiciability of Plaintiffs’ claims are laid out below and demonstrate the certainty or near certainty that the unconstitutional provisions in Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act will be invoked at the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress to choose the next President, namely: (1) there are competing slates of electors for Arizona and the other Contested States that have been or will be submitted to the Electoral College; (2) the Contested States collectively have sufficient (contested) electoral votes to determine the winner of the 2020 General Election – President Trump or former Vice President Biden; (3) legislators in Arizona and other Contested States have contested the certification of their State’s electoral votes by State executives, due to substantial evidence of election fraud that is the subject of ongoing litigation and investigations; and (4) Senators and Members of the House of Representatives have expressed their intent to challenge the electors and electoral votes certified by State executives in the Contested States.

9. Because the requested declaratory judgment will terminate the controversy arising from the conflict between the Twelfth Amendment and the Electoral Count Act, and the facts are not in dispute, it is appropriate for this Court to grant this relief in a summary proceeding without an evidentiary hearing or discovery. See Notes of Advisory Committee on Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Fed. R. Civ. P. 57.

10. Accordingly, Plaintiffs have concurrently submitted a motion for a speedy summary proceeding under Rule 57 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure (“FRCP”) to grant the relief requested herein as soon as possible, and for emergency injunctive relief under Rule 65 thereof consistent with the declaratory judgment requested herein on that same date.

11. Accordingly, Plaintiffs respectfully request this Court to issue a declaratory judgment finding that:

- A. Sections 5 and 15 of the Electoral Count Act, 3 U.S.C. §§ 5 and 15, are unconstitutional because they violate the Twelfth Amendment, U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1, cl. 1 & amend. XII on the face of it; and further violate the Electors Clause;
- B. That Vice-President Pence, in his capacity as President of Senate and Presiding Officer of the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress under the Twelfth Amendment, is subject solely to the requirements of the Twelfth Amendment and may exercise the exclusive authority and sole discretion in determining which electoral votes to count for a given State, and must ignore and may not rely on any provisions of the Electoral Count Act that would limit his exclusive authority and his sole discretion to determine the count, which could include votes from the slates of Republican electors from the Contested States;

- C. That, with respect to competing slates of electors from the State of Arizona or other Contested States, the Twelfth Amendment contains the exclusive dispute resolution mechanisms, namely, that (i) Vice-President Pence determines which slate of electors' votes count, or neither, for that State; (ii) how objections from members of Congress to any proffered slate of electors is adjudicated; and (iii) if no candidate has a majority of 270 elector votes, then the House of Representatives (and only the House of Representatives) shall choose the President where "the votes [in the House of Representatives] shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote," U.S. CONST. amend. XII;
- D. That with respect to the counting of competing slates of electors, the alternative dispute resolution procedure or priority rule in 3 U.S.C. § 15, together with its incorporation of 3 U.S.C. § 5, shall have no force or effect because it nullifies and replaces the Twelfth Amendment rules above with an entirely different procedure; and
- E. Issue any other declaratory judgments or findings or injunctive relief necessary to support or effectuate the foregoing declaratory judgments.

JURISDICTION AND VENUE

12. This Court has subject matter jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1331 which provides, "The district courts shall have original jurisdiction of all civil actions arising under the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States."

13. This Court also has subject matter jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1343 because this action involves a federal election for President of the United States. "A significant departure from the legislative scheme for appointing Presidential electors presents a federal constitutional question.” Bush v. Gore, 531 U.S. 98, 113 (2000) (Rehnquist, C.J., concurring); Smiley v. Holm, 285 U.S. 355, 365 (1932).

14. The jurisdiction of the Court to grant declaratory relief is conferred by 28 U.S.C. §§ 2201 and 2202 and by Rule 57, Fed. R. Civ. P., and emergency injunctive relief by Rule 65, Fed. R. Civ. P.

15. Venue is proper because Plaintiff Gohmert resides in Tyler, Texas, he maintains his primary congressional office in Tyler, and no real property is involved in the action. 28 U.S.C. § 1391(e)(1).

THE PARTIES

16. Plaintiff Louie Gohmert is a duly elected member of the United States House of Representatives for the First Congressional District of Texas. On November 3, 2020 he won re-election of this Congressional seat and plans to attend the January 6, 2021 session of Congress. He resides in the city of Tyler, in Smith County, Texas.

17. Each of the following Plaintiffs is a resident of Arizona, a registered Arizona voter and a Republican Party Presidential Elector on behalf of the State of Arizona, who voted their competing slate for President and Vice President on December 14, 2020: a) Tyler Bowyer, a resident of Maricopa County and a Republican National Committeeman; b) Nancy Cottle, a resident of Maricopa County and Second Vice-Chairman of the Maricopa County Republican Committee; c) Jake Hoffman, a resident of Maricopa County and member-elect of the Arizona House of Representatives; d) Anthony Kern, a resident of Maricopa County and an outgoing member of the Arizona House of Representatives; e) James R. Lamon, a resident of Maricopa County; f) Samuel Moorhead, a resident of Gila County; g) Robert Montgomery, a resident of Cochise County and Republican Party Chairman for Cochise County; h) Loraine Pellegrino, a resident of Maricopa County; i) Greg Safsten, a resident of Maricopa County and Executive Director of the Republican Party of Arizona; j) Kelli Ward, a resident of Mohave County and Chair of the Arizona Republican Party; and k) Michael Ward, a resident of Mohave County.

18. The above eleven plaintiffs constitute the full slate of the Arizona Republican party's nominees for presidential electors (the "Arizona Electors").

19. The Defendant is Vice President Michael R. Pence named in his official capacity as the Vice President of the United States. The declaratory and injunctive relief requested herein applies to his duties as President of the Senate and Presiding Officer at the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress carried out pursuant to the Electoral Count Act and the Twelfth Amendment.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

20. The Plaintiffs include a United States Representative from Texas, the entire slate of Republican Presidential Electors for the State of Arizona as well as an outgoing and incoming member of the Arizona Legislature. On December 14, 2020, pursuant to the requirements of applicable state laws and the Electoral Count Act, the Arizona Electors, with the knowledge and permission of the Republican-majority Arizona Legislature, convened at the Arizona State Capitol, and cast Arizona's electoral votes for President Donald J. Trump and Vice President Michael R. Pence.<sup>3</sup> On the same date, the Republican Presidential Electors for the States of Georgia,<sup>4</sup>

---

<sup>3</sup> See GOP Elector Nominees cast votes for Trump in Arizona, Georgia, Pennsylvania, by Dave Boyer, The Washington Times, December 14, 2020. <https://www.washingtontimes.com/news/2020/dec/14/gop-electors-cast-votes-trump-georgia-pennsylvania/>.

<sup>4</sup> See id.

Pennsylvania<sup>5</sup> and Wisconsin<sup>6</sup> met at their respective State Capitols to cast their States' electoral votes for President Trump and Vice President Pence.

21. Michigan's Republican electors attempted to vote at their State Capitol on December 14th but were denied entrance by the Michigan State Police. Instead, they met on the grounds of the State Capitol and cast their votes for President Trump and Vice President Pence vote.<sup>7</sup>

22. On December 14, 2020, in Arizona and the other States listed above, the Democratic Party's slate of electors convened in their respective State Capitols to cast their electoral votes for former Vice President Joseph R. Biden and Senator Kamala Harris. On the same day, Arizona Governor Doug Ducey and Arizona Secretary of State Katie Hobbs submitted the Certificate of Ascertainment with the Biden electoral votes pursuant to the National Archivist pursuant to the Electoral Count Act.<sup>8</sup>

23. Accordingly, there are now competing slates of Republican and Democratic electors in five States with Republican majorities in both houses of their State Legislatures – Arizona, Georgia, Michigan, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin (i.e., the Contested States) – that

---

<sup>5</sup> See id.

<sup>6</sup> See Wisconsin GOP Electors Meet to Cast their own Votes Too Just in Case, by Nick Viviani, WMTV, NBC15.com, December 14, 2020, <https://www.nbc15.com/2020/12/14/wisconsin-gop-electors-meet-to-cast-their-own-votes-too-just-in-case/> last visited December 14, 2020.

<sup>7</sup> See Michigan Police Block GOP Electors from Entering Capitol, by Jacob Palmieri, the Palmieri Report, December 14, 2020, <https://thepalmierireport.com/michigan-state-police-block-gop-electors-from-entering-capitol/>.

<sup>8</sup> See Democratic Electors Cast Ballots in Arizona for First Time Since 1996, by Nicole Valdes, ABC15.com, December 14, 2020, available at: <https://www.abc15.com/news/election-2020/democratic-electors-cast-ballots-in-arizona-for-first-time-since-1996>.

collectively have 73 electoral votes, which are more than sufficient to determine the winner of the 2020 General Election.<sup>9</sup>

24. The Arizona Electors, along with Republican Presidential Electors in Georgia, Michigan, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin, took this step as a result of the extraordinary events and substantial evidence of election fraud and other illegal conduct before, during and after the 2020 General Election in these States. The Arizona Legislature has conducted legislative hearings into these voting fraud allegations, and is actively investigating these matters, including issuing subpoenas of Maricopa County, Arizona (which accounts for over 60% of Arizona's population and voters) voting machines for forensic audits.<sup>10</sup>

25. On December 14, 2020, members of the Arizona Legislature passed a Joint Resolution in which they: (1) found that the 2020 General Election “was marred by irregularities so significant as to render it highly doubtful whether the certified result accurately represents the will of the voters;” (2) invoked the Arizona Legislature's authority under the Electors Clause and 5 U.S.C. § 2 to declare the 2020 General Election a failed election and to directly appoint Arizona's electors; (3) resolved that the Plaintiff Arizona Electors' “11 electoral votes be accepted for ... Donald J. Trump or to have all electoral votes nullified completely until a full forensic audit can be conducted;” and (4) further resolved “that the United States Congress is not to consider a slate

---

<sup>9</sup> Republican Presidential Electors in the States of Nevada and New Mexico, which have Democrat majority state legislature, also met on December 14, 2020, at their State Capitols to cast their votes for President Trump and Vice President Pence.

<sup>10</sup> Maricopa County election officials have refused to comply with these subpoenas or to turn over voting machines or voting records and have sued to quash the subpoena. Plaintiff Arizona Electors have moved to intervene in this Arizona state proceeding. See generally Maricopa Cty. v. Fann, Case No. CV2020-016840 (Az. Sup. Ct. Dec. 18, 2020).

of electors from the State of Arizona until the Legislature deems the election to be final and all irregularities resolved.”<sup>11</sup>

26. Public reports have also highlighted wide-spread election fraud in the other Contested States that prompted competing Electors’ slates.<sup>12</sup>

27. Republican Senators and Republican Members of the House of Representatives have also expressed their intent to oppose the certified slates of electors from the Contested States due to the substantial evidence of election fraud in the 2020 General Election. Multiple Senators and House Members have stated that they will object to the Biden electors at the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress.<sup>13</sup> Plaintiff Gohmert will object to the counting of the Arizona electors voting for Biden, as well as to the Biden electors from the remaining Contested States.

28. Based on the foregoing facts, Defendant Vice President Pence, in his capacity as President of the Senate and Presiding Officer at the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress to select the next President, will be presented with the following circumstances: (1) competing slates of electors from the State of Arizona and the other Contested States (namely, Georgia, Michigan, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin) (2) that represent sufficient electoral votes (a) if counted, to determine the winner of the 2020 General Election, or (b) if not counted, to deny either President Trump or former Vice President Biden sufficient votes to win outright; and (3) objections from at

---

<sup>11</sup> See Ex. A, “A Joint Resolution of the 54th Legislature, State of Arizona, To The 116th Congress, Office of the President of the Senate Presiding,” December 14, 2020 (“December 14, 2020 Joint Resolution”).

<sup>12</sup> See The Immaculate Deception, Six Key Dimensions of Election Irregularities, The Navarro Report. <https://bannonswarroom.com/wp-content/uploads/2020/12/The-Immaculate-Deception-12.15.20-1.pdf>

<sup>13</sup> See, e.g., Dueling Electors and the Upcoming Joint Session of Congress, by Zachary Steiber, Epoch Times, Dec. 17, 2020, available at: https://www.theepochtimes.com/explainer-dueling-electors-and-the-upcoming-joint-session-of-congress\_3622992.html.

least one Senator and at least one Member of the House of Representatives to the counting of electoral votes from one or more of the Contested States.

29. The choice between the Twelfth Amendment and 3 U.S.C. § 15 raises important procedural differences. In the incoming 117th Congress, the Republican Party has a majority in 27 of the House delegations that would vote under the Twelfth Amendment. The Democrat Party has a majority in 20 of those House delegations, and the two parties are evenly divided in three of those delegations. By contrast, under 3 U.S.C. § 15, Democrats have a ten- or eleven-seat majority in the House, depending on the final outcome of the election in New York's 22nd District.

30. Accordingly, it is the foregoing conflict between the Twelfth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution and Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act that establish the urgency for this Court to issue a declaratory judgment that Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act is unconstitutional.

RELEVANT CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS

31. Presidential Electors Clause. The U.S. Constitution grants State Legislatures the exclusive authority to appoint Presidential Electors:

Each State shall appoint, in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors, equal to the whole Number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress: but no Senator or Representative, or Person holding an Office of Trust or Profit under the United States, shall be appointed an Elector. U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1 ("Electors Clause").

32. The Supreme Court has affirmed that the “power and jurisdiction of the state [legislature]” to select electors “is exclusive,” McPherson v. Blacker, 146 U.S. 1, 11 (1892); this power “cannot be taken from them or modified” by statute or even the state constitution,” and “there is no doubt of the right of the legislature to resume the power at any time.” Id. at 10 (citations omitted). In Bush v. Gore, 531 U.S. 98 (2000), the Supreme Court reaffirmed McPherson's holding that “the state legislature’s power to select the manner for appointing electors is plenary,” Bush, 531 U.S. at 104 (citing McPherson, 146 U.S. at 35), noting that the state legislature “may, if it so chooses, select the electors itself,” and that even after deciding to select electors through a statewide election, “can take back the power to appoint electors.” Id. (citation omitted).

33.       The Twelfth Amendment. The Twelfth Amendment sets forth the procedures for counting electoral votes and for resolving disputes over whether and which electoral votes may be counted for a State. The first section describes the meeting of the Electoral College and the procedures up to the casting of the electoral votes by the Presidential Electors in their respective states, which occurred on December 14, 2020, with respect to the 2020 General Election:

The electors shall meet in their respective states and vote by ballot for President and Vice-President, one of whom, at least, shall not be an inhabitant of the same state with themselves; they shall name in their ballots the person voted for as President, and in distinct ballots the person voted for as Vice-President, and they shall make distinct lists of all persons voted for as President, and of all persons voted for as Vice-President, and of the number of votes for each, which lists they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the seat of the government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate.

U.S. CONST. amend. XII.

34.       The second section describes how Defendant Vice President Pence, in his role as President of the Senate and Presiding Officer for the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress, shall “count” the electoral votes.

The President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and the votes shall then be counted[.]

U.S. CONST. amend. XII.

35.       Under the Twelfth Amendment, Defendant Pence alone has the exclusive authority and sole discretion to open and permit the counting of the electoral votes for a given state, and where there are competing slates of electors, or where there is objection to any single slate of electors, to determine which electors’ votes, or whether none, shall be counted. Notably, neither the Twelfth Amendment nor the Electoral Count Act, provides any mechanism for judicial review of the Presiding Officer's determinations.<sup>14</sup> Instead, the Twelfth Amendment and the Electoral Count Act adopt different procedures for the President of the Senate (Twelfth Amendment) or both Houses of Congress (Electoral Count Act) to resolve any such disputes and the authority for the final determinations, in the event of disagreement, to different parties; namely, the Electoral Count Act gives it to the Executive of the State; while the Twelfth Amendment vests sole authority with the Vice President.

36. The third section of the Twelfth Amendment sets forth the procedures for selecting the President (solely) by the House of Representatives, in the event that no candidate has received a majority of electoral votes counted by the President of the Senate.

The person having the greatest number of votes for President, shall be the President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of electors appointed; and if no person have such majority, then from the persons having the highest numbers not exceeding three on the list of those voted for as President, the House of Representatives shall choose immediately, by ballot, the President. But in choosing the President, the votes shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote; a quorum for this purpose shall consist of a member or members from two-thirds of the states, and a majority of all the states shall be necessary to a choice. And if the House of Representatives shall not choose a President whenever the right of choice shall devolve upon them, before the fourth day of March next following, then the Vice-President shall act as President, as in the case of the death or other constitutional disability of the President.

U.S. CONST. amend. XII (emphasis added).

---

<sup>14</sup> See, e.g., Nathan L. Colvin & Edward B. Foley, The Twelfth Amendment: A Constitutional Ticking Time Bomb, U. of Miami L. Rev. 64:475, 526 (2010) (discussing reviews of the Electoral Count Act's ("ECA") legislative history and concluding that, "[o]ne of the more thorough reviews of the legislative history of the ECA reveals that Congress considered giving the Court some role in the process but rejected the idea every time, and it was clear that Congress did not think the Court had a constitutional role nor did it believe that the Court should have any jurisdiction at all." Plaintiffs agree that resolution of disputes before Congress, arising on January 6, 2021, over competing slates of electors, or objections to any slate of electors, are matters outside the purview of federal courts; but the federal courts must determine whether the ECA is unconstitutional. This position is fully consistent with the declaratory judgment requested herein.

37. There are four key features of this Twelfth Amendment procedure that should be noted when comparing it with the Electoral Count Act's procedures: (1) the President is to be chosen solely by the House of Representatives, with no role for the Senate; (2) votes are taken by State (with one vote per State), rather than by individual House members; (3) the President is deemed the candidate that receives the majority of States' votes, rather than a majority of individual House members' votes; and (4) there are no other restrictions on this majority rule provision; in particular, no "tie breaker" or priority rules based on the manner or State authority that originally appointed the electors on December 14, 2020 as is the case under the Electoral Count Act (which gives priority to electors' certified by the State's executive).

38. The Electoral Count Act. The Electoral Count Act of 1887, as subsequently amended, includes a number of provisions that are in direct conflict with the text of the Electors Clause and the Twelfth Amendment.

39. Sections 5 and 15 of the Electoral Count Act adopt an entirely different set of procedures for the counting of electoral votes, for addressing situations where one candidate does not receive a majority, and for resolving disputes. Sections 16 to 18 of the Electoral Count Act provide additional procedural rules governing the Joint Session of Congress (to be held January 6, 2021 for the 2020 General Election).

40. The first part of Section 15 is consistent with the Twelfth Amendment insofar as it provides that "the President of the Senate shall be their presiding officer" and that "all the certificates and papers purporting to be certificates of the electoral votes" are to be "opened by the President of the Senate." 3 U.S.C. § 15. However, Section 15 diverges from the Twelfth Amendment by adopting procedures for the President of the Senate to "call for objections," and if there are objections made in writing by one Senator and one Member of the House of Representatives, then this shall trigger a dispute-resolution procedure found nowhere in the Twelfth Amendment.

41. The Section 15's dispute resolution procedures are lengthy and reproduced in their entirety below:

When all objections so made to any vote or paper from a State shall have been received and read, the Senate shall thereupon withdraw, and such objections shall be submitted to the Senate for its decision; and the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall, in like manner, submit such objections to the House of Representatives for its decision; and no electoral vote or votes from any State which shall have been regularly given by electors whose appointment has been lawfully certified to according to section 6 of this title [3 USCS § 6]<sup>15</sup> from which but one return has been received shall be rejected, but the two Houses concurrently may reject the vote or votes when they agree that such vote or votes have not been so regularly given by electors whose appointment has been so certified. If more than one return or paper purporting to be a return from a State shall have been received by the President of the Senate, those votes, and those only, shall be counted which shall have been regularly given by the electors who are shown by the determination mentioned in section 5 [3 USCS § 5] of this title to have been appointed, if the determination in said section provided for shall have been made, or by such successors or substitutes, in case of a vacancy in the board of electors so ascertained, as have been appointed to fill such vacancy in the mode provided by the laws of the State; but in case there shall arise the question which of two or more of such State authorities determining what electors have been appointed, as mentioned in section 5 of this title [3 USCS § 5], is the lawful tribunal of such State, the votes regularly given of those electors, and those only, of such State shall be counted whose title as electors the two Houses, acting separately, shall concurrently decide is supported by the decision of such State so authorized by its law; and in such case of more than one return or paper purporting to be a return from a State, if there shall have been no such determination of the question in the State aforesaid, then those votes, and those only, shall be counted which the two Houses shall concurrently decide were cast by lawful electors appointed in accordance with the laws of the State, unless the two Houses, acting separately, shall concurrently decide such votes not to be the lawful votes of the legally appointed electors of such

---

<sup>15</sup> 3 U.S.C. § 6 is inconsistent with the Electors Clause—which provides that electors “shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the seat of the government of the United States” the results of their vote, U.S. Const. art. II, § 1, cl. 2-3—because § 6 relies on state executives to forward the results of the electors’ vote to the Archivist for delivery to Congress. 3 U.S.C. § 6. Although the means of delivery are arguably inconsequential, the Constitution vests state executives with no role whatsoever in the process of electing a President. A state executive lends no official imprimatur to a given slate of electors under the Constitution.

State. But if the two Houses shall disagree in respect of the counting of such votes, then, and in that case, the votes of the electors whose appointment shall have been certified by the executive of the State, under the seal thereof, shall be counted. When the two Houses have voted, they shall immediately again meet, and the presiding officer shall then announce the decision of the questions submitted. No votes or papers from any other State shall be acted upon until the objections previously made to the votes or papers from any State shall have been finally disposed of.

3 U.S.C. § 15 (emphasis added).

42. First, the Electoral Count Act submits disputes over the “count” of electoral votes to both the House of Representatives and to the Senate. The Twelfth Amendment envisages no such role for both Houses of Congress. The President of the Senate, and the President of the Senate alone, shall “count” the electoral votes. This intent is borne out by a unanimous resolution attached to the final Constitution that described the procedures for electing the first President (i.e., for a time when there would not already be a Vice President), stating in relevant part “that the Senators should appoint a President of the Senate, for the sole Purpose of receiving, opening and counting the Votes for President.” 2 M. Farrand, RECORDS OF THE FEDERAL CONVENTION OF 1787, at 666 (1911). For all subsequent elections, when there would be a Vice President to act as President of the Senate, the Constitution vests the opening and counting in the Vice President.

43. Second, the Electoral Count Act gives both the House of Representatives and the Senate the power to vote, or “decide,” which of two or more competing slates of electors shall be counted, and it requires the concurrence of both to “count” the electoral votes for one of the competing slates of electors.

44. Under the Twelfth Amendment, the President of the Senate has the sole authority to count votes in the first instance, and then the House may do so only in the event that no candidate receives a majority counted by the President of the Senate. There is no role for the Senate to participate in choosing the President.

45. Third, the Electoral Count Act eliminates entirely the unique mechanism by which the House of Representatives under the Twelve Amendment is to choose the President, namely, where “the votes shall be taken by states, the representation for each state having one vote.” U.S. CONST. amend. XII. The Electoral Count Act is silent on how the House of Representatives is to “decide” which electoral votes were cast by lawful electors.

46. Fourth, the Electoral Count Act adopts a priority rule, or “tie breaker,” “if the two Houses shall disagree in respect of counting of such votes,” in which case “the votes of the electors whose appointment shall have been certified by the executive of the State ... shall be counted.” This provision not only conflicts with the President of the Senate’s exclusive authority and sole discretion under the Twelfth Amendment to decide which electoral votes to count, but also with the State Legislature’s exclusive and plenary authority under the Electors Clause to appoint the Presidential Electors for their State.

47. The Electoral Count Act is unconstitutional because it exceeds the power of Congress to enact. It is well settled that “one legislature may not bind the legislative authority of its successors,” United States v. Winstar Corp., 518 U.S. 839, 872 (1996), which is a foundational and “centuries-old concept,” id., that traces to Blackstone’s maxim that “Acts of parliament derogatory from the power of subsequent parliaments bind not.” Id. (quoting 1 WILLIAM BLACKSTONE, COMMENTARIES *90). “There is no constitutionally prescribed method by which one Congress may require a future Congress to interpret or discharge a constitutional responsibility in any particular way.” Laurence H. Tribe, Erog v. Hsub and Its Disguises: Freeing Bush v. Gore from Its Hall of Mirrors, 115 HARV. L. REV. 170, 267 n.388 (2001).

48. The Electoral Count Act also violates the Presentment Clause by purporting to create a type of bicameral order, resolution, or vote that is not presented to the President. See U.S.

CONST. art. I, § 7, cl. 3 (“Every Order, Resolution, or Vote, to Which the Concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary (except on a question of Adjournment) shall be presented to the President of the United States; and before the Same shall take Effect, shall be approved by him, or being disapproved by him, shall be repassed by two thirds of the Senate and House of Representatives, according to the Rules and Limitations prescribed in the Case of a Bill.”)

49. The House and Senate cannot resolve the issues that the Electoral Count Act asks them to resolve without either a supermajority in both houses or presentment. The Electoral Count Act similarly restricts the authority of the House of Representatives and the Senate to control their internal discretion and procedures pursuant to Article I, Section 5 which provides that “[e]ach House may determine the Rules of its Proceedings ...” U.S. CONST. art. I, § 5, cl. 2.

50. Further, the Electoral Count Act improperly delegates tie-breaking authority to State executives (who have no agency under the Electors Clause or election amendments) when a State presents competing slates that Congress cannot resolve, or when an objection is presented to a particular slate of electors.

51. The Electoral Count Act also violates the non-delegation doctrine, the separation-of-powers and anti-entrenchment doctrines. See generally Chris Land & David Schultz, On the Unenforceability of the Electoral Count Act, 13 Rutgers J.L. & Pub. Policy 340, 364-377 (2016).

JUSTICIABILITY AND JURISDICTION

52. This Court Can Grant Declaratory Judgment in a Summary Proceeding. This Court has the authority to enter a declaratory judgment and to provide injunctive relief pursuant to Rules 57 and 65 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and 28 U.S.C. §§ 2201 and 2202. The court may order a speedy hearing of a declaratory judgment action. Fed. Rules Civ. Proc. R. 57,

Advisory Committee Notes. A declaratory judgment is appropriate when it will “terminate the controversy” giving rise to the proceeding. Id. Inasmuch as it often involves only an issue of law on undisputed or relatively undisputed facts, it operates frequently as a summary proceeding, justifying docketing the case for early hearing as on a motion. Id.

53. As described above, Plaintiffs’ claims involve legal issues only – specifically, whether the Electoral Count Act violates the Twelfth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution – that do not require this court to resolve any disputed factual issues.

54. Moreover, the factual issues related to the justiciability of Plaintiffs’ claims are not in dispute. To assist this Court to grant the relief on the expedited basis requested herein, Plaintiffs address a number of likely objections to this Court’s jurisdiction and the justiciability of Plaintiffs’ claims that may be raised by Defendant.

55. Plaintiffs Have Standing. Plaintiffs have standing as including a Member of the House of Representatives, Members of the Arizona Legislature, and as Presidential Electors for the State of Arizona.

56. Prior to December 14, 2020, Plaintiff Arizona Electors had standing under the Electors Clause as candidates for the office of Presidential Elector because, under Arizona law, a vote cast for the Republican Party’s President and Vice President is cast for the Republican Presidential Electors. See ARS § 16-212. Accordingly, Plaintiff Arizona Electors, like other candidates for office, “have a cognizable interest in ensuring that the final vote tally reflects the legally valid votes cast,” as “[a]n inaccurate vote tally is a concrete and particularized injury to candidates such as the Electors.” Carson v. Simon, 978 F.3d 1051, 1057 (8th Cir. 2020) (affirming that Presidential Electors have Article III and prudential standing under Electors Clause). See also Wood v. Raffensperger, No. 20-14418, 2020 WL 7094866, *10 (11th Cir. Dec. 5, 2020) (affirming that if Plaintiff voter had been a candidate for office “he could assert a personal, distinct injury” required for standing); Trump v. Wis. Elections Comm’n, No. 20-cv-1785, 2020 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 233765 at *26 (E.D. Wis. Dec. 12, 2020) (President Trump, “as candidate for election, has a concrete particularized interest in the actual results of the election.”).

57. But for the alleged wrongful conduct of Arizona executive branch and Maricopa County officials under color of law, by certifying a fraudulently produced election result in Mr. Biden’s favor, the Plaintiff Arizona Electors would have been certified as the presidential electors for Arizona, and Arizona’s Governor and Secretary of State would have transmitted uncontested votes for Donald J. Trump and Michael R. Pence to the Electoral College. The certification and transmission of a competing slate of Biden electors has resulted in a unique injury that only Plaintiff Arizona Electors could suffer, namely, having a competing slate of electors take their place and their votes in the Electoral College.

58. The upcoming January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress provides further grounds of standing for the requested declaratory judgment that the Electoral Count Act is unconstitutional. Then, Plaintiffs are certain or nearly certain to suffer an injury-in-fact caused by Defendant Vice President Pence, acting as Presiding Officer, if Defendant ignores the Twelfth Amendment and instead follows the procedures in Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act to resolve the dispute over which slate of Arizona electors is to be counted.

59. The Twelfth Amendment gives Defendant exclusive authority and sole discretion as to which set of electors to count, or not to count any set of electors; if no candidate receives a majority of electoral votes, then the President is to be chosen by the House, where “the votes shall be taken by States, the representation from each state having one vote.” U.S. CONST. amend. XII. If Defendant Pence instead follows the procedures in Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act,

Plaintiffs' electoral votes will not be counted because (a) the Democratic majority House of Representatives will not "decide" to count the electoral votes of Plaintiff Republican electors; and (b) either the Senate will concur with the House not to count their votes, or the Senate will not concur, in which case, the electoral votes cast by Biden's electors will be counted because the Biden slate of electors was certified by Arizona's executive.

60. It is sufficient for the purposes of declaratory judgment that the injury is threatened. The declaratory and injunctive relief requested by Plaintiffs "may be made before actual completion of the injury-in-fact required for Article III standing," namely, the application of Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act, rather than the Twelfth Amendment to resolve disputes over which of two competing slates of electors to count "if the plaintiff can show an actual present harm or significant possibility of future harm to demonstrate the need for pre-enforcement review." 10 FED. PROC. L. ED. § 23.26 ("Standing to Seek Declaratory Judgment") (citations omitted).

61. Plaintiffs have demonstrated above that this injury-in-fact is to occur at the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress, and they seek the requested declaratory and injunctive relief "only in the last resort, and as a necessity in the determination of a vital controversy." Id.

62. Plaintiffs Present a Live "Case or Controversy." Plaintiffs' claims present a live "case or controversy" with the Defendant, rather than hypothetical or abstract dispute, that can be litigated and decided by this Court through the requested declaratory and injunctive relief. Here there is a clear threat of the application of an unconstitutional statute, Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act, which is sufficient to establish the requisite case or controversy. See, e.g., Navegar, Inc. v. U.S., 103 F.3d 994, 998 (D.C. Cir. 1997) ("the threat of prosecution provides the foundation of justiciability as a constitutional and prudential matter, and the Declaratory Judgments Act provides the mechanism for seeking pre-enforcement review in federal court.").

63. First, the events of December 14, 2020, gave rise to two competing slates of electors for the State of Arizona: the Plaintiff Arizona Electors, supported by Arizona State legislators (as evidenced by the December 14, 2020 Joint Resolution and the participation of Arizona legislator Plaintiffs), who cast their electoral votes for President Trump and Vice President Pence, and one certified by the Arizona state executives who cast their votes for former Vice President Biden and Senator Harris. Second, the text of the Twelfth Amendment of the Constitution expressly commits to the Defendant Vice President Pence, acting as the President of the Senate and Presiding Officer for the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress, the authority and discretion to “count” electoral votes, i.e., deciding in his sole discretion as to which one of the two, or neither, set of electoral votes shall be counted. The Electoral Count Act similarly designates Defendant as the Presiding Officer responsible for opening and counting electoral votes, but sets forth a different set of procedures, inconsistent with the Twelfth Amendment, for deciding which of two or more competing slates of electors and electoral votes, or neither, shall be counted.

64. Accordingly, a controversy presently exists due to: (1) the existence of competing slates of electors for Arizona and the other Contested States, and (2) distinct and inconsistent procedures under the Twelfth Amendment and the Electoral Count Act to determine which slate of electors and their electoral votes, or neither, shall be counted in choosing the next President. Further, this controversy must be resolved at the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress. Finally, the Constitution expressly designates Defendant Pence as the individual who decides which set of electoral votes, or neither, to count, and the requested declaratory judgment that the procedures under Electoral Count Act are unconstitutional is necessary to ensure that Defendant Pence counts electoral votes in a manner consistent with the Twelfth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution.

65. The injuries that Plaintiffs assert affect the procedure by which the status of their votes will be considered, which lowers the thresholds for immediacy and redressability under this Circuit's and the Supreme Court's precedents. Nat'l Treasury Employees Union v. U.S., 101 F.3d 1423, 1428-29 (D.C. Cir. 1996); Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 571-72 & n.7 (1992). Similarly, a plaintiff with concrete injury can invoke Constitution's structural protections of liberty. Bond v. United States, 564 U.S. 211, 222-23 (2011).

66. Plaintiffs' Claims Are Ripe for Adjudication. Plaintiffs' claims are ripe for the same reasons that they present a live "case or controversy" within the meaning of Article III. "[T]he ripeness doctrine seeks to separate matters that are premature for review because the injury is speculative and may never occur from those cases that are appropriate for federal court action." Roark v. Hardee LP v. City of Austin, 522 F.3d 533, 544 n.12 (5th Cir. 2008) (quoting ERWIN CHEMERINSEY, FEDERAL JURISDICTION § 2.4.18 (5th Ed. 2007)). As explained above, the facts underlying the justiciability of Plaintiffs' claims are not in dispute. Further, it is certain or nearly certain that Plaintiffs will suffer an injury-in-fact at the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress, if Defendant Pence disregards the exclusive authority and sole discretion granted to him under the Twelfth Amendment to "count" electoral votes, and instead follows the conflicting and unconstitutional procedures in Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act, pursuant to which Plaintiffs' electoral votes will be disregarded in favor of the competing electors for the State of Arizona.

67. Plaintiffs' Claims Are Not Moot. Plaintiffs seek prospective declaratory judgment that portions of the Electoral Count Act are unconstitutional and injunctive relief prohibiting Defendant from following the procedures in Section 15 thereof that authorize the House and Senate jointly to resolve disputes regarding competing slates of electors. This prospective relief would apply to Defendants' future actions at the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress. The requested relief thus is not moot because it is prospective and because it addresses an unconstitutional “ongoing policy” embodied in the Electoral Count Act that is likely to be repeated and will evade review if the requested relief is not granted. Del Monte Fresh Produce v. U.S., 570 F.3d 316, 321-22 (D.C. Cir. 2009).

COUNT I

DEFENDANT WILL NECESSARILY VIOLATE THE TWELFTH AMENDMENT AND THE ELECTORS CLAUSE OF THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION IF HE FOLLOWS THE ELECTORAL COUNT ACT.

68. Plaintiffs reallege all preceding paragraphs as if fully set forth herein.

69. The Electors Clause states that “[e]ach State shall appoint, in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a Number of Electors” for President and Vice President. U.S. Const. art. II, §1, cl. 2 (emphasis added).

70. The Twelfth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution gives Defendant Vice President, as President of the Senate and the Presiding Officer of January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress, the exclusive authority and sole discretion to “count” the electoral votes for President, as well as the authority to determine which of two or more competing slates of electors for a State, or neither, may be counted, or how objections to any single slate of electors is resolved. In the event no candidate receives a majority of the electoral votes, then the House of Representatives shall have sole authority to choose the President where “the votes shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote.” U.S. CONST. amend. XII.

71. Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act replaces the procedures set forth in the Twelfth Amendment with a different and inconsistent set of decision making and dispute resolution procedures. As detailed above, these provisions of Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act are unconstitutional insofar as they require Defendant: (1) to count the electoral votes for a

State that have been appointed in violation of the Electors Clause; (2) limits or eliminates his exclusive authority and sole discretion under the Twelfth Amendment to determine which slates of electors for a State, or neither, may be counted; and (3) replaces the Twelfth Amendment's dispute resolution procedure which provides for the House of Representatives to choose the President under a procedure where "the votes shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote" – with an entirely different procedure in which the House and Senate each separately "decide" which slate is to be counted, and in the event of a disagreement, then only "the votes of the electors whose appointment shall have been certified by the executive of the State ... shall be counted." 3 U.S.C. § 15.

72. Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act also violates the Electors Clause by usurping the exclusive and plenary authority of State Legislatures to determine the manner of appointing Presidential Electors and gives that authority instead to the State's Executive.

PRAYER FOR RELIEF

73. Accordingly, Plaintiffs respectfully request that this Court issue a judgment that:
- A. Declares that Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act, 3 U.S.C. §§5 and 15, is unconstitutional because it violates the Twelfth Amendment on its face, Amend. XII, Constitution;
  - B. Declares that Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act, 3 U.S.C. §§5 and 15, is unconstitutional because it violates the Electors Clause. U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1, cl. 1;
  - C. Declares that Vice-President Pence, in his capacity as President of Senate and Presiding Officer of the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress, is subject solely to the requirements of the Twelfth Amendment and may exercise the exclusive authority and sole discretion in determining which electoral votes to count for a given State;

- D. Enjoins reliance on any provisions of the Electoral Count Act that would limit Defendant's exclusive authority and his sole discretion to determine which of two or more competing slates of electors' votes are to be counted for President;
- E. Declares that, with respect to competing slates of electors from the State of Arizona or other Contested States, or with respect to objection to any single slate of electors, the Twelfth Amendment contains the exclusive dispute resolution mechanisms, namely, that (i) Vice-President Pence determines which slate of electors' votes shall be counted, or if none be counted, for that State and (ii) if no person has a majority, then the House of Representatives (and only the House of Representatives) shall choose the President where "the votes [in the House of Representatives] shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote," U.S. CONST. amend. XII;
- F. Declares that, also with respect to competing slates of electors, the alternative dispute resolution procedure or priority rule in 3 U.S.C. § 15, is null and void insofar as it contradicts and replaces the Twelfth Amendment rules above by with an entirely different procedure in which the House and Senate each separately "decide" which slate is to be counted, and in the event of a disagreement, then only "the votes of the electors whose appointment shall have been certified by the executive of the State ... shall be counted," 3 U.S.C. § 15;

G. Enjoins the Defendant from executing his duties on January 6th during the Joint Session of Congress in any manner that is insistent with the declaratory relief set forth herein, and

H. Issue any other declaratory judgments or findings or injunctions necessary to support or effectuate the foregoing declaratory judgment.

74. Plaintiffs have concurrently submitted a motion for a speedy summary proceeding under FRCP Rule 57 to grant the relief requested herein as soon as practicable, and for emergency injunctive relief under FRCP Rule 65 thereof consistent with the declaratory judgment requested herein on that same date.

Dated: December 27, 2020

Respectfully submitted,

Howard Kleinhendler
Howard Kleinhendler Esquire
NY Bar No. 2657120
369 Lexington Ave., 12th Floor
New York, New York 10017
Tel: (917) 793-1188
Fax: (732) 901-0832
Email: howard@kleinhendler.com

/s/ William Lewis Sessions
William Lewis Sessions
Texas Bar No. 18041500
Sessions & Associates, PLLC
14591 North Dallas Parkway, Suite 400
Dallas, TX 75254
Tel: (214) 217-8855
Fax: (214) 723-5346 (fax)
Email: lsessions@sessionslaw.net

Lawrence J. Joseph
DC Bar No. 464777
Law Office of Lawrence J. Joseph
1250 Connecticut Ave, NW, Suite 700-1A
Washington, DC 20036
Tel: (202) 355-9452
Fax: 202) 318-2254
Email: ljoseph@larryjoseph.com

Julia Z. Haller
DC Bar No. 466921
Brandon Johnson
DC Bar No. 491370
Defending the Republic
601 Pennsylvania Ave., NW
Suite 900
South Building
Washington, DC 20004
Tel: (561) 888-3166
Fax: 202-888-2162
Email: hallerjulia@outlook.com
Email: brandoncjohnson6@aol.com

COUNSEL FOR PLAINTIFFS
LOUIE GOHMERT, TYLER BOWYER,
NANCY COTTLE, JAKE HOFFMAN,
ANTHONY KERN, JAMES R. LAMON,
SAM MOORHEAD, ROBERT
MONTGOMERY, LORAINÉ
PELLEGRINO, GREG SAFSTEN, KELLI
WARD and MICHAEL WARD

A JOINT RESOLUTION OF THE 54TH LEGISLATURE,

STATE OF ARIZONA

TO

THE 116TH CONGRESS, OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE, PRESIDING.

WHEREAS, it is the constitutional and legal obligation of the Legislature of the State of Arizona to ensure that the state's presidential electors truly represent the will of the voters of Arizona; and

WHEREAS, pursuant to the direction of Congress as set forth in United States Code, title 3, section 1 as authorized by Article II, section 1, clause 4 of the Constitution of the United States, and state law adopted pursuant thereto, Arizona conducted an election for presidential electors on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November of 2020—that is, on November 3, 2020; and

WHEREAS, that election was marred by irregularities so significant as to render it highly doubtful whether the certified results accurately represent the will of the voters; and

WHEREAS, Congress has further directed in U.S. Code, title 3, section 2 that when a state “has held an election for the purpose of choosing electors, and has failed to make a choice on the day prescribed by law, the electors may be appointed on a subsequent day in such manner as the legislature of such State may direct”; and

EXHIBIT A

WHEREAS, that provision implicitly recognizes that Article II, Section 1, Clause 2 of the U.S. Constitution grants to each state legislature, with stated limitations, the sole authority to prescribe the manner of appointing electors for that state; and

WHEREAS, the United States Supreme Court and other courts have explained that when a state legislature directs the manner of appointing electors, it does so pursuant to a grant of authority from the U.S. Constitution rather than by reason of any state constitutional or other legal provision; that this authority may be exercised by the legislature alone without other aspects of the normal lawmaking process; and that the state legislature's authority over the appointment of presidential electors is plenary and may be resumed at any time; and

WHEREAS, because U.S. Code, title 3, section 7 mandates that all presidential electors vote for President and Vice President of the United States on December 14, 2020, it is impossible to pursue the Legislature's preferred course of action, which would be for Arizona's voters to participate in a new and fair and free presidential election before that date; and

WHEREAS, in view of the facts heretofore recited, the Legislature is required to exercise its best judgment as to which slate of electors the voters prefer; and

WHEREAS, legal precedent exists where in 1960 the State of Hawaii sent an alternate slate of electors while the Presidential election was still in question in order to meet the deadline of selecting electors, and upon recount the alternate slate of electors' ballots were ultimately counted; and

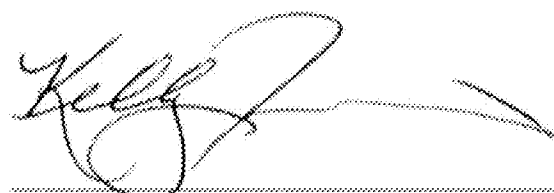

WHEREAS, the undersigned have an obligation to find the truth. For this reason, on several occasions since November 3, we state lawmakers have requested fact-finding hearings to include a comprehensive and independent forensic audit. At this time, no such audit has been authorized. This leaves the uncertainty of the election results in a state that requires further investigation and resolution; and

WHEREAS, the Senate Judiciary standing committee today called for a forensic audit of various election irregularities, ongoing litigation is currently active, and there are unresolved disputes by both the Legislature and at least one Presidential campaign, rendering the election inconclusive as of date of signing of this letter,

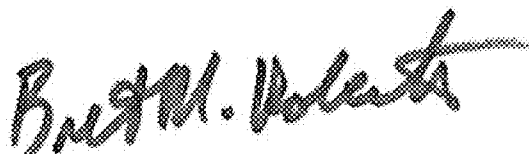

THEREFORE,

Be it resolved by the undersigned Legislators, members of the Arizona House and Senate, request that the alternate 11 electoral votes be accepted for to Donald J. Trump or to have all electoral votes nullified completely until a full forensic audit can be conducted. Be it further resolved that the United States Congress is not to consider a slate of electors from the State of Arizona until the Legislature deems the election to be final and all irregularities resolved

Signed this day, 14 December, 2020.

Senator Elect Kelly Townsend
Legislative District 16

Representative Bret Roberts
Legislative District 11

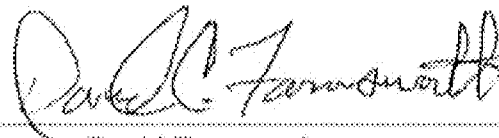

Senator Paul Boyer
Legislative District 20

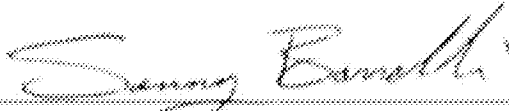

Representative Kevin Payne
Legislative District 21

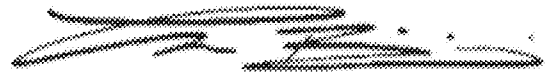

Representative Mark Finchem
Legislative District 11

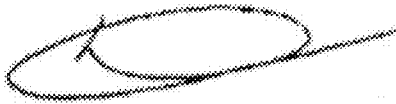

Senator David Farnsworth
Legislative District 16

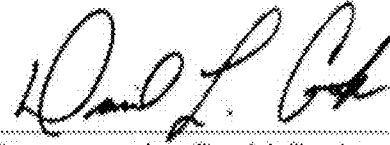

Senator Sonny Borrelli
Legislative District 5

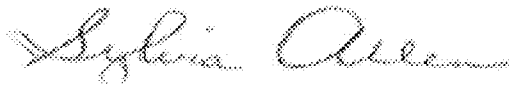

Representative Leo Biasucci
Legislative District 5

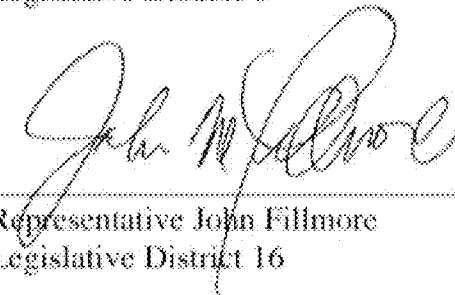

Representative Anthony Kern
Legislative District 20

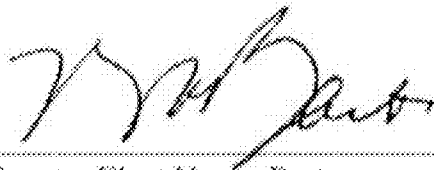

Representative David Cook
Legislative District 8

Senator Sylvia Allen
Legislative District 15

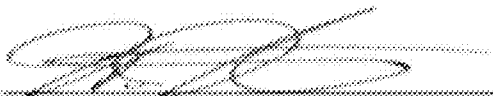

Representative John Fillmore
Legislative District 16

Senator Elect Nancy Barto
Legislative District 15

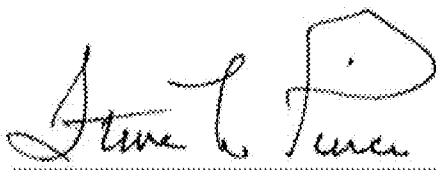

Representative Travis Grantham
Legislative District 12

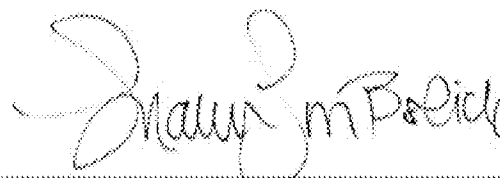

Majority Leader Warren Petersen
Legislative District 12

Representative Walter Blackman
Legislative District 6

Representative Steve Pierce
Legislative District 1

Representative Shawna Bolick
Legislative District 20

Representative Tony Rivero

Representative Noel Campbell

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF TEXAS
TYLER DIVISION

LOUIE GOHMERT, TYLER BOWYER, NANCY
COTTLE, JAKE HOFFMAN, ANTHONY KERN,
JAMES R. LAMON, SAM MOORHEAD, ROBERT
MONTGOMERY, LORAIN PELLEGRINO, GREG
SAFSTEN, KELLI WARD and MICHAEL WARD,

Plaintiffs,

v.

THE HONORABLE MICHAEL R. PENCE, VICE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, in his
official capacity,

Defendant.

Civil Action No. 6:20-cv-00660-JDK

(Election Matter)

PLAINTIFFS' EMERGENCY MOTION FOR EXPEDITED
DECLARATORY JUDGMENT AND EMERGENCY INJUNCTIVE RELIEF

COME NOW Plaintiffs, U.S. Rep. Louie Gohmert (TX-1), Tyler Bowyer, Nancy Cottle, Jake Hoffman, Anthony Kern, James R. Lamon, Sam Moorhead, Robert Montgomery, Loraine Pellegrino, Greg Safsten, Kelli Ward, and Michael Ward, by and through their undersigned counsel, and file this Motion for Expedited Declaratory Judgment and Emergency Injunctive Relief ("Motion"), and Memorandum of Law In Support Thereof, pursuant to Rules 57 and 65 of the FEDERAL RULES OF CIVIL PROCEDURE to request the following relief.

As explained in the Complaint, Plaintiffs seek an expedited declaratory judgment declaring that Sections 5 and 15 of the Electoral Count Act of 1887, PUB. L. NO. 49-90, 24 Stat. 373 (codified at 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 15), are unconstitutional because these provisions violate the Electors Clause and the Twelfth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1, cl. 1 & amend. XII. The Complaint and this Motion address a matter of urgent national concern that involves only issues of law—namely, a determination that Sections 5 and 15 of the Electoral Count Act violate the Electors Clause and the Twelfth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution—where the relevant facts concerning the Plaintiffs’ standing, the justiciability of Plaintiffs’ claims by this Court, and this Court’s ability to grant the relief requested are not in dispute.

Further, the purpose of this Complaint is a declaratory judgment regarding the rights and legal relations of Plaintiffs and of Defendant, namely, that Vice President Michael R. Pence, acting in his capacity as President of the Senate and Presiding Officer for the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress to count Arizona and other States’ electoral votes for choosing President, is free to exercise his exclusive authority and sole discretion under the Twelfth Amendment to determine which slate of electoral votes to count, or neither, and must disregard any provisions of the Electoral Count Act that conflict with the Twelfth Amendment, U.S. CONST. amend. XII.

Because the requested declaratory judgment will terminate the controversy arising from the conflict between the Twelfth Amendment and the Electoral Count Act, and the facts are not in dispute, it is appropriate for this Court to grant this relief in a summary proceeding without an evidentiary hearing or discovery. See FED. R. CIV. P. 57, Advisory Committee Notes. Accordingly, Plaintiffs request an expedited summary proceeding under Rule 57 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure to grant the relief requested herein no later than Thursday, December 31, 2020, and for emergency injunctive relief under FED. R. CIV. P. 65 consistent with the declaratory judgment requested herein on that same date. Plaintiffs style their motion as an emergency motion under Local Civil Rule 7(l) because there is not enough time before December 31 to move for an expedited briefing schedule under Local Civil Rule 7(e).

Plaintiffs adopt all allegations contained in their Complaint.

Plaintiffs respectfully request an opportunity for oral argument. A proposed Order is attached.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Table of Contents .....	iii
Table of Authorities .....	iv
Introduction .....	1
Facts .....	1
Argument .....	3
I. This court has jurisdiction for Plaintiffs’ claims .....	3
A. Plaintiffs have standing .....	3
1. Plaintiffs have suffered an injury in fact .....	4
2. The Defendant has caused Plaintiffs’ injuries. ....	7
3. This Court can redress Plaintiffs’ injuries. ....	9
4. Plaintiffs’ procedural injuries lower the constitutional bar for immediacy and redressability .....	11
B. The Speech or Debate Clause does not insulate the Vice President .....	12
C. Sovereign immunity does not bar this action .....	13
D. The political-question doctrine does not bar this suit .....	15
E. This case presents a federal question, and abstention principles do not apply .....	15
F. Plaintiffs are entitled to an expedited declaratory judgment. ....	16
II. Plaintiffs are entitled to an emergency injunctive relief .....	17
A. Plaintiffs have a substantial likelihood of success .....	17
1. Unconstitutional laws are nullities .....	18
2. The Electoral Count Act violates the Electors Clause and the Twelfth Amendment. ....	18
3. The Electoral Count Act violates the Constitution’s structural protections of liberty .....	22
B. Plaintiffs will suffer irreparable injury. ....	23
C. Plaintiffs need not demonstrate irreparable harm for declaratory relief .....	24
D. The balance of equities favors Plaintiffs .....	25
E. The public interest favors Plaintiffs .....	26
Conclusion .....	27

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

CASES

ACLU v. Ashcroft , 322 F.3d 240 (3d Cir. 2003) .....	26
Baker v. Carr , 369 U.S. 186 (1962).....	6, 15,
Bond v. United States , 564 U.S. 211 (2011) .....	11
Brown v. Maryland , 25 U.S. (12 Wheat.) 419 (1827) .....	18
Bush v. Gore , 531 U.S. 98 (2000).....	15
Carson v. Simon , 978 F.3d 1051 (8th Cir. 2020).....	6
Clinton v. New York , 524 U.S. 417 (1998) .....	12
Commissioner v. Shapiro , 424 U.S. 614 (1976) .....	24
Common Cause v. Biden , 748 F.3d 1280 (D.C. Cir. 2014) .....	12
Cook v. Gralike , 531 U.S. 510 (2001) .....	16
Ctr. for Biological Diversity v. United States EPA , 937 F.3d 533 (5th Cir. 2019).....	8
Davis v. Passman , 442 U.S. 228 (1979) .....	14
FEC v. Akins , 524 U.S. 11 (1998).....	10
Franklin v. Massachusetts , 505 U.S. 788 (1992).....	9
Harman v. Forssenius , 380 U.S. 528 (1965) .....	18
Heckler v. Mathews , 465 U.S. 728 (1984).....	10
Hurley v. Reed , 288 F.2d 844 (D.C. Cir. 1961) .....	24
Jackson Women’s Health Org. v. Currier , 760 F.3d 448 (5th Cir. 2014) .....	25
League of Women Voters of the United States v. Newby , 838 F.3d 1 (D.C. Cir. 2016).....	26
Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife , 504 U.S. 555 (1992) .....	4, 7, 11
Marine Chance Shipping v. Sebastian , 143 F.3d 216 (5th Cir. 1998).....	24
McPherson v. Blacker , 146 U.S. 1 (1892) .....	15
Minton v. St. Bernard Par. Sch. Bd. , 803 F.2d 129 (5th Cir. 1986) .....	12
Murphree v. Winter , 589 F. Supp. 374 (S.D. Miss. 1984) .....	23
Nat’l Treasury Employees Union v. U.S. , 101 F.3d 1423 (D.C. Cir. 1996) .....	11
Obama for Am. v. Husted , 697 F.3d 423 (6th Cir. 2012).....	23
Pac. Frontier v. Pleasant Grove City , 414 F.3d 1221 (10th Cir. 2005) .....	26
Powell v. McCormack , 395 U.S. 486 (1969) .....	10, 12-13, 17-18
Reynolds v. Sims , 377 U.S. 533 (1964).....	23

Rowan Cos. v. Griffin , 876 F.2d 26 (5th Cir. 1989) .....	24
Russian Standard Vodka (USA), Inc. v. Allied Domecq Spirits &amp; Wine USA, Inc. , 523 F.Supp.2d 376 (S.D.N.Y. 2007).....	24
Sierra Club v. Glickman , 156 F.3d 606 (5th Cir. 1998) .....	8, 11
Simon v. Eastern Kentucky Welfare Rights Org. , 426 U.S. 26 (1976) .....	8
Synthetic Organic Chem. Mfrs. Ass'n v. Sec'y, Dep't of Health &amp; Human Servs. , 720 F.Supp. 1244 (W.D. La. 1989).....	8
Tel. &amp; Data Sys. v. FCC , 19 F.3d 42 (D.C. Cir. 1994).....	8
Tex. Democratic Party v. Benkiser , 459 F.3d 582 (5th Cir. 2006) .....	25-26
Tierney v. Schweiker , 718 F.2d 449 (D.C. Cir. 1983).....	24
Trump v. Wis. Elections Comm'n , No. 20-cv-1785, 2020 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 233765 (E.D. Wis. Dec. 12, 2020).....	6
United States v. Morrison , 529 U.S. 598 (2000) .....	18
United States v. Winstar Corp. , 518 U.S. 839 (1996).....	22
Verizon Md. Inc. v. Pub. Serv. Comm'n of Maryland , 535 U.S. 635 (2002).....	14
Washington v. Reno , 35 F.3d 1093 (6th Cir. 1994) .....	26
Webster v. Doe , 486 U.S. 592 (1988).....	25
Wesberry v. Sanders , 376 U.S. 1 (1964).....	6
Williams v. Brooks , 945 F.2d 1322 (5th Cir. 1991) .....	12
Winter v. Natural Resources Defense Council, Inc. , 555 U.S. 7 (2008).....	17
Wood v. Raffensperger , No. 20-14418, 2020 WL 7094866 (11th Cir. Dec. 5, 2020) .....	6

STATUTES

U.S. CONST. art. I, § 5, cl. 2 .....	23
U.S. CONST. art I, § 6, cl. 1 .....	12-13
U.S. CONST. art. I, § 7, cl. 3 .....	22
U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1, cl. 1.....	1, 6, 17-18, 21, 23, 26
U.S. CONST. art. III .....	3, 6-8, 10-11, 15
U.S. CONST. art. III, § 2 .....	15
U.S. CONST. amend. XII .....	passim
3 U.S.C. § 5.....	1-5, 14, 18-19, 21-22, 26
3 U.S.C. § 6.....	21
3 U.S.C. § 15.....	1, 4-5, 10-12, 14, 16, 19-21, 26
28 U.S.C. § 1331.....	3

28 U.S.C. §2201 .....	24
Electoral Count Act of 1887, PUB. L. NO. 49–90, 24 Stat. 373 .....	passim
ARIZ. REV. STAT. § 16-212 .....	6

RULES

FED. R. CIV. P. 57 .....	16, 24
FED. R. CIV. P. 57 Advisory Committee Notes .....	16

LEGISLATIVE HISTORY

2 M. Farrand, RECORDS OF THE FEDERAL CONVENTION OF 1787 (1911) .....	9
--	---

OTHER AUTHORITIES

10 Fed. Proc., L. Ed. §23:4 .....	24
A.B.A. Section of Admin. Law & Regulatory Practice, A Blackletter Statement of Federal Administrative Law , 54 ADMIN. L. REV. 1 (2002) .....	13
Louis L. Jaffee, The Right to Judicial Review I , 71 HARV. L. REV. 401 (1958) .....	13
Chris Land & David Schultz, On the Unenforceability of the Electoral Count Act , 13 Rutgers J.L. & Pub. Policy 340 (2016) .....	23
J. Story, 1 COMMENTARIES ON THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES § 627 (3d ed. 1858) .....	16
Laurence H. Tribe, Erog v. Hsub and Its Disguises: Freeing Bush v. Gore from Its Hall of Mirrors , 115 HARV. L. REV. 170 (2001) .....	22

INTRODUCTION

Plaintiffs, U.S. Representative Louie Gohmert (TX-1) (“Rep. Gohmert”), Tyler Bowyer, Nancy Cottle, Jake Hoffman, Anthony Kern, James R. Lamon, Sam Moorhead, Robert Montgomery, Loraine Pellegrino, Greg Safsten, Kelli Ward and Michael Ward seek an expedited declaratory judgment declaring that Sections 5 and 15 of the Electoral Count Act of 1887, PUB. L. NO. 49–90, 24 Stat. 373 (codified at 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 15), are unconstitutional because these provisions violate the Electors Clause and the Twelfth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1, cl. 1 & Amend. XII.

FACTS

The facts relevant to this motion are set forth in the Complaint and its accompanying exhibit are incorporated herein by reference. Plaintiffs present here only a summary.

The Plaintiffs include Rep. Louie Gohmert—a Member of the U.S. House of Representatives, representing Texas’s First Congressional District in both the current and the next Congress—who seeks to enjoin the operation of the Electoral Count Act to prevent a deprivation of his rights—and the rights of those he represents—under the Twelfth Amendment. The Plaintiffs also include the entire slate of Republican Presidential Electors for the State of Arizona, as well as an outgoing and incoming member of the Arizona Legislature. On December 14, 2020, pursuant to the requirements of applicable state laws, the Constitution, and the Electoral Count Act, the Plaintiff Arizona Electors, with the knowledge and permission of the Republican-majority Arizona Legislature, convened at the Arizona State Capitol, and cast Arizona’s electoral votes for President Donald J. Trump and Vice President Michael R. Pence. On the same date, the Republican Presidential Electors for the States of Georgia, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin met at their respective State Capitols to cast their States’ electoral votes for President Trump and Vice President Pence

(or in the case of Michigan, attempted to do so but were blocked by the Michigan State Police, and ultimately voted on the grounds of the State Capitol).

There are now competing slates of Republican and Democratic electors in five States with Republican majorities in both houses of their State Legislatures—Arizona, Georgia, Michigan, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin (i.e., the Contested States)—that collectively have 73 electoral votes, which are more than sufficient to determine the winner of the 2020 General Election. On December 14, 2020, in Arizona and the other Contested States, the Democratic Party’s slate of electors convened in the State Capitol to cast their electoral votes for former Vice President Joseph R. Biden and Senator Kamala Harris. On the same day, Arizona Governor Doug Ducey and Secretary of State Katie Hobbs submitted the Certificate of Ascertainment with the Biden electoral votes to the National Archivist pursuant to the Electoral Count Act.

Republican Senators and Republican Members of the House of Representatives have also expressed their intent to oppose the certified slates of electors from the Contested States due to the substantial evidence of voter fraud in the 2020 General Election. Multiple Senators and House Members have stated that they will object to the Biden electors at the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress. These public statements by legislators, combined with the fact that President Trump has not conceded and has given no indication that he will concede and political pressure from his nearly 75 million voters and other supporters, make it a near certainty that at least one Senator and one House Member will follow through on their commitments and invoke the (unconstitutional) Electoral Count Act’s dispute resolution procedures.

Defendant Vice President Pence, in his capacity as President of the Senate and Presiding Officer at the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress to select the next President, will be presented with the following circumstances: (1) competing slates of electors from the State of Arizona and the other Contested States, (2) that represent sufficient electoral votes (a) if counted, to determine the winner of the 2020 General Election, or (b) if not counted, to deny either President Trump or former Vice President Biden sufficient votes to win outright; and (3) objections from at least one Senator and at least one Member of the House of Representatives to the counting of electoral votes from one or more of the Contested States and thereby invoking the unconstitutional procedures set forth in Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act.

As a result, Defendant Vice President Pence will necessarily have to decide whether to follow the unconstitutional provisions of the Electoral Count Act or the Twelfth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution at the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress. This approaching deadline establishes the urgency for this Court to issue a declaratory judgment that Sections 5 and 15 of the Electoral Count Act are unconstitutional and provide the undisputed factual basis for this Court to do so on an expedited basis, and to enjoin Defendant Vice President Pence from following any Electoral Count Act procedures in 3 U.S.C. §§ 5 and 15 because they are unconstitutional under the Twelfth Amendment.

ARGUMENT

I. THIS COURT HAS JURISDICTION FOR PLAINTIFFS' CLAIMS.

Before entertaining the merits of this action, the Court first must establish its jurisdiction over the subject matter and the parties. This action obviously raises a federal question, 28 U.S.C. § 1331, so Plaintiffs establish below that this action presents a case or controversy for purposes of Article III and their entitlement to seek relief in this Court via this action.

A. Plaintiffs have standing.

Article III standing presents the tripartite test of whether the party invoking a court's jurisdiction raises an "injury in fact" under Article III: (a) a legally cognizable injury (b) that is both caused by the challenged action, and (c) redressable by a court. Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 561-62 (1992). The task of establishing standing varies, depending “considerably upon whether the plaintiff is himself an object of the action (or forgone action) at issue.” Id. at 561. If so, “there is ordinarily little question that the action or inaction has caused him injury, and that a judgment preventing or requiring the action will redress it.” Id. at 562. If not, standing may depend on third-party action:

When ... a plaintiff’s asserted injury arises from the government’s allegedly unlawful regulation (or lack of regulation) of someone else, much more is needed. In that circumstance, causation and redressability ordinarily hinge on the response of the regulated (or regulable) third party to the government action or inaction – and perhaps on the response of others as well.

Id. (emphasis in original). Here, Plaintiffs can assert both first-party and third-party injuries, with the showing for standing easier for the first-party injuries. Specifically, Vice President Pence’s action under the unconstitutional Electoral Count Act would have the effect of ratifying injuries inflicted—in the first instance—by third parties in Arizona.

1. Plaintiffs have suffered an injury in fact.

Plaintiffs have standing as a member of the United States House of Representatives, Members of the Arizona Legislature, and as Presidential Electors for the State of Arizona.

Rep. Louie Gohmert is a Member of the U.S. House of Representatives, representing Texas’s First Congressional District in both the current and the next Congress. Rep. Louie Gohmert requests declaratory relief from this Court to prevent action as prescribed by 3 U.S.C. § 5, and 3 U.S.C. §15 and to give the power back to the states to vote for the President in accordance with the Twelfth Amendment. Otherwise he will not be able to vote as a Congressional Representative in accordance with the Twelfth Amendment, and instead, his vote in the House, if there is disagreement, will be eliminated by the current statutory construct under the Electoral Count Act, or diluted by votes of the Senate and ultimately by passing the final determination to the state Executives.

In the event that objections occur leading to a vote in the House of Representatives, then under the Twelfth Amendment, on January 6, in the new House of Representatives, there will be twenty-seven states led by Republican majorities, and twenty states led by Democrat majorities, and three states that are tied. Twenty-six seats are required for a victor under the Twelfth Amendment, and further that, under the Twelfth Amendment, in the event neither candidate wins twenty-six seats by March 4, then the then-current Vice President would be declared the President. However, if the Electoral Count Act is followed, this one vote on a state-by-state basis in the House of Representatives for President simply would not occur and would deprive this Member of his constitutional right as a sitting member of a Republican delegation, where his vote matters.

The Twelfth Amendment specifically states that “if no person have such majority, then from the persons having the highest numbers not exceeding three on the list of those voted for as President, the House of Representatives shall choose immediately, by ballot, the President. But in choosing the President, the votes shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote.” The authority to vote with this authority is taken from the House of Representatives, of which Mr. Gohmert is a member, and usurped by statutory construct set forth in 3 U.S.C. § 5 and 3 U.S.C. §15. Therein the authority is given back to the state’s executive branch in the process of counting and in the event of disagreement – while also giving the Senate concurrent authority with the House to vote for President. As a result, the application of 3 U.S.C. § 5 and 3 U.S.C. §15 would prevent Rep. Gohmert from exercising his constitutional duty to vote pursuant for President to the Twelfth Amendment.

Prior to December 14, 2020, Plaintiff Arizona Electors had standing under the Electors Clause as candidates for the office of Presidential Elector because, under Arizona law, a vote cast for the Republican Party's President and Vice President is cast for the Republican Presidential Electors. See ARIZ. REV. STAT. § 16-212. Accordingly, Plaintiff Arizona Electors, like other candidates for office, “have a cognizable interest in ensuring that the final vote tally reflects the legally valid votes cast,” as “[a]n inaccurate vote tally is a concrete and particularized injury to candidates such as the Electors.” Carson v. Simon, 978 F.3d 1051, 1057 (8th Cir. 2020) (affirming that Presidential Electors have Article III and prudential standing under Electors Clause); see also Wood v. Raffensperger, No. 20-14418, 2020 WL 7094866, *10 (11th Cir. Dec. 5, 2020) (affirming that if Plaintiff voter had been a candidate for office “he could assert a personal, distinct injury” required for standing); Trump v. Wis. Elections Comm’n, No. 20-cv-1785, 2020 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 233765 at *26 (E.D. Wis. Dec. 12, 2020) (President Trump, “as candidate for election, has a concrete particularized interest in the actual results of the election.”). Plaintiffs suffer a “debasement” of their votes, which “state[s] a justiciable cause of action on which relief could be granted” Wesberry v. Sanders, 376 U.S. 1, 5-6 (1964) (citing Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186 (1962)).

The Twelfth Amendment provides as follows:

The electors shall meet in their respective states and vote by ballot for President and Vice President, one of whom, at least, shall not be an inhabitant of the same state with themselves; they shall name in their ballots the person voted for as President, and in distinct ballots the person voted for as Vice-President, and they shall make distinct lists of all persons voted for as President, and of all persons voted for as Vice-President, and of the number of votes for each, which lists they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the seat of the government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate.

U.S. CONST. amend. XII (emphasis added).

2. Plaintiffs' injuries are traceable to Defendant.

Rep. Gohmert faces imminent threat of injury that the Defendant will follow the unlawful Electoral Count Act and, in so doing, eviscerate Rep. Gohmert's constitutional right and duty to vote for President under the Twelfth Amendment. With injuries directly caused by a defendant, plaintiffs can show an injury in fact with "little question" of causation or redressability. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. at 561-62. Although the Defendant did not cause the underlying election fraud, the Defendant nonetheless will directly cause Rep. Gohmert's injury, which is causation—and redressability—under Defenders of Wild.

By contrast, the Arizona Electors suffer indirect injury vis-à-vis this Defendant. But for the alleged wrongful conduct of Arizona executive branch officials under color of law, the Plaintiff Arizona Electors would have been certified as the presidential electors for Arizona, and Arizona's Governor and Secretary of State would have transmitted uncontested votes for Donald J. Trump and Michael R. Pence to the Electoral College. The certification and transmission of a competing slate of Biden electors has resulted in a unique injury that only Plaintiff Arizona Electors could suffer, namely, having a competing slate of electors take their place and their votes in the Electoral College. While the Vice President did not cause Plaintiffs' initial injury—that happened in Arizona—the Vice President stands in the position at the Joint Session on January 6 to ratify and purport to make lawful the unlawful injuries that Plaintiffs suffered in Arizona. That is causation enough for Article III:

According to the USDA, the injury suffered by Sierra Club is caused by the independent actions (i.e., pumping decisions) of third party farmers, over whom the USDA has no coercive control. Although we recognize that causation is not proven if the injury complained of is the result of the independent action of some third party not before the court, this does not mean that causation can be proven only if the governmental agency has coercive control over those third parties. Rather, the relevant inquiry in this case is whether the USDA has the ability through various programs to affect the pumping decisions of those third party farmers to such an extent that the plaintiff's injury could be relieved.

Sierra Club v. Glickman, 156 F.3d 606, 614 (5th Cir. 1998) (interior quotation marks, citations, and alterations omitted, emphasis in original); Tel. & Data Sys. v. FCC, 19 F.3d 42, 47 (D.C. Cir. 1994); Synthetic Organic Chem. Mfrs. Ass'n v. Sec'y, Dep't of Health & Human Servs., 720 F.Supp. 1244, 1248 n.2 (W.D. La. 1989) ("any traceable injury will provide a basis for standing, even where it occurs through the acts of a third party").

When third parties inflict injury—even private third parties—that injury is traceable to government action if the injurious conduct “would have been illegal without that [governmental] action.” Simon v. Eastern Kentucky Welfare Rights Org., 426 U.S. 26, 45 n.25 (1976). As explained below, Vice President Pence stands ready to ratify Plaintiffs’ injuries via the unconstitutional Electoral Count Act, which is causation enough to enjoin his actions. Alternatively, “plaintiff’s injury could be relieved” within the meaning of Sierra Club v. Glickman if the Vice President rejected the Electoral Count Act as unconstitutional.

A procedural-rights plaintiff must also show that “fixing the alleged procedural violation could cause the agency to ‘change its position’ on the substantive action,” Ctr. for Biological Diversity v. United States EPA, 937 F.3d 533, 543 (5th Cir. 2019), which is easy enough here/ Under the Electoral Count Act, the “Blue” or “Biden” states have a bare House majority in the Congress that will vote on January 6. Under the Twelfth Amendment, however, the “Red” or “Trump” states have a 27-20-3 majority where each state delegation gets one vote in the House’s election of the President. That distinction satisfies both third-party causation and procedural-rights tests for Article III standing.

The Twelfth Amendment gives Defendant exclusive authority and sole discretion as to which set of electors to count, or not to count any set of electors. If no candidate receives a majority of electoral votes, then the President is to be chosen by the House, where “the votes shall be taken by States, the representation from each state having one vote.” U.S. CONST. amend. XII. If Defendant Pence instead follows the procedures in Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act, Plaintiffs’ electoral votes will not be counted because (a) the Democratic majority House of Representatives will not “decide” to count the electoral votes of Plaintiff Republican electors; and (b) either the Senate will concur with the House not to count their votes, or the Senate will not concur, in which case, the electoral votes cast by Biden’s electors shall be counted because the Biden slate of electors was certified by Arizona’s executive. Under the Constitution, by contrast, the Vice President counts the votes and—if the count is indeterminate—the vote proceeds immediately to the House for President and to the Senate for Vice President. See U.S. CONST. amend. XII.<sup>1</sup>

3. This Court can redress Plaintiffs’ injuries.

Even if this Court would lack jurisdiction to enjoin the Vice President, but see Sections I.B-I.C, infra (immunity does not bar this action), this Court’s authoritative declaration would provide redress enough. See Franklin v. Massachusetts, 505 U.S. 788, 803 (1992) (“we may assume it is substantially likely that the President and other executive and congressional officials would abide by an authoritative interpretation of the census statute and constitutional provision by the District Court, even though they would not be directly bound by such a determination”). The

---

<sup>1</sup> This intent that the Vice President count the votes is borne out by a unanimous resolution attached to the final Constitution that described the procedures for electing the first President (i.e., for the one time when there would not already be a sitting Vice President), stating in relevant part “that the Senators should appoint a President of the Senate, for the sole Purpose of receiving, opening and counting the Votes for President.” 2 M. Farrand, RECORDS OF THE FEDERAL CONVENTION OF 1787, at 666 (1911). For all subsequent elections, when there would be a Vice President to act as President of the Senate, the Constitution vests the opening and counting in the Vice President.

Electoral Count Act is blatantly unconstitutional in many respects, see Section I.A, infra, and “it is the province and duty of the judicial department to determine in cases regularly brought before them, whether the powers of any branch of the government, and even those of the legislature in the enactment of laws, have been exercised in conformity to the Constitution.” Powell v. McCormack, 395 U.S. 486, 506 (1969) (interior quotations omitted).

Even if Plaintiffs do not ultimately prevail under the process that the Twelfth Amendment requires, the relief requested would nonetheless redress their injuries from the unconstitutional Electoral Count Act process in two respects . First, with respect to seeking to follow the Twelfth Amendment procedure over that of 3 U.S.C. § 15, it would redress Rep. Gohmert’s procedural injuries enough to proceed under the correct procedure, even if they do not prevail substantively. FEC v. Akins, 524 U.S. 11, 25 (1998). Second, with respect to the Arizona Electors, it would redress their unequal-footing injuries to treat all rival elector slates the same, even if the House and not the electors choose the next President. Heckler v. Mathews, 465 U.S. 728, 739-40 (1984) (“when the right invoked is that to equal treatment, the appropriate remedy is a mandate of equal treatment, a result that can be accomplished by withdrawal of benefits from the favored class as well as by extension of benefits to the excluded class”) (citations and footnotes omitted, emphasis in original). In each respect, Article III does not require that Plaintiffs show that they will prevail in order to show redressability.

The declaratory relief that Plaintiffs request would redress their injuries enough for Article III and in the chart as set forth:

Event/Issue	3 U.S.C. § 15	Twelfth Amendment
One Congress purports to bind future Congresses	Yes	No
Rival slates of electors	Bicameral dispute resolution with no presentment; state executive breaks ties	Vice President counts; House and Senate respectively elect President and Vice President if inconclusive
Violates Presentment Clause	Yes	No
Role for state governors	Yes	No
House voters	Each member votes ( e.g. , CA gets 53 votes, ND gets 1)	Each state delegation votes ( e.g. , CA and ND get 1 vote)

As is plain from these material—and, here, dispositive—differences between the Twelfth Amendment and 3 U.S.C. § 15, the two provisions cannot be reconciled.

4. Plaintiffs’ procedural injuries lower the constitutional bar for immediacy and redressability.

Given that Plaintiffs suffer a concrete injury to their voting rights, Plaintiffs also can press their procedural injuries under the Electoral Count Act. For procedural injuries, Article III’s redressability and immediacy requirements apply to the procedural violation that will (or someday might) injure a concrete interest, rather than to the concrete future injury. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. at 571-72 & n.7. Specifically, the injuries that Plaintiffs assert affect the procedure by which the status of their votes will be considered, which lowers the thresholds for immediacy and redressability under this Circuit’s and the Supreme Court’s precedents. Id.; Glickman, 156 F.3d at 613 (“in a procedural rights case, ... the plaintiff is not held to the normal standards for [redressability] and immediacy”); accord Nat’l Treasury Employees Union v. U.S., 101 F.3d 1423, 1428-29 (D.C. Cir. 1996). Similarly, a plaintiff with concrete injury can invoke Constitution’s structural protections of liberty. Bond v. United States, 564 U.S. 211, 222-23 (2011).

Finally, voters from smaller states like Arizona suffer an equal-footing injury and a procedural injury vis-à-vis larger states like California because the Electoral Count Act purports to replace the process provided in the Twelfth Amendment. Under the Electoral Count Act, California has five times the votes that Arizona has, but under the Twelfth Amendment California and Arizona each have one vote. Compare 3 U.S.C. § 15 with U.S. CONST. amend. XII. That analysis applies in third-party injury cases. See Clinton v. New York, 524 U.S. 417, 433 & n.22 (1998) (unequal-footing analysis applies to indirect-injury plaintiffs); cf. id. at 456-57 (that analysis should apply only to equal-protection cases) (Scalia, J., dissenting). Nullification of a procedural protection and any related bargaining power is injury enough, even in third-party cases. Clinton, 524 U.S. at 433 & n.22.

B. The Speech or Debate Clause does not insulate the Vice President.

The Speech or Debate Clause provides that “Senators and Representatives” “shall not be questioned in any other Place” “for any Speech or Debate in either House”:

The Senators and Representatives ... for any speech or debate in either House, ... shall not be questioned in any other place.

U.S. CONST. art I, § 6, cl. 1. “Not everything a Member of Congress may regularly do is a legislative act within the protection of the Speech or Debate Clause,” Minton v. St. Bernard Par. Sch. Bd., 803 F.2d 129, 134-35 (5th Cir. 1986) (interior quotations omitted), because the “clause has been interpreted to protect only purely legislative activities,” Williams v. Brooks, 945 F.2d 1322, 1326 (5th Cir. 1991) (internal quotation marks omitted), which renders it inapposite here. Where it applies, the Clause poses a jurisdictional bar not only to a court reaching the merits but also to putting the defendant to the burden of putting up a defense. Powell, 395 U.S. at 502-03. But “Legislative immunity does not, of course, bar all judicial review of legislative acts,” Powell, 395 U.S. at 503, and the Speech or Debate Clause does not even apply—by its terms—to the Vice President in his role as President of the Senate or to the Joint Session on January 6.

First, the Clause does not protect the Vice President acting in his role as President of the Senate. See U.S. CONST. art I, § 6, cl. 1; cf. Common Cause v. Biden, 748 F.3d 1280, 1284 (D.C. Cir. 2014) (declining to decide whether or not the Speech or Debate Clause protects the Vice President). At best for the Vice President, the question is an open one, but Plaintiffs respectfully submit that the Constitution's plain language should govern: The Clause does not apply to the Vice President. Instead, as here, where an unprotected officer of the House or Senate implements an unconstitutional action of the House or Senate, the judiciary has the power to enjoin the officer, even if it would lack the power to enjoin the House, the Senate, or their Members. Powell, 395 U.S. at 505. In short, the Speech or Debate Clause does not protect Vice President Pence at all.

Second, even if the Speech or Debate Clause did protect the Vice President acting as President of the Senate for legislative activity in the Senate, the Joint Session on January 6 is no such action. See U.S. CONST. art I, § 6, cl. 1. This is an election, and the Vice President has no more authority to disenfranchise voters via unconstitutional means as any other person.

C. Sovereign immunity does not bar this action.

The Defendant is Vice President Pence named as a defendant in his official capacity as the Vice President of the United States. With respect to injunctive or declaratory relief, it is a historical fact that at the time that the states ratified the federal Constitution, the equitable, judge-made, common-law doctrine that allows use of the sovereign's courts in the name of the sovereign to order the sovereign's officers to account for their unlawful conduct (i.e., the rule of law) was as least as firmly established and as much a part of the legal system as the judge-made, common-law doctrine of federal sovereign immunity. Louis L. Jaffee, The Right to Judicial Review I, 71 HARV. L. REV. 401, 433 (1958); A.B.A. Section of Admin. Law & Regulatory Practice, A Blackletter Statement of Federal Administrative Law, 54 ADMIN. L. REV. 1, 46 (2002) (it is blackletter law that “suits against government officers seeking prospective equitable relief are not barred by the doctrine of sovereign immunity”).

In determining whether the doctrine of Ex parte Young avoids immunity, a court need only conduct a “straightforward inquiry into whether [the] complaint alleges an ongoing violation of federal law and seeks relief properly characterized as prospective.” Verizon Md. Inc. v. Pub. Serv. Comm’n of Maryland, 535 U.S. 635, 645 (2002) (citations omitted). That is enough to survive a motion to dismiss on jurisdictional grounds: “The inquiry into whether suit lies under Ex parte Young does not include an analysis of the merits of the claim[.]” Id. at 638. Sovereign immunity poses no bar to jurisdiction here.<sup>2</sup>

The prayer for injunctive relief—that the Vice President be restrained from enforcing 3 U.S.C. §5 and §15 in contravention of the Twelfth Amendment of the Constitution—to instead follow the Twelfth Amendment, clearly satisfies the “straightforward inquiry.” Plaintiffs request declaratory relief to prevent unconstitutional action under 3 U.S.C. § 5 and § 15 and to give the power back to the states to vote for the President in accordance with the Twelfth Amendment. Therefore, the Defendant should be enjoined from proceeding to certify or count dueling electoral votes under the unconstitutional dispute resolution procedures in 3 U.S.C. § 5 and § 15, and instead to follow the constitutional process as set forth in the Twelfth Amendment of the Constitution.

---

<sup>2</sup> Indeed, the sovereign immunity afforded a Member of Congress is co-extensive with the protections afforded by the Speech or Debate Clause. In all other respects, Members of Congress are bound by the law to the same extent as other persons. Davis v. Passman, 442 U.S. 228, 246 (1979) (“although a suit against a Congressman for putatively unconstitutional actions taken in the course of his official conduct does raise special concerns counseling hesitation, we hold that these concerns are coextensive with the protections afforded by the Speech or Debate Clause”).

D. The political-question doctrine does not bar this suit.

The “political questions doctrine” can bar review of certain issues that the Constitution delegates to one of the other branches, but that bar does not apply to constitutional claims related to voting (other than claims brought under the Guaranty Clause of Article IV, §4):

We hold that this challenge to an apportionment presents no nonjusticiable “political question.” The mere fact that the suit seeks protection of a political right does not mean it presents a political question. Such an objection “is little more than a play upon words.”

Baker, 369 U.S. at 209. As in Baker, litigation over political rights is not the same as a political question.

E. This case presents a federal question, and abstention principles do not apply.

Article III, § 2, of the Federal Constitution provides that, “The judicial Power shall extend to all Cases, in Law and Equity, arising under this Constitution, the Laws of the United States, and Treaties made, or which shall be made, under their Authority[.]” It is clear that the cause of action is one which “arises under” the Federal Constitution. Baker, 369 U.S. at 199. In Baker, the Plaintiffs alleged that, by means of a 1901 Tennessee statute that arbitrarily and capriciously apportioned the seats in the General Assembly among the State’s 95 counties and failed to reapportion them subsequently notwithstanding substantial growth and redistribution of the State’s population, they suffered a “debasement of their votes” and were thereby denied the equal protection of the laws guaranteed them by the Fourteenth Amendment. They sought, inter alia, a declaratory judgment that the 1901 statute is unconstitutional and an injunction restraining certain state officers from conducting any further elections under it. Id. The Baker line of cases recognizes that “that voters who allege facts showing disadvantage to themselves as individuals have standing to sue.”

The federal and constitutional nature of these controversies deprives abstention doctrines of any relevance whatsoever. First, state laws for the appointment of presidential electors are federalized by the operation of The Electoral Count Act of 1887. McPherson v. Blacker, 146 U.S. 1, 27 (1892); Bush v. Gore, 531 U.S. 98, 113 (2000) (Rehnquist, C.J., concurring) (“A significant departure from the legislative scheme for appointing Presidential electors presents a federal constitutional question.”). Second, “[i]t is no original prerogative of State power to appoint a representative, a senator, or President for the Union.” J. Story, 1 COMMENTARIES ON THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES § 627 (3d ed. 1858). Logically, “any state authority to regulate election to [federal] offices could not precede their very creation by the Constitution,” meaning that any “such power had to be delegated to, rather than reserved by, the States.” Cook v. Gralike, 531 U.S. 510, 522 (2001) (internal quotations omitted).

A more quintessentially federal question than which slate of electors will be counted under the 12th Amendment and 3 U.S.C. § 15 to elect the President and Vice President can scarcely be imagined.

F. Plaintiffs are entitled to an expedited declaratory judgment.

Under Rule 57, an expedited declaratory judgment is appropriate where, as here, it would “terminate the controversy” based on undisputed or relatively undisputed facts. See FED. R. CIV. P. 57, Advisory Committee Notes. The facts relevant to this controversy are not in dispute, namely: (1) there are competing slates of electors for Arizona and the other Contested States that have been or will be submitted to the Electoral College; (2) the Contested States collectively have sufficient (contested) electoral votes to determine the winner of the 2020 General Election—President Trump or former Vice President Biden; (3) legislators in Arizona and other Contested States have contested the certification of their State’s electoral votes by State executives, due to substantial evidence of voter fraud that is the subject of ongoing litigation and investigations; and

(4) Senators and Members of the House of Representatives have expressed their intent to challenge the electors and electoral votes certified by State executives in the Contested States.

As a result, Defendant Vice President Pence, in his capacity as President of the Senate and as the Presiding Officer for the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress will be have to decide between (a) following the requirements of the Twelfth Amendment, and exercising his exclusive authority and sole discretion in deciding which slate of electors and electoral votes to count for Arizona, or neither, or (b) following the distinct and inconsistent procedures set forth in Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act. The expedited declaratory judgment requested, namely, declaring that Section 5 and 15 of the Electoral Count Act are unconstitutional to the extent they conflict with the Twelfth Amendment and the Electors Clause, and that Defendant Pence may not follow these unconstitutional procedures, will terminate the controversy. Further, as discussed below, the requested declaratory judgment would also establish that Plaintiffs meet all of the requirements for any additional injunctive relief required to effectuate the declaratory judgment by enjoining Defendant Pence from violating the Twelfth Amendment.

II. PLAINTIFFS ARE ENTITLED TO EMERGENCY INJUNCTIVE RELIEF.

“A plaintiff seeking a preliminary injunction must establish that he is likely to succeed on the merits, that he is likely to suffer irreparable harm in the absence of preliminary relief, that the balance of equities tips in his favor, and that an injunction is in the public interest.” Winter v. Natural Resources Defense Council, Inc., 555 U.S. 7, 21 (2008). If this Court grants the requested declaratory judgment, then all elements required for injunctive relief will have been met.

A. Plaintiffs have a substantial likelihood of success.

The first—and most important—Winter factor is the likelihood of movants’ prevailing. Winter, 555 U.S. at 20. Plaintiffs are likely to prevail because this Court has jurisdiction for this action, see Section I, supra, and because the Electoral Count Act is blatantly unconstitutional.

1. Unconstitutional laws are nullities.

At the outset, if the Electoral Count Act violates the Constitution, the Electoral Count Act is a nullity:

[I]t is the province and duty of the judicial department to determine in cases regularly brought before them, whether the powers of any branch of the government, and even those of the legislature in the enactment of laws, have been exercised in conformity to the Constitution; and if they have not, to treat their acts as null and void.

Powell, 395 U.S. at 506 (interior quotations omitted, emphasis added). “Due respect for the decisions of a coordinate branch of Government demands that we invalidate a congressional enactment only upon a plain showing that Congress has exceeded its constitutional bounds.” United States v. Morrison, 529 U.S. 598, 607 (2000) (finding Congress exceeded its authority under the Commerce Clause in regulating an area of the law left to the States. “Constitutional deprivations may not be justified by some remote administrative benefit to the State.” Harman v. Forssenius, 380 U.S. 528, 542-43 (1965). Put simply, “that which is not supreme must yield to that which is supreme.” Brown v. Maryland, 25 U.S. (12 Wheat.) 419, 448 (1827). Although Brown arose in a federal-versus-state context, the same simple truth applies in a constitution-versus-statute context: the supreme enactment controls the lesser enactment.

2. The Electoral Count Act violates the Electors Clause and the Twelfth Amendment.

The requested expedited summary proceeding granting declaratory judgment will address the merits of Plaintiffs’ claims, which raise only legal issues as to whether the provisions of Sections 5 and 15 of the Electoral Count Act addressing the counting of electoral votes from competing slates of electors for a given state are in conflict with the Twelfth Amendment and the Electors Clause and are therefore unconstitutional. In other words, if the Court grants the requested relief, that holding and relief will be granted because the Court has found that these provisions of the Electoral Count Act are unconstitutional and that Plaintiffs have in fact succeeded on the merits.

Under 3 USC § 5, the Presidential electors of a state and their appointment by the State shall be conclusive:

If any State shall have provided, by laws enacted prior to the day fixed for the appointment of the electors, for its final determination of any controversy or contest concerning the appointment of all or any of the electors of such State, by judicial or other methods or procedures, and such determination shall have been made at least six days before the time fixed for the meeting of the electors, such determination made pursuant to such law so existing on said day, and made at least six days prior to said time of meeting of the electors, shall be conclusive, and shall govern in the counting of the electoral votes as provided in the Constitution, and as hereinafter regulated, so far as the ascertainment of the electors appointed by such State is concerned.

3 USCS § 5.

This statutory provision takes away the authority given to the Vice-President under the Twelfth Amendment in determining which electoral votes are conclusive. 3 U.S.C. §15 in relevant part states that both Houses, referencing the House of Representatives and the Senate, may concurrently reject certified votes, and further that if there is a disagreement, then, in that case, the votes of the electors who have been certified by the Executive of the State shall be determinative:

...When all objections so made to any vote or paper from a State shall have been received and read, the Senate shall thereupon withdraw, and such objections shall be submitted to the Senate for its decision; and the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall, in like manner, submit such objections to the House of Representatives for its decision; and no electoral vote or votes from any State which shall have been regularly given by electors whose appointment has been lawfully certified to according to section 6 of this title [3 USCS § 6] from which but one return has been received shall be rejected, but the two Houses concurrently may reject the vote or votes when they agree that such vote or votes have not been so regularly given by electors whose appointment has been so certified. If more than one return or paper purporting to be a return from a State shall have been received by the President of the Senate, those votes, and those only, shall be counted which shall have been regularly given by the electors who are shown by the determination mentioned in section 5 [3 USCS § 5] of this title to have been appointed, if the determination in said section provided for shall have been made, or by such successors or substitutes, in case of a vacancy in the board of electors so ascertained, as have been appointed to fill such vacancy in the mode provided by the laws of the State; but in case there shall arise the question which of two or more of such State authorities determining what electors have been appointed, as mentioned in section 5 of this title [3 USCS § 5], is the lawful tribunal of such State, the votes regularly given of those electors, and those only, of such State shall be counted whose title as electors the two Houses, acting separately, shall concurrently decide is supported by the decision of such State so authorized by its law; and in such case of more than one return or paper purporting to be a return from a State, if there shall have been no such determination of the question in the State aforesaid, then those votes, and those only, shall be counted which the two Houses shall concurrently decide were cast by lawful electors appointed in accordance with the laws of the State, unless the two Houses, acting separately, shall concurrently decide such votes not to be the lawful votes of the legally appointed electors of such State. But if the two Houses shall disagree in respect of the counting of such votes, then, and in that case, the votes of the electors whose appointment shall have been certified by the executive of the State, under the seal thereof, shall be counted. When the two Houses have voted, they shall immediately again meet, and the presiding officer shall then announce the decision of the questions submitted. No votes or papers from any other State shall be acted upon until the objections previously made to the votes or papers from any State shall have been finally disposed of.

3 U.S.C. § 15.

This expressly conflicts with the Twelfth Amendment which has already set what role the House and the Senate play in addressing the votes of electors:

The electors shall meet in their respective states and vote by ballot for President and Vice-President, one of whom, at least, shall not be an inhabitant of the same state with themselves; they shall name in their ballots the person voted for as President, and in distinct ballots the person voted for as Vice-President, and they shall make distinct lists of all persons voted for as President, and of all persons voted for as Vice-President, and of the number of votes for each, which lists they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the seat of the government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate;--The President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and the votes shall then be counted;--the person having the greatest number of votes for President, shall be the President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of electors appointed; and if no person have such majority, then from the persons having the highest numbers not exceeding three on the list of those voted for as President, the House of Representatives shall choose immediately, by ballot, the President. But in choosing the President, the votes shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote; a quorum for this purpose shall consist of a member or members from two-thirds of the states, and a majority of all the states shall be necessary to a choice. And if the House of Representatives shall not choose a President whenever the right of choice shall devolve upon them, before the fourth day of March next following, then the Vice-President shall act as President, as in the case of the death or other constitutional disability of the President. The person having the greatest number of votes as Vice-President, shall be the Vice-President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of electors appointed, and if no person have a majority, then from the two highest numbers on the list, the Senate shall choose the Vice-President; a quorum for the purpose shall consist of two-thirds of the whole number of Senators, and a majority of the whole number shall be necessary to a choice. But no person constitutionally ineligible to the office of President shall be eligible to that of Vice-President of the United States.

U.S. CONST. amend. XII. (emphasis added).

The Constitution is unambiguously clear that: “The President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and the votes shall then be counted” “... and if no person have such majority, then from the persons having the highest numbers not exceeding three on the list of those voted for as President, the House of Representatives [who] shall choose immediately, by ballot, the President. But in choosing the President, the votes shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote.” Whereas 3 U.S.C. §15 and the incorporated referenced to 3 U.S.C. §5 delegate the authority to the Executive of the State in the event of disagreement, in direct conflict with the Twelfth Amendment and directly taking the opportunity of Presidential Electors' competing slates from being counted.<sup>3</sup>

3. The Electoral Count Act violates the Constitution's structural protections of liberty.

The Electoral Count Act exceeds the power of Congress to enact because “one legislature may not bind the legislative authority of its successors,” United States v. Winstar Corp., 518 U.S. 839, 872 (1996), which is a foundational and “centuries-old concept,” id., that traces to Blackstone’s maxim that “Acts of parliament derogatory from the power of subsequent parliaments bind not.” Id. (quoting 1 WILLIAM BLACKSTONE, COMMENTARIES *90). “There is no constitutionally prescribed method by which one Congress may require a future Congress to interpret or discharge a constitutional responsibility in any particular way.” Laurence H. Tribe, Erog v. Hsub and Its Disguises: Freeing Bush v. Gore from Its Hall of Mirrors, 115 HARV. L. REV. 170, 267 n.388 (2001). Thus, the Electoral Count Act is a nullity because it exceeded the power of Congress to enact.

The Electoral Count Act also violates the Presentment Clause by purporting to create a type of bicameral order, resolution, or vote that is not presented to the President:

Every Order, Resolution, or Vote, to Which the Concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary (except on a question of Adjournment) shall be presented to the President of the United States; and before the Same shall take Effect, shall be approved by him, or being disapproved by him, shall be repassed by

---

<sup>3</sup> Similarly, 3 U.S.C. § 6 is inconsistent with the Electors Clause—which provides that electors “shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the seat of the government of the United States” the results of their vote, U.S. Const. art. II, § 1, cl. 2-3—because § 6 relies on state executives to forward the results of the electors’ vote to the Archivist for delivery to Congress. 3 U.S.C. § 6. Although the means of delivery are arguably inconsequential, the Constitution vests state executives with no role whatsoever in the process of electing a President. A state executive lends no official imprimatur to a given slate of electors under the Constitution.

two thirds of the Senate and House of Representatives, according to the Rules and Limitations prescribed in the Case of a Bill.

U.S. CONST. art. I, § 7, cl. 3 (emphasis added). The House and Senate cannot resolve the issues that the Electoral Count Act asks them to resolve without either a supermajority in both houses or presentment.

The Electoral Count Act similarly improperly restricts the authority of the House of Representatives and the Senate to control their internal discretion and procedures pursuant to Article I, Section 5 which provides that “[e]ach House may determine the Rules of its Proceedings ...” U.S. CONST. art. I, § 5, cl. 2. The Electoral Count Act also delegates tie-breaking authority to State executives (who have no agency under the Electors Clause or election amendments) when a State presents competing slates that Congress cannot resolve. As such, the Electoral Count Act also violates the non-delegation doctrine, the separation-of-powers and anti-entrenchment doctrines. See generally Chris Land & David Schultz, On the Unenforceability of the Electoral Count Act, 13 Rutgers J.L. & Pub. Policy 340, 364-377 (2016).

As indicated, Plaintiffs have standing to press these structural protections of liberty because Plaintiffs also suffer concrete injury through the debasement of their votes. See Section I.A.4, supra.

B. Plaintiffs will suffer irreparable injury.

Plaintiffs’ votes will be counted or not counted at the January 6 joint session. The failure to count a lawful vote is an irreparable injury. See, e.g., Obama for Am. v. Husted, 697 F.3d 423, 436 (6th Cir. 2012) (“A restriction on the fundamental right to vote . . . constitutes irreparable injury.”). Indeed, the deprivation of any fundamental right constitutes irreparable injury, Murphree v. Winter, 589 F. Supp. 374, 381 (S.D. Miss. 1984) (citing Elrod v. Burns, 427 U.S. 347, 373-74 (1976)), and voting rights are “a fundamental political right, because preservative of all rights.” Reynolds v. Sims, 377 U.S. 533, 561-62 (1964) (internal quotations omitted). Moreover, if the counting of votes proceeds under the Electoral Count Act, Plaintiffs’ votes will be adjudicated via an unconstitutional procedure, which also qualifies as irreparable harm: there will be no opportunity to revisit the issue. As with standing for procedural injuries, irreparable harm from a procedural violation requires an underlying concrete injury or due-process interest, which Plaintiffs have and which will be irretrievably lost if the Vice President proceeds under the Electoral Count Act. Under the circumstances, Plaintiffs’ procedural harms also are irreparable. Commissioner v. Shapiro, 424 U.S. 614, 629-30 (1976).

C. Plaintiffs need not demonstrate irreparable harm for declaratory relief.

“The traditional prerequisite for the granting of injunctive relief, demonstration of irreparable injury, is not a prerequisite to the granting of a declaratory relief” because the Declaratory Judgments Act “provides an adequate remedy and at law, and hence a showing of irreparable injury is unnecessary.” 10 FED. PROC., L. ED. §23 :4 (citing 28 U.S.C. § 2201 and Steffel v. Thompson, 415 U.S. 452 (1974)). “The existence of another adequate remedy does not preclude a declaratory judgment that is otherwise appropriate.” FED. R. CIV. P. 57. In fact, the central purpose of the Declaratory Judgments Act is to enable parties to adjudicate their rights without waiting until after the injury has occurred or damages have accrued. See, e.g., Russian Standard Vodka (USA), Inc. v. Allied Domecq Spirits & Wine USA, Inc., 523 F.Supp.2d 376, 381 (S.D.N.Y. 2007) (citing In re Combustion, 838 F.2d 35, 36 (2d Cir. 1988)).

In any event, the irreparable-harm requirement for injunctive relief does not apply to declaratory relief. The fact that another remedy would be equally effective affords no ground for declining declaratory relief: “Rule 57 ... expressly states that the availability of an alternative remedy does not prevent the district court from granting a declaratory judgment.” Marine Chance Shipping v. Sebastian, 143 F.3d 216, 218-19 (5th Cir. 1998); see also 28 U.S.C. §2201; Hurley v.

Reed, 288 F.2d 844, 848 (D.C. Cir. 1961); Tierney v. Schweiker, 718 F.2d 449, 457 (D.C. Cir. 1983). A prior formal or informal demand to the defendant is not a prerequisite to seeking declaratory relief, Rowan Cos. v. Griffin, 876 F.2d 26, 28 (5th Cir. 1989), and showing “irreparable injury... is not necessary for the issuance of a declaratory judgment.” Tierney, 718 F.2d at 457 (citing Steffel v. Thompson, 415 U.S. 452, 471-72 (1974)). Thus, even if not entitled to injunctive relief, Plaintiffs still would be entitled to declaratory relief.

The requested declaratory judgment would terminate the controversy, offer relief from uncertainty, and eliminate the need for Plaintiffs to suffer the irreparable harm from the certainty that their electoral votes would be disregarded that would occur if Defendant Vice President Pence were to count electoral votes, and resolve disputes regarding competing slates of electors, under the unconstitutional provisions of the Electoral Count Act, rather than the procedures set forth in the Twelfth Amendment.

D. The balance of equities favors Plaintiffs.

“Traditional equitable principles requiring the balancing of public and private interests control the grant of declaratory or injunctive relief in the federal courts.” Webster v. Doe, 486 U.S. 592, 604-05 (1988). The scope of requested injunctive relief—directing Defendant Pence to carry out his duties as President of the Senate and as Presiding Officer for the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress in compliance with the U.S. Constitution—is drawn as narrowly as possible and does not require Defendant Pence to take any affirmative action apart from those he is authorized to take under the Twelfth Amendment. Moreover, it is difficult to imagine how the relief requested, which expands rather than restricts Defendant’s discretion and authority, by eliminating facially unconstitutional restrictions on the same could cause any hardship to Defendant.

E. The public interest favors Plaintiffs.

The last stay criterion is the public interest. Where the parties dispute the lawfulness of government actions, the public interest collapses into the merits: “It is always in the public interest to prevent the violation of a party’s constitutional rights.” Jackson Women’s Health Org. v. Currier, 760 F.3d 448, 458 n.9 (5th Cir. 2014) (alterations omitted); cf. Tex. Democratic Party v. Benkiser, 459 F.3d 582, 595 (5th Cir. 2006) (“injunction serves the public interest in that it enforces the correct and constitutional application of Texas’s duly-enacted election laws”) League of Women Voters of the United States v. Newby, 838 F.3d 1, 12 (D.C. Cir. 2016) (“no public interest in the perpetuation of unlawful [government] action”); accord ACLU v. Ashcroft, 322 F.3d 240, 247 (3d Cir. 2003) (“the public interest [is] not served by the enforcement of an unconstitutional law”) (interior quotation omitted); Washington v. Reno, 35 F.3d 1093, 1103 (6th Cir. 1994) (recognizing “greater public interest in having governmental agencies abide by the federal laws”); Pac. Frontier v. Pleasant Grove City, 414 F.3d 1221, 1237 (10th Cir. 2005).

Here the declaratory and injunctive relief sought vindicates both Defendant Vice President’s plenary authority as President of the Senate and Presiding Officer to count electoral votes, as well as the constitutional rights of the Plaintiffs to have their electoral votes counted in the manner that the Constitution provides, the rights of the Arizona legislative Plaintiffs under the Electors Clause to appoint Presidential Electors for the State of Arizona, and the right of Rep Gohmert and those he represents to have their vote counted in the manner that the Twelfth Amendment provides.

CONCLUSION

Therefore, it is respectfully requested that the Court grant Plaintiffs' Motion and the Court grant a declaratory judgment declaring 3 U.S.C. §5 - §15 unconstitutional on its face for violating the specific delegated authorities of the Twelfth Amendment of the Constitution.

Dated: December 28, 2020

Respectfully submitted,

Howard Kleinhendler
Howard Kleinhendler Esquire
NY Bar No. 2657120
369 Lexington Ave., 12th Floor
New York, New York 10017
Tel: (917) 793-1188
Fax: (732) 901-0832
Email: howard@kleinhendler.com

/s/William L. Sessions
William Lewis Sessions
Texas Bar No. 18041500
Sessions & Associates, PLLC
14591 North Dallas Parkway, Suite 400
Dallas, TX 75254
Tel: (214) 217-8855
Fax: (214) 723-5346 (fax)
Email: lsessions@sessionslaw.net

Lawrence J. Joseph
DC Bar No. 464777
Law Office of Lawrence J. Joseph
1250 Connecticut Ave, NW, Suite 700-1A
Washington, DC 20036
Tel: (202) 355-9452
Fax: 202) 318-2254
Email: ljoseph@larryjoseph.com

Julia Z. Haller
DC Bar No. 466921
Brandon Johnson
DC Bar No. 491370
Defending the Republic
601 Pennsylvania Ave., NW
Suite 900
South Building
Washington, DC 20004
Tel: (561) 888-3166
Fax:
Email: hallerjulia@outlook.com
Email: brandoncjohnson6@aol.com

Counsel for Plaintiffs

CERTIFICATE OF CONFERENCE

I hereby certify that as counsel for Plaintiffs, I have complied with the meet and confer requirement in Local Rule CV-7(h) in the following respects: I have personally contacted and spoken this morning with Gregory F. Jacob, Counsel for Vice President Michael R. Pence, the Defendant. I have caused Mr. Jacob to receive a copy of the Complaint for Expedited Declaratory and Emergency Injunctive Relief and a duplicate unfiled copy of Plaintiffs' Emergency Motion for Expedited Declaratory Judgment and Emergency Motion for Injunctive Relief without the certificate of conference or certificate of service. Mr. Jacob, co-counsel Larry Joseph, and I discussed the legal merits of the foregoing motion at length. Mr. Jacob advised that he needed to consult with his client, who was absent from his office and on vacation, and would contact Mr. Joseph and me regarding Vice President Pence's position on the merits of the motion after conferring with his client. Counsel for Defendant Pence stated that he did not presently have authority to agree to or oppose the motion. In light of the emergency nature of this motion and the fact that the parties' counsel could not presently agree on the merits of the motion, undersigned counsel has concluded that the parties are presently at an impasse, leaving an open issue for the court to resolve. Undersigned counsel will immediately advise the Court of any change in the parties' positions.

Dated: December 28, 2020

William Lewis Sessions
Counsel for Plaintiffs

CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE

I hereby certify that on the date specified below, I electronically filed the foregoing motion (together with its accompanying proposed order) with the Clerk of the Court using the CM/ECF system. In addition, because counsel for the defendant has not yet filed an appearance, I served one true and correct copy via Federal Express, next-day delivery, on the defendant and on the United States Attorney for the Eastern District of Texas at the following addresses, with a courtesy copy via facsimile and/or email to the addresses specified:

Gregory F. Jacob
Counsel to the Vice President
Office of the Vice President
Eisenhower Executive Office Building
Washington, DC 20501
E-mail: gregory.f.jacob@ovp.eop.gov

Stephen J. Cox
United States Attorney
350 Magnolia Ave., Suite 150
Beaumont, Texas 77701
Tel. (409) 839-2538
Fax: (409) 839-2550
Email: stephen.j.cox@usdoj.gov

Dated: December 28, 2020

William Lewis Sessions
Counsel for Plaintiffs

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF TEXAS
TYLER DIVISION

LOUIE GOHMERT, TYLER BOWYER, NANCY
COTTLE, JAKE HOFFMAN, ANTHONY KERN,
JAMES R. LAMON, SAM MOORHEAD, ROBERT
MONTGOMERY, LORAIN PELLEGRINO, GREG
SAFSTEN, KELLI WARD and MICHAEL WARD,

Plaintiffs,

v.

THE HONORABLE MICHAEL R. PENCE, VICE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, in his
official capacity,

Defendant.

Civil Action No. 6:20-cv-00660

(Election Matter)

[PROPOSED] ORDER GRANTING EMERGENCY INJUNCTIVE RELIEF

The Court has before it Plaintiffs' Emergency Motion for Expedited Declaratory Judgment and Emergency Motion for Injunctive Relief filed December 28, 2020 ("Motion") and the Plaintiffs' December 27, 2020 Complaint for Expedited Declaratory Judgment and Emergency Injunctive Relief ("Complaint") seeking:

1. A declaratory judgment finding that:
  - a. Sections 5 and 15 of the Electoral Count Act, 3 U.S.C. §§ 5 and 15, are unconstitutional insofar as they conflict with and violate the Electors Clause and the Twelfth Amendment, U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1, cl. 1 & amend. XII;
  - b. That Defendant Vice-President Michael R. Pence, in his capacity as President of Senate and Presiding Officer of the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress under the Twelfth Amendment, is subject solely to the requirements of the Twelfth Amendment and may exercise the exclusive authority and sole discretion in determining which electoral votes to count for a given State, and must ignore and may not rely on any provisions of the Electoral Count Act that would limit his exclusive authority and at his sole discretion to determine which of two or more competing slates of electors' votes are to be counted for President;

- c. That, with respect to competing slates of electors the State of Arizona or other Contested States, the Twelfth Amendment contains the exclusive dispute resolution mechanisms, namely, that (i) Vice-President Pence determines which slate of electors' votes shall be counted, or neither, for that State and (ii) if no person has a majority, then the House of Representatives (and only the House of Representatives) shall chose the President where "the votes [in the House of Representatives] shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote," U.S. CONST. amend. XII;
- d. That, also with respect to competing slates of electors, the alternative dispute resolution procedure or priority rule in 3 U.S.C. § 15, is null and void insofar as it nullifies and replaces the Twelfth Amendment rules above by with an entirely different procedure in which the House and Senate each separately "decide" which slate is to be counted, and in the event of a disagreement, then only "the votes of the electors whose appointment shall have been certified by the executive of the State ... shall be counted," 3 U.S.C. § 15; and

2. An order granting any other declaratory or injunctive relief necessary to support or effectuate the foregoing declaratory judgments.

The Court has reviewed the terms and conditions of the December 28, 2020 Motion and Complaint, and the Court's Declaratory Judgment issued December 31, 2020, granting the requested expedited declaratory judgments in Paragraphs 1(a)-1(d) above and for good cause shown IT IS HEREBY ORDERED THAT:

1. Defendant Vice President Michael R. Pence shall, in his capacity as President of the Senate and as Presiding Officer for the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress ("Joint Session"), solely follow the terms of the Twelfth Amendment in counting the electoral votes at the Joint Session and any other proceedings addressing the counting of electoral votes for choosing the next President in connection with the 2020 General Election;
2. Defendant Vice President Pence shall not follow the provisions of Sections 5 or 15 of the Electoral Count Act that this Court has found to be unconstitutional and in conflict with the Twelfth Amendment, and in particular, Defendant Vice President Pence
  - a. Shall not "call for objections" from Senators or House Members following the reading of any certificate or paper from electors for a given State, and instead shall exercise his exclusive authority and sole discretion under the Twelfth Amendment to "count" the electoral votes for a given state, including the decision as to which of the competing slates of electors' electoral votes to count, or not to count, for that State;

- b. Shall not give any preference or priority in counting electors certified by the State's executive over any other slate of electors, and shall instead give effect to the provisions of the Electors Clause for electors appointed by the State Legislature in whatever manner indicated by that State's legislatures;
- c. Shall not submit any disputes between competing slates of electors to be resolved under the procedures set forth in Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act, nor as Presiding Officer shall he permit any such objections or disputes to interrupt the counting of electoral votes at the Joint Session or delegate his exclusive authority under the Twelfth Amendment to Congress to determine which electoral votes are to be counted; and
- d. If and only if neither President Trump nor former Vice President Biden fails to receive a majority of electoral votes at the Joint Session, is he relieved of his exclusive authority to count electoral votes for choosing the President, at which point he shall direct the House of Representatives to "choose immediately by ballot" the President where "the votes shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote," as required under the Twelfth Amendment.

SO ORDERED.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

for the

Eastern District of Texas

Louis Buller Gohmert, Jr., Tyler Bowyer, Nancy
Cottle, Jake Hoffman, Anthony Kern, James R.
Lamon, Sam Moorhead, Robert Montgomery, Loraine
Pellegrino, Greg Safsten, Kelli Ward & Michael Ward

Plaintiff(s)

v.

The Honorable Michael R. Pence, Vice President of the United States, in his official capacity

Defendant(s)

Civil Action No. 6:20-cv-00660-JDK

SUMMONS IN A CIVIL ACTION

To: (Defendant's name and address) Hon. Michael R. Pence
Vice President of the United States
1 Observatory Circle NW
U.S. Naval Observatory
Washington, DC 20008

A lawsuit has been filed against you.

Within 21 days after service of this summons on you (not counting the day you received it) — or 60 days if you are the United States or a United States agency, or an officer or employee of the United States described in Fed. R. Civ. P. 12 (a)(2) or (3) — you must serve on the plaintiff an answer to the attached complaint or a motion under Rule 12 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. The answer or motion must be served on the plaintiff or plaintiff's attorney, whose name and address are:

William Lewis Sessions
Sessions & Associates, PLLC
14591 North Dallas Parkway, Suite 400
Dallas, TX 75254

If you fail to respond, judgment by default will be entered against you for the relief demanded in the complaint. You also must file your answer or motion with the court.

Date: 12/28/20

CLERK OF COURT

David A. O'Toole

Signature of Clerk or Deputy Clerk

Civil Action No. 6:20-cv-00600-JDK-JDL

PROOF OF SERVICE(This section should not be filed with the court unless required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 4 (l))*

This summons for (name of individual and title, if any) _____
 was received by me on (date) _____.

☐ I personally served the summons on the individual at (place) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I left the summons at the individual's residence or usual place of abode with (name) _____
 _____, a person of suitable age and discretion who resides there, on (date) _____, and mailed a copy to the individual's last known address; or

☐ I served the summons on (name of individual) _____, who is designated by law to accept service of process on behalf of (name of organization) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I returned the summons unexecuted because _____; or

☒ Other (specify): Pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 4(i)(2), I "sen[t] a copy of the summons and of the complaint by registered or certified mail to [Vice President Pence]" at both his White House office address and Naval Observatory official residence. (Because I served him twice as a precaution to ensure service, I am reporting below the cost for only one service.)

My fees are $ 0.00 for travel and $ 14.15 for services, for a total of $ 14.15.

I declare under penalty of perjury that this information is true.

Date: 12/29/2020

/s/ Lawrence J. Joseph

Server's signature

Lawrence J. Joseph, Counsel for Plaintiffs

Printed name and title

Law Office of Lawrence J. Joseph
 1250 Connecticut Avenue, NW, Suite 700
 Washington, DC 20036

Server's address

Additional information regarding attempted service, etc:

A true and correct copy of the certified-mail receipts for service is attached.

7020 2450 0000 7646 7903

U.S. Postal Service®
CERTIFIED MAIL® RECEIPT
 Domestic Mail Only

For Official Use Only

Web Tracking ID: 00540

OPTIONAL USE

Certified Mail Fee $2.55

Postage $7.75

Total Postage and Fees $10.30

Package $14.15

Return Receipt (hardcopy) $3.00

Return Receipt (electronic) $3.00

Certified Mail Restricted Delivery $40.00

Adult Signature Required $10.00

Adult Signature Restricted Delivery $10.00

0200
 12/29/2020
 20

Michael D. Price, Vice President of US
 1600 Pennsylvania Ave NW
 Washington DC 20500

7020 2450 0000 7646 7910

U.S. Postal Service®
CERTIFIED MAIL® RECEIPT
 Domestic Mail Only

For Official Use Only

Web Tracking ID: 00540

OPTIONAL USE

Certified Mail Fee $2.55

Postage $7.75

Total Postage and Fees $10.30

Package $14.15

Return Receipt (hardcopy) $3.00

Return Receipt (electronic) $3.00

Certified Mail Restricted Delivery $40.00

Adult Signature Required $10.00

Adult Signature Restricted Delivery $10.00

0200
 12/29/2020
 20

Michael D. Price, Vice President
 1600 Pennsylvania Ave NW
 Washington DC 20500

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

for the

Eastern District of Texas

Louis Buller Gohmert, Jr., Tyler Bowyer, Nancy
Cottle, Jake Hoffman, Anthony Kern, James R.
Lamon, Sam Moorhead, Robert Montgomery, Loraine
Pellegrino, Greg Safsten, Kelli Ward & Michael Ward

_____
Plaintiff(s)

v.

The Honorable Michael R. Pence, Vice President of the United States, in his official capacity

_____
Defendant(s)

Civil Action No. 6:20-cv-00660-JDK

SUMMONS IN A CIVIL ACTION

To: (Defendant's name and address) Jeffrey A. Rosen (SERVED)
Acting Attorney General
United States Department of Justice
950 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW
Washington, DC 20530

A lawsuit has been filed against you.

Within 21 days after service of this summons on you (not counting the day you received it) — or 60 days if you are the United States or a United States agency, or an officer or employee of the United States described in Fed. R. Civ. P. 12 (a)(2) or (3) — you must serve on the plaintiff an answer to the attached complaint or a motion under Rule 12 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. The answer or motion must be served on the plaintiff or plaintiff's attorney, whose name and address are:

William Lewis Sessions
Sessions & Associates, PLLC
14591 North Dallas Parkway, Suite 400
Dallas, TX 75254

If you fail to respond, judgment by default will be entered against you for the relief demanded in the complaint. You also must file your answer or motion with the court.

Date: 12/28/20

CLERK OF COURT

Signature of Clerk or Deputy Clerk

Civil Action No. 6:20-cv-00600-JDK-JDL

PROOF OF SERVICE(This section should not be filed with the court unless required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 4 (l))*

This summons for (name of individual and title, if any) _____
 was received by me on (date) _____.

☐ I personally served the summons on the individual at (place) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I left the summons at the individual's residence or usual place of abode with (name) _____
 _____, a person of suitable age and discretion who resides there,
 on (date) _____, and mailed a copy to the individual's last known address; or

☐ I served the summons on (name of individual) _____, who is designated by law to accept service of process on behalf of (name of organization) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I returned the summons unexecuted because _____; or

☒ Other (specify): Pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 4(i)(1)(B), I "sen[t] a copy of each by registered or certified mail to the Attorney General of the United States at Washington, D.C." A true and correct copy of the certified-mail receipt for service is attached.

My fees are $ 0.00 for travel and $ 14.15 for services, for a total of $ 14.15.

I declare under penalty of perjury that this information is true.

Date: 12/29/2020

/s/ Lawrence J. Joseph

Server's signature

Lawrence J. Joseph, Counsel for Plaintiffs

Printed name and title

Law Office of Lawrence J. Joseph
 1250 Connecticut Avenue, NW, Suite 700
 Washington, DC 20036

Server's address

Additional information regarding attempted service, etc:

7020 2450 0000 7646 7697

U.S. Postal Service™
CERTIFIED MAIL® RECEIPT
Domestic Mail Only

For more information, visit usps.com/certifiedmail

Use only for OFFICIAL USE

Postage and Fees $2.55

Extra postage for each additional ounce over 13.5 oz. $0.25

☐ Return Receipt (hardcopy) $3.00

☐ Return Receipt (electronic) $0.00

☐ Certified Mail Restricted Delivery $0.00

☐ Adult Signature Required $0.00

☐ Adult Signature Restricted Delivery $0.00

Postage $7.75

Total Postage and Fees $14.15

0200
 HILLMAN VA 22101
 JAN 1 2021
 12675500

Jeffrey A. Rosen, Acting Atty. General
 950 Pennsylvania Ave NW
 Washington DC 20530

AO 440 (Rev. 06/12) Summons in a Civil Action

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

for the

Eastern District of Texas

Louis Buller Gohmert, Jr., Tyler Bowyer, Nancy
Cottle, Jake Hoffman, Anthony Kern, James R.
Lamon, Sam Moorhead, Robert Montgomery, Loraine
Pellegrino, Greg Safsten, Kelli Ward & Michael Ward

Plaintiff(s)

v.

The Honorable Michael R. Pence, Vice President of the United States, in his official capacity

Defendant(s)

Civil Action No. 6:20-cv-00660-JDK

SUMMONS IN A CIVIL ACTION

To: (Defendant's name and address) Stephen J. Cox (SERVED)
United States Attorney
350 Magnolia Ave., Suite 150
Beaumont, Texas 77701

A lawsuit has been filed against you.

Within 21 days after service of this summons on you (not counting the day you received it) — or 60 days if you are the United States or a United States agency, or an officer or employee of the United States described in Fed. R. Civ. P. 12 (a)(2) or (3) — you must serve on the plaintiff an answer to the attached complaint or a motion under Rule 12 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. The answer or motion must be served on the plaintiff or plaintiff's attorney, whose name and address are:

William Lewis Sessions
Sessions & Associates, PLLC
14591 North Dallas Parkway, Suite 400
Dallas, TX 75254

If you fail to respond, judgment by default will be entered against you for the relief demanded in the complaint. You also must file your answer or motion with the court.

CLERK OF COURT

Date: 12/28/20

David A. O'Toole

Signature of Clerk or Deputy Clerk

AO 440 (Rev. 06/12) Summons in a Civil Action (Page 2)

Civil Action No. 6:20-cv-00660-JDK

PROOF OF SERVICE

(This section should not be filed with the court unless required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 4 (l))

This summons for (name of individual and title, if any) Stephen J. Cox, United States Attorney was received by me on (date) 12/28/2020 .

☐ I personally served the summons on the individual at (place) _____
_____ on (date) _____ ; or

☐ I left the summons at the individual's residence or usual place of abode with (name) _____
_____, a person of suitable age and discretion who resides there,
on (date) _____ , and mailed a copy to the individual's last known address; or

☒ I served the summons on (name of individual) Joni Broussard , who is designated by law to accept service of process on behalf of (name of organization) Stephen J. Cox, United States Attorney on (date) 12/29/2020 ; or

☐ I returned the summons unexecuted because _____ ; or

☐ Other (specify): _____

My fees are $ _____ for travel and $ _____ for services, for a total of $ 0.00 .

I declare under penalty of perjury that this information is true.

Date: 12/29/2020

Server's signature

Spencer A Marks / Process Server

Printed name and title

148 S Dowlen #668, Beaumont, TX 77707

Server's address

Additional information regarding attempted service, etc:

No. __A_____

In the Supreme Court of the United States

LOUIE GOHMERT, TYLER BOWYER, NANCY COTTLE, JAKE HOFFMAN,
ANTHONY KERN, JAMES R. LAMON, SAM MOORHEAD, ROBERT
MONTGOMERY, LORAIN PELLEGRIANO, GREG SAFSTEN, KELLI WARD
AND MICHAEL WARD,

Applicants,

v.

THE HONORABLE MICHAEL R. PENCE, VICE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, IN HIS OFFICIAL CAPACITY.

Respondent.

---

EMERGENCY APPLICATION TO THE HONORABLE SAMUEL
A. ALITO AS CIRCUIT JUSTICE FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT FOR ADMINISTRATIVE STAY AND INTERIM RELIEF PENDING RESOLUTION OF A TIMELY FILED PETITION FOR A WRIT OF *CERTIORARI

---

William L. Sessions
Texas Bar No. 18041500
SESSIONS & ASSOCIATES, PLLC
14591 North Dallas Parkway, Suite 400
Dallas, TX 75254
Tel: (214) 217-8855
Fax: (214) 723-5346
Email: lsessions@sessionslaw.net

Lawrence J. Joseph
DC Bar #464777
LAW OFFICE OF LAWRENCE J. JOSEPH
1250 Connecticut Av NW, Ste 700
Washington, DC 20036
Tel: (202) 355-9452
Fax: (202) 318-2254
Email: ljoseph@larryjoseph.com

Counsel for Applicants

Sidney Powell*
Texas Bar No. 16209700
SIDNEY POWELL, P.C.
2911 Turtle Creek Blvd., Suite 1100
Dallas, TX 75219
Tel: (214) 628-9514
Fax: (214) 628-9505
Email: sidney@federalappeals.com

Howard Kleinhendler
NY Bar No. 2657120
HOWARD KLEINHENDLER ESQUIRE
369 Lexington Ave., 12th Floor
New York, New York 10017
Tel: (917) 793-1188
Fax: (732) 901-0832
Email: howard@kleinhendler.com

\ Counsel of Record*

PARTIES TO THE PROCEEDING

Applicants (plaintiffs-appellants below) are U.S. Rep. Louie Gohmert (TX-1), Tyler Bowyer, Nancy Cottle, Jake Hoffman, Anthony Kern, James R. Lamon, Sam Moorhead, Robert Montgomery, Loraine Pellegrino, Greg Safsten, Kelli Ward, and Michael Ward.

Respondent (defendant-appellee below) is the Honorable Michael R. Pence, Vice President of the United States, in his official capacity.

CORPORATE DISCLOSURE STATEMENT

The applicants are natural persons with no parent corporation or stock

RELATED PROCEEDINGS

There are related proceedings in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Texas and the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit:

- Gohmert v. Pence, No. 6:20-CV-00660-JDK (E.D. Tex.) (dismissed Jan. 1, 2021)
- Gohmert v. Pence, No. 21-40001 (5th Cir.) (decided Jan. 2, 2021)

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Parties to the Proceeding .....	i
Corporate Disclosure Statement .....	i
Related Proceedings.....	i
Table of Contents .....	ii
Table of Authorities .....	v
Appendix .....	xii
Introduction .....	2
Rule 23.3 Poses No Bar to the Relief Requested .....	4
Standard of Review.....	6
Constitutional and Legislative Background .....	7
The Vice Presidents of the Framers’ Generation Acted as Presiding Officers and Established Rules of Parliamentary Procedure.....	7
Presidential Electoral Count Provisions .....	11
The Election of 1800.....	11
Legislative History and Ratification .....	12
The Congress That Enacted 3 U.S.C. § 5 Recognized that It Required a Constitutional Amendment but Adopted the ECA as a Shortcut Because They did not Have the Votes .....	13
History of Competing State Electoral Slates .....	14
Binding Law, Congressional Rule, or Unreviewable Statement of Principle/Moral Obligation? .....	16
Applicants’ Requested Remedy Is Warranted .....	18
Factual and Litigation Background.....	20
Argument .....	25

I.	The All Writs Act gives this Court jurisdiction to enter interim relief pending the timely filing of a petition for a writ of certiorari .	25
II.	Applicants have standing.	27
A.	Applicants have suffered an injury in fact.	28
B.	Applicants' injuries are traceable to the Vice President.	31
C.	Federal courts can redress Applicants' injuries.	35
D.	The procedural nature of Applicants' injuries lowers the Article III bar for immediacy and redressability.	37
E.	Courts must assume the plaintiff's merits views to assess a plaintiff's standing to sue.	39
F.	The district court's standing analysis erred in key respects.	41
	1. Rep. Gohmert has standing.	41
	2. The Arizona-Elector Applicants have standing.	42
III.	Jurisdiction otherwise exists.	43
A.	Applicants otherwise raise an Article III case or controversy.	43
	1. The parties do not seek the same relief.	43
	2. The political-question doctrine does not bar this action.	44
	3. This action is not moot.	45
	4. This action is ripe.	45
B.	Prudential limits on Article III jurisdiction do not apply.	46
C.	This action is otherwise within federal courts' jurisdiction.	48
	1. The Speech or Debate Clause does not insulate the Vice President.	48

2.	Sovereign immunity does not bar this action.....	49
3.	This case presents a federal question, and abstention principles do not apply.....	53
4.	Applicants are entitled to an expedited declaratory judgment. ....	54
IV.	The Winter factors favor entry of interim relief.....	60
A.	Applicants have a substantial likelihood of success. ....	60
1.	Unconstitutional laws are nullities. ....	60
2.	The Electoral Count Act violates the Electors Clause and the Twelfth Amendment. ....	61
3.	The Electoral Count Act violates the Constitution’s structural protections of liberty. ....	62
4.	The Necessary and Proper Clause does not save the Electoral Count Act. ....	64
5.	The action is not barred by laches. ....	67
B.	Applicants will suffer irreparable injury.....	68
C.	Applicants need not demonstrate irreparable harm for declaratory relief. ....	69
D.	The balance of equities favors Applicants.....	70
E.	The public interest favors Applicants.....	70
	Requested Relief .....	71
	Conclusion .....	72

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

CASES

ACLU v. Ashcroft , 322 F.3d 240 (3d Cir. 2003) .....	71
Adar v. Smith , 639 F.3d 146 (5th Cir. 2011) ( en banc ) .....	39-40
Allen v. Wright , 468 U.S. 737 (1984).....	43
Baker v. Carr , 369 U.S. 186 (1962) .....	44-45, 53
Barefoot v. Estelle , 463 U.S. 880 (1983) .....	72
Bd. of Miss. Levee Comm’rs v. EPA , 674 F.3d 409 (5th Cir. 2012) .....	46-47
Bond v. United States , 564 U.S. 211 (2011).....	38
Bowen v. Massachusetts , 487 U.S. 879 (1988) .....	56
Brillhart v. Excess Ins. Co. of Am. , 316 U.S. 491 (1942) .....	58-59
Brown v. Gilmore , 533 U.S. 1301 (2001).....	5-6
Brown v. Maryland , 25 U.S. (12 Wheat.) 419 (1827) .....	61
Brushaber v. Union Pac. R. Co. , 240 U.S. 1 (1916) .....	66
Bush v. Gore , 531 U.S. 98 (2000).....	41, 54
Bush v. Palm Beach Cty. Canvassing Bd. , 531 U.S. 70 (2000) .....	40
Califano v. Sanders , 430 U.S. 99 (1977) .....	56
Cantrell v. City of Long Beach , 241 F.3d 674 (9th Cir. 2001) .....	39
Carey v. Phipus , 435 U.S. 247 (1978).....	37
Carson v. Simon , 978 F.3d 1051 (8th Cir. 2020) .....	30
Cheney v. United States Dist. Court , 541 U.S. 913 (2004) .....	47-48
City of Boerne v. Flores , 521 U.S. 507 (1997).....	59
City of Waukesha v. EPA , 320 F.3d 228 (D.C. Cir. 2003).....	40
Clinton v. New York , 524 U.S. 417 (1998) .....	38-39
Coleman v. Miller , 307 U. S. 433 (1939) .....	41
Commissioner v. Shapiro , 424 U.S. 614 (1976) .....	69
Common Cause v. Biden , 748 F.3d 1280 (D.C. Cir. 2014).....	49
Concerned Citizens for Equal. v. McDonald , 863 F. Supp. 393 (E.D. Tex. 1994).....	46
Cook v. Gralike , 531 U.S. 510 (2001) .....	40, 54

Ctr. for Biological Diversity v. United States EPA , 937 F.3d 533 (5th Cir. 2019).....	33
Darby v. Cisneros , 509 U.S. 137 (1993).....	57
Davis v. Passman , 442 U.S. 228 (1979) .....	50
Duke Power Co. v. Carolina Envtl. Study Group, Inc. , 438 U.S. 59 (1978).....	56
Elk Grove Unified School Dist. v. Newdow , 542 U.S. 1 (2004) .....	46
Envtl. Def. Fund, Inc. v. Alexander , 614 F.2d 474 (5th Cir. 1980) .....	68
Ex parte Young , 209 U.S. 123 (1908) .....	50-51
FEC v. Akins , 524 U.S. 11 (1998).....	36
Franklin v. Massachusetts , 505 U.S. 788 (1992) .....	35
Frye v. Anadarko Petroleum Corp. , 953 F.3d 285 (5th Cir. 2019) .....	57, 59
FTC v. Dean Foods Co. , 384 U.S. 597 (1966).....	25
Gasser Chair Co. v. Infanti Chair Mfg. Corp. , 60 F.3d 770 (Fed. Cir. 1995) .....	68
GTE Sylvania, Inc. v. Consumers Union of the United States, Inc. , 445 U.S. 375 (1980) .....	44
Harman v. Forssenius , 380 U.S. 528 (1965) .....	61
Heckler v. Mathews , 465 U.S. 728 (1984).....	36
Herwald v. Schweiker , 658 F.2d 359 (5th Cir. 1981).....	43
Hollingsworth v. Perry , 558 U.S. 183 (2010) .....	7
In re Columbia Gas Systems Inc. , 33 F.3d 294 (3d Cir. 1994) .....	39
Initiative &amp; Referendum Institute v. Walker , 450 F.3d 1082 (10th Cir. 2006) .....	39
INS v. Chadha , 462 U.S. 919 (1983).....	66-67
Jackson Women’s Health Org. v. Currier , 760 F.3d 448 (5th Cir. 2014) .....	70-71
Judulang v. Holder , 565 U.S. 42 (2011).....	68
June Med. Servs. L.L.C. v. Russo , 140 S.Ct. 2103 (2020).....	47
Kitty Hawk Aircargo, Inc. v. Chao , 418 F.3d 453 (5th Cir. 2005).....	46
Knox v. SEIU, Local 1000 , 567 U.S. 298 (2012) .....	45
La Buy v. Howes Leather Co. , 352 U.S. 249 (1957) .....	26
Lac du Flambeau Band of Lake Superior Chippewa Indians v. Norton , 422 F.3d 490 (7th Cir. 2005).....	39
League of United Latin Am. Citizens, Council No. 4434 v. Clements , 999 F.2d 831 (5th Cir. 1993) ( en banc ).....	30

League of Women Voters of the United States v. Newby , 838 F.3d 1 (D.C. Cir. 2016) .....	71
Lelsz v. Kavanagh , 98 F.R.D. 11 (E.D. Tex. 1982) .....	24
Lexmark Int’l, Inc. v. Static Control Components, Inc. , 572 U.S. 118 (2014) .....	47
Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife , 504 U.S. 555 (1992) .....	27, 31, 37-38, 43
Lujan v. Nat’l Wildlife Fed’n , 497 U.S. 871 (1990) .....	67
LULAC v. City of Boerne , 659 F.3d 421 (5th Cir. 2011) .....	30
Marine Chance Shipping v. Sebastian , 143 F.3d 216 (5th Cir. 1998) .....	70
Mathews v. Weber , 423 U.S. 261 (1976) .....	26
McCulloch v. Maryland , 17 U.S. (4 Wheat.) 316 (1819) .....	65
McNabb v. United States , 318 U.S. 332 (1943) .....	37
McPherson v. Blacker , 146 U.S. 1 (1892) .....	54
Merck Sharp &amp; Dohme Corp. v. Albrecht , 139 S.Ct. 1668 (2019) .....	18-19
Minton v. St. Bernard Par. Sch. Bd. , 803 F.2d 129 (5th Cir. 1986) .....	48
Moore v. Charlotte-Mecklenburg Bd. of Educ. , 402 U.S. 47 (1971) .....	44
Morton v. Mancari , 417 U.S. 535 (1974) .....	56
Mullaney v. Anderson , 342 U.S. 415 (1952) .....	51-52
Murphree v. Winter , 589 F. Supp. 374 (S.D. Miss. 1984) .....	69
Nat’l Treasury Employees Union v. U.S. , 101 F.3d 1423 (D.C. Cir. 1996) .....	38
New York City Transit Authority v. Beazer , 440 U.S. 568 (1979) .....	47
Nken v. Holder , 556 U.S. 418 (2009) .....	5
Obama for Am. v. Husted , 697 F.3d 423 (6th Cir. 2012) .....	68-69
OCA-Greater Houston v. Texas , 867 F.3d 604 (5th Cir. 2017) .....	34-35
Okpalobi v. Foster , 244 F.3d 405 (5th Cir. 2001) ( en banc ) .....	34-35
Petrella v. MGM , 572 U.S. 663 (2014) .....	67
Pool v. City of Houston , 978 F.3d 307 (5th Cir. 2020) .....	44
Powell v. McCormack , 395 U.S. 486 (1969) .....	35-36, 48-49, 60
Profitness Physical Therapy Ctr. v. Pro-Fit Orthopedic &amp; Sports Physical Therapy P.C. , 314 F.3d 62 (2d Cir. 2002) .....	68
Purcell v. Gonzalez , 549 U.S. 1 (2006) .....	72

Raines v. Byrd , 521 U.S. 811 (1997).....	41
Rescue Army v. Municipal Court of City of Los Angeles , 331 U.S. 549 (1947) .....	47
Reynolds v. Sims , 377 U.S. 533 (1964).....	69
Rowan Cos. v. Griffin , 876 F.2d 26 (5th Cir. 1989) .....	70
Sampson v. Murray , 415 U.S. 61 (1974) .....	26
Schlesinger v. Councilman , 420 U.S. 738 (1975).....	56
Secretary of State of Md. v. Joseph H. Munson Co. , 467 U.S. 947 (1984).....	46
Sherwin-Williams Co. v. Holmes Cty. , 343 F.3d 383 (5th Cir. 2003).....	57-59
Sid Richardson Carbon &amp; Gasoline Co. v. Interenergy Res. , 99 F.3d 746 (5th Cir. 1996).....	67
Sierra Club v. Glickman , 156 F.3d 606 (5th Cir. 1998) .....	32-33, 38
Simon v. Eastern Kentucky Welfare Rights Org. , 426 U.S. 26 (1976).....	33
Singleton v. Wulff , 428 U.S. 106 (1976) .....	6
Steffel v. Thompson , 415 U.S. 452 (1974) .....	56
Stolt-Nielsen S.A. v. Animal Feeds Int’l Corp. , 559 U.S. 662 (2010) .....	46
Tel. &amp; Data Sys. v. FCC , 19 F.3d 42 (D.C. Cir. 1994) .....	32
Teshome-Gebreegziabher v. Mukasey , 528 F.3d 330 (4th Cir. 2008) .....	5
Tex. Democratic Party v. Benkiser , 459 F.3d 582 (5th Cir. 2006) .....	71
Texas v. United States , 749 F.2d 1144 (5th Cir. 1985).....	68
Tierney v. Schweiker , 718 F.2d 449 (D.C. Cir. 1983).....	70
Trump v. Wis. Elections Comm’n , No. 20-cv-1785, 2020 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 233765 (E.D. Wis. Dec. 12, 2020) .....	30
United States v. Comstock , 560 U.S. 126 (2010).....	65-66
United States v. Mitchell , 463 U.S. 206 (1983).....	56
United States v. Morrison , 529 U.S. 598 (2000) .....	60
United States v. Winstar Corp. , 518 U.S. 839 (1996) .....	62-63
Va. House of Delegates v. Bethune-Hill , 139 S.Ct. 1945 (2019) .....	41
Valley Forge Christian Coll. v. Ams. United for Separation of Church &amp; State, Inc. , 454 U.S. 464 (1982) .....	46
Verizon Md. Inc. v. Pub. Serv. Comm’n of Maryland , 535 U.S. 635 (2002).....	50
Warth v. Seldin , 422 U.S. 490 (1975).....	39-40

Washington v. Reno , 35 F.3d 1093 (6th Cir. 1994) .....	71
Webster v. Doe , 486 U.S. 592 (1988) .....	70
Wesberry v. Sanders , 376 U.S. 1 (1964) .....	30
What-A-Burger of Va., Inc. v. Whataburger, Inc. , 357 F.3d 441 (4th Cir. 2004) .....	67
Wheeldin v. Wheeler , 373 U.S. 647 (1963) .....	39
Williams v. Brooks , 945 F.2d 1322 (5th Cir. 1991) .....	48
Winter v. Natural Resources Defense Council, Inc. , 555 U.S. 7 (2008) .....	6-7, 60, 69
Wood v. Raffensperger , No. 20-14418, 2020 WL 7094866 (11th Cir. Dec. 5, 2020) .....	30

STATUTES

U.S. CONST. art. I, § 5, cl. 2 .....	63
U.S. CONST. art I, § 6, cl. 1 .....	48-49
U.S. CONST. art. I, § 7, cl. 3 .....	37, 63, 66
U.S. CONST. art. I, § 8, cl. 18 .....	64-65
U.S. CONST. art II, § 1, cl. 3 .....	passim
U.S. CONST. art. III .....	passim
U.S. CONST. amend. XII .....	passim
U.S. CONST. amend. XX .....	45
3 U.S.C. § 5 .....	passim
3 U.S.C. § 6 .....	62
3 U.S.C. § 15 .....	passim
Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. §§ 551-706 .....	56-57
5 U.S.C. § 559 .....	57
5 U.S.C. § 702 .....	52-53
5 U.S.C. § 704 .....	57
28 U.S.C. § 1331 .....	56
All Writs Act, 28 U.S.C. § 1651(a) .....	1, 5-6, 25-26
28 U.S.C. § 1653 .....	53

28 U.S.C. § 2106.....	26-27
Declaratory Judgment Act, 28 U.S.C. §§ 2201-2202 .....	56-57
28 U.S.C. § 2201.....	70
Ch. 37, 19 Stat. 227 (1877) .....	45
Electoral Count Act of 1887, PUB. L. NO. 49–90, 24 Stat. 373 .....	passim
PUB. L. NO. 96-486, § 2(a), 94 Stat. 2369 (1980) .....	56
ARIZ. REV. STAT. § 16-212 .....	29

LEGISLATIVE HISTORY

H.R. REP. NO. 96-1461, at 3-4, reprinted in 1980 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5063, 5065.....	56
--	----

RULES AND REGULATIONS

SUP. CT. R. 21.2(c) .....	1
SUP. CT. R. 22.2 .....	1
SUP. CT. R. 23 .....	4-6
SUP. CT. R. 23.3 .....	4-6
FED. R. CIV. P. 15(a)(1)(B).....	53
FED. R. CIV. P. 21 .....	51-52
FED. R. CIV. P. 57 .....	54, 69
FED. R. CIV. P. 57, Advisory Committee Notes .....	54

OTHER AUTHORITIES

10 FED. PROC., L. ED. § 23:4.....	69
A.B.A. Section of Admin. Law & Regulatory Practice, A Blackletter Statement of Federal Administrative Law , 54 ADMIN. L. REV. 1 (2002) .....	50
Bruce Ackerman & David Fontana, Thomas Jefferson Counts Himself into the Presidency , 90 VA. L. REV. 551 (2004) .....	12, 65
Richard Allan Baker, The Senate of the United States: “Supreme Executive Council of the Nation,” 1787-1800 , in 1 THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES, 1787-1989 (Joel H. Silbey ed., 1991) .....	7
EDWIN BORCHARD, DECLARATORY JUDGMENTS , 787-88, 909-10 (1941) .....	57
Nathan L. Colvin & Edward B. Foley, The Twelfth Amendment: A Constitutional Ticking Time Bomb , 65 U. MIAMI L. REV. 475 (2010) .....	11

3 Jonathan Elliot, Debates on the Adoption of the Federal Constitution (James McClellan & M.E. Bradford eds., James River Press 1989) (2d ed. 1836) .....	8
2 M. Farrand, RECORDS OF THE FEDERAL CONVENTION OF 1787, at 666 (1911) .....	34
Hamilton, Alexander. The Federalist No. 68, at 410-11 (C. Rossiter, ed. 1961) ....	9-10
WILLIAM J. HUGHES, FEDERAL PRACTICE § 25387 (1940 & Supp. 1945) .....	56-57
Louis L. Jaffee, The Right to Judicial Review I , 71 HARV. L. REV. 401 (1958) .....	50
Thomas Jefferson, A Manual of Parliamentary Practice: for the Use of the Senate of the United States , in JEFFERSON'S PARLIAMENTARY WRITINGS: "PARLIAMENTARY POCKET-BOOK" AND A MANUAL OF PARLIAMENTARY PRACTICE (Wilbur Samuel Howell ed., 1988) .....	8
Vasan Kesavan, Is the Electoral Count Act Unconstitutional? , 80 N.C.L. REV. 1653 (2002) .....	19-20, 67
Chris Land & David Schultz, On The Unenforceability of the Electoral Count Act , 13 RUTGERS J.L. & PUB. POL'Y 340 (2016) .....	18, 64
Richard K. Neumann, The Revival of Impeachment as a Partisan Political Weapon , 34 HASTINGS CONST. L.Q. 161 (2002) .....	11
J. Story, 1 COMMENTARIES ON THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES § 627 (3d ed. 1858) .....	41, 54
J. Story, 3 COMMENTARIES ON THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES § 1464 (Boston, Hilliard, Gray, & Co. 1833) .....	65
Stephen A. Siegel, The Conscientious Congressman's Guide to the Electoral Count Act of 1887 , 56 FLA. L. REV. 541 (2004) .....	13, 16-17
Stern & Gressman, SUPREME COURT PRACTICE § 17.11 (11th ed. 2013) .....	5
Laurence H. Tribe, Erog v. Hsub and Its Disguises: Freeing Bush v. Gore from Its Hall of Mirrors , 115 HARV. L. REV. 170 (2001) .....	63

APPENDIX

Gohmert v. Pence , No. 6:20-CV-00660-JDK (E.D. Tex. Jan. 1, 2021) (order).....	1a
Gohmert v. Pence , No. 6:20-CV-00660-JDK (E.D. Tex. Jan. 1, 2021) (judgment).....	14a
Gohmert v. Pence , No. 21-40001 (5th Cir. Jan. 2, 2021) .....	15a
3 U.S.C. § 5 .....	17a
3 U.S.C. § 6.....	17a
3 U.S.C. § 15.....	18a
U.S. CONST. art. I, § 7, cl. 3.....	20a
U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1, cl. 2 .....	20a
U.S. CONST. amend. XII.....	20a
Complaint (EFC #1).....	22a
Complaint Exhibit A (EFC #1-1).....	50a
Reply in Support Ex. A (ECF #30-1) .....	54a
Reply in Support Ex. B (ECF #30-2) .....	56a
Reply in Support Ex. C (ECF #30-3) .....	57a
Reply in Support Ex. D (ECF #30-4).....	59a
Reply in Support Ex. E (ECF #30-5) .....	62a

To the Honorable Samuel A. Alito as Circuit Justice for the Fifth Circuit:

Pursuant to this Court’s Rule 22.2,<sup>1</sup> U.S. Rep. Louie Gohmert (TX-1), Tyler Bowyer, Nancy Cottle, Jake Hoffman, Anthony Kern, James R. Lamon, Sam Moorhead, Robert Montgomery, Loraine Pellegrino, Greg Safsten, Kelli Ward, and Michael Ward—plaintiffs- appellants below—respectfully apply for an order pursuant to the All Writs Act, 28 U.S.C. § 1651(a), directing respondent Vice President of the United States to refrain from invoking the dispute-resolution provisions of the Electoral Count Act of 1887, PUB. L. NO. 49-90, 24 Stat. 373 (“ECA”) (codified in pertinent part at 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 15) for the duration of this Court’s consideration of a timely filed petition for a writ of certiorari. As set forth in the argument below, the ECA violates the Electors Clause, the Twelfth Amendment, and the Constitution’s structural protections of liberty.

By per curiam order dated January 2, 2021, the Fifth Circuit sua sponte affirmed (App. 16a) the district court’s dismissal of Applicants’ action for the reasons stated by the district court’s order dated January 1, 2021 (App. 16a). Applicants have not yet decided whether to seek rehearing or en banc in the Fifth Circuit before petitioning for a writ of certiorari. Including the 60-day extension granted by this Court’s COVID-pandemic order dated March 19, 2020, a petition for a writ of certiorari is currently due by June 1, 2021. Given the exigency of resolving the 2020 presidential election before January 20, 2021, Applicants propose an expedited schedule for the filing and resolution of a petition for a writ of certiorari. Alternatively, Applicants respectfully submit that the relief requested in this application could resolve this matter.

---

<sup>1</sup> Alternatively, this Court could treat this application as a motion pursuant to Rule 21.2(c) and require ten copies of the application.

INTRODUCTION

A man dies when he refuses to stand up for that which is right. A man dies when he refuses to stand up for justice. A man dies when he refuses to take a stand for that which is true.

Martin Luther King, Jr.

On January 6th, a joint session of Congress will convene to formally elect the President. The respondent, Vice-President Pence, will preside. Under the Constitution, he has the authority to conduct that proceeding as he sees fit. He may count elector votes certified by a state's executive, or he can prefer a competing slate of duly qualified electors. He may ignore all electors from a certain state. That is the power bestowed upon him by the Constitution.

For over a century, the counting of elector votes and proclaiming the winner was a formality to which the prying eye of the media and those outside the halls of the government paid no attention. But not this time. Our nation stands at the crossroads of a Constitutional crisis fraught by chaos and turmoil brought into play by a viral plague, anti-democratic interference from domestic and foreign sources, and hastily enacted State voting measures ostensibly placed to protect voters from catching the plague. At stake is Americans' confidence in the integrity of their electoral system and mechanisms of government – not to mention the results of the election itself.

Entreaties to the judicial branch to address these pressing electoral issues has proven ineffectual to date, in large measure due to use of legal principles which permit the defeating of consideration of the merits of the claims and procedural barriers that inhibit the introduction of evidence of fraud. The courts of this nation have demurred in the face of mounting evidence of sophisticated vote and voter fraud, prompting the States which experienced these injustices to pursue hastily called investigations. In the meantime, constitutionally mandated deadlines have marched forward, thrusting the issue into the halls of Congress, which has made clear its intent to rely upon a statute that is facially unconstitutional.

Into this fray, Applicant Rep. Gohmert, along with 140 of his Republican House colleagues have announced that they will object to the counting of state certified electors pledged to former Vice-President Biden because of the mounting and convincing evidence of voter fraud in key swing states whose combined electoral count prove determinative of the election results. App. 62a-65a. The contest for President now rides on a conflicted Congress, with one side adamant that the election was “the most secure in this nation’s history” and the other just as firm in their conviction that the election was “rigged.”

The Court is now asked to rule on a pressing and critical question: which set of rules does Vice-President Pence follow when confronted by these objections and this crisis? The rules set by the Constitution, or those in a simple statute, 3 USC 15, last updated in 1948 by a session of Congress long ago ended. Applicants are not asking this Court to choose a winner of the presidential contest. Nor are they asking the Court to rule on whether there was pervasive fraud in the swing states that are subject to objection. Those are matters left to the January 6th joint session of Congress. The issue before this Court hinges on an obvious and elementary concept: that a federal statute cannot conflict with or abrogate the United States Constitution.

This case focuses on a clear historical perspective of the role of the Vice President in the electoral process. Below, we set forth a brief study of the background to the Vice-President's weighty and prudential powers afforded under the Constitution – the foundation of American democracy -- which unequivocally entrusts to him all the prerogatives and rights to determine what electoral votes to count or to disregard that are attendant to his role as President of the Senate. We further explain how 3 USC 15 is unconstitutional and why it is of no force or effect whatsoever. Finally, we discuss why the courts below have erred.

We respectfully submit that the courts below did not heed Dr. King's prescient words quoted above. We are looking for this Court's courage and wisdom to prevent the "death" of this country's faith in its electoral process. By applying to this court of last resort, Applicants are confident and hopeful that you will indeed appreciate Dr. King's warning that: "A man dies when he refuses to take a stand for that which is true." The application for an administrative stay and interim relief should be granted.

RULE 23.3 POSES NO BAR TO THE RELIEF REQUESTED

Applicants moved for interim relief in the district court, but the Fifth Circuit sua sponte affirmed the district court's dismissal before Applicants could seek interim relief in the Fifth Circuit. Under the circumstances, to the extent that Rule 23 applies, Applicants respectfully submit that the extraordinary-circumstance exception to this Court's Rule 23.3 applies.

Except in the most extraordinary circumstances, an application for a stay will not be entertained unless the relief requested was first sought in the appropriate court or courts below or from a judge or judges thereof.

SUP. CT. R. 23.3 (emphasis added). This rule is inapposite for two reasons: (1) Applicants do not request a stay (i.e., all of Rule 23 does not apply); and (2) even if Applicants were requesting a stay, Rule 23.3's extraordinary-circumstances provision is a matter for judicial determination and plainly applies here.

First, while Applicants seek interim injunctive and declaratory relief, not all injunctive relief qualifies as a "stay." The relevant "definitions indicate that 'stay' is a subset of the broader term 'enjoin'; it is a 'kind of injunction' directed at a judicial case or proceedings within it." Teshome-Gebreegziabher v. Mukasey, 528 F.3d 330, 333 (4th Cir. 2008), abrogated in part on other grounds, Nken v. Holder, 556 U.S. 418, 423 (2009); id. ("a suspension of the case or some designated proceedings within it. It is a kind of injunction with which a court freezes its proceedings at a particular point.") (emphasis in original, quoting Black's Law Dictionary 1413 (6th ed. 1990)). This Court's motions-practice rules last included a reference to injunctive relief before the 1990 amendments to the rules, Stern & Gressman, SUPREME COURT PRACTICE § 17.11 (11th ed. 2013), presumably because the "stay" rule does not include authority for a preliminary injunction. Id. Instead, the All Writs Act provides that authority:

I note first that applicants are seeking not merely a stay of a lower court judgment, but an injunction against the enforcement of a presumptively valid state statute. The All Writs Act, 28 U.S.C. § 1651(a) (1994 ed.), is the only source of this Court’s authority to issue such an injunction.

Brown v. Gilmore, 533 U.S. 1301, 1303 (2001) (Rehnquist, C.J., in chambers).<sup>2</sup> If Rule 23 does not apply, then Rule 23.3’s restrictions do not apply.

But even if Rule 23.3 did apply, the justices of this Court must apply Rule 23.3 because its extraordinary-circumstances provision requires a judicial determination of whether Applicants’ case presents an extraordinary circumstance. Under the circumstances, the All Writs Act provides jurisdiction: “The Supreme Court and all courts established by Act of Congress may issue all writs necessary or appropriate in aid of their respective jurisdictions and agreeable to the usages and principles of law.” 28 U.S.C. § 1651(a) (emphasis added). The question whether extraordinary relief is warranted requires a judicial determination..

STANDARD OF REVIEW

Standing and other questions of jurisdiction are reviewed de novo. “The matter of what questions may be taken up and resolved for the first time on appeal is one left primarily to the discretion of the courts of appeals.” Singleton v. Wulff, 428 U.S. 106, 121 (1976). “A plaintiff seeking a preliminary injunction must establish that he is likely to succeed on the merits, that he is likely to suffer irreparable harm in the absence of preliminary relief, that the balance of equities tips in his favor, and that an injunction is in the public interest.” Winter v. Natural Resources Defense Council, Inc., 555 U.S. 7, 21 (2008).<sup>3</sup>

---

<sup>2</sup> Section I, infra, discusses this Court’s jurisdiction under the All Writs Act.

CONSTITUTIONAL AND LEGISLATIVE BACKGROUND

The pertinent constitutional and statutory provisions are reproduced in the Appendix (“App.”), and their history and context are summarized here.

The Vice Presidents of the Framers’ Generation Acted as Presiding Officers and Established Rules of Parliamentary Procedure

While the discussion of the Vice President’s role in the Constitutional Convention and Ratification Debates is sparse, two of the most significant Framers of the Declaration of Independence, John Adams and Thomas Jefferson, subsequently served as Vice Presidents. In these roles, they immediately established that the Vice President was not merely a ceremonial position, but rather served in an active and leading role as Presiding Officer of the Senate in establishing rules of parliamentary procedure for the new Congress.

Vice President Adams drew upon his knowledge of British parliamentary procedure in presiding over the Senate. See Richard Allan Baker, The Senate of the United States: “Supreme Executive Council of the Nation,” 1787-1800, in 1 THE <sup>3</sup> If Applicants sought a “stay” as distinct from interim relief, a stay pending the timely filing and ultimate resolution of a petition for a writ of certiorari is appropriate when there is “(1) a reasonable probability that four Justices will consider the issue sufficiently meritorious to grant certiorari; (2) a fair prospect that a majority of the Court will vote to reverse the judgment below; and (3) a likelihood that irreparable harm will result from the denial of a stay.” Hollingsworth v. Perry, 558 U.S. 183, 190 (2010). For “close cases,” the Court “will balance the equities and weigh the relative harms to the applicant and to the respondent.” Id.

---

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES, 1787-1989, at 135, 148 (Joel H. Silbey ed., 1991). Vice President Jefferson, also an expert on British parliamentary procedure, authored the Senate's first manual of procedure. See Thomas Jefferson, A Manual of Parliamentary Practice: for the Use of the Senate of the United States, in Jefferson's PARLIAMENTARY WRITINGS: "PARLIAMENTARY POCKET-BOOK" AND A MANUAL OF PARLIAMENTARY PRACTICE (Wilbur Samuel Howell ed., 1988).

Thus, these two most important men who not only contributed to the founding documents of the country, but also established and documented the Senate's first rules as Presiding Officers, did not see their role as clerks or tabulators in counting votes. They were candidates and parliamentarians who also established the rules and processes for deciding the winner of the office of President (i.e., them in both cases). They knew that the role of "President of the Senate" did not mean a toothless, helpless, clerk.

The process for electing the President was one of the most divisive of all issues debated in the Philadelphia Convention, with competing proposals for direct election, federal congressional election and state election argued. See 3 Jonathan Elliot, Debates on the Adoption of the Federal Constitution at 547 (James McClellan & M.E. Bradford eds., James River Press 1989) (2d ed. 1836). Sixty ballots were taken before the original 1787 Constitution was adopted, pursuant to which electors from each State, appointed by the State Legislature under the Electors Clause, elect the President; or in the event no candidate receives a majority as counted by the Vice President, the House of Representatives chooses the President by the “one vote per state delegation” rule. Id.

U.S. CONST. art II, § 1, cl. 3, amended by U.S. CONST. amend. XII. Article II of the Constitution provides, in relevant part:

The Electors shall meet in their respective States, and vote by Ballot for two Persons, of whom one at least shall not be an Inhabitant of the same State with themselves. And they shall make a List of all the Persons voted for, and of the Number of Votes for each; which List they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the Seat of the Government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate. The President of the Senate shall, in the Presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the Certificates, and the Votes shall then be counted.

U.S. Const., art. II, § 1, cl. 3 (amended by U.S. CONST. amend. XII) (emphasis added).

In The Federalist No. 68, Alexander Hamilton provides the rationale both for the unique role of Presidential Electors in electing the President of the United States, and the Vice President’s role in the Electoral College. Hamilton first explains that the choice of indirect election through electors, rather than direct democracy, because it is preferable for “[a] small number of persons, selected by their fellow-citizens from the general mass, will be most likely to possess the information and discernment requisite to such complicated investigations,” and it will “afford as little opportunity as possible to tumult and disorder.” Hamilton, Alexander. The Federalist No. 68, at 410-11 (C. Rossiter, ed. 1961).

Further, the Electoral College should not meet as a national body in one place, but instead should meet and elect the President in each State:

And as the electors, chosen in each State, are to assemble and vote in the State in which they are chosen, this detached and divided situation will expose them much less to heats and ferments, which might be communicated from them to the people, than if they were all to be convened at one time, in one place.

Nothing was more to be desired than that every practicable obstacle should be opposed to cabal, intrigue, and corruption. These most deadly adversaries of republican government might naturally have been expected to make their approaches from more than one quarter, but chiefly from the desire in foreign powers to gain an improper ascendant in our councils.

Id.

If no candidate should receive a majority of the Electors' vote, then and only then, should the decision should be made by the national legislature, namely the House of Representatives:

But as a majority of the votes might not always happen to centre in one man, and as it might be unsafe to permit less than a majority to be conclusive, it is provided that, in such a contingency, the House of Representatives<sup>4</sup> shall select out of the candidates who shall have the five highest number of votes, the man who in their opinion may be best qualified for the office.

Id.

Finally, The Federalist No. 68 addresses the role of the Vice President:

One is, that to secure at all times the possibility of a definite resolution of the body, it is necessary that the President should have only a casting vote. ... And to take the senator of any State from his seat as senator, to place him in that of President of the Senate, would be to exchange, in regard to the State from which he came, a constant for a contingent vote.

---

<sup>4</sup> As set forth in the final version of art. II, § 1, cl. 3, the selection by the House of Representatives was through a vote of State Delegations, not a majority of members.

Id.

Presidential Electoral Count Provisions

The presidential electoral count procedures in the original Constitution are largely identical to those in the Twelfth Amendment. These procedures—in particular those regarding the Vice President’s role as Presiding Officer in counting electoral votes and the House’s “one vote per state delegation” for choosing the President—were carried over into the Twelfth Amendment verbatim -- with one important exception.

A critical and near fatal flaw in this process became apparent immediately after the Presidency of George Washington, in the elections of 1796 and 1800, namely, that the while the original Constitutional language gave each elector two votes, “it did not allow the electors to designate one of their votes for President and one for Vice President.” Nathan L. Colvin & Edward B. Foley, The Twelfth Amendment: A Constitutional Ticking Time Bomb, 65 U. MIAMI L. REV. 475, 489 (2010). As a result, “the vice presidency went to the losing Presidential candidate with the largest number of electoral votes.” Richard K. Neumann, The Revival of Impeachment as a Partisan Political Weapon, 34 HASTINGS CONST. L.Q. 161, 180 (2002).

The Election of 1800

Thomas Jefferson lost the election of 1796 to John Adams, receiving the second highest number of electoral votes. As a result, he became President Adams’ Vice President. Jefferson ran for President again in 1800 for the Democratic-Republican Party, as the candidate for President and Aaron Burr as candidate for Vice President. As sitting Vice President, Vice President Jefferson was also President of the Senate and Presiding Officer over the Electoral College proceedings. As such, he was responsible for counting electoral votes for himself and competing candidates.

Legislative History and Ratification

In 1803, both Houses approved the text of the Twelfth Amendment, and 13 of 17 States had ratified it by June of 1804. Colvin & Foley at 490. The Amendment provides, in relevant part:

The Electors shall meet in their respective states and vote by ballot for President and Vice-President, one of whom, at least, shall not be an inhabitant of the same state with themselves; they shall name in their ballots the person voted for as President, and in distinct ballots the person voted for as Vice-President, and they shall make distinct lists of all persons voted for as President, and of all persons voted for as Vice-President, and of the number of votes for each, which lists they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the seat of the government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate; -- The President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and the votes shall then be counted.

U.S. CONST. amend. XII (emphasis added).

Commentators argue that the passive voice in the sentence “and the votes shall then be counted” means that the President of the Senate, the Vice President, has “further powers hidden in the passive voice” which today would be referenced as “discretion.” Bruce Ackerman & David Fontana, Thomas Jefferson Counts Himself into the Presidency, 90 VA. L. REV. 551, 629 (2004).

This is consistent with the Framers’ original intent and their inherent bias that a presiding officer was not merely a ceremonial figure, but one that has authority to render substantive decisions in the face of disputes or other disruptions to the electoral process devolved to his mandate.

The Congress That Enacted 3 U.S.C. § 5 Recognized that It Required a Constitutional Amendment but Adopted the ECA as a Shortcut Because They did not Have the Votes

In Section 2 of the Electoral Count Act of 1887, codified at 3 U.S.C. § 5, Congress sought to require States to resolve any disputes over the appointment of Presidential electors to avoid the necessity for Congress to do so in the 1876 election. “What Congress wanted was for the states to develop, or apply, their existing, more streamlined election laws to Presidential Elections.” Stephen A. Siegel, The Conscientious Congressman’s Guide to the Electoral Count Act of 1887, 56 FLA. L. REV. 541, 585 (2004). Members of Congress recognized at the time that they could not require states to do so “absent a constitutional amendment.” Id. at 586 (citations omitted). Because Congress was “[u]nable to agree on any constitutional amendment,” it attempted, “to remove, as far as it is possible to be done by legislation . . . , a difficulty which grows out of an imperfection in the Constitution itself.” Id. at 658-59 (quoting 17 CONG. REC. 1019 (1886) (statement of Sen. Hoar)).

This was a continuation of Congress’ prior debate over the repeal of the Reconstruction-Era Twenty-Second Joint Rule of 1865 (“Joint Rule”), which had authorized either house of Congress to reject a State’s electors. Republicans had been dominant in the Reconstruction Era following 1865, but by 1875 it was “anticipated that the Democrats would control the House of Representatives for the first time in two decades,” and “Senate Republicans were no longer willing to allow the House to unilaterally discard electoral votes that could turn the outcome of the election or throw the election to the House.” Colvin & Foley at 499.

In the run up to the 1876 election, the Senate debated repeal or modification of the Joint Rule where the “primary disagreement” was whether Congress could adopt a rule permitting one house of Congress to reject a State’s electoral votes “without a constitutional amendment,” and “[t]he dividing lines were drawn between those who did not believe the Constitution gave Congress a right to say whether votes shall be counted or not be counted and those who did.” Id. at 500 (internal quotations and citations omitted). Consequently, if Congress itself cannot determine whether to count (or not count votes), then that function must remain with the President of the Senate.

History of Competing State Electoral Slates

Historical precedent for dual electoral slates getting to the President of the Senate arose before the ECA. While the circumstances varied, in the Tilden and Hayes election of 1876 several states submitted two or three slates of electors with at least one each for Tilden and Hayes. There were also serious allegations of violence, voter intimidation, fraud, and corruption.

- Florida: Three sets of electors: (1) For Hayes, from Board of State Canvassers and signed by the Governor; (2) For Tilden, alleging violence, voter intimidation, fraud, and discarding Tilden ballots, “the slate of Presidential electors pledged to Tilden decided to go ahead and meet as if they were the authorized Electoral College delegates from Florida,” certified by Florida Attorney General; and (3) For Tilden, when the Florida legislature called for a new canvas, which certified electors for Tilden, and a Florida court ruling that Tilden electors were legitimate, and the newly elected Democratic Governor certified a third slate of electors for Tilden. Colvin & Foley at 503-04.

- Louisiana: “The first slate of electors was for Hayes; it came from the canvassing board and was certified by the ostensible governor. The second was for Tilden, with these electors disregarding the work of the canvassing board on the ground that the board was corrupt. This slate was certified by a different individual who purported to be the lawful governor. The third slate was in effect a duplicate of the first.” Id. at 504.
- South Carolina: “South Carolina submitted two slates, one for Hayes from the Board of Canvassers, certified by the governor, and another for Tilden, alleging that the Tilden electors were the rightful voters.” Id.
- Oregon: “In Oregon, the voters had elected a postmaster general as one of Hayes’s electors, a possible violation of the constitutional prohibition against federal office holders acting as electors. Because of this, the elector resigned from his office as postmaster, and Oregon law allowed the remaining electors to choose a replacement; they chose the resigned elector. The Democratic Oregon governor refused to certify this slate of electors and instead certified a slate with two Hayes electors and a Tilden elector as a replacement for the former postmaster. The secretary of state, on the other hand, submitted a certificate that contained the three original Hayes electors and noted that there was no question that the Hayes electors received the most votes on election day.” Id. at 504-05.

As a result of this tumult, Congress found a quick fix to potential future disruptions through enactment of the Electoral Count Act.

Binding Law, Congressional Rule, or Unreviewable Statement of Principle/Moral Obligation?

“Whether the ECA is a statute or a joint rule enacted in statutory form is ambiguous. In truth, both theories underlay its enactment. The difference between the two theories disappears, however, to the extent that the ECA involves political questions not subject to judicial review. The difference between the two theories also disappears to the extent that Congress self-enforces its own internal rules.” Siegel at 565.

Internal Rule: “Many congressmen spoke in opposition to the ECA on the grounds that legislating the matter was an unconstitutional attempt to bind Congress’s discretion. It was unconstitutional, they said, because enacting and amending legislation required Presidential approval (or an extraordinary majority in Congress), and thus improperly involved the President in implementing the rules for determining Presidential Elections. In addition, one Congress could never bind another in this matter. Congress could govern itself, they reasoned, by enacting concurrent rules for each vote count, or a continuing joint rule which the houses could amend at any time.” Siegel at 560-61.

Binding Legislation: “Many other congressmen believed that electoral vote counting was a proper subject for binding legislation. Congress’s rulemaking authority governed its own proceedings, and the ECA was properly legislative because through it the two houses adopted rules to govern each other’s actions. Moreover, the power to count electoral votes was a power vested in the national government, and the Sweeping Clause allows Congress to “make all Laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into Execution . . . all . . . Powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any Department . . . thereof.” Siegel at 561.

Unreviewable/Unenforceable Statement of Principle/Moral Obligation: “These congressmen assumed that Congress’s electoral count decisions were not subject to judicial review. Because they believed that ‘[n]o power in this Government can or ever will set aside and annul the declaration of who is elected President . . . when that declaration is made in the presence of the two Houses of Congress.’” Siegel at 563.

“Yet, to these congressmen, an unenforceable law was better than no agreement at all. In addition, they believed an unenforceable law was better than a joint rule because of the law’s greater ability to bind Congress’s conscience and create a moral obligation to abide by its terms. Congress understood that even if the ECA enacted rules of only moral obligation, it nonetheless would constrain behavior both outside and inside Congress.” Siegel at 564.

While the concept of non-binding “rulemaking statutes” and “anti-entrenchment clauses” developed during the 20th Century, “a number of Congressmen stated during debate on the ECA that this measure would attempt in vain to entrench procedures that would bind future Congresses.” Chris Land & David Schultz, On The Unenforceability of the Electoral Count Act, 13 RUTGERS J.L. & PUB. POL’Y 340, 376 (2016) (citing 8 CONG. REC. 164 (1878)). As stated by Sen. Augustus Garland in debate on a precursor to the ECA: “An act passed by a previous Congress assuming to bind ... a succeeding Congress need not be repealed because it is void; and for that I reason I oppose this bill.” Id. (Emphasis added).

Applicants could not have stated the principle any clearer. The ECA is void and unconstitutional because a previous Congress cannot bind a succeeding one.

Applicants’ Requested Remedy Is Warranted

Some argue that abandoning the ECA will create havoc and cast the upcoming Joint Session on January 6 into turmoil. They offer a “parade of horrors” about making the Vice President a dictator and disenfranchising voters and argue that the assembled House and Senate must serve a role in the counting. These concerns do not justify continuing with a statutory scheme that flies in the face of the Constitution and the Framers’ intent.

The first concern ignores the presumption of regularity that this Court must accord to not only the Vice President but also the House and Senate: “The presumption of regularity supports the official acts of public officers and, in the absence of clear evidence to the contrary, courts presume that they have properly discharged their official duties.” Merck Sharp & Dohme Corp. v. Albrecht, 139 S.Ct.

1668, 1684 (2019) (interior quotations omitted). This Court should reject the idea not only that the Vice President might falsely erect barriers to counting a lawful vote but also that—if the Vice President did so—the House and Senate would vote inconsistently with that lawful vote.

The second concern ignores the historical context that, when the Electors Clause and the Twelfth Amendment were ratified state legislatures picked electors. Under the Twelfth Amendment, when the vote of the state legislatures' electors is inconclusive—for whatever reason—the national legislature picks the President. While disenfranchising voters did not enter into the constitutional provision, that claim also presupposes that one can determine by January 6 or January 20 who lawfully won the election, which is not the case here.

The third concern—that the assembled House and Senate must serve a role—has it entirely backward. In a normal count as in all elections since 1876, their role is ceremonial for a ministerial count. In a contested election like this one, their only role during the Vice President's presiding over the joint session is to be on hand to serve their actual role of being called immediately to vote for the President in the House and the Vice President in the Senate. See U.S. CONST. amend. XII.

While the ECA's defenders argue that “we know better” than those who framed the Constitution, their scare tactics conflict with the Constitution's built-in protections because the Constitution did not leave matters to chance. It empowered the Vice-President to take control of the proceeding and resolve disputes. See generally Vasan Kesavan, Is the Electoral Count Act Unconstitutional?, 80 N.C. L.

REV. 1653 (2002) (finding ECA unconstitutional and highlighting Twelfth Amendment's constitutional safeguards). At a minimum, the Twelfth Amendment provided for the House, voting by state delegation, to resolve a disputed electoral college count. Therefore, the remedy sought by Applicants is easily crafted. The Court should declare that:

- ECA sections 5 and 15 are unconstitutional.
- When a member of the House objects to a slate of electors or between two slates of competing electors presented for any single state, the Vice President, as President of the Senate, shall determine the dispute as he sees fit. He may choose between competing elector slates or he may choose to disregard electors altogether from any state.
- If after all the states' electors are counted, no single candidate has 270 votes, the House shall vote for President, which each State delegation having one vote.

The Argument section, infra, demonstrates Applicants' entitlement to that relief.

FACTUAL AND LITIGATION BACKGROUND

The facts relevant to this motion are set forth in the Complaint (App. 22a) and the exhibits filed below (App. 50a-65a), which are incorporated herein by reference.

Applicants present here only a summary.

1. The Applicants include Rep. Louie Gohmert—a Member of the U.S. House of Representatives, representing Texas's First Congressional District in both the current and the next Congress—who seeks to enjoin the operation of the Electoral Count Act to prevent a deprivation of his rights and the rights of those he represents under the Twelfth Amendment. The Applicants also include the entire slate of Republican Presidential Electors for the State of Arizona, as well as an outgoing and incoming member of the Arizona Legislature. On December 14, 2020, pursuant to the requirements of applicable state laws, the Constitution, and the Electoral Count Act, the Applicant Arizona Electors, convened at the Arizona State Capitol, and cast Arizona's electoral votes for President Donald J. Trump and Vice President Michael R. Pence. On the same date, the Republican Presidential Electors for the States of Georgia, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin met at their respective State Capitols to cast their States' electoral votes for President Trump and Vice President Pence (or in the case of Michigan, attempted to do so but were blocked by the Michigan State Police, and ultimately voted on the grounds of the State Capitol).

2. There are now competing slates of Republican and Democratic electors in five States with Republican majorities in both houses of their State Legislatures—Arizona, Georgia, Michigan, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin (i.e., the Contested States)—that collectively have 73 electoral votes, which are more than sufficient to determine the winner of the 2020 General Election. On December 14, 2020, in Arizona and the other Contested States, the Democratic Party's slate of electors convened in the State Capitol to cast their electoral votes for former Vice President Joseph R. Biden and Senator Kamala Harris. On the same day, Arizona Governor Doug Ducey and Secretary of State Katie Hobbs submitted the Certificate of Ascertainment with the Biden electoral votes to the National Archivist pursuant to the Electoral Count Act.

3. Republican Senators and Republican Members of the House of Representatives have also expressed their intent to oppose the certified slates of electors from the Contested States due to the substantial evidence of voter fraud in the 2020 General Election. Multiple Senators and House Members have stated that they will object to the Biden electors at the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress. These public statements by legislators make it a near certainty that at least one Senator and one House Member will follow through on their commitments and invoke the (unconstitutional) Electoral Count Act's dispute resolution procedures.

4. Respondent Vice President Pence, in his capacity as President of the Senate and Presiding Officer at the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress to select the next President, will be presented with the following circumstances: (1) competing slates of electors from the State of Arizona and the other Contested States, (2) that represent sufficient electoral votes (a) if counted, to determine the winner of the 2020 General Election, or (b) if not counted, to deny either President Trump or former Vice President Biden sufficient votes to win outright; and (3) objections from at least one Senator and at least one Member of the House of Representatives to the counting of electoral votes from one or more of the Contested States and thereby invoking the unconstitutional procedures set forth in Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act.

5. As a result, Respondent Vice President Pence will necessarily have to decide whether to follow the unconstitutional provisions of the Electoral Count Act or the Twelfth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution at the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress. This approaching deadline establishes the urgency for this Court to issue a declaratory judgment that Sections 5 and 15 of the Electoral Count Act are unconstitutional and provide the undisputed factual basis for this Court to do so on an expedited basis, and to enjoin Respondent Vice President Pence from following any Electoral Count Act procedures in 3 U.S.C. §§ 5 and 15 because they are unconstitutional under the Twelfth Amendment.

6. In the interval between Applicants' filing their motion and reply in district court, Sen. Josh Hawley of Missouri has announced his intent to object to Biden electors (App. 54a-55a, 57a-58a). In the interval since the district court ruled, at least eleven more Senators announced their intent to object, according to the Senate.gov website for Senator Marsha Blackburn of Tennessee.<sup>5</sup> On the House side, in addition to Applicant Louie Gohmert ("Rep. Gohmert"), approximately 140 Republican Members of the House have announced plans to object to the Biden electors (App. 62a-65a).

7. In addition to the opposition (ECF #18) filed by the Respondent, Vice President Michael R. Pence, the Democrat-dominated Bipartisan Legal Advisory Group ("BLAG") of the U.S. House of Representatives filed an amicus brief (ECF #22), with the two Republican BLAG members (the Republican Leader and the Republican Whip) dissenting. In addition, a Texas resident who supports former Vice President Joseph R. Biden's candidacy moved to intervene (ECF #19), also filing a motion to dismiss (ECF #20), and a Colorado elector for Mr. Biden moved to intervene in a unified document (ECF #15) that includes a section opposing the merits of Applicants' claims. For purposes of their Motion, Applicants treated the would-be intervenors' filings as amicus briefs opposed to Applicants' Motion. See, e.g., Lelsz v. Kavanaugh, 98 F.R.D. 11, 13 (E.D. Tex. 1982) (denying leave to intervene but allowing movant to file amicus brief).

---

<sup>5</sup> Available at <https://www.blackburn.senate.gov/2021/1/blackburn-hagerty-and-colleagues-will-vote-to-oppose-electoral-college-results> (last visited Jan. 2, 2021).

8. Additionally, several Michigan Republican electors moved to intervene as plaintiffs.

9. The district court dismissed for lack of standing, without a hearing. App. 1a-13a.

10. Applicants appealed and filed an emergency motion to set an expedited briefing schedule, which prompted a motions panel of the Fifth Circuit to "affirm the judgment essentially for the reasons stated by the district court," App. 16a, based on the briefing from the district court (i.e., without affording Applicants an opportunity to respond to the district court's order). Id. The Fifth Circuit indicated that the mandate would "issue forthwith." Id. The Clerk subsequently certified the order as the Fifth Circuit's mandate. Id.

ARGUMENT

I. THE ALL WRITS ACT GIVES THIS COURT JURISDICTION TO ENTER INTERIM RELIEF PENDING THE TIMELY FILING OF A PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI.

The All Writs Act provides jurisdiction for interim relief to preserve the full range of the controversy now for this Court’s consideration upon the Applicants’ future appeal to this Court:

The All Writs Act empowers the federal courts to issue all writs necessary or appropriate in aid of their respective jurisdictions and agreeable to the usages and principles of law. The exercise of this power is in the nature of appellate jurisdiction where directed to an inferior court, and extends to the potential jurisdiction of the appellate court where an appeal is not then pending but may be later perfected.

FTC v. Dean Foods Co., 384 U.S. 597, 603 (1966) (interior quotations and citations omitted, emphasis added) (citing Ex parte Crane, 5 Pet. 190, 193 (1832) (Marshall, C.J.); Ex parte Bradstreet, 7 Pet. 634 (1833) (Marshall, C.J.)). The All Writs Act provides “a limited judicial power to preserve the court’s jurisdiction or maintain the status quo by injunction pending review of an agency’s action through the prescribed statutory channels,” and that “power has been deemed merely incidental to the courts’ jurisdiction to review” the ultimate merits of the future appeal. Id. at 604 (alterations omitted). As explained in this section, that power is appropriate in this case.

Without interim relief, the Vice President will invoke the Electoral Count Act’s unconstitutional dispute-resolution process to pick the next President, after which the 2020 election will not be able to right itself: if the wrong winner is picked, even the impeachment of that winner would not install the correct winner. That is the type of harm that justifies action under the All Writs Act. For example, in Sampson v. Murray, 415 U.S. 61, 76-77 (1974), the Court was concerned “that refusal to grant the injunction would result in the practical disappearance of one of the entities whose merger the [applicant] sought to challenge” and that “[t]he disappearance, in turn, would mean that the [applicant] and the court entrusted ... to review the ... decision, would be incapable of ... fashioning effective relief.” Under the circumstances, “invocation of the All Writs Act, as a preservative of jurisdiction, was considered appropriate,” id., which applies equally here as in Sampson.

In another instance where the Court’s invoking the All Writs Act shares themes at issue here, La Buy v. Howes Leather Co., 352 U.S. 249, 259 (1957), refused to permit reference of antitrust cases to a master. “In La Buy, the District Judge on his own motion referred to a special master two complex, protracted antitrust cases on the eve of trial. ... The master, a member of the bar, was to hear and decide the entire case, subject to review by the District Judge under the ‘clearly erroneous’ test.” Mathews v. Weber, 423 U.S. 261, 274 (1976). Here, invoking the House and Senate to undertake dispute resolution in a manner not contemplated anywhere in the Constitution would repeat aspects of La Buy that justified resort to the All Writs Act.

In addition, this Court also can rely on § 2106 for additional authority to resolve this matter:

The Supreme Court or any other court of appellate jurisdiction may affirm, modify, vacate, set aside or reverse any judgment, decree, or order of a court lawfully brought before it for review, and may remand the cause and direct the entry of such appropriate judgment, decree, or order, or require such further proceedings to be had as may be just under the circumstances.

28 U.S.C. § 2106. As § 2106 makes clear, this Court can not only alter the judgment from the lower court but also require further proceedings.

II. APPLICANTS HAVE STANDING.

Article III standing presents the tripartite test of whether the party invoking a court’s jurisdiction raises an “injury in fact” under Article III: (a) a legally cognizable injury (b) that is both caused by the challenged action, and (c) redressable by a court. Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 561-62 (1992). The task of establishing standing varies, depending “considerably upon whether the plaintiff is himself an object of the action (or forgone action) at issue.” Id. at 561. If so, “there is ordinarily little question that the action or inaction has caused him injury, and that a judgment preventing or requiring the action will redress it.” Id. at 562. If not, standing may depend on third-party action:

When ... a plaintiff’s asserted injury arises from the government’s allegedly unlawful regulation (or lack of regulation) of someone else, much more is needed. In that circumstance, causation and redressability ordinarily hinge on the response of the regulated (or regulable) third party to the government action or inaction—and perhaps on the response of others as well.

Id. (emphasis in original). Here, Applicants can assert both first-party and third-party injuries, with the showing for standing easier for the first-party injuries. Specifically, Vice President Pence’s action under the unconstitutional Electoral Count Act would have the effect of ratifying injuries inflicted—in the first instance—by third parties in Arizona.

A. Applicants have suffered an injury in fact.

Applicants have standing as a member of the United States House of Representatives, Members of the Arizona Legislature, and as Presidential Electors for the State of Arizona.

Rep. Louie Gohmert is a Member of the U.S. House of Representatives, representing Texas's First Congressional District in both the current and the next Congress. Rep. Louie Gohmert requests declaratory and injunctive relief to prevent action as prescribed by 3 U.S.C. § 5, and 3 U.S.C. § 15 and to give the power back to the states to vote for the President in accordance with the Twelfth Amendment. Otherwise he will not be able to vote as a Congressional Representative in accordance with the Twelfth Amendment, and instead, his vote in the House, if there is disagreement, will be eliminated by the current statutory construct under the Electoral Count Act, or diluted by votes of the Senate and ultimately by passing the final determination to the state Executives.

In the event that objections occur leading to a vote in the House of Representatives, then under the Twelfth Amendment, on January 6, in the new House of Representatives, there will be twenty-seven states led by Republican majorities, and twenty states led by Democrat majorities, and three states that are tied. Twenty-six seats are required for a victor under the Twelfth Amendment, and further that, under the Twelfth Amendment, in the event neither candidate wins twenty-six seats by March 4, then the then-current Vice President would be declared the President. However, if the Electoral Count Act is followed, this one vote on a state-by-state basis in the House of Representatives for President simply would not occur and would deprive this Member of his constitutional right as a sitting member of a Republican delegation, where his vote matters.

The Twelfth Amendment specifically states that “if no person have such majority, then from the persons having the highest numbers not exceeding three on the list of those voted for as President, the House of Representatives shall choose immediately, by ballot, the President. But in choosing the President, the votes shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote.” The authority to vote with this authority is taken from the House of Representatives, of which Mr. Gohmert is a member, and usurped by statutory construct set forth in 3 U.S.C. § 5 and 3 U.S.C. § 15. Therein the authority is given back to the state’s executive branch in the process of counting and in the event of disagreement—while also giving the Senate concurrent authority with the House to vote for President. As a result, the application of 3 U.S.C. § 5 and 3 U.S.C. § 15 would prevent Rep. Gohmert from exercising his constitutional duty to vote pursuant for President to the Twelfth Amendment.

Prior to December 14, 2020, Applicant Arizona Electors had standing under the Electors Clause as candidates for the office of Presidential Elector because, under Arizona law, a vote cast for the Republican Party’s President and Vice President is cast for the Republican Presidential Electors. See ARIZ. REV. STAT. § 16-212. Accordingly, Applicant Arizona Electors, like other candidates for office, “have a cognizable interest in ensuring that the final vote tally reflects the legally valid votes cast,” as “[a]n inaccurate vote tally is a concrete and particularized injury to candidates such as the Electors.” Carson v. Simon, 978 F.3d 1051, 1057 (8th Cir. 2020) (affirming that Presidential Electors have Article III and prudential standing under Electors Clause); see also Wood v. Raffensperger, No. 20-14418, 2020 WL 7094866, *10 (11th Cir. Dec. 5, 2020) (affirming that if Applicant voter had been a candidate for office “he could assert a personal, distinct injury” required for standing); Trump v. Wis. Elections Comm’n, No. 20-cv-1785, 2020 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 233765 at *26 (E.D. Wis. Dec. 12, 2020) (President Trump, “as candidate for election, has a concrete particularized interest in the actual results of the election.”). Applicants suffer a “debasement” of their votes, which “state[s] a justiciable cause of action on which relief could be granted” Wesberry v. Sanders, 376 U.S. 1, 5-6 (1964) (citing Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186 (1962)).

Under the Fifth Circuit’s and this Court’s precedents, Applicants’ injuries are not generalized grievances insufficient for Article III. Rep. Gohmert has standing to challenge unconstitutional elector slates and to vote for President under the Twelfth Amendment as opposed to voting for objections under the Electoral Count Act. See LULAC v. City of Boerne, 659 F.3d 421, 430 (5th Cir. 2011); League of United Latin Am. Citizens, Council No. 4434 v. Clements, 999 F.2d 831, 845 (5th Cir. 1993) (en banc); see Section II.D, infra. The Arizona-Elector Applicants have standing to be counted or, if the unlawful non-enforcement of Arizona’s election statutes by non-legislative actors stands, the Arizona-Elector Applicants have standing to nullify the unlawful votes of the rival slate of electors. Although the district court thought the dispute speculative (App. 9a), the dispute is already fully extant. What the district judge appears to have meant is that Members of Congress may not object pursuant to the Electoral Count Act. Rep. Gohmert has said that he would, as have 140 other members of the House (App. 62a-65a), and at least two members of the Senate when Applicants were in district court (App. 54a-55a, 57a-61a). Since then, eleven additional Senators have announced plans to object, according to a Senate.gov press release.<sup>6</sup> A train wreck is not speculative when the train is already off the rails. The outcome may be uncertain, but procedural-rights standing does not depend on outcomes.

B. Applicants' injuries are traceable to the Vice President.

Rep. Gohmert faces imminent threat of injury that the Respondent will follow the unlawful Electoral Count Act and, in so doing, eviscerate Rep. Gohmert's constitutional right and duty to vote for President under the Twelfth Amendment. With injuries directly caused by a defendant, plaintiffs can show an injury in fact with "little question" of causation or redressability. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. at 561-62. Although the Respondent did not cause the underlying election fraud, the Respondent nonetheless will directly cause Rep. Gohmert's injury, which is causation—and redressability—under Defenders of Wildlife.

By contrast, the Arizona Electors suffer indirect injury vis-à-vis this Respondent. But for the alleged wrongful conduct of Arizona executive branch officials under color of law, the Applicant Arizona Electors would have been certified as the presidential electors for Arizona, and Arizona's Governor and Secretary of State would have transmitted uncontested votes for Donald J. Trump and Michael R. Pence to the Electoral College. The certification and transmission of a competing slate of Biden electors has resulted in a unique injury that only Applicant Arizona Electors could suffer, namely, having a competing slate of electors take their place and their votes in the Electoral College. While the Vice President did not cause Applicants' initial injury—that happened in Arizona—the Vice President stands in the position at the Joint Session on January 6 to ratify and purport to make lawful the unlawful injuries that Applicants suffered in Arizona. That is causation enough for Article III.

---

<sup>6</sup> See note 5, supra, and accompanying text.

For example:

According to the USDA, the injury suffered by Sierra Club is caused by the independent actions (i.e., pumping decisions) of third party farmers, over whom the USDA has no coercive control. Although we recognize that causation is not proven if the injury complained of is the result of the independent action of some third party not before the court, this does not mean that causation can be proven only if the governmental agency has coercive control over those third parties. Rather, the relevant inquiry in this case is whether the USDA has the ability through various programs to affect the pumping decisions of those third party farmers to such an extent that the plaintiff's injury could be relieved.

Sierra Club v. Glickman, 156 F.3d 606, 614 (5th Cir. 1998) (interior quotation marks, citations, and alterations omitted, emphasis in original); Tel. & Data Sys. v. FCC, 19 F.3d 42, 47 (D.C. Cir. 1994).

When third parties inflict injury that injury is traceable to government action if the injurious conduct “would have been illegal without that [governmental] action.” Simon v. Eastern Kentucky Welfare Rights Org., 426 U.S. 26, 45 n.25 (1976). As explained below, Vice President Pence stands ready to ratify Applicants’ injuries via the unconstitutional Electoral Count Act, which is causation enough to enjoin his actions. Alternatively, “plaintiff’s injury could be relieved” within the meaning of Sierra Club v. Glickman if the Vice President rejected the Electoral Count Act as unconstitutional.

A procedural-rights plaintiff must also show that “fixing the alleged procedural violation could cause the agency to ‘change its position’ on the substantive action,” Ctr. for Biological Diversity v. United States EPA, 937 F.3d 533, 543 (5th Cir. 2019), which is easy enough here/ Under the Electoral Count Act, the “Blue” or “Biden” states have a bare House majority in the Congress that will vote on January 6. Under the Twelfth Amendment, however, the “Red” or “Trump” states have a 27-20-3 majority where each state delegation gets one vote in the House’s election of the President. That distinction satisfies both third-party causation and procedural-rights tests for Article III standing.

The Twelfth Amendment gives Respondent Vice President exclusive authority and sole discretion as to which set of electors to count or even whether to count no set of electors. If no candidate receives a majority of electoral votes, then the President is to be chosen by the House, where “the votes shall be taken by States, the representation from each state having one vote.” U.S. CONST. amend. XII. If Respondent Pence instead follows the procedures in Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act, Applicants’ electoral votes will not be counted because (a) the Democratic majority House of Representatives will not “decide” to count the electoral votes of Applicant Republican electors; and (b) either the Senate will concur with the House not to count their votes, or the Senate will not concur, in which case, the electoral votes cast by Biden’s electors shall be counted because the Biden slate of electors was certified by Arizona’s executive. Under the Constitution, by contrast, the Vice President counts the votes and—if the count is indeterminate—the vote proceeds immediately to the House for President and to the Senate for Vice President. See U.S. CONST. amend. XII.<sup>7</sup>

Through declaratory and injunctive relief, Applicants ask this Court to prevent Respondent from invoking the unconstitutional Electoral Count Act. As in OCA-Greater Houston v. Texas, 867 F.3d 604, 613-14 (5th Cir. 2017), Respondent cannot rely on the Fifth Circuit’s en banc decision in Okpalobi v. Foster because—unlike in Okpalobi—Applicants have sued someone who implements the statute that Applicants challenge. Compare OCA-Greater Houston, 867 F.3d at 613-14 with Okpalobi v. Foster, 244 F.3d 405, 415 (5th Cir. 2001) (en banc). (defendants had no “enforcement connection with the challenged statute”).<sup>8</sup> Here, Respondent is the presiding officer of the process that Applicants seek to enjoin and declare unconstitutional. Under that circumstance, Applicants have “met [the] burden under Lujan to show that [their] injury is fairly traceable to and redressable by the defendant[.]” OCA-Greater Houston, 867 F.3d at 614.

---

<sup>7</sup> This intent that the Vice President count the votes is borne out by a unanimous resolution attached to the final Constitution that described the procedures for electing the first President (i.e., for the one time when there would not already be a sitting Vice President), stating in relevant part “that the Senators should appoint a President of the Senate, for the sole Purpose of receiving, opening and counting the Votes for President.” 2 M. Farrand, RECORDS OF THE FEDERAL CONVENTION OF 1787, at 666 (1911). For all subsequent elections, when there would be a Vice President to act as President of the Senate, the Constitution vests the opening and counting in the Vice President.

C. Federal courts can redress Applicants’ injuries.

Even if a federal court would lack jurisdiction to enjoin the Vice President, but see Sections III.C.1-2, infra (immunity does not bar this action), this Court’s authoritative declaration would provide redress enough. See Franklin v. Massachusetts, 505 U.S. 788, 803 (1992) (“we may assume it is substantially likely that the President and other executive and congressional officials would abide by an authoritative interpretation of the census statute and constitutional provision by the District Court, even though they would not be directly bound by such a determination”). The Electoral Count Act is blatantly unconstitutional in many respects, see Section I.A, infra, and “it is the province and duty of the judicial department to determine in cases regularly brought before them, whether the powers of any branch of the government, and even those of the legislature in the enactment of laws, have been exercised in conformity to the Constitution.” Powell v. McCormack, 395 U.S. 486, 506 (1969) (interior quotations omitted).

---

<sup>8</sup> In Okpalobi, the plaintiffs had sued Louisiana’s Governor and Attorney General to challenge a statute that empowered private parties and state courts to act. See 244 F.3d at 415.

Even if Applicants do not ultimately prevail under the process that the Twelfth Amendment requires, the relief requested would nonetheless redress their injuries from the unconstitutional Electoral Count Act process in two respects . First, with respect to seeking to follow the Twelfth Amendment procedure over that of 3 U.S.C. § 15, it would redress Rep. Gohmert’s procedural injuries enough to proceed under the correct procedure, even if they do not prevail substantively. FEC v. Akins, 524 U.S. 11, 25 (1998). Second, with respect to the Arizona Electors, it would redress their unequal-footing injuries to treat all rival elector slates the same, even if the House and not the electors choose the next President. Heckler v. Mathews, 465 U.S. 728, 739-40 (1984) (“when the right invoked is that to equal treatment, the appropriate remedy is a mandate of equal treatment, a result that can be accomplished by withdrawal of benefits from the favored class as well as by extension of benefits to the excluded class”) (citations and footnotes omitted, emphasis in original). In each respect, Article III does not require that Applicants show that they will prevail in order to show redressability.

The declaratory relief that Applicants request would redress their injuries enough for Article III and in the chart as set forth:

Event/Issue	3 U.S.C. § 15	Twelfth Amendment
One Congress purports to bind future Congresses	Yes	No
Rival slates of electors	Bicameral dispute resolution with no presentment; state executive breaks ties	Vice President counts; if inconclusive, House & Senate elect President & Vice President, respectively
Violates Presentment Clause	Yes	No
Role for state governors	Yes	No
House voters	Each member votes (e.g., CA gets 53 votes, ND gets 1)	Each state delegation votes (e.g., CA and ND get 1 vote)

As is plain from these material—and, here, dispositive—differences between the Twelfth Amendment and 3 U.S.C. § 15, the two provisions cannot be reconciled.

D. The procedural nature of Applicants’ injuries lowers the Article III bar for immediacy and redressability.

Given that Applicants suffer a concrete injury to their voting rights, Applicants also can press their procedural injuries under the Electoral Count Act. Indeed, the “history of liberty has largely been the history of observance of procedural safeguards,” McNabb v. United States, 318 U.S. 332, 347 (1943), and “procedural rights’ are special,” Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. at 572 n.7; cf. Carey v. Piphus, 435 U.S. 247, 266-67 (1978) (“right to procedural due process is ‘absolute’ [and] does not depend upon the merits of a claimant’s substantive assertions”). Following the correct procedure is important, even if it might lead to the same undesired substantive result:

If a reviewing court agrees that the agency misinterpreted the law, it will set aside the agency’s action and remand the case -- even though the agency ... might later, in the exercise of its lawful discretion, reach the same result for a different reason.

FEC v. Akins, 524 U.S. 11, 25 (1998). As such, Applicants can have standing to ensure that the government respects the required procedures.

For procedural injuries, Article III's redressability and immediacy requirements apply to the procedural violation that will (or someday might) injure a concrete interest, rather than to the concrete future injury. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. at 571-72 & n.7. Specifically, the injuries that Applicants assert affect the procedure by which the status of their votes will be considered, which lowers the thresholds for immediacy and redressability under this Court's and the Fifth Circuit's precedents. Id.; Glickman, 156 F.3d at 613 ("in a procedural rights case, ... the plaintiff is not held to the normal standards for [redressability] and immediacy"); accord Nat'l Treasury Employees Union v. U.S., 101 F.3d 1423, 1428-29 (D.C. Cir. 1996). Similarly, a plaintiff with concrete injury can invoke Constitution's structural protections of liberty. Bond v. United States, 564 U.S. 211, 222-23 (2011).

Voters from smaller states like Arizona suffer an equal-footing injury and a procedural injury vis-à-vis larger states like California because the Electoral Count Act purports to replace the process provided in the Twelfth Amendment. Under the ECA, California has five times the votes that Arizona has, but under the Twelfth Amendment California and Arizona each have one vote. Compare 3 U.S.C. § 15 with U.S. CONST. amend. XII. That analysis applies in third-party injury cases. See Clinton v. New York, 524 U.S. 417, 433 & n.22 (1998) (unequal-footing analysis applies to indirect-injury plaintiffs); cf. id. at 456-57 (that analysis should apply only to equal-protection cases) (Scalia, J., dissenting). Nullification of a procedural protection and any related bargaining power is injury enough, even in third-party cases. Clinton, 524 U.S. at 433 & n.22. Thus, Applicants can have standing to enforce the original constitutional bargain for electing presidents, without the statutory gloss that Congress attempted to superimpose on that process in 1887.

E. Courts must assume the plaintiff's merits views to assess a plaintiff's standing to sue.

All of the briefs opposed to Applicants in the district court made the mistake of disputing Applicants on the merits to attack Applicants' standing. If that were how it works, every losing plaintiff would lose for lack of standing.

Put simply, that "confuses standing with the merits." Initiative & Referendum Institute v. Walker, 450 F.3d 1082, 1092 (10th Cir. 2006); Adar v. Smith, 639 F.3d 146, 150 (5th Cir. 2011) (en banc) ("standing does not depend upon ultimate success on the merits"); accord Lac du Flambeau Band of Lake Superior Chippewa Indians v. Norton, 422 F.3d 490, 501 (7th Cir. 2005); In re Columbia Gas Systems Inc., 33 F.3d 294, 298 (3d Cir. 1994); cf. Cantrell v. City of Long Beach, 241 F.3d 674, 682 (9th Cir. 2001). Instead, federal courts have jurisdiction over a case if "the right of [plaintiffs] to recover under [their] complaint will be sustained if the ... laws of the United States are given one construction," even if the plaintiffs' rights "will be defeated if [those federal laws] are given another." Wheeldin v. Wheeler, 373 U.S. 647, 649 (1963) (interior quotations omitted). Accordingly, federal courts should assume the plaintiff's merits views in evaluating their jurisdiction to hear the plaintiff's claims: "standing in no way depends on the merits of the plaintiff's contention that particular conduct is illegal." Warth v. Seldin, 422 U.S. 490, 500 (1975); City of Waukesha v. EPA, 320 F.3d 228, 235 (D.C. Cir. 2003) ("one must assume the validity of a plaintiff's substantive claim at the standing inquiry"); Adar v. Smith, supra (en banc).

With the idea in mind that this Court should assume Applicants' merits views in evaluating standing, the need to contest this election should become apparent. The Constitution's Elections Clause and Electors Clause give state legislatures the plenary power to set election provisions, and yet—citing the COVID pandemic as either a reason or as an excuse—non-legislative actors in all the contested states systematically eroded ballot-integrity measures like signature or witness requirements and registration or mail-in deadlines to the point where Applicants respectfully submit it is impossible to state who won from the mail-in votes because legal ones have been commingled with illegal ones.

Moreover, although ostensibly a question of state election law, these questions are federal the state election laws apply "not only to elections to state offices, but also to the election of Presidential electors," meaning that state law operates, in part, "by virtue of a direct grant of authority made under Art. II, § 1, cl. 2, of the United States Constitution." Bush v. Palm Beach Cty. Canvassing Bd., 531 U.S. 70, 76 (2000). Logically, "any state authority to regulate election to [federal] offices could not precede their very creation by the Constitution," meaning that any "such power had to be delegated to, rather than reserved by, the States." Cook v. Gralike, 531 U.S. 510, 522 (2001) (internal quotations omitted). "It is no original prerogative of State power to appoint a representative, a senator, or President for the Union.” J. Story, 1 COMMENTARIES ON THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES § 627 (3d ed. 1858). For these reasons, any “significant departure from the legislative scheme for appointing Presidential electors presents a federal constitutional question.” Bush v. Gore, 531 U.S. 98, 113 (2000) (Rehnquist, C.J., concurring) (“Bush II”).

F. The district court’s standing analysis erred in key respects.

With the foregoing background, Applicants respectfully submit that the district court erred in finding that Applicants lack standing. Although only one plaintiff needs standing, both Rep. Gohmert’s claims and the Arizona-Elector claims satisfy Article III’s requirements for standing.

1. Rep. Gohmert has standing.

Rep. Gohmert’s voting injury also answers BLAG’s attempt to classify Rep. Gohmert’s injuries under the rubric of legislative standing under Raines v. Byrd, 521 U.S. 811, 819-20 (1997). Under the legislative-standing decisions, a legislator or legislative body would only have standing for issues within their power (e.g., information to be gotten by subpoena) or if they had a working majority of the relevant number of houses to enact or block legislation. Va. House of Delegates v. Bethune-Hill, 139 S.Ct. 1945, 1955 n.6 (2019) (single house in bicameral legislature); Coleman v. Miller, 307 U. S. 433, 446 (1939) (working majority of individual legislators). Here, Rep. Gohmert seeks to vote for President under the Twelfth Amendment rather than to vote for rival slates of electors under the Electoral Count Act’s dispute-resolution proceedings. Significantly, the states in question have impossibly commingled their legal and illegal ballots so that it is impossible to know the result. As indicated, under the Fifth Circuit’s voting-rights cases, the denial of the opportunity to vote for a candidate is not a generalized grievance. Moreover, because this is a procedural injury: Does the presiding officer invoke the Twelfth Amendment in which each state delegation gets one vote to vote for President or the Electoral Count Act where—contrary to anything in the election-related parts of the Constitution—the states get representation based on population and state governors break ties between the two houses of Congress? As a procedural-injury plaintiff, Rep. Gohmert does not need to show he would prevail, a key distinction that Applicants raised and the lower courts completely ignored.

2. The Arizona-Elector Applicants have standing.

Like Rep. Gohmert, the Arizona-Elector Applicants suffer procedural injury, which the lower courts ignored. Similarly, the lower courts ignored Applicants’ claim that rejecting both sets of Arizona electors would partially redress the Arizona-Elector Applicants’ injury and largely ignored that the ECA—as invoked by the Vice President—would have the effect of ratifying the selection of the rival slate, thus providing traceability to the Vice President. Instead, the district judge argues that the Vice President’s invoking the ECA lacks any “coercive effect” on Arizona’s certification of electoral votes. See App. 11a (citing Bennett v. Spear, 520 U.S. 154, 168-69 (1997)). That is simply a non sequitur. Unless the Arizona legislature decertifies the rival slate of Arizona electors under the legislature’s authority under the Electors Clause, the question now is how the Vice President counts votes in Washington, not what effect that has on certifications back in Arizona.

III. JURISDICTION OTHERWISE EXISTS.

The district court dismissed solely on the basis of Applicants’ purported lack of standing. To obtain interim relief, Applicants must not only rebut the district court’s holding about standing but also establish all other aspects of federal jurisdiction: “Absent an adequate jurisdictional basis for the Court’s consideration of the merits, there is no likelihood that the Applicant will prevail on the merits.” Herwald v. Schweiker, 658 F.2d 359, 363 (5th Cir. 1981) (emphasis added). In this section, Applicants establish federal jurisdiction over the entirety of Applicants’ claims.

A. Applicants otherwise raise an Article III case or controversy.

While Article III jurisdiction most often involves standing—i.e., a plaintiff’s injury in fact, the defendant’s causation or traceability, and the court’s power to redress, Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. at 561-62—the scope of Article III extends to other overlapping issues:

“All of the doctrines that cluster about Article III—not only standing but mootness, ripeness, political question, and the like—relate in part, and in different though overlapping ways, to ... the constitutional and prudential limits to the powers of an unelected, unrepresentative judiciary in our kind of government.”

Allen v. Wright, 468 U.S. 737, 750 (1984) (quoting Vander Jagt v. O’Neill, 699 F.2d 1166, 1178-79 (D.C. Cir. 1983) (Bork, J., concurring)). As explained in the following eight subsections, all of these Article III gate-keeping tests are met here.

1. The parties do not seek the same relief.

In the district court, the Vice President argued that “Applicants’ suit seeks to empower the Vice President to unilaterally and unreviewably decide objections to the validity of electoral votes” such that “Plaintiffs are ... not sufficiently adverse to the legal interests of the Vice President.” But he seeks dismissal, whereas Applicants seek declaratory and injunctive relief. Moreover, Applicants express no opinion on whether the Vice President’s actions would be unreviewable. Instead, Applicants merely seek declaratory and injunctive relief against an unconstitutional statute.

Accordingly, this is not an instance where “the parties desire precisely the same result” so that there is no Article III case or controversy. GTE Sylvania, Inc. v. Consumers Union of the United States, Inc., 445 U.S. 375, 383 (1980) (interior quotations omitted); Moore v. Charlotte-Mecklenburg Bd. of Educ., 402 U.S. 47, 47-48 (1971) (per curiam). The Respondent seeks the dismissal of this action, and Applicants ask for a judgment in their favor. Even if one Applicant and the Vice President were “friendly” in the sense of wanting the same thing, the other Applicants remain unaffected, because “[o]nly one plaintiff is needed to establish standing for each form of requested relief.” Pool v. City of Houston, 978 F.3d 307, 312 n.7 (5th Cir. 2020) (citing Town of Chester v. Laroe Estates, Inc., 137 S.Ct. 1645, 1651 (2017)).

2. The political-question doctrine does not bar this action.

The “political questions doctrine” can bar review of certain issues that the Constitution delegates to one of the other branches, but that bar does not apply to constitutional claims related to voting (other than claims brought under the Guaranty Clause of Article IV, § 4):

We hold that this challenge to an apportionment presents no nonjusticiable “political question.” The mere fact that the suit seeks protection of a political right does not mean it presents a political question. Such an objection “is little more than a play upon words.”

Baker, 369 U.S. at 209. As in Baker, litigation over political rights is not the same as a political question.

3. This action is not moot.

“A case becomes moot only when it is impossible for a court to grant any effectual relief whatever to the prevailing party.” Knox v. SEIU, Local 1000, 567 U.S. 298, 307 (2012) (internal quotations omitted, emphasis added). The joint session will not meet until January 6, and Congress could extend its statutory deadlines, as it did in connection with the only other similarly contested election. Ch. 37, 19 Stat. 227 (1877). Indeed, even without a new statute, the January 6 joint session could be extended or continued further into January. It remains possible for this Court to enter a judgment that addresses the constitutionality of the Electoral Count Act and its application to the 2020 election.<sup>9</sup>

4. This action is ripe.

It is undisputed that rival slates of electors have been submitted for an outcome-determinative number of electoral votes. It is indisputable that at least one Representative and one Senator will, or are likely to, object to the slates from these

---

<sup>9</sup> Indeed, the nearest constitutional deadline is January 20, U.S. CONST. amend. XX, and to establish mootness based on a Biden vote on January 6, the Vice President would need to establish that such a vote could not be reconsidered or vacated prior to the swearing in of the next president.

contested states.<sup>10</sup> The timing of future events provides no barrier to justiciability: “Where the inevitability of the operation of a statute against certain individuals is patent, it is irrelevant to the existence of a justiciable controversy that there will be a time delay before the disputed provisions will come into effect.” Stolt-Nielsen S.A. v. Animal Feeds Int’l Corp., 559 U.S. 662, 670 n.2 (2010). Indeed, even without objecting Representatives and Senators, the presence of an outcome-determinative number of rival slates of electors guarantees the need for the joint session to engage in some form of dispute-resolution process, which squarely presents the question of whether that process lies under the Electoral Count Act that Applicants challenge.

B. Prudential limits on Article III jurisdiction do not apply.

In addition to Article III’s jurisdictional limits, the judiciary has adopted prudential limits on standing that bar judicial review even when the plaintiff meets Article III’s minimum criteria. See, e.g., Valley Forge Christian Coll. v. Ams. United for Separation of Church & State, Inc., 454 U.S. 464, 475 (1982) (zone-of-interests test); Secretary of State of Md. v. Joseph H. Munson Co., 467 U.S. 947, 955 (1984) (litigants must raise their own rights); Elk Grove Unified School Dist. v. Newdow, 542 U.S. 1, 12 (2004) (litigants cannot sue over generalized grievances more appropriately addressed in the representative branches). “Unlike constitutional standing, prudential standing arguments may be waived.” Bd. of Miss. Levee Comm’rs v. EPA, 674 F.3d 409, 417-18 (5th Cir. 2012); Lexmark Int’l, Inc. v. Static Control Components, Inc., 572 U.S. 118, 126 (2014); June Med. Servs. L.L.C. v. Russo, 140 S.Ct. 2103, 2117 (2020) (“the rule that a party cannot ordinarily rest his claim to relief on the legal rights or interests of third parties ... does not involve the Constitution’s case-or-controversy requirement ... [a]nd so ... it can be forfeited or waived”) (interior quotations and citations omitted). The Vice President raised only constitutional arguments against Applicants’ standing, and he thus waived all non-jurisdictional arguments not raised in his opposition below.

---

<sup>10</sup> The Senate.gov press release and the related news reports about objections next week when Congress convenes in joint session are judicially noticeable. Concerned Citizens for Equal. v. McDonald, 863 F. Supp. 393, 394 (E.D. Tex. 1994) (newspapers); Kitty Hawk Aircargo, Inc. v. Chao, 418 F.3d 453, 457 (5th Cir. 2005) (government website).

Citing a public statement by one of the Arizona Elector Applicants, the Vice President and his amici argued or implied that that this is a “friendly suit” that the district court should dismiss. Any bar against friendly suits is prudential, not jurisdictional. Rescue Army v. Municipal Court of City of Los Angeles, 331 U.S. 549, 568-69 (1947); New York City Transit Authority v. Beazer, 440 U.S. 568, 583 (1979). As indicated in Section III.A.1, supra, this action is not “friendly” in the Article III sense. To the extent that the “friendly” remark refers to personal relationships, it would be irrelevant to this official-capacity action: “while friendship is a ground for recusal of a Justice where the personal fortune or the personal freedom of the friend is at issue, it has traditionally not been a ground for recusal where official action is at issue, no matter how important the official action was to the ambitions or the reputation of the Government officer.” Cheney v. United States Dist. Court, 541 U.S.

913, 916 (2004) (Scalia, J., in chambers) (emphasis in original). But Applicants seek relief that Respondent opposes, which is not “friendly” in the prudential sense.

C. This action is otherwise within federal courts’ jurisdiction.

In addition to satisfying Article III, Applicants’ claims also fall squarely within federal jurisdiction.

1. The Speech or Debate Clause does not insulate the Vice President.

The Speech or Debate Clause provides that “Senators and Representatives” “shall not be questioned in any other Place” “for any Speech or Debate in either House”:

The Senators and Representatives ... for any speech or debate in either House, ... shall not be questioned in any other place.

U.S. CONST. art I, § 6, cl. 1. “Not everything a Member of Congress may regularly do is a legislative act within the protection of the Speech or Debate Clause,” Minton v. St. Bernard Par. Sch. Bd., 803 F.2d 129, 134-35 (5th Cir. 1986) (interior quotations omitted), because the “clause has been interpreted to protect only purely legislative activities,” Williams v. Brooks, 945 F.2d 1322, 1326 (5th Cir. 1991) (internal quotation marks omitted), which renders it inapposite here. Where it applies, the Clause poses a jurisdictional bar not only to a court reaching the merits but also to putting the defendant to the burden of putting up a defense. Powell, 395 U.S. at 502-03. But “Legislative immunity does not, of course, bar all judicial review of legislative acts,” Powell, 395 U.S. at 503, and the Speech or Debate Clause does not even apply—by its terms—to the Vice President in his role as President of the Senate or to the Joint Session on January 6.

First, the Clause does not protect the Vice President acting in his role as President of the Senate. See U.S. CONST. art I, § 6, cl. 1; cf. Common Cause v. Biden, 748 F.3d 1280, 1284 (D.C. Cir. 2014) (declining to decide whether or not the Speech or Debate Clause protects the Vice President). At best for the Vice President, the question is an open one, but Applicants respectfully submit that the Constitution’s plain language should govern: The Clause does not apply to the Vice President. Instead, as here, where an unprotected officer of the House or Senate implements an unconstitutional action of the House or Senate, the judiciary has the power to enjoin the officer, even if it would lack the power to enjoin the House, the Senate, or their Members. Powell, 395 U.S. at 505. In short, the Speech or Debate Clause does not protect Vice President Pence at all.

Second, even if the Speech or Debate Clause did protect the Vice President acting as President of the Senate for legislative activity in the Senate, the Joint Session on January 6 is no such action. See U.S. CONST. art I, § 6, cl. 1. This is an election, and the Vice President has no more authority to disenfranchise voters via unconstitutional means as any other person.

2. Sovereign immunity does not bar this action.

The Respondent is Vice President Pence named as a defendant in his official capacity as the Vice President of the United States. With respect to injunctive or declaratory relief, it is a historical fact that at the time that the states ratified the federal Constitution, the equitable, judge-made, common-law doctrine that allows use of the sovereign's courts in the name of the sovereign to order the sovereign's officers to account for their unlawful conduct (i.e., the rule of law) was as least as firmly established and as much a part of the legal system as the judge-made, common-law doctrine of federal sovereign immunity. Louis L. Jaffee, The Right to Judicial Review I, 71 HARV. L. REV. 401, 433 (1958); A.B.A. Section of Admin. Law & Regulatory Practice, A Blackletter Statement of Federal Administrative Law, 54 ADMIN. L. REV. 1, 46 (2002) (it is blackletter law that "suits against government officers seeking prospective equitable relief are not barred by the doctrine of sovereign immunity").

In determining whether the doctrine of Ex parte Young avoids immunity, a court need only conduct a "straightforward inquiry into whether [the] complaint alleges an ongoing violation of federal law and seeks relief properly characterized as prospective." Verizon Md. Inc. v. Pub. Serv. Comm'n of Maryland, 535 U.S. 635, 645 (2002) (citations omitted). That is enough to survive a motion to dismiss on jurisdictional grounds: "The inquiry into whether suit lies under Ex parte Young does not include an analysis of the merits of the claim[.]" Id. at 638. Sovereign immunity poses no bar to jurisdiction here.<sup>11</sup>

---

<sup>11</sup> Indeed, the sovereign immunity afforded a Member of Congress is co-extensive with the protections afforded by the Speech or Debate Clause. In all other respects, Members of Congress are bound by the law to the same extent as other persons. Davis v. Passman, 442 U.S. 228, 246 (1979) ("although a suit against a Congressman for putatively unconstitutional actions taken in the course of his official conduct does raise special concerns counseling hesitation, we hold that these concerns are coextensive with the protections afforded by the Speech or Debate Clause").

The prayer for injunctive relief—that the Vice President be restrained from enforcing 3 U.S.C. § 5 and § 15 in contravention of the Twelfth Amendment of the Constitution—to instead follow the Twelfth Amendment, clearly satisfies the “straightforward inquiry.” Applicants request declaratory relief to prevent unconstitutional action under 3 U.S.C. § 5 and § 15 and to give the power back to the states to vote for the President in accordance with the Twelfth Amendment. Therefore, the Respondent should be enjoined from proceeding to certify or count dueling electoral votes under the unconstitutional dispute resolution procedures in 3 U.S.C. § 5 and § 15, and instead to follow the constitutional process as set forth in the Twelfth Amendment of the Constitution.

Amicus BLAG argued in district court that Applicants named the wrong defendant and instead should have named the House and Senate as the parties that injured Applicants. For the reasons set forth above, Applicants respectfully submit that they have properly invoked an Ex parte Young officer suit against the Vice President for the unconstitutional application of the Electoral Count Act. To the extent that this Court disagrees, however, denial of relief would be inappropriate. Instead, even on appeal, this Court could allow Applicants to amend their complaint to join alternate officers such as the House and Senate parliamentarians or to name the United States as a defendant. See Mullaney v. Anderson, 342 U.S. 415, 416-17 (1952). Relying by analogy on FED. R. CIV. P. 21, Mullaney took the admittedly rare step of allowing post-certiorari intervention for two primary reasons: (1) earlier joinder would not have changed the course of the litigation (i.e., late joinder did not prejudice the other party), and (2) requiring the new parties to start over in district court would constitute a “needless waste” of resources:

To grant the motion merely puts the principal, the real party in interest, in the position of his avowed agent. The addition of these two parties plaintiff can in no wise embarrass the defendant. Nor would their earlier joinder have in any way affected the course of the litigation. To dismiss the present petition and require the new plaintiffs to start over in the District Court would entail needless waste and runs counter to effective judicial administration—the more so since, with the silent concurrence of the defendant, the original plaintiffs were deemed proper parties below. Rule 21 will rarely come into play at this stage of a litigation. We grant the motion in view of the special circumstances before us.

Id. (emphasis added). Applicants respectfully submit that adding the United States as a defendant would be justified because this case presents a suitable “special circumstance” for allowing appellate joinder of parties.

Two additional reasons would justify this Court’s allowing an amendment to name the United States as a defendant. First, the United States has waived sovereign immunity for suits seeking prospective injunctive or declaratory relief:

An action in a court of the United States seeking relief other than money damages and stating a claim that an agency or an officer or employee thereof acted or failed to act in an official capacity or under color of legal authority shall not be dismissed nor relief therein be denied on the ground that it is against the United States or that the United States is an indispensable party. The United States may be named as a defendant in any such action, and a judgment or decree may be entered against the United States[.]

5 U.S.C. § 702. Second, as Applicants argued below, “[d]efective allegations of jurisdiction may be amended, upon terms, in the trial or appellate courts.” 28 U.S.C. § 1653. If the Court finds the pleadings inadequate as the Vice President Pence, Applicants could amend their pleadings to include the United States as a defendant. See also FED. R. CIV. P. 15(a)(1)(B). In short, this Court either should disregard the non-problem that amicus BLAG cited or should allow Applicants to cure it.

3. This case presents a federal question, and abstention principles do not apply.

Article III, § 2, of the Federal Constitution provides that, “The judicial Power shall extend to all Cases, in Law and Equity, arising under this Constitution, the Laws of the United States, and Treaties made, or which shall be made, under their Authority[.]” It is clear that the cause of action is one which “arises under” the Federal Constitution. Baker, 369 U.S. at 199. In Baker, the Applicants alleged that, by means of a 1901 Tennessee statute that arbitrarily and capriciously apportioned the seats in the General Assembly among the State’s 95 counties and failed to reapportion them subsequently notwithstanding substantial growth and redistribution of the State’s population, they suffered a “debasement of their votes” and were thereby denied the equal protection of the laws guaranteed them by the Fourteenth Amendment. They sought, inter alia, a declaratory judgment that the 1901 statute is unconstitutional and an injunction restraining certain state officers from conducting any further elections under it. Id. The Baker line of cases recognizes that “that voters who allege facts showing disadvantage to themselves as individuals have standing to sue.”

The federal and constitutional nature of these controversies deprives abstention doctrines of any relevance whatsoever. First, state laws for the appointment of presidential electors are federalized by the operation of The Electoral Count Act of 1887. McPherson v. Blacker, 146 U.S. 1, 27 (1892); Bush II, 531 U.S. at 113 (Rehnquist, C.J., concurring) (“A significant departure from the legislative scheme for appointing Presidential electors presents a federal constitutional question.”). Second, “[i]t is no original prerogative of State power to appoint a representative, a senator, or President for the Union.” J. Story, 1 COMMENTARIES ON THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES § 627 (3d ed. 1858). Logically, “any state authority to regulate election to [federal] offices could not precede their very creation by the Constitution,” meaning that any “such power had to be delegated to, rather than reserved by, the States.” Gralike, 531 U.S. at 522 (internal quotations omitted).

A more quintessentially federal question than which slate of electors will be counted under the Twelfth Amendment and 3 U.S.C. § 15 to elect the President and Vice President can scarcely be imagined.

4. Applicants are entitled to an expedited declaratory judgment.

Under Rule 57, an expedited declaratory judgment is appropriate where, as here, it would “terminate the controversy” based on undisputed or relatively undisputed facts. See FED. R. CIV. P. 57, Advisory Committee Notes. The facts relevant to this controversy are not in dispute, namely: (1) there are competing slates of electors for Arizona and the other Contested States that have been or will be submitted to the Electoral College; (2) the Contested States collectively have sufficient (contested) electoral votes to determine the winner of the 2020 General Election—President Trump or former Vice President Biden; (3) legislators in Arizona and other Contested States have contested the certification of their State’s electoral votes by State executives, due to substantial evidence of voter fraud that is the subject of ongoing litigation and investigations; and (4) Senators and Members of the House of Representatives have expressed their intent to challenge the electors and electoral votes certified by State executives in the Contested States.

As a result, Respondent Vice President Pence, in his capacity as President of the Senate and as the Presiding Officer for the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress will be have to decide between (a) following the requirements of the Twelfth Amendment, and exercising his exclusive authority and sole discretion in deciding which slate of electors and electoral votes to count for Arizona, or neither, or (b) following the distinct and inconsistent procedures set forth in Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act. The expedited declaratory judgment requested, namely, declaring that Section 5 and 15 of the Electoral Count Act are unconstitutional to the extent they conflict with the Twelfth Amendment and the Electors Clause, and that Respondent Pence may not follow these unconstitutional procedures, will terminate the controversy. Further, as discussed below, the requested declaratory judgment would also establish that Applicants meet all of the requirements for any additional injunctive relief required to effectuate the declaratory judgment by enjoining Respondent Pence from violating the Twelfth Amendment.

With the advent of the Declaratory Judgment Act, 28 U.S.C. §§ 2201-2202 (“DJA”), equitable relief in the form of a declaration of the law is even more readily available than traditional equitable relief in the form of injunctions. The federal-question statute, 28 U.S.C. § 1331, provides subject-matter jurisdiction for nonstatutory review of federal agency action. Califano v. Sanders, 430 U.S. 99, 105 (1977) (1976 amendments to § 1331 removed the amount-in-controversy threshold for “any [federal-question] action brought against the United States, any agency thereof, or any officer or employee thereof in his official capacity”) (quoting Pub. L. 94-574, 90 Stat. 2721 (1976)), and 28 U.S.C. § 2201(a) authorizes declaratory relief “whether or not further relief ... could be sought.” Accord Duke Power Co. v. Carolina Envtl. Study Group, Inc., 438 U.S. 59, 70-71 n.15 (1978); Steffel v. Thompson, 415 U.S. 452, 471-72 (1974). Since 1976, § 1331 has authorized DJA actions against federal officers, regardless of the amount in controversy. Sanders, 430 U.S. at 105 (quoted supra). Declaratory relief makes it even easier for parties to obtain pre-enforcement review.<sup>12</sup>

Significantly, the availability of declaratory relief against federal officers predates the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. §§ 551-706 (“APA”), see WILLIAM

---

<sup>12</sup> In 1980, Congress amended § 1331 to its current form, PUB. L. NO. 96-486, § 2(a), 94 Stat. 2369 (1980), without repealing the 1976 amendment relied on by Sanders and its progeny. H.R. REP. NO. 96-1461, at 3-4, reprinted in 1980 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5063, 5065; Bowen v. Massachusetts, 487 U.S. 879, 891 n.16 (1988); United States v. Mitchell, 463 U.S. 206, 227 & n.32 (1983); cf. Morton v. Mancari, 417 U.S. 535, 550 (1974) (repeal by implication is disfavored). Indeed, “‘repeals by implication are disfavored,’ and this canon of construction applies with particular force when the asserted repealer would remove a remedy otherwise available.” Schlesinger v. Councilman, 420 U.S. 738, 752 (1975).

J. HUGHES, FEDERAL PRACTICE § 25387 (1940 & Supp. 1945); EDWIN BORCHARD, DECLARATORY JUDGMENTS, 787-88, 909-10 (1941), and the APA did not displace such relief, either as enacted in 1946 or as amended in 1976. See 5 U.S.C. § 559; Darby v. Cisneros, 509 U.S. 137, 153 (1993) (rejecting argument that 1976 APA amendments expanded APA's preclusion of review). Thus, even if APA § 10(c) precludes declaratory relief under the APA, 5 U.S.C. § 704, suitable plaintiffs nonetheless can obtain that relief under the DJA.

The Fifth Circuit has identified a nonexclusive list of seven factors that a district court must consider when exercising its discretion to hear, stay, or dismiss a case brought under the DJA.

(1) whether there is a pending state action in which all of the matters in controversy may be fully litigated; (2) whether the plaintiff filed suit in anticipation of a lawsuit filed by the defendant; (3) whether the plaintiff engaged in forum shopping in bringing the suit; (4) whether possible inequities in allowing the declaratory plaintiff to gain precedence in time or to change forums exist; (5) whether the federal court is a convenient forum for the parties and witnesses; (6) whether retaining the lawsuit would serve the purposes of judicial economy; and (7) whether the federal court is being called on to construe a state judicial decree involving the same parties and entered by the court before whom the parallel state suit between the same parties is pending.

Sherwin-Williams Co. v. Holmes Cty., 343 F.3d 383, 388 (5th Cir. 2003); see also Frye v. Anadarko Petroleum Corp., 953 F.3d 285, 293-94 (5th Cir. 2019) (requiring actual controversy, the court's authority for declaratory relief, and the court's discretion).

Applicants met the Fifth Circuit’s Sherwin-Williams factors for declaratory relief:

- Pending state action. There is no pending state action.
- Anticipatory suit. The declaratory-judgment Applicants did not race the Respondent to the courthouse; Respondent did not plan to sue Applicants.
- Forum shopping. Rep. Gohmert is the lead plaintiff and has brought suit in his home district as Title 28 allows federal plaintiffs to do. Applicant Arizona Electors have no other ties to this forum, but their claims do not materially change the claims.
- Possible inequities on timing and forum. Rep. Gohmert is the lead plaintiff and has brought suit in his home district as Title 28 allows federal plaintiffs to do.
- Federal court’s convenience. Given that Applicants have sued the Vice President of the United States on a question of federal law, a state forum would not be an option.
- Judicial economy. There are no concerns about judicial economy because this is the only action between the parties.
- Federalism concerns from parallel actions. There are no parallel state-court actions for Rep. Gohmert, and—although the Arizona Elector Applicants have engaged in state-court litigation—the issues here are purely federal.

The Fifth Circuit’s primary concern with declaratory-judgment actions is whether, under that the standard of Brillhart v. Excess Ins. Co. of Am., 316 U.S. 491 (1942),

“the questions in controversy between the parties to the federal suit ... can be better settled in the proceeding pending in the state court.” Sherwin-Williams, 343 F.3d at 389 (quoting Brillhart v. Excess Ins. Co. of Am., 316 U.S. at 494). As indicated, this is an entirely federal action that does not raise that concern.

Under the parallel Anadarko Petroleum standards, declaratory relief is also appropriate under the exigent circumstances here:

- An actual controversy is imminent. The concern with that an actual controversy exists is easily met by the exigent circumstances of a contested election potentially being decided under an unconstitutional process as early as January 6. See Section III.A.4, supra. That does not trigger the Fifth Circuit’s concern that the dispute is “not sufficiently definite and immediate to be justiciable.” Anadarko Petro. Corp., 953 F.3d at 293.
- Jurisdiction. This Court has jurisdiction for this dispute, see Section III, supra, and none of the concerns about superior state-court jurisdiction or burdens of factual proof for diversity jurisdiction enter into the analysis. See id.
- Discretion. Applicants respectfully submit that this Court must address the constitutional concerns presented here: “The power to interpret the Constitution in a case or controversy remains in the Judiciary.” City of Boerne v. Flores, 521 U.S. 507, 524 (1997).

Provided that this Court finds federal jurisdiction to exist, this Court should not hesitate to declare—for the benefit of the Vice President and Congress—what the Constitution requires.

IV. THE WINTER FACTORS FAVOR ENTRY OF INTERIM RELIEF.

Although the Vice President focused on jurisdiction in the district Court, this Court may elect to consider the Winter factors on the equity of granting relief.

A. Applicants have a substantial likelihood of success.

The first and most important Winter factor is the likelihood of movants' prevailing. Winter, 555 U.S. at 20. Applicants are likely to prevail because this Court has jurisdiction for this action, see Sections II-III, supra, and because the Electoral Count Act is blatantly unconstitutional.

1. Unconstitutional laws are nullities.

At the outset, if the Electoral Count Act violates the Constitution, the Electoral Count Act is a nullity:

[I]t is the province and duty of the judicial department to determine in cases regularly brought before them, whether the powers of any branch of the government, and even those of the legislature in the enactment of laws, have been exercised in conformity to the Constitution; and if they have not, to treat their acts as null and void.

Powell, 395 U.S. at 506 (interior quotations omitted, emphasis added). “Due respect for the decisions of a coordinate branch of Government demands that we invalidate a congressional enactment only upon a plain showing that Congress has exceeded its constitutional bounds.” United States v. Morrison, 529 U.S. 598, 607 (2000) (finding Congress exceeded its authority under the Commerce Clause in regulating an area of the law left to the States. “Constitutional deprivations may not be justified by some remote administrative benefit to the State.” Harman v. Forssenius, 380 U.S. 528, 542-43 (1965). Put simply, “that which is not supreme must yield to that which is supreme.” Brown v. Maryland, 25 U.S. (12 Wheat.) 419, 448 (1827). Although Brown arose in a federal-versus-state context, the same simple truth applies in a constitution-versus-statute context: the supreme enactment controls the lesser enactment.

2. The Electoral Count Act violates the Electors Clause and the Twelfth Amendment.

The requested expedited summary proceeding granting declaratory judgment will address the merits of Applicants’ claims, which raise only legal issues as to whether the provisions of Sections 5 and 15 of the Electoral Count Act addressing the counting of electoral votes from competing slates of electors for a given state are in conflict with the Twelfth Amendment and the Electors Clause and are therefore unconstitutional. In other words, if the Court grants the requested relief, that holding and relief will be granted because the Court has found that these provisions of the Electoral Count Act are unconstitutional and that Applicants have in fact succeeded on the merits.

By purporting to make States’ appointment of Presidential electors conclusive, 3 U.S.C. § 5, the Electoral Count Act takes away the authority given to the Vice-President under the Twelfth Amendment. Sim3 U.S.C. § 15 in relevant part states that both Houses, referencing the House of Representatives and the Senate, may concurrently reject certified votes, and further that if there is a disagreement, then, in that case, the votes of the electors who have been certified by the Executive of the State shall be determinative.

The Constitution is unambiguously clear that: “The President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and the votes shall then be counted” “... and if no person have such majority, then from the persons having the highest numbers not exceeding three on the list of those voted for as President, the House of Representatives [who] shall choose immediately, by ballot, the President. But in choosing the President, the votes shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote.” Whereas 3 U.S.C. § 15 and the incorporated referenced to 3 U.S.C. § 5 delegate the authority to the Executive of the State in the event of disagreement, in direct conflict with the Twelfth Amendment and directly taking the opportunity of Presidential Electors’ competing slates from being counted.<sup>13</sup>

3. The Electoral Count Act violates the Constitution’s structural protections of liberty.

The Electoral Count Act exceeds the power of Congress to enact because “one legislature may not bind the legislative authority of its successors,” United States v.

---

<sup>13</sup> Similarly, 3 U.S.C. § 6 is inconsistent with the Electors Clause—which provides that electors “shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the seat of the government of the United States” the results of their vote, U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1, cl. 2-3—because § 6 relies on state executives to forward the results of the electors’ vote to the Archivist for delivery to Congress. 3 U.S.C. § 6. Although the means of delivery are arguably inconsequential, the Constitution vests state executives with no role whatsoever in the process of electing a President. A state executive lends no official imprimatur to a given slate of electors under the Constitution.

Winstar Corp., 518 U.S. 839, 872 (1996), which is a foundational and “centuries-old concept,” id., that traces to Blackstone’s maxim that “Acts of parliament derogatory from the power of subsequent parliaments bind not.” Id. (quoting 1 WILLIAM BLACKSTONE, COMMENTARIES *90). “There is no constitutionally prescribed method by which one Congress may require a future Congress to interpret or discharge a constitutional responsibility in any particular way.” Laurence H. Tribe, Erog v. Hsub and Its Disguises: Freeing Bush v. Gore from Its Hall of Mirrors, 115 HARV. L. REV. 170, 267 n.388 (2001). Thus, the Electoral Count Act is a nullity because it exceeded the power of Congress to enact.

The ECA also violates the Presentment Clause by purporting to create a type of bicameral order, resolution, or vote that is not presented to the President:

Every Order, Resolution, or Vote, to Which the Concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary (except on a question of Adjournment) shall be presented to the President of the United States; and before the Same shall take Effect, shall be approved by him, or being disapproved by him, shall be repassed by two thirds of the Senate and House of Representatives, according to the Rules and Limitations prescribed in the Case of a Bill.

U.S. CONST. art. I, § 7, cl. 3 (emphasis added). The House and Senate cannot resolve the issues that the Electoral Count Act asks them to resolve without either a supermajority in both houses or presentment.

The Electoral Count Act similarly improperly restricts the authority of the House of Representatives and the Senate to control their internal discretion and procedures pursuant to Article I, Section 5 which provides that “[e]ach House may determine the Rules of its Proceedings ...” U.S. CONST. art. I, § 5, cl. 2. The Electoral Count Act also delegates tie-breaking authority to State executives (who have no agency under the Electors Clause or election amendments) when a State presents competing slates that Congress cannot resolve. As such, the Electoral Count Act also violates the non-delegation doctrine, the separation-of-powers and anti-entrenchment doctrines. See generally Chris Land & David Schultz, On the Unenforceability of the Electoral Count Act, 13 Rutgers J.L. & Pub. Policy 340, 364-377 (2016).

As indicated, Applicants have standing to press these structural protections of liberty because Applicants suffer concrete injury in the debasement of their votes.

4. The Necessary and Proper Clause does not save the Electoral Count Act.

In the district court, amicus BLAG argues that the Necessary and Proper Clause authorized Congress to enact the Electoral Count Act.<sup>14</sup> But the Twelfth Amendment is not one of the “foregoing powers” under the Clause, id., and the Twelfth Amendment does not expressly vest any power in the Congress to count votes or to vote, unless and until no candidate achieves a majority of electoral votes. See U.S. CONST. amend. XII. To the extent that the Constitution does vest a dispute-resolution power for the vote-counting function, that power could just as easily be assigned to the Vice President as an “officer thereof” as to Congress itself under the express terms of the Necessary and Proper Clause. U.S. CONST. art. I, § 8, cl. 18. Indeed, Vice Presidents Adams and Jefferson undertook such actions in the 1796 and 1800 elections, Bruce Ackerman & David Fontana, Thomas Jefferson Counts Himself into the Presidency, 90 VA. L. REV. 551, 585, 571-90 (2004), and the United States adopted the Twelfth Amendment shortly thereafter, without trimming the Vice President's responsibilities.

---

<sup>14</sup> The Clause provides that “Congress shall have power ... [t]o make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof.” U.S. CONST. art. I, § 8, cl. 18.

Indeed, as Justice Story explained, neither the original Constitution nor the Twelfth Amendment included a dispute-resolution provision:

In the original plan, as well as in the amendment, no provision is made for the discussion or decision of any questions, which may arise, as to the regularity and authenticity of the returns of the electoral votes .... It seems to have been taken for granted, that no question could ever arise on the subject; and that nothing more was necessary, than to open the certificates, which were produced, in the presence of both houses, and to count the names and numbers, as returned.

J. Story, 3 COMMENTARIES ON THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES § 1464 (Boston, Hilliard, Gray, & Co. 1833). Whatever the Vice President's dispute-resolution powers, the House's theory of dispute resolution by the House and Senate is constitutionally impossible.

Constitutional law recognizes two distinct types of unconstitutionality: "laws for the accomplishment of objects not entrusted to the government" and those "which are prohibited by the constitution." McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U.S. (4 Wheat.) 316, 423 (1819). Put another way, "a federal statute, in addition to being authorized by Art. I, § 8, must also 'not [be] prohibited' by the Constitution." United States v.

Comstock, 560 U.S. 126, 135 (2010) (quoting McCulloch, 17 U.S. (4 Wheat.) at 421) (alterations in Comstock, emphasis added). Clearly, “the Constitution does not conflict with itself by conferring, upon the one hand, a ... power, and taking the same power away, on the other, by the limitations of the due process clause.” Brushaber v. Union Pac. R. Co., 240 U.S. 1, 24 (1916). As applied here, that means that the Necessary and Proper Clause did not authorize the joint session or the two houses, separately, to violate the Presentment Clause. Under the Presentment Clause, all votes, resolutions, and orders—except adjournments—require presentment.

The fact that Congress steadfastly believed in bicameral resolutions steadfastly until this Court resolved the issue, almost 200 years into the Constitution, in INS v. Chadha, 462 U.S. 919, 946 (1983), which goes a long way to explaining how the Electoral Count Act survived 133 years:

A close reading of Chadha, unavailable of course to the participants in the Electoral Count Act debates, fortifies the basic argument made by Senator George and casts further doubt upon the constitutionality of the Electoral Count Act. The Chadha Court carefully explained why the “one-House veto” provision of the Immigration and Nationality Act was subject to the requirements of bicameralism and presentment in Article I. The Court began by noting that whether actions taken by either House are, in law and fact, an exercise of legislative power depends not on their form but upon whether they contain matter which is properly to be regarded as legislative in its character and effect. The Court then described the one-House veto provision in that case as one that had the purpose and effect of altering the legal rights, duties and relations of persons, including the Attorney General, Executive Branch officials and Chadha, all outside the legislative branch[.]

Vasan Kesavan, Is the Electoral Count Act Unconstitutional?, 80 N.C.L. REV. 1653, 1791 (2002). A second factor is that the last election where the Electoral Count Act would have mattered was in 1876 (i.e., more than a decade prior to its enactment). It should be no surprise that Applicants bring this suit now, a fortnight after an electoral vote in which the Electoral Count Act matters for the first time. These two factors—the advent of Chadha in 1983 and the novelty of this pandemic election in 2020—readily answer balancing the equities: “BLAG’s incredulity about “why now?”

5. The action is not barred by laches.

Amicus BLAG cited laches—namely, an “unreasonable, prejudicial delay in commencing suit,” Petrella v. MGM, 572 U.S. 663, 667 (2014)—as a basis to dismiss this action or deny relief. Because Applicants did not have a ripe claim until December 14, 2020 and filed this action on December 27, 2020, laches presents no question of unreasonable delay. Applicants’ timing is measured from their claims’ arising, not from the enactment of the Electoral Count Act in 1887:

It is axiomatic that a claim that has not yet accrued is not ripe for adjudication.

Sid Richardson Carbon & Gasoline Co. v. Interenergy Res., 99 F.3d 746, 756 (5th Cir. 1996). For that reason, Justice Blackmun aptly called laches “precisely the opposite argument” from ripeness. Lujan v. Nat’l Wildlife Fed’n, 497 U.S. 871, 915 n.16 (1990) (Blackmun, J., dissenting); accord What-A-Burger of Va., Inc. v. Whataburger, Inc., 357 F.3d 441, 449-50 (4th Cir. 2004) (“One cannot be guilty of laches until his right ripens into one entitled to protection. For only then can his torpor be deemed inexcusable”) (quoting 5 J. Thomas McCarthy, MCCARTHY ON TRADEMARKS AND UNFAIR COMPETITION § 31: 19 (4th ed. 2003); Gasser Chair Co. v. Infanti Chair Mfg. Corp., 60 F.3d 770, 777 (Fed. Cir. 1995); Profitness Physical Therapy Ctr. v. Pro-Fit Orthopedic & Sports Physical Therapy P.C., 314 F.3d 62, 70 (2d Cir. 2002). Because Applicants could not have brought this action before the electoral college vote on December 14, 2020., this Court should reject any suggestion of unreasonable delay.

Even if Applicants had delayed bringing suit, the Respondent still would need to show prejudice as a prerequisite to obtaining dismissal for laches. Env'tl. Def. Fund, Inc. v. Alexander, 614 F.2d 474, 479 (5th Cir. 1980). The test for prejudice requires balancing the equities: “Measuring prejudice entails balancing equities.” Id. The Vice Presidency has not acquired a vested right to violate the Constitution just because 133 years have passed since Congress enacted the Electoral Count Act in 1887. The passage of time does not bar fresh challenges to the application of unconstitutional or ultra vires laws or regulations. Texas v. United States, 749 F.2d 1144, 1146 (5th Cir. 1985). “Arbitrary [governmental] action becomes no less so by simple dint of repetition.” Judulang v. Holder, 565 U.S. 42, 61 (2011). In truth, however, the Electoral Count Act has laid dormant since its enactment in 1887, and the only prior elections in which it might have mattered occurred prior to 1887 (e.g., 1800 or 1876). The Respondent cannot claim “prejudice” from a suit that challenges the Electoral Count Act in the first election since that statute’s enactment in 1887 where the statute could unconstitutionally affect the outcome.

B. Applicants will suffer irreparable injury.

Applicants’ votes will be counted or not counted at the January 6 joint session. The failure to count a lawful vote is an irreparable injury. See, e.g., Obama for Am. v.

Husted, 697 F.3d 423, 436 (6th Cir. 2012) (“A restriction on the fundamental right to vote ... constitutes irreparable injury.”). Indeed, the deprivation of any fundamental right constitutes irreparable injury, Murphree v. Winter, 589 F. Supp. 374, 381 (S.D. Miss. 1984) (citing Elrod v. Burns, 427 U.S. 347, 373-74 (1976)), and voting rights are “a fundamental political right, because [they are] preservative of all rights.” Reynolds v. Sims, 377 U.S. 533, 561-62 (1964) (internal quotations omitted). Moreover, if the counting of votes proceeds under the Electoral Count Act, Applicants’ votes will be adjudicated via an unconstitutional procedure, which also qualifies as irreparable harm: there will be no opportunity to revisit the issue. As with standing for procedural injuries, irreparable harm from a procedural violation requires an underlying concrete injury or due-process interest, which Applicants have and which will be irretrievably lost if the Vice President proceeds under the Electoral Count Act. Under the circumstances, Applicants’ procedural harms also are irreparable. Commissioner v. Shapiro, 424 U.S. 614, 629-30 (1976).

C. Applicants need not demonstrate irreparable harm for declaratory relief.

“The traditional prerequisite for the granting of injunctive relief, demonstration of irreparable injury, is not a prerequisite to the granting of a declaratory relief” because the Declaratory Judgments Act “provides an adequate remedy and at law, and hence a showing of irreparable injury is unnecessary.” 10 FED. PROC., L. ED. § 23:4 (citing 28 U.S.C. § 2201 and Steffel v. Thompson, 415 U.S. 452 (1974)). “The existence of another adequate remedy does not preclude a declaratory judgment that is otherwise appropriate.” FED. R. CIV. P. 57; accord

Marine Chance Shipping v. Sebastian, 143 F.3d 216, 218-19 (5th Cir. 1998); Tierney v. Schweiker, 718 F.2d 449, 457 (D.C. Cir. 1983); 28 U.S.C. § 2201. Similarly, a prior formal or informal demand to the defendant is not a prerequisite to seeking declaratory relief, Rowan Cos. v. Griffin, 876 F.2d 26, 28 (5th Cir. 1989), and showing “irreparable injury... is not necessary for the issuance of a declaratory judgment.” Tierney, 718 F.2d at 457 (citing Steffel, 415 U.S. at 471-72). Thus, even if not entitled to injunctive relief, Applicants still would be entitled to declaratory relief.

D. The balance of equities favors Applicants.

“Traditional equitable principles requiring the balancing of public and private interests control the grant of declaratory or injunctive relief in the federal courts.” Webster v. Doe, 486 U.S. 592, 604-05 (1988). The scope of requested injunctive relief—directing Respondent Pence to carry out his duties as President of the Senate and as Presiding Officer for the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress in compliance with the U.S. Constitution—is drawn as narrowly as possible and does not require Respondent Pence to take any affirmative action apart from those he is authorized to take under the Twelfth Amendment. Moreover, it is difficult to imagine how the relief requested, which expands rather than restricts Respondent’s discretion and authority, by eliminating facially unconstitutional restrictions could cause any hardship.

E. The public interest favors Applicants.

The last stay criterion is the public interest. Where the parties dispute the lawfulness of government actions, the public interest collapses into the merits: “It is always in the public interest to prevent the violation of a party’s constitutional rights.” Jackson Women’s Health Org. v. Currier, 760 F.3d 448, 458 n.9 (5th Cir. 2014)

(alterations omitted); ACLU v. Ashcroft, 322 F.3d 240, 247 (3d Cir. 2003) (“the public interest [is] not served by the enforcement of an unconstitutional law”) (interior quotation omitted); Washington v. Reno, 35 F.3d 1093, 1103 (6th Cir. 1994) (recognizing “greater public interest in having governmental agencies abide by the federal laws”); League of Women Voters of the United States v. Newby, 838 F.3d 1, 12 (D.C. Cir. 2016) (“no public interest in the perpetuation of unlawful [government] action”); cf. Tex. Democratic Party v. Benkiser, 459 F.3d 582, 595 (5th Cir. 2006) (“injunction serves the public interest in that it enforces the correct and constitutional application of Texas’s duly-enacted election laws”). Here the declaratory and injunctive relief sought vindicates both Respondent Vice President’s plenary authority as President of the Senate and Presiding Officer to count electoral votes, as well as the constitutional rights of the Applicants to have their electoral votes counted in the manner that the Constitution provides, the rights of the Arizona legislative Applicants under the Electors Clause to appoint Presidential Electors for the State of Arizona, and the right of Rep Gohmert and those he represents to have their vote counted in the manner that the Twelfth Amendment provides.

REQUESTED RELIEF

Applicants respectfully request that the Circuit Justice—or the full Court, if referred to the Court—enter an administrative stay against the Vice President’s invoking the Electoral Count Act’s dispute-resolution process under 3 U.S.C. § 15 until further order of the Circuit Justice or Court, as well as either a briefing schedule for this motion for interim relief or on the merits.<sup>15</sup>

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, Applicants respectfully submit that the Circuit Justice or this Court should issue the requested administrative and interim relief for the pendency of the Court's resolution of a timely filed petition for a writ of certiorari.

Dated: January 6, 2021

Respectfully submitted,

William L. Sessions
Texas Bar No. 18041500
SESSIONS & ASSOCIATES, PLLC
14591 North Dallas Parkway, Suite 400
Dallas, TX 75254
Tel: (214) 217-8855
Fax: (214) 723-5346
Email: lsessions@sessionslaw.net

/s/ Sidney Powell
Sidney Powell*
Texas Bar No. 16209700
SIDNEY POWELL, P.C.
2911 Turtle Creek Blvd., Suite 1100
Dallas, TX 75219
Tel: (214) 628-9514
Fax: (214) 628-9505
Email: sidney@federalappeals.com

Lawrence J. Joseph
DC Bar #464777
LAW OFFICE OF LAWRENCE J. JOSEPH
1250 Connecticut Av NW, Ste 700
Washington, DC 20036
Tel: (202) 355-9452
Fax: (202) 318-2254
Email: ljoseph@larryjoseph.com

Howard Kleinhendler
NY Bar No. 2657120
HOWARD KLEINHENDLER ESQUIRE
369 Lexington Ave., 12th Floor
New York, New York 10017
Tel: (917) 793-1188
Fax: (732) 901-0832
Email: howard@kleinhendler.com

Counsel for Applicants

\ Counsel of Record*

---

<sup>15</sup> This Court can treat a stay application as a petition for a writ of certiorari. See Purcell v. Gonzalez, 549 U.S. 1, 6 (2006) (treating application to stay injunction pending appeal as petition for certiorari, granting certiorari, and ruling on merits); Barefoot v. Estelle, 463 U.S. 880, 887 (1983) (treating application for stay of execution as a petition for writ of certiorari).

CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE

The undersigned certifies that, on this date, a true and correct copy of the foregoing application and its appendix was served by U.S. Priority Mail, postage prepaid, on the following counsel for the respondent:

Jeffrey B. Wall
Acting Solicitor General
United States Department of Justice
950 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW
Washington, DC 20530-0001
Email: SupremeCtBriefs@USDOJ.gov

In addition, the undersigned further certifies that, on this date, he sent a PDF courtesy copy of the foregoing application and its appendix to the above-listed counsel at the email addresses indicated above.

The undersigned further certifies that, on this date, the foregoing application and its appendix were electronically filed with the Court, and an original and ten true and correct copies of the foregoing application and its appendix were dispatched to the Court by messenger for filing.

Dated: January 6, 2021

/s/ Lawrence J. Joseph

---

Lawrence J. Joseph
DC Bar #464777
LAW OFFICE OF LAWRENCE J. JOSEPH
1250 Connecticut Av NW, Ste 700
Washington, DC 20036
Tel: (202) 355-9452
Fax: (202) 318-2254
Email: ljoseph@larryjoseph.com

No. __A_____

In the Supreme Court of the United States

LOUIE GOHMERT, TYLER BOWYER, NANCY COTTLE, JAKE HOFFMAN,
ANTHONY KERN, JAMES R. LAMON, SAM MOORHEAD, ROBERT
MONTGOMERY, LORAIN PELLEGRIANO, GREG SAFSTEN, KELLI WARD
AND MICHAEL WARD,

Applicants,

v.

THE HONORABLE MICHAEL R. PENCE, VICE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, IN HIS OFFICIAL CAPACITY.

Respondent.

---

APPENDIX TO EMERGENCY APPLICATION TO THE HONORABLE SAMUEL A. ALITO AS CIRCUIT JUSTICE FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT FOR ADMINISTRATIVE STAY AND INTERIM RELIEF PENDING RESOLUTION OF A TIMELY FILED PETITION FOR A WRIT OF *CERTIORARI

---

Sidney Powell
Texas Bar No. 16209700
SIDNEY POWELL, P.C.
2911 Turtle Creek Blvd., Suite 1100
Dallas, TX 75219
Tel: (214) 628-9514
Fax: (214) 628-9505
Email: sidney@federalappeals.com

Lawrence J. Joseph
DC Bar #464777
LAW OFFICE OF LAWRENCE J. JOSEPH
1250 Connecticut Av NW, Ste 700
Washington, DC 20036
Tel: (202) 355-9452
Fax: (202) 318-2254
Email: ljoseph@larryjoseph.com

Counsel for Applicants

William Lewis Sessions*
Texas Bar No. 18041500
SESSIONS & ASSOCIATES, PLLC
14591 North Dallas Parkway, Suite 400
Dallas, TX 75254
Tel: (214) 217-8855
Fax: (214) 723-5346
Email: lsessions@sessionslaw.net

Howard Kleinhendler
NY Bar No. 2657120
HOWARD KLEINHENDLER ESQUIRE
369 Lexington Ave., 12th Floor
New York, New York 10017
Tel: (917) 793-1188
Fax: (732) 901-0832
Email: howard@kleinhendler.com

\ Counsel of Record*

APPENDIX

Gohmert v. Pence , No. 6:20-CV-00660-JDK (E.D. Tex. Jan. 1, 2021) (order).....	1a
Gohmert v. Pence , No. 6:20-CV-00660-JDK (E.D. Tex. Jan. 1, 2021) (judgment).....	14a
Gohmert v. Pence , No. 21-40001 (5th Cir. Jan. 2, 2021) .....	15a
3 U.S.C. § 5 .....	17a
3 U.S.C. § 6.....	17a
3 U.S.C. § 15.....	18a
U.S. CONST. art. I, § 7, cl. 3.....	20a
U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1, cl. 2 .....	20a
U.S. CONST. amend. XII.....	20a
Complaint (EFC #1).....	22a
Complaint Exhibit A (EFC #1-1).....	50a
Reply in Support Ex. A (ECF #30-1).....	54a
Reply in Support Ex. B (ECF #30-2).....	56a
Reply in Support Ex. C (ECF #30-3).....	57a
Reply in Support Ex. D (ECF #30-4).....	59a
Reply in Support Ex. E (ECF #30-5).....	62a

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF TEXAS
TYLER DIVISION

THE HONORABLE LOUIE
GOHMERT, et al.,

Plaintiffs,

V.

THE HONORABLE MICHAEL R.
PENCE, in his official capacity as Vice President of the United States,

Defendant.

Case No. 6:20-cv-660-JDK

ORDER OF DISMISSAL

This case challenges the constitutionality of the Electoral Count Act of 1887, as codified at 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 15. The Court cannot address that question, however, without ensuring that it has jurisdiction. See, e.g., U.S. CONST. art. III, § 2; Cary v. Curtis, 44 U.S. 236, 245 (1845). One crucial component of jurisdiction is that the plaintiffs have standing. This requires the plaintiffs to show a personal injury that is fairly traceable to the defendant’s allegedly unlawful conduct and is likely to be redressed by the requested relief. See, e.g., U.S. CONST. art. III, § 2; Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560–61 (1992). Requiring plaintiffs to make this showing helps enforce the limited role of federal courts in our constitutional system.

The problem for Plaintiffs here is that they lack standing. Plaintiff Louie Gohmert, the United States Representative for Texas’s First Congressional District, alleges at most an institutional injury to the House of Representatives. Under well-settled Supreme Court authority, that is insufficient to support standing. Raines v.

Byrd, 521 U.S. 811, 829 (1997).

The other Plaintiffs, the slate of Republican Presidential Electors for the State of Arizona (the “Nominee-Electors”), allege an injury that is not fairly traceable to the Defendant, the Vice President of the United States, and is unlikely to be redressed by the requested relief.

Accordingly, as explained below, the Court lacks subject matter jurisdiction over this case and must dismiss the action.

I.

A.

The Electors Clause of the U.S. Constitution requires that each state appoint, in the manner directed by the state’s legislature, the number of presidential electors to which it is constitutionally entitled. U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1, cl. 2. Under the Twelfth Amendment, each state’s electors meet in their respective states and vote for the President and Vice President. U.S. CONST. amend XII. The electors then certify the list of their votes and transmit the sealed lists to the President of the United States Senate—that is, the Vice President of the United States. The Twelfth Amendment then provides that, “[t]he President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and the votes shall then be counted.” Id. A candidate winning a majority of the electoral votes wins the Presidency. However, if no candidate obtains a majority of the electoral votes, the House of Representatives is to choose the President—with each state delegation having one vote. Id.

The Electoral Count Act, informed by the Hayes-Tilden dispute of 1876, sought to standardize the counting of electoral votes in Congress. Stephen A. Siegel, The Conscientious Congressman's Guide to the Electoral Count Act of 1887, 56 FLA. L. REV. 541, 547–50 (2004). Section 5 makes states' determinations as to their electors, under certain circumstances, "conclusive" and provides that these determinations govern the counting of electoral votes. 3 U.S.C. § 5. Section 15 requires a joint session of Congress to count the electoral votes on January 6, with the President of the Senate presiding. Id. § 15.

During that session, the President of the Senate calls for objections on the electoral votes. Written objections submitted by at least one Senator and at least one Member of the House of Representatives trigger a detailed dispute-resolution procedure. Id. Most relevant here, Section 15 requires both the House of Representatives and the Senate—by votes of their full membership rather than by state delegations—to decide any objection. The Electoral Count Act also gives the state governor a role in certifying the state's electors, which Section 15 considers in resolving objections. Id. § 6.

It is these dispute-resolution procedures that Plaintiffs challenge in this case.

B.

On December 14, 2020, electors convened in each state to cast their electoral votes. Id. § 7; Docket No. 1 ¶ 5. In Arizona, the Democratic Party's slate of eleven electors voted for Joseph R. Biden and Kamala D. Harris. These votes were certified by Arizona Governor Doug Ducey and Arizona Secretary of State Katie Hobbs and submitted as required under the Electoral Count Act. Docket No. 1 ¶ 22. That same day, the Nominee-Electors state that they also convened in Arizona and voted for Donald J. Trump and Michael R. Pence. Id. ¶ 20. Similar actions took place in Georgia, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin, and Michigan (with Arizona, the “Contested States”). Id. ¶ 20–21. Combined, the Contested States represent seventy-three electoral votes. See id. ¶ 23.

On December 27, Plaintiffs filed this lawsuit, alleging that there are now “competing slates” of electors from the Contested States and asking the Court to declare that the Electoral Count Act is unconstitutional and that the Vice President has the “exclusive authority and sole discretion” to determine which electoral votes should count. Id. ¶ 73. They also ask for a declaration that “the Twelfth Amendment contains the exclusive dispute resolution mechanisms” for determining an objection raised by a Member of Congress to any slate of electors and an injunction barring the Vice President from following the Electoral Count Act. Id. On December 28, Plaintiffs filed an Emergency Motion for Expedited Declaratory Judgment and Emergency Injunctive Relief (“Emergency Motion”). Docket No. 2. Plaintiffs request “an expedited summary proceeding” under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 57. Id.

On December 31, the Vice President opposed Plaintiffs’ motion. Docket No. 18.

II.

As mentioned above, before the Court can address the merits of Plaintiff’s Emergency Motion, it must ensure that it has subject matter jurisdiction. See, e.g., Cary, 44 U.S. at 245 (“The courts of the United States are all limited in their nature and constitution, and have not the powers inherent in courts existing by prescription or by the common law.”); DaimlerChrysler Corp. v. Cuno, 547 U.S. 332, 340–41 (2006)

(“If a dispute is not a proper case or controversy, the courts have no business deciding it, or expounding the law in the course of doing so.”). Article III of the U.S. Constitution limits federal courts to deciding only “cases” or “controversies,” which ensures that the judiciary “respects ‘the proper—and properly limited—role of the courts in a democratic society.’” DaimlerChrysler, 547 U.S. at 341 (quoting Allen v. Wright, 468 U.S. 737, 750 (1984)); see also Raines, 521 U.S. at 828 (quoting United States v. Richardson, 418 U.S. 166, 192 (1974)) (“Our regime contemplates a more restricted role for Article III courts . . . ‘not some amorphous general supervision of the operations of government.’”).

“[A]n essential and unchanging part of the case-or-controversy requirement of Article III” is that the plaintiff has standing. Lujan, 504 U.S. at 560. The standing requirement is not subject to waiver and requires strict compliance. E.g., Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 349 n.1 (1996); Raines, 521 U.S. at 819. A standing inquiry is “especially rigorous” where the merits of the dispute would require the Court to determine whether an action taken by one of the other two branches of the Federal Government is unconstitutional. Raines, 521 U.S. at 819–20 (citing Bender v. Williamsport Area Sch. Dist., 475 U.S. 534, 542 (1986), and Valley Forge Christian Coll. v. Ams. United for Separation of Church & St., Inc., 454 U.S. 464, 473–74 (1982)). This is because “the law of Art. III standing is built on a single basic idea—the idea of separation of powers.” Allen, 468 U.S. at 752, abrogated on other grounds by Lexmark Int’l, Inc. v. Static Control Components, Inc., 572 U.S. 118, 128 (2014). Article III standing “enforces the Constitution’s case-or-controversy requirement.”

DaimlerChrysler Corp., 547 U.S. at 342 (quoting Elk Grove Unified Sch. Dist. v. Newdow, 542 U.S. 1, 11 (2004)). And “[n]o principle is more fundamental to the judiciary’s proper role in our system of government than the constitutional limitation of federal-court jurisdiction to actual cases or controversies.” Raines, 521 U.S. at 818.

Article III standing requires a plaintiff to show: (1) that he “has suffered an ‘injury in fact’ that is (a) concrete and particularized and (b) actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical”; (2) that “the injury is fairly traceable to the challenged action of the defendant”; and (3) that “it is likely, as opposed to merely speculative, that the injury will be redressed by a favorable decision.” El Paso Cnty. v. Trump, 982 F.3d 332, 336 (5th Cir. 2020) (quoting Friends of the Earth, Inc. v. Laidlaw Env’t. Servs. (TOC), Inc., 528 U.S. 167, 180–81 (2000)). “The party invoking federal jurisdiction bears the burden of establishing these elements,” and “each element must be supported in the same way as any other matter on which the plaintiff bears the burden of proof, i.e., with the manner and degree of evidence required at the successive stages of the litigation.” Lujan, 504 U.S. at 561. “At the pleading stage, general factual allegations of injury resulting from the defendant’s conduct may suffice.” Id.

III.

Here, Plaintiffs have failed to demonstrate that they have standing to bring the claim alleged in Count I of their complaint.

A.

The first Plaintiff is the Representative for Texas’s First Congressional District, the Honorable Louie Gohmert. Congressman Gohmert argues that he will be injured because “he will not be able to vote as a Congressional Representative in accordance with the Twelfth Amendment.” Docket No. 2 at 4. Specifically, Congressman Gohmert argues that on January 6, 2021, when Congress convenes to count the electoral votes for President and Vice President, he “will object to the counting of the Arizona slate of electors voting for Biden and to the Biden slates from the remaining Contested States.” Docket No. 1 ¶ 6. If a member of the Senate likewise objects, then under Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act, each member of the House and Senate is entitled to vote to resolve the objections, which Congressman Gohmert argues is inconsistent with the state-by-state voting required under the Twelfth Amendment. Docket No. 2 at 5. Congressman Gohmert argues that the Vice President’s compliance with the procedures of the Electoral Count Act will directly cause his alleged injury. Id. at 7. And he argues that a declaration that Sections 5 and 15 of the Electoral Count Act are unconstitutional would redress his alleged injury. Id. at 9–10.

Congressman Gohmert’s argument is foreclosed by Raines v. Byrd, which squarely held that Members of Congress lack standing to bring a claim for an injury suffered “solely because they are Members of Congress.” 521 U.S. at 821. And that is all Congressman Gohmert is alleging here. He does not identify any injury to himself as an individual, but rather a “wholly abstract and widely dispersed” institutional injury to the House of Representatives. Id. at 829. Congressman Gohmert does not allege that he was “singled out for specially unfavorable treatment as opposed to other Members of their respective bodies,” does not claim that he has “been deprived of something to which [he] personally [is] entitled,” and does not allege a “loss of any private right, which would make the injury more concrete.” Id. at 821 (emphasis in original). Congressman Gohmert’s alleged injury is “a type of institutional injury (the diminution of legislative power), which necessarily damages all Members of Congress.” Id. Under these circumstances, the Supreme Court held in Raines, a Member of Congress does not have “a sufficient ‘personal stake’” in the dispute and lacks “a sufficiently concrete injury to have established Article III standing.” Id. at 830.

For the first time in their reply brief, Plaintiffs assert that Congressman Gohmert has standing as a Texas voter, relying on League of United Latin Am. Citizens, Dist. 19 v. City of Boerne, 659 F.3d 421, 430 (5th Cir. 2011). Docket No. 30 at 30, 33–34. The Court disagrees. In LULAC, the Fifth Circuit held that an individual voter had standing to challenge amendments to the City of Boerne’s city council election scheme that would allegedly deprive him of a “pre-existing right to vote for certain offices.” 659 F.3d at 430. That is not the case here. Congressman Gohmert does not allege that he was denied the right to vote in the 2020 presidential election. Rather, he asserts that under the Electoral Count Act, “he will not be able to vote as a Congressional Representative in accordance with the Twelfth Amendment.” Docket No. 2 at 4 (emphasis added). Because Congressman Gohmert is asserting an injury in his role as a Member of Congress rather than as an individual voter, Raines controls.

Further weighing against Congressman Gohmert's standing here is the speculative nature of the alleged injury. "To establish Article III standing, an injury must be 'concrete, particularized, and actual or imminent.'" Clapper v. Amnesty Int'l USA, 568 U.S. 398, 409 (2013) (quoting Monsanto Co. v. Geertson Seed Farms, 561 U.S. 139, 149 (2010)); see also Lujan, 504 U.S. at 560 (quoting Whitmore v. Arkansas, 495 U.S. 149, 155 (1990)) (alleged injury cannot be "conjectural" or "hypothetical"). "Although imminence is concededly a somewhat elastic concept, it cannot be stretched beyond its purpose, which is to ensure that the alleged injury is not too speculative for Article III purposes—that the injury is certainly impending." Clapper, 568 U.S. at 409 (quoting Lujan, 504 U.S. at 565 n.2).

Here, Congressman Gohmert's alleged injury requires a series of hypothetical—but by no means certain—events. Plaintiffs presuppose what the Vice President will do on January 6, which electoral votes the Vice President will count or reject from contested states, whether a Representative and a Senator will object under Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act, how each member of the House and Senate will vote on any such objections, and how each state delegation in the House would potentially vote under the Twelfth Amendment absent a majority electoral vote. All that makes Congressman Gohmert's alleged injury far too uncertain to support standing under Article III. Id. at 414 ("We decline to abandon our usual reluctance to endorse standing theories that rest on speculation about the decisions of independent actors.").

Accordingly, the Court finds that Congressman Gohmert lacks standing to bring the claim alleged here.

B.

The Nominee-Electors argue that they have standing under the Electors Clause “as candidates for the office of Presidential Elector because, under Arizona law, a vote cast for the Republican Party’s President and Vice President is cast for the Republican Presidential Electors.” Docket No. 2 at 6 (citing ARIZ. REV. STAT. § 16-212). The Nominee-Electors were injured, Plaintiffs contend, when Governor Ducey unlawfully certified and transmitted the “competing slate of Biden electors” to be counted in the Electoral College. Id. at 7.

This alleged injury, however, is not fairly traceable to any act of the Vice President. Nor is it an injury likely to be redressed by a favorable decision here. See Friends of the Earth, 528 U.S. at 180–81.<sup>1</sup> Plaintiffs do not allege that the Vice President had any involvement in the “certification and transmission of a competing

---

<sup>1</sup> The Court need not decide whether the Nominee-Electors were “candidates” under Arizona law. Plaintiffs cite Carson v. Simon, in which the Eighth Circuit held that prospective presidential electors are “candidates” under Minnesota law and have standing to challenge how votes are tallied in Minnesota. 978 F.3d 1051, 1057 (8th Cir. 2020). But the U.S. District Court for the District of Arizona has distinguished Carson, holding that presidential electors in Arizona are ministerial and are “not candidates for office as the term is generally understood” under Arizona law. Bowyer v. Ducey, — F. Supp. 3d —, 2020 WL 7238261, at *4 (D. Ariz. Dec. 9, 2020); see also Feehan v. Wis. Elections Comm’n, No. 20-CV-1771-PP, 2020 WL 7250219, at *12 (E.D. Wis. Dec. 9, 2020) (nominee-elect is not a candidate under Wisconsin law). “Arizona law makes clear that the duty of an Elector is to fulfill a ministerial function, which is extremely limited in scope and duration, and that they have no discretion to deviate at all from the duties imposed by the statute.” Bowyer, 2020 WL 7238261, at *4 (citing ARIZ. REV. STAT. § 16-212(c)). Arizona voters, moreover, vote “for their preferred presidential candidate,” not any single elector listed next to the presidential candidates’ names. Id. (citing ARIZ. REV. STAT. § 16-507(b)). The court in Bowyer therefore held that nominee-electors in Arizona lacked standing to sue state officials for alleged voting irregularities. See id. In any event, even if the Nominee-Electors had standing to sue state officials to redress the injury alleged here, they have not done so. Plaintiffs have named only the Vice President, and they have not shown “a fairly traceable connection between [their] injury and the complained-of conduct of defendant.” E.g., Steel Co. v. Citizens for a Better Env’t, 523 U.S. 83, 103 (1998).

slate of Biden electors.” Docket No. 2 at 7. Nor could they. See 3 U.S.C. § 6. That act is performed solely by the Arizona Governor, who is a “third party not before the court.” Lujan, 504 U.S. at 560–61 (quoting Simon v. Eastern Ky. Welfare Rts. Org., 426 U.S. 26, 41–42 (1976)). Indeed, Plaintiffs acknowledge that their injury was caused by Arizona officials in Arizona, the “Vice President did not cause [their] injury,” and their “unlawful injuries [were] suffered in Arizona.” Docket No. 2 at 7.

The Nominee-Electors argue that their injury is nevertheless fairly traceable to the Vice President because he will “ratify and purport to make lawful the unlawful injuries that Plaintiffs suffered in Arizona.” Id. For support, Plaintiffs cite Sierra Club v. Glickman, in which the Fifth Circuit held that an environmental injury was fairly traceable to the Department of Agriculture, even though the injury was directly caused by third-party farmers, because the Department had “the ability through various programs to affect the pumping decisions of those third party farmers to such an extent that the plaintiff’s injury could be relieved.” 156 F.3d 606, 614 (5th Cir. 1998). Nothing like that is alleged here. The Vice President’s anticipated actions on January 6 will not affect the decision of Governor Ducey regarding the certification of presidential electors—which occurred more than two weeks ago on December 14. Even “ratifying” or “making lawful” the Governor’s decision, as Plaintiffs argue will occur here, will not have any “coercive effect” on Arizona’s certification of electoral votes. See Bennett v. Spear, 520 U.S. 154, 168–69 (1997).

For similar reasons, the Nominee-Electors’ claimed injury is not likely to be redressed here. To satisfy redressability, Plaintiffs must show that it is “likely” their alleged injury will be “redressed by a favorable decision.” Lujan, 504 U.S. at 561. But here, Plaintiffs seek declaratory and injunctive relief as to the manner of the Vice President’s electoral vote count. See Docket No. 1 ¶ 73. Such relief will not resolve their alleged harm with respect to Governor Ducey’s electoral vote certification. See Docket No. 2 at 7. As the Supreme Court has long held, “a federal court can act only to redress injury that fairly can be traced to the challenged action of the defendant, and not injury that results from the independent action of some third party not before the court.” Simon, 426 U.S. at 41–42; see also El Paso Cnty., 982 F.3d at 343 (plaintiff lacks standing where an order granting the requested relief “would not rescind,” and “accordingly would not redress,” the allegedly harmful act).

Even if their injury were the loss of the right to vote in the Electoral College, see Docket No. 2 at 6, Plaintiffs’ requested relief would not redress that injury. Plaintiffs are not asking the Court to order the Vice President to count the Nominee-Electors’ votes, but rather that the Vice President “exercise the exclusive authority and sole discretion in determining which electoral votes to count for a given State,” or alternatively, to decide that no Arizona electoral votes should count. See Docket No. 1 ¶ 73. It is well established that a plaintiff lacks standing where it is “uncertain that granting [the plaintiff] the relief it wants would remedy its injuries.” Inclusive Comtys. Project, Inc. v. Dep’t of Treasury, 946 F.3d 649, 657–58 (5th Cir. 2019).

Accordingly, the Court finds that the Nominee-Electors lack standing.<sup>2</sup>

---

<sup>2</sup> Plaintiffs Hoffman and Kern claim without supporting argument that they have standing as members of the Arizona legislature. Docket No. 2 at 4. This claim fails for the reasons Congressman Gohmert’s standing argument fails. See supra Part III.A.

IV.

Because neither Congressman Gohmert nor the Nominee-Electors have standing here, the Court is without subject matter jurisdiction to address Plaintiffs' Emergency Motion or the merits of their claim. HSBC Bank USA, N.A. as Tr. for Merrill Lynch Mortg. Loan v. Crum, 907 F.3d 199, 202 (5th Cir. 2018). The Court therefore DISMISSES the case without prejudice.

So ORDERED and SIGNED this 1st day of January, 2021.

_____
JEREMY D. KERNODLE
UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit

Certified as a true copy and issued as the mandate on Jan 02, 2021

Attest: Jyle W. Cuyler
Clerk, U.S. Court of Appeals, Fifth Circuit

---

No. 21-40001

---

LOUIE GOHMERT; TYLER BOWYER; NANCY COTTLE; JAKE
HOFFMAN; ANTHONY KERN; JAMES R. LAMON; SAM
MOORHEAD; ROBERT MONTGOMERY; LORAIN PELLEGRINO; GREG SAFSTEN; KELLI WARD; MICHAEL WARD,

Plaintiffs—Appellants,

MARIAN SHERIDAN; MESHAWN MADDOCK; MARI-ANN HENRY; AMY FACCHINELLO; MICHELE LUNDGREN,

Movants—Appellants,

versus

MICHAEL R. PENCE,

Defendant—Appellee.

---

Appeal from the United States District Court
for the Eastern District of Texas
USDC No. 6:20-CV-660

---

No. 21-40001

Before HIGGINBOTHAM, SMITH, and OLDHAM, Circuit Judges.

PER CURIAM:*

This administrative panel is presented with an emergency motion for expedited appeal. We have appellate jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1291. That includes jurisdiction to determine both our and the district court's jurisdiction. We have the benefit of the briefing before the district court and its 13-page opinion styled Order of Dismissal, issued January 1, 2021. That order adopts the position of the Department of Justice, finding that the district court lacks jurisdiction because no plaintiff has the standing demanded by Article III. We need say no more, and we affirm the judgment essentially for the reasons stated by the district court. We express no view on the underlying merits or on what putative party, if any, might have standing. The motion to expedite is dismissed as moot. The mandate shall issue forthwith.

---

* Pursuant to 5TH CIRCUIT RULE 47.5, the court has determined that this opinion should not be published and is not precedent except under the limited circumstances set forth in 5TH CIRCUIT RULE 47.5.4.

Determination of controversy as to appointment of electors

If any State shall have provided, by laws enacted prior to the day fixed for the appointment of the electors, for its final determination of any controversy or contest concerning the appointment of all or any of the electors of such State, by judicial or other methods or procedures, and such determination shall have been made at least six days before the time fixed for the meeting of the electors, such determination made pursuant to such law so existing on said day, and made at least six days prior to said time of meeting of the electors, shall be conclusive, and shall govern in the counting of the electoral votes as provided in the Constitution, and as hereinafter regulated, so far as the ascertainment of the electors appointed by such State is concerned.

3 U.S.C. § 5.

Credentials of electors; transmission to Archivist of the United States and to Congress; public inspection

If any State shall have provided, by laws enacted prior to the day fixed for the appointment of the electors, for its final determination of any controversy or contest concerning the appointment of all or any of the electors of such State, by judicial or other methods or procedures, and such determination shall have been made at least six days before the time fixed for the meeting of the electors, such determination made pursuant to such law so existing on said day, and made at least six days prior to said time of meeting of the electors, shall be conclusive, and shall govern in the counting of the electoral votes as provided in the Constitution, and as hereinafter regulated, so far as the ascertainment of the electors appointed by such State is concerned.

3 U.S.C. § 6.

Counting electoral votes in Congress

Congress shall be in session on the sixth day of January succeeding every meeting of the electors. The Senate and House of Representatives shall meet in the Hall of the House of Representatives at the hour of 1 o'clock in the afternoon on that day, and the President of the Senate shall be their presiding officer. Two tellers shall be previously appointed on the part of the Senate and two on the part of the House of Representatives, to whom shall be handed, as they are opened by the President of the Senate, all the certificates and papers purporting to be certificates of the electoral votes, which certificates and papers shall be opened, presented, and acted upon in the alphabetical order of the States, beginning with the letter A; and said tellers, having then read the same in the presence and hearing of the two Houses, shall make a list of the votes as they shall appear from the said certificates; and the votes having been ascertained and counted according to the rules in this subchapter provided, the result of the same shall be delivered to the President of the Senate, who shall thereupon announce the state of the vote, which announcement shall be deemed a sufficient declaration of the persons, if any, elected President and Vice President of the United States, and, together with a list of the votes, be entered on the Journals of the two Houses. Upon such reading of any such certificate or paper, the President of the Senate shall call for objections, if any. Every objection shall be made in writing, and shall state clearly and concisely, and without argument, the ground thereof, and shall be signed by at least one Senator and one Member of the House of Representatives before the same shall be received. When all objections so made to any vote or paper from a State shall have been received and read, the Senate shall thereupon withdraw, and such objections shall be submitted to the Senate for its decision; and the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall, in like manner, submit such objections to the House of Representatives for its decision; and no electoral vote or votes from any State which shall have been regularly given by electors whose appointment has been lawfully certified to according to section 6 of this title from which but one return has been received shall be rejected, but the two Houses concurrently may reject the vote or votes when they agree that such vote or votes have not been so regularly given by electors whose appointment has been so certified. If more than one return or paper purporting to be a return from a State shall have been received by the President of the Senate, those votes, and those only, shall be counted which shall have been regularly given by the electors who are shown by the determination mentioned in section 5 of this title to have been appointed, if the determination in said section provided for shall have been made, or by such successors or substitutes, in case of a vacancy in the board of electors so ascertained, as have been appointed to fill such vacancy in the mode provided by the laws of the State; but in case there shall arise the question which of two or more of such State authorities determining what electors have been appointed, as mentioned in section 5 of this title, is the lawful tribunal of such State, the votes regularly given of those electors, and those only, of such State shall be counted whose title as electors the two Houses, acting separately, shall concurrently decide is supported by the decision of such State so authorized by its law; and in such case of more than one return or paper purporting to be a return from a State, if there shall have been no such determination of the question in the State aforesaid, then those votes, and those only, shall be counted which the two Houses shall concurrently decide were cast by lawful electors appointed in accordance with the laws of the State, unless the two Houses, acting separately, shall concurrently decide such votes not to be the lawful votes of the legally appointed electors of such State. But if the two Houses shall disagree in respect of the counting of such votes, then, and in that case, the votes of the electors whose appointment shall have been certified by the executive of the State, under the seal thereof, shall be counted. When the two Houses have voted, they shall immediately again meet, and the presiding officer shall then announce the decision of the questions submitted. No votes or papers from any other State shall be acted upon until the objections previously made to the votes or papers from any State shall have been finally disposed of.

3 U.S.C. § 15.

Presentment Clause

Every Order, Resolution, or Vote, to Which the Concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary (except on a question of Adjournment) shall be presented to the President of the United States; and before the Same shall take Effect, shall be approved by him, or being disapproved by him, shall be repassed by two thirds of the Senate and House of Representatives, according to the Rules and Limitations prescribed in the Case of a Bill.

U.S. CONST. art. I, § 7, cl. 3.

Electors Clause

Each state shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors, equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress: but no Senator or Representative, or person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States, shall be appointed an elector.

U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1, cl. 2.

Twelfth Amendment

The electors shall meet in their respective states and vote by ballot for President and Vice-President, one of whom, at least, shall not be an inhabitant of the same state with themselves; they shall name in their ballots the person voted for as President, and in distinct ballots the person voted for as Vice-President, and they shall make distinct lists of all persons voted for as President, and of all persons voted for as Vice-President, and of the number of votes for each, which lists they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the seat of the government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate;--The President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and the votes shall then be counted;--the person having the greatest number of votes for President, shall be the President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of electors appointed; and if no person have such majority, then from the persons having the highest numbers not exceeding three on the list of those voted for as President, the House of Representatives shall choose immediately, by ballot, the President. But in choosing the President, the votes shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote; a quorum for this purpose shall consist of a member or members from two-thirds of the states, and a majority of all the states shall be necessary to a choice. And if the House of Representatives shall not choose a President whenever the right of choice shall devolve upon them, before the fourth day of March next following, then the Vice-President shall act as President, as in the case of the death or other constitutional disability of the President. The person having the greatest number of votes as Vice-President, shall be the Vice-President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of electors appointed, and if no person have a majority, then from the two highest numbers on the list, the Senate shall choose the Vice-President; a quorum for the purpose shall consist of two-thirds of the whole number of Senators, and a majority of the whole number shall be necessary to a choice. But no person constitutionally ineligible to the office of President shall be eligible to that of Vice-President of the United States.

U.S. CONST. amend. XII.

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF TEXAS
TYLER DIVISION

LOUIE GOHMERT, TYLER BOWYER, NANCY
COTTLE, JAKE HOFFMAN, ANTHONY KERN,
JAMES R. LAMON, SAM MOORHEAD,
ROBERT MONTGOMERY, LORAINÉ
PELLEGRINO, GREG SAFSTEN, KELLI WARD
and MICHAEL WARD,

Plaintiffs,

v.

THE HONORABLE MICHAEL R. PENCE, VICE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, in his official capacity.

Defendant.

Case No.

COMPLAINT FOR EXPEDITED
DECLARATORY AND
EMERGENCY INJUNCTIVE RELIEF

(Election Matter)

NATURE OF THE ACTION

1. This civil action seeks an expedited declaratory judgment finding that the elector dispute resolution provisions in Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act, 3 U.S.C. §§ 5 and 15, are unconstitutional because these provisions violate the Electors Clause and the Twelfth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1, cl. 1 & Amend. XII. Plaintiffs also request emergency injunctive relief required to effectuate the requested declaratory judgment.

2. These provisions of Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act are unconstitutional insofar as they establish procedures for determining which of two or more competing slates of Presidential Electors for a given State are to be counted in the Electoral College, or how objections to a proffered slate are adjudicated, that violate the Twelfth Amendment. This violation occurs because the Electoral Count Act directs the Defendant, Vice President Michael R. Pence, in his capacity as President of the Senate and Presiding Officer over the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress: (1) to count the electoral votes for a State that have been appointed in violation of the Electors Clause; (2) limits or eliminates his exclusive authority and sole discretion under the Twelfth Amendment to determine which slates of electors for a State, or neither, may be counted; and (3) replaces the Twelfth Amendment's dispute resolution procedure – under which the House of Representatives has sole authority to choose the President.

3. Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act unconstitutionally violates the Electors Clause by usurping the exclusive and plenary authority of State Legislatures to determine the manner of appointing Presidential Electors, and instead gives that authority to the State's Executive. Similarly, 3 USC § 5 makes clear that the Presidential electors of a state and their appointment by the State Executive shall be conclusive.

4. This is not an abstract or hypothetical question, but a live “case or controversy” under Article III that is ripe for a declaratory judgment arising from the events of December 14, 2020, where the State of Arizona (and several others) have appointed two competing slates of electors.

5. Plaintiffs include the United States Representative for Texas' First Congressional District and the entire slate of Republican Presidential Electors for the State of Arizona. The Arizona Electors have cast Arizona's electoral votes for President Donald J. Trump on December 14, 2020, at the Arizona State Capitol with the permission and endorsement of the Arizona Legislature, i.e., at the time, place, and manner required under Arizona state law and the Electoral Count Act. At the same time, Arizona's Governor and Secretary of State appointed a separate and competing slate of electors who cast Arizona's electoral votes for former Vice-President Joseph R. Biden, despite the evidence of massive multi-state electoral fraud committed on Biden's behalf that changed electoral results in Arizona and in other states such as Georgia, Michigan,

Pennsylvania and Wisconsin that have also put forward competing slates of electors (collectively, the “Contested States”). Collectively, these Contested States have enough electoral votes in controversy to determine the outcome of the 2020 General Election.

6. On January 6, 2021, when Congress convenes to count the electoral votes for President and Vice-President, Plaintiff Representative Gohmert will object to the counting of the Arizona slate of electors voting for Biden and to the Biden slates from the remaining Contested States. Rep. Gohmert is entitled to have his objection determined under the Twelve Amendment, and not through the unconstitutional impositions of a prior Congress by 3 U.S.C. §§ 5 and 15.

7. Senators have also stated that they may object to the Biden slate of electors from the Contested States.<sup>1</sup>

8. This Complaint addresses a matter of urgent national concern that involves only issues of law – namely, a determination that Sections 5 and 15 of the Electoral Count Act violate the Electors Clause and/or the Twelfth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. The relevant facts are not in dispute concerning the existence of a live case or controversy between Plaintiffs and Defendant, ripeness, standing, and other matters related to the justiciability of Plaintiffs’ claims.<sup>2</sup>

---

<sup>1</sup> See <https://www.forbes.com/sites/jackbrewster/2020/12/17/here-are-the-gop-senators-who-have-hinted-at-defying-mcconnell-by-challenging-election/?sh=506395c34ce3>.

<sup>2</sup> The facts relevant to the justiciability of Plaintiffs’ claims are laid out below and demonstrate the certainty or near certainty that the unconstitutional provisions in Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act will be invoked at the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress to choose the next President, namely: (1) there are competing slates of electors for Arizona and the other Contested States that have been or will be submitted to the Electoral College; (2) the Contested States collectively have sufficient (contested) electoral votes to determine the winner of the 2020 General Election – President Trump or former Vice President Biden; (3) legislators in Arizona and other Contested States have contested the certification of their State’s electoral votes by State executives, due to substantial evidence of election fraud that is the subject of ongoing litigation and investigations; and (4) Senators and Members of the House of Representatives have expressed their intent to challenge the electors and electoral votes certified by State executives in the Contested States.

9. Because the requested declaratory judgment will terminate the controversy arising from the conflict between the Twelfth Amendment and the Electoral Count Act, and the facts are not in dispute, it is appropriate for this Court to grant this relief in a summary proceeding without an evidentiary hearing or discovery. See Notes of Advisory Committee on Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Fed. R. Civ. P. 57.

10. Accordingly, Plaintiffs have concurrently submitted a motion for a speedy summary proceeding under Rule 57 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure (“FRCP”) to grant the relief requested herein as soon as possible, and for emergency injunctive relief under Rule 65 thereof consistent with the declaratory judgment requested herein on that same date.

11. Accordingly, Plaintiffs respectfully request this Court to issue a declaratory judgment finding that:

- A. Sections 5 and 15 of the Electoral Count Act, 3 U.S.C. §§ 5 and 15, are unconstitutional because they violate the Twelfth Amendment, U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1, cl. 1 & amend. XII on the face of it; and further violate the Electors Clause;
- B. That Vice-President Pence, in his capacity as President of Senate and Presiding Officer of the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress under the Twelfth Amendment, is subject solely to the requirements of the Twelfth Amendment and may exercise the exclusive authority and sole discretion in determining which electoral votes to count for a given State, and must ignore and may not rely on any provisions of the Electoral Count Act that would limit his exclusive authority and his sole discretion to determine the count, which could include votes from the slates of Republican electors from the Contested States;

- C. That, with respect to competing slates of electors from the State of Arizona or other Contested States, the Twelfth Amendment contains the exclusive dispute resolution mechanisms, namely, that (i) Vice-President Pence determines which slate of electors' votes count, or neither, for that State; (ii) how objections from members of Congress to any proffered slate of electors is adjudicated; and (iii) if no candidate has a majority of 270 elector votes, then the House of Representatives (and only the House of Representatives) shall choose the President where "the votes [in the House of Representatives] shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote," U.S. CONST. amend. XII;
- D. That with respect to the counting of competing slates of electors, the alternative dispute resolution procedure or priority rule in 3 U.S.C. § 15, together with its incorporation of 3 U.S.C. § 5, shall have no force or effect because it nullifies and replaces the Twelfth Amendment rules above with an entirely different procedure; and
- E. Issue any other declaratory judgments or findings or injunctive relief necessary to support or effectuate the foregoing declaratory judgments.

JURISDICTION AND VENUE

12. This Court has subject matter jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1331 which provides, "The district courts shall have original jurisdiction of all civil actions arising under the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States."

13. This Court also has subject matter jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1343 because this action involves a federal election for President of the United States. "A significant departure from the legislative scheme for appointing Presidential electors presents a federal constitutional question.” Bush v. Gore, 531 U.S. 98, 113 (2000) (Rehnquist, C.J., concurring); Smiley v. Holm, 285 U.S. 355, 365 (1932).

14. The jurisdiction of the Court to grant declaratory relief is conferred by 28 U.S.C. §§ 2201 and 2202 and by Rule 57, Fed. R. Civ. P., and emergency injunctive relief by Rule 65, Fed. R. Civ. P.

15. Venue is proper because Plaintiff Gohmert resides in Tyler, Texas, he maintains his primary congressional office in Tyler, and no real property is involved in the action. 28 U.S.C. § 1391(e)(1).

THE PARTIES

16. Plaintiff Louie Gohmert is a duly elected member of the United States House of Representatives for the First Congressional District of Texas. On November 3, 2020 he won re-election of this Congressional seat and plans to attend the January 6, 2021 session of Congress. He resides in the city of Tyler, in Smith County, Texas.

17. Each of the following Plaintiffs is a resident of Arizona, a registered Arizona voter and a Republican Party Presidential Elector on behalf of the State of Arizona, who voted their competing slate for President and Vice President on December 14, 2020: a) Tyler Bowyer, a resident of Maricopa County and a Republican National Committeeman; b) Nancy Cottle, a resident of Maricopa County and Second Vice-Chairman of the Maricopa County Republican Committee; c) Jake Hoffman, a resident of Maricopa County and member-elect of the Arizona House of Representatives; d) Anthony Kern, a resident of Maricopa County and an outgoing member of the Arizona House of Representatives; e) James R. Lamon, a resident of Maricopa County; f) Samuel Moorhead, a resident of Gila County; g) Robert Montgomery, a resident of Cochise County and Republican Party Chairman for Cochise County; h) Loraine Pellegrino, a resident of Maricopa County; i) Greg Safsten, a resident of Maricopa County and Executive Director of the Republican Party of Arizona; j) Kelli Ward, a resident of Mohave County and Chair of the Arizona Republican Party; and k) Michael Ward, a resident of Mohave County.

18. The above eleven plaintiffs constitute the full slate of the Arizona Republican party's nominees for presidential electors (the "Arizona Electors").

19. The Defendant is Vice President Michael R. Pence named in his official capacity as the Vice President of the United States. The declaratory and injunctive relief requested herein applies to his duties as President of the Senate and Presiding Officer at the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress carried out pursuant to the Electoral Count Act and the Twelfth Amendment.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

20. The Plaintiffs include a United States Representative from Texas, the entire slate of Republican Presidential Electors for the State of Arizona as well as an outgoing and incoming member of the Arizona Legislature. On December 14, 2020, pursuant to the requirements of applicable state laws and the Electoral Count Act, the Arizona Electors, with the knowledge and permission of the Republican-majority Arizona Legislature, convened at the Arizona State Capitol, and cast Arizona's electoral votes for President Donald J. Trump and Vice President Michael R. Pence.<sup>3</sup> On the same date, the Republican Presidential Electors for the States of Georgia,<sup>4</sup>

---

<sup>3</sup> See GOP Elector Nominees cast votes for Trump in Arizona, Georgia, Pennsylvania, by Dave Boyer, The Washington Times, December 14, 2020. <https://www.washingtontimes.com/news/2020/dec/14/gop-electors-cast-votes-trump-georgia-pennsylvania/>.

<sup>4</sup> See id.

Pennsylvania<sup>5</sup> and Wisconsin<sup>6</sup> met at their respective State Capitols to cast their States' electoral votes for President Trump and Vice President Pence.

21. Michigan's Republican electors attempted to vote at their State Capitol on December 14th but were denied entrance by the Michigan State Police. Instead, they met on the grounds of the State Capitol and cast their votes for President Trump and Vice President Pence vote.<sup>7</sup>

22. On December 14, 2020, in Arizona and the other States listed above, the Democratic Party's slate of electors convened in their respective State Capitols to cast their electoral votes for former Vice President Joseph R. Biden and Senator Kamala Harris. On the same day, Arizona Governor Doug Ducey and Arizona Secretary of State Katie Hobbs submitted the Certificate of Ascertainment with the Biden electoral votes pursuant to the National Archivist pursuant to the Electoral Count Act.<sup>8</sup>

23. Accordingly, there are now competing slates of Republican and Democratic electors in five States with Republican majorities in both houses of their State Legislatures – Arizona, Georgia, Michigan, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin (i.e., the Contested States) – that

---

<sup>5</sup> See id.

<sup>6</sup> See Wisconsin GOP Electors Meet to Cast their own Votes Too Just in Case, by Nick Viviani, WMTV, NBC15.com, December 14, 2020, <https://www.nbc15.com/2020/12/14/wisconsin-gop-electors-meet-to-cast-their-own-votes-too-just-in-case/> last visited December 14, 2020.

<sup>7</sup> See Michigan Police Block GOP Electors from Entering Capitol, by Jacob Palmieri, the Palmieri Report, December 14, 2020, <https://thepalmierireport.com/michigan-state-police-block-gop-electors-from-entering-capitol/>.

<sup>8</sup> See Democratic Electors Cast Ballots in Arizona for First Time Since 1996, by Nicole Valdes, ABC15.com, December 14, 2020, available at: <https://www.abc15.com/news/election-2020/democratic-electors-cast-ballots-in-arizona-for-first-time-since-1996>.

collectively have 73 electoral votes, which are more than sufficient to determine the winner of the 2020 General Election.<sup>9</sup>

24. The Arizona Electors, along with Republican Presidential Electors in Georgia, Michigan, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin, took this step as a result of the extraordinary events and substantial evidence of election fraud and other illegal conduct before, during and after the 2020 General Election in these States. The Arizona Legislature has conducted legislative hearings into these voting fraud allegations, and is actively investigating these matters, including issuing subpoenas of Maricopa County, Arizona (which accounts for over 60% of Arizona's population and voters) voting machines for forensic audits.<sup>10</sup>

25. On December 14, 2020, members of the Arizona Legislature passed a Joint Resolution in which they: (1) found that the 2020 General Election “was marred by irregularities so significant as to render it highly doubtful whether the certified result accurately represents the will of the voters;” (2) invoked the Arizona Legislature's authority under the Electors Clause and 5 U.S.C. § 2 to declare the 2020 General Election a failed election and to directly appoint Arizona's electors; (3) resolved that the Plaintiff Arizona Electors' “11 electoral votes be accepted for ... Donald J. Trump or to have all electoral votes nullified completely until a full forensic audit can be conducted;” and (4) further resolved “that the United States Congress is not to consider a slate

---

<sup>9</sup> Republican Presidential Electors in the States of Nevada and New Mexico, which have Democrat majority state legislature, also met on December 14, 2020, at their State Capitols to cast their votes for President Trump and Vice President Pence.

<sup>10</sup> Maricopa County election officials have refused to comply with these subpoenas or to turn over voting machines or voting records and have sued to quash the subpoena. Plaintiff Arizona Electors have moved to intervene in this Arizona state proceeding. See generally Maricopa Cty. v. Fann, Case No. CV2020-016840 (Az. Sup. Ct. Dec. 18, 2020).

of electors from the State of Arizona until the Legislature deems the election to be final and all irregularities resolved.”<sup>11</sup>

26. Public reports have also highlighted wide-spread election fraud in the other Contested States that prompted competing Electors’ slates.<sup>12</sup>

27. Republican Senators and Republican Members of the House of Representatives have also expressed their intent to oppose the certified slates of electors from the Contested States due to the substantial evidence of election fraud in the 2020 General Election. Multiple Senators and House Members have stated that they will object to the Biden electors at the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress.<sup>13</sup> Plaintiff Gohmert will object to the counting of the Arizona electors voting for Biden, as well as to the Biden electors from the remaining Contested States.

28. Based on the foregoing facts, Defendant Vice President Pence, in his capacity as President of the Senate and Presiding Officer at the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress to select the next President, will be presented with the following circumstances: (1) competing slates of electors from the State of Arizona and the other Contested States (namely, Georgia, Michigan, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin) (2) that represent sufficient electoral votes (a) if counted, to determine the winner of the 2020 General Election, or (b) if not counted, to deny either President Trump or former Vice President Biden sufficient votes to win outright; and (3) objections from at

---

<sup>11</sup> See Ex. A, “A Joint Resolution of the 54th Legislature, State of Arizona, To The 116th Congress, Office of the President of the Senate Presiding,” December 14, 2020 (“December 14, 2020 Joint Resolution”).

<sup>12</sup> See The Immaculate Deception, Six Key Dimensions of Election Irregularities, The Navarro Report, <https://bannonswarroom.com/wp-content/uploads/2020/12/The-Immaculate-Deception-12.15.20-1.pdf>

<sup>13</sup> See, e.g., Dueling Electors and the Upcoming Joint Session of Congress, by Zachary Steiber, Epoch Times, Dec. 17, 2020, available at: https://www.theepochtimes.com/explainer-dueling-electors-and-the-upcoming-joint-session-of-congress\_3622992.html.

least one Senator and at least one Member of the House of Representatives to the counting of electoral votes from one or more of the Contested States.

29. The choice between the Twelfth Amendment and 3 U.S.C. § 15 raises important procedural differences. In the incoming 117th Congress, the Republican Party has a majority in 27 of the House delegations that would vote under the Twelfth Amendment. The Democrat Party has a majority in 20 of those House delegations, and the two parties are evenly divided in three of those delegations. By contrast, under 3 U.S.C. § 15, Democrats have a ten- or eleven-seat majority in the House, depending on the final outcome of the election in New York's 22nd District.

30. Accordingly, it is the foregoing conflict between the Twelfth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution and Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act that establish the urgency for this Court to issue a declaratory judgment that Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act is unconstitutional.

RELEVANT CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS

31. Presidential Electors Clause. The U.S. Constitution grants State Legislatures the exclusive authority to appoint Presidential Electors:

Each State shall appoint, in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors, equal to the whole Number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress: but no Senator or Representative, or Person holding an Office of Trust or Profit under the United States, shall be appointed an Elector. U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1 ("Electors Clause").

32. The Supreme Court has affirmed that the “power and jurisdiction of the state [legislature]” to select electors “is exclusive,” McPherson v. Blacker, 146 U.S. 1, 11 (1892); this power “cannot be taken from them or modified” by statute or even the state constitution,” and “there is no doubt of the right of the legislature to resume the power at any time.” Id. at 10 (citations omitted). In Bush v. Gore, 531 U.S. 98 (2000), the Supreme Court reaffirmed McPherson's holding that “the state legislature’s power to select the manner for appointing electors is plenary,” Bush, 531 U.S. at 104 (citing McPherson, 146 U.S. at 35), noting that the state legislature “may, if it so chooses, select the electors itself,” and that even after deciding to select electors through a statewide election, “can take back the power to appoint electors.” Id. (citation omitted).

33. The Twelfth Amendment. The Twelfth Amendment sets forth the procedures for counting electoral votes and for resolving disputes over whether and which electoral votes may be counted for a State. The first section describes the meeting of the Electoral College and the procedures up to the casting of the electoral votes by the Presidential Electors in their respective states, which occurred on December 14, 2020, with respect to the 2020 General Election:

The electors shall meet in their respective states and vote by ballot for President and Vice-President, one of whom, at least, shall not be an inhabitant of the same state with themselves; they shall name in their ballots the person voted for as President, and in distinct ballots the person voted for as Vice-President, and they shall make distinct lists of all persons voted for as President, and of all persons voted for as Vice-President, and of the number of votes for each, which lists they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the seat of the government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate.

U.S. CONST. amend. XII.

34. The second section describes how Defendant Vice President Pence, in his role as President of the Senate and Presiding Officer for the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress, shall “count” the electoral votes.

The President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and the votes shall then be counted[.]

U.S. CONST. amend. XII.

35. Under the Twelfth Amendment, Defendant Pence alone has the exclusive authority and sole discretion to open and permit the counting of the electoral votes for a given state, and where there are competing slates of electors, or where there is objection to any single slate of electors, to determine which electors’ votes, or whether none, shall be counted. Notably, neither the Twelfth Amendment nor the Electoral Count Act, provides any mechanism for judicial review of the Presiding Officer's determinations.<sup>14</sup> Instead, the Twelfth Amendment and the Electoral Count Act adopt different procedures for the President of the Senate (Twelfth Amendment) or both Houses of Congress (Electoral Count Act) to resolve any such disputes and the authority for the final determinations, in the event of disagreement, to different parties; namely, the Electoral Count Act gives it to the Executive of the State; while the Twelfth Amendment vests sole authority with the Vice President.

36. The third section of the Twelfth Amendment sets forth the procedures for selecting the President (solely) by the House of Representatives, in the event that no candidate has received a majority of electoral votes counted by the President of the Senate.

The person having the greatest number of votes for President, shall be the President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of electors appointed; and if no person have such majority, then from the persons having the highest numbers not exceeding three on the list of those voted for as President, the House of Representatives shall choose immediately, by ballot, the President. But in choosing the President, the votes shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote; a quorum for this purpose shall consist of a member or members from two-thirds of the states, and a majority of all the states shall be necessary to a choice. And if the House of Representatives shall not choose a President whenever the right of choice shall devolve upon them, before the fourth day of March next following, then the Vice-President shall act as President, as in the case of the death or other constitutional disability of the President.

U.S. CONST. amend. XII (emphasis added).

---

<sup>14</sup> See, e.g., Nathan L. Colvin & Edward B. Foley, The Twelfth Amendment: A Constitutional Ticking Time Bomb, U. of Miami L. Rev. 64:475, 526 (2010) (discussing reviews of the Electoral Count Act's ("ECA") legislative history and concluding that, "[o]ne of the more thorough reviews of the legislative history of the ECA reveals that Congress considered giving the Court some role in the process but rejected the idea every time, and it was clear that Congress did not think the Court had a constitutional role nor did it believe that the Court should have any jurisdiction at all." Plaintiffs agree that resolution of disputes before Congress, arising on January 6, 2021, over competing slates of electors, or objections to any slate of electors, are matters outside the purview of federal courts; but the federal courts must determine whether the ECA is unconstitutional. This position is fully consistent with the declaratory judgment requested herein.

37. There are four key features of this Twelfth Amendment procedure that should be noted when comparing it with the Electoral Count Act's procedures: (1) the President is to be chosen solely by the House of Representatives, with no role for the Senate; (2) votes are taken by State (with one vote per State), rather than by individual House members; (3) the President is deemed the candidate that receives the majority of States' votes, rather than a majority of individual House members' votes; and (4) there are no other restrictions on this majority rule provision; in particular, no "tie breaker" or priority rules based on the manner or State authority that originally appointed the electors on December 14, 2020 as is the case under the Electoral Count Act (which gives priority to electors' certified by the State's executive).

38. The Electoral Count Act. The Electoral Count Act of 1887, as subsequently amended, includes a number of provisions that are in direct conflict with the text of the Electors Clause and the Twelfth Amendment.

39. Sections 5 and 15 of the Electoral Count Act adopt an entirely different set of procedures for the counting of electoral votes, for addressing situations where one candidate does not receive a majority, and for resolving disputes. Sections 16 to 18 of the Electoral Count Act provide additional procedural rules governing the Joint Session of Congress (to be held January 6, 2021 for the 2020 General Election).

40. The first part of Section 15 is consistent with the Twelfth Amendment insofar as it provides that "the President of the Senate shall be their presiding officer" and that "all the certificates and papers purporting to be certificates of the electoral votes" are to be "opened by the President of the Senate." 3 U.S.C. § 15. However, Section 15 diverges from the Twelfth Amendment by adopting procedures for the President of the Senate to "call for objections," and if there are objections made in writing by one Senator and one Member of the House of Representatives, then this shall trigger a dispute-resolution procedure found nowhere in the Twelfth Amendment.

41. The Section 15's dispute resolution procedures are lengthy and reproduced in their entirety below:

When all objections so made to any vote or paper from a State shall have been received and read, the Senate shall thereupon withdraw, and such objections shall be submitted to the Senate for its decision; and the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall, in like manner, submit such objections to the House of Representatives for its decision; and no electoral vote or votes from any State which shall have been regularly given by electors whose appointment has been lawfully certified to according to section 6 of this title [3 USCS § 6]<sup>15</sup> from which but one return has been received shall be rejected, but the two Houses concurrently may reject the vote or votes when they agree that such vote or votes have not been so regularly given by electors whose appointment has been so certified. If more than one return or paper purporting to be a return from a State shall have been received by the President of the Senate, those votes, and those only, shall be counted which shall have been regularly given by the electors who are shown by the determination mentioned in section 5 [3 USCS § 5] of this title to have been appointed, if the determination in said section provided for shall have been made, or by such successors or substitutes, in case of a vacancy in the board of electors so ascertained, as have been appointed to fill such vacancy in the mode provided by the laws of the State; but in case there shall arise the question which of two or more of such State authorities determining what electors have been appointed, as mentioned in section 5 of this title [3 USCS § 5], is the lawful tribunal of such State, the votes regularly given of those electors, and those only, of such State shall be counted whose title as electors the two Houses, acting separately, shall concurrently decide is supported by the decision of such State so authorized by its law; and in such case of more than one return or paper purporting to be a return from a State, if there shall have been no such determination of the question in the State aforesaid, then those votes, and those only, shall be counted which the two Houses shall concurrently decide were cast by lawful electors appointed in accordance with the laws of the State, unless the two Houses, acting separately, shall concurrently decide such votes not to be the lawful votes of the legally appointed electors of such

---

<sup>15</sup> 3 U.S.C. § 6 is inconsistent with the Electors Clause—which provides that electors “shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the seat of the government of the United States” the results of their vote, U.S. Const. art. II, § 1, cl. 2-3—because § 6 relies on state executives to forward the results of the electors’ vote to the Archivist for delivery to Congress. 3 U.S.C. § 6. Although the means of delivery are arguably inconsequential, the Constitution vests state executives with no role whatsoever in the process of electing a President. A state executive lends no official imprimatur to a given slate of electors under the Constitution.

State. But if the two Houses shall disagree in respect of the counting of such votes, then, and in that case, the votes of the electors whose appointment shall have been certified by the executive of the State, under the seal thereof, shall be counted. When the two Houses have voted, they shall immediately again meet, and the presiding officer shall then announce the decision of the questions submitted. No votes or papers from any other State shall be acted upon until the objections previously made to the votes or papers from any State shall have been finally disposed of.

3 U.S.C. § 15 (emphasis added).

42. First, the Electoral Count Act submits disputes over the “count” of electoral votes to both the House of Representatives and to the Senate. The Twelfth Amendment envisages no such role for both Houses of Congress. The President of the Senate, and the President of the Senate alone, shall “count” the electoral votes. This intent is borne out by a unanimous resolution attached to the final Constitution that described the procedures for electing the first President (i.e., for a time when there would not already be a Vice President), stating in relevant part “that the Senators should appoint a President of the Senate, for the sole Purpose of receiving, opening and counting the Votes for President.” 2 M. Farrand, RECORDS OF THE FEDERAL CONVENTION OF 1787, at 666 (1911). For all subsequent elections, when there would be a Vice President to act as President of the Senate, the Constitution vests the opening and counting in the Vice President.

43. Second, the Electoral Count Act gives both the House of Representatives and the Senate the power to vote, or “decide,” which of two or more competing slates of electors shall be counted, and it requires the concurrence of both to “count” the electoral votes for one of the competing slates of electors.

44. Under the Twelfth Amendment, the President of the Senate has the sole authority to count votes in the first instance, and then the House may do so only in the event that no candidate receives a majority counted by the President of the Senate. There is no role for the Senate to participate in choosing the President.

45. Third, the Electoral Count Act eliminates entirely the unique mechanism by which the House of Representatives under the Twelve Amendment is to choose the President, namely, where “the votes shall be taken by states, the representation for each state having one vote.” U.S. CONST. amend. XII. The Electoral Count Act is silent on how the House of Representatives is to “decide” which electoral votes were cast by lawful electors.

46. Fourth, the Electoral Count Act adopts a priority rule, or “tie breaker,” “if the two Houses shall disagree in respect of counting of such votes,” in which case “the votes of the electors whose appointment shall have been certified by the executive of the State ... shall be counted.” This provision not only conflicts with the President of the Senate’s exclusive authority and sole discretion under the Twelfth Amendment to decide which electoral votes to count, but also with the State Legislature’s exclusive and plenary authority under the Electors Clause to appoint the Presidential Electors for their State.

47. The Electoral Count Act is unconstitutional because it exceeds the power of Congress to enact. It is well settled that “one legislature may not bind the legislative authority of its successors,” United States v. Winstar Corp., 518 U.S. 839, 872 (1996), which is a foundational and “centuries-old concept,” id., that traces to Blackstone’s maxim that “Acts of parliament derogatory from the power of subsequent parliaments bind not.” Id. (quoting 1 WILLIAM BLACKSTONE, COMMENTARIES *90). “There is no constitutionally prescribed method by which one Congress may require a future Congress to interpret or discharge a constitutional responsibility in any particular way.” Laurence H. Tribe, Erog v. Hsub and Its Disguises: Freeing Bush v. Gore from Its Hall of Mirrors, 115 HARV. L. REV. 170, 267 n.388 (2001).

48. The Electoral Count Act also violates the Presentment Clause by purporting to create a type of bicameral order, resolution, or vote that is not presented to the President. See U.S.

CONST. art. I, § 7, cl. 3 (“Every Order, Resolution, or Vote, to Which the Concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary (except on a question of Adjournment) shall be presented to the President of the United States; and before the Same shall take Effect, shall be approved by him, or being disapproved by him, shall be repassed by two thirds of the Senate and House of Representatives, according to the Rules and Limitations prescribed in the Case of a Bill.”)

49. The House and Senate cannot resolve the issues that the Electoral Count Act asks them to resolve without either a supermajority in both houses or presentment. The Electoral Count Act similarly restricts the authority of the House of Representatives and the Senate to control their internal discretion and procedures pursuant to Article I, Section 5 which provides that “[e]ach House may determine the Rules of its Proceedings ...” U.S. CONST. art. I, § 5, cl. 2.

50. Further, the Electoral Count Act improperly delegates tie-breaking authority to State executives (who have no agency under the Electors Clause or election amendments) when a State presents competing slates that Congress cannot resolve, or when an objection is presented to a particular slate of electors.

51. The Electoral Count Act also violates the non-delegation doctrine, the separation-of-powers and anti-entrenchment doctrines. See generally Chris Land & David Schultz, On the Unenforceability of the Electoral Count Act, 13 Rutgers J.L. & Pub. Policy 340, 364-377 (2016).

JUSTICIABILITY AND JURISDICTION

52. This Court Can Grant Declaratory Judgment in a Summary Proceeding. This Court has the authority to enter a declaratory judgment and to provide injunctive relief pursuant to Rules 57 and 65 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and 28 U.S.C. §§ 2201 and 2202. The court may order a speedy hearing of a declaratory judgment action. Fed. Rules Civ. Proc. R. 57,

Advisory Committee Notes. A declaratory judgment is appropriate when it will “terminate the controversy” giving rise to the proceeding. Id. Inasmuch as it often involves only an issue of law on undisputed or relatively undisputed facts, it operates frequently as a summary proceeding, justifying docketing the case for early hearing as on a motion. Id.

53. As described above, Plaintiffs’ claims involve legal issues only – specifically, whether the Electoral Count Act violates the Twelfth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution – that do not require this court to resolve any disputed factual issues.

54. Moreover, the factual issues related to the justiciability of Plaintiffs’ claims are not in dispute. To assist this Court to grant the relief on the expedited basis requested herein, Plaintiffs address a number of likely objections to this Court’s jurisdiction and the justiciability of Plaintiffs’ claims that may be raised by Defendant.

55. Plaintiffs Have Standing. Plaintiffs have standing as including a Member of the House of Representatives, Members of the Arizona Legislature, and as Presidential Electors for the State of Arizona.

56. Prior to December 14, 2020, Plaintiff Arizona Electors had standing under the Electors Clause as candidates for the office of Presidential Elector because, under Arizona law, a vote cast for the Republican Party’s President and Vice President is cast for the Republican Presidential Electors. See ARS § 16-212. Accordingly, Plaintiff Arizona Electors, like other candidates for office, “have a cognizable interest in ensuring that the final vote tally reflects the legally valid votes cast,” as “[a]n inaccurate vote tally is a concrete and particularized injury to candidates such as the Electors.” Carson v. Simon, 978 F.3d 1051, 1057 (8th Cir. 2020) (affirming that Presidential Electors have Article III and prudential standing under Electors Clause). See also Wood v. Raffensperger, No. 20-14418, 2020 WL 7094866, *10 (11th Cir. Dec. 5, 2020) (affirming that if Plaintiff voter had been a candidate for office “he could assert a personal, distinct injury” required for standing); Trump v. Wis. Elections Comm’n, No. 20-cv-1785, 2020 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 233765 at *26 (E.D. Wis. Dec. 12, 2020) (President Trump, “as candidate for election, has a concrete particularized interest in the actual results of the election.”).

57. But for the alleged wrongful conduct of Arizona executive branch and Maricopa County officials under color of law, by certifying a fraudulently produced election result in Mr. Biden’s favor, the Plaintiff Arizona Electors would have been certified as the presidential electors for Arizona, and Arizona’s Governor and Secretary of State would have transmitted uncontested votes for Donald J. Trump and Michael R. Pence to the Electoral College. The certification and transmission of a competing slate of Biden electors has resulted in a unique injury that only Plaintiff Arizona Electors could suffer, namely, having a competing slate of electors take their place and their votes in the Electoral College.

58. The upcoming January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress provides further grounds of standing for the requested declaratory judgment that the Electoral Count Act is unconstitutional. Then, Plaintiffs are certain or nearly certain to suffer an injury-in-fact caused by Defendant Vice President Pence, acting as Presiding Officer, if Defendant ignores the Twelfth Amendment and instead follows the procedures in Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act to resolve the dispute over which slate of Arizona electors is to be counted.

59. The Twelfth Amendment gives Defendant exclusive authority and sole discretion as to which set of electors to count, or not to count any set of electors; if no candidate receives a majority of electoral votes, then the President is to be chosen by the House, where “the votes shall be taken by States, the representation from each state having one vote.” U.S. CONST. amend. XII. If Defendant Pence instead follows the procedures in Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act,

Plaintiffs' electoral votes will not be counted because (a) the Democratic majority House of Representatives will not "decide" to count the electoral votes of Plaintiff Republican electors; and (b) either the Senate will concur with the House not to count their votes, or the Senate will not concur, in which case, the electoral votes cast by Biden's electors will be counted because the Biden slate of electors was certified by Arizona's executive.

60. It is sufficient for the purposes of declaratory judgment that the injury is threatened. The declaratory and injunctive relief requested by Plaintiffs "may be made before actual completion of the injury-in-fact required for Article III standing," namely, the application of Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act, rather than the Twelfth Amendment to resolve disputes over which of two competing slates of electors to count "if the plaintiff can show an actual present harm or significant possibility of future harm to demonstrate the need for pre-enforcement review." 10 FED. PROC. L. ED. § 23.26 ("Standing to Seek Declaratory Judgment") (citations omitted).

61. Plaintiffs have demonstrated above that this injury-in-fact is to occur at the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress, and they seek the requested declaratory and injunctive relief "only in the last resort, and as a necessity in the determination of a vital controversy." Id.

62. Plaintiffs Present a Live "Case or Controversy." Plaintiffs' claims present a live "case or controversy" with the Defendant, rather than hypothetical or abstract dispute, that can be litigated and decided by this Court through the requested declaratory and injunctive relief. Here there is a clear threat of the application of an unconstitutional statute, Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act, which is sufficient to establish the requisite case or controversy. See, e.g., Navegar, Inc. v. U.S., 103 F.3d 994, 998 (D.C. Cir. 1997) ("the threat of prosecution provides the foundation of justiciability as a constitutional and prudential matter, and the Declaratory Judgments Act provides the mechanism for seeking pre-enforcement review in federal court.").

63. First, the events of December 14, 2020, gave rise to two competing slates of electors for the State of Arizona: the Plaintiff Arizona Electors, supported by Arizona State legislators (as evidenced by the December 14, 2020 Joint Resolution and the participation of Arizona legislator Plaintiffs), who cast their electoral votes for President Trump and Vice President Pence, and one certified by the Arizona state executives who cast their votes for former Vice President Biden and Senator Harris. Second, the text of the Twelfth Amendment of the Constitution expressly commits to the Defendant Vice President Pence, acting as the President of the Senate and Presiding Officer for the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress, the authority and discretion to “count” electoral votes, i.e., deciding in his sole discretion as to which one of the two, or neither, set of electoral votes shall be counted. The Electoral Count Act similarly designates Defendant as the Presiding Officer responsible for opening and counting electoral votes, but sets forth a different set of procedures, inconsistent with the Twelfth Amendment, for deciding which of two or more competing slates of electors and electoral votes, or neither, shall be counted.

64. Accordingly, a controversy presently exists due to: (1) the existence of competing slates of electors for Arizona and the other Contested States, and (2) distinct and inconsistent procedures under the Twelfth Amendment and the Electoral Count Act to determine which slate of electors and their electoral votes, or neither, shall be counted in choosing the next President. Further, this controversy must be resolved at the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress. Finally, the Constitution expressly designates Defendant Pence as the individual who decides which set of electoral votes, or neither, to count, and the requested declaratory judgment that the procedures under Electoral Count Act are unconstitutional is necessary to ensure that Defendant Pence counts electoral votes in a manner consistent with the Twelfth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution.

65. The injuries that Plaintiffs assert affect the procedure by which the status of their votes will be considered, which lowers the thresholds for immediacy and redressability under this Circuit's and the Supreme Court's precedents. Nat'l Treasury Employees Union v. U.S., 101 F.3d 1423, 1428-29 (D.C. Cir. 1996); Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 571-72 & n.7 (1992). Similarly, a plaintiff with concrete injury can invoke Constitution's structural protections of liberty. Bond v. United States, 564 U.S. 211, 222-23 (2011).

66. Plaintiffs' Claims Are Ripe for Adjudication. Plaintiffs' claims are ripe for the same reasons that they present a live "case or controversy" within the meaning of Article III. "[T]he ripeness doctrine seeks to separate matters that are premature for review because the injury is speculative and may never occur from those cases that are appropriate for federal court action." Roark v. Hardee LP v. City of Austin, 522 F.3d 533, 544 n.12 (5th Cir. 2008) (quoting ERWIN CHEMERINSEY, FEDERAL JURISDICTION § 2.4.18 (5th Ed. 2007)). As explained above, the facts underlying the justiciability of Plaintiffs' claims are not in dispute. Further, it is certain or nearly certain that Plaintiffs will suffer an injury-in-fact at the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress, if Defendant Pence disregards the exclusive authority and sole discretion granted to him under the Twelfth Amendment to "count" electoral votes, and instead follows the conflicting and unconstitutional procedures in Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act, pursuant to which Plaintiffs' electoral votes will be disregarded in favor of the competing electors for the State of Arizona.

67. Plaintiffs' Claims Are Not Moot. Plaintiffs seek prospective declaratory judgment that portions of the Electoral Count Act are unconstitutional and injunctive relief prohibiting Defendant from following the procedures in Section 15 thereof that authorize the House and Senate jointly to resolve disputes regarding competing slates of electors. This prospective relief would apply to Defendants' future actions at the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress. The requested relief thus is not moot because it is prospective and because it addresses an unconstitutional “ongoing policy” embodied in the Electoral Count Act that is likely to be repeated and will evade review if the requested relief is not granted. Del Monte Fresh Produce v. U.S., 570 F.3d 316, 321-22 (D.C. Cir. 2009).

COUNT I

DEFENDANT WILL NECESSARILY VIOLATE THE TWELFTH AMENDMENT AND THE ELECTORS CLAUSE OF THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION IF HE FOLLOWS THE ELECTORAL COUNT ACT.

68. Plaintiffs reallege all preceding paragraphs as if fully set forth herein.

69. The Electors Clause states that “[e]ach State shall appoint, in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a Number of Electors” for President and Vice President. U.S. Const. art. II, §1, cl. 2 (emphasis added).

70. The Twelfth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution gives Defendant Vice President, as President of the Senate and the Presiding Officer of January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress, the exclusive authority and sole discretion to “count” the electoral votes for President, as well as the authority to determine which of two or more competing slates of electors for a State, or neither, may be counted, or how objections to any single slate of electors is resolved. In the event no candidate receives a majority of the electoral votes, then the House of Representatives shall have sole authority to choose the President where “the votes shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote.” U.S. CONST. amend. XII.

71. Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act replaces the procedures set forth in the Twelfth Amendment with a different and inconsistent set of decision making and dispute resolution procedures. As detailed above, these provisions of Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act are unconstitutional insofar as they require Defendant: (1) to count the electoral votes for a

State that have been appointed in violation of the Electors Clause; (2) limits or eliminates his exclusive authority and sole discretion under the Twelfth Amendment to determine which slates of electors for a State, or neither, may be counted; and (3) replaces the Twelfth Amendment's dispute resolution procedure which provides for the House of Representatives to choose the President under a procedure where "the votes shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote" – with an entirely different procedure in which the House and Senate each separately "decide" which slate is to be counted, and in the event of a disagreement, then only "the votes of the electors whose appointment shall have been certified by the executive of the State ... shall be counted." 3 U.S.C. § 15.

72. Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act also violates the Electors Clause by usurping the exclusive and plenary authority of State Legislatures to determine the manner of appointing Presidential Electors and gives that authority instead to the State's Executive.

PRAYER FOR RELIEF

73. Accordingly, Plaintiffs respectfully request that this Court issue a judgment that:
- A. Declares that Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act, 3 U.S.C. §§5 and 15, is unconstitutional because it violates the Twelfth Amendment on its face, Amend. XII, Constitution;
  - B. Declares that Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act, 3 U.S.C. §§5 and 15, is unconstitutional because it violates the Electors Clause. U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1, cl. 1;
  - C. Declares that Vice-President Pence, in his capacity as President of Senate and Presiding Officer of the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress, is subject solely to the requirements of the Twelfth Amendment and may exercise the exclusive authority and sole discretion in determining which electoral votes to count for a given State;

- D. Enjoins reliance on any provisions of the Electoral Count Act that would limit Defendant's exclusive authority and his sole discretion to determine which of two or more competing slates of electors' votes are to be counted for President;
- E. Declares that, with respect to competing slates of electors from the State of Arizona or other Contested States, or with respect to objection to any single slate of electors, the Twelfth Amendment contains the exclusive dispute resolution mechanisms, namely, that (i) Vice-President Pence determines which slate of electors' votes shall be counted, or if none be counted, for that State and (ii) if no person has a majority, then the House of Representatives (and only the House of Representatives) shall choose the President where "the votes [in the House of Representatives] shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote," U.S. CONST. amend. XII;
- F. Declares that, also with respect to competing slates of electors, the alternative dispute resolution procedure or priority rule in 3 U.S.C. § 15, is null and void insofar as it contradicts and replaces the Twelfth Amendment rules above by with an entirely different procedure in which the House and Senate each separately "decide" which slate is to be counted, and in the event of a disagreement, then only "the votes of the electors whose appointment shall have been certified by the executive of the State ... shall be counted," 3 U.S.C. § 15;

G. Enjoins the Defendant from executing his duties on January 6th during the Joint Session of Congress in any manner that is insistent with the declaratory relief set forth herein, and

H. Issue any other declaratory judgments or findings or injunctions necessary to support or effectuate the foregoing declaratory judgment.

74. Plaintiffs have concurrently submitted a motion for a speedy summary proceeding under FRCP Rule 57 to grant the relief requested herein as soon as practicable, and for emergency injunctive relief under FRCP Rule 65 thereof consistent with the declaratory judgment requested herein on that same date.

Dated: December 27, 2020

Respectfully submitted,

Howard Kleinhendler
Howard Kleinhendler Esquire
NY Bar No. 2657120
369 Lexington Ave., 12th Floor
New York, New York 10017
Tel: (917) 793-1188
Fax: (732) 901-0832
Email: howard@kleinhendler.com

/s/ William Lewis Sessions
William Lewis Sessions
Texas Bar No. 18041500
Sessions & Associates, PLLC
14591 North Dallas Parkway, Suite 400
Dallas, TX 75254
Tel: (214) 217-8855
Fax: (214) 723-5346 (fax)
Email: lsessions@sessionslaw.net

Lawrence J. Joseph
DC Bar No. 464777
Law Office of Lawrence J. Joseph
1250 Connecticut Ave, NW, Suite 700-1A
Washington, DC 20036
Tel: (202) 355-9452
Fax: 202) 318-2254
Email: ljoseph@larryjoseph.com

Julia Z. Haller
DC Bar No. 466921
Brandon Johnson
DC Bar No. 491370
Defending the Republic
601 Pennsylvania Ave., NW
Suite 900
South Building
Washington, DC 20004
Tel: (561) 888-3166
Fax: 202-888-2162
Email: hallerjulia@outlook.com
Email: brandoncjohnson6@aol.com

COUNSEL FOR PLAINTIFFS
LOUIE GOHMERT, TYLER BOWYER,
NANCY COTTLE, JAKE HOFFMAN,
ANTHONY KERN, JAMES R. LAMON,
SAM MOORHEAD, ROBERT
MONTGOMERY, LORAINÉ
PELLEGRINO, GREG SAFSTEN, KELLI
WARD and MICHAEL WARD

A JOINT RESOLUTION OF THE 54TH LEGISLATURE,

STATE OF ARIZONA

TO

THE 116TH CONGRESS, OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE, PRESIDING.

WHEREAS, it is the constitutional and legal obligation of the Legislature of the State of Arizona to ensure that the state's presidential electors truly represent the will of the voters of Arizona; and

WHEREAS, pursuant to the direction of Congress as set forth in United States Code, title 3, section 1 as authorized by Article II, section 1, clause 4 of the Constitution of the United States, and state law adopted pursuant thereto, Arizona conducted an election for presidential electors on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November of 2020—that is, on November 3, 2020; and

WHEREAS, that election was marred by irregularities so significant as to render it highly doubtful whether the certified results accurately represent the will of the voters; and

WHEREAS, Congress has further directed in U.S. Code, title 3, section 2 that when a state "has held an election for the purpose of choosing electors, and has failed to make a choice on the day prescribed by law, the electors may be appointed on a subsequent day in such manner as the legislature of such State may direct"; and

EXHIBIT A

WHEREAS, that provision implicitly recognizes that Article II, Section 1, Clause 2 of the U.S. Constitution grants to each state legislature, with stated limitations, the sole authority to prescribe the manner of appointing electors for that state; and

WHEREAS, the United States Supreme Court and other courts have explained that when a state legislature directs the manner of appointing electors, it does so pursuant to a grant of authority from the U.S. Constitution rather than by reason of any state constitutional or other legal provision; that this authority may be exercised by the legislature alone without other aspects of the normal lawmaking process; and that the state legislature's authority over the appointment of presidential electors is plenary and may be resumed at any time; and

WHEREAS, because U.S. Code, title 3, section 7 mandates that all presidential electors vote for President and Vice President of the United States on December 14, 2020, it is impossible to pursue the Legislature's preferred course of action, which would be for Arizona's voters to participate in a new and fair and free presidential election before that date; and

WHEREAS, in view of the facts heretofore recited, the Legislature is required to exercise its best judgment as to which slate of electors the voters prefer; and

WHEREAS, legal precedent exists where in 1960 the State of Hawaii sent an alternate slate of electors while the Presidential election was still in question in order to meet the deadline of selecting electors, and upon recount the alternate slate of electors' ballots were ultimately counted; and

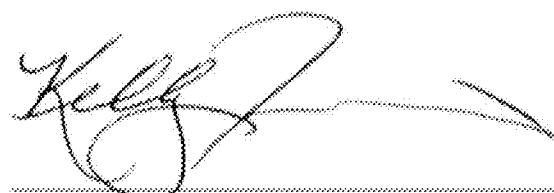

WHEREAS, the undersigned have an obligation to find the truth. For this reason, on several occasions since November 3, we state lawmakers have requested fact-finding hearings to include a comprehensive and independent forensic audit. At this time, no such audit has been authorized. This leaves the uncertainty of the election results in a state that requires further investigation and resolution; and

WHEREAS, the Senate Judiciary standing committee today called for a forensic audit of various election irregularities, ongoing litigation is currently active, and there are unresolved disputes by both the Legislature and at least one Presidential campaign, rendering the election inconclusive as of date of signing of this letter,

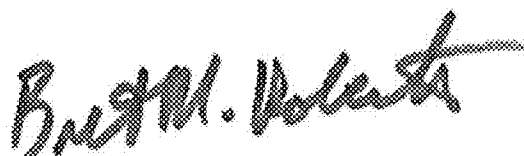

THEREFORE,

Be it resolved by the undersigned Legislators, members of the Arizona House and Senate, request that the alternate 11 electoral votes be accepted for to Donald J. Trump or to have all electoral votes nullified completely until a full forensic audit can be conducted. Be it further resolved that the United States Congress is not to consider a slate of electors from the State of Arizona until the Legislature deems the election to be final and all irregularities resolved

Signed this day, 14 December, 2020.

Senator Elect Kelly Townsend
Legislative District 16

Representative Bret Roberts
Legislative District 11

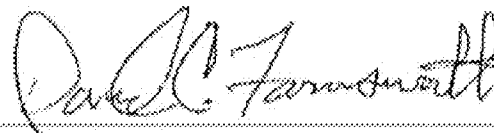

Senator Paul Boyer
Legislative District 20

Representative Kevin Payne
Legislative District 21

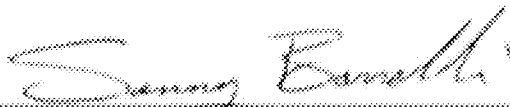

Representative Mark Finchem
Legislative District 11

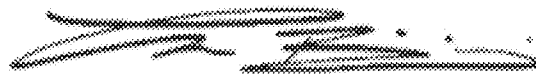

Senator David Farnsworth
Legislative District 16

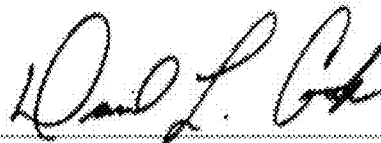

Senator Sonny Borrelli
Legislative District 5

Representative Leo Biasucci
Legislative District 5

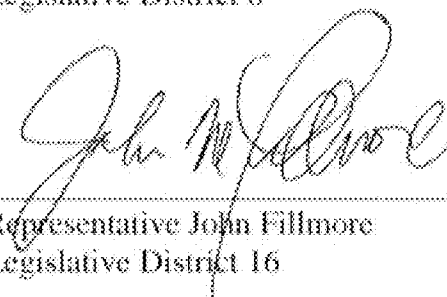

Representative Anthony Kern
Legislative District 20

Representative David Cook
Legislative District 8

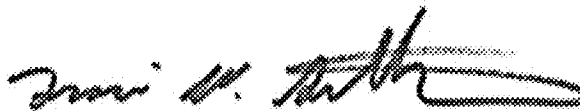

Senator Sylvia Allen
Legislative District 15

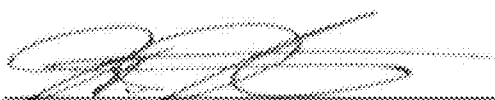

Representative John Fillmore
Legislative District 16

Senator Elect Nancy Barto
Legislative District 15

Representative Travis Grantham
Legislative District 12

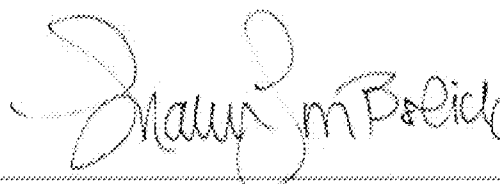

Majority Leader Warren Petersen
Legislative District 12

Representative Walter Blackman
Legislative District 6

Representative Steve Pierce
Legislative District 1

Representative Shawna Bolick
Legislative District 20

Representative Tony Rivero

Representative Noel Campbell

Sen. Hawley Will Object During Electoral College Certification Process On Jan 6

Wednesday, December 30, 2020

Today U.S. Senator Josh Hawley (R-Mo.) announced he will object during the Electoral College certification process on January 6, 2021. Senator Hawley will object to highlight the failure of some states, including notably Pennsylvania, to follow their own election laws as well as the unprecedented interference of Big Tech monopolies in the election. He will call for Congress to launch a full investigation of potential fraud and election irregularities and enact election integrity measures.

Democrats have previously objected during the certification process for the 2004 and 2016 Presidential elections.

Senator Hawley said, "Following both the 2004 and 2016 elections, Democrats in Congress objected during the certification of electoral votes in order to raise concerns about election integrity. They were praised by Democratic leadership and the media when they did. And they were entitled to do so. But now those of us concerned about the integrity of this election are entitled to do the same.

"I cannot vote to certify the electoral college results on January 6 without raising the fact that some states, particularly Pennsylvania, failed to follow their own state election laws. And I cannot vote to certify without pointing out the unprecedented effort of mega corporations, including Facebook and Twitter, to interfere in this election, in support of Joe Biden. At the very least, Congress should investigate allegations of voter fraud and adopt measures to secure the integrity of our elections. But Congress has so far failed to act.

"For these reasons, I will follow the same practice Democrat members of Congress have in years past and object during the certification process on January 6 to raise these critical issues."

Background On Previous Objections to Electoral College Vote Certification

In 2005, Senator Barbara Boxer and Representative Stephanie Tubbs Jones Objected to the Electoral College Votes from Ohio.

Stephanie Tubs-Jones Said, "I Raise This Objection Because I Am Convinced That We As A Body Must Conduct A Formal And Legitimate Debate About Election Irregularities." (C-SPAN

(<https://outreach.senate.gov/iqextranet/iqClickTrk.aspx?>

&cid=SenHawley&crop=14310.6298941.5866468.7119050&report_id=&redirect=https%3a%2f%2fwww.c-span.org%2fvideo%2f%3f185005-2%2fdebate-ohio-electoral-vote-objection&redir_log=266954022449514), 1/6/05, 3:10-3:20)

EXHIBIT A

12/30/2020

Sen. Hawley Will Object During Electoral College Certification Process On Jan 6 | Senator Josh Hawley

Boxer views her 2005 objection as "her proudest moment on the Senate floor," according to CNN. (CNN (https://outreach.senate.gov/iqextranet/iqClickTrk.aspx?

&cid=SenHawley&crop=14310.6298941.5866468.7119050&report\_id=&redirect=https%3a%2f%2fwww.cnn.com%2f2010/12/27/college-objection-bush-boxer%2findex.html&redir\_log=628933907465617), 12/27/2020)

In January 2005, 31 Congressional Democrats Voted To Reject Ohio's Electoral Votes. (CNN

(applewebdata://849C88A2-A8F5-4FBA-9175-C87F69402B4D/Bush%20carries%20Electoral%20College%20after%20delay), 1/6/05)

Nancy Pelosi Praised The 2005 Objections, Saying Democrats Were "Speaking Up For Their Aggrieved Constituents" During "Their Only Opportunity To Have This Debate While The Country Is Listening"

Nancy Pelosi Said "We Are Witnessing Democracy At Work" And "This Debate Is Fundamental To Our Democracy." "

[T]oday we are witnessing democracy at work. This is not, as some of our Republican colleagues have referred to it, sadly, frivolous. This debate is fundamental to our democracy." (C-SPAN (https://outreach.senate.gov/iqextranet/iqClickTrk.aspx?&cid=SenHawley&crop=14310.6298941.5866468.7119050&report\_id=&redirect=https%3a%2f%2fwww.c-span.org%2fvideo%2f%3f185005-2%2fdebate-ohio-electoral-vote-objection&redir\_log=266954022449514), 1/6/05, 32:49-33:08)

Pelosi Said Democrats Were "Speaking Up For Their Aggrieved Constituents, Many Of Whom May Have Been

Disenfranchised In This Process." "The Members of Congress who have brought this challenge are speaking up for their aggrieved constituents, many of whom may have been disenfranchised in this process. This is their only opportunity to have this debate while the country is listening, and it is appropriate to do so. If there were other venues of this caliber, we would have taken that opportunity. But this is the opportunity. We have a responsibility to take advantage of it." (C-SPAN (https://outreach.senate.gov/iqextranet/iqClickTrk.aspx?

&cid=SenHawley&crop=14310.6298941.5866468.7119050&report\_id=&redirect=https%3a%2f%2fwww.c-span.org%2fvideo%2f%3f185005-2%2fdebate-ohio-electoral-vote-objection&redir\_log=266954022449514), 1/6/05, 34:14-34:45)

- Pelosi Said "This Is Their Only Opportunity To Have This Debate While The Country Is Listening" And "We Have A Responsibility To Take Advantage Of It." (C-SPAN (https://outreach.senate.gov/iqextranet/iqClickTrk.aspx?&cid=SenHawley&crop=14310.6298941.5866468.7119050&report\_id=&redirect=https%3a%2f%2fwww.c-span.org%2fvideo%2f%3f185005-2%2fdebate-ohio-electoral-vote-objection&redir\_log=266954022449514), 1/6/05, 34:14-34:45)

Pelosi Said "Do Not Talk About This As A 'Conspiracy Theory.'" "[P]lease do not talk about this as a 'conspiracy theory.' It is not about that. It is not about conspiracy; it is about the Constitution of the United States." (C-SPAN (https://outreach.senate.gov/iqextranet/iqClickTrk.aspx?

&cid=SenHawley&crop=14310.6298941.5866468.7119050&report\_id=&redirect=https%3a%2f%2fwww.c-span.org%2fvideo%2f%3f185005-2%2fdebate-ohio-electoral-vote-objection&redir\_log=266954022449514), 1/6/05, 39:50-40:03)

In 2017, At Least Seven House Democrats Sought To Object To Electoral Votes In Favor Of President Trump:

- Jim McGovern Said "The Electors Were Not Lawfully Certified, Especially Given The Confirmed And Illegal Activities Engaged By The Government Of Russia." (CNN (https://outreach.senate.gov/iqextranet/ClickTrk.aspx?&cid=SenHawley&crop=14310.6298941.5866468.7119050&report\_id=&redirect=https%3a%2f%2fwww.cnn.com%2fcollege-vote-count-objections%2findex.html&redir\_log=106450293475627), 1/6/17)
- Raul Grijalva Objected After North Carolina's Tally. (CNN (https://outreach.senate.gov/iqextranet/ClickTrk.aspx?&cid=SenHawley&crop=14310.6298941.5866468.7119050&report\_id=&redirect=https%3a%2f%2fwww.cnn.com%2fcollege-vote-count-objections%2findex.html&redir\_log=106450293475627), 1/6/17)
- Pramila Jayapal Objected To Georgia's Vote Certificate. (CNN (https://outreach.senate.gov/iqextranet/ClickTrk.aspx?&cid=SenHawley&crop=14310.6298941.5866468.7119050&report\_id=&redirect=https%3a%2f%2fwww.cnn.com%2fcollege-vote-count-objections%2findex.html&redir\_log=106450293475627), 1/6/17)
- Jamie Raskin Objected To 10 Of Florida's 29 Electoral Votes, Saying "They Violated Florida's Prohibition Against Dual Office Holders." (CNN (https://outreach.senate.gov/iqextranet/ClickTrk.aspx?&cid=SenHawley&crop=14310.6298941.5866468.7119050&report\_id=&redirect=https%3a%2f%2fwww.cnn.com%2fcollege-vote-count-objections%2findex.html&redir\_log=106450293475627), 1/6/17)
- Maxine Waters Objected. (CNN (https://outreach.senate.gov/iqextranet/ClickTrk.aspx?&cid=SenHawley&crop=14310.6298941.5866468.7119050&report\_id=&redirect=https%3a%2f%2fwww.cnn.com%2fcollege-vote-count-objections%2findex.html&redir\_log=106450293475627), 1/6/17)

Issues

General (/issues/general)

(/HAWLEY-WONT-CONSENT-NDAA-< PREVIOUSVOTE-WITHOUT-VOTE-2000-DIRECT-ASSISTANCE)

(<https://www.facebook.com/SenatorHawley/>)

(<https://twitter.com/SenHawleyPress>)

(https://www.youtube.com/channel/UCMzt8xq6qQ3XQ\_DINfx0-w)

(<https://www.instagram.com/senatorhawley/>)

Sign up for Updates
EXHIBIT B

The Washington Post

Democracy Dies in Darkness

Sen. Hawley announces he will contest certification of electoral college vote

By John Wagner

Dec. 30, 2020 at 11:24 a.m. EST

Sen. Josh Hawley (R-Mo.) announced Wednesday that he would object next week when Congress convenes to certify the electoral college vote, a move that all but ensures at least a short delay in cementing President-elect Joe Biden's victory.

President Trump has repeatedly suggested congressional intervention as a last-ditch way to reverse the election results, despite opposition from Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) and other leading Republicans, who have conceded it is bound to fail and will put their members in an awkward position.

In a statement, Hawley said he feels compelled to put a spotlight on purported election irregularities.

"At the very least, Congress should investigate allegations of voter fraud and adopt measures to secure the integrity of our elections. But Congress has so far failed to act," Hawley said.

Any member of the House, joined by a member of the Senate, can contest the electoral votes on Jan. 6. The challenge prompts a floor debate followed by a vote in each chamber.

Trump will inevitably lose that vote, given that Democrats control the House and a number of Senate Republicans have publicly recognized Biden's victory, including Sen. Mitt Romney (Utah), who has called Trump's refusal to accept the election dangerous.

Even in the unlikely event that Trump were to prevail in the Senate, where Vice President Pence would be in position to cast a tie-breaking vote if needed, the challenge still would fail given the House vote.

Still, a number of Republican members of the House, led by Rep. Mo Brooks (R-Ala.) and encouraged by the president, have said they plan to challenge votes in swing states where they have made unfounded allegations that the vote was marred by fraud.

Prior to Hawley's announcement, one incoming Republican senator, newly elected Tommy Tuberville of Alabama, has said he is considering signing on, as well.

Hawley has been mentioned as a potential 2024 presidential candidate, and his move is certain to appeal to Trump supporters and parts of the Republican base.

WP NEWSLETTER WEEKDAYS

EXHIBIT C

A 5-minute breakdown to track the presidential transition Sign Up →

Trump, nevertheless, has played up what is usually a ceremonial milestone as a potential turning point in his quest to reverse the election results.

“See you in Washington, DC, on January 6th. Don’t miss it,” Trump tweeted Sunday.

Meanwhile, a lawsuit filed Sunday by U.S. Rep. Louie Gohmert (R-Tex.) and several Arizona Republicans against Pence attempts to get a federal judge to expand Pence’s power to affect the outcome.

Rosalind S. Helderman and Tom Hamburger contributed to this report.

1/1/2021

Sen.-elect Tuberville suggests he'll back effort on challenge Electoral College vote | TheHill

Sen.-elect Tuberville suggests back effort on challenge Electoral College vote

BY TAL AXELROD | 12/30/20 01:11 PM EST

Just In...

15,831 SHARES

SHARE

Bidens honor frontline workers in NYE address: 'We owe them, we owe them, we owe them'

ADMINISTRATION | 12/30/20 01:11 PM EST

Florida reports first case of new, contagious coronavirus strain

STATE WATCH | 12/30/20 01:11 PM EST

NY restaurant that hosted Republican club's holiday party gets liquor license revoked

STATE WATCH | 12/30/20 01:11 PM EST

Roberts commends courthouses for their ability to adapt amid the pandemic

LEGAL | 12/30/20 01:11 PM EST

Photos show Wuhan, once epicenter of pandemic, crowded for New Year's celebrations

NEWS | 12/30/20 01:11 PM EST

Trump hotel in DC raises room rates for Biden inauguration

NEWS | 12/30/20 01:11 PM EST

Indiana law going into effect Jan. 1 will require women to have ultrasound before abortion

HEALTHCARE | 12/30/20 01:11 PM EST

GOP lawmaker criticizes Trump,

Sen.-elect Tommy Tuberville (R-Ala.) indicated in a video that surfaced Thursday that that he thinks the Senate should support a challenge to the results of the Electoral College, which certified President-elect Joe Biden's victory this week.

Tuberville suggested he would back a challenge Rep. Mo Brooks (R-Ala.) has vowed to bring against the vote. If a senator joins Brooks, it would require the House and Senate to debate and then vote on the issue.

"You see what's coming. You've been reading about it in the House. We're going to have to do it in the Senate," Tuberville said in the video taken by liberal activist Lauren Windsor at a rally for Sens. Kelly Loeffler (R-Ga.) and David Perdue (R-Ga.) in Georgia.

It appeared that Tuberville believed he was speaking with another rallygoer rather than a liberal activist, and Windsor asked the senator-elect what he could do to "fight to make this election right." The video was taken Wednesday night.

Lauren Windsor
@lswindor

BREAKING: Defying McConnell, Sen-elect Tuberville suggests he will challenge Electoral College, while stumping in Georgia

EXHIBIT D

1/1/2021

Sen.-elect Tuberville suggests he'll back effort on challenge Electoral College vote | The Hill

colleagues for 'trying to discredit' the election

www.fox.com

VIEW ALL

9:38 AM Dec 17, 2020

64.3K 23.6K people are tweeting about this

Fox News | Dec 17, 2020

McConnell signals Senate has votes to...

Tuberville's campaign did not immediately respond to a request from comment from The Hill, but earlier this week Tuberville's campaign chairman had said that the senator-elect might back the Brooks effort.

"I think that he [Tuberville] and Ted Cruz are the two best candidates to do this," said Stan McDonald, Tuberville's campaign chairman, during an interview on WYNN radio in Huntsville on Tuesday. "I don't know yet if or when he will do this. He's very seriously considering it."

Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) pleaded with Republican senators this week to dismiss the drive to challenge the results, which has been spearheaded by Brooks. McConnell indicated that forcing a debate would ultimately lead to a contentious vote to swat away the challenge, which would divide Republicans from President Trump, who remains wildly popular with the GOP base despite his loss.

HP 312X Black Toner Cartridge, High Yield...

Sponsored | STATista

GOP Georgia senators throw support behind...

"I think that there was encouragement on the phone for us to accept the result, as much as it's not what we, you know, would have envisioned for the next four years, and to try to do what's best for American people, which is to look forward," Sen. Shelley Moore Capito (R-W.Va.) said after a conference call with McConnell.

If the vote took place, it would not change the outcome of the election as there is not enough support in the House or Senate for it to be successful.

Noem rules out Thune challenge after Trump...

Trump and his allies have launched a sprawling legal campaign to overturn the election results on claims that widespread voter fraud cost him reelection. But virtually all of the lawsuits have been thrown out, at times by Trump-appointed judges, for lack of evidence or standing.

"We got to grab a hold and hold on. We have no choice. Listen to me now, we have no choice but to win this election. They're going to try to steal it, they're going to try to buy it, they're going to do everything they can, lie, cheat, steal to win this election, like they did in the presidential election," Tuberville told the rally crowd in Georgia.

GOP senator criticizes 'ambitious politicians' for 'dangerous'...

Hawley jams GOP with Electoral College fight

Sen. John Thune (S.D.), the No. 2 Senate Republican, told reporters Thursday he hopes Tuberville does not vote to have a debate on the Electoral College, saying, "it's time ... to move on."

1/1/2021

Sen.-elect Tuberville suggests he'll back effort on challenge Electoral College vote | TheHill

"The fact of the matter is that's been litigated over and over... it's time to be done with this," Thune said. "I would hope that we wouldn't have members of the Senate who would decide that that makes sense. I don't think it's a good decision right now and I don't think it's good for the country."

Jordain Carney contributed to this report.

TAGS SHELLEY MOORE CAPITO MITCH MCCONNELL KELLY LOEFFLER DAVID PERDUE DONALD TRUMP JOHN THUNE JOE BIDEN MO BROOKS TED CRUZ TOMMY TUBERVILLE

THE HILL 1625 K STREET, NW SUITE 900 WASHINGTON DC 20006 | 202-628-8500 TEL | 202-628-8503 FAX
THE CONTENTS OF THIS SITE ARE ©2021 CAPITOL HILL PUBLISHING CORP., A SUBSIDIARY OF NEWS COMMUNICATIONS, INC.

1/1/2021

At Least 140 House Republicans Expected To Challenge Electoral College Result

ELECTION 2020 | Dec 31, 2020, 05:31pm EST | 32,917 views

At Least 140 House Republicans Expected To Challenge Electoral College Result

Andrew Solender Forbes Staff

Business

I write about politics and the Biden transition.

TOPLINE As many as 140 Republican House members are expected to object to certification of President-elect Joe Biden's Electoral College victory as part of President Donald Trump's continued efforts to overturn his reelection loss.

WASHINGTON, DC - DECEMBER 10: House Minority Leader Kevin McCarthy (R-CA), surrounded fellow

EXHIBIT E

Page 1 of 1

1/1/2021

At Least 140 House Republicans Expected To Challenge Electoral College Result

- ◆ “21 House Republicans tell me they expect as of now that at least 140 Republican Members of the House will on Jan. 6 object to and vote against the Electoral College results,” tweeted CNN host Jake Tapper on Thursday.
  - ◆ Rep. Denver Riggleman (R-Va.) told Forbes a “staggering number” of his Republican House colleagues will likely object, adding, “140 certainly seems possible... I wouldn’t be surprised if it were a little higher.”
  - ◆ Riggleman said he initially expected around a hundred objections but that “pressure [is] being exerted” on House Republicans – as evidenced by state delegations putting out joint statements vowing to object to the vote.
  - ◆ “I would be getting pressure right now,” said Riggleman – who lost renomination to a right-wing challenger in June – adding that the vote to object “keeps their base happy, they know it’ll keep the conference happy and they know it’s not gonna win anyway.”
  - ◆ Riggleman said there is “not a whole lot of excitement for that vote” because most of his colleagues don’t believe in the systemic fraud Trump has alleged, echoing Sen. Ben Sasse, who said, “When we talk in private, I haven’t heard a single Congressional Republican allege that the election results were fraudulent – not one.”
  - ◆ Just one senator has confirmed they will join the effort: Sen. Josh Hawley (R-Mo.) said Wednesday he plans to object because “some states, particularly Pennsylvania, failed to follow their own state election laws” --
-

For a limited

1/1/2021

At Least 140 House Republicans Expected To Challenge Electoral College Result

Hawley's plan to object is in defiance of Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell, who has instructed members of his caucus not to object to the electoral college because the eventual vote on whether to sustain objections would put Republican senators in a difficult position. Hawley was absent from a call with Republican senators Thursday morning in which McConnell hoped to challenge him on his position, according to Politico and Axios. Sen. Pat Toomey (R-Pa.) also opposes Hawley's move.

TANGENT

Just 49 Republican members of Congress have publicly acknowledged Biden as president-elect -- 25 House members and 24 senators, including McConnell and Toomey. Biden said during an interview with Stephen Colbert earlier this month that several Republicans called him to ask for time to recognize his victory because they are in a "tough spot" politically.

BIG NUMBER

9. That's how many objections Biden himself -- as President of the Senate -- shut down during certification of Trump's victory at a joint session of Congress in 2017. All the objections came from House Democrats alleging Russian meddling, voter suppression and civil rights violations, but because none had a senator backing them, Biden repeatedly said the objections "cannot be entertained" and that there was "no debate."

KEY BACKGROUND

The last time a senator and a House member teamed up to challenge an electoral college vote was 2005, when Sen. Barbara Boxer and Rep. Stephanie Tubbs Jones challenged President George W. Bush's 2004 victory in Ohio on the basis of civil rights violations. The objections precipitated two hours of debate in the House and one hour in the Senate before being rejected by wide margins in both chambers.

Forbes.com | 12/31/2020

1/1/2021

At Least 140 House Republicans Expected To Challenge Electoral College Result

in debate but will undoubtedly be rejected by the Democrat-controlled House – and, likely, the Republican-controlled Senate. Thus, certification of the result will be delayed but not thwarted.

Get Expert Analysis As Breaking News Happens

Sign up for Topline email alerts for breaking news of the day.

Sign up

You may opt out any time. Terms and Conditions and Privacy Policy

Follow me on Twitter. Send me a secure tip.

Andrew Solender

Follow

I am a news reporter covering politics and the Biden transition. I have previously worked for MSNBC and Chronogram Magazine. I attended Vassar College and the London... Read More

Reprints & Permissions

ADVERTISEMENT

Image limited to 100px

Erick G. Kaardal (WI0031)
Special Counsel for Amistad Project of
Thomas More Society
Mohrman, Kaardal & Erickson, P.A.
150 South Fifth Street, Suite 3100
Minneapolis, Minnesota 55402
Telephone: (612) 341-1074
Facsimile: (612) 341-1076
Email: kaardal@mklaw.com
Attorneys for Plaintiffs

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

---

Case No. _____

WISCONSIN VOTERS ALLIANCE
E3530 Townline Road
Kewaunee, Wisconsin 54216;

PENNSYLVANIA VOTERS ALLIANCE
1621 Huddel Avenue Lower
Chichester, Pennsylvania, 19061;

GEORGIA VOTERS ALLIANCE
151 Main Street
Senior, Georgia 30276;

ELECTION INTEGRITY FUND
1715 Northumberland Drive
Rochester Hills, Michigan 48309;

ARIZONA VOTER INTEGRITY ALLIANCE
8019 East Tuckey Lane
Scottsdale, Arizona 85250;

LYNIE STONE
10410 East Prince Road
Tucson, Arizona 85749;

BARON BENHAM
8019 East Tuckey Lane
Scottsdale, Arizona 85250;

DEBI HAAS
5530 Rivers Edge Drive
Commerce, Michigan 48382;

---

---

BRENDA SAVAGE
1715 Northumberland Drive
Rochester Hills, Michigan 48309;

MATTHEW DADICH
1621 Huddel Avenue
Lower Chichester, Pennsylvania 19061;

LEAH HOOPES
241 Sulky Way
Chadds Ford, Pennsylvania 19317;

RON HEUER
E3530 Townline Road
Kewaunee, Wisconsin 54216;

RICHARD W. KUCKSDORF
W2289 Church Drive
Bonduel, Wisconsin 54107;

DEBBIE JACQUES
1839 South Oneida Street
Green Bay, Wisconsin 54304;

JOHN WOOD
151 Main Street
Senior, Georgia 30276;

SENATOR SONNY BORRELLI
2650 Diablo Dr
Lake Havasu City AZ 86406

REPRESENTATIVE WARREN PETERSON
2085 E Avenida del Valle Ct
Gilbert AZ 85298

REPRESENTATIVE MATTHEW MADDOCK
1150 South Milford Road
Milford, Michigan 48381;

REPRESENTATIVE DAIRE RENDON,
4833 River Wood Road
Lake City, Michigan 49651;

REPRESENTATIVE DAVID STEFFEN
715 Olive Tree Court
Green Bay, Wisconsin 54313;

---

---

REPRESENTATIVE JEFF L. MURSAU

4 Oak Street
Crivitz, Wisconsin 54114;

SENATOR WILLIAM T. LIGON

90 Bluff Road South
White Oak, Georgia 31568; and

SENATOR BRANDON BEACH

3100 Brierfield Road
Alpharetta, GA 30004

Plaintiffs,

v.

VICE PRESIDENT MICHAEL RICHARD PENCE,
in his official capacity as President of the United States Senate,
Office of the Vice President
1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W.
Washington, DC 20500;

U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
U.S. Capitol
First St SE
Washington, DC 20004;

U.S. SENATE,
U.S. Capitol
First St SE
Washington, DC 20004;

ELECTORAL COLLEGE,
U.S. Capitol
First St SE
Washington, DC 20004;

GOVERNOR TOM WOLF OF PENNSYLVANIA,
in his official capacity,
508 Main Capitol Building
Harrisburg, PA 17120;

SPEAKER BRYAN CARTER OF THE PENNSYLVANIA
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, in his official capacity,
139 Main Capitol Building
PO Box 202100
Harrisburg, PA 17120-2100;

---

---

SENATE MAJORITY LEADER JAKE CORMAN
OF THE PENNSYLVANIA SENATE,
in his official capacity,
Senate Box 203034
Harrisburg, PA 17120-3034;

GOVERNOR GRETCHEN WHITMER OF MICHIGAN,
in her official capacity,
111 S Capitol Avenue
Lansing, Michigan 48933;

SPEAKER LEE CHATFIELD OF THE MICHIGAN
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
in his official capacity,
124 N Capitol Avenue
Lansing, Michigan 48933;

SENATE MAJORITY LEADER MIKE SHIRKEY
OF THE MICHIGAN SENATE,
in his official capacity,
S-102 Capitol Building
Lansing, Michigan 48933;

GOVERNOR TONY EVERS OF WISCONSIN,
in his official capacity,
P.O. Box 7863
Madison, Wisconsin 53707;

SPEAKER ROBIN VOS OF THE WISCONSIN
STATE ASSEMBLY,
in his official capacity,
960 Rock Ridge Road
Burlington, Wisconsin 53105;

SENATE MAJORITY LEADER HOWARD MARKLEIN
OF THE WISCONSIN SENATE,
in his official capacity,
PO Box 7882
Madison, Wisconsin 53707;

GOVERNOR BRIAN KEMP OF GEORGIA,
in his original capacity,
111 State Capitol
Atlanta, Georgia 30334;

---

---

SPEAKER DAVID RALSTON OF THE GEORGIA HOUSE
OF REPRESENTATIVES,
in his official capacity,
332 State Capitol
Atlanta, Georgia 30334;

PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE BUTCH MILLER OF THE GEORGIA SENATE,
in his official capacity,
321 State Capitol
Atlanta, Georgia 30334;

GOVERNOR DOUG DUCEY OF ARIZONA,
in his official capacity,
1700 W. Washington Street
Phoenix, Arizona 85007;

SPEAKER RUSSELL BOWERS OF THE
ARIZONA HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
in his official capacity,
1700 West Washington
Room 223
Phoenix, Arizona 85007; and

SENATE MAJORITY LEADER RICK GRAY
OF THE ARIZONA SENATE,
in his official capacity,
1700 West Washington
Room 301
Phoenix, Arizona 85007,

Defendants.

---

COMPLAINT

---

The above-named Plaintiffs Wisconsin Voters Alliance, Pennsylvania Voters Alliance,
Georgia Voters Alliance, Election Integrity Fund, Arizona Election Integrity Alliance, Lynie Stone,
Baron Benham, Debi Haas, Brenda Savage, Matthew Dadich, Leah Hoopes, Ron Heuer, Richard W.
Kucksdorf, Debbie Jacques, John Wood, Sonny Borrelli, Warren Peterson, Matthew Maddock,

Daire Rendon, David Steffen, Jeff L. Mursau, William T. Ligon and Brandon Beach, for their complaint allege as follows:

INTRODUCTION

A. State Legislatures are Prohibited from Fulfilling Their Constitutional Responsibility.

This lawsuit seeks protection of voters' rights in Presidential elections. Voters in Presidential elections have a constitutional right to have their respective state legislatures meet after the election and certify their votes and, based on the votes, certify the Presidential electors whose votes are counted in Congress to elect the President and Vice President.

In drafting Article II, the Framers of the Constitution reasoned state legislatures should select Presidential electors so as “to afford as little opportunity as possible to tumult and disorder” and to place “every practicable obstacle [to] cabal, intrigue, and corruption,” including “foreign powers” that might try to insinuate themselves into our elections.<sup>1</sup>

Article II limited Congress's role in selecting the President and provided no constitutional role for Governors. Yet, at present state legislatures are unable to meet. This inability to meet has existed from election day and continues through various congressionally set deadlines for the appointment of presidential electors and the counting of presidential elector votes. The states legislatures of Pennsylvania, Michigan, Wisconsin, Georgia and Arizona (“Defendant States”) are unable to review the manner in which the election was conducted, are prevented from exercising their investigative powers and are unable to vote, debate or as a body speak to the conduct of the election. In sum, State legislatures are impotent to respond to what happened in the November 3, 2020 election.

---

<sup>1</sup> Hamilton, Alexander. Federalist No. 68, at 410-11 (C. Rossiter, ed. 1961).

This impotency is caused by the ministerial functions of Congress and the Vice President regarding the counting of the Presidential Elector's votes and also by state law prohibiting the legislative body from meeting without a supermajority or governor or leadership agreement during a time they can respond to what happened in the election. Accordingly, even if the state legislatures were aware of clear fraud by the executive branch – the state legislatures could not meet unless a supermajority, or a governor, or legislative leadership agreed they should meet.

This wholesale delegation of legislative authority operates contrary to the Constitution by inviting “cabal, intrigue and corruption” rather than operating to prevent the same. State legislative bodies have been relegated to observing the ministerial functions of a small group of executive officials who have refused various requests by legislators to be called into special session. Consequently, the legislative bodies as a whole of Defendant States have not engaged in any open discussion, review, investigation, or debate regarding the 2020 general election.

B. A Cabal of Public-Private Partnerships Directed the Manner of the Election Contrary to State Law Creating Disorder the State Legislatures were Unable to Address.

The management of elections is a core government function of Congress and state legislatures whose responsibilities are constitutionally defined.<sup>2</sup> “Safeguarding the integrity of the electoral process is a fundamental task of the Constitution, and [the courts] must be keenly sensitive to signs that its validity may be impaired.”<sup>3</sup>

This is especially so when state legislatures have abrogated their responsibilities through the improper delegation of their authority and when a cabal of state and local executives have partnered with private interests to undermine state statutes and plans designed to protect the integrity of the election.

---

<sup>2</sup> U.S. Const. Art. II, Section 1, Cl. 1; U.S. Const. Art. 4, Section 1, Cl. 1.

<sup>3</sup> Johnson v. FCC, 829 F.2d 157, 163 (D.C. Cir. 1987).

“Confidence in the integrity of our electoral processes is essential to the functioning of our participatory democracy”<sup>4</sup> and due to the wholesale delegation of legislative responsibility only judicial action restoring legislative authority can check unlawful conduct by the involved state executives.

C. Unprecedented Private Monies Purchased Local Election Offices and Dictated Election Management Encouraging the Evasion of State Laws and Government Partisan Involvement.

On March 27, 2020 President Trump signed into law the Coronavirus Aid, Relief, and Economic Security Act (CARES) which provided $400 million to states to manage the 2020 elections during the pandemic.<sup>5</sup> This funding joined previous monies provided by the Help America Vote Act (HAVA) to afford states sufficient federal funding to assist in managing the election.

The CARES Act funding, however, was exceeded by one individual who passed $400 million to local and state executives through a private charity that dictated how the recipient local government officials would manage the election.<sup>6</sup>

These dictates included the unprecedented use of drop boxes, mobile ballot retrieval, the location and number of polling places or satellite locations, and the consolidation of urban counting centers. Election judges, inspectors and poll workers were paid by these private funds and the tabulating machines purchased with private monies.<sup>7</sup>

The private funds flowed through the Center for Tech and Civic Life (CTCL) and were targeted to facilitate voter turnout of certain demographics in geographic areas dominated by one political

---

<sup>4</sup> Purcell v. Gonzalez, 549 U.S. 1, 4 (2006).

<sup>5</sup> Coronavirus Aid, Relief & Econ. Security Act, Pub. L. 116-136, §15003, 134 Stat. 281, 531.

<sup>6</sup> Mark Zuckerberg donated $400M to help local election offices during pandemic, INDEPENDENT, Nov. 11, 2020. <https://www.independent.co.uk/news/world/americas/mark-zuckerberg-donation-election-facebook-covid-b1721007.html>.

<sup>7</sup> Id.

party.<sup>8</sup> CTCL recruited specific cities to apply for the grants and provided grants to select cities to assist those cities in their grant applications.<sup>9</sup>

The funding to local election officials in Democratic strongholds was provided simultaneously with executive decisions to close in-person voting locations in areas not receiving CTCL grants. The CTCL funding and local executive official acceptance created a two-tier election system in which geographic areas benefitting one political party were flush with cash used to increase voter opportunities and turnout, including one city's no-bid purchase of a $250,000 Winnebago for local voter turnout efforts. The geographic areas dominated by the other party, however, experienced greater difficulty voting due to COVID emergency orders.<sup>10</sup>

For example, CTCL provided funds to 100% of the Pennsylvania counties carried by Hillary Clinton in 2016, including over $10 million to Philadelphia County.<sup>11</sup> The charity required the heavily Democratic county to establish 800 "satellite" voting locations and implement the drop box collection of ballots. In neighboring Democratic Delaware County, Pennsylvania one drop box was available for every 4,000 voters and one drop box was placed for every four-square-miles.

On the other hand, President Trump carried 59 of 67 Pennsylvania counties in 2016. CTCL contributed to 22% of those counties providing much smaller grants. There was one drop box for every 72,000 voters and every 1,159 square-miles in those counties.

---

<sup>8</sup> See, e.g., (city of Philadelphia grant communications), Unconstitutional? Wisconsin city election officials sought private money to register voters, <https://justthenews.com/politics-policy/elections/documents-show-wi-municipal-authorities-sought-use-grant-money-voter>; City of Green Bay – Center for Tech and Civic Life grant agreement (July 24, 2020).

<sup>9</sup> See Approval by Center for Tech and Civic Life of grant request for City of Racine, App. 247-48; see also Petition for Permanent Injunction and Declaratory Judgment on behalf of the State of Louisiana, App. 1504-1536.

<sup>10</sup> See Grant Spending Approval by City of Racine for Purchase of Winnebago, App. 1492; see also Carlson Report, App. 31-38.

<sup>11</sup> See Approval by Center for Tech and Civic Life of grant request for City of Philadelphia, App. 1493-1503.

CTCL funding produced similar results in the other Defendant States. Moreover, the use of drop boxes materially breached the chain of custody of ballots. For example, ballot transfer forms in Cobb County, Georgia show 78% of the 89,000 absentee ballots were not transported as Georgia election rules require.<sup>12</sup> Additionally, the use of drop boxes and changes in the signature comparison requirements for absentee ballots were approved by the Georgia Secretary of State without legislative approval.<sup>13</sup>

The presence of CTCL funds in other states facilitated conduct contrary to state law as well. In Wisconsin, at CTCL's request, five cities used CTCL seed monies to draft the "Wisconsin Safe Voting Plan 2020," so named despite the failure of the city leaders to include any other Wisconsin election officials. The plan, and communications relating to the plan, provided for extensive voter turnout efforts, considered state voter identification laws an obstacle and required the use of drop boxes, curbside voting and salaries for additional staffing."<sup>14</sup>

CTCL funding was used to "dramatically expand voter and community education and outreach, particularly to historically disenfranchised residents."<sup>15</sup>

---

<sup>12</sup> Ballot Transfer Forms Show 78 Percent of 89,000 Absentee Ballots from Drop Boxes in Cobb County, Georgia Were Not Transported to the Registrar 'Immediately' As the Election Code Requires – The Georgia Star News, <https://georgiastarnews.com/2020/12/11/ballot-transfer-forms-show-78-percent-of-89000-absentee-ballots-from-drop-boxes-in-cobb-county-were-not-transported-to-registrar-immediately-as-election-code-rule-requires/>.

<sup>13</sup> Georgia Secretary of State and State Election Board Changed Absentee Ballot Signature Verification and Added Drop Boxes Without State Legislature's Approval, <https://georgiastarnews.com/2020/12/16/georgia-secretary-of-state-and-state-election-board-changed-absentee-ballot-signature-verification-and-added-drop-boxes-without-state-legislatures-approval/>.

<sup>14</sup> Wisconsin Safe Voting Plan 2020, at 4 (submitted to the Center for Tech and Civic Life by the cities of Green Bay, Kenosha, Madison, Milwaukee and Racine)(June 15, 2020). The report states "[v]oting absentee by mail has been complicated by a fairly recent imposition of state law requiring voters to provide an image of their valid photo ID prior to first requesting an absentee ballot." Id., at 6. The CTCL funding provided "voter navigators" and professional witnesses to increase turnout and $2.5 million to "overcome these particular barriers." Id. at 8-11. The cities received over $2 million for additional staffing, including pay for poll workers, election "chief inspectors." Id., at 11-12 and 18-19. An additional $216,500 was provided for drop boxes. Id., at 10-11.

<sup>15</sup> Id., at 13.

CTCL funding enabled urban areas in defendant states to consolidate counting facilities. This consolidation precipitated the exclusion of Republican officials from the ability to view the management, handling and counting of absentee and mail-in ballots.

Election transparency is a prophylactic to fraud. Each defendant state has laws requiring members of both major political parties be present in the location of the receipt, management and counting of ballots. Such common-sense policy is necessary due to the significant afforded election officials.

Local election officials determine the ballots to be received, the ballots eligible to be counted and supervise the count of the ballots. Legislatures have wisely determined the best way to bring accountability to such decisions is to require the participation, or at least the observation, of both political parties.

Yet, these laws were not followed. In Wayne County, Michigan, CTCL paid poll workers boarded up the windows to the counting facility to prevent observation.<sup>16</sup> Inside Detroit's TCF Center, election inspectors were receiving, counting and "curing" absentee ballots. The "curing" process involves discerning the voting intent of an absent voter and reflecting that intent on a newly ballot which is then cast and counted.

Michigan law requires representatives of both major political parties to view the process and then sign a form stating the "curing" was completed consistent with voter intent.<sup>17</sup> Yet, Republican inspectors were not appointed in Wayne County. Moreover, Republican poll watchers were kept at such a distance in the cavernous TCF Center they were unable to view the conduct of the inspectors at the 134 counting tables operating in the center.<sup>18</sup> City election officials later argued that allowing republicans in the “place” of the counting satisfied state law despite the “place” these poll watchers were required to stand was so remote they could not observe the activity of the democrat party officials.

---

<sup>16</sup> There's a Simple Reason Workers Covered Windows at a Detroit Vote-Counting Site, THE NEW YORK TIMES (Nov. 5, 2020) (<https://www.nytimes.com/2020/11/05/technology/michigan-election-ballot-counting.html>, retrieved Dec. 20, 2020) (windows covered to prevent "photographs").

<sup>17</sup> See Mich. Comp. Laws §168.674(2) (Thomson/West 2006).

Urban election officials in other Defendant States which received CTCL funding also restricted or prohibited Republican poll watchers from viewing the receipt, management, curing and counting of ballots.<sup>19</sup> Local election officials in each state represented here received significant funds from CTCL and each also engaged in election improprieties with local officials acting contrary to state law.

State hostility to Republican participation in reviewing the management of the 2020 general election manifested in threats to Republican officeholders and their counsel in Michigan. On December 14, 2020 Governor Gretchen Whitmer mobilized the state police to secure the state capitol to prevent Republican legislators entry to the building while allowing Democrat legislators to enter.<sup>20</sup>

---

<sup>18</sup> See, e.g., Watch, Detroit Absentee Ballot Counting Chaos As Workers Block Windows, Bar Observers, BREITBART (Nov. 4, 2020) (<https://www.breitbart.com/politics/2020/11/04/watch-detroit-absentee-ballot-counting-chaos-as-workers-block-windows-bar-observers/>, retrieved Dec. 12, 2020); Chaos erupts at TCF Center as Republican vote challengers cry foul in Detroit, DETROIT FREE PRESS (Nov. 4, 2020) (<https://www.freep.com/story/news/politics/elections/2020/11/04/tcf-center-challengers-detroit-michigan/6164715002/>, retrieved Dec. 20, 2020).

<sup>19</sup> See, e.g., Affidavit of Gregory Stenstrom (date); ‘The Steal is On’ in Pennsylvania: Poll Watchers Denied Access, Illegal Campaigning at Polling Locations, Breitbart (Nov. 3, 2020) (<https://www.breitbart.com/politics/2020/11/03/the-steal-is-on-in-pennsylvania-poll-watchers-denied-access-illegal-campaigning-at-polling-locations/>, retrieved Dec. 20, 2020);

<sup>20</sup> Michigan governor Gretchen Whitmer and legislative leadership initially claimed COVID-19 necessitated the closing of the Michigan capitol building on December 14, 2020, the congressional deadline for the certification of the presidential electors. Shirkey: ‘Bad Judgment’ to keep Michigan Capitol closed during electors meeting, <https://www.detroitnews.com/story/news/politics/2020/12/14/shirkey-bad-judgment-capitol-closed-during-electors-meeting/6536863002/>. Later, Governor Whitmer claimed the closing occurred due to a security threat. Michigan State House, Senate close over ‘threats of violence’ during Electoral College Meeting, December 14, 2020, <https://www.usatoday.com/story/news/politics/2020/12/14/michigan-legislative-buildings->

Moreover, Democrat Michigan Attorney General Dana Nessel announced she was criminally investigating Republican legislators who voiced concerns regarding the election outcome and threatened those officials with criminal prosecution for “bribery, perjury, and conspiracy.”<sup>21</sup>

General Nessel also tweeted a claim “GOP efforts to overturn President Trump’s electoral defeat...and [t]hreats against election officials are domestic terrorism. My message to them is ‘We are looking for you. We will find you. You will be held accountable.’”<sup>22</sup> The Michigan State Police whom the Governor ordered to bar Republicans from entering the capitol on the fourteenth<sup>23</sup>, however, announced they “did not recommend the closure of legislative offices ahead of the Electoral College meeting and they were not aware of ‘any credible threats of violence related to Michigan....’”<sup>24</sup>

General Nessel continued her threats with calls for ethics investigations of Republican attorneys. She also chilled free speech during the election by issuing “cease-and-desist letters” to political organizations engaged in political speech.<sup>25</sup>

---

closed-security-concerns-covid-19/6536919002/, see also <https://www.npr.org/sections/biden-transition-updates/2020/12/14/946243439/michigan-gov-whitmer-addresses-security-threat-to-electoral-college-vote>. Despite both claims, Democrats were allowed in the state capitol on December 14, 2020 while republican legislators were prohibited from entering. <https://www.prnewswire.com/news-releases/got-freedom-video-shows-police-preventing-gop-electors-in-michigan-from-performing-lawful-duties-301192474.html>. The Michigan State Police, however, revealed that they acted on the Governor’s orders and that the state police were not aware of any credible threat to the capitol or its occupants. <https://nbc25news.com/news/local/michigan-house-and-senate-offices-closed-tomorrow-because-of-safety-concerns>.

<sup>21</sup> Michigan attorney general ponders criminal probes of state and local officials who bend to Trump’s will on overturning election results, https://www.washingtonpost.com/politics/michigan-attorney-general-canvassing-board-lawmakers/2020/11/20/87d19ce6-2b65-11eb-8fa2-06e7cbb145c0\_story.html.

<sup>22</sup> <https://twitter.com/dananessel/status/1338494176883847170>.

<sup>23</sup> Live Update: Denied to Perform Constitutional Duty in Michigan, GOT FREEDOM? (December 14, 2020) (<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=6nH6ZvfAD2w>, (video of entry denial)).

<sup>24</sup> State Police say there were not aware of any credible threats to the capitol on Monday, <https://nbc25news.com/news/local/michigan-house-and-senate-offices-closed-tomorrow-because-of-safety-concerns>.

<sup>25</sup> Nessel issues cease-desist letters to those spreading misinformation during election, <https://www.wxyz.com/news/election-2020/nessel-issues-cess-and-desist-letters-to-those-spreading-misinformation-during-election>.

Accordingly, the Plaintiffs who are voter groups, voters and state legislators in Pennsylvania, Michigan, Wisconsin, Georgia and Arizona file this complaint seeking to restore the constitutional authority and duty of the legislative bodies of their respective states in the selection of presidential electors to correct “the tumult and disorder”<sup>26</sup> and lawlessness

The federal laws regarding the Presidential electors, codified at 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15 are constitutionally unauthorized and violate Presidential voters’ rights to state legislative post-election certification. Article II of the Constitution establishes a non-delegable process where at least state legislative post-election certification of the state’s Presidential electors is constitutionally required for Presidential elector votes to be counted in the election of the President and Vice President. In contradiction, the federal laws, particularly 3 U.S.C. §§ 5 and 6, establish a different process where Presidential electors are designated by the Governor of each Defendant State without state legislative post-election certification. Then, 3 U.S.C. § 15 authorizes the Vice President and Congress to count those votes in contradiction of the constitutional obligation to only count votes of Presidential electors who have state legislative post-election certification.

Further, the Defendant States have legally acquiesced to the federal laws by enacting statutes transferring post-election certification from the state legislatures to state executive branch officials: Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B) (Arizona Secretary of State), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B) (Georgia Secretary of State and Governor), Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 168.46 (Michigan State Board of Canvassers and Governor), Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) (Wisconsin Elections Commission); and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166 (Secretary of Commonwealth and Governor). These state laws also violate Article II which establishes the state legislative prerogative to post-election certification of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors.

---

<sup>26</sup> Federalist No. 68, at 410-11.

Plaintiffs hope a constitutional crisis can be avoided. There is time before the January 20, 2021 inaugural of the President and Vice President for the Court to require the state legislatures to meet and consider post-election certification of the Presidential electors. The people's representatives comprising the state legislatures of the respective states must be afforded the opportunity to act as a whole to fulfill their constitutional responsibilities and to restore faith in the election process.

Moreover, this Court has continuing jurisdiction, after this Presidential election, because the federal laws and state laws violating Article II have continuing force applied to future Presidential elections.

JURISDICTION

1. The Court has jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C § 1331 (federal question), 28 U.S.C. § 1343 (civil rights and elective franchise), 28 U.S.C. § 2201 (declaratory judgment), 28 U.S.C. § 1651 (“All Writs Act”), 42 U.S.C. § 1983 (civil rights) and D.C. Code § 16-3501, et seq (ouster of national officials).

2. The Court has venue under 28 U.S.C. § 1391 because many of the Defendants reside or are located in the District of Columbia and a substantial part of the events or omissions giving rise to the claim occurred or will occur there.

PARTIES

A. Plaintiffs

3. Plaintiffs Wisconsin Voters Alliance, Pennsylvania Voters Alliance, Georgia Voters Alliance, Election Integrity Forum and Arizona Election Integrity Alliance are election integrity entities and associations which have a purpose of promoting election integrity in Pennsylvania, Wisconsin, Georgia, Michigan and Arizona, respectively. They do not support any particular candidate for any public office.

4. Plaintiffs Lynie Stone and Baron Benham are residents, voters and taxpayers of Arizona. They are members of the Arizona Election Integrity Alliance.

5. Plaintiffs Debi Haas and Brenda Savage are residents, voters and taxpayers of Michigan. They are members of the Election Integrity Forum.

6. Plaintiffs Matthew Dadich and Leah Hoopes are residents, voters and taxpayers of Pennsylvania. They are members of the Pennsylvania Voters Alliance.

7. Plaintiffs Ron Hueur, Richard W. Kucksdorf and Debbie Jacques are residents, voters and taxpayers of Wisconsin. They are members of the Wisconsin Voters Alliance.

8. Plaintiff John Wood is a resident, voter and taxpayer of Georgia. He is a member of the Georgia Voters Alliance.

9. Plaintiff Senator Sonny Borrelli member of the Arizona Senate.

10. Plaintiff Representative Warren Peterson is a member of the Arizona House of Representatives.

11. Plaintiff Representative Matthew Maddock is a member of the Michigan House of Representatives.

12. Plaintiff Representative Daire Rendon is a member of the Michigan House of Representatives.

13. Plaintiff Representative David Steffen is a member of the Wisconsin State Assembly.

14. Plaintiff Representative Jeff L. Mursau is a member of the Wisconsin State Assembly.

15. Plaintiff Senator William T. Ligon is a member of the Georgia Senate.

16. Plaintiff Senator Brandon Beach is a member of the Georgia Senate.

17. All of the individual Plaintiffs are residents, voters and taxpayers of their respective states.

18. All of the individual Plaintiffs voted in the November 3, 2020 election for President and Vice President and plan to vote in future Presidential elections.

B. Defendants

19. Vice President Michael Richard Pence is a Defendant sued in his official capacity as President of the United States Senate. As such, Pence is identified as having legal obligations under the Constitution and federal law regarding opening and counting the ballots of Presidential electors for President and Vice President.

20. The U.S House of Representatives, U.S. Senate, and Electoral College are Defendants. They are constituted under the Constitution and federal law.

21. Governor Tom Wolf of Pennsylvania is a Defendant sued in his official capacity. He has legal responsibilities under federal and state law in post-election certification of Presidential electors.

22. Speaker Bryan Carter of the Pennsylvania House of Representatives and Senate Majority Leader Jake Corman of the Pennsylvania Senate, are sued in their official capacities. They and their respective houses of their state legislature have legal responsibilities under federal and state law in post-election certification of Presidential electors.

23. Governor Gretchen Whitmer of Michigan is a Defendant sued in her official capacity. She has legal responsibilities under federal and state law in post-election certification of Presidential electors.

24. Speaker Lee Chatfield of the Michigan House of Representatives and Senate Majority Leader Mike Shirkey of the Michigan Senate are sued in their official capacities. They and their respective houses of their state legislature have legal responsibilities under federal and state law in post-election certification of Presidential electors.

25. Governor Tony Evers of Wisconsin is a Defendant sued in his official capacity. He has legal responsibilities under federal and state law in post-election certification of Presidential electors.

26. Speaker Robin Vos of the Wisconsin State Assembly and Senate Majority Leader Howard Marklein of the Wisconsin Senate are sued in their official capacities. They and their respective houses of their state legislature have legal responsibilities under federal and state law in post-election certification of Presidential electors.

27. Governor Brian Kemp of Georgia is a Defendant sued in his official capacity. He has legal responsibilities under federal and state law in post-election certification of Presidential electors.

28. Speaker David Ralston of the Georgia House of Representatives and President Pro Tempore Butch Miller of the Georgia Senate are sued in their official capacities. They and their respective houses of their state legislature have legal responsibilities under federal and state law in post-election certification of Presidential electors.

29. Governor Doug Ducey of Arizona is a Defendant sued in his official capacity. He has legal responsibilities under federal and state law in post-election certification of Presidential electors.

30. Speaker Russell Bowers of the Arizona House of Representative and Senate Majority Leader Rick Gray of the Arizona Senate are sued in their official capacities. They and their respective houses of their state legislature have legal responsibilities under federal and state law in post-election certification of Presidential electors.

STANDING

31. As voters, the Plaintiffs have legal standing to bring these constitutional claims to ensure that Presidential elections are constitutionally conducted by Defendants.<sup>27</sup>

32. The Plaintiffs claim that Article II of the U.S. Constitution provides a voter a constitutional right to the voter's Presidential vote being certified as part of the state legislature's post-election certification of Presidential electors. Absence such certification, the Presidential electors' votes from that state cannot be counted by the federal Defendants toward the election of President and Vice President. Because the Plaintiffs' votes are not counted as part of the constitutionally-required state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors, the Defendants are causing the Plaintiffs to be disenfranchised. See Baten v. McMaster, 967 F.3d 345, 352–53 (4th Cir. 2020) (voters who vote in Presidential elections have standing on claims of government causing disenfranchisement).

33. When Defendants violate the Constitution as it relates to Presidential elections in the Defendant, all voters in Presidential elections suffer an injury-in-fact caused by the Defendants. Voters in a Presidential election, in this instance, have an injury-in-fact different than the public because when they voted and they had an interest that the election in which they voted is constitutionally-conducted. The same is true of future elections. Finally, the Court can redress the Plaintiffs' injuries by issuing a declaratory judgment and accompanying injunction to enjoin the Defendants' unconstitutional conduct.

34. As voters, each Plaintiff has a fundamental right to vote.<sup>28</sup> Thus, each Plaintiff has a recognized protectable interest. As the U.S. Supreme Court has long recognized, a person's right to vote is “individual and personal in nature.”<sup>29</sup> Thus, “voters who allege facts showing disadvantage to themselves as individuals have standing to sue” to remedy that disadvantage.<sup>30</sup> “Safeguarding the integrity of the electoral process is a fundamental task of the Constitution, and [the courts] must be keenly sensitive to signs that its validity may be impaired.”<sup>31</sup> “Confidence in the integrity of our electoral processes is essential to the functioning of our participatory democracy.”<sup>32</sup>

---

<sup>27</sup> See Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560–61 (U.S. 1992).

<sup>28</sup> Reynolds v. Sims, 377 U.S. 533, 554–55, 562 (1964).

35. By federal and state election laws, the federal and state governments have agreed to protect the fundamental right to vote by maintaining the integrity of an election contest as fair, honest, and unbiased to maintain the structure of the democratic process.<sup>33</sup> The voters, in turn, agree to accept the government’s announcement of the winner of an election contest, including federal elections, to maintain the integrity of the democratic system of the United States. “No right is more precious in a free country than that of having a voice in the election of those who make the laws under which, as good citizens, we must live.”<sup>34</sup> But the right to vote is the right to participate in an electoral process that is necessarily structured to maintain the integrity of the democratic system.”<sup>35</sup>

36. This arrangement constitutes a “social contract” between the voter and the government as an agreement among the people of a state about the rules that will define their government.<sup>36</sup> Social contract theory provided the background against which the Constitution was adopted. “Because of this social contract theory, the Framers and the public at the time of the

---

<sup>29</sup> Id. 377 U.S. at 561.

<sup>30</sup> Gill v. Whitford, 138 S. Ct. 1916, 1929 (2018).

<sup>31</sup> Johnson v. FCC, 829 F.2d 157, 163 (D.C. Cir. 1987).

<sup>32</sup> Purcell v. Gonzalez, 549 U.S. 1, 4 (2006).

<sup>33</sup> Timmons v. Twin Cities Area New Party, 520 U.S. 351, 364 (1997) (“States certainly have an interest in protecting the integrity, fairness, and efficiency of their ballots and election processes as means for electing public officials.”).

<sup>34</sup> Burdick v. Takushi, 504 U.S. 428, 441 (1992) quoting Wesberry v. Sanders, 376 U.S. 1, 17 (1964).

<sup>35</sup> Id. (citations omitted).

<sup>36</sup> Dumonde v. U.S., 87 Fed. Cl. 651, 653 (Fed. Cl. 2009) (“Historically, the Constitution has been interpreted as a social contract between the Government and people of the United States,” citing Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch 137, 5 U.S. 137, 176 (1803).

revolution and framing conceived governments as resulting from an agreement among people to provide a means for enforcing existing rights.”<sup>37</sup> “The aim of a social contract theory is to show that members of some society have reason to endorse and comply with the fundamental social rules, laws, institutions, and/or principles of that society. Put simply, it is concerned with public justification, i.e., ‘of determining whether or not a given regime is legitimate and therefore worthy of loyalty.’”<sup>38</sup>

37. The uniformity of election laws is part of that contract to protect the right to vote. Hence, the right to vote is intertwined with the integrity of an election process. The loss of the integrity of the election process renders the right to vote meaningless.<sup>39</sup> Here, the Defendant States’ election irregularities and improprieties so exceed the razor-thin margins to cast doubt on the razor-thin margins of victory and, thus, threaten the social contract itself.

38. The same will happen in future elections too if it is not stopped.

39. The Article II social contract with the voters is, in part, the assurance of their state legislature voting for post-election certification of Presidential electors. Arising from the social contract is the integrity of the election process to protect the voter’s right to vote. In the state legislatures perpetually delegating post-election certification of Presidential electors to election officials—as a core government function—the state legislatures, required by federal law, delegated

---

<sup>37</sup> Greg Serienko, Social Contract Neutrality and the Religion Clauses of the Federal Constitution, 57 Ohio St. L. J. 1263, 1269.

<sup>38</sup> Contemporary Approaches to the Social Contract, <https://plto.stanford.edu/entries/contractarianism-contemporary/> (last visited Dec. 21, 2020).

<sup>39</sup> “Legitimacy is the crucial currency of government in our democratic age. Only elections that are transparent and fair will be regarded as legitimate...But elections without integrity cannot provide the winners with legitimacy, the losers with security and the public with confidence in their leaders and institutions.”<https://www.kofiannanfoundation.org/supporting-democracy-and-elections-with-integrity/uganda-victory-without-legitimacy-is-no-victory-at-all/> (Last visited Dec. 8, 2020).

post-election certification to state executive branch officials when Article II requires the state legislatures to conduct post-election certification of every voter's vote.

40. This social contract is what is personally at risk for the Plaintiffs in the outcome of the controversy.<sup>40</sup> As much as the government has a compelling interest in fair and honest elections with accompanying laws and regulations to ensure that objective to preserve the democratic system of government, so too the voter has an interest in state and local election officials violating the election laws in favor of a pre-determined result.

41. Furthermore, the voter has a compelling interest in the maintenance of a democratic system of government under the Ninth Amendment through the election process, beyond controversies regarding governmental attempts to interfere with the right to vote. Here, the voter did not enter into a contract with the state election official to give them discretion for state election irregularities and improprieties—of any kind—regardless of how benign they might be. The voter's social contract is with the state legislature—who under Article II must conduct post-election certification of the Presidential electors. The Article II requirement of the state legislature casting a post-election certification vote for Presidential electors is the voters' constitutional "insurance policy" against the risk of state and local election officials engaging in election irregularities and improprieties in favor of a pre-determined outcome.

42. The voters have been willing to accept laws and regulations imposed upon an election process to serve the government's compelling interest in the integrity of that process. So, while it is fair to create public governmental regulatory schemes to promote the compelling interests to protect the right to vote, and therefore, a voter's right of associational choices under the First

---

<sup>40</sup> Gill, 138 S.Ct. at 1923.

Amendment,<sup>41</sup> those rights are infringed when the state legislatures abdicate the constitutionally-required role of post-election certification of Presidential electors.<sup>42</sup>

43. For federal elections, state legislatures under Article II have no authority to delegate post-election certification of Presidential electors to state executive branch officials. Yet, they did. That is the harm for the voters. It is the Electors Clause that gives state legislatures the exclusive right to post-election certification of Presidential electors—not state executive branch officials.

44. This lawsuit is not about voter fraud. The harm here is the loss of a voter remedy under Article II conducted as a core governmental function under federal and state election laws to ensure the integrity of the election. In turn, the acceptance of the outcome without state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors interferes with the social contract between the voter and the government—causing injury to the voter.

BACKGROUND

A. Legal background

45. Under the Supremacy Clause, the “Constitution, and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof ... shall be the supreme law of the land.”<sup>43</sup>

46. “The individual citizen has no federal constitutional right to vote for electors for the President of the United States unless and until the state legislature chooses a statewide election as the means to implement its power to appoint members of the electoral college.”<sup>44</sup>

---

<sup>41</sup> Anderson v. Celebrezze, 460 U.S. 780, 788–89 (1983).

<sup>42</sup> Id.

<sup>43</sup> U.S. Const. Art. VI, cl. 2.

<sup>44</sup> Bush v. Gore, 531 U.S. 98, 104 (citing U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1).

47. State legislatures have plenary power to set the process for appointing presidential electors: “Each State shall appoint, in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a Number of Electors.”<sup>45</sup>

48. At the time of the Founding, most States did not appoint electors through popular statewide elections. In the first presidential election, six of the ten States that appointed electors did so by direct legislative appointment.<sup>46</sup>

49. In the second presidential election, nine of the fifteen States that appointed electors did so by direct legislative appointment.<sup>47</sup>

50. In the third presidential election, nine of sixteen States that appointed electors did so by direct legislative appointment. Id. at 31. This practice persisted in lesser degrees through the Election of 1860.

51. Though “[h]istory has now favored the voter,” Bush, 531 U.S. at 104, “there is no doubt of the right of the legislature to resume the power [of appointing presidential electors] at any time, for it can neither be taken away nor abdicated.”<sup>48</sup>

52. Given the State legislatures’ constitutional primacy in selecting presidential electors, the ability to set rules governing the casting of ballots and counting of votes cannot be usurped by other branches of state government—nor the federal government.

53. The Framers of the Constitution decided to select the President through the Electoral College “to afford as little opportunity as possible to tumult and disorder” and to place

---

<sup>45</sup> U.S. Const. Art. II, §1, cl. 2; see also Bush v. Gore, 531 U.S. at 104 (“[T]he state legislature’s power to select the manner for appointing electors is plenary.” (emphasis added)).

<sup>46</sup> McPherson v. Blacker, 146 U.S. 1, 29-30 (1892).

<sup>47</sup> Id. at 32.

<sup>48</sup> McPherson, 146 U.S. at 35 (emphasis added); cf. 3 U.S.C. § 2 (“Whenever any State has held an election for the purpose of choosing electors, and has failed to make a choice on the day prescribed by law, the electors may be appointed on a subsequent day in such a manner as the legislature of such State may direct.”).

“every practicable obstacle [to] cabal, intrigue, and corruption,” including “foreign powers” that might try to insinuate themselves into our elections.<sup>49</sup> Federalist No. 68, at 410-11 (C. Rossiter, ed. 1961) (Madison, J.).

54. The Plaintiffs constitutional claims in this lawsuit are principally based on one sentence in Article II of the U.S. Constitution. The sentence has eighty-five words. The constitutional sentence provides:

He shall hold his office during the term of four years, and, together with the Vice President, chosen for the same term, be elected, as follows: Each state shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors, equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress: but no Senator or Representative, or person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States, shall be appointed an elector.

55. The Plaintiffs’ claims, based on this constitutional, imperative, sentence, are that post-election certification of Presidential votes and post-election certification of Presidential electors are exclusively state legislative decisions; accordingly, Governors, federal courts and state courts have no constitutionally-permitted role in post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors.

56. Accordingly, the Plaintiffs claim that 3 U.S.C. § 5, 6 and 15 and state laws (such as Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B), Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.46, Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166) eviscerating these state legislative prerogatives, every four years, are unconstitutional.

57. Under Article II, Congress lacks legal authority to enact laws interfering with the state-by-state state legislative post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors as it has done with 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15. There are textual and structural arguments for these federal statutes being unconstitutional.<sup>50</sup> The Plaintiffs claim that 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15 are unconstitutional interferences with the state legislative prerogatives guaranteed by the Constitution.

---

<sup>49</sup> See, supra, Note 14.

58. Analogously, under Article II, the state legislatures lack legal authority to enact state laws which are a perpetual and wholesale delegation of post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors to state executive branch officials—as they have done in Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B) (Arizona Secretary of State), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B) (Georgia Secretary of State and Governor), Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 168.46 (Michigan State Board of Canvassers and Governor), Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) (Wisconsin Elections Commission); and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166 (Secretary of Commonwealth and Governor).

59. Article II, and its non-delegation doctrine, left it to the state legislatures to “direct” post-election certification of Presidential electors—not to “delegate” post-election certifications, perpetually and in a wholesale fashion, to state executive branch officials as a ministerial duty. There are textual and structural arguments for these state statutes being unconstitutional. Plaintiffs claim that Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B), Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 168.46, Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b), 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166 are unconstitutional delegation of the state legislative prerogatives of post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors.

60. Further, the state constitutions of the Defendant States do not require the state legislature to meet for post-election certification of the Presidential electors. Arizona’s, Georgia’s and Pennsylvania’s Constitutions have the state legislature adjourned until January 2021.<sup>51</sup> Michigan’s and Wisconsin's Constitutions permit the state legislature to be in session, but do not require a joint session of the state legislature to affirmatively vote for Presidential post-election certifications.<sup>52</sup>

---

<sup>50</sup> Vasan Kesavan, Is the Electoral Count Act Unconstitutional, 80 N.C. L. Rev. 1653, 1696-1793 (2002).

<sup>51</sup> Ariz. Const. Art. IV, Part 2, Sec. 3; Ga. Const. Art. III, § IV, ¶ 1(a). Pa. Const. Art. II, § 4.

61. Based on this legal background, Plaintiffs claim, under the Article II, that if there is no state legislative post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors in the Defendant States, then those Defendant States' Presidential electors votes, not so certified, cannot be counted by the federal Defendants for President and Vice President under Article II.

B. The Defendants, except state legislatures, are involved in post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors or counting their ballots to elect the President and Vice President.

62. Under 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 12, each of the Defendants, except the state legislatures, have a role to play in state post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of a state's Presidential electors or counting of the Presidential Electors' votes.

63. Under 3 U.S.C. § 15, "Congress shall be in session on the sixth day of January succeeding every meeting of electors. The Senate and House of Representatives shall meet in the Hall of the House of Representatives at the hour of 1 o'clock in the afternoon on that day."

64. Under 3 U.S.C. § 15, Vice President Michael Richard Pence is the presiding officer on January 6, 2021: "and the President of the Senate shall be their presiding officer."

65. Vice President Pence, the U.S. Senate and the U.S. House of Representatives are Defendants presume under 3 U.S.C. §§ 5 and 6, that each state's Presidential elector votes because they are designated by the Governor of each Defendant State can be counted without state legislative post-election certification.

66. 3 U.S.C. § 5 provides:

If any State shall have provided, by laws enacted prior to the day fixed for the appointment of the electors, for its final determination of any controversy or contest concerning the appointment of all or any of the electors of such State, by judicial or other methods or procedures, and such determination shall have been made at least six days before the time fixed for the meeting of the electors, such determination made pursuant to such law so existing on said day, and made at least six days prior to said time of meeting of the electors, shall be conclusive, and shall govern in the counting of the electoral votes as provided in the Constitution, and as hereinafter regulated, so far as the ascertainment of the electors appointed by such State is concerned.

---

<sup>52</sup> Mich. Const. Art. IV, § 13; Wis. Const. Art. IV, § 11.

67. 3 U.S.C. § 6 provides:

It shall be the duty of the executive of each State, as soon as practicable after the conclusion of the appointment of the electors in such State by the final ascertainment, under and in pursuance of the laws of such State providing for such ascertainment, to communicate by registered mail under the seal of the State to the Archivist of the United States a certificate of such ascertainment of the electors appointed, setting forth the names of such electors and the canvass or other ascertainment under the laws of such State of the number of votes given or cast for each person for whose appointment any and all votes have been given or cast; and it shall also thereupon be the duty of the executive of each State to deliver to the electors of such State, on or before the day on which they are required by section 7 of this title to meet, six duplicate-originals of the same certificate under the seal of the State; and if there shall have been any final determination in a State in the manner provided for by law of a controversy or contest concerning the appointment of all or any of the electors of such State, it shall be the duty of the executive of such State, as soon as practicable after such determination, to communicate under the seal of the State to the Archivist of the United States a certificate of such determination in form and manner as the same shall have been made; and the certificate or certificates so received by the Archivist of the United States shall be preserved by him for one year and shall be a part of the public records of his office and shall be open to public inspection; and the Archivist of the United States at the first meeting of Congress thereafter shall transmit to the two Houses of Congress copies in full of each and every such certificate so received at the National Archives and Records Administration.

68. The Plaintiffs claim that the presumption is constitutionally incorrect; under Article II, Defendants Vice President Pence, the U.S. House of Representatives and the United States Senate can only open up and count Presidential elector ballots if the state legislature has affirmatively voted to certify the Presidential electors; otherwise, the votes of the Presidential electors cannot be counted. The Plaintiffs claim that the Vice President and U.S. Congress act unconstitutionally in this election and future elections when they count votes of Presidential electors where the respective state legislature has not affirmatively voted in favor of post-election certification.

69. Similarly, the Defendant States' executives, Governor Tom Wolf of Pennsylvania, Governor Gretchen Whitmer of Michigan, Governor Tony Evers of Wisconsin, Governor Brian Kemp of Georgia, and Governor Doug Ducey of Arizona under 3 U.S.C. § 6 and their respective state's laws, have designated the Presidential electors under the assumption that state executive branch certification is all that is required.<sup>53</sup>

70. But, Governor Tom Wolf of Pennsylvania, Governor Gretchen Whitmer of Michigan, Governor Tony Evers of Wisconsin, Governor Brian Kemp of Georgia, and Governor Doug Ducey of Arizona are constitutionally mistaken because the designated by the Governor of each Defendant State cannot cure that the Presidential electors are without state legislative post-election certification. Until the state legislature certifies the Presidential electors, the respective Governor's designation under 3 U.S.C. § 6 and their respective state's laws have no legal effect.

71. Absent the state legislative post-election certification required by Article II, the Governor's designation of Presidential electors has no legal effect because their votes cannot be counted by the Vice President, U.S. Senate and U.S. House of Representatives.

72. Finally, Article II requires the Defendants' state legislative leaders to act to vote on post-election certification of the Presidential electors. But, instead, the state legislatures violate this constitutional duty because of their state laws which are a perpetual and wholesale delegation of post-election certifications to state executive branch officials—as they have done in Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B) (Arizona Secretary of State), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B) (Georgia Secretary of State and Governor), Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 168.46 (Michigan State Board of Canvassers and Governor), Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) (Wisconsin Elections Commission); and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166 (Secretary of Commonwealth and Governor).

---

<sup>53</sup> See 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166; Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 168.46; W.S.A. § 7.70; Ga. Code Ann., § 21-2-499(b); Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212.

73. The Plaintiffs claim that Article II, and its non-delegation doctrine, permanently left it to the state legislatures to “direct” post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors, not to delegate post-election certifications, perpetually and in a wholesale fashion, to state executive branch officials as a ministerial duty.

74. In this way, the Defendant States’ legislative leaders, including Speaker Bryan Carter of the Pennsylvania House of Representatives, Senate Majority Leader Jake Corman of the Pennsylvania Senate, Speaker Lee Chatfield of the Michigan House of Representatives, Senate Majority Leader Mike Shirkey of the Michigan Senate, Speaker Robin Vos of the Wisconsin State Assembly, Senate Majority Leader Howard Marklein of the Wisconsin Senate, Speaker David Ralston of the Georgia House of Representatives, Senate President Pro Tempore Butch Miller of the Georgia Senate, Speaker Russell Bowers of the Arizona House of Representatives, and Senate Majority Leader Rick Gray of the Arizona Senate are violating their duties under Article II by not voting on post-election certification of the Presidential electors so their votes can constitutionally count.

75. State legislative post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors are part of constitutionally-protected voting rights. Everyone who votes—distinguishable from those who don’t—have a constitutionally-protected interest in state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors. The Defendants violate those voting rights by counting ballots of Presidential electors without the constitutionally-required state legislative post-election certification.

C. Presidential post-election court proceedings—like the 2000 Bush v. Gore litigation, the 2020 Texas original action and the 2020 thirty post-election lawsuits in Defendant States—are in constitutional error and unnecessarily politicize the federal and state courts in a national way.

76. The Presidential post-election court proceedings—like the 2000 Bush v. Gore litigation, the 2020 Texas original action and the 2020 thirty post-election lawsuits in Defendant

States—are in constitutional error and unnecessarily politicize the federal and state courts—and in a nationwide way. Under Article II, all of those Presidential post-election cases should have been dismissed for lack of jurisdiction—and the plaintiffs should have been instructed to file their Presidential election contests with their respective state legislatures.

77. The Defendant States have election contest or recount laws, which apply to Presidential elections, but unconstitutionally preclude state legislative post-election certifications of Presidential votes and Presidential electors: Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-672; Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-521; Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.862; Wis. Stat. § 9.01; and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3351.

78. Interestingly, the Pennsylvania laws have a state legislative post-election certification process for its Governor and Lieutenant Governor elections—but not for President and Vice President. 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3312, et seq.

D. In 2000, the U.S. Supreme Court engaged in a Presidential post-election litigation in Florida.

79. In 2000, the U.S. Supreme Court engaged in Presidential post-election litigation in Florida. Bush v. Gore, 531 U.S. 98 (2000).

80. Plaintiffs claim, under Article II, that this post-election case in 2000 likely should have been dismissed for lack of jurisdiction with instructions for the Plaintiffs to file their election claims with the Florida state legislature.

E. In 2020, approximately thirty post-election lawsuits are filed in Defendants States regarding election official errors and improprieties.

81. Approximately thirty post-election lawsuits regarding Pennsylvania, Michigan, Wisconsin, Georgia and Arizona election official errors and improprieties were filed.<sup>54</sup>

---

<sup>54</sup>See “Postelection lawsuits related to the 2020 United States presidential election,” found at https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Postelection\_lawsuits\_related\_to\_the\_2020\_United\_States\_presidential\_election#Wood\_v.\_Raffensperger (last visited: Dec. 15, 2020). This complaint’s citations to the appendix, principally, detail lawsuit allegations found in these Pennsylvania, Michigan, Wisconsin, Georgia and

82. Plaintiffs claim, under Article II, that these post-election cases should have been dismissed for lack of jurisdiction with instructions that the Plaintiffs should file such claims with their respective state legislatures in Pennsylvania, Michigan, Wisconsin, Georgia and Arizona.

F. In 2020, Texas sued Pennsylvania, Michigan, Wisconsin and Georgia in the U.S. Supreme Court to adjudicate election irregularities and improprieties.

83. On December 7, 2020, Texas filed an original action in the U.S. Supreme Court, Case No. 20O155, against Pennsylvania, Michigan, Wisconsin and Georgia for election irregularities and improprieties. On December 9, Missouri and 16 other states filed a motion for leave to file an amicus curiae brief in support of Texas. On December 10, U.S. Representative Mike Johnson and 105 other members submitted a motion for leave to file amicus brief in support of Texas. On December 11, the U.S. Supreme Court dismissed the original action in a text order:

The State of Texas’s motion for leave to file a bill of complaint is denied for lack of standing under Article III of the Constitution. Texas has not demonstrated a judicially cognizable interest in the manner in which another State conducts its elections. All other pending motions are dismissed as moot. Statement of Justice Alito, with whom Justice Thomas joins: In my view, we do not have discretion to deny the filing of a bill of complaint in a case that falls within our original jurisdiction. See Arizona v. California, 589 U. S. ____ (Feb. 24, 2020) (Thomas, J., dissenting). I would therefore grant the motion to file the bill of complaint but would not grant other relief, and I express no view on any other issue.<sup>55</sup>

84. Plaintiffs claim, under Article II, that this post-election case filed in the U.S. Supreme Court should have been dismissed for lack of jurisdiction with instructions that voter in each state could file their respective claims with their respective state legislatures in Pennsylvania, Michigan, Wisconsin and Georgia.

---

Arizona lawsuits alleging election official errors and improprieties. In Defendants’ states, voter allegations exist which allege that the election officials’ errors and improprieties exceed the razor-thin margins of Presidential contests—as further herein.

<sup>55</sup> Plaintiffs agree that the State of Texas lacked standing, but the original action itself begs the question, “Is the U.S. Supreme Court the final adjudicator for certification of Presidential electors?” The Plaintiffs’ answer is no; the respective state legislatures are the final determiner of post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors—and, in a non-delegable way.

G. The Presidential electors for Biden and Trump in the Defendant States voted on December 14, but none of the Presidential Electors received state legislative post-election certification.

85. Under 3 U.S.C. §§ 5 and 6, the Presidential electors for Biden and Trump met and voted in their Defendant States on December 14.

86. The Presidential electors for Biden in the Defendant States were certified by state executive branch officials in the Defendant States under 3 U.S.C. §§ 5 and 6 and the respective state laws.

87. Neither the Presidential electors for Biden nor the Presidential electors for Trump in the Defendant States received a state legislative post-election affirmative vote for certification.

88. The Presidential electors for Biden in the Defendant States voted for Biden as President and Harris as Vice President.

89. The Presidential electors for Trump in the Defendant States voted for Trump as President and Pence as Vice President.<sup>56</sup>

90. Plaintiffs claim that none of these Presidential electors' votes should be counted by federal Defendants in the election of President and Vice President until the Presidential electors receive from their respective state legislatures an affirmative vote for post-election certification.

H. Under federal and state law, in the Defendant States, the respective state legislatures do not vote on post-election certification of Presidential electors.

91. Congress has enacted 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15 which significantly restrict state legislatures' constitutional prerogative to post-election certification of Presidential electors.

92. In turn, the state legislatures in the Defendant States have enacted state laws which are a perpetual and wholesale delegation of post-election certification to state executive branch officials—as they have done in Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B) (Arizona Secretary of State), Ga. Code

---

<sup>56</sup> See Michigan Trump Electors Certificate, Appendix 1471.

Ann. § 21-2-499 (B) (Georgia Secretary of State and Governor), Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 168.46 (Michigan State Board of Canvassers and Governor), Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) (Wisconsin Elections Commission); and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166 (Secretary of Commonwealth and Governor).

93. Further, the state constitutions of the Defendant States fail to require the state legislature to meet for post-election certification of the Presidential electors in violation of state legislative constitutional duties under Article II of the U.S. Constitution. Arizona's, Georgia's and Pennsylvania's Constitutions have the state legislature adjourned until January 2021.<sup>57</sup> Michigan's and Wisconsin's Constitutions permit the state legislature to be in session, but do not require a joint session of the state legislature to affirmatively vote for post-election certification of Presidential electors.<sup>58</sup>

I. Voters' allegations in each of the Defendant States—alleging election officials' absentee ballot errors and improprieties exceed Presidential vote margins—are constitutionally resolved by state legislative post-certifications of Presidential votes and Presidential electors—not in this Court or any other court.

94. Plaintiffs allege that voters allege in each of the Defendant States that election officials' absentee ballot errors and improprieties exceed Presidential vote margins.

95. The Defendant States' voters' claims should be constitutionally resolved by state legislative post-certifications of Presidential votes and Presidential electors—as Article II requires.

96. None of the voters' allegations in each of the Defendant States—that is the allegations stated further below—should be adjudicated in this Court or any other Court, because it is the exclusive constitutional prerogative of the state legislatures to determine post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors.

---

<sup>57</sup> Ariz. Const. Art. IV, Part 2, Sec. 3; Ga. Const. Art. III, § IV, ¶ 1(a). Pa. Const. Art. II, § 4.

<sup>58</sup> Mich. Const. Art. IV, § 13; Wis. Const. Art. IV, § 11.

J. Defendant States' voters allege Zuckerberg moneys gifted to urban election officials in Defendant States who violated absentee ballot security measures.

97. Defendant States' voters have alleged, in 2020, a systematic effort was launched in Defendant States, using $350,000,000 in private money sourced to Mark Zuckerberg, the Facebook billionaire, to illegally circumvent absentee voting laws to cast tens of thousands of illegal absentee ballots.<sup>59</sup>

98. Defendants States' votes have alleged that the Zuckerberg-funded private organization, the Center for Technology and Civic Life (CTCL), gifted millions of dollars to election officials in Democratic Party urban strongholds in Georgia, Wisconsin, Pennsylvania, Michigan and Arizona in order for those cities to facilitate the use of absentee voting: Fulton County (GA), Milwaukee (WI), Madison (WI), Philadelphia (PA), Wayne County (MI) and Maricopa County (AZ).<sup>60</sup>

99. Defendant States' voters have alleged that in these counties and cities receiving CTCL funds, election officials adopted various respective policies and customs eviscerating state law absentee ballot security measures such as witness address, name and signature requirements and voter address, name and signature requirements.<sup>61</sup>

100. Defendant States' voters have alleged that these urban election officials also used the CTCL funds for absentee ballot drop boxes treating urban voters preferentially to small-town and rural voters.<sup>62</sup>

---

<sup>59</sup> See App. 21-30; 31-38; and 1079-1112.

<sup>60</sup> Id.

<sup>61</sup> Id.

<sup>62</sup> Id.

K. The government's pre-election certification error rate of voting system's software and hardware is 0.0008%.

101. The federal government has a pre-election standard for state voting system's software and hardware.<sup>63</sup>

102. Under federal law, this maximum-acceptable error rate is one in 500,000 ballot positions, or, alternatively one in 125,000 ballots—0.0008 %.<sup>64</sup>

103. Section 3.2.1 of the voting systems standards issued by the Federal Elections Commission (FEC) which were in effect on the date of the enactment of the Help America Vote Act (HAVA) provides that the voting system shall achieve a maximum acceptable error rate in the test process of one in 500,000 ballot positions.<sup>65</sup>

104. A ballot position is every possible selection on the ballot, to include empty spaces. As stated in the voting systems standards (VSS), “[t]his rate is set at a sufficiently stringent level such that the likelihood of voting system errors affecting the outcome of an election is exceptionally remote even in the closest of elections.”<sup>66</sup>

105. An update to the FEC VSS was made by the Election Assistance Commission (EAC) to enhance the FEC VSS standards, which each state has adopted by law.<sup>67</sup>

106. The FEC VSS standard provides for an error rate of one in 125,000 ballots (0.0008%) as an alternative to the one in 500,000 ballot positions to make it easier to calculate the error rate.<sup>68</sup>

---

<sup>63</sup> See Expert Report of Dennis Nathan Cain (I), App. 52-59; 1411-1418.

<sup>64</sup> Id.

<sup>65</sup> Id.

<sup>66</sup> Id.

<sup>67</sup> Id.

<sup>68</sup> Id.

107. The FEC standards, which are incorporated into the Help America Vote Act § 301(a)(5), require that all systems be tested in order to certify that they meet the maximum-acceptable error rate set by federal law.<sup>69</sup>

L. Voters’ allegations in each of the Defendant States support that election officials’ absentee ballot errors and improprieties exceed Presidential vote margins.

108. The use of absentee and mail-in ballots skyrocketed in 2020, not only as a public-health response to the COVID-19 pandemic but also at the urging of mail-in voting’s proponents, and most especially executive branch officials in Defendant States. According to the Pew Research Center, in the 2020 general election, a record number of votes—about 65 million—were cast via mail compared to 33.5 million mail-in ballots cast in the 2016 general election—an increase of more than 94 percent.<sup>70</sup>

109. In the wake of the contested 2000 election, the bipartisan Jimmy Carter-James Baker commission identified absentee ballots as “the largest source of potential voter fraud.”<sup>71</sup>

110. Concern over the use of mail-in ballots is not novel to the modern era,<sup>72</sup> but it remains a current concern.<sup>73</sup>

111. Absentee and mail-in voting are the primary opportunities for unlawful ballots to be cast.

---

<sup>69</sup> Id.

<sup>70</sup> Desilver, Drew. Most mail and provisional ballots got counted in past U.S. elections – but many did not. Pew Research Center. 10 November 2020. <https://www.pewresearch.org/fact-tank/2020/11/10/most-mail-and-provisional-ballots-got-counted-in-past-u-s-elections-but-many-did-not/> Accessed 12.18.20.

<sup>71</sup> Building Confidence in U.S. Elections: Report of the Commission on Federal Elections, at 46 (Sept. 2005).

<sup>72</sup> Dustin Waters, Mail-in Ballots Were Part of a Plot to Deny Lincoln Reelection in 1864, Wash. Post (Aug. 22, 2020)

<sup>73</sup> Crawford v. Marion Cty. Election Bd., 553 U.S. 181, 194-96 & n.11 (2008); see also Texas Office of the Attorney General, AG Paxton Announces Joint Prosecution of Gregg County Organized Election Fraud in Mail-In Balloting Scheme (Sept. 24, 2020); Harriet Alexander & Ariel Zilber, Minneapolis police opens investigation into reports that Ilhan Omar's supporters illegally harvested Democrat ballots in Minnesota, Daily Mail, Sept. 28, 2020.

112. Defendant States voters allege that as a result of expanded absentee and mail-in voting in Defendant States, combined with Defendant States' unconstitutional modification of statutory protections designed to ensure ballot integrity, Defendant States created a massive opportunity for fraud.

113. Defendant States voters allege that the Defendant States have made it difficult or impossible to separate the constitutionally tainted mail-in ballots from all mail-in ballots.

114. Defendant States voters allege that rather than augment safeguards against illegal voting in anticipation of the millions of additional mail-in ballots flooding their States, Defendant States materially weakened, or did away with, security measures, such as witness or signature verification procedures, required by their respective legislatures. Their legislatures established those commonsense safeguards to prevent—or at least reduce—fraudulent mail-in ballots.

115. Defendant States voters allege, in Defendant States, that Democrat voters voted by mail at two to three times the rate of Republicans. Thus, the Democratic candidate for President thus greatly benefited from this unconstitutional usurpation of legislative authority, and the weakening of legislative mandated ballot security measures.

116. Defendant States voters allege that the outcome of the Electoral College vote is directly affected by the constitutional violations committed by Defendant States. Defendant States violated the Constitution in the process of appointing presidential electors by unlawfully abrogating state election laws designed to protect the integrity of the ballots and the electoral process, and those violations proximately caused the unconstitutional appointment of presidential electors.

117. Plaintiffs will therefore be injured if Defendant States' unlawful certification of these Presidential electors, because the Presidential electors have not received state legislative post-election certification, is allowed to stand.

1. Commonwealth of Pennsylvania voters allege election official errors and improprieties which exceed the Presidential vote margin.<sup>74</sup>

118. Commonwealth of Pennsylvania voters allege election official errors and improprieties which exceed the Presidential vote margin.

119. Pennsylvania has 20 electoral votes, with a statewide vote tally currently estimated at 3,363,951 for President Trump and 3,445,548 for former Vice President Biden, a margin of 81,597 votes.<sup>75</sup>

120. Pennsylvania voters have alleged the number of votes affected by the various constitutional violations exceeds the margin of votes separating the candidates.

121. By letter dated December 13, 2019, the Auditor General of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, Eugene A. DePasquale, issued to the Governor of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania a Performance Audit Report of the Pennsylvania Department of State's Statewide Uniform Registry of Electors.<sup>76</sup>

122. The Performance Audit Report was conducted pursuant to an Interagency Agreement between the Pennsylvania Department of State and the Pennsylvania Department of the Auditor General.

123. The Performance Audit Report contained seven Findings, to wit:

- i. Finding One: As a result of the Department of State's denial of access to critical documents and excessive redaction of documentation, the Department of the Auditor General was severely restricted from meeting its audit objectives in an audit which the Department of State itself had requested.

---

<sup>74</sup> See Timeline of Electoral Policy Activities, Issues, and Litigation Pennsylvania, Michigan, Wisconsin, Georgia, Arizona, and Nevada August 2003 to November 2020, App. 1-20 (demonstrating full extent of inappropriate activities).

<sup>75</sup> WNWP 2020 Pennsylvania Election Results. <https://www.wnep.com/elections> (last visited Dec. 18, 2020).

<sup>76</sup> See Auditor General's Performance Audit Report, App. 413-604; see also App. 397-412.

- ii. Finding Two: Data analysis identified tens of thousands of potential duplicate and inaccurate voter records, as well as voter records for nearly three thousand potentially deceased voters that had not been removed from the SURE system.
- iii. Finding Three: The Department of State much implement leading information technology security practices and information technology general controls to protect the SURE system and ensure the reliability of voter registration.
- iv. Finding Four: Voter record information is inaccurate due to weakness in the voter registration application process and the maintenance of voter records in the SURE system.
- v. Finding Five: Incorporating edit checks and other improvements into the design of the replacement system for SURE will reduce data errors and improve accuracy.
- vi. Finding Six: A combination of a lack of cooperation by certain county election offices and PennDOT, as well as source documents not being available for seventy percent of our test sample, resulted in our inability to form any conclusions as to the accuracy of the entire population of voter records maintained in the SURE system.
- vii. Finding Seven: The Department of State should update current job aids and develop additional job aids and guidance to address issues such as duplicate voter records, records of potentially deceased voters on the voter rolls, pending applications, and records retention. See Auditor General's Performance Audit Report.<sup>77</sup>

124. In addition to the Findings, the Performance Audit Report contained specific detailed Recommendations to correct the significant deficiencies identified in the Findings of the Performance Audit Report.

125. In 2018, Secretary Boockvar was quoted as stating "Rock the Vote's web tool was connected to our system, making the process of registering through their online programs, and those of their partners, seamless for voters across Pennsylvania."<sup>78</sup>

---

<sup>77</sup> Supra.

<sup>78</sup> Rock the Vote, 2018 Annual Report, pg. 12. <https://www.rockthevote.org/wp-content/uploads/Rock-the-Vote-2018-Annual-Report.pdf>. (last visited Dec. 18, 2020).

126. In addition, Plaintiffs have obtained a sworn Affidavit from Jesse Richard Morgan, who was contracted to haul mail for the United States Postal Service within the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. Mr. Morgan's Affidavit alleges that he was directed to transport from New York to Pennsylvania what he believes to be completed Pennsylvania ballots in the 2020 General Election.<sup>79</sup>

127. Plaintiffs based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations that this matter is currently under investigation by various entities and that such investigation is essential to the determination of whether or not approximately 200,000 ballots were delivered into the Pennsylvania System improperly or illegally. Pending such determination, there is no possible way that the validity of Pennsylvania's Presidential Election could possibly be certified by anyone.

128. Based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, there is evidence of possible back-dating of ballots in the United States Postal facility at Erie, Pennsylvania. And, further, Francis X. Ryan's Report, discussed in detail below, evidences thousands of questionable or improper ballots cast in the 2020 Presidential Election in Pennsylvania.<sup>80</sup>

129. In addition, Plaintiffs have obtained a Declaration from Ingmar Njus in support of Mr. Morgan's Affidavit.<sup>81</sup>

130. Based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, in the run-up to the election, the Pennsylvania Supreme Court usurped the powers of the General Assembly when it permitted county boards of election to accept hand-delivered mail-in ballots at locations other than the respective offices of the boards of election, including through the use of drop-boxes arbitrarily located

---

<sup>79</sup> See Jesse Richard Morgan Declaration, App. 152-179; 605-632; see also Declaration of Leslie J. Brabandt, App. 187-189; see also Expert Declaration of Roland Smith, App. 190-200.

<sup>80</sup> See Francis X. Ryan Declaration, App. 660-666. For additional evidence, see App. 667-834.

<sup>81</sup> See Ingmar Njus Declaration, App. 183-186; 633-636.

throughout the county; and, when it extended the deadline for receipt of absentee and mail-in ballots by three days from 8:00 p.m. on Election Day to 5:00 p.m. on November 6, 2020.<sup>82</sup>

131. In the same Opinion, the Court held that "although the Election Code provides the procedure for casting and counting a vote by mail, it does not provide for the 'notice and opportunity to cure' ..."<sup>83</sup>

132. The Court went on to state "... we agree that the decision to provide a 'notice and opportunity to cure' procedure ... is one best suited for the Legislature."<sup>84</sup>

133. Of note, Secretary Boockvar agreed with the Court that Pennsylvania's Election Code does not provide a notice and opportunity to cure procedure.

134. Based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, despite the lack of any statutory authorization or legal authority, county boards of elections in democratic counties, such as, Montgomery County, routinely helped identify, facilitate and permitted electors to alter their defective absentee and mail-in ballots in violation of Pennsylvania's Election Code.<sup>85</sup>

135. In an October 31, 2020, e-mail, Frank Dean, Director of Mail-in Elections of Montgomery County emailed the latest list of confidential elector information to two other Montgomery County election officials, Lee Soltysiak and Josh Stein, and wrote:

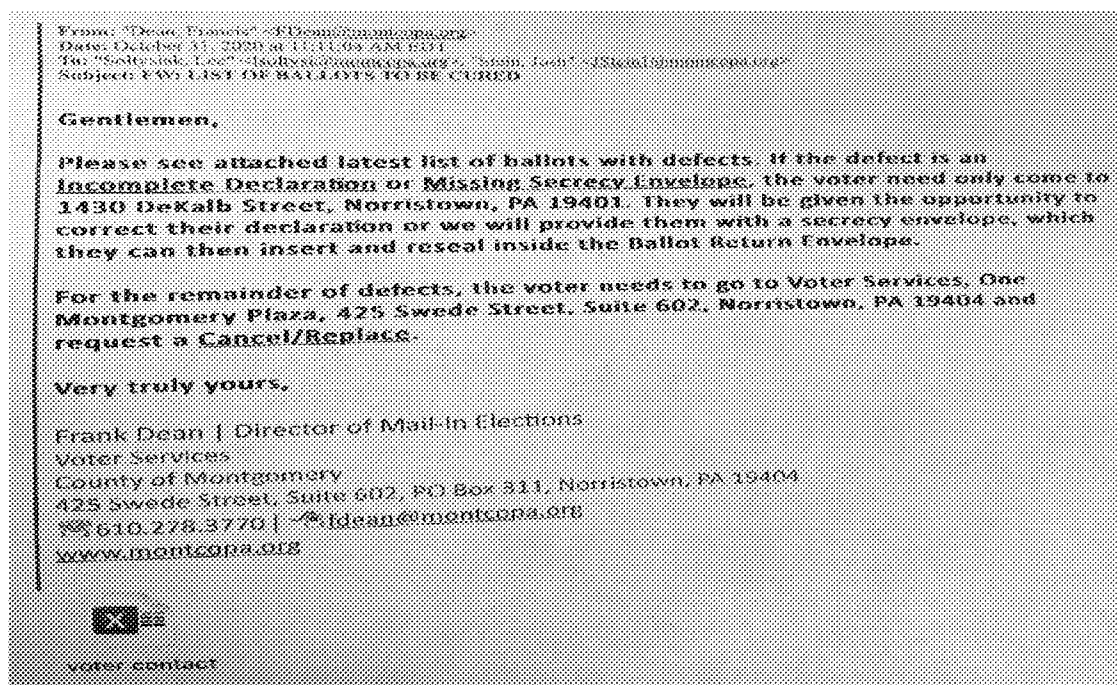

---

<sup>82</sup> Pennsylvania Democratic Party v. Boockvar, No. 133 MM 2020, 2020 WL 5554644, at *20 (Pa. Sept. 17, 2020); see also In re: November 3, 2020 General Election, 2020 WL 6252803, at *7 (Pa. Oct. 23, 2020).

<sup>83</sup> Id. at 20.

<sup>84</sup> Id. at 20.

<sup>85</sup> See Carlson Report on Voter Suppression through Executive and Administrative Actions, App. 31-38.

136. Based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, there is no authority within Pennsylvania's Election Code that authorizes election officials to manually alter the information contained within the SURE system for the purposes described by Director Dean.

137. In order to cancel or replace an elector's absentee or mail-in ballot, election officials would be required to manually alter or override the information contained in the Commonwealth's Statewide Uniform Registry of Electors ("SURE").

138. Based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, there is no authority within Pennsylvania's Election Code that authorizes election officials to cancel and/or replace an elector's absentee or mail-in ballot as described by Director Dean.

139. Further, based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, in violation of electors' right to secrecy in their ballots, election officials in democratic counties, such as Montgomery County, used the information gathered through their inspection of the ballot envelopes to identify the names of electors who had cast defective absentee or mail-in ballot envelopes.<sup>86</sup>

<sup>86</sup> Art. VII, Error! Main Document Only. §4 PA Const.

140. Based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, the Excel spreadsheet attached to Director Dean's October 31, 2020, e-mail notes that when mail-in or absentee ballot envelopes were found to be defective, some electors were provided with the opportunity to alter their ballot envelopes.

141. Based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, the photograph below shows some of the thousands of absentee and mail-in ballots pre-canvassed by the Montgomery County Board of Elections in violation of the Election Code.<sup>87</sup> These defective ballots were not secured in any way and were easily accessible to the public.<sup>88</sup>

142. Further, based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, the next picture shows page 1 or 124 pages that include thousands of defective ballot envelopes that Montgomery County elections officials were trying to "cure" in violation of Pennsylvania's Election Code and Constitution.

---

<sup>87</sup> This "Ballots for Sale" photo was taken on 11/01/2020 by Robert Gillies during a tour of the Montgomery County mail-in ballot storage and canvass facility.

<sup>88</sup> See Expert Declaration of Gregory Moulthrop, App. 48-51.

1	10/21/79 14:59:57	10/21/79 14:59:57	001-4360-0000	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80	1/28/80
---	-------------------	-------------------	---------------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------	---------

Page 1 of 124

143. Based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, in a further effort to circumvent Pennsylvania's Election Code and the prohibition against efforts to "cure" absentee and mail-in ballot envelopes, Secretary Boockvar, issued guidance, through Jonathan Marks, the Deputy Secretary of Elections and Commissions, just hours before Election Day directing county boards of elections to provide electors who have cast defective absentee or mail-in ballots with provisional ballots and to promptly update the SURE system.

144. The Deputy Secretary for Elections and Commissions issued an email which stated:

Sent: Monday, November 2, 2020 8:38 PM

To: Marks, Jonathan

Subject: Important DOS Email - Clarification regarding Ballots Set Aside During Pre-canvass

*** This is an external email. Please use caution when clicking on links and downloading attachments ***

Dear County Election Directors,

The Department of State has been asked whether county boards of elections can provide information to authorized representatives and representatives of political parties during the pre-canvass about voters whose absentee and mail-in ballots have been rejected. The Department issued provisional ballot guidance on October 21, 2020, that explains that voters whose completed absentee or mail-in ballots are rejected by the county board for reasons unrelated to voter qualifications may be issued a provisional ballot. To facilitate communication with these voters, the county boards of elections should provide information to party and candidate representatives during the pre-canvass that identifies the voters whose ballots have been rejected and should promptly update the SURE system.

Kind regards,

Jonathan M. Marks

Deputy Secretary for Elections & Commissions

Pennsylvania Department of State

302 North Office Building | Harrisburg, PA 17120

☎ 717.783.2035 ☎ 717.787.1734

✉ jmarks@pa.gov

145. Based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, in order to obtain a provisional ballot on Election Day, an elector who previously requested an absentee or mail-in ballot must sign an affidavit stating "I do solemnly swear or affirm that my name is ... and that this is the only ballot that I cast in this election."<sup>89</sup>

146. Based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, if an elector has already submitted an absentee or mail-in ballot and that ballot was received by his or her county board of elections, the elector cannot truthfully affirm that the provisional ballot is the only ballot cast by them in the election. The provisional ballot would in fact be a second ballot cast by the elector.

---

<sup>89</sup> 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. §3146.8; 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. §3050.

147. Based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, Secretary Boockvar's actions appear conveniently timed with the actions of the Democratic Party who apparently considered the matter to be URGENT.

148. Based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, Deputy Secretary Marks issued his email at 8:38 p.m. on November 2, 2020, on the eve of Election Day. Under the Election Code, provisional ballots are only used on Election Day. Less than twelve hours after Deputy Secretary Marks' email, the Democratic Party had printed handbills telling electors "Public records show that your ballot had errors and was not accepted." and to "Go in person to vote at your polling place today by 8:00 EST and ask for a provisional ballot."

149. Based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, the effect to utilize provisional ballots to "cure" defective absentee and mail-in ballots is in clear violation of Pennsylvania's Election Code. The number of provisional ballots cast in Pennsylvania is approximately 90,000 which is significantly higher than previous General Elections.

150. Further, based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, it is not clear what Deputy Secretary Marks intended when he stated "To facilitate communication with these voters, the county boards of elections should provide information to party and candidate representatives during the pre-canvassing that identifies the voters whose ballots have been rejected and should promptly update the SURE system."

151. Based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, Pennsylvania's Election Code makes no provision for the acceptance or rejection of ballots during the pre-canvassing process, nor does the Election Code provide boards of elections with the authority to "update the SURE system" so that an electors who previously submitted an absentee or mail-in ballot may vote with a provisional ballot.

152. The Pennsylvania Supreme Court ruled that county boards of elections are prohibited from using signature comparison to challenge and reject absentee or mail-in ballots.<sup>90</sup>

153. Based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, the Court's decision is contrary to the applicable provisions of Pennsylvania's Election Code.

154. In addition, the Pennsylvania Supreme Court ruled that county boards of elections could prevent and exclude designated representatives of the candidates and political parties, who are authorized by the Election Code to observe the pre-canvassing and canvassing of ballots, from being in the room during pre-canvassing and canvassing of ballots.<sup>91</sup>

---

<sup>90</sup> In Re: November 3, 2020, General Election, 149 MM 2020 (Oct. 23, 2020).

<sup>91</sup> See In Re: Canvassing Observation, 30 EAP 2020 (Nov. 17, 2020).

155. Based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, in predominantly Democratic counties, such as Philadelphia, Delaware and Montgomery Counties, authorized representative of the candidates and the Republican Party attempted to observe the actions of election officials; however, the authorized representatives were routinely denied the access necessary to properly observe the handling of ballot envelopes and ballots during the pre-canvassing and canvassing process.

156. Plaintiffs have obtained a sworn Affidavit from Gregory Stenstrom, who was appointed by the Delaware County Republican Party to observe the election process within Delaware County. Mr. Stenstrom attests to numerous election code violations by the Delaware County Board of Elections. Plaintiffs have numerous other Declarations regarding similar election code violations in other predominantly Democratic counties.<sup>92</sup>

157. Based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, absentee and mail-in ballots are required to be canvassed in accordance with subsection (g) of Section 3146.8 - Canvassing of official absentee and mail-in ballots.<sup>93</sup>

158. Based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, Pennsylvania's Election Code defines the term "pre-canvass" to mean "the inspection and opening of all envelopes containing official absentee ballots or mail-in ballots, the removal of such ballots from the envelopes and the counting, computing and tallying of the votes reflected on the ballots. The term does not include the recording or publishing of the votes reflected on the ballots."<sup>94</sup>

---

<sup>92</sup> See Gregory Stenstrom Declaration, Appendix pgs. 129-151; 637-659; see Expert Opinion of Anthony J. Couchenor, App. 42-47; see also expert opinion of Jovan Hutton Pulitzer, App. 90-118.

<sup>93</sup> 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. §3146.8(g) (1)(i-ii) & (1.1).

<sup>94</sup> 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 2602(q.1).

159. Prior to any pre-canvassing meeting, county boards of elections are required to provide at least forty-eight hours' notice by publicly posting a notice of a pre-canvass meeting on its publicly accessible Internet website.<sup>95</sup>

160. Each candidate and political party is entitled to have one designated and authorized representative in the room any time absentee and mail-in ballots are being canvassed by a board of elections.<sup>96</sup>

161. The candidates' watchers or other representatives are permitted to be present any time the envelopes containing absentee and mail-in ballots are opened.<sup>97</sup>

162. The candidates and political parties are entitled to have watchers present any time there is canvassing of returns.<sup>98</sup>

163. Based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, in predominantly Democratic counties, such as Montgomery, election would weigh absentee and mail-in ballot envelopes to determine whether secrecy envelopes were contained within the outer envelopes. Election officials would also review and inspect the absentee and mail-in ballot envelopes to determine whether they complied with the requirements of the Election Code.

164. Based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, this pre-canvassing of ballot envelopes is in direct violation of Pennsylvania's Election Code.

165. Based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, under the Election Code, county boards of elections are required, upon receipt of sealed official absentee and mail-in ballot envelopes, to

---

<sup>95</sup> 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3146.8(g)(1.1.).

<sup>96</sup> 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. §3146.8(g)(2).

<sup>97</sup> 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. §3146.8.

<sup>98</sup> 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. §2650(a).

"safely keep the ballots in sealed or locked containers until they are to be canvassed by the county board of elections."<sup>99</sup>

166. County boards of elections are prohibited from pre-canvassing absentee and mail-in ballots prior to 7:00 a.m. of Election Day.<sup>100</sup>

167. As such, from the time ballot envelopes are received by county boards of elections through 7:00 a.m. on Election Day, the ballot envelopes are to be safely kept in sealed or locked containers.<sup>101</sup> Stated in a different way, county boards of elections are not permitted to remove absentee and mail-in ballot envelopes from their sealed or locked containers until the ballots are pre-canvassed at 7:00 a.m. on Election Day.

168. Based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, the Pennsylvania Supreme Court ruled that county boards of elections were not required to enforce or follow Pennsylvania's Election Code requirements for absentee and mail-in ballot envelopes, including the requirements related to elector signatures, addresses, dates, and signed declarations.<sup>102</sup>

169. During pre-canvassing, county boards of elections are required to examine each ballot cast to determine if the declaration envelope is properly completed and to compare the information with the information contained in the Registered Absentee and Mail-in Voters File.<sup>103</sup>

170. Only then are county boards of elections authorized to open the outer envelope of every unchallenged absentee or mail-in envelope in such a manner so as not to destroy the declaration executed thereon.<sup>104</sup>

---

<sup>99</sup> 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. §3146.8(a).

<sup>100</sup> 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3146.8(g)(1.1.)

<sup>101</sup> 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. §3146.8(a).

<sup>102</sup> In Re: Canvass of Absentee and Mail-in Ballots of November 3, 2020 General Election, 31 EAP 2020 (Nov. 23, 2020).

<sup>103</sup> 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3146.8(g)(3).

<sup>104</sup> 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3146.8(g)(4)(i).

171. Based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, in predominantly Democratic counties, such as Allegheny County, election officials disregarded the requirements of the Election Code and counted absentee and mail-in ballot ballots with defective elector signatures, addresses, dates, and signed declarations.<sup>105</sup> In other counties, such as Westmoreland, such ballots were not counted by the county board of elections.

172. In addition to substantial evidence of the violations of Pennsylvania's Election Code, as set forth above, Plaintiffs have produced an expert report authored by Francis X. Ryan who could testify and identify significant and dispositive discrepancies and errors which call into questions the results of the Presidential Election in Pennsylvania.<sup>106</sup>

173. Based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, as described above, the 2020 General Election in Pennsylvania was fraught with numerous violations of Pennsylvania's Election Code perpetrated by predominantly Democratic county election officials. In addition, there are countless documented election irregularities and improprieties that prevent an accurate accounting of the election results in the Presidential election.

174. Based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, many of the irregularities directly relate to the county boards of elections' handling of absentee and mail-in ballots; the pre-canvassing and canvassing of ballots; the failure to permit legally appropriate and adequate oversight and transparency of the process; and, the failure to maintain and secure ballot integrity and security throughout the election process.

175. Based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, as such, the 2020 General Election results are so severely flawed that it is impossible to certify the accuracy of the purported results.

---

<sup>105</sup> In Re: Canvass of Absentee and Mail-in Ballots of November 3, 2020 General Election, 31 EAP 2020 (Nov. 23, 2020).

<sup>106</sup> See Francis X. Ryan Declaration, App. 660-666. For additional evidence see App. 667-834.

176. Based on analysis by data analyst Matthew Braynard and Professor Steven J. Miller, in Pennsylvania, the government data shows election officials' absentee ballot errors of 121,297 far exceed the margin of victory of 81,749.<sup>107</sup>

177. According to the Braynard-Miller analysis, the government data shows election officials' absentee ballot error rate of at least 1.43% which far exceeds federal law's pre-election certification error rate for voting systems' hardware and software of 0.0008%.<sup>108</sup>

Pennsylvania Voter Election Contest
Margin +81,749
Type of error*	Description		Margin
1) Unlawful Ballots	Estimate of ballots requested in the name of a registered Republican by someone other than that person <sup>109</sup>	53,909
2) Legal Votes Not Counted	Estimate of Republican ballots that the requester returned but were not counted <sup>110</sup>	44,892
Total Votes: 98,801	Error Rate (Compared to Total Vote)	1.43%
3) Illegal Votes Counted	Electors voted where they did not reside <sup>111</sup>	14,328
4) Illegal Votes Counted	Out of State Residents Voting in State <sup>112</sup>	7,426
5) Illegal Votes Counted	Double Votes <sup>113</sup>	742
TOTAL		121,297
	Of total votes cast 6,924,006

*May overlap.

<sup>107</sup> See Chart and Pennsylvania Declaration of Matthew Braynard, App. 1331-1340 ¶3.

<sup>108</sup> See Expert Report of Dennis Nathan Cain (III), App. 1433-1445.

<sup>109</sup> See Declaration of Steven J. Miller, App. 1325-1330.

<sup>110</sup> Id.

<sup>111</sup> See Pennsylvania Declaration of Matthew Braynard, App. 1331-1340 ¶3.

<sup>112</sup> See Pennsylvania Declaration of Matthew Braynard, App. 1331-1340.

<sup>113</sup> See Pennsylvania Declaration of Matthew Braynard, App. 1331-1340 ¶4.

2. State of Georgia voters allege election official errors and improprieties which exceed the Presidential vote margin.<sup>114</sup>

178. State of Georgia voters allege election official errors and improprieties which exceed the Presidential vote margin.

179. Georgia has 16 electoral votes, with a statewide vote tally currently estimated at 2,458,121 for President Trump and 2,472,098 for former Vice President Biden, a margin of approximately 12,670 votes.

180. The number of votes affected by the various constitutional violations exceeds the margin of votes dividing the candidates.

181. Based on Georgia voters' allegations, Georgia's Secretary of State, Brad Raffensperger, without legislative approval, unilaterally abrogated Georgia's statute governing the signature verification process for absentee ballots.<sup>115</sup>

182. O.C.G.A. § 21-2-386(a)(2) prohibits the opening of absentee ballots until after the polls open on Election Day: In April 2020, however, the State Election Board adopted Secretary of State Rule 183-1-14-0.9-.15, Processing Ballots Prior to Election Day.

183. Based on Georgia voters' allegations, that rule purports to authorize county election officials to begin processing absentee ballots up to three weeks before Election Day.

184. Based on Georgia voters' allegations, Georgia law authorizes and requires a single registrar or clerk—after reviewing the outer envelope—to reject an absentee ballot if the voter failed to sign the required oath or to provide the required information, the signature appears invalid, or the required information does not conform with the information on file, or if the voter is otherwise found ineligible to vote.<sup>116</sup>

---

<sup>114</sup> For full extent of inappropriate activities, see Timeline of Electoral Policy Activities, Issues, and Litigation Pennsylvania, Michigan, Wisconsin, Georgia, Arizona, and Nevada August 2003 to November 2020, Appendix 1-20.

<sup>115</sup> See Expert Declaration of Harry Haury, Appendix 69-89.

185. Georgia law provides absentee voters the chance to “cure a failure to sign the oath, an invalid signature, or missing information” on a ballot’s outer envelope by the deadline for verifying provisional ballots (i.e., three days after the election).<sup>117</sup> To facilitate cures, Georgia law requires the relevant election official to notify the voter in writing: “The board of registrars or absentee ballot clerk shall promptly notify the elector of such rejection, a copy of which notification shall be retained in the files of the board of registrars or absentee ballot clerk for at least two years.”<sup>118</sup>

186. Based on Georgia voters’ allegations, on March 6, 2020, in Democratic Party of Georgia v. Raffensperger, No. 1:19-cv-5028-WMR (N.D. Ga.), Georgia’s Secretary of State entered a Compromise Settlement Agreement and Release with the Democratic Party of Georgia (the “Settlement”) to materially change the statutory requirements for reviewing signatures on absentee ballot envelopes to confirm the voter’s identity by making it far more difficult to challenge defective signatures<sup>119</sup> beyond the express mandatory procedures.<sup>120</sup>

187. Based on Georgia voters’ allegations, among other things, before a ballot could be rejected, the Settlement required a registrar who found a defective signature to now seek a review by two other registrars, and only if a majority of the registrars agreed that the signature was defective could the ballot be rejected but not before all three registrars’ names were written on the ballot envelope along with the reason for the rejection. These cumbersome procedures are in direct

---

<sup>116</sup> O.C.G.A. § 21-2-386(a)(1)(B)-(C).

<sup>117</sup> O.C.G.A. §§ 21-2-386(a)(1)(C), 21-2-419(c)(2).

<sup>118</sup> O.C.G.A. § 21-2-386(a)(1)(B).

<sup>119</sup> See Expert Report of A.J. Jaghori, Appendix 39-41. See Settlement Agreement, Appendix 1222-1229.

<sup>120</sup> O.C.G.A. § 21-2-386(a)(1)(B).

conflict with Georgia's statutory requirements, as is the Settlement's requirement that notice be provided by telephone (i.e., not in writing) if a telephone number is available. Finally, the Settlement purports to require election officials to consider issuing guidance and training materials drafted by an expert retained by the Democratic Party of Georgia.

188. Based on Georgia voters' allegations, Georgia's legislature has not ratified these material changes to statutory law mandated by the Compromise Settlement Agreement and Release, including altered signature verification requirements and early opening of ballots. The relevant legislation that was violated by Compromise Settlement Agreement and Release did not include a severability clause.

189. Based on Georgia voters' allegations, this unconstitutional change in Georgia law materially benefitted former Vice President Biden. According to the Georgia Secretary of State's office, former Vice President Biden had almost double the number of absentee votes (65.32%) as President Trump (34.68%).

190. Based on Georgia voters' allegations, specifically, there were 1,305,659 absentee mail-in ballots submitted in Georgia in 2020. There were 4,786 absentee ballots rejected in 2020. This is a rejection rate of .37%. In contrast, in 2016, the 2016 rejection rate was 6.42% with 13,677 absentee mail-in ballots being rejected out of 213,033 submitted, which more than seventeen times greater than in 2020.<sup>121</sup>

191. Based on Georgia voters' allegations, if the rejection rate of mailed-in absentee ballots remained the same in 2020 as it was in 2016, there would be 83,517 less tabulated ballots in 2020. The statewide split of absentee ballots was 34.68% for Trump and 65.2% for Biden. Rejecting at the higher 2016 rate with the 2020 split between Trump and Biden would decrease Trump votes

---

<sup>121</sup> See Charles J. Cicchetti Declaration at ¶ 24, Appendix pgs. 1315-1324.

by 28,965 and Biden votes by 54,552, which would be a net gain for Trump of 25,587 votes. This would be more than needed to overcome the Biden advantage of 12,670 votes, and Trump would win by 12,917 votes. Regardless of the number of ballots affected, however, the non-legislative changes to the election rules violated Article II.

192. Further, based on Georgia voters' allegations, the Zuckerberg-funded absentee drop boxes caused a disparate impact in Georgia.<sup>122</sup>

193. Georgia is comprised of 159 counties. In 2016, Hillary Clinton garnered 1,877,963 votes in the state of Georgia.<sup>123</sup> Clinton won four counties in major population centers, Fulton (297,051), Cobb (160,121), Gwinnett (166,153), and Dekalb Counties (251,370).<sup>124</sup> These four counties represented 874,695 votes for Hillary Clinton.<sup>125</sup>

194. Georgia has 300 total drop boxes for electors to submit absentee ballots.<sup>126</sup>

195. In 2020, Georgia counties utilized CTCL funding to install additional drop boxes in areas that would make it easier for voters to cast their absentee ballot. The four counties won by the Clinton campaign contain a plurality of the drop boxes.

196. Fulton County was home to 39 drop boxes<sup>127</sup>, Cobb County provided 16 drop boxes,<sup>128</sup> 23 drop boxes in Gwinnett County<sup>129</sup>, and Dekalb County has 34 boxes.<sup>130</sup>

---

<sup>122</sup> See App. 1168-1234; 1477-1491.

<sup>123</sup> Georgia Election Results 2016 – The New York Times (nytimes.com)

<sup>124</sup> Georgia Election Results 2016 – The New York Times (nytimes.com)

<sup>125</sup> Georgia Election Results 2016 – The New York Times (nytimes.com)

<sup>126</sup> <https://georgiapeanutgallery.org/2020/09/28/drop-box-locations-for-november-3-2020-election/>

<sup>127</sup> Fulton County nearly doubles number of ballot drop off boxes (fox5atlanta.com)

<sup>128</sup> <https://www.cobbcounty.org/elections/news/6-additional-absentee-ballot-drop-boxes-available-september-23rd>

<sup>129</sup> https://www.gwinnettcountry.com/static/departments/elections/2020\_Election/pdf/BallotDropBoxMap\_2020.pdf

<sup>130</sup> <https://www.dekalbcountyga.gov/sites/default/files/users/user304/DeKalb%20Dropbox%20Locations%20103120%20V7.pdf>

197. These four localities account for 112 drop boxes, spread out over 1,587 square miles.<sup>131</sup> Meaning, voters in these four Clinton strongholds have one drop box for every 14 square miles. Meanwhile, in the remaining 155 counties, spread out over 55,926 square miles, a republican voter will find one drop box for every 294 square miles.

198. Based on Georgia voters' allegations, the effect of this unconstitutional change in Georgia election law, which made it more likely that ballots without matching signatures would be counted, had a material impact on the outcome of the election.<sup>132</sup>

199. Finally, in Georgia, analysis of government data by data analyst Matthew Braynard and Professor Qianying (Jennie) Zhang shows election officials' absentee ballot errors of 204,143 far exceed the margin of victory of 12,670.<sup>133</sup>

200. And, the Braynard-Zhang analysis of the government data shows election officials' absentee ballot error rate of at least 1.28% which far exceeds federal law's pre-election certification error rate for voting systems' hardware and software of 0.0008%.<sup>134</sup>

Georgia Voter Election Contest
Margin +12,670

Type of error*	Description	Margin
1) Unlawful Ballots	Estimate of the minimum number of absentee ballots requested which were not requested by the person identified in the state's database <sup>135</sup>	20,431
		43,688

<sup>131</sup> The areas for the respective counties are: Fulton 534 square miles; Cobb 345 square miles; Gwinnett 437 square miles; and DeKalb 271 square miles.

<sup>132</sup> See Appendix 1235-1311.

<sup>133</sup> See Chart and Georgia Expert Report of Matthew Braynard, Appendix pgs. 1350-1374.

<sup>134</sup> See Expert Report of Dennis Nathan Cain (III), Appendix 1433-1445.

<sup>135</sup> See Georgia Expert Report of Qianying (Jennie) Zhang, Appendix pgs. 1341-1349 ¶ 1.

2) Legal Votes Not Counted	Estimate of the minimum number of absentee ballots that the requester returned but were not counted <sup>136</sup>
Category 1 & 2 Total Votes: 64,119	Error Rate (Compared to Total Vote)	1.28%
3) Illegal Votes Counted	Electors voted where they did not reside <sup>137</sup>	138,221
4) Illegal Votes Counted	Out of state residents voting in Georgia <sup>138</sup>	20,312
5) Illegal Votes Counted	Double Votes <sup>139</sup>	395
TOTAL		204,143
	of total votes cast 4,998,482

*May overlap.

3. State of Michigan voters allege election official errors and improprieties which exceed the Presidential vote margin.<sup>140</sup>

201. State of Michigan voters allege election official errors and improprieties which exceed the Presidential vote margin.

<sup>136</sup> See Georgia Expert Report of Qianying (Jennie) Zhang, Appendix pgs. 1341-1349.

<sup>137</sup> See Georgia Expert Report of Matthew Braynard, Appendix pgs. 1350-1374. ¶3.

<sup>138</sup> See Georgia Expert Report of Matthew Braynard, Appendix pgs. 1350-1374.

<sup>139</sup> See Georgia Expert Report of Matthew Braynard, Appendix pgs. 1350-1374. ¶4.

<sup>140</sup> For full extent of inappropriate activities See Timeline of Electoral Policy Activities, Issues, and Litigation Pennsylvania, Michigan, Wisconsin, Georgia, Arizona, and Nevada August 2003 to November 2020, Appendix 1-20.

202. Michigan has 16 electoral votes, with a statewide vote tally currently estimated at 2,650,695 for President Trump and 2,796,702 for former Vice President Biden, a margin of 146,007 votes. In Wayne County, Mr. Biden's margin (322,925 votes) significantly exceeds his statewide lead.

203. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, the number of votes affected by the various constitutional violations exceeds the margin of votes dividing the candidates.

204. Michigan law generally allows the public the right to observe the counting of ballots. See MCL 168.765a(12) ("At all times, at least 1 election inspector from each major political party must be present at the absent voter counting place and the policies and procedures adopted by the secretary of state regarding the counting of absent voter ballots must be followed.").

205. The Michigan Constitution provides all lawful voters with "[t]he right to have the results of statewide elections audited, in such a manner as prescribed by law, to ensure the accuracy and integrity of elections."<sup>141</sup>

206. Indeed, "[a]ll rights set forth in this subsection shall be self-executing. This subsection shall be liberally construed in favor of voters' rights in order to effectuate its purposes."<sup>142</sup>

207. The public's right to observe applies to counting both in-person and absentee ballots.<sup>143</sup>

---

<sup>141</sup> Mich. Const. 1963, art 2, § 4(1)(h).

<sup>142</sup> Id. (emphasis added).

<sup>143</sup> Regrettably, Defendants and their agents have exclusive possession of the ballots, ballot boxes, and other indicia of voting irregularities so a meaningful audit cannot timely occur. Normally, "[a] person requesting access to voted ballots is entitled to a response from the public body within 5 to 10 business days; however, the public body in possession of the ballots may not provide access for inspection or copying until 30 days after certification of the election by the relevant board of canvassers." Op.Atty.Gen.2010, No. 7247, 2010 WL 2710362.

208. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, Michigan's election officials failed to grant meaningful observation opportunities to the public over the absentee ballots.<sup>144</sup>

209. Wayne County is the most populous county in Michigan.

210. Detroit is the largest city in Wayne County.

211. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, the City of Detroit's observation procedures, for example, failed to ensure transparency and integrity as it did not allow the public to see election officials during key points of absentee ballot processing in the AVCBs at TCF Arena (f/k/a Cobo Hall). Id.

212. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, these irregularities were repeated elsewhere in Wayne County, including in Canton Township, and throughout the State.<sup>145</sup>

213. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, for instance, when absentee ballots arrived, the ballots should have been in an envelope, signed, sealed (and delivered) by the actual voter. Often it was not.

---

<sup>144</sup> See Michigan Petitioners Appendix, Appendix 835; Affidavit of Andrew John Miller, Appendix 1313-1314 at ¶12; Affidavit of Angelic Johnson, Appendix 860-861 at ¶12; Affidavit of Zachary C. Larsen, Appendix 836-845 at ¶¶37-55; Affidavit of G Kline Preston IV, Appendix 886-889 at ¶8; Affidavit of Articia Boomer, Appendix 897-900 at ¶21; Affidavit of Phillip O'Halloran, Appendix 901-910 at ¶¶18-19; Affidavit of Robert Cushman, Appendix 928-930 at ¶3; Affidavit of Jennifer Seidl, Appendix 931-938 at ¶6; Affidavit of Andrew Sitto, Appendix 890-893 at ¶¶23; Affidavit of Kristina Karamo, Appendix 894-896 at ¶5; Affidavit of Jennifer Seidl, Appendix 931-938 at ¶35, 932 at ¶42; Affidavit of Cassandra Brown Appendix 939-944 at ¶33; Affidavit of Adam di Angeli, Appendix 951-967 at ¶30; Affidavit of Kayla Toma Appendix 977-983 at ¶¶14-15, 978 at ¶21, 979 at ¶¶31-32; Affidavit of Matthew Mikolajczak, Appendix 985-991; Affidavit of Braden Giacobazzi, Appendix 995-1000 at ¶¶3, 5, 996 at ¶8; Affidavit of Kristy Klamer Appendix 1006-1009 at ¶¶4-5, 1007 at ¶¶6-9.

<sup>145</sup> See, generally, Affidavits of Cassandra Brown Appendix 939-944 at ¶34; Lucille Ann Huizinga, Appendix 1016-1020 at ¶31; Laurie Ann Knott, Appendix 1010-1015 at ¶¶34-35; Marilyn Jean Nowak Appendix 1021-1023 at ¶17; Marlene K. Hager, Appendix 1024-1027 at ¶¶19-23; and Sandra Sue Workman Appendix 1028-1032 at ¶33 (allegedly sending ballots from Grand Rapids to TCF Center to be processed and counted).

214. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, ballots were taken from their envelopes and inspected to determine whether any deficiencies would obstruct the ballot from being fed through a tabulation machine. If any deficiencies existed (or were created by tampering), the ballot was hand duplicated.

215. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, Democrat officials and election workers repeatedly scanned ballots in high-speed scanners, often counting the same ballot more than once.<sup>146</sup>

216. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, the evidence will also show that these hand duplication efforts ignored the legislative mandate to have one person from each major party sign every duplicated vote (i.e., one Republican and one Democrat had to sign each "duplicated" ballot and record it in the official poll book).

217. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, several poll watchers, inspectors, and other whistleblowers witnessed the surge of unlawful practices described above.<sup>147</sup>

218. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, these unlawful practices provided cover for careless or unscrupulous officials or workers to mark choices for any unfilled elections or questions on the ballot, potentially and substantially affecting down ballot races where there are often significant undervotes, or causing the ballots to be discarded due to overvotes.

a. Michigan Voters Allege Election Malfeasance at the TCF Center Shows Widespread Problems.<sup>148</sup>

219. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, there were many issues of mistake, fraud, and other malfeasance at the TCF Center during the Election and during the counting process

---

<sup>146</sup> Affidavit of Articia Boomer, Appendix 897-899 at ¶¶10-11, 13; Affidavit of William Carzon, Appendix 973-976 at ¶8; Affidavit of Matthew Mikolajczak Appendix 985-991; Affidavit of Melissa Carone, Appendix 992-994 at ¶¶3-4.

<sup>147</sup> Affidavit of Melissa Carone, Appendix 992-994 at ¶9.

<sup>148</sup> See Expert Declaration of Dennis Nathan Cain (II), Appendix 60-68.

thereafter.<sup>149</sup>

220. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, on election day, election officials at the TCF Center systematically processed and counted ballots from voters whose names failed to appear in either the Qualified Voter File ("QVF") or in the supplemental sheets. When a voter's name could not be found, the election worker assigned the ballot to a random name already in the QVF to a person who had not voted.<sup>150</sup>

221. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, on election day, election officials at the TCF Center instructed election workers to not verify signatures on absentee ballots, to backdate absentee ballots, and to process such ballots regardless of their validity.<sup>151</sup>

222. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, after the statutory deadlines passed and local officials had announced the last absentee ballots had been received, another batch of unsecured and unsealed ballots, without envelopes, arrived in unsecure trays at the TCF Center.

223. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, there were tens of thousands of these late-arriving absentee ballots, and apparently every ballot was counted and attributed only to Democratic candidates.<sup>152</sup>

224. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, election officials at the TCF Center instructed election workers to process ballots that appeared after the election deadline and to inaccurately report or backdate those ballots as having been received before the November 3, 2020, deadline.<sup>153</sup>

225. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, election officials at the TCF Center

---

<sup>149</sup> See Affidavit of Senator Ruth Johnson, Appendix at 849-850.

<sup>150</sup> See Affidavit of Zachary C. Larsen, Appendix 836-845 at ¶33; Affidavit of Robert Cushman, Appendix 928-930 at ¶7.

<sup>151</sup> See Affidavit of Jessy Jacobs, Appendix 846-848 at ¶15.

<sup>152</sup> See Affidavit of John McGrath Appendix 968-972 at ¶8.

<sup>153</sup> See Affidavit of Jessy Jacobs, Appendix 846-848 at ¶17.

systematically used inaccurate information to process ballots.<sup>154</sup>

226. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, many times, the election workers overrode the software by inserting new names into the QVF after the election deadline or recording these new voters as having a birthdate of "1/1/1900," which is the "default" birthday.<sup>155</sup>

227. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, each day before the election, City of Detroit election workers and employees coached voters to vote for Joe Biden and the Democratic Party candidates.<sup>156</sup>

228. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, these workers, employees, and so-called consultants encouraged voters to vote a straight Democratic Party ticket. These election workers went over to the voting booths with voters to watch them vote and to coach them as to which candidates they should vote for.<sup>157</sup>

229. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, before and after the statutory deadline, unsecured ballots arrived at the TCF Center loading garage, loose on the floor not in sealed ballot boxes—with no chain of custody and often with no secrecy envelopes.<sup>158</sup>

230. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, election officials and workers at the TCF Center duplicated ballots by hand without allowing poll challengers to check if the duplication was accurate.<sup>159</sup>

---

<sup>154</sup> Affidavit of Cassandra Brown, Appendix 939-944 at ¶33.

<sup>155</sup> See Affidavit of John McGrath Appendix 968-972 at ¶8; Affidavit of Kristina Karamo Appendix 894-896 at ¶6; Affidavit of Robert Cushman, Appendix 928-930 at ¶¶10-12, 929 at ¶16; Affidavit of Jennifer Seidl, Appendix 931-938 at ¶¶52-53; Affidavit of Braden Giacobazzi Appendix 995-1000 at ¶10; Affidavit of Kristy Klammer Appendix 1006-1009 at ¶13.

<sup>156</sup> See Affidavit of Jessy Jacobs, Appendix 846-848 at ¶8.

<sup>157</sup> See Affidavit of Jessy Jacobs, Appendix 846-848 at ¶8.

<sup>158</sup> Affidavit of Articia Boomer, Appendix 897-900 at ¶8, 898 at ¶¶9, 18.

<sup>159</sup> See Affidavit Andrew Sitto, Appendix 890-893 at ¶9; Affidavit of Phillip O'Halloran Appendix 901-910 at ¶22; Affidavit of Cynthia O'Halloran Appendix 911-914; Affidavit of Eugene Dixon, Appendix 947-948 at ¶5; Affidavit of Jason Humes Appendix 918-922.

231. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, election officials repeatedly obstructed poll challengers from observing.<sup>160</sup>

232. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, election officials violated the plain language of the law MCL 168.765a by permitting thousands of ballots to be filled out by hand and duplicated on site without oversight from bipartisan poll challengers.

233. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, after poll challengers started uncovering the statutory violations at the TCF Center, election officials and workers locked credentialed challengers out of the counting room so they could not observe the process, during which time tens of thousands of ballots, if not more, were improperly processed.<sup>161</sup>

b. Michigan voters Allege Suspicious Funding and Training of Election Workers

234. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, in September, the Detroit City council approved a $1 million contract for the staffing firm P.I.E. Management, LLC to hire up to 2,000 workers to work the polls and to staff the ballot counting machines at the TCF Center. P.I.E. Management, LLC is owned and controlled by a Democratic Party operative.

235. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, a week after approval, P.I.E. Management, LLC began advertising for workers, stating, "Candidates must be 16 years or older. Candidates are required to attend a 3-hour training session before the General Election. The position offers two shifts and pay-rates: 1) From 7 am to 7 pm at $600.00; and 2) From 10 pm to 6 am at $650."

---

<sup>160</sup> See Affidavit of Zachary C. Larsen, Appendix 836-845 at ¶¶37-55; Affidavit of Janice Hermann, Appendix 915-917 at ¶5; Affidavit of Jennifer Seidl, Appendix 931-938 at ¶29, 932 at ¶42; Affidavit of Cassandra Brown, Appendix 939-944 at ¶33.

<sup>161</sup> See Affidavit of Zachary C. Larsen, Appendix 836-845 at ¶¶37-55; Affidavit of Janice Hermann, Appendix 915-917 at ¶5; Affidavit of Jennifer Seidl, Appendix 931-938 at ¶29, 932 at ¶32, 933 at ¶42; Affidavit of Cassandra Brown, Appendix 939-944 at ¶¶33; Affidavit of Anna England, Appendix 949-950 at ¶¶5,7; Affidavit of Matthew Mikolajczak Appendix 985-991; Affidavit of Braden Giacobazzi, Appendix 995-1000 at ¶6.

Consequently, these temporary workers were earning at least $50 per hour—far exceeding prevailing rates at most rural communities.

236. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, the evidence exists to show that this money and much more came from a single private source: Mark Zuckerberg and his spouse, through the charity called Center for Tech and Civic Life (CTCL), which paid over $400 million nationwide to Democrat-favoring election officials and municipalities.<sup>162</sup>

237. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, the improper private funding to Michigan exceeded $9.8 million.<sup>163</sup>

c. Michigan Voter Allege Forging Ballots on the QVF

238. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, whistleblowers observed election officials processing ballots at the TCF Center without confirming that the voter was eligible to vote.<sup>164</sup>

239. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, whistleblowers observed election officials assigning ballots to different voters, causing a ballot being counted for a non-eligible voter by assigning it to a voter in the QVF who had not yet voted.<sup>165</sup>

d. Michigan Voters Allege Changing Dates on Ballots

240. All lawful absentee ballots were supposed to be in the QVF system by 9:00 p.m. on November 3, 2020.

241. This deadline had to be met to ensure an accurate final list of absentee voters who returned their ballots before the statutory deadline of 8:00 p.m. on November 3, 2020.

---

<sup>162</sup> See, generally, Expert Report of James Carlson, Appendix pgs. 21-30.

<sup>163</sup> See Expert Report of James Carlson, Appendix pgs. 1079-1111.

<sup>164</sup> See Affidavit of Zachary C. Larsen, Appendix 836-845 at ¶12.

<sup>165</sup> See Affidavit of John McGrath Appendix 968-972 at ¶8; Affidavit of Kristina Karamo Appendix 894-896 at ¶6; Affidavit of Robert Cushman, Appendix 928-930 at ¶¶10-12, 929 at ¶16; Affidavit of Jennifer Seidl, Appendix 931-938 at ¶¶52-53; Affidavit of Braden Giacobazzi Appendix 995-1000 at ¶10; Affidavit of Kristy Klammer Appendix 1006-1009 at ¶13.

242. To have enough time to process the absentee ballots, election officials told polling locations to collect the absentee ballots from the drop-boxes every hour on November 3, 2020.

243. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, on November 4, 2020, a City of Detroit election whistleblower at the TCF Center was told to improperly pre-date the receive date for absentee ballots that were not in the QVF as if they had been received on or before November 3, 2020. The Whistleblower swore she was told to alter the information in the QVF to inaccurately show that the absentee ballots had been timely received. She estimates that this was done to thousands of ballots.<sup>166</sup>

e. Michigan Voters allege Double Voting.

244. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, an election worker in the City of Detroit observed several people who came to the polling place to vote in-person, but they had already applied for an absentee ballot.<sup>167</sup>

245. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, election officials allowed these people to vote in-person, and they did not require them to return the mailed absentee ballot or sign an affidavit that the voter lost or "spoiled" the mailed absentee ballot as required by law and policy.

246. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, this illicit process allowed people to vote in person and to send in an absentee ballot, thereby voting twice. This "double voting" was made possible by the unlawful ways in which election officials were counting and inputting ballots at the TCF Center from across the City's several polling places.

247. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, the Secretary of State's absentee ballot scheme exacerbated this "double voting," as set forth further in this Petition.<sup>168</sup>

---

<sup>166</sup> See Affidavit of Jessie Jacobs, Appendix 846-848 at ¶17.

<sup>167</sup> See Affidavit of Jessie Jacobs, Appendix 846-848 at ¶10; Affidavit of Anna England, Appendix 949-950 at ¶45.

<sup>168</sup> See, also, Expert Report of Matthew Braynard, Appendix 1112-1122 at ¶6.

f. Michigan Voters Allege Problems With First Wave of New Ballots at TCF Center.

248. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, early in the morning of November 4, 2020, tens of thousands of ballots were suddenly brought into the counting room at the TCF Center through the back door.<sup>169</sup>

249. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, these new ballots were brought to the TCF Center by vehicles with out-of-state license plates.<sup>170</sup>

250. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, whistleblowers claim that all of these new ballots were cast for Joe Biden.<sup>171</sup>

251. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, these ballots still do not share or have the markings establishing the proper chain of custody from valid precincts and clerks and are among the approximately 70% of unmatched AVCB errors identified by Palmer and Hartmann.

g. Michigan Voters Allege Problems With Second Wave of New Ballots at TCF Center.

252. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, the ballot counters needed to check every ballot to confirm that the name on the ballot matched the name on the electronic poll list—the list of all persons who had registered to vote on or before November 1, 2020 (the QVF).

253. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, the ballot counters were also provided with supplemental sheets which had the names of all persons who had registered to vote on either November 2, 2020 or November 3, 2020.

---

<sup>169</sup> See Affidavit of John McGrath Appendix 968-972 at ¶4 (around 3:00 a.m.); Affidavit of Articia Boomer, Appendix 897-900 at ¶18 (around 4:00 a.m.); Affidavit of William Carzon, Appendix 973-976 at ¶11 (around 4:00 a.m.); Affidavit Andrew Sitto, Appendix 890-893 at ¶16 (alleges about 4:30 a.m.).

<sup>170</sup> See Affidavit of Andrew Sitto, Appendix 890-893 at ¶15.

<sup>171</sup> See Affidavit of Andrew Sitto, Appendix 890-893 at ¶¶17-18.

254. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, the validation process for a ballot requires the name on the ballot match with a registered voter on either the QVF or the supplemental sheets.

255. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, at around 9:00 p.m. on Wednesday, November 4, 2020, several more boxes of ballots were brought to the TCF Center. This was a second wave of new ballots.

256. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, election officials instructed the ballot counters to use the "default" date of birth of January 1, 1900, on all of these newly appearing ballots.<sup>172</sup>

257. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, none of the names on these new ballots corresponded with any registered voter on the QVF or the supplemental sheets.<sup>173</sup>

258. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, despite election rules requiring all absentee ballots to be inputted into the QVF system before 9:00 p.m. the day before, election workers inputted these new ballots into the QVF, manually adding each voter to the list after the deadline.

259. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, almost all of these new ballots were entered into the QVF using the "default" date of birth of January 1, 1900.<sup>174</sup>

260. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, these newly received ballots were either fabricated or apparently cast by persons who were not registered to vote before the polls closed at 8:00 p.m. on election day.

---

<sup>172</sup> See Affidavit of John McGrath Appendix 968-972 at ¶8; Affidavit of Kristina Karamo Appendix 894-896 at ¶6; Affidavit of Robert Cushman, Appendix 928-930 at ¶¶10-12, 929 at ¶16; Affidavit of Jennifer Seidl, Appendix 931-938 at ¶¶52-53; Affidavit of Braden Giacobazzi Appendix 995-1000 at ¶10; Affidavit of Kristy Klammer Appendix 1006-1009 at ¶13.

<sup>173</sup> See Affidavit of John McGrath, Appendix 968-972 at ¶¶7, 14, 969 at ¶¶16-18.

<sup>174</sup> See Affidavit of John McGrath, Appendix 968-972 at ¶8; Affidavit of Kristina Karamo, Appendix 894-896 at ¶6; Affidavit of Robert Cushman, Appendix 928-930 at ¶¶10-12, 929 at ¶16; Affidavit of Jennifer Seidl, Appendix 931-938 at ¶¶52-53; Affidavit of Braden Giacobazzi, Appendix 995-1000 at ¶10; Affidavit of Kristy Klammer, Appendix 1006-1009 at ¶13.

261. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, these ballots still do not share or have the markings establishing the proper chain of custody from valid precincts and clerks and are among the approximately 70% of unmatched AVCB errors identified by Palmer and Hartmann.<sup>175</sup>

262. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, this means there were more votes tabulated than there were ballots in over 71% of the 134 AVCBs in Detroit. That equates to over 95 AVCB being significantly "off." Id.

263. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, according to public testimony before the state canvassers on November 23, City of Detroit Election Consultant Daniel Baxter admitted in some instances the imbalances exceeded 600 votes per AVCB. He did not reveal the total disparity.

h. Michigan Voters Allege a Concealment of the Malfeasance in Violation of Michigan law.

264. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, many election challengers were denied access to observe the counting process by election officials at the TCF Center.<sup>176</sup>

265. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, after denying access to the counting rooms, election officials at the TCF Center used large pieces of cardboard to block the windows to the counting room, thereby preventing anyone from watching the ballot counting process.<sup>177</sup>

---

<sup>175</sup> See generally Affidavits of Monica Palmer and William Hartman, Appendix 851-859 at ¶¶6 and 852 at ¶14.

<sup>176</sup> See Affidavit of Angelic Johnson, Appendix 860-861 at ¶12; Affidavit of Zachary C. Larsen, Appendix 836-845 at ¶¶37-55; Affidavit of G Kline Preston IV, Appendix 886-889 at ¶8; Affidavit of Articia Boomer, Appendix 897-900 at ¶21; Affidavit of Phillip O'Halloran, Appendix 901-910 at ¶¶18-19; Affidavit of Robert Cushman, Appendix 928-930 at ¶3; Affidavit of Jennifer Seidl, Appendix 931-938 at ¶6; Affidavit of Andrew Sitto, Appendix 890-893 at ¶23; Affidavit of Kristina Karamo, Appendix 894-896 at ¶5; Affidavit of Jennifer Seidl, Appendix 931-938 at ¶35, 932 at ¶42; Affidavit of Cassandra Brown Appendix 939-944 at ¶33; Affidavit of Adam di Angeli Appendix 951-967 at ¶30; Affidavit of Kayla Toma Appendix 977-983 at ¶¶14-15, 979 at ¶21, 980 at ¶¶31-32; Affidavit of Matthew Mikolajczak Appendix 985-991; Affidavit of Braden Giacobazzi Appendix 995-1000 at ¶¶3, 5, 996 at ¶8; Affidavit of Kristy Klamer Appendix 1006-1009 at ¶¶4-5, 1007 at ¶¶6-9.

<sup>177</sup> See Affidavit of Zachary C. Larsen, Appendix 836-845 at ¶52; Affidavit of John McGrath Appendix 968-972 at ¶10; Affidavit of Andrew Sitto, Appendix 890-893 at ¶22.

266. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, election officials have continued to conceal their efforts by refusing meaningful bipartisan access to inspect the ballots. Even if Republicans were involved in oversight roles by statute (such as with the Wayne County Canvassing Board), the Republican members have been harassed, threatened, and doxed (including publicly revealing where their children go to school) to pressure them to capitulate and violate their statutory duties. This conduct is beyond the pale and shocking to the conscience.<sup>178</sup>

i. Michigan voters allege unsecured QVF Access further Violating MCL 168.765a, *et seq.

267. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, whenever an absentee voter application or in-person absentee voter registration was finished, election workers at the TCF Center were instructed to input the voter's name, address, and date of birth into the QVF system.

268. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, the QVF system can be accessed and edited by any election processor with proper credentials in the State of Michigan at any time and from any location with Internet access.

269. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, this access permits anyone with the proper credentials to edit when ballots were sent, received, and processed from any location with Internet access.

270. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, many of the counting computers within the counting room had icons that revealed that they were connected to the Internet.

---

<sup>178</sup> See Affidavit of William Hartman; Appendix 851-856 at ¶¶8; Affidavit of Monica Palmer, Appendix 857-859 at ¶¶18-22, and 24; Affidavit of Dr. Phillip O'Halloran, Appendix 901-910 at ¶¶24-25; Affidavit of Jennifer Seidl, Appendix 931-938 at ¶23, 932 at ¶¶27, 30-31, 933 at ¶¶36-37; Affidavit of Eugene Dixon, Appendix 947-48 at ¶9; Affidavit of Matthew Mikolajczak, Appendix 985-991; Affidavit of Melissa Carone Appendix 992-994 at ¶12; Affidavit of Braden Giacobazzi, Appendix 995-1000 at ¶3, 996 at ¶7, 997 at 12, 998 at ¶¶12-14; Affidavit of Kaya Toma Appendix 977-983 at ¶15; Affidavit of Kristy Klammer Appendix 1009-1009 at ¶¶4-5, 1010 at ¶¶6-9.

271. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, Secretary of State Benson executed a contract to give a private partisan group, Rock the Vote, unfettered real-time access to Michigan's QVF.<sup>179</sup>

272. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, Benson sold or gave Michigan citizens' private voter information to private groups in furtherance of her own partisan goals.

273. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, Benson and the State repeatedly concealed this unlawful contract and have refused to tender a copy despite several lawful requests for the government contract under FOIA.

274. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, improper access to the QVF was one of the chief categories of serious concern identified by the Michigan Auditor General's Report.<sup>180</sup>

275. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, a poll challenger witnessed tens of thousands of ballots, and possibly more, being delivered to the TCF Center that were not in any approved, sealed, or tamper-proof container.

276. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, large quantities of ballots were delivered to the TCF Center in what appeared to be mail bins with open tops.<sup>181</sup> See the photo of the TCF Center below:

---

<sup>179</sup> See Rock the Vote Agreement, Appendix 1152-1167.

<sup>180</sup> See Appendix pgs. 1039-1078 at material finding #2

<sup>181</sup> See Affidavit of Daniel Gustafson, Appendix 945-946 at ¶¶4-6.

277. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, these ballot bins and containers did not have lids, were unsealed, and could not have a metal seal.<sup>182</sup>

278. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, some ballots were found unsecured on the public sidewalk outside the Department of Elections in the City of Detroit, reinforcing the claim that boxes of ballots arrived at the TCF Center unsealed, with no chain of custody, and with no official markings. A photograph of ballots found on the sidewalk outside the Department of Elections appears below:

279. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, the City of Detroit held a drive-in ballot drop off where individuals would drive up and drop their ballots into an unsecured tray. No verification was done. This was not a secured drop-box with video surveillance. To encourage this practice, free food and beverages were provided to those who dropped off their ballots using this method.<sup>183</sup>

---

<sup>182</sup> See Affidavit of Rhonda Webber, Appendix 877-879 at ¶3.

j. Michigan Voters Allege a Breaking of the Seal of Secrecy Undermines Constitutional Liberties under Michigan Constitution Art 2, § 4(1)(a).

280. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, many times, election officials at the TCF Center broke the seal of secrecy for ballots to check which candidates the individual voted for on his or her ballot, thereby violating the voter's expectation of privacy.<sup>184</sup>

281. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, voters in Michigan have a constitutional right to open elections, and the Michigan Legislature provided them the right to vote in secret. The election officials' conduct, together with others, violates both of these hallmark principles.<sup>185</sup>

282. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, in Michigan, it is well-settled that the election process is supposed to be transparent and the voter's ballot secret, not the other way around.

283. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, the election officials' absentee ballot scheme has improperly revealed voters' preferences exposing Petitioners' and similarly-situated voters to dilution or spoliation while simultaneously obfuscating the inner workings of the election process.

284. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, now the Michigan election officials seek to perform an "audit" on themselves.

k. Michigan Voters Allege Statewide Irregularities Over Absentee Ballots Reveal Widespread Mistake or Fraud.

285. When a person requested an absentee ballot either by mail or in-person, that person needed to sign the absentee voter application.

---

<sup>183</sup> See Affidavit of Cynthia Cassell Appendix 862-876 at ¶3 and 863 ¶¶9-10.

<sup>184</sup> See Affidavit of Zachary C. Larsen; Appendix 836-845 at ¶16-18, 20.

<sup>185</sup> See Affidavit of Jennifer Seidl, Appendix 931-938 at ¶18.

286. When the voter returned their absentee ballot to be counted, the voter was required to sign the outside of the envelope that contained the ballot.

287. Election officials who process absentee ballots are required to compare the signature on the absentee ballot application with the signature on the absentee ballot envelope.<sup>186</sup>

288. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, election officials at the TCF Center, for example, instructed workers not to validate or compare signatures on absentee ballot applications and absentee ballot envelopes to ensure their authenticity and validity.<sup>187</sup>

289. Michigan law requires absentee votes to be counted by election inspectors in a particular manner. It requires, in relevant part:

(10) The oaths administered under subsection (9) must be placed in an envelope provided for the purpose and sealed with the red state seal. Following the election, the oaths must be delivered to the city or township clerk. Except as otherwise provided in subsection (12), a person in attendance at the absent voter counting place or combined absent voter counting place shall not leave the counting place after the tallying has begun until the polls close. Subject to this subsection, the clerk of a city or township may allow the election inspectors appointed to an absent voter counting board in that city or township to work in shifts. A second or subsequent shift of election inspectors appointed for an absent voter counting board may begin that shift at any time on election day as provided by the city or township clerk. However, an election inspector shall not leave the absent voter counting place after the tallying has begun until the polls close. If the election inspectors appointed to an absent voter counting board are authorized to work in shifts, at no time shall there be a gap between shifts and the election inspectors must never leave the absent voter ballots unattended. At all times, at least 1 election inspector from each major political party must be present at the absent voter counting place and the policies and procedures adopted by the secretary of state regarding the counting of absent voter ballots must be followed. A person who causes the polls to be closed or who discloses an election result or in any manner characterizes how any ballot being counted has been voted in a voting precinct before the time the polls can be legally closed on election day is guilty of a felony.<sup>188</sup>

290. Under MCL 168.31, the Secretary of State can issue instructions and rules consistent with Michigan statutes and the Constitution that bind local election authorities. Likewise, under

---

<sup>186</sup> See Affidavit of Jennifer Seidl, Appendix 931-938 at ¶60.

<sup>187</sup> See Affidavit of Jessy Jacobs, Appendix 846-848 at ¶15.

<sup>188</sup> MCL 168.765a (10) (emphasis added).

MCL 168.765a(13), the Secretary can develop instructions consistent with the law for the conduct of Absent Voter Counting Boards (“AVCB”) or combined AVCBs. “The instructions developed under [] subsection [13] are binding upon the operation of an absent voter counting board or combined absent voter counting board used in an election conducted by a county, city, or township.”<sup>189</sup>

291. Benson also promulgated an election manual that requires bipartisan oversight:

Each ballot rejected by the tabulator must be visually inspected by an election inspector to verify the reason for the rejection. If the rejection is due to a false read the ballot must be duplicated by two election inspectors who have expressed a preference for different political parties. Duplications may not be made until after 8 p.m. in the precinct (place the ballot requiring duplication in the auxiliary bin). At an AV counting board duplications can be completed throughout the day. NOTE: The Bureau of Elections has developed a video training series that summarizes key election day management issues, including a video on Duplicating Ballots. These videos can be accessed at the Bureau of Elections web site at www.michigan.gov/elections; under “Information for Election Administrators”; Election Day Management Training Videos. Election Officials Manual, Michigan Bureau of Elections, Chapter 8, last revised October 2020.<sup>190</sup>

292. Based on Michigan voters’ allegations, election officials at the TCF Center flouted § 168.765a because there were not, at all times, at least one inspector from each political party at the absentee voter counting place. Rather, the many tables assigned to precincts under the authority of the AVCB were staffed by inspectors for only one party. Those inspectors alone were deciding on the processing and counting of ballots.<sup>191</sup>

293. Based on Michigan voters’ allegations, this processing included the filling out of brand new “cure” or “duplicate” ballots. The process the election officials sanctioned worked in this way. When an absentee ballot was processed and approved for counting, it was fed into a counting machine. Some ballots were rejected—that is, they were a “false read”—because of tears, staining

---

<sup>189</sup> MCL 168.765a(13).

<sup>190</sup> https://www.michigan.gov/documents/sos/VIII\_Absent\_Voter\_County\_Boards\_265998\_7.pdf (emphasis added).

<sup>191</sup> See Affidavit of Jennifer Seidl, Appendix 931-938 at ¶9; Affidavit of Eugene Dixon, Appendix 947-948 at ¶5; Affidavit of Mellissa Carone, Appendix 992-994 at ¶5.

(such as coffee spills), over-votes, and other errors. In some of these cases, inspectors could visually inspect the rejected ballot and determine what was causing the machine to find a “false read.” When this happened, the inspectors could duplicate the ballot, expressing the voter’s intent in a new ballot that could then be fed into the machine and counted.

294. Under § 168.765a and the Secretary of State’s controlling manual, as cited above, an inspector from each major party must be present and must sign to show that they approve of the duplication.

295. Based on Michigan voters’ allegations, rather than following this controlling mandate, the AVCB was allowing a Democratic Party inspector only to fill out a duplicate. Republicans would sign only “if possible.”<sup>192</sup> A photograph evidencing this illicit process appears below:

296. Based on Michigan voters’ allegations, the TCF Center election officials allowed hundreds or thousands of ballots to be “duplicated” solely by the Democratic Party inspectors and then counted in violation of Michigan election law.<sup>193</sup>

<sup>192</sup> See Affidavit of Patricia Blackmer, Appendix 923-927 at ¶11.

<sup>193</sup> See Affidavit of Zachary C. Larsen, Appendix 836-845 at ¶¶37-55; Affidavit of Janice Hermann, Appendix 915-917 at ¶¶4-5; Affidavit of Jennifer Seidl, Appendix 931-938 at ¶29, 933 at ¶42; Affidavit of Cassandra Brown, Appendix 939-944 at ¶¶33; Affidavit of Phillip O’Halloran, Appendix 901-910 at ¶22; Affidavit of Anna England, Appendix 949-950 at ¶8.

297. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, according to eyewitness accounts, election officials at the TCF Center habitually and systematically disallowed election inspectors from the Republican Party to be present in the voter counting place and refused access to election inspectors from the Republican party to be within a close enough distance from the absentee voter ballots to see for whom the ballots were cast.

298. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, election officials at the TCF Center refused entry to official election inspectors from the Republican Party into the counting place to observe the counting of absentee voter ballots. Election officials even physically blocked and obstructed election inspectors from the Republican party by adhering large pieces of cardboard to the transparent glass doors so the counting of absent voter ballots was not viewable.<sup>194</sup>

299. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, absentee ballots from military members, who tend to vote Republican in the general elections, were counted separately at the TCF Center. All (100%) of the military absentee ballots had to be duplicated by hand because the form of the ballot was such that election workers could not run them through the tabulation machines used at the TCF Center.<sup>195</sup>

300. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, these military ballots were supposed to be the last ones counted, but there was another large drop of ballots that occurred during the counting of the military absentee ballots.<sup>196</sup>

---

<sup>194</sup> See Affidavit of Zachary C. Larsen, Appendix 836-845 at ¶¶37-55; Affidavit of Janice Hermann, Appendix 915-917 at ¶5; Affidavit of Jennifer Seidl, Appendix 931-938 at ¶29, 932 at ¶32, 933 at ¶42; Affidavit of Cassandra Brown, Appendix 939-944 at ¶¶33; Affidavit of Anna England, Appendix 949-950 at ¶¶5,7; Affidavit of Matthew Mikolajczak, Appendix 985-991; Affidavit of Braden Giacobazzi, Appendix 995-1000 at ¶6.

<sup>195</sup> See Affidavit of Janice Hermann, Appendix 915-917 at ¶16.

<sup>196</sup> Id. see also, Affidavit of Robert Cushman, Appendix 928-930 at ¶¶4-5.

301. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, the military absentee ballot count at the TCF Center occurred after the Republican challengers and poll watchers were kicked out of the counting room.<sup>197</sup>

302. The Michigan Legislature also requires City Clerks to post the following absentee voting information anytime an election is conducted that involves a state or federal office:

- a. The clerk must post before 8:00 a.m. on Election Day: 1) the number of absent voter ballots distributed to absent voters 2) the number of absent voter ballots returned before Election Day and 3) the number of absent voter ballots delivered for processing.
- b. The clerk must post before 9:00 p.m. on Election Day: 1) the number of absent voter ballots returned on Election Day 2) the number of absent voter ballots returned on Election Day which were delivered for processing 3) the total number of absent voter ballots returned both before and on Election Day and 4) the total number of absent voter ballots returned both before and on Election Day which were delivered for processing.
- c. The clerk must post immediately after all precinct returns are complete: 1) the total number of absent voter ballots returned by voters and 2) the total number of absent voter ballots received for processing.<sup>198</sup>

303. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, the clerk for the City of Detroit failed to post by 8:00 a.m. on "Election Day" the number of absentee ballots distributed to absent voters and failed to post before 9:00 p.m. the number of absent voter ballots returned both before and on "Election Day."

304. According to Michigan Election law, all absentee voter ballots must be returned to the clerk before polls close at 8 p.m.<sup>199</sup> Any absentee voter ballots received by the clerk after the close of the polls on election day should not be counted.

305. The Michigan Legislature allows for early counting of absentee votes before the closings of the polls for large jurisdictions, such as the City of Detroit and Wayne County.

---

<sup>197</sup> Id. Affidavit of Jennifer Seidl, Appendix 931-938 at ¶42.

<sup>198</sup> See MCL 168.765(5).

<sup>199</sup> MCL 168.764a.

306. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, receiving tens of thousands more absentee ballots in the early morning hours after Election Day and after the counting of the absentee ballots had already concluded, without proper oversight, with tens of thousands of ballots attributed to just one candidate, Joe Biden, confirms that election officials failed to follow proper election protocols and established Michigan election law.<sup>200</sup>

307. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, missing the statutory deadline proscribed by the Michigan Legislature for turning in the absentee ballot or timely updating the QVF invalidates the vote under Michigan Election Law and the United States Constitution.

308. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, poll challengers observed election workers and supervisors writing on ballots themselves to alter them, apparently manipulating spoiled ballots by hand and then counting the ballots as valid, counting the same ballot more than once, adding information to incomplete affidavits accompanying absentee ballots, counting absentee ballots returned late, counting unvalidated and unreliable ballots, and counting the ballots of "voters" who had no recorded birthdates and were not registered in the QVF or on any supplemental sheets.<sup>201</sup>

1. Michigan Voters Allege that Flooding the Election with Absentee Ballots was Improper.

309. Michigan does not permit "mail-in" ballots per se, and for good reason: mail-in ballots facilitate fraud and dishonest elections.<sup>202</sup>

---

<sup>200</sup> See Affidavit of John McGrath Appendix 968-972 at ¶4; Affidavit of Robert Cushman, Appendix 928-930 at ¶14.

<sup>201</sup> See Affidavit of Angelic Johnson Appendix 860-861 at ¶7; Affidavit of Adam di Angeli Appendix 951-967 at ¶61; see also, Affidavit of John McGrath, supra; Affidavit of Kristina Karamo, supra; Affidavit of Robert Cushman, supra; Affidavit of Jennifer Seidl, supra; Affidavit of Braden Giacobazzi, supra; Affidavit of Kristy Klammer, supra.

<sup>202</sup> See, e.g., Veasey v Abbott, 830 F3d 216, 256, 263 (5th Cir. 2016) (observing that "mail-in ballot fraud is a significant threat—unlike in-person voter fraud," and comparing "in-person voting—a form of

310. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, Secretary of State Benson's absentee ballot scheme, as explained above, achieved the same purpose as mail-in ballots—contrary to Michigan law. In the most charitable light, this was profoundly naïve and cut against the plain language and clear intent of the Michigan Legislature to limit fraud. More cynically, this was an intentional effort to favor her preferred candidates.

311. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, Benson put this scheme in place because it is generally understood that Republican voters were more likely to vote in-person. This trend has been true for decades and proved true with this Election too.<sup>203</sup>

312. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, to counter this (i.e., the fact that Republicans are more likely than Democrats to vote in-person), Benson implemented a scheme to permit mail-in voting, leading to this dispute and the absentee ballot scheme that unfairly favored Democrats over Republicans.

313. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, in her letter accompanying her absentee ballot scheme, Benson misstated, "You have the right to vote by mail in every election." Playing on the fears created by the current pandemic, Benson encouraged voting "by email," stating, "During the outbreak of COVID-19, it also enables you to stay home and stay safe while still making your voice heard in our elections."<sup>204</sup>

314. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, prior to Election Day, the Democratic Party's propaganda was to push voters to vote by mail and to vote early. Democratic candidates used the fear of the current pandemic to promote this agenda—an agenda that would benefit Democratic voting with little proven incidence of fraud" with "mail-in voting, which the record shows is far more vulnerable to fraud").

---

<sup>203</sup> See Expert Report of John McLaughlin, Appendix 1135-1146.

<sup>204</sup> Affidavit of Christine Muise, Appendix 880-886 at ¶2, Ex A.

Party candidates. For example, on September 14, 2020, the Democratic National Committee announced the following:

Today Biden for President and the Democratic National Committee are announcing new features on IWillVote.com—the DNC’s voter participation website—that will help voters easily request and return their ballot by mail, as well as learn important information about the voting process in their state as they make their plan to vote.

Previously, an individual could use the site to check or update their registration and find voting locations. Now the new user experience will also guide a voter through their best voting-by-mail option . . . .<sup>205</sup>

According to the Associated Press:

“We have to make it easier for everybody to be able to vote, particularly if we are still basically in the kind of lockdown circumstances we are in now,” Biden told about 650 donors. “But that takes a lot of money, and it’s going to require us to provide money for states and insist they provide mail-in ballots.”<sup>206</sup>

315. Based on Michigan voters’ allegations, similar statements were repeatedly publicly on the Secretary of State’s website:

Voters are encouraged to vote at home with an absentee ballot and to return their ballot as early as possible by drop box, in person at their city or township clerk’s office, or well in advance of the election by mail.<sup>207</sup>

316. The Michigan Legislature set forth detailed requirements for absentee ballots, and these requirements are necessary to prevent voter fraud because it is far easier to commit fraud via an absentee ballot than when voting in person.<sup>208</sup> Michigan law plainly limits the ways you may get an absentee ballot:

(1) Subject to section 761(3), at any time during the 75 days before a primary or special primary, but not later than 8 p.m. on the day of a primary or special primary, an elector may apply for an absent voter ballot. The elector shall apply in person or by mail with the clerk of

---

<sup>205</sup> (available at <https://democrats.org/news/biden-for-president-dnc-announce-new-vote-by-mail-features-on-iwillvote-com/> (last visited Dec. 21, 2020)).

<sup>206</sup> (available at <https://apnews.com/article/6cf3ca7d5a174f2f381636cb4706f505> (last visited Nov. 17, 2020)).

<sup>207</sup> https://www.michigan.gov/sos/0,4670,7-127-1633\_101996---,00.html (emphasis added).

<sup>208</sup> See, e.g., Griffin v Roupas, 385 F3d 1128, 1130-31 (CA7, 2004) (“Voting fraud is a serious problem in U.S. elections generally . . . and it is facilitated by absentee voting”).

the township or city in which the elector is registered. The clerk of a city or township shall not send by first-class mail an absent voter ballot to an elector after 5 p.m. on the Friday immediately before the election. Except as otherwise provided in section 761(2), the clerk of a city or township shall not issue an absent voter ballot to a registered elector in that city or township after 4 p.m. on the day before the election. An application received before a primary or special primary may be for either that primary only, or for that primary and the election that follows. An individual may submit a voter registration application and an absent voter ballot application at the same time if applying in person with the clerk or deputy clerk of the city or township in which the individual resides. Immediately after his or her voter registration application and absent voter ballot application are approved by the clerk or deputy clerk, the individual may, subject to the identification requirement in section 761(6), complete an absent voter ballot at the clerk's office.

(2) Except as otherwise provided in subsection (1) and subject to section 761(3), at any time during the 75 days before an election, but not later than 8 p.m. on the day of an election, an elector may apply for an absent voter ballot. The elector shall apply in person or by mail with the clerk of the township, city, or village in which the voter is registered. The clerk of a city or township shall not send by first-class mail an absent voter ballot to an elector after 5 p.m. on the Friday immediately before the election. Except as otherwise provided in section 761(2), the clerk of a city or township shall not issue an absent voter ballot to a registered elector in that city or township after 4 p.m. on the day before the election. An individual may submit a voter registration application and an absent voter ballot application at the same time if applying in person with the clerk or deputy clerk of the city or township in which the individual resides. Immediately after his or her voter registration application and absent voter ballot application are approved by the clerk, the individual may, subject to the identification requirement in section 761(6), complete an absent voter ballot at the clerk's office.

(3) An application for an absent voter ballot under this section may be made in any of the following ways:

- (a) By a written request signed by the voter.
- (b) On an absent voter ballot application form provided for that purpose by the clerk of the city or township.
- (c) On a federal postcard application.

(4) An applicant for an absent voter ballot shall sign the application. Subject to section 761(2), a clerk or assistant clerk shall not deliver an absent voter ballot to an applicant who does not sign the application. A person shall not be in possession of a signed absent voter ballot application except for the applicant; a member of the applicant's immediate family; a person residing in the applicant's household; a person whose job normally includes the handling of mail, but only during the course of his or her employment; a registered elector requested by the applicant to return the application; or a clerk, assistant of the clerk, or other authorized election official. A registered elector who is requested by the applicant to return his or her absent voter ballot application shall sign the certificate on the absent voter ballot application.

(5) The clerk of a city or township shall have absent voter ballot application forms available in the clerk's office at all times and shall furnish an absent voter ballot application form to anyone upon a verbal or written request.<sup>209</sup>

317. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, the Secretary of State sent unsolicited absentee ballot applications to every household in Michigan with a registered voter, no matter if the voter was still alive or lived at that address.

318. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, the Secretary of State also sent absentee ballot requests to non-residents who were temporarily living in Michigan, such as out-of-state students who are unregistered to vote in Michigan.

319. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, in many instances, the Secretary of State's absentee ballot scheme led to the Secretary of State sending ballot requests to individuals who did not request them.<sup>210</sup>

m. Michigan Voters Allege that Expert Analysis of these Statutory Violations Reveals Widespread Inaccuracies and Loss of Election Integrity.

320. Data analyst Matthew Braynard analyzed the State's database for the Election and related data sets, including its own call center results.<sup>211</sup>

321. Dr. Zhang, a statistician, analyzed the data to extrapolate the datasets statewide.<sup>212</sup>

n. Unlawful unsolicited ballots cast in General Election

322. Braynard opined to a reasonable degree of scientific certainty that out of the 3,507,410 individuals who the State's database identifies as applying for and the State sending an

---

<sup>209</sup> MCL 168.759 (emphasis added).

<sup>210</sup> See Affidavit of Christine Muise, Appendix 880-885 at ¶¶3. Affidavit of Rena M. Lindevaldesen, Appendix 1001-1005 at ¶¶1,3 and 1002 ¶5.

<sup>211</sup> See, generally, Expert Report of Matthew Braynard, Appendix 1112-1122.

<sup>212</sup> See, generally, Expert Report of Dr. Quanying "Jennie" Zhang, Appendix 1123-1134.

absentee ballot, that in his sample of this universe, 12.23% of those absentee voters that did not request an absentee ballot to the clerk's office.<sup>213</sup>

323. These data extrapolate with 99% confidence interval that between 326,460 and 531,467 of the absentee ballots the State issued that were counted were not requested by an eligible State voter (unsolicited).<sup>214</sup>

o. Unsolicited ballots not cast in General Election

324. Out of the 139,190 individuals who the State's database identifies as having not requested (unsolicited) and not returned an absentee ballot, 24.14% of these absentee voters in the State did not request an absentee ballot.<sup>215</sup>

325. These data extrapolate with 99% confidence interval that between 28,932 and 38,409 of the absentee ballots the State issued were not requested by an eligible State voter (unsolicited).<sup>216</sup>

326. Using the most conservative boundary, taken together, these data suggest Michigan election officials violated Michigan Election Law by sending unsolicited ballots to at least 355,392 people.<sup>217</sup>

p. Absentee ballots were also cast but not properly counted (improperly destroyed or spoiled)

327. Out of the 139,190 individuals who the State's database identifies as having not returned an absentee ballot, 22.95% of those absentee voters did in fact mail back an absentee ballot to the clerk's office.<sup>218</sup>

328. This suggests many ballots were destroyed or not counted.

---

<sup>213</sup> See Expert Report of Matthew Braynard, Appendix 1112-1122 at ¶1.

<sup>214</sup> Expert Report of Dr. Quanying "Jennie" Zhang, Appendix 1123-1134 at ¶1.

<sup>215</sup> See Expert Report of Matthew Braynard, Appendix 1112-1122 at ¶2.

<sup>216</sup> Expert Report of Dr. Quanying "Jennie" Zhang, Appendix 1123-1134 at ¶2.

<sup>217</sup> Id. See also, Affidavit of Sandra Sue Workman, Appendix 1028-1032 at ¶28.

<sup>218</sup> See Expert Report of Matthew Braynard, Appendix 1112-1122 at ¶3.

329. These data extrapolate with 99% confidence interval that between 29,682 and 39,048 of absentee ballots that voters returned but were not counted in the State's official records.<sup>219</sup>

330. Out of the 51,302 individuals that had changed their address before the election who the State's database shows as having voted, 1.38% of those individuals denied casting a ballot.<sup>220</sup>

331. This suggests that bad actors exploited election officials' unlawful practice of sending unsolicited ballots and improperly harvested ballots on a widespread scale.

332. Indeed, by not following the anti-fraud measures mandated by the Michigan Legislature, the Secretary of State's absentee ballot scheme invited the improper use of absentee ballots and promoted such unlawful practices as ballot harvesting.<sup>221</sup>

333. Using the State's databases, the databases of the several states, and the NCOA database, at least 13,248 absentee or early voters were not residents of Michigan when they voted.<sup>222</sup>

334. Of absentee voters surveyed and when comparing databases of the several states, at least 317 individuals in Michigan voted in more than one state.<sup>223</sup>

q. Election officials ignored other statutory signature requirements

335. The Secretary of State also sent ballots to people who requested ballots online, but failed to sign the request.<sup>224</sup>

336. As of October 7, 2020, Brater admits sending at least 74,000 absentee ballots without a signed request as mandated by the Michigan Legislature.<sup>225</sup>

---

<sup>219</sup> Expert Report of Dr. Quanying "Jennie" Zhang, Appendix 1123-1134 at ¶3.

<sup>220</sup> Id. at ¶4.

<sup>221</sup> See Affidavit of Rhonda Weber, Appendix 877-879 at ¶7.

<sup>222</sup> See Expert Report of Matthew Braynard, Appendix 1112-1122 at ¶5.

<sup>223</sup> See Expert Report of Matthew Braynard, Appendix 1112-1122 at ¶6.

<sup>224</sup> See adverse Affidavit of Jonathan Brater, Head of Elections Appendix 1147-1151 at ¶10.

<sup>225</sup> Id.

337. By the Election, we must infer that the actual number of illegal ballots sent was much higher.

338. According to state records, another 35,109 absentee votes counted by Benson listed no address.<sup>226</sup>

339. As a result of the absentee ballot scheme, the Secretary of State improperly flooded the election process with absentee ballots, many of which were fraudulent.

340. The Secretary of State's absentee ballot scheme violated the checks and balances put in place by the Michigan Legislature to ensure the integrity and purity of the absentee ballot process and thus the integrity and purity of the 2020 general election.<sup>227</sup>

341. Without limitation, according to state records, 3,373 votes counted in Michigan were ostensibly from voters 100 years old or older.<sup>228</sup>

342. According to census data, however, there are only about 1,747 centenarians in Michigan,<sup>229</sup> and of those, we cannot assume a 100% voting rate.<sup>230</sup>

343. According to state records, at least 259 absentee ballots counted listed their official address as "email" or "accessible by email," which are unlawful per se and suggests improper ballot harvesting.<sup>231</sup>

---

<sup>226</sup> See Braynard Report, supra.

<sup>227</sup> See, generally, Affidavits of Lucille Ann Huizinga, Appendix 1016-1020 at ¶¶31; Laurie Ann Knott, Appendix 1010-1015 at ¶¶34-35; Marilyn Jean Nowak Appendix 1021-1023 at ¶17; Marlene K. Hager, Appendix 1024-1027 at ¶¶19-23; and Sandra Sue Workman Appendix 1028-1032 at ¶33.

<sup>228</sup> See Braynard, supra.

<sup>229</sup> Based on the US Census, 0.0175 percent of Michigan's population is 100 years or older (1,729 centenarians of the total of 9,883,640 people in Michigan in 2010). Census officials estimated Michigan's population at 9,986,857 as of July 2019, which puts the total centenarians at 1,747 or fewer. Source:

<https://www.census.gov/content/dam/Census/library/publications/2012/dec/c2010sr-03.pdf>

<sup>230</sup> See McLaughlin, supra.

<sup>231</sup> See Braynard, supra.

344. According to state records, at least 109 people voted absentee from the Center for Forensic Psychiatry at 8303 PLATT RD, SALINE, MI 48176 (not necessarily ineligible felons, but the State does house the criminally insane at this location), which implies improper ballot harvesting.

345. According to state records, at least 63 people voted absentee at PO BOX 48531, OAK PARK, MI 48237, which is registered to a professional guardian and implies improper ballot harvesting.

346. When compared against the national social security and deceased databases, at least 9 absentee voters in Michigan are confirmed dead as of Election Day, which invalidates those unlawful votes.<sup>232</sup>

347. Taken together, these irregularities far exceed common sense requirements for ensuring accuracy and integrity.

r. Election officials did not fix other recent errors or serious irregularities either.

348. These are the same types of serious concerns raised by the Michigan Auditor General in December 2019.<sup>233</sup>

349. The Auditor General specifically found several violations of MCL 168.492:

- i. 2,212 Electors voted more than once;
- ii. 230 voters were over 122 years old;<sup>234</sup> Id.
- iii. Unauthorized users had access to QVF; Id.; and
- iv. Clerk and Elected Officials had not completed required training.<sup>235</sup>

---

<sup>232</sup> See Braynard, supra.

<sup>233</sup> Appendix 1039-1078.

<sup>234</sup> The oldest living person confirmed by the Guinness Book of World Records is 117 years old and she lives in Japan, not Michigan.

<sup>235</sup> Id.

350. The Auditor General found election officials had not completed required training to obtain or retain accreditation in 14% of counties, 14% of cities, and 23% of townships.<sup>236</sup>

351. The Auditor General found 32 counties, 83 cities, and 426 townships where the clerk had not completed initial accreditation training or, if already accredited, all continuing education training as required by law.<sup>237</sup>

352. The Auditor General found 12 counties, 38 cities, and 290 townships where the clerk had not completed the initial accreditation or continuing education training requirements and no other local election official had achieved full accreditation.<sup>238</sup>

353. Not only were the Auditor General's red flags ignored by Benson, but she arguably made them worse through her absentee ballot scheme.

354. This not only suggests malfeasance, but the scheme precipitated and revealed manifest fraud and exploitation at a level Michigan has never before encountered in its elections.

355. The abuses permitted by the Secretary of State's ballot scheme were on display at the TCF Center, and elsewhere throughout the State.

356. Because this absentee ballot scheme applied statewide, it undermined the integrity and purity of the general election statewide, and it dilutes the lawful votes of millions of Michigan voters.

s. Michigan Voters Allege Flooding Local Election Officials with Private Money

357. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, inappropriate secrecy and lack of transparency began months before Election Day with an unprecedented and orchestrated infusion of hundreds of millions of dollars into local governments nationwide.

---

<sup>236</sup> Id.

<sup>237</sup> Id.

<sup>238</sup> Id.

358. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, more than $9.8 million in private money was poured into Michigan to create an unfair, two-tier election system in Michigan.<sup>239</sup>

359. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, the 2020 election saw the evisceration of state statutes designed to treat voters equally, thereby causing disparate treatment of voters and thus violating the constitutional rights of millions of Michiganders and Americans citizens.

360. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, to date, investigations have uncovered more than $400 million funneled through a collection of non-profits directly to local government coffers nationwide dictating to these local governments how they should manage the election, often contrary to state law.<sup>240</sup>

361. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, these funds were mainly used to: 1) pay "ballot harvesters" bounties, 2) fund mobile ballot pick up units, 3) deputize and pay political activists to manage ballots; 4) pay poll workers and election judges (a/k/a inspectors or adjudicators); 5) establish drop-boxes and satellite offices; 6) pay local election officials and agents "hazard pay" to recruit cities recognized as Democratic Party strongholds to recruit other cities to apply for grants from non-profits; 7) consolidate AVCBs and counting centers to facilitate the movement of hundreds of thousands of questionable ballots in secrecy without legally required bi-partisan observation; 8) implement a two-tier ballot "curing" plan that unlawfully counted ballots in Democrat Party strongholds and spoiled similarly situated ballots in Republican Party areas; and 9) subsidized and designed a scheme to remove the poll watchers from one political party so that the critical responsibility of determining the accuracy of the ballot and the integrity of the count could be done without oversight.

---

<sup>239</sup> See Carlson Report, supra.

<sup>240</sup> See Carlson Report, supra.

362. The Help America Vote Act of 2002 (HAVA) controls how money is spent under federal law. See 42 USC 15301, et seq; see also, MCL 168.18. In turn, Congress used HAVA to create the non-regulatory Election Assistance Commission (EAC), which was delegated the responsibility of providing information, training standards, and funding management to states. The mechanism for administering HAVA is legislatively adopted state HAVA Plans.

363. Michigan's HAVA Plan is undisputed.<sup>241</sup>

364. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, these private funds exceeded the federal government's March 2020 appropriation under HAVA and CARES Acts to help local governments manage the general election during the pandemic.

365. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, as these unmonitored funds flowed through the pipeline directly to hand-picked cities, the outlines of two-tiered treatment of the American voter began to take place. Local governments in Democrat Party strongholds were flush with cash to launch public-private coordinated voter registration drives allowing private access directly to government voter registration files, access to early voting opportunities, the provision of incentives such as food, entertainment, and gifts for early voters, and the off-site collection of ballots. Outside the urban core and immediate suburbs, unbiased election officials were unable to start such efforts for lack of funding.

366. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, difficult to trace private firms funded this scheme through private grants, which dictated methods and procedures to local election officials and where the grantors retained the right to "claw-back" all funds if election officials failed to reach privately set benchmarks—thus entangling the private-public partnership in ways that demand transparency—yet none has been given.

---

<sup>241</sup> See Certified Michigan HAVA State Plan of 2003, Terri Lynn Land Secretary, FR Vol. 69. No. 57 March 24 2004.

367. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, the state officials implicated, and the private interests involved, have refused repeated demands for the release of communications outlining the rationale and plan behind spending more than $400 million provided directly to various election officials before the 2020 general election.

368. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, these funds greased the skids of Democrat-heavy areas violating mandates of the Michigan Legislature, the Michigan HAVA Plan, the dictates of Congress under HAVA, and equal protection and Separation of Powers demanded under the United States Constitution.

369. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, in Michigan specifically, CTCL had awarded eleven grants as of the time of this survey. CTCL funded cities were:

- i. Detroit ($3,512,000);
- ii. Lansing ($443,742);
- iii. East Lansing ($43,850);
- iv. Flint ($475,625);
- v. Ann Arbor ($417,000);
- vi. Muskegon ($433,580);
- vii. Pontiac ($405,564);
- viii. Romulus ($16,645);
- ix. Kalamazoo ($218,869); and
- x. Saginaw ($402,878).<sup>242</sup>

370. In the 2016 election, then candidate Donald Trump only won Saginaw; then candidate Hillary Clinton won the remaining cities.

---

<sup>242</sup> See Expert Report of James Carlson, Appendix 1079-1111. (last updated November 25, 2020).

371. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, in 2020, CTCL funneled $9,451,235 (95.7%) to the ten jurisdictions where candidate Clinton won and only $402,878 (4.3%) to where candidate Trump won.<sup>243</sup>

t. Michigan Voters Allege Unacceptable Antrim County Machine Error Rate.

372. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, Antrim County, Michigan, reported errors arising from the November 3, 2020 election.

373. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, a report regarding Antrim County, Michigan, alleges that Dominion Voting Systems, the election technology used by Antrim County and elsewhere, "is intentionally and purposefully designed with inherent errors to create systemic fraud and influence election results." It's unclear how Allied Security Operations Group (ASOG) reached this conclusion, however.<sup>244</sup>

374. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, likewise, the report, authored by Russell James Ramsland, Jr., who is part of ASOG's management team, says the group found an "error rate" of 68% when examining "the tabulation log" of the server for Antrim County. It's also unclear what the "error rate" data refers to specifically and how it impacts the results.<sup>245</sup>

375. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, "The results of the Antrim County 2020 election are not certifiable," Ramsland wrote. "This is a result of machine and/or software error, not human error."<sup>246</sup>

---

<sup>243</sup> Id.

<sup>244</sup> See Expert Report of Russell J. Ramsland, Jr., Appendix 1146-1168. See Expert Opinion of Anthony J. Couchenor, Appendix 42-47. See Expert Opinion of Dr. Navid Keshavarz-Nia, Appendix 119-128.

<sup>245</sup> Id.

<sup>246</sup> See Ramsland Report, Appendix pg. 2 ¶ 7.

u. Michigan Voters Allege Absentee Ballot Errors.

376. As mentioned above, the Braynard-Zhang analysis, in Michigan, based on the government data shows election officials' absentee ballot errors of 548,016 far exceed the margin of victory of 148,152.

377. The Braynard-Zhang analysis of the government data shows election officials' absentee ballot error rate of at least 6.05% which far exceeds federal law's pre-election certification error rate for voting systems' hardware and software of 0.0008%.<sup>247</sup>

Michigan Voter Election Contest
Michigan Margin +148,152
Type*	Description	Margin
1) Unlawful Ballots	Unsolicited Ballots <sup>248</sup>	355,392
Category 1	Error Rate (Based on Total Votes)	6.05%
2) Illegal Votes Counted	Estimate of ballots requested in the name of a registered voter. Registered Voter did not request ballot	27,825
3) Legal Votes Not Counted	Estimate of ballots that the requester returned but were not counted <sup>249</sup>	29,682
Category 2 and 3 <sup>250</sup>
Total Votes: 53,968	Error Rate (Based on Total Votes)	0.97%
4) Illegal Votes Counted	Electors with no address. <sup>251</sup>	35,109
5) Illegal Votes Counted		259

<sup>247</sup> See Expert Report of Dennis Nathan Cain (III), Appendix 1433-1445.

<sup>248</sup> The number of unsolicited ballots come from the combination of 326,460 absentee ballots issued by the State but not requested by an eligible State voter and the 28,932 absentee ballots the State claims were not returned but who claim they in fact mailed their absentee ballot back. Both of these numbers are the conservative end of Dr. Zhang's 99% confidence interval. Expert Report of Dr. Quanying "Jennie" Zhang, Appendix 1123-1134 at ¶2-3.

<sup>249</sup> Expert Report of Dr. Quanying "Jennie" Zhang, Appendix 1123-1134 at ¶3.

<sup>250</sup> Categories 2 and 3 are mutually exclusive.

<sup>251</sup> See Expert Report of Matthew Braynard, Appendix 1112-1122.

	Electors voted listing email only <sup>252</sup>
6) Unlawful Ballots	No signature required to obtain ballot <sup>253</sup>	74,000
7) Illegal Votes Counted	Absentee or Early Voters Not Residents when they voted <sup>254</sup>	13,248
8) Illegal Votes Counted	Double Votes (Voted in multiple states) <sup>255</sup>	317
TOTAL		548,016
Of total votes cast in MI: 5,547,053

4. State of Wisconsin voters allege election official errors and improprieties which exceed the Presidential vote margin.<sup>256</sup>

378. State of Wisconsin voters allege election official errors and improprieties which exceed the Presidential vote margin.

376. Wisconsin has 10 electoral votes, with a statewide vote tally currently estimated at 1,610,151 for President Trump and 1,630,716 for former Vice President Biden (i.e., a margin of 20,565 votes). In two counties, Milwaukee and Dane, Mr. Biden's margin (364,298 votes) significantly exceeds his statewide lead.

379. In the 2016 general election some 146,932 mail-in ballots were returned in Wisconsin out of more than 3 million votes cast. In stark contrast, 1,275,019 mail-in ballots, nearly a 900 percent increase over 2016, were returned in the November 3, 2020 election.

380. Based on Wisconsin voters' allegations, on November 30, 2020, Governor Tony Evers certified Joe Biden's victory in Wisconsin in a Certificate of Ascertainment, soon after he received a certification from Ann Jacobs, chairwoman of the Wisconsin Election Commission.

<sup>252</sup> See Expert Report of Matthew Braynard, Appendix 1112-1122.

<sup>253</sup> See Declaration of Jonathan Brater, Appendix 1147-1151 at ¶ 10.

<sup>254</sup> See Expert Report of Matthew Braynard, Appendix 1112-1122 at ¶ 5.

<sup>255</sup> See Expert Report of Matthew Braynard, Appendix 1112-1122 at ¶ 6.

<sup>256</sup> For full extent of inappropriate activities See Timeline of Electoral Policy Activities, Issues, and Litigation Pennsylvania, Michigan, Wisconsin, Georgia, Arizona, and Nevada August 2003 to November 2020, Appendix 1-20.

Jacobs signed a statement of canvass to confirm who won the election. The Wisconsin Election Commission was due to meet on Tuesday, December 1, 2020. Republican Commissioners Dean Knudson had requested that Jacobs wait until Tuesday, when the Commission was to meet, to determine the results, the statutory deadline.<sup>257</sup>

381. Based on Wisconsin voters' allegations, by certifying the election on her own, Jacobs usurped power that belongs to the Wisconsin Election Commission. Wisconsin Statutes § 7.70 sets forth the proper procedure for certifying Wisconsin's election results. The chairperson is required to examine the certified statements of the county board of canvassers, and obtain input from the county boards if it appears material mistakes have been made. Thereafter, under § 7.70(3)(d), the chairperson is to "examine and make a statement of the total number of votes cast at any election for the offices involved in the election for president and vice president..." Under § 7.70(3)(f), these statements are to show the "persons' names receiving votes" and "the whole number of votes given to each..." § 7.70(3)(g) states that following "each other election [other than a primary election] the chairperson of the commission or the chairperson's designee shall prepare a statement certifying the results of the election and shall attach to the statement a certificate of determination which shall indicate the names of persons who have been elected to any state or national office .... The chairperson of the commission or the chairperson's designee shall deliver each statement and determination to the commission."<sup>258</sup>

382. Based on Wisconsin voters' allegations, Wisconsin Statutes § 7.70(5)(b) states what is supposed to come next in a presidential election. "For presidential electors, the commission shall prepare a certificate showing the determination of the results of the canvass and the names of the persons elected, and the governor shall sign, affix the great seal of the state, and transmit the certificate by registered mail to the U.S. administrator of general services. The governor shall also prepare 6 duplicate originals of such certificate and deliver them to one of the presidential electors on or before the first Monday after the 2nd Wednesday in December.” (emphasis supplied).

---

<sup>257</sup> See Supplement to Emergency Petition, Appendix 384-396. See Also Wisconsin Elections Committee Letter, Appendix 1469-1470.

<sup>258</sup> See Wisconsin Finance Committee E-mails and Wisconsin Republican Presidential Elector Signatures, Appendix 1473-1476.

383. Based on Wisconsin voters’ allegations, as set forth clearly in the statute, Wisconsin law requires the chairperson of the commission to prepare a certificate of the votes received by each candidate in the presidential election, and transmit these results to the commission. Thereafter, the commission is required to prepare a certificate showing the names of the persons elected, and transmit this certificate to the governor. Only then is the governor authorized to transmit this certificate to the U.S. administrator of general services.

384. Based on Wisconsin voters’ allegations, Chairwoman Jacobs certified these results, without authority, before the Wisconsin Election Commission meeting, in an attempt to bypass the Wisconsin Election Commission, who had a lawful duty to examine and certify the results for themselves. Chairwoman Jacobs’ certification is a usurpation of the statutory authority of the Wisconsin Election Commission. Furthermore, the Governor’s Certificate of Ascertainment, based on Chairwoman Jacobs’ certification, rather than the lawful certification of the Commission, is a usurpation of authority, and is legally null and void.

385. Further, based on Wisconsin voters’ allegations, Wisconsin statutes guard against fraud in absentee ballots: “[V]oting by absentee ballot is a privilege exercised wholly outside the traditional safeguards of the polling place. The legislature finds that the privilege of voting by absentee ballot must be carefully regulated to prevent the potential for fraud or abuse[.]”<sup>259</sup>

---

<sup>259</sup> Wis. Stat. § 6.84(1).

386. Based on Wisconsin voters' allegations, in direct contravention of Wisconsin law, leading up to the 2020 general election, the Wisconsin Elections Commission ("WEC") and other local officials unconstitutionally modified Wisconsin election laws—each time taking steps that weakened, or did away with, established security procedures put in place by the Wisconsin legislature to ensure absentee ballot integrity.<sup>260</sup>

387. Based on Wisconsin voters' allegations, for example, the WEC undertook a campaign to position hundreds of drop boxes to collect absentee ballots—including the use of unmanned drop boxes.

388. Based on Wisconsin voters' allegations, the mayors of Wisconsin's five largest cities—Green Bay, Kenosha, Madison, Milwaukee, and Racine, which all have Democrat majorities—joined in this effort, and together, developed a plan use purportedly "secure drop-boxes to facilitate return of absentee ballots." Wisconsin Safe Voting Plan 2020, at 4 (June 15, 2020).<sup>261</sup>

389. Based on Wisconsin voters' allegations, it was alleged in an action filed in United States District Court for the Eastern District of Wisconsin that over five hundred unmanned, illegal, absentee ballot drop boxes were used in the Presidential election in Wisconsin.

390. Based on Wisconsin voters' allegations, however, the use of any drop box, manned or unmanned, is directly prohibited by Wisconsin statute. The Wisconsin legislature specifically described in the Election Code "Alternate absentee ballot site[s]" and detailed the procedure by which the governing body of a municipality may designate a site or sites for the delivery of absentee ballots "other than the office of the municipal clerk or board of election commissioners as the location from which electors of the municipality may request and vote absentee ballots and to which voted absentee ballots shall be returned by electors for any election.”<sup>262</sup>

---

<sup>260</sup> See Appendix 201-269; 378-383.

<sup>261</sup> See Appendix pgs. 270-290; 291-346.

391. Based on Wisconsin voters’ allegations, any alternate absentee ballot site “shall be staffed by the municipal clerk or the executive director of the board of election commissioners, or employees of the clerk or the board of election commissioners.”<sup>263</sup> Likewise, Wis.Stat. 7.15(2m) provides, “[i]n a municipality in which the governing body has elected to establish an alternate absentee ballot site under s. 6.855, the municipal clerk shall operate such site as though it were his or her office for absentee ballot purposes and shall ensure that such site is adequately staffed.”

392. Based on Wisconsin voters’ allegations, thus, the unmanned absentee ballot drop-off sites are prohibited by the Wisconsin Legislature as they do not comply with Wisconsin law expressly defining “[a]lternate absentee ballot site[s].”<sup>264</sup>

393. Based on Wisconsin voters’ allegations, in addition, the use of drop boxes for the collection of absentee ballots, positioned predominantly in Wisconsin’s largest cities, is directly contrary to Wisconsin law providing that absentee ballots may only be “mailed by the elector, or delivered in person to the municipal clerk issuing the ballot or ballots.”<sup>265</sup>

394. Based on Wisconsin voters’ allegations, The fact that other methods of delivering absentee ballots, such as through unmanned drop boxes, are not permitted is underscored by Wis. Stat. § 6.87(6) which mandates that, “[a]ny ballot not mailed or delivered as provided in this subsection may not be counted.” Likewise, Wis. Stat. § 6.84(2) underscores this point, providing that Wis. Stat. § 6.87(6) “shall be construed as mandatory.” The provision continues—“Ballots cast in contravention of the procedures specified in those provisions may not be counted. Ballots counted in

---

<sup>262</sup> Wis. Stat. 6.855(1).

<sup>263</sup> Wis. Stat. 6.855(3).

<sup>264</sup> Wis. Stat. 6.855(1), (3).

<sup>265</sup> Wis. Stat. § 6.87(4)(b)1 (emphasis added).

contravention of the procedures specified in those provisions may not be included in the certified result of any election.”<sup>266</sup>

395. Based on Wisconsin voters’ allegations, as a result of the Zuckerberg-funded absentee drop boxes, the Milwaukee County and Dane County had 1 drop box for every 30.7 square miles. But, the rest of Wisconsin had 1 drop box for every 145 square miles. Wisconsin localities provided approximately 514 ballot drop boxes leading up to the 2020 election.<sup>267</sup>

396. In 2016, Hillary Clinton received 1,382,536 votes in Wisconsin.<sup>268</sup> Of those 1.3M votes, Milwaukee and Dane Counties accounted for 506,519<sup>269</sup> of Clinton’s votes.<sup>270</sup>

397. Wisconsin is a total of 65,498 square miles. Milwaukee and Dane Counties represent a combined 2,427 square miles. These two counties received about one-sixth of the total number of ballot drop boxes with 79 boxes. Milwaukee received 25 drop boxes, while Dane County (Madison) had 54 drop boxes.<sup>271</sup> This left the rest of the state with 435 ballot drop boxes.<sup>272</sup>

398. Voters in Hillary Clinton’s two largest counties: Milwaukee and Dane, where she received 506,519 votes, received 79 drop boxes spread out over a combined 2,427 square miles, or 1 drop box for every 30.7 square miles. Meanwhile, voters in the rest of the state received 435 drop

---

<sup>266</sup> Wis. Stat. § 6.84(2) (emphasis added).

<sup>267</sup> <https://www.wisconsinwatch.org/2020/10/wisconsin-absentee-ballot-drop-box-search/>. See Expert Declaration of Dennis Nathan Cain (II), Appendix 60-68. See Also Appendix 353-377.

<sup>268</sup> <https://www.nytimes.com/elections/2016/results/wisconsin-president-clinton-trump>

<sup>269</sup> <https://www.nytimes.com/elections/2016/results/wisconsin-president-clinton-trump>

<sup>270</sup> The next eight largest Wisconsin counties gave Hillary Clinton an additional 346,352 votes.

<https://www.nytimes.com/elections/2016/results/wisconsin-president-clinton-trump>
Waukesha (Milwaukee area) had 5 drop boxes, Brown County (Green Bay) had 13 drop boxes, 13 in Racine, Outagamie 5, Winnebago 5, Kenosha 8, Rock 26, Marathon 10.<sup>270</sup>

Wisconsin has sixteen counties with over 100k residents: Milwaukee, Dane (Madison), Waukesha, Brown (Green Bay), Racine, Outagamie, Winnebago, Kenosha, Rock, Washington, Marathon, La Crosse, Sheboygan, Eau Claire, Walworth, Fond du Lac.<sup>270</sup>

<sup>271</sup> <https://www.wisconsinwatch.org/2020/10/wisconsin-absentee-ballot-drop-box-search/>

<sup>272</sup> 514-79 = 435

boxes to cover 63,071 square miles, meaning that the rest of Wisconsin had a single drop box for every 145 square miles.

399. Based on Wisconsin voters' allegations, these were not the only Wisconsin election laws that the WEC violated in the 2020 general election. The WEC and local election officials also took it upon themselves to encourage voters to unlawfully declare themselves "indefinitely confined"—which under Wisconsin law allows the voter to avoid security measures like signature verification and photo ID requirements.

400. Specifically, registering to vote by absentee ballot requires photo identification, except for those who register as "indefinitely confined" or "hospitalized."<sup>273</sup> Registering for indefinite confinement requires certifying confinement "because of age, physical illness or infirmity or [because the voter] is disabled for an indefinite period."<sup>274</sup> Should indefinite confinement cease, the voter must notify the county clerk,<sup>275</sup> who must remove the voter from indefinite-confinement status.<sup>276</sup>

401. Wisconsin election procedures for voting absentee based on indefinite confinement enable the voter to avoid the photo ID requirement and signature requirement.<sup>277</sup>

402. Based on Wisconsin voters' allegations, on March 25, 2020, in clear violation of Wisconsin law, Dane County Clerk Scott McDonnell and Milwaukee County Clerk George Christensen both issued guidance indicating that all voters should mark themselves as "indefinitely confined" because of the COVID-19 pandemic.<sup>278</sup>

---

<sup>273</sup> Wis. Stat. § 6.86(2)(a), (3)(a).

<sup>274</sup> Id. § 6.86(2)(a).

<sup>275</sup> Id.

<sup>276</sup> Id. § 6.86(2)(b).

<sup>277</sup> Id. § 6.86(1)(ag)/(3)(a)(2).

<sup>278</sup> See Appendix pgs. 347-349.

403. Based on Wisconsin voters' allegations, believing this to be an attempt to circumvent Wisconsin's strict voter ID laws, the Republican Party of Wisconsin petitioned the Wisconsin Supreme Court to intervene. On March 31, 2020, the Wisconsin Supreme Court unanimously confirmed that the clerks' "advice was legally incorrect" and potentially dangerous because "voters may be misled to exercise their right to vote in ways that are inconsistent with WISC. STAT. § 6.86(2)."

404. Based on Wisconsin voters' allegations, on May 13, 2020, the Administrator of WEC issued a directive to the Wisconsin clerks prohibiting removal of voters from the registry for indefinite-confinement status if the voter is no longer "indefinitely confined."

405. Based on Wisconsin voters' allegations, the WEC's directive violated Wisconsin law. Specifically, WISC. STAT. § 6.86(2)(a) specifically provides that "any [indefinitely confined] elector [who] is no longer indefinitely confined ... shall so notify the municipal clerk." WISC. STAT. § 6.86(2)(b) further provides that the municipal clerk "shall remove the name of any other elector from the list upon request of the elector or upon receipt of reliable information that an elector no longer qualifies for the service."

406. Based on Wisconsin voters' allegations, according to statistics kept by the WEC, nearly 216,000 voters said they were indefinitely confined in the 2020 election, nearly a fourfold increase from nearly 57,000 voters in 2016. In Dane and Milwaukee counties, more than 68,000 voters said they were indefinitely confined in 2020, a fourfold increase from the roughly 17,000 indefinitely confined voters in those counties in 2016.

407. Under Wisconsin law, voting by absentee ballot also requires voters to complete a certification, including their address, and have the envelope witnessed by an adult who also must sign and indicate their address on the envelope.<sup>279</sup> The sole remedy to cure an “improperly completed certificate or [ballot] with no certificate” is for “the clerk [to] return the ballot to the elector[.]”<sup>280</sup> “If a certificate is missing the address of a witness, the ballot may not be counted.”<sup>281</sup>

408. Based on Wisconsin voters’ allegations, however, in a training video issued April 1, 2020, the Administrator of the City of Milwaukee Elections Commission unilaterally declared that a “witness address may be written in red and that is because we were able to locate the witnesses’ address for the voter” to add an address missing from the certifications on absentee ballots. The Administrator’s instruction violated WISC. STAT. § 6.87(6d). The WEC issued similar guidance on October 19, 2020, in violation of this statute as well.<sup>282</sup>

409. Based on Wisconsin voters’ allegations, in the Wisconsin Trump Campaign Complaint, it is alleged, supported by the sworn affidavits of poll watchers, that canvas workers carried out this unlawful policy, and acting pursuant to this guidance, in Milwaukee used red-ink pens to alter the certificates on the absentee envelope and then cast and count the absentee ballot. These acts violated WISC. STAT. § 6.87(6d) (“If a certificate is missing the address of a witness, the ballot may not be counted”).<sup>283</sup>

410. Wisconsin’s legislature has not ratified these changes, and its election laws do not include a severability clause.

411. Based on Wisconsin voters’ allegations, in addition, Ethan J. Pease, a box truck delivery driver subcontracted to the U.S. Postal Service (“USPS”) to deliver truckloads of mail-in

---

<sup>279</sup> See Wis. Stat. § 6.87.

<sup>280</sup> Id. § 6.87(9).

<sup>281</sup> Id. § 6.87(6d) (emphasis added).

<sup>282</sup> See Appendix pgs. 350-352.

<sup>283</sup> See also Wis. Stat. § 6.87(9) (“If a municipal clerk receives an absentee ballot with an improperly completed certificate or with no certificate, the clerk may return the ballot to the elector . . . whenever time permits the elector to correct the defect and return the ballot within the period authorized.”).

ballots to the sorting center in Madison, WI, testified that USPS employees were backdating ballots received after November 3, 2020.<sup>284</sup> Further, Pease testified how a senior USPS employee told him on November 4, 2020 that “[a]n order came down from the Wisconsin/Illinois Chapter of the Postal Service that 100,000 ballots were missing” and how the USPS dispatched employees to “find[] . . . the ballots.”<sup>285</sup> One hundred thousand ballots supposedly “found” after election day would far exceed former Vice President Biden margin of 20,565 votes over President Trump.

412. Finally, in Wisconsin, the Braynard-Zhang analysis of government data shows election officials’ absentee ballot errors of 159,559 far exceed the margin of victory of 20,608.<sup>286</sup>

413. The Braynard-Zhang analysis of government data shows election officials’ absentee ballot error rate of at least 0.89% which far exceeds federal law’s pre-election certification error rate for voting systems’ hardware and software of 0.0008%.<sup>287</sup>

Wisconsin Voter Election Contest
Margin +20,608 votes

Type of error*	Description	Votes
1) Unlawful Ballots	Estimate of the minimum number of absentee ballots requested which were not requested by the person identified in the state’s database <sup>288</sup>	15,423
2) Legal Votes Not Counted	Estimate of ballots that the requester returned but were not counted <sup>289</sup>	13,826
Category 1 & 2 Total Votes: 29,249	Error Rate (Compared to Total Vote)	0.89%

<sup>284</sup> Declaration of Ethan J. Pease, Appendix pgs. 180-182 at ¶¶ 3-13.

<sup>285</sup> Id. ¶¶ 8-10.

<sup>286</sup> See Chart and WI Declaration of Matthew Braynard, Appendix pgs. 1384-1395.

<sup>287</sup> See Expert Report of Dennis Nathan Cain (III), Appendix 1433-1445.

<sup>288</sup> See WI Zhang Declaration Appendix pgs. 1375-1383 ¶ 1.

<sup>289</sup> See WI Zhang Declaration Appendix pgs. 1375-1383 ¶ 2.

3) Illegal Votes Counted	Electors voted where they did not reside <sup>290</sup>	26,673
4) Illegal Votes Counted	Electors who avoided Wisconsin Voter ID laws by voting absentee as an “indefinitely confined” elector and were not indefinitely confined <sup>291</sup>	96,437
5) Illegal Votes Counted	Out of State Residents Voting in State <sup>292</sup>	6,848
6) Illegal Votes Counted	Double Votes <sup>293</sup>	234
TOTAL		159,559
	Of total votes cast 3,289,946

*May overlap.

5. State of Arizona voters allege election official errors and improprieties which exceed the Presidential vote margin.<sup>294</sup>

414. State of Michigan voters allege election official errors and improprieties which exceed the Presidential vote margin.

415. Arizona has 11 electoral votes, with a statewide vote tally currently estimated at 1,661,686 for President Trump and 1,672,143 for former Vice President Biden (i.e., a margin of 10,457 votes).

416. Based on Arizona voters’ allegations, there was a disparate impact caused by absentee drop boxes.

417. Arizona is composed of fifteen counties.

<sup>290</sup> See WI Declaration of Matthew Braynard, Appendix pgs. 1384-1395.

<sup>291</sup> See WI Declaration of Matthew Braynard Appendix pgs. 1384-1395 ¶ 5. This number is derived from  $.4523 * 213,215$

<sup>292</sup> See WI Declaration of Matthew Braynard Appendix pgs. 1384-1395 ¶ 4.

<sup>293</sup> See WI Declaration of Matthew Braynard Appendix pgs. 1384-1395 ¶ 6.

<sup>294</sup> For full extent of inappropriate activities See Timeline of Electoral Policy Activities, Issues, and Litigation Pennsylvania, Michigan, Wisconsin, Georgia, Arizona, and Nevada August 2003 to November 2020, Appendix 1-20.

418. The state of Arizona is 113,998 square miles.

419. In 2016, Hillary Clinton received 1,161,167 votes from Arizona.<sup>295</sup> Over half of these votes came from Maricopa County with 702,907 votes in 2016.<sup>296</sup>

420. Based on Wisconsin voters' allegations, this vote-rich area of only 9,224 square miles, was given more drop boxes and early voting centers than the rest of Arizona's 104,764 square miles combined.

421. Maricopa County, only 9,224 square miles, has over 125 vote-by-mail drop boxes available to its citizens, leaving one drop box for every 73 square miles.<sup>297</sup> Conversely, the other fourteen counties had a total of 119 drop boxes and early voting sites combined, meaning every other non-Arizona county combined had one vote-by-mail drop box for every 880 square miles.<sup>298</sup>

---

<sup>295</sup> <https://www.nytimes.com/elections/2016/results/arizona>

<sup>296</sup> <https://www.nytimes.com/elections/2016/results/arizona>

<sup>297</sup> <https://www.google.com/maps/d/u/0/viewer?ll=33.361088282128144%2C-112.03699115344182&z=11&mid=1MksFw9pIMM80IE-3WVkJXAr9a2BBizir7>

<sup>298</sup> Coconino Co., 8 drop boxes - <https://www.coconino.az.gov/DocumentCenter/View/36811/Coconino-County-Ballot-Drop-Box-Locations-2020-Primary?bidId=>

- Pinal Co., 7 drop boxes - <https://www.pinalcountyaz.gov/Recorder/Pages/EarlyVoteRegister.aspx>
- Gila Co., 8 drop boxes - https://www.gilacountyaz.gov/government/recorder/drop\_off\_boxes.php
- Pima Co., 14 dropbox/early voting sites - <https://www.recorder.pima.gov/EarlyVotingSites>
- Cochise Co., 5 drop boxes - <https://www.cochise.az.gov/recorder/ballot-box-locations>
- La Paz Co. 1 early voting site - https://www.parkerpioneer.net/news/article\_1a2fd0ee-1d4c-11eb-af74-5f2cf0d805cb.html
- Maricopa Co., 125+ drop boxes - <https://www.google.com/maps/d/u/0/viewer?ll=33.361088282128144%2C-112.03699115344182&z=11&mid=1MksFw9pIMM80IE-3WVkJXAr9a2BBizir7>
- Mohave Co., 3 early voting sites - <https://mohavedailynews.com/news/11214/early-voting-begins-in-arizona/>
- Graham Co., 5 drop boxes - <https://www.graham.az.gov/314/How-To-Return-Your-Early-Ballot>
- Navajo Co., 16 drop boxes - <https://www.navajocountyaz.gov/Departments/Elections/Voter-Information/Early-Voting-Sites>

422. This strategy worked to benefit Democratic voters at a greater rate than republican voters.

423. In the 2020 November, election Vice-President Biden increased his vote total by almost more than 300,000 votes over Hillary Clinton's 2016 numbers in Maricopa with 1,040,774 votes.

424. Alternatively, President Trump gained only about 150,000 votes.<sup>299</sup>

425. This type of disparate impact by government officials in Maricopa County clearly favored Democratic voters, to the detriment of Republican voters

426. Additionally, in Arizona, the Braynard-Zhang analysis of the government data shows election officials' absentee ballot errors of 371,498 far exceed the margin of victory of 10,457.<sup>300</sup>

427. The Braynard-Zhang government data shows election officials' absentee ballot error rate of at least 10.2% which far exceeds federal law's pre-election certification error rate for voting systems' hardware and software of 0.0008%.<sup>301</sup>

Arizona Voter Election Contest
Margin +10,457

Type of error*	Description	Margin
1) Unlawful Ballots	Estimate of the minimum number of absentee ballots requested which were not requested by the person identified in the state's database <sup>302</sup>	214,526
2) Legal	Estimate of ballots that the

-
- Maricopa Co. - <https://www.12news.com/article/news/politics/elections/map-ballot-drop-box-maricopa-county-for-november-2020-general-election-list/75-81c64546-9092-4f8e-9531-f9f10e6d1aa8>
  - Yavapai Co., 19 drop boxes - <https://www.yavapai.us/electionsvr/early-voting>

<sup>299</sup> <https://www.politico.com/2020-election/results/arizona/>

<sup>300</sup> See Chart and AZ Declaration of Matthew Braynard, Appendix pgs. 1419-1428

<sup>301</sup> See Expert Report of Dennis Nathan Cain (III), Appendix 1433-1445.

<sup>302</sup> See AZ Zhang Declaration Appendix pgs. 1396-1405 ¶ 1.

Votes Not Counted	requester returned but were not counted <sup>303</sup>	131,092
Category 1 &amp; 2 Total Votes: 346,618	Error Rate (Compared to Total Vote)	10.2%
3) Illegal Votes Counted*	Electors voted where they did not reside <sup>304</sup>	19,997
4) Illegal Votes Counted*	Out of State Residents Voting in State <sup>305</sup>	5,726
5) Illegal Votes Counted*	Double Votes <sup>306</sup>	157
TOTAL		371,498
	of total votes cast 3,397,388

*May overlap

M. The government data, state-by-state, shows election officials' absentee ballot errors far exceed the margin of victory—and they far exceed the pre-election certification error rate of 0.0008%.

428. The federal government has a pre-election standard for state voting system's software and hardware.

429. As explained above, this maximum-acceptable error rate is one in 500,000 ballot positions, or, alternatively one in 125,000 ballots—0.0008 %.<sup>307</sup>

430. Based on the Defendant States' voters' allegations, the government data shows Wisconsin, Pennsylvania, Michigan, Georgia and Arizona election officials' absentee ballot errors<sup>308</sup> far exceed the Presidential margins of victory.

<sup>303</sup> See AZ Zhang Declaration Appendix pgs. 1396-1405 ¶ 2.

<sup>304</sup> See AZ Declaration of Matthew Braynard, Appendix pgs. 1419-1428 ¶3.

<sup>305</sup> See AZ Declaration of Matthew Braynard, Appendix pgs. 1419-1428 ¶4.

<sup>306</sup> See AZ Declaration of Matthew Braynard, Appendix pgs. 1419-1428 ¶5.

<sup>307</sup> See Expert Report of Dennis Nathan Cain (III), Appendix 1433-1445.

<sup>308</sup> According to Plaintiffs' analysis, it is possible to have more than one type of error per ballot (e.g., double voting and voting while resident of another state).

431. Based on the Defendant States' voters' allegations, the government data in each of the states shows election officials' absentee ballot errors far exceed the federal law's pre-election certification error rate for voting systems' hardware and software.

COUNT 1: ARTICLE II

432. Plaintiffs repeat and re-allege the allegations above, as if fully set forth herein.

433. The Plaintiffs as voters file this complaint against federal and state officials in Arizona, Georgia, Michigan, Pennsylvania and Wisconsin seeking a declaratory judgment, and related injunction, for a constitutionally-compliant process for state-by-state post-election certification of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors and for counting of their votes for the November 3, 2020 Presidential election and future elections.

434. Under Article II, if a state has authorized a Presidential election in that state, voters have voting rights to state legislative post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors.

435. Since Defendant States have authorized Presidential elections, voters in the Defendant States, including Plaintiffs, have voting rights under Article II to state legislative post-election certification of their Presidential votes and of Presidential electors.

436. Part of Plaintiffs' voting rights in Defendant States under Article II is the right that their Presidential votes be counted by in their respective state legislatures' post-election certifications of Presidential votes and Presidential electors in the 2020 and future elections.

437. Under Article II, Congress lacks legal authority to enact laws interfering with the state-by-state state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors as it has done with 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15.

438. The text and structure of the Constitution—as evidenced in Article II and the rest of the Constitution—preempts 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15 as unconstitutional interference with the state legislative prerogative to post-election Presidential elector certification guaranteed by the Constitution.<sup>309</sup>

439. Therefore, Article II renders 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15, in the 2020 and future Presidential elections, as unconstitutional interference with the state legislative prerogative to post-election Presidential elector certification guaranteed by the Constitution—and a violation of voters’ rights.<sup>310</sup>

440. Analogously, under Article II, the Defendant States lack legal authority to enact state laws which are a perpetual and wholesale delegation of post-election certifications to state executive branch officials—as they have done in Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B) (Arizona Secretary of State), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B) (Georgia Secretary of State and Governor), Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 168.46 (Michigan State Board of Canvassers and Governor), Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) (Wisconsin Elections Commission); and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166 (Secretary of Commonwealth and Governor).

441. Article II, and its non-delegation doctrine, left it exclusively to the state legislatures to “direct” post-election certifications of Presidential voters and of Presidential electors—not to Defendant States to “delegate” post-election certifications, perpetually and in a wholesale fashion, to state executive branch officials as a ministerial duty.

442. The text of Article II preempts Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B), Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 168.46, Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b), 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166 and similar state laws which delegate Presidential post-election certifications to state executive branch officials when it is constitutionally-required for state legislatures to conduct post-election Presidential election certifications.

---

<sup>309</sup> Vasan Kesavan, Is the Electoral Count Act Unconstitutional, 80 N.C. L. Rev. 1653, 1759-1793 (2002).

<sup>310</sup> Id. at 1696-1759 (2002).

443. The structure of the Constitution, as evidenced in Article II and the rest of the Constitution, preempts Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B), Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 168.46, Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b), 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166 and similar state laws which delegate Presidential post-election certifications to state executive branch officials when it is constitutionally-required for state legislatures to conduct post-election Presidential election certifications.

444. Therefore, the Court should hold Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B), Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 168.46, Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b), 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166 and similar laws unconstitutional as they apply to Presidential state legislative post-election certifications.

445. The Defendant States' lack of state legislative post-election certifications of Presidential votes and Presidential electors in the 2020 and future Presidential elections violate the Plaintiffs' voting rights under Article II.

446. The Defendant States, in violation of Article II, have failed to provide state legislative post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of the Presidential Electors; so, voters' votes in the Defendant States do not count in the current and future elections—a disenfranchisement.

447. A declaratory judgment should issue, applicable to the current and future elections, declaring that Article II requires state legislative post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors for Presidential elector votes to count in the U.S. Congress for the election of the President and Vice President.

448. Further, any count of Presidential electors in the November 3, 2020 or future elections should be declared invalid if based on votes of Presidential electors who have not received state legislative post-election certification.

449. The Vice President and U.S. Congress should be enjoined from counting Presidential elector votes from any states in the current and future elections unless their respective state legislatures have voted affirmatively in a post-election vote to certify Presidential votes and their Presidential electors for the current and future Presidential elections.

COUNT 2:
EQUAL PROTECTION CLAUSE

450. Plaintiffs repeat and re-allege the allegations above, as if fully set forth herein.

451. Plaintiffs are entitled to state legislative post-election certification of their Presidential votes and of Presidential electors so their votes count equally with other states' citizens' votes.

452. The Equal Protection Clause prohibits the use of differential standards in the treatment and tabulation of ballots within a State. Bush, 531 U.S. at 107.

453. The one-person, one-vote principle requires counting valid votes and not counting invalid votes. Reynolds, 377 U.S. at 554-55; Bush, 531 U.S. at 103 (“the votes eligible for inclusion in the certification are the votes meeting the properly established legal requirements”).

454. The Defendant States, in violation of the Equal Protection Clause, have failed to provide state legislative post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of the Presidential Electors as they do in other states; so, voters' votes in the Defendant States will not count—a disenfranchisement of that state's voters.

455. Absent the state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors and of the Presidential Electors in the Defendant States, the Defendant States violate the one-person, one-vote principle because their Presidential votes and their state's Presidential electors' votes will not count toward the election of President and Vice President.

456. Plaintiffs are therefore harmed by Defendants' unconstitutional conduct in violation of the Equal Protection Clause.

457. A declaratory judgment should issue, applicable to the current and future elections, declaring that the Equal Protection Clause requires state legislative post-election certification of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors for Presidential elector votes to count in the U.S. Congress for the election of the President and Vice President.

458. Further, any count of Presidential electors in the November 3, 2020 or future elections should be declared invalid if based on votes of Presidential electors who have not received state legislative post-election certification.

459. The Vice President and U.S. Congress should be enjoined from counting Presidential elector votes from states in the current election and future elections unless the respective state legislatures has voted affirmatively in a post-election vote to certify Presidential votes and their Presidential electors.

COUNT 3:
DUE PROCESS CLAUSE

460. Plaintiff repeats and re-alleges the allegations above, as if fully set forth herein.

461. Plaintiffs as voters are entitled to state legislative post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors so their votes are subjected to the same due process as other citizens' votes.

462. When election practices reach "the point of patent and fundamental unfairness," the integrity of the election itself violates substantive due process. Griffin v. Burns, 570 F.2d 1065, 1077 (1st Cir. 1978); Duncan v. Poytbress, 657 F.2d 691, 702 (5th Cir. 1981); Florida State Conference of N.A.A.C.P. v. Browning, 522 F.3d 1153, 1183-84 (11th Cir. 2008); Roe v. State of Ala. By & Through Evans, 43 F.3d 574, 580-82 (11th Cir. 1995); Roe v. State of Ala., 68 F.3d 404, 407 (11th Cir. 1995); Marks v. Stinson, 19 F. 3d 873, 878 (3rd Cir. 1994).

463. Under this Court's precedents on procedural due process, not only intentional failure to follow election law as enacted by a State's legislature but also random and unauthorized acts by state election officials and their designees in local government can violate the Due Process Clause. Parratt v. Taylor, 451 U.S. 527, 537-41 (1981), overruled in part on other grounds by Daniels v. Williams, 474 U.S. 327, 330-31 (1986); Hudson v. Palmer, 468 U.S. 517, 532 (1984).

464. The difference between intentional acts and random and unauthorized acts is the degree of pre-deprivation review.

465. Defendants acted unconstitutionally by certifying Presidential electors and counting their votes without prior state legislative post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors.

466. Defendant States acted unconstitutionally by their state legislatures not voting for post-election certifications of Presidential votes and Presidential electors.

467. Federal Defendants acted unconstitutionally under federal laws requiring counting votes of Presidential electors who have not received state legislative post-election certification.

468. The actions set out in the paragraphs above constitute intentional violations of the law by Defendants in violation of the Due Process Clause.

469. The Defendants, in violation of the Due Process Clause, prohibit state legislative post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of the Presidential Electors.

470. Plaintiffs' voting rights are disenfranchised by Defendants' unconstitutional conduct in violation of the Due Process Clause.

471. A declaratory judgment should issue, applicable to current and future elections, declaring that the Due Process Clause requires state legislative post-election certification of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors for Presidential elector votes to count in the U.S. Congress for the election of the President and Vice President.

472. Further, any count of Presidential electors in the current and future elections should be declared invalid if based on votes of Presidential electors who have not received state legislative post-election certification.

473. The Vice President and U.S. Congress should be enjoined from counting Presidential elector votes, in the current and future elections, unless their respective state legislature has voted affirmatively in a post-election vote to certify Presidential votes and their Presidential electors.

PRAYER FOR RELIEF

WHEREFORE, Plaintiffs respectfully request that this Court issue the following relief for the 2020 and future Presidential elections:

- A. Issue a declaratory judgment, applying to the current and future elections, declaring that 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15 were and are unconstitutional deprivations of the state legislatures' constitutional prerogative to post-election certification of the Presidential electors;
- B. Issue a declaratory judgment, applying to current and future elections, declaring that Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B), Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 168.46, Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b), 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166 and similar state laws are unconstitutional delegations by the respective states of post-election Presidential election certification duties to their respective executive branch officers when Article II requires such certifications to be made by the respective state legislatures;
- C. Issue a declaratory judgment, applying to current and future elections, that the Plaintiff-voters' constitutionally-protected voting rights in Presidential elections are being violated by Defendants;
- D. Issue a declaratory judgment, applying to current and future elections, that the Plaintiffs' voting rights were violated under Article II, the Equal Protection Clause and the Due Process Clause;
- E. Enjoin the Vice President and U.S. Congress, in the current and future elections, from counting Presidential elector votes from states unless their respective state legislatures vote affirmatively in a post-election vote to certify their Presidential electors;
- F. Alternatively, enjoin, in the current and future elections, the State Defendants' state legislatures to meet in their respective States to consider post-election certification of their respective Presidential electors;
- G. Award attorney's fees and costs under 42 U.S.C. § 1988 to Plaintiffs against State Defendants; and

H. Grant such other relief as the Court deems just and proper.

DATED: December 22,, 2020

/s/Erick G. Kaardal
Erick G. Kaardal (WI0031)
Special Counsel for Amistad Project of
Thomas More Society
Mohrman, Kaardal & Erickson, P.A.
150 South Fifth Street, Suite 3100
Minneapolis, Minnesota 55402
Telephone: (612) 341-1074
Facsimile: (612) 341-1076
Email: kaardal@mklaw.com

Attorney for Plaintiffs

CIVIL COVER SHEET

JS-44 (Rev. 6/17 DC)

I. (a) PLAINTIFFS Wisconsin Voters Alliance, et al.  (b) COUNTY OF RESIDENCE OF FIRST LISTED PLAINTIFF _____ (EXCEPT IN U.S. PLAINTIFF CASES)	DEFENDANTS Vice President Michael Richard Pence, et al.  COUNTY OF RESIDENCE OF FIRST LISTED DEFENDANT _____ (IN U.S. PLAINTIFF CASES ONLY) <small>NOTE: IN LAND CONDEMNATION CASES, USE THE LOCATION OF THE TRACT OF LAND INVOLVED</small>
(c) ATTORNEYS (FIRM NAME, ADDRESS, AND TELEPHONE NUMBER) Erick G. Kaardal, Mohrman, Kaardal & Erickson, P.A. 150 South Fifth Street, Suite 3100 Minneapolis, Minnesota 55402 Telephone: (612) 341-1074	ATTORNEYS (IF KNOWN) Not Known.

II. BASIS OF JURISDICTION (PLACE AN x IN ONE BOX ONLY) <table style="width: 100%;"> <tr> <td><input type="radio"/> 1 U.S. Government Plaintiff</td> <td><input checked="" type="radio"/> 3 Federal Question (U.S. Government Not a Party)</td> </tr> <tr> <td><input type="radio"/> 2 U.S. Government Defendant</td> <td><input type="radio"/> 4 Diversity (Indicate Citizenship of Parties in item III)</td> </tr> </table>	<input type="radio"/> 1 U.S. Government Plaintiff	<input checked="" type="radio"/> 3 Federal Question (U.S. Government Not a Party)	<input type="radio"/> 2 U.S. Government Defendant	<input type="radio"/> 4 Diversity (Indicate Citizenship of Parties in item III)	III. CITIZENSHIP OF PRINCIPAL PARTIES (PLACE AN x IN ONE BOX FOR PLAINTIFF AND ONE BOX FOR DEFENDANT) FOR DIVERSITY CASES ONLY! <table style="width: 100%;"> <thead> <tr> <th></th> <th>PTF</th> <th>DFT</th> <th></th> <th>PTF</th> <th>DFT</th> </tr> </thead> <tbody> <tr> <td>Citizen of this State</td> <td><input type="radio"/> 1</td> <td><input type="radio"/> 1</td> <td>Incorporated or Principal Place of Business in This State</td> <td><input type="radio"/> 4</td> <td><input type="radio"/> 4</td> </tr> <tr> <td>Citizen of Another State</td> <td><input type="radio"/> 2</td> <td><input type="radio"/> 2</td> <td>Incorporated and Principal Place of Business in Another State</td> <td><input type="radio"/> 5</td> <td><input type="radio"/> 5</td> </tr> <tr> <td>Citizen or Subject of a Foreign Country</td> <td><input type="radio"/> 3</td> <td><input type="radio"/> 3</td> <td>Foreign Nation</td> <td><input type="radio"/> 6</td> <td><input type="radio"/> 6</td> </tr> </tbody> </table>		PTF	DFT		PTF	DFT	Citizen of this State	<input type="radio"/> 1	<input type="radio"/> 1	Incorporated or Principal Place of Business in This State	<input type="radio"/> 4	<input type="radio"/> 4	Citizen of Another State	<input type="radio"/> 2	<input type="radio"/> 2	Incorporated and Principal Place of Business in Another State	<input type="radio"/> 5	<input type="radio"/> 5	Citizen or Subject of a Foreign Country	<input type="radio"/> 3	<input type="radio"/> 3	Foreign Nation	<input type="radio"/> 6	<input type="radio"/> 6
<input type="radio"/> 1 U.S. Government Plaintiff	<input checked="" type="radio"/> 3 Federal Question (U.S. Government Not a Party)
<input type="radio"/> 2 U.S. Government Defendant	<input type="radio"/> 4 Diversity (Indicate Citizenship of Parties in item III)
	PTF	DFT		PTF	DFT
Citizen of this State	<input type="radio"/> 1	<input type="radio"/> 1	Incorporated or Principal Place of Business in This State	<input type="radio"/> 4	<input type="radio"/> 4
Citizen of Another State	<input type="radio"/> 2	<input type="radio"/> 2	Incorporated and Principal Place of Business in Another State	<input type="radio"/> 5	<input type="radio"/> 5
Citizen or Subject of a Foreign Country	<input type="radio"/> 3	<input type="radio"/> 3	Foreign Nation	<input type="radio"/> 6	<input type="radio"/> 6

IV. CASE ASSIGNMENT AND NATURE OF SUIT

(Place an X in one category, A-N, that best represents your Cause of Action and one in a corresponding Nature of Suit)

<input checked="" type="radio"/> A. Antitrust  <input type="checkbox"/> 410 Antitrust	<input checked="" type="radio"/> B. Personal Injury/ Malpractice <input type="checkbox"/> 310 Airplane <input type="checkbox"/> 315 Airplane Product Liability <input type="checkbox"/> 320 Assault, Libel & Slander <input type="checkbox"/> 330 Federal Employers Liability <input type="checkbox"/> 340 Marine <input type="checkbox"/> 345 Marine Product Liability <input type="checkbox"/> 350 Motor Vehicle <input type="checkbox"/> 355 Motor Vehicle Product Liability <input type="checkbox"/> 360 Other Personal Injury <input type="checkbox"/> 362 Medical Malpractice <input type="checkbox"/> 365 Product Liability <input type="checkbox"/> 367 Health Care/Pharmaceutical Personal Injury Product Liability <input type="checkbox"/> 368 Asbestos Product Liability	<input checked="" type="radio"/> C. Administrative Agency Review  <input type="checkbox"/> 151 Medicare Act  Social Security <input type="checkbox"/> 861 HIA (1395ff) <input type="checkbox"/> 862 Black Lung (923) <input type="checkbox"/> 863 DIWC/DIWW (405(g)) <input type="checkbox"/> 864 SSID Title XVI <input type="checkbox"/> 865 RSI (405(g)) Other Statutes <input type="checkbox"/> 891 Agricultural Acts <input type="checkbox"/> 893 Environmental Matters <input type="checkbox"/> 890 Other Statutory Actions (If Administrative Agency is Involved)	<input checked="" type="radio"/> D. Temporary Restraining Order/Preliminary Injunction  Any nature of suit from any category may be selected for this category of case assignment.  (If Antitrust, then A governs)
<input checked="" type="radio"/> E. General Civil (Other) OR <input checked="" type="radio"/> F. Pro Se General Civil
Real Property <input type="checkbox"/> 210 Land Condemnation <input type="checkbox"/> 220 Foreclosure <input type="checkbox"/> 230 Rent, Lease & Ejectment <input type="checkbox"/> 240 Torts to Land <input type="checkbox"/> 245 Tort Product Liability <input type="checkbox"/> 290 All Other Real Property  Personal Property <input type="checkbox"/> 370 Other Fraud <input type="checkbox"/> 371 Truth in Lending <input type="checkbox"/> 380 Other Personal Property Damage <input type="checkbox"/> 385 Property Damage Product Liability	Bankruptcy <input type="checkbox"/> 422 Appeal 27 USC 158 <input type="checkbox"/> 423 Withdrawal 28 USC 157  Prisoner Petitions <input type="checkbox"/> 535 Death Penalty <input type="checkbox"/> 540 Mandamus & Other <input type="checkbox"/> 550 Civil Rights <input type="checkbox"/> 555 Prison Conditions <input type="checkbox"/> 560 Civil Detainee – Conditions of Confinement  Property Rights <input type="checkbox"/> 820 Copyrights <input type="checkbox"/> 830 Patent <input type="checkbox"/> 835 Patent – Abbreviated New Drug Application <input type="checkbox"/> 840 Trademark	Federal Tax Suits <input type="checkbox"/> 870 Taxes (US plaintiff or defendant) <input type="checkbox"/> 871 IRS-Third Party 26 USC 7609  Forfeiture/Penalty <input type="checkbox"/> 625 Drug Related Seizure of Property 21 USC 881 <input type="checkbox"/> 690 Other  Other Statutes <input type="checkbox"/> 375 False Claims Act <input type="checkbox"/> 376 Qui Tam (31 USC 3729(a)) <input type="checkbox"/> 400 State Reapportionment <input type="checkbox"/> 430 Banks & Banking <input type="checkbox"/> 450 Commerce/ICC Rates/etc. <input type="checkbox"/> 460 Deportation	<input type="checkbox"/> 462 Naturalization Application <input type="checkbox"/> 465 Other Immigration Actions <input type="checkbox"/> 470 Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organization <input type="checkbox"/> 480 Consumer Credit <input type="checkbox"/> 490 Cable/Satellite TV <input type="checkbox"/> 850 Securities/Commodities/Exchange <input type="checkbox"/> 896 Arbitration <input type="checkbox"/> 899 Administrative Procedure Act/Review or Appeal of Agency Decision <input type="checkbox"/> 950 Constitutionality of State Statutes <input type="checkbox"/> 890 Other Statutory Actions (if not administrative agency review or Privacy Act)

<input type="radio"/> G. Habeas Corpus/ 2255  <input type="checkbox"/> 530 Habeas Corpus – General <input type="checkbox"/> 510 Motion/Vacate Sentence <input type="checkbox"/> 463 Habeas Corpus – Alien Detainee	<input type="radio"/> H. Employment Discrimination  <input type="checkbox"/> 442 Civil Rights – Employment (criteria: race, gender/sex, national origin, discrimination, disability, age, religion, retaliation)  (If pro se, select this deck)	<input type="radio"/> I. FOIA/Privacy Act  <input type="checkbox"/> 895 Freedom of Information Act <input type="checkbox"/> 890 Other Statutory Actions (if Privacy Act)  (If pro se, select this deck)	<input type="radio"/> J. Student Loan  <input type="checkbox"/> 152 Recovery of Defaulted Student Loan (excluding veterans)
<input type="radio"/> K. Labor/ERISA (non-employment)  <input type="checkbox"/> 710 Fair Labor Standards Act <input type="checkbox"/> 720 Labor/Mgmt. Relations <input type="checkbox"/> 740 Labor Railway Act <input type="checkbox"/> 751 Family and Medical Leave Act <input type="checkbox"/> 790 Other Labor Litigation <input type="checkbox"/> 791 Empl. Ret. Inc. Security Act	<input checked="" type="radio"/> L. Other Civil Rights (non-employment)  <input checked="" type="checkbox"/> 441 Voting (if not Voting Rights Act) <input type="checkbox"/> 443 Housing/Accommodations <input type="checkbox"/> 440 Other Civil Rights <input type="checkbox"/> 445 Americans w/Disabilities – Employment <input type="checkbox"/> 446 Americans w/Disabilities – Other <input type="checkbox"/> 448 Education	<input type="radio"/> M. Contract  <input type="checkbox"/> 110 Insurance <input type="checkbox"/> 120 Marine <input type="checkbox"/> 130 Miller Act <input type="checkbox"/> 140 Negotiable Instrument <input type="checkbox"/> 150 Recovery of Overpayment & Enforcement of Judgment <input type="checkbox"/> 153 Recovery of Overpayment of Veteran's Benefits <input type="checkbox"/> 160 Stockholder's Suits <input type="checkbox"/> 190 Other Contracts <input type="checkbox"/> 195 Contract Product Liability <input type="checkbox"/> 196 Franchise	<input type="radio"/> N. Three-Judge Court  <input type="checkbox"/> 441 Civil Rights – Voting (if Voting Rights Act)

V. ORIGIN
☒ 1 Original Proceeding  
 ☐ 2 Removed from State Court  
 ☐ 3 Remanded from Appellate Court  
 ☐ 4 Reinstated or Reopened  
 ☐ 5 Transferred from another district (specify)  
 ☐ 6 Multi-district Litigation  
 ☐ 7 Appeal to District Judge from Mag. Judge  
 ☐ 8 Multi-district Litigation – Direct File

VI. CAUSE OF ACTION (CITE THE U.S. CIVIL STATUTE UNDER WHICH YOU ARE FILING AND WRITE A BRIEF STATEMENT OF CAUSE.)
 3 USC 1-21; Elector's Clause; Twelfth Amendment to Constitution; Federal Statutes are unconstitutional interferences with

VII. REQUESTED IN COMPLAINT	CHECK IF THIS IS A CLASS ACTION UNDER F.R.C.P. 23 <input type="checkbox"/>	DEMAND $ _____	JURY DEMAND: YES <input type="checkbox"/> NO <input checked="" type="checkbox"/>
VIII. RELATED CASE(S) IF ANY	(See instruction)	YES <input type="checkbox"/> NO <input checked="" type="checkbox"/>	If yes, please complete related case form

DATE: 12/22/2020	SIGNATURE OF ATTORNEY OF RECORD: /s/Erick G. Kaardal
------------------	--

INSTRUCTIONS FOR COMPLETING CIVIL COVER SHEET JS-44
Authority for Civil Cover Sheet

The JS-44 civil cover sheet and the information contained herein neither replaces nor supplements the filings and services of pleadings or other papers as required by law, except as provided by local rules of court. This form, approved by the Judicial Conference of the United States in September 1974, is required for the use of the Clerk of Court for the purpose of initiating the civil docket sheet. Consequently, a civil cover sheet is submitted to the Clerk of Court for each civil complaint filed. Listed below are tips for completing the civil cover sheet. These tips coincide with the Roman Numerals on the cover sheet.

- I. COUNTY OF RESIDENCE OF FIRST LISTED PLAINTIFF/DEFENDANT (b) County of residence: Use 11001 to indicate plaintiff if resident of Washington, DC, 88888 if plaintiff is resident of United States but not Washington, DC, and 99999 if plaintiff is outside the United States.
- III. CITIZENSHIP OF PRINCIPAL PARTIES: This section is completed only if diversity of citizenship was selected as the Basis of Jurisdiction under Section II.
- IV. CASE ASSIGNMENT AND NATURE OF SUIT: The assignment of a judge to your case will depend on the category you select that best represents the primary cause of action found in your complaint. You may select only one category. You must also select one corresponding nature of suit found under the category of the case.
- VI. CAUSE OF ACTION: Cite the U.S. Civil Statute under which you are filing and write a brief statement of the primary cause.
- VIII. RELATED CASE(S), IF ANY: If you indicated that there is a related case, you must complete a related case form, which may be obtained from the Clerk's Office.

Because of the need for accurate and complete information, you should ensure the accuracy of the information provided prior to signing the form.

District of Columbia

Civil Action No.

SUMMONS IN A CIVIL ACTION

To: (Defendant's name and address) Vice President Michael Richard Pence, in his official capacity as President of the United States Senate,
Office of the Vice President
1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W.
Washington, DC 20500

A lawsuit has been filed against you.

Within 21 days after service of this summons on you (not counting the day you received it) — or 60 days if you are the United States or a United States agency, or an officer or employee of the United States described in Fed. R. Civ. P. 12 (a)(2) or (3) — you must serve on the plaintiff an answer to the attached complaint or a motion under Rule 12 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. The answer or motion must be served on the plaintiff or plaintiff's attorney, whose name and address are: Erick G. Kaardal

Erick G. Kaardal
Special Counsel for Amistad Project of Thomas More Society
Mohrman, Kaardal & Erickson, P.A.
150 South Fifth Street, Suite 3100
Minneapolis, Minnesota 55402
(612) 465-0927 kaardal@mkllaw.com

If you fail to respond, judgment by default will be entered against you for the relief demanded in the complaint. You also must file your answer or motion with the court.

ANGELA D. CAESAR, CLERK OF COURT

Date: _____

Signature of Clerk or Deputy Clerk

Civil Action No. _____

PROOF OF SERVICE(This section should not be filed with the court unless required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 4 (l))*

This summons for (name of individual and title, if any) _____
 was received by me on (date) _____.

☐ I personally served the summons on the individual at (place) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I left the summons at the individual's residence or usual place of abode with (name) _____,
 a person of suitable age and discretion who resides there,
 on (date) _____, and mailed a copy to the individual's last known address; or

☐ I served the summons on (name of individual) _____, who is designated by law to accept service of process on behalf of (name of organization) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I returned the summons unexecuted because _____; or

☐ Other (specify): _____

My fees are $ _____ for travel and $ _____ for services, for a total of $ 0.00.

I declare under penalty of perjury that this information is true.

Date: _____

_____
Server's signature

_____
Printed name and title

_____
Server's address

Additional information regarding attempted service, etc:

District of Columbia

Civil Action No.

Signature of Clerk or Deputy Clerk

Civil Action No. _____

PROOF OF SERVICE(This section should not be filed with the court unless required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 4 (l))*

This summons for (name of individual and title, if any) _____
 was received by me on (date) _____.

☐ I personally served the summons on the individual at (place) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I left the summons at the individual's residence or usual place of abode with (name) _____,
 a person of suitable age and discretion who resides there,
 on (date) _____, and mailed a copy to the individual's last known address; or

☐ I served the summons on (name of individual) _____, who is designated by law to accept service of process on behalf of (name of organization) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I returned the summons unexecuted because _____; or

☐ Other (specify): _____

My fees are $ _____ for travel and $ _____ for services, for a total of $ 0.00.

I declare under penalty of perjury that this information is true.

Date: _____

_____
Server's signature

_____
Printed name and title

_____
Server's address

Additional information regarding attempted service, etc:

AO 440 (Rev. 06/12; DC 3/15) Summons in a Civil Action

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

for the

District of Columbia

Wisconsin Voters Alliance, et al.,

Plaintiff(s)

V.

Vice President Michael Richard Pence, et al.,

Defendant(s)

Civil Action No.

SUMMONS IN A CIVIL ACTION

To: (Defendant's name and address) U.S. SENATE,
U.S. Capitol
First St SE
Washington, DC 20004

A lawsuit has been filed against you.

Within 21 days after service of this summons on you (not counting the day you received it) — or 60 days if you are the United States or a United States agency, or an officer or employee of the United States described in Fed. R. Civ. P. 12 (a)(2) or (3) — you must serve on the plaintiff an answer to the attached complaint or a motion under Rule 12 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. The answer or motion must be served on the plaintiff or plaintiff's attorney, whose name and address are: Erick G. Kaardal

Erick G. Kaardal
Special Counsel for Amistad Project of Thomas More Society
Mohrman, Kaardal & Erickson, P.A.
150 South Fifth Street, Suite 3100
Minneapolis, Minnesota 55402
(612) 465-0927 kaardal@mkllaw.com

If you fail to respond, judgment by default will be entered against you for the relief demanded in the complaint. You also must file your answer or motion with the court.

ANGELA D. CAESAR, CLERK OF COURT

Date: _____

Signature of Clerk or Deputy Clerk

Civil Action No. _____

PROOF OF SERVICE(This section should not be filed with the court unless required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 4 (l))*

This summons for (name of individual and title, if any) _____
 was received by me on (date) _____.

☐ I personally served the summons on the individual at (place) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I left the summons at the individual's residence or usual place of abode with (name) _____,
 a person of suitable age and discretion who resides there,
 on (date) _____, and mailed a copy to the individual's last known address; or

☐ I served the summons on (name of individual) _____, who is designated by law to accept service of process on behalf of (name of organization) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I returned the summons unexecuted because _____; or

☐ Other (specify): _____

My fees are $ _____ for travel and $ _____ for services, for a total of $ 0.00.

I declare under penalty of perjury that this information is true.

Date: _____

_____
Server's signature

_____
Printed name and title

_____
Server's address

Additional information regarding attempted service, etc:

District of Columbia

Civil Action No.

Signature of Clerk or Deputy Clerk

Civil Action No. _____

PROOF OF SERVICE(This section should not be filed with the court unless required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 4 (l))*

This summons for (name of individual and title, if any) _____
 was received by me on (date) _____.

☐ I personally served the summons on the individual at (place) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I left the summons at the individual's residence or usual place of abode with (name) _____,
 a person of suitable age and discretion who resides there,
 on (date) _____, and mailed a copy to the individual's last known address; or

☐ I served the summons on (name of individual) _____, who is designated by law to accept service of process on behalf of (name of organization) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I returned the summons unexecuted because _____; or

☐ Other (specify): _____

My fees are $ _____ for travel and $ _____ for services, for a total of $ 0.00.

I declare under penalty of perjury that this information is true.

Date: _____

_____
Server's signature

_____
Printed name and title

_____
Server's address

Additional information regarding attempted service, etc:

District of Columbia

Civil Action No.

Signature of Clerk or Deputy Clerk

Civil Action No. _____

PROOF OF SERVICE(This section should not be filed with the court unless required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 4 (l))*

This summons for (name of individual and title, if any) _____
 was received by me on (date) _____.

☐ I personally served the summons on the individual at (place) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I left the summons at the individual's residence or usual place of abode with (name) _____,
 a person of suitable age and discretion who resides there,
 on (date) _____, and mailed a copy to the individual's last known address; or

☐ I served the summons on (name of individual) _____, who is designated by law to accept service of process on behalf of (name of organization) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I returned the summons unexecuted because _____; or

☐ Other (specify): _____

My fees are $ _____ for travel and $ _____ for services, for a total of $ 0.00.

I declare under penalty of perjury that this information is true.

Date: _____

_____
Server's signature

_____
Printed name and title

_____
Server's address

Additional information regarding attempted service, etc:

District of Columbia

Civil Action No.

Signature of Clerk or Deputy Clerk

Civil Action No. _____

PROOF OF SERVICE(This section should not be filed with the court unless required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 4 (l))*

This summons for (name of individual and title, if any) _____
 was received by me on (date) _____.

☐ I personally served the summons on the individual at (place) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I left the summons at the individual's residence or usual place of abode with (name) _____,
 a person of suitable age and discretion who resides there,
 on (date) _____, and mailed a copy to the individual's last known address; or

☐ I served the summons on (name of individual) _____, who is designated by law to accept service of process on behalf of (name of organization) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I returned the summons unexecuted because _____; or

☐ Other (specify): _____

My fees are $ _____ for travel and $ _____ for services, for a total of $ 0.00.

I declare under penalty of perjury that this information is true.

Date: _____

_____
Server's signature

_____
Printed name and title

_____
Server's address

Additional information regarding attempted service, etc:

District of Columbia

Civil Action No.

Signature of Clerk or Deputy Clerk

Civil Action No. _____

PROOF OF SERVICE(This section should not be filed with the court unless required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 4 (l))*

This summons for (name of individual and title, if any) _____
 was received by me on (date) _____.

☐ I personally served the summons on the individual at (place) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I left the summons at the individual's residence or usual place of abode with (name) _____,
 a person of suitable age and discretion who resides there,
 on (date) _____, and mailed a copy to the individual's last known address; or

☐ I served the summons on (name of individual) _____, who is designated by law to accept service of process on behalf of (name of organization) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I returned the summons unexecuted because _____; or

☐ Other (specify): _____

My fees are $ _____ for travel and $ _____ for services, for a total of $ 0.00.

I declare under penalty of perjury that this information is true.

Date: _____

_____
Server's signature

_____
Printed name and title

_____
Server's address

Additional information regarding attempted service, etc:

District of Columbia

Civil Action No.

Signature of Clerk or Deputy Clerk

Civil Action No. _____

PROOF OF SERVICE(This section should not be filed with the court unless required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 4 (l))*

This summons for (name of individual and title, if any) _____
 was received by me on (date) _____.

☐ I personally served the summons on the individual at (place) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I left the summons at the individual's residence or usual place of abode with (name) _____,
 a person of suitable age and discretion who resides there,
 on (date) _____, and mailed a copy to the individual's last known address; or

☐ I served the summons on (name of individual) _____, who is designated by law to accept service of process on behalf of (name of organization) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I returned the summons unexecuted because _____; or

☐ Other (specify): _____

My fees are $ _____ for travel and $ _____ for services, for a total of $ 0.00.

I declare under penalty of perjury that this information is true.

Date: _____

_____
Server's signature

_____
Printed name and title

_____
Server's address

Additional information regarding attempted service, etc:

District of Columbia

Civil Action No.

Signature of Clerk or Deputy Clerk

Civil Action No. _____

PROOF OF SERVICE(This section should not be filed with the court unless required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 4 (l))*

This summons for (name of individual and title, if any) _____
 was received by me on (date) _____.

☐ I personally served the summons on the individual at (place) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I left the summons at the individual's residence or usual place of abode with (name) _____,
 a person of suitable age and discretion who resides there,
 on (date) _____, and mailed a copy to the individual's last known address; or

☐ I served the summons on (name of individual) _____, who is designated by law to accept service of process on behalf of (name of organization) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I returned the summons unexecuted because _____; or

☐ Other (specify): _____

My fees are $ _____ for travel and $ _____ for services, for a total of $ 0.00.

I declare under penalty of perjury that this information is true.

Date: _____

_____
Server's signature

_____
Printed name and title

_____
Server's address

Additional information regarding attempted service, etc:

District of Columbia

Civil Action No.

Signature of Clerk or Deputy Clerk

Civil Action No. _____

PROOF OF SERVICE(This section should not be filed with the court unless required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 4 (l))*

This summons for (name of individual and title, if any) _____
 was received by me on (date) _____.

☐ I personally served the summons on the individual at (place) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I left the summons at the individual's residence or usual place of abode with (name) _____,
 a person of suitable age and discretion who resides there,
 on (date) _____, and mailed a copy to the individual's last known address; or

☐ I served the summons on (name of individual) _____, who is designated by law to accept service of process on behalf of (name of organization) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I returned the summons unexecuted because _____; or

☐ Other (specify): _____

My fees are $ _____ for travel and $ _____ for services, for a total of $ 0.00.

I declare under penalty of perjury that this information is true.

Date: _____

_____
Server's signature

_____
Printed name and title

_____
Server's address

Additional information regarding attempted service, etc:

District of Columbia

Civil Action No.

Signature of Clerk or Deputy Clerk

Civil Action No. _____

PROOF OF SERVICE(This section should not be filed with the court unless required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 4 (l))*

This summons for (name of individual and title, if any) _____
 was received by me on (date) _____.

☐ I personally served the summons on the individual at (place) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I left the summons at the individual's residence or usual place of abode with (name) _____,
 a person of suitable age and discretion who resides there,
 on (date) _____, and mailed a copy to the individual's last known address; or

☐ I served the summons on (name of individual) _____, who is designated by law to accept service of process on behalf of (name of organization) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I returned the summons unexecuted because _____; or

☐ Other (specify): _____

My fees are $ _____ for travel and $ _____ for services, for a total of $ 0.00.

I declare under penalty of perjury that this information is true.

Date: _____

_____
Server's signature

_____
Printed name and title

_____
Server's address

Additional information regarding attempted service, etc:

District of Columbia

Civil Action No.

Signature of Clerk or Deputy Clerk

Civil Action No. _____

PROOF OF SERVICE(This section should not be filed with the court unless required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 4 (l))*

This summons for (name of individual and title, if any) _____
 was received by me on (date) _____.

☐ I personally served the summons on the individual at (place) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I left the summons at the individual's residence or usual place of abode with (name) _____,
 a person of suitable age and discretion who resides there,
 on (date) _____, and mailed a copy to the individual's last known address; or

☐ I served the summons on (name of individual) _____, who is designated by law to accept service of process on behalf of (name of organization) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I returned the summons unexecuted because _____; or

☐ Other (specify): _____

My fees are $ _____ for travel and $ _____ for services, for a total of $ 0.00.

I declare under penalty of perjury that this information is true.

Date: _____

_____
Server's signature

_____
Printed name and title

_____
Server's address

Additional information regarding attempted service, etc:

District of Columbia

Civil Action No.

Signature of Clerk or Deputy Clerk

Civil Action No. _____

PROOF OF SERVICE(This section should not be filed with the court unless required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 4 (l))*

This summons for (name of individual and title, if any) _____
 was received by me on (date) _____.

☐ I personally served the summons on the individual at (place) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I left the summons at the individual's residence or usual place of abode with (name) _____,
 a person of suitable age and discretion who resides there,
 on (date) _____, and mailed a copy to the individual's last known address; or

☐ I served the summons on (name of individual) _____, who is designated by law to accept service of process on behalf of (name of organization) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I returned the summons unexecuted because _____; or

☐ Other (specify): _____

My fees are $ _____ for travel and $ _____ for services, for a total of $ 0.00.

I declare under penalty of perjury that this information is true.

Date: _____

_____
Server's signature

_____
Printed name and title

_____
Server's address

Additional information regarding attempted service, etc:

District of Columbia

Civil Action No.

Signature of Clerk or Deputy Clerk

Civil Action No. _____

PROOF OF SERVICE(This section should not be filed with the court unless required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 4 (l))*

This summons for (name of individual and title, if any) _____
 was received by me on (date) _____.

☐ I personally served the summons on the individual at (place) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I left the summons at the individual's residence or usual place of abode with (name) _____,
 a person of suitable age and discretion who resides there,
 on (date) _____, and mailed a copy to the individual's last known address; or

☐ I served the summons on (name of individual) _____, who is designated by law to accept service of process on behalf of (name of organization) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I returned the summons unexecuted because _____; or

☐ Other (specify):

My fees are $ _____ for travel and $ _____ for services, for a total of $ 0.00.

I declare under penalty of perjury that this information is true.

Date: _____

_____
Server's signature

_____
Printed name and title

_____
Server's address

Additional information regarding attempted service, etc:

District of Columbia

Civil Action No.

Signature of Clerk or Deputy Clerk

Civil Action No. _____

PROOF OF SERVICE(This section should not be filed with the court unless required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 4 (l))*

This summons for (name of individual and title, if any) _____
 was received by me on (date) _____.

☐ I personally served the summons on the individual at (place) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I left the summons at the individual's residence or usual place of abode with (name) _____,
 a person of suitable age and discretion who resides there,
 on (date) _____, and mailed a copy to the individual's last known address; or

☐ I served the summons on (name of individual) _____, who is designated by law to accept service of process on behalf of (name of organization) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I returned the summons unexecuted because _____; or

☐ Other (specify): _____

My fees are $ _____ for travel and $ _____ for services, for a total of $ 0.00.

I declare under penalty of perjury that this information is true.

Date: _____

_____
Server's signature

_____
Printed name and title

_____
Server's address

Additional information regarding attempted service, etc:

District of Columbia

Civil Action No.

Signature of Clerk or Deputy Clerk

Civil Action No. _____

PROOF OF SERVICE(This section should not be filed with the court unless required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 4 (l))*

This summons for (name of individual and title, if any) _____
 was received by me on (date) _____.

☐ I personally served the summons on the individual at (place) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I left the summons at the individual's residence or usual place of abode with (name) _____,
 a person of suitable age and discretion who resides there,
 on (date) _____, and mailed a copy to the individual's last known address; or

☐ I served the summons on (name of individual) _____, who is designated by law to accept service of process on behalf of (name of organization) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I returned the summons unexecuted because _____; or

☐ Other (specify):

My fees are $ _____ for travel and $ _____ for services, for a total of $ 0.00.

I declare under penalty of perjury that this information is true.

Date: _____

_____
Server's signature

_____
Printed name and title

_____
Server's address

Additional information regarding attempted service, etc:

District of Columbia

Civil Action No.

Signature of Clerk or Deputy Clerk

Civil Action No. _____

PROOF OF SERVICE(This section should not be filed with the court unless required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 4 (l))*

This summons for (name of individual and title, if any) _____
 was received by me on (date) _____.

☐ I personally served the summons on the individual at (place) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I left the summons at the individual's residence or usual place of abode with (name) _____,
 a person of suitable age and discretion who resides there,
 on (date) _____, and mailed a copy to the individual's last known address; or

☐ I served the summons on (name of individual) _____, who is designated by law to accept service of process on behalf of (name of organization) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I returned the summons unexecuted because _____; or

☐ Other (specify): _____

My fees are $ _____ for travel and $ _____ for services, for a total of $ 0.00.

I declare under penalty of perjury that this information is true.

Date: _____

_____
Server's signature

_____
Printed name and title

_____
Server's address

Additional information regarding attempted service, etc:

District of Columbia

Civil Action No.

Signature of Clerk or Deputy Clerk

Civil Action No. _____

PROOF OF SERVICE(This section should not be filed with the court unless required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 4 (l))*

This summons for (name of individual and title, if any) _____
 was received by me on (date) _____.

☐ I personally served the summons on the individual at (place) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I left the summons at the individual's residence or usual place of abode with (name) _____,
 a person of suitable age and discretion who resides there,
 on (date) _____, and mailed a copy to the individual's last known address; or

☐ I served the summons on (name of individual) _____, who is designated by law to accept service of process on behalf of (name of organization) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I returned the summons unexecuted because _____; or

☐ Other (specify):

My fees are $ _____ for travel and $ _____ for services, for a total of $ 0.00.

I declare under penalty of perjury that this information is true.

Date: _____

_____
Server's signature

_____
Printed name and title

_____
Server's address

Additional information regarding attempted service, etc:

District of Columbia

Civil Action No.

Signature of Clerk or Deputy Clerk

Civil Action No. _____

PROOF OF SERVICE(This section should not be filed with the court unless required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 4 (l))*

This summons for (name of individual and title, if any) _____
 was received by me on (date) _____.

☐ I personally served the summons on the individual at (place) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I left the summons at the individual's residence or usual place of abode with (name) _____,
 a person of suitable age and discretion who resides there,
 on (date) _____, and mailed a copy to the individual's last known address; or

☐ I served the summons on (name of individual) _____, who is designated by law to accept service of process on behalf of (name of organization) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I returned the summons unexecuted because _____; or

☐ Other (specify): _____

My fees are $ _____ for travel and $ _____ for services, for a total of $ 0.00.

I declare under penalty of perjury that this information is true.

Date: _____

_____
Server's signature

_____
Printed name and title

_____
Server's address

Additional information regarding attempted service, etc:

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

---

Wisconsin Voters Alliance, et al.,

Case No. _____

Plaintiffs,

v.

Vice President Michael Richard Pence, et al.,

Defendants.

---

Plaintiffs' Memorandum in Support of Motion for Preliminary Injunctive Relief

---

TABLE OF CONTENTS

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES .....	iv
INTRODUCTION.....	1
BACKGROUND.....	3
A. Defendants, except the constitutionally-required state legislatures, are involved in post-election certification of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors or counting of their ballots to elect the President and Vice President.....	3
B. None of the Presidential Electors certified by the Governors of the Defendant States received state legislative post-election certification; their votes should not be counted by Congress and the Vice President on January 6, 2021. ....	7
C. Federal and state court post-election Presidential election contests and recounts preclude state legislative post-election certification of Presidential votes and Presidential electors.....	8
1. The U.S. Supreme Court and Florida Supreme Court decisions in Bush v. Gore are examples of federal court and state court interference conflicting with a state legislature’s Article II post-election certification prerogatives. ....	8
2. The Defendant States have election contest or recount laws, which apply to Presidential elections. ....	9
3. In 2020, approximately thirty post-election lawsuits are filed in Defendants States regarding election official errors and improprieties. ....	9
4. In 2020, Texas sued Pennsylvania, Michigan, Wisconsin and Georgia in the U.S. Supreme Court to adjudicate election irregularities and improprieties. ....	9
D. The Defendants violate the Plaintiffs’ constitutionally-protected voting rights by certifying Presidential electors who have not received state legislative post-election certification and by counting their votes.....	10
E. This motion for preliminary injunction is filed to avoid a constitutional crisis.....	11
ARGUMENT.....	12
I. The D.C. Circuit applies a four-part test for granting a preliminary injunction.....	13
II. The Plaintiffs are likely to succeed on the merits. ....	13
A. Federal law—3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6, 15—and the state laws—Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B), Mich. Comp. Laws. § 168.46, Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166—are constitutionally unauthorized and they violate voters’ rights to state legislative post-election certifications.....	14

1. Voter rights are guaranteed under Article II to the state legislatures’ post-election certifications of their votes and of Presidential electors.....	14
2. Article II’s imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections requires that only the votes of Presidential electors who have received state legislative post-election certification count toward election of President and Vice President. ....	15
3. 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15 fail to constitutionally guarantee state legislative post-election certifications of votes and of Presidential electors.....	16
4. Congress lacks Congressional authority to enact 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15 which preempt constitutionally-mandated state legislative post-election certification of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors, violating voting rights related thereto.....	18
a. The textualist argument supports that the state legislatures, not Governors must conduct post-election certification of Presidential votes and of post-election certification of Presidential electors.....	18
b. The textual argument supports that 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15 are unconstitutional.....	22
c. Structuralist arguments also support that 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15 are unconstitutional.....	26
1) The Anti-Congress Principle .....	27
2) The Anti-Governors Principle .....	28
3) The Pro-State Legislatures Principle .....	29
4) Conclusion .....	30
5. The Defendant States violate Article II by their respective constitution and their respective state laws—Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B), Mich. Comp. Laws. § 168.46, Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166—by cancelling state legislatures out of post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors. ....	31
a. The Arizona Constitution and laws do not require state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors so their votes can be constitutionally counted by the federal Defendants—violating voters’ rights. ....	32
b. The Georgia Constitution and laws do not require state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors so their votes can be constitutionally counted by the federal Defendants—violating voters’ rights. ....	33

c.	The Michigan Constitution and laws do not require state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors so their votes can be constitutionally counted by the federal Defendants—violating voters’ rights. ....	33
d.	The Pennsylvania Constitution and laws do not require state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors so their votes can be constitutionally counted by the federal Defendants—violating voters’ rights. ....	34
e.	The Wisconsin Constitution and laws do not require state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors so their votes can be constitutionally counted by the federal Defendants—violating voters’ rights. ....	35
6.	The Presidential post-election court proceedings—like Bush v. Gore , the Texas original action and the thirty post-election lawsuits in Defendant States—are in constitutional error and unnecessarily politicize the federal and state courts. ....	36
III.	The Plaintiffs have standing as voters because the Defendants are violating their voting rights to state legislative post-election certifications of their votes and of Presidential electors and to only the votes of Presidential electors so certified being counted toward the election of President and Vice President. ....	36
IV.	The Plaintiffs are likely to suffer irreparable harm in the absence of preliminary relief. ....	42
V.	The balance of equities and the public interest tips in the Plaintiffs’ favor. ....	43
	CONCLUSION.....	45

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Cases

Aamer v. Obama , 742 F.3d 1023 (D.C.Cir.2014).....	13
Anderson v. Celebrezze , 460 U.S. 780 (1983).....	41
Arizona v. California , 589 U. S. ____ (Feb. 24, 2020) .....	10
Arkansas Dairy Co-op Ass'n, Inc. v. U.S. Dep't of Agric. , 573 F.3d 815 (D.C. Cir. 2009) .....	43
Baker v. Carr , 369 U.S. 186 (1962).....	37
*Baten v. McMaster , 967 F.3d 345 (4th Cir. 2020) .....	14, 37
Burdick v. Takushi , 504 U.S. 428 (1992) .....	39
*Bush v. Gore , 531 U.S. 98 (2000) .....	8, 36
Clapper v. Amnesty Int'l USA , 568 U.S. 398 (2013) .....	36
Davis v. Pension Ben. Guar. Corp. , 571 F.3d 1288 (D.C.Cir.2009) .....	13
Dumonde v. U.S. , 87 Fed. Cl. 651 (Fed. Cl. 2009) .....	39
Garcia v. San Antonio Metropolitan Transit Authority , 469 U.S. 528 (1985).....	18
*Gill v. Whitford , 138 S. Ct. 1916 (2018) .....	37, 38, 40
Guttenberg v. Emery , 26 F.Supp.3d 88 (D.D.C. 2014) .....	42
Johnson v. FCC , 829 F.2d 157 (D.C. Cir. 1987).....	38
Lane County v. Oregon , 74 U.S. 71 (1869) .....	18
Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife , 504 U.S. 555 (1992) .....	36
Marbury v. Madison , 1 Cranch 137, 5 U.S. 137 (1803) .....	39
Mazurek v. Armstrong , 520 U.S. 968 (1997).....	13
McCulloch v. Maryland , 17 U.S. 316 (1819) .....	18
Mdewakanton Sioux Indians of Minn. v. Zinke , 255 F.Supp.3d 48 (D.D.C. 2017) .....	42
New York v. U.S. , 505 U.S. 144 (1992) .....	18
Newman v. U.S. of America ex rel Frixell , 238 U.S. 537 (1915) .....	2, 11, 44

Perez v. United States , 402 U.S. 146 (1971) .....	18
Purcell v. Gonzalez , 549 U.S. 1 (2006) .....	38
Reynolds v. Sims , 377 U.S. 533 (1964) .....	38
Sherley v. Sebelius , 644 F.3d 388 (D.C.Cir.2011) .....	13
Susan B. Anthony List v. Driehaus , 573 U.S. 149 (2014) .....	37
Timmons v. Twin Cities Area New Party , 520 U.S. 351 (1997) .....	39
United States v. Darby , 312 U.S. 100 (1941) .....	18
Wash. Metro. Area Transit Comm'n v. Holiday Tours, Inc. , 559 F.2d 841 (D.C.Cir.1977) .....	13
Wesberry v. Sanders , 376 U.S. 1 (1964) .....	39
Winter v. NRDC, Inc. , 555 U.S. 7 (2008) .....	42, 43

Constitutional Provisions

U.S. Constitution, Article I .....	23, 24, 26
U.S. Constitution, Article II .....	passim
U.S. Constitution, Article III .....	36, 37
Georgia Constitution of 1798 ( http://founding.com/founders-library/government-documents/american-state-and-local-government-documents/state-constitutions/georgia-constitution-of-1798/ ) (last visited: December 18, 2020) .....	7, 29

Statutes

3 U.S.C. § 5, 6 and 15 .....	passim
Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B) .....	passim
Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-672 .....	9, 36
D.C. Code § 16-3501 .....	2, 11, 43, 44
Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B) .....	passim
Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-521 .....	9, 36
Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.46 .....	passim
Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.862 .....	9, 36

25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166 ..... passim

25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3312 .....9, 36

25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3351 .....9, 36

Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) ..... passim

Wis. Stat. § 9.01 .....9, 36

INTRODUCTION

The Plaintiffs move for a preliminary injunction enjoining the federal Defendants and state Defendants from Pennsylvania, Michigan, Wisconsin, Georgia and Arizona (Defendant States) from certifying Presidential electors and counting their votes where the Presidential electors did not receive state legislative post-election certification as required by Article II.

Article II contains an imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections that state legislatures, every four years, may direct the manner of state appointment of Presidential electors:

He shall hold his office during the term of four years, and, together with the Vice President, chosen for the same term, be elected, as follows: Each state shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors, equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress: but no Senator or Representative, or person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States, shall be appointed an elector.

Specifically, the challenged federal and state laws<sup>1</sup> requiring Governor post-election certification of Presidential electors, currently considered as having full legal force and effect, have the legal consequence that the state legislatures, every four years, “may” NOT “direct” the “manner” of “appointing” the Presidential electors. Under this one constitutional imperative sentence, the state legislatures, not the Governors, have the constitutional prerogative to post-election certification. Absent the state legislative post-election certification of the Presidential electors, the federal Defendants cannot constitutionally count the votes of the Presidential electors from the Defendant States.

The Plaintiffs are voters who have constitutionally-protected voting rights to state legislative post-election certification regarding their votes for Presidential electors and constitutionally-protected voting rights that only the votes of Presidential electors who have received state legislative post-election certification be counted by the federal Defendants to elect the President and Vice President.

---

<sup>1</sup> 3 U.S.C. § 5, 6 and 15 and Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B), Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.46, Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166.

A preliminary injunction is necessary to avoid a constitutional crisis. The constitutional crisis may be caused, after the January 20, 2021 inauguration of the President and Vice President, by a Presidential candidate or Presidential electors filing a post-inaugural civil action for writ of quo warranto to oust the President and Vice President.<sup>2</sup> The U.S. District Court has jurisdiction over a post-inaugural ouster of the United States President and Vice President. Specifically, D.C. Code § 16-3501, et seq., authorizes the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia, in proper cases, instituted by proper officers or persons, to post-inaugural ouster of national officers of the United States including the President and Vice President of the United States. Newman v. U.S. of America ex rel Frizzell, 238 U.S. 537 (1915).

The Presidential candidate or Presidential electors could make two constitutional arguments against the votes the federal Defendants counted in the election of President and Vice President. First, U.S.C. § 5, 6 and 15 are unconstitutional because Congress does not have constitutional authority to assign post-election certification to the Governors as executives of the Defendant States and to direct Congress and the Vice President to count votes of Presidential electors who have not received state legislative post-election certification. Second, the Defendant States' state legislatures have unconstitutionally acquiesced to the federal laws by enacting state laws transferring post-election certification from the state legislatures to state executive branch officials: Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B) (Arizona Secretary of State), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B) (Georgia Secretary of State and Governor), Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.46 (Michigan State Board of Canvassers and Governor),

---

<sup>2</sup> The Epoch Times, "Electors in 7 states cast dueling votes for Trump" at https://www.theepochtimes.com/mkt\_app/electors-in-7-states-cast-dueling-votes-for-trump\_3620059.html (last visited: Dec. 18, 2020).

Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) (Wisconsin Elections Commission); and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166 (Secretary of Commonwealth and Governor).

The Plaintiffs agree with these constitutional arguments, but disagree about the wisdom of using the post-inaugural ouster procedure to litigate them. Waiting for the post-inaugural ouster creates an unnecessary constitutional crisis. Instead, the post-inaugural ouster should be the option of last resort.

Plaintiffs' motion for preliminary injunction is a better vehicle for this Court to adjudicate these constitutional claims in a timely way so that the constitutional provisions of the U.S. Constitution regarding Presidential electors, Article II and the Twelfth Amendment, are followed and a President and a Vice President are lawfully inaugurated on January 20, 2021.

BACKGROUND

A. Defendants, except the constitutionally-required state legislatures, are involved in post-election certification of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors or counting of their ballots to elect the President and Vice President.

Under 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15, each of the Defendants, except the state legislative leaders and their state legislatures, have a role to play in state post-election certification of Presidential votes, state post-election certification of a state's Presidential electors or counting of the Presidential Electors' votes. Under 3 U.S.C. § 15, "Congress shall be in session on the sixth day of January succeeding every meeting of electors. The Senate and House of Representatives shall meet in the Hall of the House of Representatives at the hour of 1 o'clock in the afternoon on that day." Under 3 U.S.C. § 15, Vice President Michael Richard Pence is the presiding officer on January 6, 2021: "and the President of the Senate shall be their presiding officer."

Vice President Pence, the U.S. Senate and the U.S. House of Representatives are Defendants who presume under 3 U.S.C. §§ 5 and 6, that each state's Presidential elector votes can be counted

because they are designated by the Governor of each Defendant State—even without state legislative post-election certification. 3 U.S.C. § 5 provides:

If any State shall have provided, by laws enacted prior to the day fixed for the appointment of the electors, for its final determination of any controversy or contest concerning the appointment of all or any of the electors of such State, by judicial or other methods or procedures, and such determination shall have been made at least six days before the time fixed for the meeting of the electors, such determination made pursuant to such law so existing on said day, and made at least six days prior to said time of meeting of the electors, shall be conclusive, and shall govern in the counting of the electoral votes as provided in the Constitution, and as hereinafter regulated, so far as the ascertainment of the electors appointed by such State is concerned.

3 U.S.C. § 6 provides:

It shall be the duty of the executive of each State, as soon as practicable after the conclusion of the appointment of the electors in such State by the final ascertainment, under and in pursuance of the laws of such State providing for such ascertainment, to communicate by registered mail under the seal of the State to the Archivist of the United States a certificate of such ascertainment of the electors appointed, setting forth the names of such electors and the canvass or other ascertainment under the laws of such State of the number of votes given or cast for each person for whose appointment any and all votes have been given or cast; and it shall also thereupon be the duty of the executive of each State to deliver to the electors of such State, on or before the day on which they are required by section 7 of this title to meet, six duplicate-originals of the same certificate under the seal of the State; and if there shall have been any final determination in a State in the manner provided for by law of a controversy or contest concerning the appointment of all or any of the electors of such State, it shall be the duty of the executive of such State, as soon as practicable after such determination, to communicate under the seal of the State to the Archivist of the United States a certificate of such determination in form and manner as the same shall have been made; and the certificate or certificates so received by the Archivist of the United States shall be preserved by him for one year and shall be a part of the public records of his office and shall be open to public inspection; and the Archivist of the United States at the first meeting of Congress thereafter shall transmit to the two Houses of Congress copies in full of each and every such certificate so received at the National Archives and Records Administration.

The Plaintiffs claim that the Federal Defendants' presumption is constitutionally incorrect; under Article II's imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections, Defendants Vice President Pence, the U.S. House of Representatives and the United States Senate can only open up and count Presidential elector ballots if the state legislature has affirmatively voted post-election to certify the Presidential electors; otherwise, the votes of the Presidential electors cannot be counted. The Plaintiffs claim that the Vice President and U.S. Congress act unconstitutionally in this Presidential election and future Presidential elections when they count votes of Presidential electors where the respective state legislature has not affirmatively voted in favor of post-election certification.

Similarly, the Defendant States' executives, Governor Tom Wolf of Pennsylvania, Governor Gretchen Whitmer of Michigan, Governor Tony Evers of Wisconsin, Governor Brian Kemp of Georgia, and Governor Doug Ducey of Arizona under 3 U.S.C. § 6 and their respective state's laws, have designated the Presidential electors based on the assumption that state executive branch certification is all that is required.

But, Governor Tom Wolf of Pennsylvania, Governor Gretchen Whitmer of Michigan, Governor Tony Evers of Wisconsin, Governor Brian Kemp of Georgia, and Governor Doug of Arizona are constitutionally mistaken because the designation by the Governor of each Defendant State cannot cure that the Presidential electors are without state legislative post-election certification. Until the state legislature certifies the Presidential votes and the Presidential electors, the respective Governor's designation under 3 U.S.C. § 6 and their respective state's laws have no legal effect. Absent the state legislative post-election certification required by Article II's imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections, the Governor's designation of Presidential electors has no legal effect because their votes cannot be counted by the Vice President, U.S. Senate and U.S. House of Representatives.

Finally, Article II's imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections requires the Defendants' state legislative leaders to act to vote on post-election certification of the Presidential electors. But, instead, the state legislatures unconstitutionally defer because of their respective state laws which are a perpetual and wholesale delegation of post-election certification to state executive branch officials—as has been done in Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B) (Arizona Secretary of State), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B) (Georgia Secretary of State and Governor), Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.46

(Michigan State Board of Canvassers and Governor), Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) (Wisconsin Elections Commission); and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166 (Secretary of Commonwealth and Governor).

The Plaintiffs claim that Article II's imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections, and its non-delegation doctrine, permanently left it to the state legislatures to "direct" post-election certification of Presidential electors, not to delegate post-election certification, perpetually and in a wholesale fashion, to state executive branch officials as a ministerial duty.

In this way, the Defendant States' legislative leaders, including Speaker Bryan Carter of the Pennsylvania House of Representatives, Senate Majority Leader Jake Corman of the Pennsylvania Senate, Speaker Lee Chatfield of the Michigan House of Representatives, Senate Majority Leader Mike Shirkey of the Michigan Senate, Speaker Robin Vos of the Wisconsin State Assembly, Senate Majority Leader Howard Marklein of the Wisconsin Senate, Speaker David Ralston of the Georgia House of Representatives, Senate President Pro Tempore Butch Miller of the Georgia Senate, Speaker Russell Bowers of the Arizona House of Representatives, and Senate Majority Leader Rick Gray of the Arizona Senate are violating their duties under the federal Constitution by not voting on post-election certification of the Presidential electors so their votes can constitutionally count.

State legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors is a part of federally-guaranteed voting rights.

Further, the state constitutions of the Defendant States fail to require the state legislature to meet for post-election certification of the Presidential electors in violation of state legislative constitutional duties under Article II's imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections of the U.S. Constitution. Arizona's, Georgia's and Pennsylvania's Constitutions have the state legislature adjourned until January 2021 subject to special sessions called by the Governor or state legislature. Arizona Const.; Georgia Const.; Pennsylvania Const. Michigan's and Wisconsin's Constitutions permit the state legislature to be in session, but do not require a joint session of the state legislature to affirmatively vote for post-election certification of Presidential electors. Michigan Const.; Wisconsin Const. By contrast, for example, the Georgia Constitution of 1798, Article IV, section 2, subsequently repealed, had clear procedures for state legislative certification of Presidential electors:

Sec. 2. All elections by the general assembly shall be by joint ballot of both branches of the legislature; and when the senate and house of representatives unite for the purpose of electing, they shall meet in the representative chamber, and the president of the senate shall in such cases preside, receive the ballots, and declare the person or persons elected. In all elections by the people the electors shall vote viva voce until the legislature shall otherwise direct.<sup>3</sup>

Each voter who votes—distinguishable from those who don’t—has a constitutionally-protected interest in state legislative post-election certification of their vote and of their state’s Presidential electors. The federal Defendants violate those voting rights by counting ballots of Presidential electors without the constitutionally-required state legislative post-election certifications. The state Defendants violate those voting rights by not complying with constitutionally-required state legislative post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors.

B. None of the Presidential Electors certified by the Governors of the Defendant States received state legislative post-election certification; their votes should not be counted by Congress and the Vice President on January 6, 2021.

On December 14, the Presidential electors for Biden and Trump met and voted in their Defendant States. The Presidential electors for Biden in the Defendant States are certified by state executive branch officials under 3 U.S.C. § 6 and the respective states’ election certification laws. Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B) (Arizona Secretary of State), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B) (Georgia Secretary of State and Governor), Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.46 (Michigan State Board of Canvassers and Governor), Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) (Wisconsin Elections Commission); and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166 (Secretary of Commonwealth and Governor). The Presidential electors for Trump are not certified in this way. But, neither the Presidential electors for Biden nor the Presidential electors for Trump in the Defendant States received a state legislative post-election affirmative vote for certification. The Presidential electors for Biden in the Defendant States voted for Biden as President and Harris as Vice President.<sup>4</sup> The Presidential electors for Trump in the Defendant States voted for Trump as President and Pence as Vice President. But, under Article II, none of these votes count because no Presidential electors have received state legislative post-election certification.

---

<sup>3</sup> Georgia Constitution of 1798 (<http://founding.com/founders-library/government-documents/american-state-and-local-government-documents/state-constitutions/georgia-constitution-of-1798/>) (last visited: December 18, 2020).

C. Federal and state court post-election Presidential election contests and recounts preclude state legislative post-election certification of Presidential votes and Presidential electors.

Federal and state court post-election Presidential election contests and recounts preclude the state legislatures' post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors. Under the Plaintiffs' interpretation of Article II, pre-election judicial proceedings are not a constitutional problem, but judicial post-election Presidential election contests and recounts conflict with the state legislatures' post-election certifications under Article II.

1. The U.S. Supreme Court and Florida Supreme Court decisions in Bush v. Gore are examples of federal court and state court interference conflicting with a state legislature's Article II post-election certification prerogatives.

The court decisions in Bush v. Gore reflect examples of federal court and state court proceedings conflicting with a state legislature's Article II post-election certification prerogatives. On December 12, 2000, the U.S. Supreme Court issued a decision in Bush v. Gore, 531 U.S. 98 (2000), settling a state court recount dispute in Florida's 2000 presidential election between George W. Bush and Al Gore. The U.S. Supreme Court decision allowed the previous vote certification made by Florida Secretary of State Katherine Harris to stand for George W. Bush, who thereby won

---

<sup>4</sup>The Epoch Times, "Electors in 7 states cast dueling votes for Trump" at https://www.theepochtimes.com/mkt\_app/electors-in-7-states-cast-dueling-votes-for-trump\_3620059.html (last visited: Dec. 18, 2020).

Florida's 25 electoral votes—and the Presidential election. Neither the court decisions, nor Florida law, included the Florida state legislature conducting post-election certifications of the Presidential vote and of the Presidential electors.

2. The Defendant States have election contest or recount laws, which apply to Presidential elections.

Similarly, the Defendant States have election contest or recount laws, which apply to Presidential elections—like Florida's laws did in 2000: Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-672; Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-521; Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.862; Wis. Stat. § 9.01; and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3351. The Defendant States' laws do not provide for the state legislatures to engage in post-election certifications. Interestingly, the Pennsylvania laws have a state legislative post-election certification process for its Governor and Lieutenant Governor elections. 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3312, et seq.

3. In 2020, approximately thirty post-election lawsuits are filed in Defendants States regarding election official errors and improprieties.

Approximately thirty post-election lawsuits regarding Pennsylvania, Michigan, Wisconsin, Georgia and Arizona election official errors and improprieties were filed.<sup>5</sup> The Complaint and its citations to the appendix detail allegations of Pennsylvania, Michigan, Wisconsin, Georgia and Arizona election official errors and improprieties. In Defendants' states, voter allegations exists which are the election officials' errors and improprieties exceed the razor-thin margins of Presidential contests.

4. In 2020, Texas sued Pennsylvania, Michigan, Wisconsin and Georgia in the U.S. Supreme Court to adjudicate election irregularities and improprieties.

On December 7, 2020, Texas filed an original action in the U.S. Supreme Court, Case No. 22O155, against Pennsylvania, Michigan, Wisconsin and Georgia for election irregularities and improprieties. On December 9, Missouri and 16 other states filed a motion for leave to file an amicus curiae brief in support of Texas. On December 10, U.S. Representative Mike Johnson and 105 other members submitted a motion for leave to file amicus brief in support of Texas. On December 11, the U.S. Supreme Court dismissed the original action in a text order:

---

<sup>5</sup>See "Postelection lawsuits related to the 2020 United States presidential election," found at https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Postelection\_lawsuits\_related\_to\_the\_2020\_United\_States\_presidential\_election#Wood\_v.\_Raffensperger (last visited: Dec. 15, 2020).

The State of Texas’s motion for leave to file a bill of complaint is denied for lack of standing under Article III of the Constitution. Texas has not demonstrated a judicially cognizable interest in the manner in which another State conducts its elections. All other pending motions are dismissed as moot. Statement of Justice Alito, with whom Justice Thomas joins: In my view, we do not have discretion to deny the filing of a bill of complaint in a case that falls within our original jurisdiction. See Arizona v. California, 589 U. S. ____ (Feb. 24, 2020) (Thomas, J., dissenting). I would therefore grant the motion to file the bill of complaint but would not grant other relief, and I express no view on any other issue.<sup>6</sup>

D. The Defendants violate the Plaintiffs’ constitutionally-protected voting rights by certifying Presidential electors who have not received state legislative post-election certification and by counting their votes.

The Defendants violate the Plaintiffs’ constitutionally-protected voting rights by recognizing Presidential electors who have not received state legislative post-election certification and by counting their votes. Under Article II’s imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections, Defendants can only certify Presidential electors and count their votes if they have received state legislative post-election certification—which none have.

The federal laws regarding the Presidential electors, 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15, are constitutionally unauthorized. Article II and the Twelfth Amendment of the Constitution establish a non-delegable process where at least state legislative post-election certification of the state’s Presidential electors is constitutionally required for Presidential elector votes to be counted in the election of the President and Vice President. In contradiction, the federal laws, 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and

---

<sup>6</sup> Plaintiffs agree that the State of Texas lacked standing, but the original action itself begs the question, “Is the U.S. Supreme Court the final adjudicator for certification of Presidential electors?” The Plaintiffs’ answer is no; the respective state legislatures are the final determiner of certification of Presidential electors—and, in a non-delegable way.

15, establish a different process where Presidential electors are designated by the Governor of each Defendant State without state legislative post-election certification—and, then, their votes are counted to elect the President and Vice President.

The Defendant States have legally acquiesced to the federal laws by enacting statutes transferring post-election certification from the state legislatures to state executive branch officials: Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B) (Arizona Secretary of State), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B) (Georgia Secretary of State and Governor), Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.46 (Michigan State Board of Canvassers and Governor), Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) (Wisconsin Elections Commission); and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166 (Secretary of Commonwealth and Governor). These state laws also violate Article II which establishes the state legislative prerogative to post-election certification of Presidential electors.

E. This motion for preliminary injunction is filed to avoid a constitutional crisis.

The Plaintiffs file this complaint to avoid a constitutional crisis that would be involved in a post-inaugural ouster of the United States President and Vice President under D.C. Code § 16-3501, et seq., which authorizes the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia, in proper cases, instituted by proper officers or persons, to oust national officers of the United States post-election, including the President and Vice President of the United States. Newman v. U.S. of America ex rel. Frizzell, 238 U.S. 537 (1915).

Instead, to avoid that post-inaugural constitutional crisis, the Plaintiffs as voters file this preliminary injunction motion against federal officials in the District of Columbia and Governors and state legislative leaders in Arizona, Georgia, Michigan, Pennsylvania and Wisconsin (“Defendant States”) requiring a constitutionally-compliant process for state-by-state post-election certification of Presidential electors and counting of their votes for the November 3, 2020 Presidential election and future elections.

ARGUMENT

The Plaintiffs as voters file this motion for preliminary injunction against federal officials in the District of Columbia and Governors and state legislative leaders in Arizona, Georgia, Michigan, Pennsylvania and Wisconsin (“Defendant States”) seeking a constitutionally-compliant process for state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors and counting of their votes prior to the Presidential and Vice Presidential inaugural on January 20, 2021.

Under Article II's imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections, Congress lacks legal authority to enact laws interfering with the state-by-state state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors as it has done with 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15. Analogously, under Article II's imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections, the state legislatures lack legal authority to enact state laws which are a perpetual and wholesale delegation of post-election certification to state executive branch officials—as they have done in Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B) (Arizona Secretary of State), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B) (Georgia Secretary of State and Governor), Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.46 (Michigan State Board of Canvassers and Governor), Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) (Wisconsin Elections Commission); and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166 (Secretary of Commonwealth and Governor). Article II's imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections, and its non-delegation doctrine, left it to the state legislatures to “direct” post-election certification of Presidential electors, not to delegate post-election certification, perpetually and in a wholesale fashion, to state executive branch officials as a ministerial duty. Under Article II's imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections, if there is no state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors in the Defendant States, then those Defendant States' Presidential electors' votes, not so certified, cannot be counted by the federal Defendants for the election of President and Vice President. So, the preliminary injunction should issue to require constitutional compliance.<sup>7</sup>

I. The D.C. Circuit applies a four-part test for granting a preliminary injunction.

A party seeking a preliminary injunction must establish (1) that he is likely to succeed on the merits, (2) that he is likely to suffer irreparable harm in the absence of preliminary relief, (3) that the balance of equities tips in his favor, and (4) that an injunction is in the public interest.” Aamer v. Obama, 742 F.3d 1023, 1038 (D.C.Cir.2014) (quoting Sherley v. Sebelius, 644 F.3d 388, 392 (D.C.Cir.2011)) (emphasis in text deleted). A preliminary injunction “is an extraordinary and drastic remedy, one that should not be granted unless the movant, by a clear showing, carries the burden of persuasion.” Mazurek v. Armstrong, 520 U.S. 968, 972 (1997) (quoting 11A C. Wright, A. Miller, & M. Kane, Federal Practice And Procedure § 2948 (2d ed.1995)) (emphasis in original).

II. The Plaintiffs are likely to succeed on the merits.

The Plaintiffs are likely to succeed on the merits. The D.C. Circuit has, in the past, followed the “sliding scale” approach to success on the merits, where “a court, when confronted with a case in which the other three factors strongly favor interim relief may exercise its discretion to grant a stay if the movant has made a substantial case on the merits.” Wash. Metro. Area Transit Comm’n v. Holiday Tours, Inc., 559 F.2d 841, 843 (D.C.Cir.1977). Under the sliding scale approach, “if the movant makes a very strong showing of irreparable harm and there is no substantial harm to the nonmovant, then a correspondingly lower standard can be applied for likelihood of success.” Davis v. Pension Ben. Guar. Corp., 571 F.3d 1288, 1292 (D.C.Cir.2009).

---

<sup>7</sup> For a review of the constitutional convention’s deliberations on selecting the president, see Neal R. Peirce and Lawrence D. Longley, The People’s President: The Electoral College in American History and the Direct Vote Alternative (1968; New Haven, 1981) at 10-30.

- A. Federal law—3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6, 15—and the state laws—Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B), Mich. Comp. Laws. § 168.46, Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166—are constitutionally unauthorized and they violate voters’ rights to state legislative post-election certifications.

The plaintiffs have voting rights under Article II guaranteeing state legislative post-election certification of their votes and of Presidential electors. See Baten v. McMaster, 967 F.3d 345, 352–53 (4th Cir. 2020) (voters who vote in Presidential elections have standing on claims of government causing disenfranchisement). 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6, 15, Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B), Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.46, Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166 are constitutionally unauthorized. The federal and state laws violate voters’ rights by preempting state legislative post-election certification of their Presidential votes and post-election certification of the Presidential electors. 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6, 15 also unconstitutionally allow counting of votes of Presidential electors who have not received the constitutionally-required state legislative post-election certification.

- 1. Voter rights are guaranteed under Article II to the state legislatures’ post-election certifications of their votes and of Presidential electors.

Article II guarantees to voters that the state legislature will vote on post-election certification of votes and post-election certification of Presidential electors and that only ballots of legislatively-certified Presidential electors will be counted for the election of President and Vice President. See Baten v. McMaster, 967 F.3d at 352–53 (4th Cir. 2020). It is part of the social contract embedded in the Constitution.

Specifically, Article II provides that the state legislature—not Congress, nor the Governors—shall be the deciding body for Presidential electors:

He shall hold his office during the term of four years, and, together with the Vice President, chosen for the same term, be elected, as follows: Each state shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors, equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress: but no Senator or Representative, or person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States, shall be appointed an elector.

Under Article II and the Tenth Amendment, the state legislatures' power to determine the manner of appointment of Presidential electors includes the power of post-election certification. Moreover, the state legislatures' choice for elections as the manner to appoint Presidential electors does not abrogate nor diminish the state legislatures' constitutional obligations to conduct post-election certification of their respective Presidential electors.

2. Article II's imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections requires that only the votes of Presidential electors who have received state legislative post-election certification count toward election of President and Vice President.

The purpose of Article II's imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections is for state legislatures to certify voters' Presidential votes in order to certify Presidential electors who cast ballots for President and Vice President—which are opened and counted by the federal Defendants. The voters in the Presidential elections are constitutionally-guaranteed that the state legislature, after the election, will certify their vote and, based on the Presidential vote returns, certify the Presidential electors. All Presidential election contests are to be heard by the state legislatures—not the federal courts nor the state courts. The constitutional protection of the state legislatures' constitutional prerogatives over selection of Presidential electors is that the Federal Defendants can only count the votes of the Presidential electors who have state legislative post-election certification; otherwise, constitutionally, the votes of Presidential electors without state legislative post-election certification do not count.

3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6, 15, Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B), Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.46, Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166 are also constitutionally unauthorized because the Federal Defendants count votes of Presidential electors who do not have state legislative post-election certification. The federal laws and state laws authorize an unconstitutional method for electing the President and Vice President. Because the federal laws are not constitutionally authorized, the threat of a post-inaugural ouster under D.C. Code 16-3501, et seq., is legally imminent.

3. 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15 fail to constitutionally guarantee state legislative post-election certifications of votes and of Presidential electors.

3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15 constitute significant federal regulation of the state appointment of Presidential electors and counting their votes for President and Vice President. Meanwhile, these federal laws fail to guarantee state legislative certifications of votes and of Presidential electors. Sections 5 and 6 set a deadline for the state executive branch officials and judges of December 8, 2020, to determine election controversies as to appointment of electors and designates the Governor of each state to communicate the appointment of the Presidential electors to the federal government. Section 5 sets the deadline as six days before the Electors meet to vote which was December 14, 2020:

If any State shall have provided, by laws enacted prior to the day fixed for the appointment of the electors, for its final determination of any controversy or contest concerning the appointment of all or any of the electors of such State, by judicial or other methods or procedures, and such determination shall have been made at least six days before the time fixed for the meeting of the electors, such determination made pursuant to such law so existing on said day, and made at least six days prior to said time of meeting of the electors, shall be conclusive, and shall govern in the counting of the electoral votes as provided in the Constitution, and as hereinafter regulated, so far as the ascertainment of the electors appointed by such State is concerned.

Section 6 designates the Governors, the executives of the states, to be the public officials to exclusively communicate the list of Presidential electors and their votes to the federal government:

It shall be the duty of the executive of each State, as soon as practicable after the conclusion of the appointment of the electors in such State by the final ascertainment, under and in pursuance of the laws of such State providing for such ascertainment, to communicate by registered mail under the seal of the State to the Archivist of the United States a certificate of such ascertainment of the electors appointed, setting forth the names of such electors and the canvass or other ascertainment under the laws of such State of the number of votes given or cast for each person for whose appointment any and all votes have been given or cast; and it shall also thereupon be the duty of the executive of each State to deliver to the electors of such State, on or before the day on which they are required by section 7 of this title to meet, six duplicate-originals of the same certificate under the seal of the State; and if there shall have been any final determination in a State in the manner provided for by law of a controversy or contest concerning the appointment of all or any of the electors of such State, it shall be the duty of the executive of such State, as soon as practicable after such determination, to communicate under the seal of the State to the Archivist of the United States a certificate of such determination in form and manner as the same shall have been made; and the certificate or certificates so received by the Archivist of the United States shall be preserved by him for one year and shall be a part of the public records of his office and shall be open to public inspection; and the Archivist of the United States at the first meeting of Congress thereafter shall transmit to the two Houses of Congress copies in full of each and every such certificate so received at the National Archives and Records Administration.

Section 15 contains procedures for the Vice President of the United States as President of the Senate, the U.S. Senate and the U.S. House of Representatives to meet on January 6 following the Presidential election and for counting the Presidential electors' votes from the respective states. There is nothing in section 15 stating that only the ballots of Presidential electors who have received state legislative post-election certification will be counted:

Congress shall be in session on the sixth day of January succeeding every meeting of the electors. The Senate and House of Representatives shall meet in the Hall of the House of Representatives at the hour of 1 o'clock in the afternoon on that day, and the President of the Senate shall be their presiding officer. Two tellers shall be previously appointed on the part of the Senate and two on the part of the House of Representatives, to whom shall be handed, as they are opened by the President of the Senate, all the certificates and papers purporting to be certificates of the electoral votes, which certificates and papers shall be opened, presented, and acted upon in the alphabetical order of the States, beginning with the letter A; and said tellers, having then read the same in the presence and hearing of the two Houses, shall make a list of the votes as they shall appear from the said certificates; and the votes having been ascertained and counted according to the rules in this subchapter provided, the result of the same shall be delivered to the President of the Senate, who shall thereupon announce the state of the vote, which announcement shall be deemed a sufficient declaration of the persons, if any, elected President and Vice President of the United States, and, together with a list of the votes, be entered on the Journals of the two Houses.

Thus, none of these federal laws—3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15—guarantee state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors before their votes are counted.

4. Congress lacks Congressional authority to enact 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15 which preempt constitutionally-mandated state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors, violating voting rights related thereto.

Two legal standards cover cases challenging Congress's constitutional authority to enact statutes. The first legal standard applies when the party claims an Act of Congress is not authorized by one of the powers delegated to Congress in Article I of the Constitution. See, e.g., Perez v. United States, 402 U.S. 146 (1971); McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U.S. 316 (1819).

The second legal standard applies when the party claims an Act of Congress invades the province of state sovereignty granted by an express constitutional provision or reserved by the Tenth Amendment. See, e.g., Garcia v. San Antonio Metropolitan Transit Authority, 469 U.S. 528 (1985); Lane County v. Oregon, 74 U.S. 71 (1869). "If a power is delegated to Congress in the Constitution, the Tenth Amendment expressly disclaims any reservation of that power to the States; if a power is an attribute of state sovereignty reserved by the Tenth Amendment, it is necessarily a power the Constitution has not conferred on Congress." New York v. U.S., 505 U.S. 144, 156 (1992) (citations omitted). It is in this sense that the Tenth Amendment "states but a truism that all is retained which has not been surrendered." United States v. Darby, 312 U.S. 100, 124 (1941).

The Plaintiffs here assert that the 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6, 15 is both constitutionally unauthorized and 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6, 15 invades the state legislature's power to post-election certifications of Presidential votes and Presidential electors granted by Article II and reserved by the Tenth Amendment. So, both legal standards apply.

a. The textualist argument supports that the state legislatures, not Governors must conduct post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors.

One Congressional researcher has defined judicial textualism:

Textualism is a mode of interpretation that focuses on the plain meaning of the text of a legal document. Textualism usually emphasizes how the terms in the Constitution would be understood by people at the time they were ratified, as well as the context in which those terms appear. Textualists usually believe there is an objective meaning of the text, and they do not typically inquire into questions regarding the intent of the drafters, adopters, or ratifiers of the Constitution and its amendments when deriving meaning from the text.<sup>8</sup>

The textualist argument supports that the state legislatures, not Governors, must conduct post-election certification of Presidential votes and post-election certification of Presidential electors.

The textualist argument in this memorandum is based on one sentence in Article II of the U.S. Constitution. The sentence has eighty-five words. The constitutional sentence provides:

He shall hold his office during the term of four years, and, together with the Vice President, chosen for the same term, be elected, as follows: Each state shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors, equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress: but no Senator or Representative, or person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States, shall be appointed an elector.

The Plaintiffs claim, based on this sentence, that post-election certification of Presidential votes and post-election certification of Presidential electors are state legislative decisions. In turn, the Plaintiffs claim that 3 U.S.C. § 5, 6 and 15 and state laws (such as Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B), Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.46, Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166) eviscerating these state legislative prerogatives, every four years, are unconstitutional.

Several textualist interpretative keys open up the relevant meanings of the constitutional text as interpreted by Plaintiffs. First, the constitutional sentence is an imperative sentence. Second, the imperative sentence requires the election of President and Vice President every “four years.” Third, every four years, the “state” appoints the Presidential electors. Fourth, every four years, “the legislature may “direct” the “manner” of appointing.

The constitutional sentence is an imperative sentence requiring that the President and Vice President “be elected” “every four years.” The sentence phrase “as follows” provides specific directions on how the Presidential election is to occur. This imperative sentence is an instruction to all constitutional actors identified—President, Vice President, U.S Congress, Presidential electors, states and state legislatures—and those not identified—Governors, federal judiciary and state judiciaries.

---

<sup>8</sup>Brandon J. Murrill, “Modes of Constitutional Interpretation” at 2, Congressional Research Service (Mar. 15, 2018).

The Plaintiffs focus on the imperative nature of the constitutional sentence to make their textualist interpretation. To begin, the imperative sentence, in relevant part, requires that the all the constitutionally-identified actors—President, Vice President, U.S Congress, Presidential electors, states and state legislatures—conduct an election of President and Vice President every “four years.” This interpretation can hardly be disputed since that is what the text says. And, ever since its adoption, the United States has conducted, every four years, an election for President and Vice President. Consistently, the challenged federal and state laws—3 U.S.C. § 5, 6 and 15 and Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B), Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.46, Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166—all presume a Presidential election every four years.

Next, the imperative constitutional section requires that, every four years, the “state” appoints the Presidential electors. This interpretation also can also hardly be disputed since that is what the text says. And, ever since its adoption, the states, every four years, have appointed Presidential electors for the purpose of electing a President and Vice President. Consistently, the challenged federal and state laws--3 U.S.C. § 5, 6 and 15 and Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B), Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.46, Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166)—presume that the states, every four years, appoint Presidential electors for the purpose of electing a President and Vice President.

Finally, the imperative constitutional section requires that, every four years, “the legislature” may “direct” the “manner” of appointing of the Presidential electors. Plaintiffs claim that it is this aspect of the constitutional imperative sentence that is violated when the challenged federal and state laws--3 U.S.C. § 5, 6 and 15 and Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B), Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.46, Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166)—legally preclude state legislative post-election certification of Presidential votes and post-election certification of Presidential electors. Plaintiffs claim that, every four years, “the legislature must be involved in such post-election certification so that it may “direct” the “manner” of “appoint[ing]” of the Presidential electors—as the constitutional imperative sentence requires.

To be sure, in the previous sentence of this memorandum, the “-ing” at the end of “appoint[ing]” is in brackets because the word “appoint” is in the constitutional text not the word “appointing.” To explain, please engage in a thought experiment sympathetic to Plaintiffs’ position. Substitute “engage in appointing” for “appoint” in the constitutional sentence. Such substitution does not change the meaning of that part of the constitutional sentence. The phrase “every four years, the state shall appoint” has the same meaning as “every four years, the state shall engage in appointing.” However, such a substitution does confirm Plaintiffs’ constitutional argument. The substitution does not contradict any other part of the constitutional imperative sentence. The state legislature, every four years, may direct the manner of the state engaging in appointing the Presidential electors. So, the state legislatures, every four years, applies their respective parliamentary rules to the state appointments of Presidential electors. The federal laws and state laws which contradict with the state legislatures’ quadrennial prerogatives are constitutionally unauthorized.

To be balanced, a similar thought experiment sympathetic to the opposition should be tried. Now, substitute the phrase “have laws regarding appointment” for “appointment” in the constitutional sentence. Quickly, two contradictions arise. First, the first part of sentence “[The President] shall hold his office during the term of four years, and, together with the Vice President, chosen for the same term, be elected, as follows.” So, state laws contradict with the phrase that the states “have laws regarding appointment.” The contradiction is that the constitutional imperative sentence is the exclusive law requiring that every four years the Presidential elections shall occur “as follows”; so, state laws “directing” the “manner” of “appointing” the Presidential electors are constitutionally unauthorized. Second, the later part of the sentence “in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct” contradicts “have laws regarding appointment.” The contradiction is that the constitutional imperative sentence is the exclusive law requiring that every four years the Presidential elections shall occur “as follows” including the state legislature “may” “direct” the “manner” of “appointing” the Presidential electors. So, state laws “directing” the “manner” of “appointing” the Presidential electors are constitutionally unauthorized. Specifically, the challenged federal laws and state laws requiring Governor post-election certification of Presidential electors, currently considered as having full legal force and effect, have the legal consequence that the state legislatures, every four years, “may” NOT “direct” the “manner” of “appointing” the Presidential electors. Again, the state legislatures, not the Governors, have the constitutional prerogatives for post-election certification.

b. The textual argument supports that 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15 are unconstitutional.

The textual argument for unconstitutionality of 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15 is straightforward.<sup>9</sup> Under textualism, the Constitution’s text supports that the unconstitutionality of 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15 because they fail to guarantee voter’s rights to the state legislature’s post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors to vote for President and Vice President.

Congress neither has express constitutional authority nor implied constitutional authority to enact 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15. Further, the federal laws violate voter’s rights in Presidential elections because they interfere with state legislative post-election certifications of Presidential votes and Presidential electors and that only the votes of such certified Presidential electors may be counted in the election of President and Vice President.

---

<sup>9</sup> See, generally, Vasan Kesavan, Is the Electoral Count Act Unconstitutional, 80 N.C. L. Rev. 1653, 1696-1759 (2002).

First, Congress has no express constitutional authority to enact 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15 which regulate state appointment of Presidential electors and regulate counting Presidential elector votes to elect a President and Vice President. Article II puts state appointment of Presidential electors in the exclusive hands of the state legislatures every four years, “Each state shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct.” By contrast, Article II lacks the express grant of authority to Congress in Article I’s Elections Clause for Congressional elections:

The Times, Places and Manner of holding Elections for Senators and Representatives, shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by Law make or alter such Regulations, except as to the Places of chusing Senators.

There, the Constitution provides a power to Congress “to make or alter such [state] Regulations” by state in Article I. But, that Constitutionally-conferred power is absent in Article II.

Lacking express constitutional authority in Article II’s imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections, the only alternative for Congressional authority is an implied constitutional authority. The only candidates for the government’s implied constitutional authority would be Article I’s the Necessary and Proper Clause and Article II itself.

The first candidate for implied Congressional authority is the Necessary and Proper Clause. The Necessary and Proper Clause provides that Congress shall have power “[t]o make all Laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into Execution the foregoing Powers, and all other Powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any Department or Officer thereof.” A careful parsing of the Necessary and Proper Clause reveals that there are three prongs of power. Under the Clause, Congress has power for carrying into execution (1) “the foregoing Powers,” (2) “all other Powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States," and (3) "all other Powers vested by this Constitution... in any Department or Officer thereof." None of these prongs support the constitutionality of 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15.

First, the phrase "foregoing Powers" refers to the enumerated powers of Article I. None of the enumerated Congressional powers in Article I cover the appointment of and voting by Presidential electors—which is covered by Article II. So, the “foregoing powers” requirement is not satisfied.

Second, the phrase "all other Powers vested by this Constitution... in any Department or Officer thereof" does not include Congress or Congressional members. Congress is not a Department. Members of Congress are not Officers. In fact, Congressional members are subject to impeachment by the House of Representatives and conviction by the Senate because they are not "civil Officers of the United States." See U.S. Const., art. II, § 4 ("The President, Vice President, and all civil Officers of the United States, shall be removed from Office on Impeachment for, and Conviction of, Treason, Bribery, or other high Crimes and Misdemeanors."). Furthermore, the Ineligibility Clause of Article I, Section 6 provides that "no Person holding any Office under the United States, shall be a Member of either House during his Continuance in Office." So the phrase "all other Powers vested by this Constitution... in any Department or Officer thereof" is not satisfied.

Third, the phrase "all other Powers vested by this Constitution... in any Department or Officer thereof" does not apply because the U.S. Congress is not a Department or Officer. The text of Article II's imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections does not employ the word “power” referencing to Congress. Article II's imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections does not vest “power” in Congress over state legislatures’ express power to determine the manner of appointment of Presidential electors every four years, including the post-election certification of Presidential electors. Therefore, the phrase "all other Powers vested by this Constitution... in any Department or Officer thereof" is not satisfied.

The second candidate for implied constitutional authority is Article II itself. But, similarly, Article II supports that it is the state legislatures' exclusive constitutional prerogative to determine the state's appointment of Presidential electors, including post-certification of the Presidential electors to vote for President and Vice President. Article II's imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections and the Twelfth Amendment do not grant Congress any "power" over the state legislatures' constitutional prerogatives over Presidential electors. Instead, these constitutional texts define a very limited and specific role for the Vice President, U.S. Senate and U.S. House of Representatives.

Congress's enactment of 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15 goes far beyond the constitutionally-prescribed roles for Vice President, U.S. Senate and the U.S. House of Representatives in Article II's imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections and the Twelfth Amendment. So, Article II's imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections and the Twelfth Amendment do not provide an implied constitutional authority for 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15.

Additionally, there is a textualist argument based on the negative implication. When the Constitution provides Congressional power regarding the Presidency, it says so—twice. First, Article II, Section 1, Clause 4 which provides that "[t]he Congress may determine the Time of chusing the Electors, and the Day on which they shall give their Votes; which Day shall be the same throughout the United States." Second, the Presidential Succession Clause of Article II provides that:

[i]n Case of the Removal of the President from Office, or of his Death, Resignation, or Inability to discharge the Powers and Duties of the said Office, the Same shall devolve on the Vice President, and the Congress may by Law provide for the Case of Removal, Death, Resignation or Inability, both of the President and Vice President, declaring what Officer shall then act as President, and such Officer shall act accordingly, until the Disability be removed, or a President shall be elected.

In both of these instances, the Constitution provides Congress with express authority over a limited, narrowly-prescribed aspect of Presidential elections. By negative implication, then, Article II's imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections and selection of Presidential electors every four years does not provide implied constitutional authority for Congress to regulate the state legislatures' post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors.

Finally, the constitutional text also provides an intertextual argument. When the Constitution provides a Congressional role in election, the Constitution says so. First, Article I's Elections Clause provides that "[t]he Times, Places and Manner of holding Elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by Law make or alter such Regulations, except as to the Places of chusing Senators." Second, The House Judging Clause provides that "[e]ach House shall be the Judge of the Elections, Returns and Qualifications of its own Members." In both instances, the Constitution provides Congress with express constitutional authority regarding elections involving Congress. However, regarding Presidential electors, there is constitutional silence—no express power is granted to Congress—because Article II empowers the state legislatures, exclusively, to govern the states' appointments of Presidential electors.

c. Structuralist arguments also support that 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15 are unconstitutional.

The interpretivist's structuralist arguments<sup>10</sup> also support the unconstitutionality of 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15.<sup>11</sup> One Congressional researcher has defined judicial structuralism:

Another mode of constitutional interpretation draws inferences from the design of the Constitution: the relationships among the three branches of the federal government (commonly called separation of powers); the relationship between the federal and state governments (known as federalism); and the relationship between the government and the people.<sup>12</sup>

---

<sup>10</sup> See, generally, Charles L. Black, Jr., Structure And Relationship In Constitutional Law (1969); Philip Bobbit, Constitutional Fate: Theory Of The Constitution 74-92 (1982).

<sup>11</sup> See, generally, Vasan Kesavan, Is the Electoral Count Act Unconstitutional, 80 N.C. L. Rev. 1653, 1759-1793 (2002).

The structure of Article II is to empower the state legislatures, not Congress or the state's Governors, to appoint the Presidential electors. 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15 violate Article II's structure because they empower Congress and the state's Governors in the Presidential elector process—excluding the state legislatures from the Presidential elector certification process.

The structure of the Article II for Presidential elections is anti-Congress, anti-Governors and pro-state legislatures. Article II's imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections puts the state legislatures in exclusive control of a state's appointment of Presidential electors. The state legislatures, who enact the state elections law applicable to federal elections, are identified to choose the manner of appointment of the Presidential electors. Congress and the Governors are to have no substantive role in the procedures of certifying Presidential electors to vote for President and Vice President. The Federal Defendants are just there to count the Presidential electors' votes of the Presidential electors who have received state legislative post-election certification.

Article II contains an anti-Congress principle, anti-Governors principle and a pro-state legislatures principle. These principles should be brought to bear on any interpretation of Article II and 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15. If these principles are applied, 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15 is constitutionally unauthorized.

1) The Anti-Congress Principle

The Constitution mistrusts Congress in Presidential elections. This is the anti-Congress principle of Article II. Congress is to have a limited, narrowly-prescribed role in Presidential elections. Congress is not to interfere with the state legislature directing the appointment of Presidential electors. Congress is not trusted in Article II.

---

<sup>12</sup> Brandon J. Murrill, “Modes of Constitutional Interpretation” at 2, Congressional Research Service (Mar. 15, 2018).

First, Article II's electoral college method of selecting a President and Vice President is a rejection of Congressional decision-making. The Constitution replaced the Articles of Confederation which authorized Congress to elect a President of the United States in Congress assembled—parliamentary style. Under the Articles of Confederation, John Hanson was the first President of the United States in Congress Assembled and served from November 5, 1781 to November 4, 1782. The Constitution replaced that parliamentary system with the Electoral College based on the anti-Congress principle of Article II. Article II prohibits Congress selecting the President.

Second, Article II's Elector Incompatibility Clause, stating that “no Senator or Representative, or Person holding an Office or Trust of Profit under the United States, shall be appointed as an Elector,” is a rejection of Congressional decision-making. The relevant purpose of the Elector Incompatibility Clause is to absolutely separate the Presidential electors from Congress. The Presidential electors are to be independent from Congress.

2) The Anti-Governors Principle

The Constitution mistrusts Governors in Presidential elections. This is the anti-Governors principle of Article II. The Governors are to have no role in Presidential selection. The states' Governors are not trusted in Article II. Article II's electoral college method of selecting a President and Vice President empowers the state legislatures, not the Governors.

First, Article II's imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections specifies “state legislatures”—not Governors nor “state executives”—to have the power over the appointment of Electors:

Each State shall appoint, in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a Number of Electors, equal to the whole Number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress...

So, one of the purposes of Article II's imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections was to exclude the states' Governors from having a role in Presidential elections.

Second, the Electors Clause specifies that the Presidential electors are to vote in their states and the Vice President and Congress, not the State's Governors, would open and count the Presidential electors' ballots for President and Vice President:

The Electors shall meet in their respective States, and vote by Ballot for two Persons, of whom one at least shall not be an Inhabitant of the same State with themselves. And they shall make a List of all the Persons voted for, and of the Number of Votes for each; which List they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the Seat of the Government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate. The President of the Senate shall, in the Presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the Certificates, and the Votes shall then be counted.

One of the purposes of the Electors Clause was also to exclude the states' Governors from having a role in opening and counting the Presidential electors' ballots.

3) The Pro-State Legislatures Principle

The Constitution trusts state legislatures in Presidential elections. This is the pro-state legislatures principle of Article II. The state legislatures, not Congress nor the states' Governors, are to direct the selection of Presidential electors. Article II trusts state legislatures to choose Presidential electors—even trusting them to directly elect them as was done by some state in the 1800's.<sup>13</sup>

First, Article II's imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections empowers “state legislatures”—not Congress, nor the State's Governors—to have the power over the appointment of Presidential electors:

He shall hold his office during the term of four years, and, together with the Vice President, chosen for the same term, be elected, as follows: Each State shall appoint, in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a Number of Electors, equal to the whole Number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress...

---

<sup>13</sup> See, e.g., Georgia Constitution of 1798, Art. IV, sec. 2 (<http://founding.com/founders-library/government-documents/american-state-and-local-government-documents/state-constitutions/georgia-constitution-of-1798/>) (last visited: Dec. 18, 2020).

So, one of the purposes of Article II's imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections was to empower state legislatures to appoint the Presidential electors.

Second, the Electors Clause specifies that the Presidential electors are to vote in their states and specifies the Vice President and Congress will have limited, defined roles of opening and counting the Presidential electors' ballots for the election of President and Vice President:

The Electors shall meet in their respective States, and vote by Ballot for two Persons, of whom one at least shall not be an Inhabitant of the same State with themselves. And they shall make a List of all the Persons voted for, and of the Number of Votes for each; which List they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the Seat of the Government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate. The President of the Senate shall, in the Presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the Certificates, and the Votes shall then be counted.

One of the purposes of the Electors Clause was to limit and define the Vice President's and Congress's role in the Electoral College process to ensure that the state legislature would have the exclusive power to appoint the Presidential electors.

4) Conclusion

Structuralist arguments based on Article II support the unconstitutionality of 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15. Article II contains an anti-Congress principle, an anti-Governors principle and a pro-state legislatures principle. The structure of Article II is to empower the state legislatures, not Congress or the Governors, to appoint the Presidential electors. 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15 violate Article II's structure because they empower Congress and the state's Governors in the Presidential elector certification and counting process—cancelling the state legislatures out of the Presidential certification and subsequent counting process.

- 5. The Defendant States violate Article II by their respective constitution and their respective state laws—Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B), Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.46, Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166—by cancelling state legislatures out of post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors.

Under Article II’s imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections, the Defendant States lack congressional authority to enact state laws which cancel their respective state legislatures out of post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors—as they have done. Arizona in Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B) has delegated post-election certifications to the Arizona Secretary of State. Georgia in Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B) has delegated post-election certifications to the Georgia Secretary of State and Governor. Michigan in Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.46 has delegated post-election certifications to the Michigan State Board of Canvassers and the Governor. Wisconsin in Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) has delegated post-election certifications to the Wisconsin Elections Commission. Pennsylvania in 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166 has delegated post-election certifications to the Secretary of Commonwealth and the Governor.

But, Article II’s imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections, and its non-delegation doctrine, empowers the state legislatures, every four years, to “direct” post-election certification of Presidential electors, not to delegate post-election certification, perpetually and in a wholesale fashion, to state executive branch officials as a ministerial duty. As detailed above, there are textual and structural arguments for these state statutes being unconstitutional. Therefore, the Court should hold Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B), Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.46, Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b), 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166 as an unconstitutional delegation of the state legislative prerogative of post-election certification of Presidential voters.

Notably, even the current state constitutions of the Defendant States fail to require the state legislature to meet for post-election certification of the Presidential electors in violation of state legislative constitutional duties under Article II’s imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections. Arizona’s, Georgia’s and Pennsylvania’s Constitutions have the state legislature adjourned until January 2021. Arizona Const.; Georgia Const.; Pennsylvania Const. Michigan’s and Wisconsin’s Constitutions permit the state legislature to be in session, but do not require a joint session of the state legislature to affirmatively vote for post-election certification of Presidential electors. Michigan Const.; Wisconsin Const.

a. The Arizona Constitution and laws do not require state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors so their votes can be constitutionally counted by the federal Defendants—violating voters’ rights.

The Arizona Constitution and laws do not require state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors so their votes can be constitutionally counted by the federal Defendants—violating voters’ rights. Under Article II’s imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections, Arizona lacks legal authority to enact laws which are a perpetual and wholesale delegation of post-election certification to state executive branch officials—as it has done. Arizona in Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B) has delegated certification of Presidential electors to the Arizona Secretary of State—and has deferred to the Arizona Governor’s certification of Presidential electors under 3 U.S.C. § 6.

But, Article II’s imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections, and its non-delegation doctrine, empowers the Arizona state legislature to “direct” post-election certification of Presidential electors, not to delegate post-election certification, perpetually and in a wholesale fashion, to state executive branch officials as a ministerial duty. As detailed above, there are textual and structural arguments for these state statutes being unconstitutional. Therefore, the Court should find that the Arizona Constitution and Arizona laws, including Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B), are an unconstitutional delegation of the Article II state legislative prerogatives of post-election certification of Presidential votes and post-election certification of Presidential electors.

b. The Georgia Constitution and laws do not require state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors so their votes can be constitutionally counted by the federal Defendants—violating voters’ rights.

The Georgia Constitution and laws do not require state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors so their votes can be constitutionally counted by the federal Defendants—violating voters’ rights. Under Article II’s imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections, Georgia lacks legal authority to enact state laws which are a perpetual and wholesale delegation of post-election certification to state executive branch officials—as it has done. Georgia in Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B), has delegated certification of Presidential electors to the Georgia Secretary of State and the Georgia Governor—consistent with the Georgia Governor’s certification of Presidential electors under 3 U.S.C. § 6.

But, Article II’s imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections, and its non-delegation doctrine, empowers the Georgia state legislature to “direct” post-election certification of Presidential electors, not to delegate post-election certification, perpetually and in a wholesale fashion, to state executive branch officials as a ministerial duty. As detailed above, there are textual and structural arguments for these state statutes being unconstitutional. Therefore, the Court should find that the Georgia Constitution and Georgia laws, including Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B), are an unconstitutional delegation of the Article II state legislative prerogatives of post-election certification of Presidential votes and post-election certification of Presidential electors.

c. The Michigan Constitution and laws do not require state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors so their votes can be constitutionally counted by the federal Defendants—violating voters’ rights.

The Michigan Constitution and laws do not require state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors so their votes can be constitutionally counted by the federal Defendants—violating voters’ rights. Under Article II’s imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections, Michigan lacks legal authority to enact state laws which are a perpetual and wholesale delegation of post-election certification to state executive branch officials—as it has done. Michigan in Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.46 has delegated certification of Presidential electors to Michigan State Board of Canvassers and Michigan Governor—consistent with the Michigan Governor’s certification of Presidential electors under 3 U.S.C. § 6.

But, Article II’s imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections, and its non-delegation doctrine, empowers the Michigan state legislature to “direct” post-election certification of Presidential electors, not to delegate post-election certification, perpetually and in a wholesale fashion, to state executive branch officials as a ministerial duty. As detailed above, there are textual and structural arguments for these state statutes being unconstitutional. Therefore, the Court should find that the Michigan Constitution and Michigan laws, including Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.46, are an unconstitutional delegation of the Article II state legislative prerogatives of post-election certification of Presidential votes and post-election certification of Presidential electors.

d. The Pennsylvania Constitution and laws do not require state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors so their votes can be constitutionally counted by the federal Defendants—violating voters’ rights.

The Pennsylvania Constitution and laws do not require state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors so their votes can be constitutionally counted by the federal Defendants—violating voters’ rights. Under Article II’s imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections, Pennsylvania lacks legal authority to enact state laws which are a perpetual and wholesale delegation of post-election certification to state executive branch officials—as it has done. Pennsylvania in 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166 has delegated certification of Presidential electors to the Secretary of Commonwealth and the Pennsylvania Governor—consistent with the Pennsylvania Governor’s certification of Presidential electors under 3 U.S.C. § 6.

But, Article II’s imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections, and its non-delegation doctrine, empowers the Pennsylvania state legislature to “direct” post-election certification of Presidential electors, not to delegate post-election certification, perpetually and in a wholesale fashion, to state executive branch officials as a ministerial duty. As detailed above, there are textual and structural arguments for these state statutes being unconstitutional. Therefore, the Court should find that the Pennsylvania Constitution and Pennsylvania laws, including 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166, are an unconstitutional delegation of the Article II state legislative prerogatives of post-election certification of Presidential votes and post-election certification of Presidential electors.

e. The Wisconsin Constitution and laws do not require state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors so their votes can be constitutionally counted by the federal Defendants—violating voters’ rights.

The Wisconsin Constitution and laws do not require state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors so their votes can be constitutionally counted by the federal Defendants—violating voters’ rights. Under Article II’s imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections, Wisconsin lacks legal authority to enact state laws which are a perpetual and wholesale delegation of post-election certification to state executive branch officials—as it has done. Wisconsin in Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) has delegated certification of Presidential electors to the Wisconsin Elections Commission—and has deferred to the Arizona Governor’s certification of Presidential electors under 3 U.S.C. § 6.

But, Article II’s imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections, and its non-delegation doctrine, empowers the Wisconsin state legislature to “direct” post-election certification of Presidential electors, not to delegate post-election certification, perpetually and in a wholesale fashion, to state executive branch officials as a ministerial duty. As detailed above, there are textual and structural arguments for these state statutes being unconstitutional. Therefore, the Court should find that the Wisconsin Constitution and Wisconsin laws, including Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b), are an unconstitutional delegation of the Article II state legislative prerogatives of post-election certification of Presidential votes and post-election certification of Presidential electors.

6. The Presidential post-election court proceedings—like Bush v. Gore, the Texas original action and the thirty post-election lawsuits in Defendant States—are in constitutional error and unnecessarily politicize the federal and state courts.

The Presidential post-election court proceedings—like Bush v. Gore, the Texas original action and the thirty post-election lawsuits in Defendant States—are in constitutional error and unnecessarily politicize the federal and state courts. Under Article II, all of those cases should be dismissed for lack of jurisdiction—and the plaintiffs should be instructed to file their election contests with their respective state legislatures. The Defendant States have election contest or recount laws, which apply to Presidential elections, but preclude state legislative certifications: Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-672; Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-521; Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.862; Wis. Stat. § 9.01; and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3351. Interestingly, the Pennsylvania laws have a state legislative post-election certification process for its Governor and Lieutenant Governor elections—but not for President and Vice President. 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3312, et seq. The Defendant States’ laws precluding state legislative post-election certification in Presidential election contests and recounts violates Article II.

III. The Plaintiffs have standing as voters because the Defendants are violating their voting rights to state legislative post-election certifications of their votes and of Presidential electors and to only the votes of Presidential electors so certified being counted toward the election of President and Vice President.

As voters, the Plaintiffs have legal standing to bring these constitutional claims to ensure that Presidential elections are constitutionally conducted by Defendants. Article III of the Constitution limits the jurisdiction of federal courts to “Cases” and “Controversies.” U.S. Const., Art. III, § 2. The doctrine of standing gives meaning to these constitutional limits by “identify[ing] those disputes which are appropriately resolved through the judicial process.”<sup>5</sup> Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560 (1992). “The law of Article III standing, which is built on separation-of-powers principles, serves to prevent the judicial process from being used to usurp the powers of the political branches.” Clapper v. Amnesty Int’l USA, 568 U.S. 398, 408 (2013). To establish Article III standing, a plaintiff must show (1) an “injury in fact,” (2) a sufficient “causal connection between the injury and the conduct complained of,” and (3) a “likel[i]hood” that the injury “will be redressed by a favorable decision.” Lujan, supra, at 560–561 (internal quotation marks omitted). Pre-enforcement constitutional challenges must meet the same standing requirements. See Susan B. Anthony List v. Driehaus, 573 U.S. 149, 157–58 (2014).

The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit recognized standing in Baten v. McMaster, 967 F.3d 345, 352–53 (4th Cir. 2020) for Plaintiffs alleging their votes for Democratic presidential candidates were, in effect, discarded under South Carolina's winner-take-all process. Id., citing Gill v. Whitford, — U.S. —, 138 S. Ct. 1916, 1920–21 (2018) (citing Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186, 206 (1962)) (contrasting the individual harm felt by a voter who casts his ballot in a gerrymandered district with the “generalized grievance” of one who disapproves of gerrymandering in his state but does not live in a gerrymandered district). The Fourth Circuit held this type of disenfranchisement “is the type of concrete, particularized injury that Article III contemplates.” Id. at 353.

Similarly, the Plaintiffs claim they have been disenfranchised. The Plaintiffs claim that Article II of the U.S. Constitution provides a voter a constitutional right to the voter’s Presidential vote being certified as part of the state legislature’s post-election certification of Presidential electors. Absence such certification, the Presidential electors’ votes from that state cannot be counted by the federal Defendants toward the election of President and Vice President. Because the Plaintiffs’ votes are not counted as part of the constitutionally-required state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors, the Plaintiffs are disenfranchised.

The Defendants’ disenfranchisement of the Plaintiffs’ voting rights is that the Plaintiffs’ votes are never properly certified by the state legislature, which based on that certification, certifies the Presidential electors whose votes are counted by the federal Defendants to elect the President and Vice President. The Defendants’ disenfranchisement of the Plaintiffs’ voting rights is caused by

3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6, 15, and the Defendants' state constitutions and state laws including Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B), Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.46, Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166.

When Defendants violate the Constitution as it relates to Presidential elections in the Defendant States, all voters in Presidential elections suffer an injury-in-fact caused by the Defendants. Voters in a Presidential election, in this instance, have an injury-in-fact different than the public because they voted and they thus had an interest that the election in which they voted is constitutionally-conducted. The same is true of future elections. Finally, the Court can redress the Plaintiffs' injuries by issuing a declaratory judgment and accompanying injunction to enjoin the Defendants' unconstitutional conduct.

Furthermore, as voters, each Plaintiff has a fundamental right to vote.<sup>14</sup> Thus, each Plaintiff has a recognized protectable interest in voting. As the U.S. Supreme Court has long recognized, a person's right to vote is "individual and personal in nature."<sup>15</sup> Thus, "voters who allege facts showing disadvantage to themselves as individuals have standing to sue" to remedy that disadvantage.<sup>16</sup> "Safeguarding the integrity of the electoral process is a fundamental task of the Constitution, and [the courts] must be keenly sensitive to signs that its validity may be impaired."<sup>17</sup> "Confidence in the integrity of our electoral processes is essential to the functioning of our participatory democracy."<sup>18</sup>

By federal and state election laws, the federal and state governments have agreed to protect the fundamental right to vote by maintaining the integrity of an election contest as fair, honest, and

---

<sup>14</sup> Reynolds v. Sims, 377 U.S. 533, 554–55, 562 (1964).

<sup>15</sup> Id. 377 U.S. at 561.

<sup>16</sup> Gill v. Whitford, 138 S. Ct. 1916, 1929 (2018).

<sup>17</sup> Johnson v. FCC, 829 F.2d 157, 163 (D.C. Cir. 1987).

<sup>18</sup> Purcell v. Gonzales, 549 U.S. 1, 4 (2006).

unbiased to maintain the structure of the democratic process.<sup>19</sup> The voters, in turn, agree to accept the government's announcement of the winner of an election contest, including Presidential elections, to maintain the integrity of the democratic system of the United States. "No right is more precious in a free country than that of having a voice in the election of those who make the laws under which, as good citizens, we must live."<sup>20</sup> But the right to vote is the right to participate in an electoral process that is necessarily structured to maintain the integrity of the democratic system."<sup>21</sup>

This constitutional arrangement constitutes a "social contract" between the voter and the government as an agreement among the people of a state about the rules that will define their government.<sup>22</sup> Social contract theory provided the background against which the Constitution was adopted. "Because of this social contract theory, the Framers and the public at the time of the revolution and framing conceived governments as resulting from an agreement among people to provide a means for enforcing existing rights."<sup>23</sup> "The aim of a social contract theory is to show that members of some society have reason to endorse and comply with the fundamental social rules, laws, institutions, and principles of that society. Put simply, it is concerned with public justification, i.e., 'of determining whether or not a given regime is legitimate and therefore worthy of loyalty.'"<sup>24</sup>

State legislative post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors is part of the social contract to protect the right to vote. Hence, the right to vote is intertwined with

---

<sup>19</sup> Timmons v. Twin Cities Area New Party, 520 U.S. 351, 364 (1997) ("States certainly have an interest in protecting the integrity, fairness, and efficiency of their ballots and election processes as means for electing public officials."). See also, e.g. Plts Amended Compl. ¶¶37–45.

<sup>20</sup> Burdick v. Takushi, 504 U.S. 428, 441 (1992) quoting Wesberry v. Sanders, 376 U.S. 1, 17 (1964).

<sup>21</sup> Id. (citations omitted). See also, e.g. Plts Amended Compl. ¶¶46–49.

<sup>22</sup> Dumonde v. U.S., 87 Fed. Cl. 651, 653 (Fed. Cl. 2009) ("Historically, the Constitution has been interpreted as a social contract between the Government and people of the United States," citing Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch 137, 5 U.S. 137, 176 (1803). See e.g. Plts Amended Compl. ¶50.

<sup>23</sup> Greg Serienko, Social Contract Neutrality and the Religion Clauses of the Federal Constitution, 57 Ohio St. L. J. 1263, 1269.

<sup>24</sup> Contemporary Approaches to the Social Contract, <https://plto.stanford.edu/entries/contractarianism-contemporary/> (last visited Dec. 8, 2020).

the integrity of an election process. The loss of the integrity of the election process renders the right to vote meaningless.<sup>25</sup> Here, the Defendant States' election irregularities and improprieties, including no state legislative post-election certification of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors, so exceed the razor-thin margins in the Defendant States to cast doubt on the razor-thin margins of victory and, thus, threaten the social contract itself.

The Article II social contract with the voters is, in part, the assurance of their state legislatures voting, based on voters' Presidential votes in that state, for post-election certification of Presidential electors. Arising from the social contract is the integrity of the election process to protect the voter's right to vote.

In the Defendant States enacting constitutions and state laws cancelling state legislatures out of post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors, the Defendant states have breached the social contract of Article II.

This social contract, protecting the individual right to vote, is what is personally at risk for the Plaintiffs in the outcome of this controversy.<sup>26</sup> As much as the government has a compelling interest in fair and honest elections with accompanying laws and regulations to ensure that objective to preserve the democratic system of government, so too the voter has an interest against state and local election officials violating the election laws in favor of a pre-determined result. Under the social contract, state legislative post-election certification of the Presidential vote is the voters' remedy against state and local election officials' shenanigans. The Defendant States have unconstitutionally deprived their voters of that remedy in their respective state legislatures.

---

<sup>25</sup> "Legitimacy is the crucial currency of government in our democratic age. Only elections that are transparent and fair will be regarded as legitimate...But elections without integrity cannot provide the winners with legitimacy, the losers with security and the public with confidence in their leaders and institutions." <https://www.kofiannanfoundation.org/supporting-democracy-and-elections-with-integrity/uganda-victory-without-legitimacy-is-no-victory-at-all/> (Last visited Dec. 8, 2020).

<sup>26</sup> Gill, 138 S.Ct. at 1923.

Furthermore, the voter has a compelling interest in the maintenance of a democratic system of government under the Ninth Amendment through the election process, beyond controversies regarding governmental attempts to interfere with the right to vote. Here, the voter did not enter into a social contract with the Governors and the state and local election officials to give them discretion for state election irregularities and improprieties—and to cancel post-election certifications by the state legislatures—regardless of how benign the public officials might be.

Instead, the voters' social contract is with the state legislatures—which must under Article II conduct post-election certification of all Presidential votes and of the Presidential electors. The Article II requirement of the state legislature casting post-election certification votes is the voters' constitutional “insurance policy” against the risk of Governors and state and local election officials engaging in election irregularities and improprieties in favor of a pre-determined outcome.

The voters have been willing to accept federal and state laws and regulations imposed upon a Presidential election process to serve the government's compelling interest in the integrity of that process. So, while it is fair for the government to create public governmental regulatory schemes to promote the compelling interests to protect the right to vote, and therefore, to protect a voter's right of associational choices under the First Amendment,<sup>27</sup> those rights are infringed when the Defendant States cancel the state legislatures out of post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of the Presidential electors.<sup>28</sup>

For Presidential elections, the Defendant States under Article II have no legal authority to cancel state legislatures out of post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors. Yet, they did. That is the harm for the voters. Article II's imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections that gives voters the right to have their respective state legislatures engage in post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors—not Governors nor state or local election officials.

---

<sup>27</sup> Anderson v. Celebrezze, 460 U.S. 780, 788–89 (1983).

<sup>28</sup> Id.

This lawsuit is not about voter fraud. The harm from the federal law—3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6, 15—and the state laws—including Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B), Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.46, Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166—is the loss of a voter remedy of state legislative post-election certifications required as a core governmental function under Article II.

In turn, the Federal Defendants’ acceptance of the Presidential electors’ votes without state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors breaches the social contract between the voter and the government—causing more injury to the voter.

Finally, these injuries to the voters are redressable by the Court. For example, the Court could grant the requested preliminary injunction requiring that the federal Defendants on January 6, 2021, only count the votes of Presidential electors if they have received state legislative post-election certification. Otherwise, the votes don’t count toward the election of President and Vice President.

IV. The Plaintiffs are likely to suffer irreparable harm in the absence of preliminary relief.

“Plaintiffs here must at least ‘demonstrate that irreparable injury is likely in the absence of an injunction.’” Guttenberg v. Emery, 26 F.Supp.3d 88, 101 (D.D.C. 2014)(quoting Winter v. NRDC, Inc., 555 U.S. 7, 22 (2008)). “Under Winter, even a ‘strong likelihood of prevailing on the merits’ cannot make up for a deficient showing of irreparable injury.” Id. (quoting Winter, 555 U.S. at 21–22). “Regardless of how the other three factors are analyzed, it is required that the movant demonstrate an irreparable injury.” Mdewakanton Sioux Indians of Minn. v. Zinke, 255 F.Supp.3d 48, 51, n.3 (D.D.C. 2017).

The Plaintiffs’ irreparable injury here is the disenfranchisement of Plaintiffs’ vote when the Presidential electors’ votes are counted without constitutionally-required state legislative post-election certifications of the Plaintiffs' votes and of the Presidential electors. The federal and state constitutions and laws are a violation of Article II's imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections. Further, without state legislative post-election certification, Plaintiffs will never have their votes counted in the state legislature.

Further, the Plaintiffs will never have the same opportunity to challenge in their state legislatures the election officials' irregularities and illegalities associated with the November 3, 2020 election. Allegedly, the election officials' irregularities and illegalities exceed the razor-thin margins in the Defendant States. Absent the injunction, the Plaintiffs will never have their proverbial "day" in the state legislature to challenge the Presidential election results.

In turn, the Plaintiffs will be subjected to an unlawfully-elected President because none of the Presidential electors received a state legislative post-election certification—as Article II requires.

In the absence of the preliminary injunction, the Plaintiffs and the nation will be subjected to a post-inaugural ouster of the sitting President and Vice President under D.C. Code § 16-3501, et seq. That proceeding and subsequent ouster will cause irreparable injury to the Plaintiffs—and the nation.

V. The balance of equities and the public interest tips in the Plaintiffs' favor.

The final two factors that the Court must consider are the balance of equities and the public's interest in the issuance of an injunction. See Arkansas Dairy Co-op Ass'n, Inc. v. U.S. Dep't of Agric., 573 F.3d 815, 821 (D.C. Cir. 2009). When "balanc[ing] the competing claims of injury," the Court must "consider the effect on each party of the granting or withholding of the requested relief." Winter, 555 U.S. at 24, 129 S.Ct. 365 (citations omitted). Additionally, "courts of equity should [have] particular regard for the public consequences in employing the extraordinary remedy of injunction." Id. (internal quotation marks and citations omitted).

The Plaintiffs file this preliminary injunction motion to avoid a constitutional crisis that would be involved in a post-inaugural ouster of the United States President and Vice President. D.C. Code § 16-3501, et seq., authorizes this Court, in proper cases, instituted by proper officers or persons, to post-election ouster of national officers of the United States including the President and Vice President of the United States. Newman v. U.S. of America ex rel Frizzell, 238 U.S. 537 (U.S. 1915).

Instead, to avoid that post-inaugural constitutional crisis, the Plaintiffs as voters file this preliminary injunction motion against federal officials in the District of Columbia and Governors and state legislative leaders in Arizona, Georgia, Michigan, Pennsylvania and Wisconsin requiring a constitutionally-compliant process for state-by-state post-election certification of Presidential electors and counting of their votes for the November 3, 2020 Presidential election and future elections.

The balancing of equities favors the Plaintiffs. Granting a preliminary injunction in this proceeding is better for everyone than a post-inaugural ouster. If the preliminary injunction is denied, the Plaintiffs lose something real and concrete: their voting rights are disenfranchised by an unconstitutional post-election certification process. The Plaintiffs also lose their post-election opportunity in their respective state legislatures to seek election integrity and protect their vote. On the other hand, the Defendants lose nothing by doing what the law requires: following Article II's imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections and obtaining state legislative post-election certifications prior to counting the Presidential electors' votes for President and Vice President on January 6, 2021.

The public interest favors granting the preliminary injunction too. The constitutional crisis of post-inaugural ouster should be avoided. The United States, the federal government and the states, should operate in every subject area in a constitutional way. State legislative post-election certifications of Presidential votes and Presidential electors is constitutionally-required. So, the federal government and the states are legally obligated to honor that constitutional authority.

State legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors is an important way to develop public acceptance of close Presidential election results. State legislative post-election certification would help build public confidence in the states' voting systems too. Every four years, the state legislatures would be authorized to examine Presidential voters and voters' complaints as part of their post-election certifications—and would make electoral reforms accordingly. Consequently, the state legislatures' direct involvement in election integrity would build public confidence in the voting system reducing the amount of Presidential election litigation which now seems to be occurring in a cycle of every four years. It is far better to have the state legislatures hear election disputes state-by-state, as intended in Article II, then the United States Supreme Court hear all the states' election disputes as proposed in the Texas original action against Pennsylvania, Michigan, Wisconsin and Georgia—which was supported by Missouri and sixteen other states and U.S. Representative Mike Johnson and 105 other Congressional members.

CONCLUSION

The Court should issue the preliminary injunction prior to January 6, 2021, when federal Defendants meet to count the Presidential electors to elect a President and Vice President, because the Plaintiffs have met the factors required.

Dated: December 22, 2020

/s/ Erick G. Kaardal
Erick G. Kaardal (WI0031)
Special Counsel for Amistad Project of
Thomas More Society
Mohrman, Kaardal & Erickson, P.A.
150 South Fifth Street, Suite 3100
Minneapolis, Minnesota 55402
Telephone: (612) 341-1074
Facsimile: (612) 341-1076
Email: kaardal@mklaw.com
Attorneys for Plaintiffs

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

---

Wisconsin Voters Alliance, et al.,

Case No. _____

Plaintiffs,

v.

Motion for Preliminary Injunction

Vice President Michael Richard Pence, et al.,

Defendants.

---

MOTION

Plaintiffs Wisconsin Voters Alliance, et al., by and through undersigned counsel, hereby move this Court to issue a preliminary injunction enjoining Defendants from certifying Presidential electors who have not received state legislative post-election certification and from counting Presidential elector votes from Presidential electors who have not received state legislative post-election certification for the election of President and Vice President.

Under Local Rule 47(f), Plaintiffs request oral argument for this motion.

Dated: December 22, 2020

/s/ Erick G. Kaardal

Erick G. Kaardal (WI0031)
Special Counsel for Amistad Project of
Thomas More Society
Mohrman, Kaardal & Erickson, P.A.
150 South Fifth Street, Suite 3100
Minneapolis, Minnesota 55402
Telephone: (612) 341-1074
Facsimile: (612) 341-1076
Email: kaardal@mklaw.com
Attorneys for Plaintiffs

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF TEXAS
TYLER DIVISION

LOUIE GOHMERT, TYLER BOWYER, NANCY
COTTLE, JAKE HOFFMAN, ANTHONY KERN,
JAMES R. LAMON, SAM MOORHEAD,
ROBERT MONTGOMERY, LORAINÉ
PELLEGRINO, GREG SAFSTEN, KELLI WARD
and MICHAEL WARD,

Plaintiffs,

v.

THE HONORABLE MICHAEL R. PENCE, VICE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, in his official capacity.

Defendant.

Case No.

COMPLAINT FOR EXPEDITED
DECLARATORY AND
EMERGENCY INJUNCTIVE RELIEF

(Election Matter)

NATURE OF THE ACTION

1. This civil action seeks an expedited declaratory judgment finding that the elector dispute resolution provisions in Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act, 3 U.S.C. §§ 5 and 15, are unconstitutional because these provisions violate the Electors Clause and the Twelfth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1, cl. 1 & Amend. XII. Plaintiffs also request emergency injunctive relief required to effectuate the requested declaratory judgment.

2. These provisions of Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act are unconstitutional insofar as they establish procedures for determining which of two or more competing slates of Presidential Electors for a given State are to be counted in the Electoral College, or how objections to a proffered slate are adjudicated, that violate the Twelfth Amendment. This violation occurs because the Electoral Count Act directs the Defendant, Vice President Michael R. Pence, in his capacity as President of the Senate and Presiding Officer over the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress: (1) to count the electoral votes for a State that have been appointed in violation of the Electors Clause; (2) limits or eliminates his exclusive authority and sole discretion under the Twelfth Amendment to determine which slates of electors for a State, or neither, may be counted; and (3) replaces the Twelfth Amendment's dispute resolution procedure – under which the House of Representatives has sole authority to choose the President.

3. Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act unconstitutionally violates the Electors Clause by usurping the exclusive and plenary authority of State Legislatures to determine the manner of appointing Presidential Electors, and instead gives that authority to the State's Executive. Similarly, 3 USC § 5 makes clear that the Presidential electors of a state and their appointment by the State Executive shall be conclusive.

4. This is not an abstract or hypothetical question, but a live “case or controversy” under Article III that is ripe for a declaratory judgment arising from the events of December 14, 2020, where the State of Arizona (and several others) have appointed two competing slates of electors.

5. Plaintiffs include the United States Representative for Texas' First Congressional District and the entire slate of Republican Presidential Electors for the State of Arizona. The Arizona Electors have cast Arizona's electoral votes for President Donald J. Trump on December 14, 2020, at the Arizona State Capitol with the permission and endorsement of the Arizona Legislature, i.e., at the time, place, and manner required under Arizona state law and the Electoral Count Act. At the same time, Arizona's Governor and Secretary of State appointed a separate and competing slate of electors who cast Arizona's electoral votes for former Vice-President Joseph R. Biden, despite the evidence of massive multi-state electoral fraud committed on Biden's behalf that changed electoral results in Arizona and in other states such as Georgia, Michigan,

Pennsylvania and Wisconsin that have also put forward competing slates of electors (collectively, the “Contested States”). Collectively, these Contested States have enough electoral votes in controversy to determine the outcome of the 2020 General Election.

6. On January 6, 2021, when Congress convenes to count the electoral votes for President and Vice-President, Plaintiff Representative Gohmert will object to the counting of the Arizona slate of electors voting for Biden and to the Biden slates from the remaining Contested States. Rep. Gohmert is entitled to have his objection determined under the Twelve Amendment, and not through the unconstitutional impositions of a prior Congress by 3 U.S.C. §§ 5 and 15.

7. Senators have also stated that they may object to the Biden slate of electors from the Contested States.<sup>1</sup>

8. This Complaint addresses a matter of urgent national concern that involves only issues of law – namely, a determination that Sections 5 and 15 of the Electoral Count Act violate the Electors Clause and/or the Twelfth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. The relevant facts are not in dispute concerning the existence of a live case or controversy between Plaintiffs and Defendant, ripeness, standing, and other matters related to the justiciability of Plaintiffs’ claims.<sup>2</sup>

---

<sup>1</sup> See <https://www.forbes.com/sites/jackbrewster/2020/12/17/here-are-the-gop-senators-who-have-hinted-at-defying-mcconnell-by-challenging-election/?sh=506395c34ce3>.

<sup>2</sup> The facts relevant to the justiciability of Plaintiffs’ claims are laid out below and demonstrate the certainty or near certainty that the unconstitutional provisions in Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act will be invoked at the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress to choose the next President, namely: (1) there are competing slates of electors for Arizona and the other Contested States that have been or will be submitted to the Electoral College; (2) the Contested States collectively have sufficient (contested) electoral votes to determine the winner of the 2020 General Election – President Trump or former Vice President Biden; (3) legislators in Arizona and other Contested States have contested the certification of their State’s electoral votes by State executives, due to substantial evidence of election fraud that is the subject of ongoing litigation and investigations; and (4) Senators and Members of the House of Representatives have expressed their intent to challenge the electors and electoral votes certified by State executives in the Contested States.

9. Because the requested declaratory judgment will terminate the controversy arising from the conflict between the Twelfth Amendment and the Electoral Count Act, and the facts are not in dispute, it is appropriate for this Court to grant this relief in a summary proceeding without an evidentiary hearing or discovery. See Notes of Advisory Committee on Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Fed. R. Civ. P. 57.

10. Accordingly, Plaintiffs have concurrently submitted a motion for a speedy summary proceeding under Rule 57 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure (“FRCP”) to grant the relief requested herein as soon as possible, and for emergency injunctive relief under Rule 65 thereof consistent with the declaratory judgment requested herein on that same date.

11. Accordingly, Plaintiffs respectfully request this Court to issue a declaratory judgment finding that:

- A. Sections 5 and 15 of the Electoral Count Act, 3 U.S.C. §§ 5 and 15, are unconstitutional because they violate the Twelfth Amendment, U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1, cl. 1 & amend. XII on the face of it; and further violate the Electors Clause;
- B. That Vice-President Pence, in his capacity as President of Senate and Presiding Officer of the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress under the Twelfth Amendment, is subject solely to the requirements of the Twelfth Amendment and may exercise the exclusive authority and sole discretion in determining which electoral votes to count for a given State, and must ignore and may not rely on any provisions of the Electoral Count Act that would limit his exclusive authority and his sole discretion to determine the count, which could include votes from the slates of Republican electors from the Contested States;

- C. That, with respect to competing slates of electors from the State of Arizona or other Contested States, the Twelfth Amendment contains the exclusive dispute resolution mechanisms, namely, that (i) Vice-President Pence determines which slate of electors' votes count, or neither, for that State; (ii) how objections from members of Congress to any proffered slate of electors is adjudicated; and (iii) if no candidate has a majority of 270 elector votes, then the House of Representatives (and only the House of Representatives) shall choose the President where "the votes [in the House of Representatives] shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote," U.S. CONST. amend. XII;
- D. That with respect to the counting of competing slates of electors, the alternative dispute resolution procedure or priority rule in 3 U.S.C. § 15, together with its incorporation of 3 U.S.C. § 5, shall have no force or effect because it nullifies and replaces the Twelfth Amendment rules above with an entirely different procedure; and
- E. Issue any other declaratory judgments or findings or injunctive relief necessary to support or effectuate the foregoing declaratory judgments.

JURISDICTION AND VENUE

12. This Court has subject matter jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1331 which provides, "The district courts shall have original jurisdiction of all civil actions arising under the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States."

13. This Court also has subject matter jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1343 because this action involves a federal election for President of the United States. "A significant departure from the legislative scheme for appointing Presidential electors presents a federal constitutional question.” Bush v. Gore, 531 U.S. 98, 113 (2000) (Rehnquist, C.J., concurring); Smiley v. Holm, 285 U.S. 355, 365 (1932).

14. The jurisdiction of the Court to grant declaratory relief is conferred by 28 U.S.C. §§ 2201 and 2202 and by Rule 57, Fed. R. Civ. P., and emergency injunctive relief by Rule 65, Fed. R. Civ. P.

15. Venue is proper because Plaintiff Gohmert resides in Tyler, Texas, he maintains his primary congressional office in Tyler, and no real property is involved in the action. 28 U.S.C. § 1391(e)(1).

THE PARTIES

16. Plaintiff Louie Gohmert is a duly elected member of the United States House of Representatives for the First Congressional District of Texas. On November 3, 2020 he won re-election of this Congressional seat and plans to attend the January 6, 2021 session of Congress. He resides in the city of Tyler, in Smith County, Texas.

17. Each of the following Plaintiffs is a resident of Arizona, a registered Arizona voter and a Republican Party Presidential Elector on behalf of the State of Arizona, who voted their competing slate for President and Vice President on December 14, 2020: a) Tyler Bowyer, a resident of Maricopa County and a Republican National Committeeman; b) Nancy Cottle, a resident of Maricopa County and Second Vice-Chairman of the Maricopa County Republican Committee; c) Jake Hoffman, a resident of Maricopa County and member-elect of the Arizona House of Representatives; d) Anthony Kern, a resident of Maricopa County and an outgoing member of the Arizona House of Representatives; e) James R. Lamon, a resident of Maricopa County; f) Samuel Moorhead, a resident of Gila County; g) Robert Montgomery, a resident of Cochise County and Republican Party Chairman for Cochise County; h) Loraine Pellegrino, a resident of Maricopa County; i) Greg Safsten, a resident of Maricopa County and Executive Director of the Republican Party of Arizona; j) Kelli Ward, a resident of Mohave County and Chair of the Arizona Republican Party; and k) Michael Ward, a resident of Mohave County.

18. The above eleven plaintiffs constitute the full slate of the Arizona Republican party's nominees for presidential electors (the "Arizona Electors").

19. The Defendant is Vice President Michael R. Pence named in his official capacity as the Vice President of the United States. The declaratory and injunctive relief requested herein applies to his duties as President of the Senate and Presiding Officer at the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress carried out pursuant to the Electoral Count Act and the Twelfth Amendment.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

20. The Plaintiffs include a United States Representative from Texas, the entire slate of Republican Presidential Electors for the State of Arizona as well as an outgoing and incoming member of the Arizona Legislature. On December 14, 2020, pursuant to the requirements of applicable state laws and the Electoral Count Act, the Arizona Electors, with the knowledge and permission of the Republican-majority Arizona Legislature, convened at the Arizona State Capitol, and cast Arizona's electoral votes for President Donald J. Trump and Vice President Michael R. Pence.<sup>3</sup> On the same date, the Republican Presidential Electors for the States of Georgia,<sup>4</sup>

---

<sup>3</sup> See GOP Elector Nominees cast votes for Trump in Arizona, Georgia, Pennsylvania, by Dave Boyer, The Washington Times, December 14, 2020. <https://www.washingtontimes.com/news/2020/dec/14/gop-electors-cast-votes-trump-georgia-pennsylvania/>.

<sup>4</sup> See id.

Pennsylvania<sup>5</sup> and Wisconsin<sup>6</sup> met at their respective State Capitols to cast their States' electoral votes for President Trump and Vice President Pence.

21. Michigan's Republican electors attempted to vote at their State Capitol on December 14th but were denied entrance by the Michigan State Police. Instead, they met on the grounds of the State Capitol and cast their votes for President Trump and Vice President Pence vote.<sup>7</sup>

22. On December 14, 2020, in Arizona and the other States listed above, the Democratic Party's slate of electors convened in their respective State Capitols to cast their electoral votes for former Vice President Joseph R. Biden and Senator Kamala Harris. On the same day, Arizona Governor Doug Ducey and Arizona Secretary of State Katie Hobbs submitted the Certificate of Ascertainment with the Biden electoral votes pursuant to the National Archivist pursuant to the Electoral Count Act.<sup>8</sup>

23. Accordingly, there are now competing slates of Republican and Democratic electors in five States with Republican majorities in both houses of their State Legislatures – Arizona, Georgia, Michigan, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin (i.e., the Contested States) – that

---

<sup>5</sup> See id.

<sup>6</sup> See Wisconsin GOP Electors Meet to Cast their own Votes Too Just in Case, by Nick Viviani, WMTV, NBC15.com, December 14, 2020, <https://www.nbc15.com/2020/12/14/wisconsin-gop-electors-meet-to-cast-their-own-votes-too-just-in-case/> last visited December 14, 2020.

<sup>7</sup> See Michigan Police Block GOP Electors from Entering Capitol, by Jacob Palmieri, the Palmieri Report, December 14, 2020, <https://thepalmierireport.com/michigan-state-police-block-gop-electors-from-entering-capitol/>.

<sup>8</sup> See Democratic Electors Cast Ballots in Arizona for First Time Since 1996, by Nicole Valdes, ABC15.com, December 14, 2020, available at: <https://www.abc15.com/news/election-2020/democratic-electors-cast-ballots-in-arizona-for-first-time-since-1996>.

collectively have 73 electoral votes, which are more than sufficient to determine the winner of the 2020 General Election.<sup>9</sup>

24. The Arizona Electors, along with Republican Presidential Electors in Georgia, Michigan, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin, took this step as a result of the extraordinary events and substantial evidence of election fraud and other illegal conduct before, during and after the 2020 General Election in these States. The Arizona Legislature has conducted legislative hearings into these voting fraud allegations, and is actively investigating these matters, including issuing subpoenas of Maricopa County, Arizona (which accounts for over 60% of Arizona's population and voters) voting machines for forensic audits.<sup>10</sup>

25. On December 14, 2020, members of the Arizona Legislature passed a Joint Resolution in which they: (1) found that the 2020 General Election “was marred by irregularities so significant as to render it highly doubtful whether the certified result accurately represents the will of the voters;” (2) invoked the Arizona Legislature's authority under the Electors Clause and 5 U.S.C. § 2 to declare the 2020 General Election a failed election and to directly appoint Arizona's electors; (3) resolved that the Plaintiff Arizona Electors' “11 electoral votes be accepted for ... Donald J. Trump or to have all electoral votes nullified completely until a full forensic audit can be conducted;” and (4) further resolved “that the United States Congress is not to consider a slate

---

<sup>9</sup> Republican Presidential Electors in the States of Nevada and New Mexico, which have Democrat majority state legislature, also met on December 14, 2020, at their State Capitols to cast their votes for President Trump and Vice President Pence.

<sup>10</sup> Maricopa County election officials have refused to comply with these subpoenas or to turn over voting machines or voting records and have sued to quash the subpoena. Plaintiff Arizona Electors have moved to intervene in this Arizona state proceeding. See generally Maricopa Cty. v. Fann, Case No. CV2020-016840 (Az. Sup. Ct. Dec. 18, 2020).

of electors from the State of Arizona until the Legislature deems the election to be final and all irregularities resolved.”<sup>11</sup>

26. Public reports have also highlighted wide-spread election fraud in the other Contested States that prompted competing Electors’ slates.<sup>12</sup>

27. Republican Senators and Republican Members of the House of Representatives have also expressed their intent to oppose the certified slates of electors from the Contested States due to the substantial evidence of election fraud in the 2020 General Election. Multiple Senators and House Members have stated that they will object to the Biden electors at the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress.<sup>13</sup> Plaintiff Gohmert will object to the counting of the Arizona electors voting for Biden, as well as to the Biden electors from the remaining Contested States.

28. Based on the foregoing facts, Defendant Vice President Pence, in his capacity as President of the Senate and Presiding Officer at the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress to select the next President, will be presented with the following circumstances: (1) competing slates of electors from the State of Arizona and the other Contested States (namely, Georgia, Michigan, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin) (2) that represent sufficient electoral votes (a) if counted, to determine the winner of the 2020 General Election, or (b) if not counted, to deny either President Trump or former Vice President Biden sufficient votes to win outright; and (3) objections from at

---

<sup>11</sup> See Ex. A, “A Joint Resolution of the 54th Legislature, State of Arizona, To The 116th Congress, Office of the President of the Senate Presiding,” December 14, 2020 (“December 14, 2020 Joint Resolution”).

<sup>12</sup> See The Immaculate Deception, Six Key Dimensions of Election Irregularities, The Navarro Report. <https://bannonswarroom.com/wp-content/uploads/2020/12/The-Immaculate-Deception-12.15.20-1.pdf>

<sup>13</sup> See, e.g., Dueling Electors and the Upcoming Joint Session of Congress, by Zachary Steiber, Epoch Times, Dec. 17, 2020, available at: https://www.theepochtimes.com/explainer-dueling-electors-and-the-upcoming-joint-session-of-congress\_3622992.html.

least one Senator and at least one Member of the House of Representatives to the counting of electoral votes from one or more of the Contested States.

29. The choice between the Twelfth Amendment and 3 U.S.C. § 15 raises important procedural differences. In the incoming 117th Congress, the Republican Party has a majority in 27 of the House delegations that would vote under the Twelfth Amendment. The Democrat Party has a majority in 20 of those House delegations, and the two parties are evenly divided in three of those delegations. By contrast, under 3 U.S.C. § 15, Democrats have a ten- or eleven-seat majority in the House, depending on the final outcome of the election in New York's 22nd District.

30. Accordingly, it is the foregoing conflict between the Twelfth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution and Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act that establish the urgency for this Court to issue a declaratory judgment that Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act is unconstitutional.

RELEVANT CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS

31. Presidential Electors Clause. The U.S. Constitution grants State Legislatures the exclusive authority to appoint Presidential Electors:

Each State shall appoint, in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors, equal to the whole Number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress: but no Senator or Representative, or Person holding an Office of Trust or Profit under the United States, shall be appointed an Elector. U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1 ("Electors Clause").

32. The Supreme Court has affirmed that the “power and jurisdiction of the state [legislature]” to select electors “is exclusive,” McPherson v. Blacker, 146 U.S. 1, 11 (1892); this power “cannot be taken from them or modified” by statute or even the state constitution,” and “there is no doubt of the right of the legislature to resume the power at any time.” Id. at 10 (citations omitted). In Bush v. Gore, 531 U.S. 98 (2000), the Supreme Court reaffirmed McPherson's holding that “the state legislature’s power to select the manner for appointing electors is plenary,” Bush, 531 U.S. at 104 (citing McPherson, 146 U.S. at 35), noting that the state legislature “may, if it so chooses, select the electors itself,” and that even after deciding to select electors through a statewide election, “can take back the power to appoint electors.” Id. (citation omitted).

33. The Twelfth Amendment. The Twelfth Amendment sets forth the procedures for counting electoral votes and for resolving disputes over whether and which electoral votes may be counted for a State. The first section describes the meeting of the Electoral College and the procedures up to the casting of the electoral votes by the Presidential Electors in their respective states, which occurred on December 14, 2020, with respect to the 2020 General Election:

The electors shall meet in their respective states and vote by ballot for President and Vice-President, one of whom, at least, shall not be an inhabitant of the same state with themselves; they shall name in their ballots the person voted for as President, and in distinct ballots the person voted for as Vice-President, and they shall make distinct lists of all persons voted for as President, and of all persons voted for as Vice-President, and of the number of votes for each, which lists they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the seat of the government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate.

U.S. CONST. amend. XII.

34. The second section describes how Defendant Vice President Pence, in his role as President of the Senate and Presiding Officer for the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress, shall “count” the electoral votes.

The President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and the votes shall then be counted[.]

U.S. CONST. amend. XII.

35. Under the Twelfth Amendment, Defendant Pence alone has the exclusive authority and sole discretion to open and permit the counting of the electoral votes for a given state, and where there are competing slates of electors, or where there is objection to any single slate of electors, to determine which electors’ votes, or whether none, shall be counted. Notably, neither the Twelfth Amendment nor the Electoral Count Act, provides any mechanism for judicial review of the Presiding Officer's determinations.<sup>14</sup> Instead, the Twelfth Amendment and the Electoral Count Act adopt different procedures for the President of the Senate (Twelfth Amendment) or both Houses of Congress (Electoral Count Act) to resolve any such disputes and the authority for the final determinations, in the event of disagreement, to different parties; namely, the Electoral Count Act gives it to the Executive of the State; while the Twelfth Amendment vests sole authority with the Vice President.

36. The third section of the Twelfth Amendment sets forth the procedures for selecting the President (solely) by the House of Representatives, in the event that no candidate has received a majority of electoral votes counted by the President of the Senate.

The person having the greatest number of votes for President, shall be the President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of electors appointed; and if no person have such majority, then from the persons having the highest numbers not exceeding three on the list of those voted for as President, the House of Representatives shall choose immediately, by ballot, the President. But in choosing the President, the votes shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote; a quorum for this purpose shall consist of a member or members from two-thirds of the states, and a majority of all the states shall be necessary to a choice. And if the House of Representatives shall not choose a President whenever the right of choice shall devolve upon them, before the fourth day of March next following, then the Vice-President shall act as President, as in the case of the death or other constitutional disability of the President.

U.S. CONST. amend. XII (emphasis added).

---

<sup>14</sup> See, e.g., Nathan L. Colvin & Edward B. Foley, The Twelfth Amendment: A Constitutional Ticking Time Bomb, U. of Miami L. Rev. 64:475, 526 (2010) (discussing reviews of the Electoral Count Act's ("ECA") legislative history and concluding that, "[o]ne of the more thorough reviews of the legislative history of the ECA reveals that Congress considered giving the Court some role in the process but rejected the idea every time, and it was clear that Congress did not think the Court had a constitutional role nor did it believe that the Court should have any jurisdiction at all." Plaintiffs agree that resolution of disputes before Congress, arising on January 6, 2021, over competing slates of electors, or objections to any slate of electors, are matters outside the purview of federal courts; but the federal courts must determine whether the ECA is unconstitutional. This position is fully consistent with the declaratory judgment requested herein.

37. There are four key features of this Twelfth Amendment procedure that should be noted when comparing it with the Electoral Count Act's procedures: (1) the President is to be chosen solely by the House of Representatives, with no role for the Senate; (2) votes are taken by State (with one vote per State), rather than by individual House members; (3) the President is deemed the candidate that receives the majority of States' votes, rather than a majority of individual House members' votes; and (4) there are no other restrictions on this majority rule provision; in particular, no "tie breaker" or priority rules based on the manner or State authority that originally appointed the electors on December 14, 2020 as is the case under the Electoral Count Act (which gives priority to electors' certified by the State's executive).

38. The Electoral Count Act. The Electoral Count Act of 1887, as subsequently amended, includes a number of provisions that are in direct conflict with the text of the Electors Clause and the Twelfth Amendment.

39. Sections 5 and 15 of the Electoral Count Act adopt an entirely different set of procedures for the counting of electoral votes, for addressing situations where one candidate does not receive a majority, and for resolving disputes. Sections 16 to 18 of the Electoral Count Act provide additional procedural rules governing the Joint Session of Congress (to be held January 6, 2021 for the 2020 General Election).

40. The first part of Section 15 is consistent with the Twelfth Amendment insofar as it provides that "the President of the Senate shall be their presiding officer" and that "all the certificates and papers purporting to be certificates of the electoral votes" are to be "opened by the President of the Senate." 3 U.S.C. § 15. However, Section 15 diverges from the Twelfth Amendment by adopting procedures for the President of the Senate to "call for objections," and if there are objections made in writing by one Senator and one Member of the House of Representatives, then this shall trigger a dispute-resolution procedure found nowhere in the Twelfth Amendment.

41. The Section 15's dispute resolution procedures are lengthy and reproduced in their entirety below:

When all objections so made to any vote or paper from a State shall have been received and read, the Senate shall thereupon withdraw, and such objections shall be submitted to the Senate for its decision; and the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall, in like manner, submit such objections to the House of Representatives for its decision; and no electoral vote or votes from any State which shall have been regularly given by electors whose appointment has been lawfully certified to according to section 6 of this title [3 USCS § 6]<sup>15</sup> from which but one return has been received shall be rejected, but the two Houses concurrently may reject the vote or votes when they agree that such vote or votes have not been so regularly given by electors whose appointment has been so certified. If more than one return or paper purporting to be a return from a State shall have been received by the President of the Senate, those votes, and those only, shall be counted which shall have been regularly given by the electors who are shown by the determination mentioned in section 5 [3 USCS § 5] of this title to have been appointed, if the determination in said section provided for shall have been made, or by such successors or substitutes, in case of a vacancy in the board of electors so ascertained, as have been appointed to fill such vacancy in the mode provided by the laws of the State; but in case there shall arise the question which of two or more of such State authorities determining what electors have been appointed, as mentioned in section 5 of this title [3 USCS § 5], is the lawful tribunal of such State, the votes regularly given of those electors, and those only, of such State shall be counted whose title as electors the two Houses, acting separately, shall concurrently decide is supported by the decision of such State so authorized by its law; and in such case of more than one return or paper purporting to be a return from a State, if there shall have been no such determination of the question in the State aforesaid, then those votes, and those only, shall be counted which the two Houses shall concurrently decide were cast by lawful electors appointed in accordance with the laws of the State, unless the two Houses, acting separately, shall concurrently decide such votes not to be the lawful votes of the legally appointed electors of such

---

<sup>15</sup> 3 U.S.C. § 6 is inconsistent with the Electors Clause—which provides that electors “shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the seat of the government of the United States” the results of their vote, U.S. Const. art. II, § 1, cl. 2-3—because § 6 relies on state executives to forward the results of the electors’ vote to the Archivist for delivery to Congress. 3 U.S.C. § 6. Although the means of delivery are arguably inconsequential, the Constitution vests state executives with no role whatsoever in the process of electing a President. A state executive lends no official imprimatur to a given slate of electors under the Constitution.

State. But if the two Houses shall disagree in respect of the counting of such votes, then, and in that case, the votes of the electors whose appointment shall have been certified by the executive of the State, under the seal thereof, shall be counted. When the two Houses have voted, they shall immediately again meet, and the presiding officer shall then announce the decision of the questions submitted. No votes or papers from any other State shall be acted upon until the objections previously made to the votes or papers from any State shall have been finally disposed of.

3 U.S.C. § 15 (emphasis added).

42. First, the Electoral Count Act submits disputes over the “count” of electoral votes to both the House of Representatives and to the Senate. The Twelfth Amendment envisages no such role for both Houses of Congress. The President of the Senate, and the President of the Senate alone, shall “count” the electoral votes. This intent is borne out by a unanimous resolution attached to the final Constitution that described the procedures for electing the first President (i.e., for a time when there would not already be a Vice President), stating in relevant part “that the Senators should appoint a President of the Senate, for the sole Purpose of receiving, opening and counting the Votes for President.” 2 M. Farrand, RECORDS OF THE FEDERAL CONVENTION OF 1787, at 666 (1911). For all subsequent elections, when there would be a Vice President to act as President of the Senate, the Constitution vests the opening and counting in the Vice President.

43. Second, the Electoral Count Act gives both the House of Representatives and the Senate the power to vote, or “decide,” which of two or more competing slates of electors shall be counted, and it requires the concurrence of both to “count” the electoral votes for one of the competing slates of electors.

44. Under the Twelfth Amendment, the President of the Senate has the sole authority to count votes in the first instance, and then the House may do so only in the event that no candidate receives a majority counted by the President of the Senate. There is no role for the Senate to participate in choosing the President.

45. Third, the Electoral Count Act eliminates entirely the unique mechanism by which the House of Representatives under the Twelve Amendment is to choose the President, namely, where “the votes shall be taken by states, the representation for each state having one vote.” U.S. CONST. amend. XII. The Electoral Count Act is silent on how the House of Representatives is to “decide” which electoral votes were cast by lawful electors.

46. Fourth, the Electoral Count Act adopts a priority rule, or “tie breaker,” “if the two Houses shall disagree in respect of counting of such votes,” in which case “the votes of the electors whose appointment shall have been certified by the executive of the State ... shall be counted.” This provision not only conflicts with the President of the Senate’s exclusive authority and sole discretion under the Twelfth Amendment to decide which electoral votes to count, but also with the State Legislature’s exclusive and plenary authority under the Electors Clause to appoint the Presidential Electors for their State.

47. The Electoral Count Act is unconstitutional because it exceeds the power of Congress to enact. It is well settled that “one legislature may not bind the legislative authority of its successors,” United States v. Winstar Corp., 518 U.S. 839, 872 (1996), which is a foundational and “centuries-old concept,” id., that traces to Blackstone’s maxim that “Acts of parliament derogatory from the power of subsequent parliaments bind not.” Id. (quoting 1 WILLIAM BLACKSTONE, COMMENTARIES *90). “There is no constitutionally prescribed method by which one Congress may require a future Congress to interpret or discharge a constitutional responsibility in any particular way.” Laurence H. Tribe, Erog v. Hsub and Its Disguises: Freeing Bush v. Gore from Its Hall of Mirrors, 115 HARV. L. REV. 170, 267 n.388 (2001).

48. The Electoral Count Act also violates the Presentment Clause by purporting to create a type of bicameral order, resolution, or vote that is not presented to the President. See U.S.

CONST. art. I, § 7, cl. 3 (“Every Order, Resolution, or Vote, to Which the Concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary (except on a question of Adjournment) shall be presented to the President of the United States; and before the Same shall take Effect, shall be approved by him, or being disapproved by him, shall be repassed by two thirds of the Senate and House of Representatives, according to the Rules and Limitations prescribed in the Case of a Bill.”)

49. The House and Senate cannot resolve the issues that the Electoral Count Act asks them to resolve without either a supermajority in both houses or presentment. The Electoral Count Act similarly restricts the authority of the House of Representatives and the Senate to control their internal discretion and procedures pursuant to Article I, Section 5 which provides that “[e]ach House may determine the Rules of its Proceedings ...” U.S. CONST. art. I, § 5, cl. 2.

50. Further, the Electoral Count Act improperly delegates tie-breaking authority to State executives (who have no agency under the Electors Clause or election amendments) when a State presents competing slates that Congress cannot resolve, or when an objection is presented to a particular slate of electors.

51. The Electoral Count Act also violates the non-delegation doctrine, the separation-of-powers and anti-entrenchment doctrines. See generally Chris Land & David Schultz, On the Unenforceability of the Electoral Count Act, 13 Rutgers J.L. & Pub. Policy 340, 364-377 (2016).

JUSTICIABILITY AND JURISDICTION

52. This Court Can Grant Declaratory Judgment in a Summary Proceeding. This Court has the authority to enter a declaratory judgment and to provide injunctive relief pursuant to Rules 57 and 65 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and 28 U.S.C. §§ 2201 and 2202. The court may order a speedy hearing of a declaratory judgment action. Fed. Rules Civ. Proc. R. 57,

Advisory Committee Notes. A declaratory judgment is appropriate when it will “terminate the controversy” giving rise to the proceeding. Id. Inasmuch as it often involves only an issue of law on undisputed or relatively undisputed facts, it operates frequently as a summary proceeding, justifying docketing the case for early hearing as on a motion. Id.

53. As described above, Plaintiffs’ claims involve legal issues only – specifically, whether the Electoral Count Act violates the Twelfth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution – that do not require this court to resolve any disputed factual issues.

54. Moreover, the factual issues related to the justiciability of Plaintiffs’ claims are not in dispute. To assist this Court to grant the relief on the expedited basis requested herein, Plaintiffs address a number of likely objections to this Court’s jurisdiction and the justiciability of Plaintiffs’ claims that may be raised by Defendant.

55. Plaintiffs Have Standing. Plaintiffs have standing as including a Member of the House of Representatives, Members of the Arizona Legislature, and as Presidential Electors for the State of Arizona.

56. Prior to December 14, 2020, Plaintiff Arizona Electors had standing under the Electors Clause as candidates for the office of Presidential Elector because, under Arizona law, a vote cast for the Republican Party’s President and Vice President is cast for the Republican Presidential Electors. See ARS § 16-212. Accordingly, Plaintiff Arizona Electors, like other candidates for office, “have a cognizable interest in ensuring that the final vote tally reflects the legally valid votes cast,” as “[a]n inaccurate vote tally is a concrete and particularized injury to candidates such as the Electors.” Carson v. Simon, 978 F.3d 1051, 1057 (8th Cir. 2020) (affirming that Presidential Electors have Article III and prudential standing under Electors Clause). See also Wood v. Raffensperger, No. 20-14418, 2020 WL 7094866, *10 (11th Cir. Dec. 5, 2020) (affirming that if Plaintiff voter had been a candidate for office “he could assert a personal, distinct injury” required for standing); Trump v. Wis. Elections Comm’n, No. 20-cv-1785, 2020 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 233765 at *26 (E.D. Wis. Dec. 12, 2020) (President Trump, “as candidate for election, has a concrete particularized interest in the actual results of the election.”).

57. But for the alleged wrongful conduct of Arizona executive branch and Maricopa County officials under color of law, by certifying a fraudulently produced election result in Mr. Biden’s favor, the Plaintiff Arizona Electors would have been certified as the presidential electors for Arizona, and Arizona’s Governor and Secretary of State would have transmitted uncontested votes for Donald J. Trump and Michael R. Pence to the Electoral College. The certification and transmission of a competing slate of Biden electors has resulted in a unique injury that only Plaintiff Arizona Electors could suffer, namely, having a competing slate of electors take their place and their votes in the Electoral College.

58. The upcoming January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress provides further grounds of standing for the requested declaratory judgment that the Electoral Count Act is unconstitutional. Then, Plaintiffs are certain or nearly certain to suffer an injury-in-fact caused by Defendant Vice President Pence, acting as Presiding Officer, if Defendant ignores the Twelfth Amendment and instead follows the procedures in Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act to resolve the dispute over which slate of Arizona electors is to be counted.

59. The Twelfth Amendment gives Defendant exclusive authority and sole discretion as to which set of electors to count, or not to count any set of electors; if no candidate receives a majority of electoral votes, then the President is to be chosen by the House, where “the votes shall be taken by States, the representation from each state having one vote.” U.S. CONST. amend. XII. If Defendant Pence instead follows the procedures in Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act,

Plaintiffs' electoral votes will not be counted because (a) the Democratic majority House of Representatives will not "decide" to count the electoral votes of Plaintiff Republican electors; and (b) either the Senate will concur with the House not to count their votes, or the Senate will not concur, in which case, the electoral votes cast by Biden's electors will be counted because the Biden slate of electors was certified by Arizona's executive.

60. It is sufficient for the purposes of declaratory judgment that the injury is threatened. The declaratory and injunctive relief requested by Plaintiffs "may be made before actual completion of the injury-in-fact required for Article III standing," namely, the application of Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act, rather than the Twelfth Amendment to resolve disputes over which of two competing slates of electors to count "if the plaintiff can show an actual present harm or significant possibility of future harm to demonstrate the need for pre-enforcement review." 10 FED. PROC. L. ED. § 23.26 ("Standing to Seek Declaratory Judgment") (citations omitted).

61. Plaintiffs have demonstrated above that this injury-in-fact is to occur at the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress, and they seek the requested declaratory and injunctive relief "only in the last resort, and as a necessity in the determination of a vital controversy." Id.

62. Plaintiffs Present a Live "Case or Controversy." Plaintiffs' claims present a live "case or controversy" with the Defendant, rather than hypothetical or abstract dispute, that can be litigated and decided by this Court through the requested declaratory and injunctive relief. Here there is a clear threat of the application of an unconstitutional statute, Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act, which is sufficient to establish the requisite case or controversy. See, e.g., Navegar, Inc. v. U.S., 103 F.3d 994, 998 (D.C. Cir. 1997) ("the threat of prosecution provides the foundation of justiciability as a constitutional and prudential matter, and the Declaratory Judgments Act provides the mechanism for seeking pre-enforcement review in federal court.").

63. First, the events of December 14, 2020, gave rise to two competing slates of electors for the State of Arizona: the Plaintiff Arizona Electors, supported by Arizona State legislators (as evidenced by the December 14, 2020 Joint Resolution and the participation of Arizona legislator Plaintiffs), who cast their electoral votes for President Trump and Vice President Pence, and one certified by the Arizona state executives who cast their votes for former Vice President Biden and Senator Harris. Second, the text of the Twelfth Amendment of the Constitution expressly commits to the Defendant Vice President Pence, acting as the President of the Senate and Presiding Officer for the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress, the authority and discretion to “count” electoral votes, i.e., deciding in his sole discretion as to which one of the two, or neither, set of electoral votes shall be counted. The Electoral Count Act similarly designates Defendant as the Presiding Officer responsible for opening and counting electoral votes, but sets forth a different set of procedures, inconsistent with the Twelfth Amendment, for deciding which of two or more competing slates of electors and electoral votes, or neither, shall be counted.

64. Accordingly, a controversy presently exists due to: (1) the existence of competing slates of electors for Arizona and the other Contested States, and (2) distinct and inconsistent procedures under the Twelfth Amendment and the Electoral Count Act to determine which slate of electors and their electoral votes, or neither, shall be counted in choosing the next President. Further, this controversy must be resolved at the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress. Finally, the Constitution expressly designates Defendant Pence as the individual who decides which set of electoral votes, or neither, to count, and the requested declaratory judgment that the procedures under Electoral Count Act are unconstitutional is necessary to ensure that Defendant Pence counts electoral votes in a manner consistent with the Twelfth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution.

65. The injuries that Plaintiffs assert affect the procedure by which the status of their votes will be considered, which lowers the thresholds for immediacy and redressability under this Circuit's and the Supreme Court's precedents. Nat'l Treasury Employees Union v. U.S., 101 F.3d 1423, 1428-29 (D.C. Cir. 1996); Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 571-72 & n.7 (1992). Similarly, a plaintiff with concrete injury can invoke Constitution's structural protections of liberty. Bond v. United States, 564 U.S. 211, 222-23 (2011).

66. Plaintiffs' Claims Are Ripe for Adjudication. Plaintiffs' claims are ripe for the same reasons that they present a live "case or controversy" within the meaning of Article III. "[T]he ripeness doctrine seeks to separate matters that are premature for review because the injury is speculative and may never occur from those cases that are appropriate for federal court action." Roark v. Hardee LP v. City of Austin, 522 F.3d 533, 544 n.12 (5th Cir. 2008) (quoting ERWIN CHEMERINSEY, FEDERAL JURISDICTION § 2.4.18 (5th Ed. 2007)). As explained above, the facts underlying the justiciability of Plaintiffs' claims are not in dispute. Further, it is certain or nearly certain that Plaintiffs will suffer an injury-in-fact at the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress, if Defendant Pence disregards the exclusive authority and sole discretion granted to him under the Twelfth Amendment to "count" electoral votes, and instead follows the conflicting and unconstitutional procedures in Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act, pursuant to which Plaintiffs' electoral votes will be disregarded in favor of the competing electors for the State of Arizona.

67. Plaintiffs' Claims Are Not Moot. Plaintiffs seek prospective declaratory judgment that portions of the Electoral Count Act are unconstitutional and injunctive relief prohibiting Defendant from following the procedures in Section 15 thereof that authorize the House and Senate jointly to resolve disputes regarding competing slates of electors. This prospective relief would apply to Defendants' future actions at the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress. The requested relief thus is not moot because it is prospective and because it addresses an unconstitutional “ongoing policy” embodied in the Electoral Count Act that is likely to be repeated and will evade review if the requested relief is not granted. Del Monte Fresh Produce v. U.S., 570 F.3d 316, 321-22 (D.C. Cir. 2009).

COUNT I

DEFENDANT WILL NECESSARILY VIOLATE THE TWELFTH AMENDMENT AND THE ELECTORS CLAUSE OF THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION IF HE FOLLOWS THE ELECTORAL COUNT ACT.

68. Plaintiffs reallege all preceding paragraphs as if fully set forth herein.

69. The Electors Clause states that “[e]ach State shall appoint, in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a Number of Electors” for President and Vice President. U.S. Const. art. II, §1, cl. 2 (emphasis added).

70. The Twelfth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution gives Defendant Vice President, as President of the Senate and the Presiding Officer of January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress, the exclusive authority and sole discretion to “count” the electoral votes for President, as well as the authority to determine which of two or more competing slates of electors for a State, or neither, may be counted, or how objections to any single slate of electors is resolved. In the event no candidate receives a majority of the electoral votes, then the House of Representatives shall have sole authority to choose the President where “the votes shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote.” U.S. CONST. amend. XII.

71. Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act replaces the procedures set forth in the Twelfth Amendment with a different and inconsistent set of decision making and dispute resolution procedures. As detailed above, these provisions of Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act are unconstitutional insofar as they require Defendant: (1) to count the electoral votes for a

State that have been appointed in violation of the Electors Clause; (2) limits or eliminates his exclusive authority and sole discretion under the Twelfth Amendment to determine which slates of electors for a State, or neither, may be counted; and (3) replaces the Twelfth Amendment's dispute resolution procedure which provides for the House of Representatives to choose the President under a procedure where "the votes shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote" – with an entirely different procedure in which the House and Senate each separately "decide" which slate is to be counted, and in the event of a disagreement, then only "the votes of the electors whose appointment shall have been certified by the executive of the State ... shall be counted." 3 U.S.C. § 15.

72. Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act also violates the Electors Clause by usurping the exclusive and plenary authority of State Legislatures to determine the manner of appointing Presidential Electors and gives that authority instead to the State's Executive.

PRAYER FOR RELIEF

73. Accordingly, Plaintiffs respectfully request that this Court issue a judgment that:
- A. Declares that Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act, 3 U.S.C. §§5 and 15, is unconstitutional because it violates the Twelfth Amendment on its face, Amend. XII, Constitution;
  - B. Declares that Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act, 3 U.S.C. §§5 and 15, is unconstitutional because it violates the Electors Clause. U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1, cl. 1;
  - C. Declares that Vice-President Pence, in his capacity as President of Senate and Presiding Officer of the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress, is subject solely to the requirements of the Twelfth Amendment and may exercise the exclusive authority and sole discretion in determining which electoral votes to count for a given State;

- D. Enjoins reliance on any provisions of the Electoral Count Act that would limit Defendant's exclusive authority and his sole discretion to determine which of two or more competing slates of electors' votes are to be counted for President;
- E. Declares that, with respect to competing slates of electors from the State of Arizona or other Contested States, or with respect to objection to any single slate of electors, the Twelfth Amendment contains the exclusive dispute resolution mechanisms, namely, that (i) Vice-President Pence determines which slate of electors' votes shall be counted, or if none be counted, for that State and (ii) if no person has a majority, then the House of Representatives (and only the House of Representatives) shall choose the President where "the votes [in the House of Representatives] shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote," U.S. CONST. amend. XII;
- F. Declares that, also with respect to competing slates of electors, the alternative dispute resolution procedure or priority rule in 3 U.S.C. § 15, is null and void insofar as it contradicts and replaces the Twelfth Amendment rules above by with an entirely different procedure in which the House and Senate each separately "decide" which slate is to be counted, and in the event of a disagreement, then only "the votes of the electors whose appointment shall have been certified by the executive of the State ... shall be counted," 3 U.S.C. § 15;

G. Enjoins the Defendant from executing his duties on January 6th during the Joint Session of Congress in any manner that is insistent with the declaratory relief set forth herein, and

H. Issue any other declaratory judgments or findings or injunctions necessary to support or effectuate the foregoing declaratory judgment.

74. Plaintiffs have concurrently submitted a motion for a speedy summary proceeding under FRCP Rule 57 to grant the relief requested herein as soon as practicable, and for emergency injunctive relief under FRCP Rule 65 thereof consistent with the declaratory judgment requested herein on that same date.

Dated: December 27, 2020

Respectfully submitted,

Howard Kleinhendler
Howard Kleinhendler Esquire
NY Bar No. 2657120
369 Lexington Ave., 12th Floor
New York, New York 10017
Tel: (917) 793-1188
Fax: (732) 901-0832
Email: howard@kleinhendler.com

/s/ William Lewis Sessions
William Lewis Sessions
Texas Bar No. 18041500
Sessions & Associates, PLLC
14591 North Dallas Parkway, Suite 400
Dallas, TX 75254
Tel: (214) 217-8855
Fax: (214) 723-5346 (fax)
Email: lsessions@sessionslaw.net

Lawrence J. Joseph
DC Bar No. 464777
Law Office of Lawrence J. Joseph
1250 Connecticut Ave, NW, Suite 700-1A
Washington, DC 20036
Tel: (202) 355-9452
Fax: 202) 318-2254
Email: ljoseph@larryjoseph.com

Julia Z. Haller
DC Bar No. 466921
Brandon Johnson
DC Bar No. 491370
Defending the Republic
601 Pennsylvania Ave., NW
Suite 900
South Building
Washington, DC 20004
Tel: (561) 888-3166
Fax: 202-888-2162
Email: hallerjulia@outlook.com
Email: brandoncjohnson6@aol.com

COUNSEL FOR PLAINTIFFS
LOUIE GOHMERT, TYLER BOWYER,
NANCY COTTLE, JAKE HOFFMAN,
ANTHONY KERN, JAMES R. LAMON,
SAM MOORHEAD, ROBERT
MONTGOMERY, LORAIN
PELLEGRINO, GREG SAFSTEN, KELLI
WARD and MICHAEL WARD

COUNSEL

FAX: (202) 224-3391

MORGAN J. FRANKEL

DEPUTY COUNSEL

GRANT R. VINIK

ASSISTANT COUNSEL

THOMAS E. CABALLERO

ASSISTANT COUNSEL

United States Senate

OFFICE OF SENATE LEGAL COUNSEL

WASHINGTON, DC 20510-7250

December 28, 2020

By E-mail

The Honorable Jeffrey Bossert Clark
Acting Assistant Attorney General
Civil Division, Department of Justice
Washington, D.C. 20530

Re: Wisconsin Voters Alliance, et al. v. Vice President Michael Richard Pence, et al., Civil Action No. 1:20-cv-03791-JEB (D.D.C.)

Dear Mr. Clark:

We are writing to request that the Department of Justice represent Vice President Michael R. Pence, in his capacity as President of the Senate, and the United States Senate (collectively the "Senate defendants"), in the above-referenced lawsuit. Also named as defendants are the United States House of Representatives, the Electoral College, and governors and state legislative leaders from Pennsylvania, Michigan, Wisconsin, Georgia, and Arizona. All defendants are named in their official capacities only. We have already been in contact with John Griffiths, Brad Rosenberg, and Christopher Healy of the Federal Programs Branch, who are handling this matter.

Plaintiffs are four organizations that claim to promote election integrity, ten individual voters from the five above-listed states, and eight state legislators (two each from Michigan, Wisconsin, Georgia, and Arizona). Plaintiffs' complaint alleges that it is unconstitutional to count electoral votes from their states because the selection of presidential electors was not certified by the state legislature. They argue that the Constitution's Electoral Clause, U.S. Const. art. II, § 1, cl. 2, mandates that state legislatures certify each state's selection of electors, and that the votes of a state's electors cannot be counted until such certification takes place. Plaintiffs assert that 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6, and 15 and state laws that provide for or permit certification of presidential electors by other state officials are unconstitutional. In addition, plaintiffs claim that the failure to require such state legislature certification violates their rights under the Equal Protection Clause and the Due Process Clause.

For relief, plaintiffs request a declaration that state legislature certification of the selection of presidential electors is required by the Constitution and that federal and state laws allowing for electors to be certified by other state officials are unconstitutional. Plaintiffs also request that the Vice President, the Senate, and the House be enjoined from counting electoral votes from states whose electors have not been certified by the state legislature. Concurrent with their complaint, plaintiffs filed a motion for preliminary injunction requesting that the court enjoin the state defendants from certifying Presidential electors who have not received state legislative certification and enjoin the Senate and House defendants from counting electoral votes from electors who have not received such certification.

While we have not received confirmation from the Vice President's counsel as to arguments to be made on the Vice President's behalf, we believe, as explained below, that the claims against the Senate are subject to dismissal for lack of standing, Speech or Debate Clause immunity, non-justiciability, and failure to state a claim as a matter of law. In addition, plaintiffs' motion for a preliminary injunction should be opposed for lacking any likelihood of success on the merits on those same grounds.

First, plaintiffs lack Article III standing because they have not alleged any concrete and particularized injury to themselves, but rather assert only they are injured by government officials not complying with the purported requirement of state legislature certification of presidential electors. Such alleged harm to their – and every other voter's – interest in the government's administration of electoral voting constitutes nothing more than a generalized grievance that is insufficient to demonstrate a cognizable injury for Article III standing. See Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 573-74 (1992) (Supreme Court has “consistently held that a plaintiff . . . claiming only harm to his and every citizen's interest in proper application of the Constitution and laws, and seeking relief that no more directly and tangibly benefits him than it does the public at large [] does not state an Article III case or controversy.”); Bognet v. Sec'y of the Commonwealth of Pa., 980 F.3d 336, 349 (3d Cir. 2020) (“When the alleged injury is undifferentiated and common to all members of the public, courts routinely dismiss such cases as ‘generalized grievances’ that cannot support standing. Such is the case here insofar as Plaintiffs . . . theorize their harm as the right to have government administered in compliance with the Elections Clause and Electors Clause.”).

Second, plaintiffs' claims against the Senate are barred by the Speech or Debate Clause, U.S. Const. art. I, § 6, cl. 1. That Clause affords Members of Congress an absolute immunity from all suits for damages, injunctions, or declaratory judgments arising out of actions regarding all “matters which the Constitution places within the jurisdiction of either House.” Gravel v. United States, 408 U.S. 606, 625 (1972); Doe v. McMillan, 412 U.S. 306, 311 (1973) (Clause protects “anything generally done in a session of the House by one of its members in relation to the business before it”) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted); Eastland v. U.S. Servicemen's Fund, 421 U.S. 491, 501 (1975). The Twelfth Amendment to the Constitution expressly commits to the Vice President (as President of the Senate), the Senate, and the House the responsibility to open the votes of presidential electors and tally those votes. The Senate's participation in such activity plainly constitutes a “matter[] which the Constitution places within the jurisdiction of either House,” Gravel, 408 U.S. at 625, and thus falls within the protection of the Clause.

Third, plaintiffs' challenge to the tallying of electoral votes by the Senate and House, presided over by the Vice President, raises a non-justiciable political question as it involves a matter textually committed by the Constitution to another branch. The Constitution assigns to the Senate and House the responsibility to tally electoral votes, and the courts may not intercede into that process.

Fourth, plaintiffs' constitutional claim – that the Electoral Clause requires the state legislature of each state to certify the selection of electors – fails to state a claim as a matter of law. The Constitution specifically provides that “[e]ach State shall appoint, in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a Number of Electors equal to the whole Number of Senators and Representatives to which the state may be entitled in the Congress[.]” U.S. Const. art. II, § 1, cl. 2. In providing discretion to state legislatures to determine the “manner” of appointment of their state’s presidential electors, the Constitution imposed no requirement that the legislature certify the selection of the electors. As the Supreme Court recently explained, Article II includes only the instruction to each State to appoint, in whatever way it likes, as many electors as it has Senators and Representatives (except that the State may not appoint members of the Federal Government). The Twelfth Amendment then tells electors to meet in their States, to vote for President and Vice President separately, and to transmit lists of all their votes to the President of the United States Senate for counting. Appointments and procedures and . . . that is all.

The Honorable Jeffrey Bossert Clark
December 28, 2020
Page 3

Chiafalo v. Washington, 140 S. Ct. 2316, 2324-25 (2019) (emphasis added). The Electors Clause imposes no requirement for state legislature certification of the selection of electors, and, therefore, plaintiffs’ complaint fails to state a claim as a matter of law.

We appreciate the assistance of the Department in this case. Please keep us apprised of its status, including providing us with drafts of any papers to be filed on the Senate defendants’ behalf, and let us know if there is anything we can do to assist in the defense.

Sincerely,

/s/ Thomas E. Caballero

Thomas E. Caballero

cc (by e-mail): The Honorable Michael R. Pence
The Honorable Mitch McConnell
The Honorable Charles Schumer
John Griffiths, Director, Federal Programs Branch, USDOJ
Brad Rosenberg, Assistant Director, Federal Programs Branch, USDOJ
Christopher Healy, Trial Attorney, Federal Programs Branch, USDOJ

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF TEXAS
TYLER DIVISION

LOUIE GOHMERT, TYLER BOWYER, NANCY
COTTLE, JAKE HOFFMAN, ANTHONY KERN,
JAMES R. LAMON, SAM MOORHEAD, ROBERT
MONTGOMERY, LORAIN PELLEGRINO, GREG
SAFSTEN, KELLI WARD and MICHAEL WARD,

Plaintiffs,

v.

THE HONORABLE MICHAEL R. PENCE, VICE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, in his official capacity,

Defendant.

Civil Action No. 6:20-cv-00660-JDK

(Election Matter)

PLAINTIFFS' EMERGENCY MOTION FOR EXPEDITED
DECLARATORY JUDGMENT AND EMERGENCY INJUNCTIVE RELIEF

COME NOW Plaintiffs, U.S. Rep. Louie Gohmert (TX-1), Tyler Bowyer, Nancy Cottle, Jake Hoffman, Anthony Kern, James R. Lamon, Sam Moorhead, Robert Montgomery, Loraine Pellegrino, Greg Safsten, Kelli Ward, and Michael Ward, by and through their undersigned counsel, and file this Motion for Expedited Declaratory Judgment and Emergency Injunctive Relief ("Motion"), and Memorandum of Law In Support Thereof, pursuant to Rules 57 and 65 of the FEDERAL RULES OF CIVIL PROCEDURE to request the following relief.

As explained in the Complaint, Plaintiffs seek an expedited declaratory judgment declaring that Sections 5 and 15 of the Electoral Count Act of 1887, PUB. L. NO. 49-90, 24 Stat. 373 (codified at 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 15), are unconstitutional because these provisions violate the Electors Clause and the Twelfth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1, cl. 1 & amend. XII. The Complaint and this Motion address a matter of urgent national concern that involves only issues of law—namely, a determination that Sections 5 and 15 of the Electoral Count Act violate the Electors Clause and the Twelfth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution—where the relevant facts concerning the Plaintiffs’ standing, the justiciability of Plaintiffs’ claims by this Court, and this Court’s ability to grant the relief requested are not in dispute.

Further, the purpose of this Complaint is a declaratory judgment regarding the rights and legal relations of Plaintiffs and of Defendant, namely, that Vice President Michael R. Pence, acting in his capacity as President of the Senate and Presiding Officer for the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress to count Arizona and other States’ electoral votes for choosing President, is free to exercise his exclusive authority and sole discretion under the Twelfth Amendment to determine which slate of electoral votes to count, or neither, and must disregard any provisions of the Electoral Count Act that conflict with the Twelfth Amendment, U.S. CONST. amend. XII.

Because the requested declaratory judgment will terminate the controversy arising from the conflict between the Twelfth Amendment and the Electoral Count Act, and the facts are not in dispute, it is appropriate for this Court to grant this relief in a summary proceeding without an evidentiary hearing or discovery. See FED. R. CIV. P. 57, Advisory Committee Notes. Accordingly, Plaintiffs request an expedited summary proceeding under Rule 57 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure to grant the relief requested herein no later than Thursday, December 31, 2020, and for emergency injunctive relief under FED. R. CIV. P. 65 consistent with the declaratory judgment requested herein on that same date. Plaintiffs style their motion as an emergency motion under Local Civil Rule 7(l) because there is not enough time before December 31 to move for an expedited briefing schedule under Local Civil Rule 7(e).

Plaintiffs adopt all allegations contained in their Complaint.

Plaintiffs respectfully request an opportunity for oral argument. A proposed Order is attached.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Table of Contents .....	iii
Table of Authorities .....	iv
Introduction .....	1
Facts .....	1
Argument .....	3
I. This court has jurisdiction for Plaintiffs’ claims .....	3
A. Plaintiffs have standing .....	3
1. Plaintiffs have suffered an injury in fact .....	4
2. The Defendant has caused Plaintiffs’ injuries. ....	7
3. This Court can redress Plaintiffs’ injuries. ....	9
4. Plaintiffs’ procedural injuries lower the constitutional bar for immediacy and redressability .....	11
B. The Speech or Debate Clause does not insulate the Vice President .....	12
C. Sovereign immunity does not bar this action .....	13
D. The political-question doctrine does not bar this suit .....	15
E. This case presents a federal question, and abstention principles do not apply .....	15
F. Plaintiffs are entitled to an expedited declaratory judgment. ....	16
II. Plaintiffs are entitled to an emergency injunctive relief .....	17
A. Plaintiffs have a substantial likelihood of success .....	17
1. Unconstitutional laws are nullities .....	18
2. The Electoral Count Act violates the Electors Clause and the Twelfth Amendment. ....	18
3. The Electoral Count Act violates the Constitution’s structural protections of liberty .....	22
B. Plaintiffs will suffer irreparable injury. ....	23
C. Plaintiffs need not demonstrate irreparable harm for declaratory relief .....	24
D. The balance of equities favors Plaintiffs .....	25
E. The public interest favors Plaintiffs .....	26
Conclusion .....	27

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

CASES

ACLU v. Ashcroft , 322 F.3d 240 (3d Cir. 2003).....	26
Baker v. Carr , 369 U.S. 186 (1962).....	6, 15,
Bond v. United States , 564 U.S. 211 (2011).....	11
Brown v. Maryland , 25 U.S. (12 Wheat.) 419 (1827) .....	18
Bush v. Gore , 531 U.S. 98 (2000).....	15
Carson v. Simon , 978 F.3d 1051 (8th Cir. 2020).....	6
Clinton v. New York , 524 U.S. 417 (1998) .....	12
Commissioner v. Shapiro , 424 U.S. 614 (1976) .....	24
Common Cause v. Biden , 748 F.3d 1280 (D.C. Cir. 2014) .....	12
Cook v. Gralike , 531 U.S. 510 (2001) .....	16
Ctr. for Biological Diversity v. United States EPA , 937 F.3d 533 (5th Cir. 2019).....	8
Davis v. Passman , 442 U.S. 228 (1979) .....	14
FEC v. Akins , 524 U.S. 11 (1998).....	10
Franklin v. Massachusetts , 505 U.S. 788 (1992).....	9
Harman v. Forssenius , 380 U.S. 528 (1965) .....	18
Heckler v. Mathews , 465 U.S. 728 (1984).....	10
Hurley v. Reed , 288 F.2d 844 (D.C. Cir. 1961) .....	24
Jackson Women’s Health Org. v. Currier , 760 F.3d 448 (5th Cir. 2014) .....	25
League of Women Voters of the United States v. Newby , 838 F.3d 1 (D.C. Cir. 2016).....	26
Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife , 504 U.S. 555 (1992) .....	4, 7, 11
Marine Chance Shipping v. Sebastian , 143 F.3d 216 (5th Cir. 1998).....	24
McPherson v. Blacker , 146 U.S. 1 (1892) .....	15
Minton v. St. Bernard Par. Sch. Bd. , 803 F.2d 129 (5th Cir. 1986) .....	12
Murphree v. Winter , 589 F. Supp. 374 (S.D. Miss. 1984).....	23
Nat’l Treasury Employees Union v. U.S. , 101 F.3d 1423 (D.C. Cir. 1996) .....	11
Obama for Am. v. Husted , 697 F.3d 423 (6th Cir. 2012).....	23
Pac. Frontier v. Pleasant Grove City , 414 F.3d 1221 (10th Cir. 2005) .....	26
Powell v. McCormack , 395 U.S. 486 (1969) .....	10, 12-13, 17-18
Reynolds v. Sims , 377 U.S. 533 (1964).....	23

Rowan Cos. v. Griffin , 876 F.2d 26 (5th Cir. 1989) .....	24
Russian Standard Vodka (USA), Inc. v. Allied Domecq Spirits &amp; Wine USA, Inc. , 523 F.Supp.2d 376 (S.D.N.Y. 2007).....	24
Sierra Club v. Glickman , 156 F.3d 606 (5th Cir. 1998) .....	8, 11
Simon v. Eastern Kentucky Welfare Rights Org. , 426 U.S. 26 (1976) .....	8
Synthetic Organic Chem. Mfrs. Ass'n v. Sec'y, Dep't of Health &amp; Human Servs. , 720 F.Supp. 1244 (W.D. La. 1989).....	8
Tel. &amp; Data Sys. v. FCC , 19 F.3d 42 (D.C. Cir. 1994).....	8
Tex. Democratic Party v. Benkiser , 459 F.3d 582 (5th Cir. 2006) .....	25-26
Tierney v. Schweiker , 718 F.2d 449 (D.C. Cir. 1983).....	24
Trump v. Wis. Elections Comm'n , No. 20-cv-1785, 2020 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 233765 (E.D. Wis. Dec. 12, 2020).....	6
United States v. Morrison , 529 U.S. 598 (2000) .....	18
United States v. Winstar Corp. , 518 U.S. 839 (1996).....	22
Verizon Md. Inc. v. Pub. Serv. Comm'n of Maryland , 535 U.S. 635 (2002).....	14
Washington v. Reno , 35 F.3d 1093 (6th Cir. 1994) .....	26
Webster v. Doe , 486 U.S. 592 (1988).....	25
Wesberry v. Sanders , 376 U.S. 1 (1964).....	6
Williams v. Brooks , 945 F.2d 1322 (5th Cir. 1991) .....	12
Winter v. Natural Resources Defense Council, Inc. , 555 U.S. 7 (2008).....	17
Wood v. Raffensperger , No. 20-14418, 2020 WL 7094866 (11th Cir. Dec. 5, 2020) .....	6

STATUTES

U.S. CONST. art. I, § 5, cl. 2 .....	23
U.S. CONST. art I, § 6, cl. 1 .....	12-13
U.S. CONST. art. I, § 7, cl. 3 .....	22
U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1, cl. 1.....	1, 6, 17-18, 21, 23, 26
U.S. CONST. art. III .....	3, 6-8, 10-11, 15
U.S. CONST. art. III, § 2 .....	15
U.S. CONST. amend. XII .....	passim
3 U.S.C. § 5.....	1-5, 14, 18-19, 21-22, 26
3 U.S.C. § 6.....	21
3 U.S.C. § 15.....	1, 4-5, 10-12, 14, 16, 19-21, 26
28 U.S.C. § 1331.....	3

28 U.S.C. §2201 .....	24
Electoral Count Act of 1887, PUB. L. NO. 49–90, 24 Stat. 373 .....	passim
ARIZ. REV. STAT. § 16-212 .....	6

RULES

FED. R. CIV. P. 57 .....	16, 24
FED. R. CIV. P. 57 Advisory Committee Notes .....	16

LEGISLATIVE HISTORY

2 M. Farrand, RECORDS OF THE FEDERAL CONVENTION OF 1787 (1911) .....	9
--	---

OTHER AUTHORITIES

10 Fed. Proc., L. Ed. §23:4 .....	24
A.B.A. Section of Admin. Law & Regulatory Practice, A Blackletter Statement of Federal Administrative Law , 54 ADMIN. L. REV. 1 (2002) .....	13
Louis L. Jaffee, The Right to Judicial Review I , 71 HARV. L. REV. 401 (1958) .....	13
Chris Land & David Schultz, On the Unenforceability of the Electoral Count Act , 13 Rutgers J.L. & Pub. Policy 340 (2016) .....	23
J. Story, 1 COMMENTARIES ON THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES § 627 (3d ed. 1858) .....	16
Laurence H. Tribe, Erog v. Hsub and Its Disguises: Freeing Bush v. Gore from Its Hall of Mirrors , 115 HARV. L. REV. 170 (2001) .....	22

INTRODUCTION

Plaintiffs, U.S. Representative Louie Gohmert (TX-1) (“Rep. Gohmert”), Tyler Bowyer, Nancy Cottle, Jake Hoffman, Anthony Kern, James R. Lamon, Sam Moorhead, Robert Montgomery, Loraine Pellegrino, Greg Safsten, Kelli Ward and Michael Ward seek an expedited declaratory judgment declaring that Sections 5 and 15 of the Electoral Count Act of 1887, PUB. L. NO. 49–90, 24 Stat. 373 (codified at 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 15), are unconstitutional because these provisions violate the Electors Clause and the Twelfth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1, cl. 1 & Amend. XII.

FACTS

The facts relevant to this motion are set forth in the Complaint and its accompanying exhibit are incorporated herein by reference. Plaintiffs present here only a summary.

The Plaintiffs include Rep. Louie Gohmert—a Member of the U.S. House of Representatives, representing Texas’s First Congressional District in both the current and the next Congress—who seeks to enjoin the operation of the Electoral Count Act to prevent a deprivation of his rights—and the rights of those he represents—under the Twelfth Amendment. The Plaintiffs also include the entire slate of Republican Presidential Electors for the State of Arizona, as well as an outgoing and incoming member of the Arizona Legislature. On December 14, 2020, pursuant to the requirements of applicable state laws, the Constitution, and the Electoral Count Act, the Plaintiff Arizona Electors, with the knowledge and permission of the Republican-majority Arizona Legislature, convened at the Arizona State Capitol, and cast Arizona’s electoral votes for President Donald J. Trump and Vice President Michael R. Pence. On the same date, the Republican Presidential Electors for the States of Georgia, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin met at their respective State Capitols to cast their States’ electoral votes for President Trump and Vice President Pence

(or in the case of Michigan, attempted to do so but were blocked by the Michigan State Police, and ultimately voted on the grounds of the State Capitol).

There are now competing slates of Republican and Democratic electors in five States with Republican majorities in both houses of their State Legislatures—Arizona, Georgia, Michigan, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin (i.e., the Contested States)—that collectively have 73 electoral votes, which are more than sufficient to determine the winner of the 2020 General Election. On December 14, 2020, in Arizona and the other Contested States, the Democratic Party’s slate of electors convened in the State Capitol to cast their electoral votes for former Vice President Joseph R. Biden and Senator Kamala Harris. On the same day, Arizona Governor Doug Ducey and Secretary of State Katie Hobbs submitted the Certificate of Ascertainment with the Biden electoral votes to the National Archivist pursuant to the Electoral Count Act.

Republican Senators and Republican Members of the House of Representatives have also expressed their intent to oppose the certified slates of electors from the Contested States due to the substantial evidence of voter fraud in the 2020 General Election. Multiple Senators and House Members have stated that they will object to the Biden electors at the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress. These public statements by legislators, combined with the fact that President Trump has not conceded and has given no indication that he will concede and political pressure from his nearly 75 million voters and other supporters, make it a near certainty that at least one Senator and one House Member will follow through on their commitments and invoke the (unconstitutional) Electoral Count Act’s dispute resolution procedures.

Defendant Vice President Pence, in his capacity as President of the Senate and Presiding Officer at the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress to select the next President, will be presented with the following circumstances: (1) competing slates of electors from the State of Arizona and the other Contested States, (2) that represent sufficient electoral votes (a) if counted, to determine the winner of the 2020 General Election, or (b) if not counted, to deny either President Trump or former Vice President Biden sufficient votes to win outright; and (3) objections from at least one Senator and at least one Member of the House of Representatives to the counting of electoral votes from one or more of the Contested States and thereby invoking the unconstitutional procedures set forth in Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act.

As a result, Defendant Vice President Pence will necessarily have to decide whether to follow the unconstitutional provisions of the Electoral Count Act or the Twelfth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution at the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress. This approaching deadline establishes the urgency for this Court to issue a declaratory judgment that Sections 5 and 15 of the Electoral Count Act are unconstitutional and provide the undisputed factual basis for this Court to do so on an expedited basis, and to enjoin Defendant Vice President Pence from following any Electoral Count Act procedures in 3 U.S.C. §§ 5 and 15 because they are unconstitutional under the Twelfth Amendment.

ARGUMENT

I. THIS COURT HAS JURISDICTION FOR PLAINTIFFS' CLAIMS.

Before entertaining the merits of this action, the Court first must establish its jurisdiction over the subject matter and the parties. This action obviously raises a federal question, 28 U.S.C. § 1331, so Plaintiffs establish below that this action presents a case or controversy for purposes of Article III and their entitlement to seek relief in this Court via this action.

A. Plaintiffs have standing.

Article III standing presents the tripartite test of whether the party invoking a court's jurisdiction raises an "injury in fact" under Article III: (a) a legally cognizable injury (b) that is both caused by the challenged action, and (c) redressable by a court. Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 561-62 (1992). The task of establishing standing varies, depending “considerably upon whether the plaintiff is himself an object of the action (or forgone action) at issue.” Id. at 561. If so, “there is ordinarily little question that the action or inaction has caused him injury, and that a judgment preventing or requiring the action will redress it.” Id. at 562. If not, standing may depend on third-party action:

When ... a plaintiff’s asserted injury arises from the government’s allegedly unlawful regulation (or lack of regulation) of someone else, much more is needed. In that circumstance, causation and redressability ordinarily hinge on the response of the regulated (or regulable) third party to the government action or inaction – and perhaps on the response of others as well.

Id. (emphasis in original). Here, Plaintiffs can assert both first-party and third-party injuries, with the showing for standing easier for the first-party injuries. Specifically, Vice President Pence’s action under the unconstitutional Electoral Count Act would have the effect of ratifying injuries inflicted—in the first instance—by third parties in Arizona.

1. Plaintiffs have suffered an injury in fact.

Plaintiffs have standing as a member of the United States House of Representatives, Members of the Arizona Legislature, and as Presidential Electors for the State of Arizona.

Rep. Louie Gohmert is a Member of the U.S. House of Representatives, representing Texas’s First Congressional District in both the current and the next Congress. Rep. Louie Gohmert requests declaratory relief from this Court to prevent action as prescribed by 3 U.S.C. § 5, and 3 U.S.C. §15 and to give the power back to the states to vote for the President in accordance with the Twelfth Amendment. Otherwise he will not be able to vote as a Congressional Representative in accordance with the Twelfth Amendment, and instead, his vote in the House, if there is disagreement, will be eliminated by the current statutory construct under the Electoral Count Act, or diluted by votes of the Senate and ultimately by passing the final determination to the state Executives.

In the event that objections occur leading to a vote in the House of Representatives, then under the Twelfth Amendment, on January 6, in the new House of Representatives, there will be twenty-seven states led by Republican majorities, and twenty states led by Democrat majorities, and three states that are tied. Twenty-six seats are required for a victor under the Twelfth Amendment, and further that, under the Twelfth Amendment, in the event neither candidate wins twenty-six seats by March 4, then the then-current Vice President would be declared the President. However, if the Electoral Count Act is followed, this one vote on a state-by-state basis in the House of Representatives for President simply would not occur and would deprive this Member of his constitutional right as a sitting member of a Republican delegation, where his vote matters.

The Twelfth Amendment specifically states that “if no person have such majority, then from the persons having the highest numbers not exceeding three on the list of those voted for as President, the House of Representatives shall choose immediately, by ballot, the President. But in choosing the President, the votes shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote.” The authority to vote with this authority is taken from the House of Representatives, of which Mr. Gohmert is a member, and usurped by statutory construct set forth in 3 U.S.C. § 5 and 3 U.S.C. §15. Therein the authority is given back to the state’s executive branch in the process of counting and in the event of disagreement – while also giving the Senate concurrent authority with the House to vote for President. As a result, the application of 3 U.S.C. § 5 and 3 U.S.C. §15 would prevent Rep. Gohmert from exercising his constitutional duty to vote pursuant for President to the Twelfth Amendment.

Prior to December 14, 2020, Plaintiff Arizona Electors had standing under the Electors Clause as candidates for the office of Presidential Elector because, under Arizona law, a vote cast for the Republican Party's President and Vice President is cast for the Republican Presidential Electors. See ARIZ. REV. STAT. § 16-212. Accordingly, Plaintiff Arizona Electors, like other candidates for office, “have a cognizable interest in ensuring that the final vote tally reflects the legally valid votes cast,” as “[a]n inaccurate vote tally is a concrete and particularized injury to candidates such as the Electors.” Carson v. Simon, 978 F.3d 1051, 1057 (8th Cir. 2020) (affirming that Presidential Electors have Article III and prudential standing under Electors Clause); see also Wood v. Raffensperger, No. 20-14418, 2020 WL 7094866, *10 (11th Cir. Dec. 5, 2020) (affirming that if Plaintiff voter had been a candidate for office “he could assert a personal, distinct injury” required for standing); Trump v. Wis. Elections Comm’n, No. 20-cv-1785, 2020 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 233765 at *26 (E.D. Wis. Dec. 12, 2020) (President Trump, “as candidate for election, has a concrete particularized interest in the actual results of the election.”). Plaintiffs suffer a “debasing” of their votes, which “state[s] a justiciable cause of action on which relief could be granted” Wesberry v. Sanders, 376 U.S. 1, 5-6 (1964) (citing Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186 (1962)).

The Twelfth Amendment provides as follows:

The electors shall meet in their respective states and vote by ballot for President and Vice President, one of whom, at least, shall not be an inhabitant of the same state with themselves; they shall name in their ballots the person voted for as President, and in distinct ballots the person voted for as Vice-President, and they shall make distinct lists of all persons voted for as President, and of all persons voted for as Vice-President, and of the number of votes for each, which lists they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the seat of the government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate.

U.S. CONST. amend. XII (emphasis added).

2. Plaintiffs' injuries are traceable to Defendant.

Rep. Gohmert faces imminent threat of injury that the Defendant will follow the unlawful Electoral Count Act and, in so doing, eviscerate Rep. Gohmert's constitutional right and duty to vote for President under the Twelfth Amendment. With injuries directly caused by a defendant, plaintiffs can show an injury in fact with "little question" of causation or redressability. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. at 561-62. Although the Defendant did not cause the underlying election fraud, the Defendant nonetheless will directly cause Rep. Gohmert's injury, which is causation—and redressability—under Defenders of Wild.

By contrast, the Arizona Electors suffer indirect injury vis-à-vis this Defendant. But for the alleged wrongful conduct of Arizona executive branch officials under color of law, the Plaintiff Arizona Electors would have been certified as the presidential electors for Arizona, and Arizona's Governor and Secretary of State would have transmitted uncontested votes for Donald J. Trump and Michael R. Pence to the Electoral College. The certification and transmission of a competing slate of Biden electors has resulted in a unique injury that only Plaintiff Arizona Electors could suffer, namely, having a competing slate of electors take their place and their votes in the Electoral College. While the Vice President did not cause Plaintiffs' initial injury—that happened in Arizona—the Vice President stands in the position at the Joint Session on January 6 to ratify and purport to make lawful the unlawful injuries that Plaintiffs suffered in Arizona. That is causation enough for Article III:

According to the USDA, the injury suffered by Sierra Club is caused by the independent actions (i.e., pumping decisions) of third party farmers, over whom the USDA has no coercive control. Although we recognize that causation is not proven if the injury complained of is the result of the independent action of some third party not before the court, this does not mean that causation can be proven only if the governmental agency has coercive control over those third parties. Rather, the relevant inquiry in this case is whether the USDA has the ability through various programs to affect the pumping decisions of those third party farmers to such an extent that the plaintiff's injury could be relieved.

Sierra Club v. Glickman, 156 F.3d 606, 614 (5th Cir. 1998) (interior quotation marks, citations, and alterations omitted, emphasis in original); Tel. & Data Sys. v. FCC, 19 F.3d 42, 47 (D.C. Cir. 1994); Synthetic Organic Chem. Mfrs. Ass'n v. Sec'y, Dep't of Health & Human Servs., 720 F.Supp. 1244, 1248 n.2 (W.D. La. 1989) ("any traceable injury will provide a basis for standing, even where it occurs through the acts of a third party").

When third parties inflict injury—even private third parties—that injury is traceable to government action if the injurious conduct “would have been illegal without that [governmental] action.” Simon v. Eastern Kentucky Welfare Rights Org., 426 U.S. 26, 45 n.25 (1976). As explained below, Vice President Pence stands ready to ratify Plaintiffs’ injuries via the unconstitutional Electoral Count Act, which is causation enough to enjoin his actions. Alternatively, “plaintiff’s injury could be relieved” within the meaning of Sierra Club v. Glickman if the Vice President rejected the Electoral Count Act as unconstitutional.

A procedural-rights plaintiff must also show that “fixing the alleged procedural violation could cause the agency to ‘change its position’ on the substantive action,” Ctr. for Biological Diversity v. United States EPA, 937 F.3d 533, 543 (5th Cir. 2019), which is easy enough here/ Under the Electoral Count Act, the “Blue” or “Biden” states have a bare House majority in the Congress that will vote on January 6. Under the Twelfth Amendment, however, the “Red” or “Trump” states have a 27-20-3 majority where each state delegation gets one vote in the House’s election of the President. That distinction satisfies both third-party causation and procedural-rights tests for Article III standing.

The Twelfth Amendment gives Defendant exclusive authority and sole discretion as to which set of electors to count, or not to count any set of electors. If no candidate receives a majority of electoral votes, then the President is to be chosen by the House, where “the votes shall be taken by States, the representation from each state having one vote.” U.S. CONST. amend. XII. If Defendant Pence instead follows the procedures in Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act, Plaintiffs’ electoral votes will not be counted because (a) the Democratic majority House of Representatives will not “decide” to count the electoral votes of Plaintiff Republican electors; and (b) either the Senate will concur with the House not to count their votes, or the Senate will not concur, in which case, the electoral votes cast by Biden’s electors shall be counted because the Biden slate of electors was certified by Arizona’s executive. Under the Constitution, by contrast, the Vice President counts the votes and—if the count is indeterminate—the vote proceeds immediately to the House for President and to the Senate for Vice President. See U.S. CONST. amend. XII.<sup>1</sup>

3. This Court can redress Plaintiffs’ injuries.

Even if this Court would lack jurisdiction to enjoin the Vice President, but see Sections I.B-I.C, infra (immunity does not bar this action), this Court’s authoritative declaration would provide redress enough. See Franklin v. Massachusetts, 505 U.S. 788, 803 (1992) (“we may assume it is substantially likely that the President and other executive and congressional officials would abide by an authoritative interpretation of the census statute and constitutional provision by the District Court, even though they would not be directly bound by such a determination”). The

---

<sup>1</sup> This intent that the Vice President count the votes is borne out by a unanimous resolution attached to the final Constitution that described the procedures for electing the first President (i.e., for the one time when there would not already be a sitting Vice President), stating in relevant part “that the Senators should appoint a President of the Senate, for the sole Purpose of receiving, opening and counting the Votes for President.” 2 M. Farrand, RECORDS OF THE FEDERAL CONVENTION OF 1787, at 666 (1911). For all subsequent elections, when there would be a Vice President to act as President of the Senate, the Constitution vests the opening and counting in the Vice President.

Electoral Count Act is blatantly unconstitutional in many respects, see Section I.A, infra, and “it is the province and duty of the judicial department to determine in cases regularly brought before them, whether the powers of any branch of the government, and even those of the legislature in the enactment of laws, have been exercised in conformity to the Constitution.” Powell v. McCormack, 395 U.S. 486, 506 (1969) (interior quotations omitted).

Even if Plaintiffs do not ultimately prevail under the process that the Twelfth Amendment requires, the relief requested would nonetheless redress their injuries from the unconstitutional Electoral Count Act process in two respects . First, with respect to seeking to follow the Twelfth Amendment procedure over that of 3 U.S.C. § 15, it would redress Rep. Gohmert’s procedural injuries enough to proceed under the correct procedure, even if they do not prevail substantively. FEC v. Akins, 524 U.S. 11, 25 (1998). Second, with respect to the Arizona Electors, it would redress their unequal-footing injuries to treat all rival elector slates the same, even if the House and not the electors choose the next President. Heckler v. Mathews, 465 U.S. 728, 739-40 (1984) (“when the right invoked is that to equal treatment, the appropriate remedy is a mandate of equal treatment, a result that can be accomplished by withdrawal of benefits from the favored class as well as by extension of benefits to the excluded class”) (citations and footnotes omitted, emphasis in original). In each respect, Article III does not require that Plaintiffs show that they will prevail in order to show redressability.

The declaratory relief that Plaintiffs request would redress their injuries enough for Article III and in the chart as set forth:

Event/Issue	3 U.S.C. § 15	Twelfth Amendment
One Congress purports to bind future Congresses	Yes	No
Rival slates of electors	Bicameral dispute resolution with no presentment; state executive breaks ties	Vice President counts; House and Senate respectively elect President and Vice President if inconclusive
Violates Presentment Clause	Yes	No
Role for state governors	Yes	No
House voters	Each member votes ( e.g. , CA gets 53 votes, ND gets 1)	Each state delegation votes ( e.g. , CA and ND get 1 vote)

As is plain from these material—and, here, dispositive—differences between the Twelfth Amendment and 3 U.S.C. § 15, the two provisions cannot be reconciled.

4. Plaintiffs’ procedural injuries lower the constitutional bar for immediacy and redressability.

Given that Plaintiffs suffer a concrete injury to their voting rights, Plaintiffs also can press their procedural injuries under the Electoral Count Act. For procedural injuries, Article III’s redressability and immediacy requirements apply to the procedural violation that will (or someday might) injure a concrete interest, rather than to the concrete future injury. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. at 571-72 & n.7. Specifically, the injuries that Plaintiffs assert affect the procedure by which the status of their votes will be considered, which lowers the thresholds for immediacy and redressability under this Circuit’s and the Supreme Court’s precedents. Id.; Glickman, 156 F.3d at 613 (“in a procedural rights case, ... the plaintiff is not held to the normal standards for [redressability] and immediacy”); accord Nat’l Treasury Employees Union v. U.S., 101 F.3d 1423, 1428-29 (D.C. Cir. 1996). Similarly, a plaintiff with concrete injury can invoke Constitution’s structural protections of liberty. Bond v. United States, 564 U.S. 211, 222-23 (2011).

Finally, voters from smaller states like Arizona suffer an equal-footing injury and a procedural injury vis-à-vis larger states like California because the Electoral Count Act purports to replace the process provided in the Twelfth Amendment. Under the Electoral Count Act, California has five times the votes that Arizona has, but under the Twelfth Amendment California and Arizona each have one vote. Compare 3 U.S.C. § 15 with U.S. CONST. amend. XII. That analysis applies in third-party injury cases. See Clinton v. New York, 524 U.S. 417, 433 & n.22 (1998) (unequal-footing analysis applies to indirect-injury plaintiffs); cf. id. at 456-57 (that analysis should apply only to equal-protection cases) (Scalia, J., dissenting). Nullification of a procedural protection and any related bargaining power is injury enough, even in third-party cases. Clinton, 524 U.S. at 433 & n.22.

B. The Speech or Debate Clause does not insulate the Vice President.

The Speech or Debate Clause provides that “Senators and Representatives” “shall not be questioned in any other Place” “for any Speech or Debate in either House”:

The Senators and Representatives ... for any speech or debate in either House, ... shall not be questioned in any other place.

U.S. CONST. art I, § 6, cl. 1. “Not everything a Member of Congress may regularly do is a legislative act within the protection of the Speech or Debate Clause,” Minton v. St. Bernard Par. Sch. Bd., 803 F.2d 129, 134-35 (5th Cir. 1986) (interior quotations omitted), because the “clause has been interpreted to protect only purely legislative activities,” Williams v. Brooks, 945 F.2d 1322, 1326 (5th Cir. 1991) (internal quotation marks omitted), which renders it inapposite here. Where it applies, the Clause poses a jurisdictional bar not only to a court reaching the merits but also to putting the defendant to the burden of putting up a defense. Powell, 395 U.S. at 502-03. But “Legislative immunity does not, of course, bar all judicial review of legislative acts,” Powell, 395 U.S. at 503, and the Speech or Debate Clause does not even apply—by its terms—to the Vice President in his role as President of the Senate or to the Joint Session on January 6.

First, the Clause does not protect the Vice President acting in his role as President of the Senate. See U.S. CONST. art I, § 6, cl. 1; cf. Common Cause v. Biden, 748 F.3d 1280, 1284 (D.C. Cir. 2014) (declining to decide whether or not the Speech or Debate Clause protects the Vice President). At best for the Vice President, the question is an open one, but Plaintiffs respectfully submit that the Constitution's plain language should govern: The Clause does not apply to the Vice President. Instead, as here, where an unprotected officer of the House or Senate implements an unconstitutional action of the House or Senate, the judiciary has the power to enjoin the officer, even if it would lack the power to enjoin the House, the Senate, or their Members. Powell, 395 U.S. at 505. In short, the Speech or Debate Clause does not protect Vice President Pence at all.

Second, even if the Speech or Debate Clause did protect the Vice President acting as President of the Senate for legislative activity in the Senate, the Joint Session on January 6 is no such action. See U.S. CONST. art I, § 6, cl. 1. This is an election, and the Vice President has no more authority to disenfranchise voters via unconstitutional means as any other person.

C. Sovereign immunity does not bar this action.

The Defendant is Vice President Pence named as a defendant in his official capacity as the Vice President of the United States. With respect to injunctive or declaratory relief, it is a historical fact that at the time that the states ratified the federal Constitution, the equitable, judge-made, common-law doctrine that allows use of the sovereign's courts in the name of the sovereign to order the sovereign's officers to account for their unlawful conduct (i.e., the rule of law) was as least as firmly established and as much a part of the legal system as the judge-made, common-law doctrine of federal sovereign immunity. Louis L. Jaffee, The Right to Judicial Review I, 71 HARV. L. REV. 401, 433 (1958); A.B.A. Section of Admin. Law & Regulatory Practice, A Blackletter Statement of Federal Administrative Law, 54 ADMIN. L. REV. 1, 46 (2002) (it is blackletter law that “suits against government officers seeking prospective equitable relief are not barred by the doctrine of sovereign immunity”).

In determining whether the doctrine of Ex parte Young avoids immunity, a court need only conduct a “straightforward inquiry into whether [the] complaint alleges an ongoing violation of federal law and seeks relief properly characterized as prospective.” Verizon Md. Inc. v. Pub. Serv. Comm’n of Maryland, 535 U.S. 635, 645 (2002) (citations omitted). That is enough to survive a motion to dismiss on jurisdictional grounds: “The inquiry into whether suit lies under Ex parte Young does not include an analysis of the merits of the claim[.]” Id. at 638. Sovereign immunity poses no bar to jurisdiction here.<sup>2</sup>

The prayer for injunctive relief—that the Vice President be restrained from enforcing 3 U.S.C. §5 and §15 in contravention of the Twelfth Amendment of the Constitution—to instead follow the Twelfth Amendment, clearly satisfies the “straightforward inquiry.” Plaintiffs request declaratory relief to prevent unconstitutional action under 3 U.S.C. § 5 and § 15 and to give the power back to the states to vote for the President in accordance with the Twelfth Amendment. Therefore, the Defendant should be enjoined from proceeding to certify or count dueling electoral votes under the unconstitutional dispute resolution procedures in 3 U.S.C. § 5 and § 15, and instead to follow the constitutional process as set forth in the Twelfth Amendment of the Constitution.

---

<sup>2</sup> Indeed, the sovereign immunity afforded a Member of Congress is co-extensive with the protections afforded by the Speech or Debate Clause. In all other respects, Members of Congress are bound by the law to the same extent as other persons. Davis v. Passman, 442 U.S. 228, 246 (1979) (“although a suit against a Congressman for putatively unconstitutional actions taken in the course of his official conduct does raise special concerns counseling hesitation, we hold that these concerns are coextensive with the protections afforded by the Speech or Debate Clause”).

D. The political-question doctrine does not bar this suit.

The “political questions doctrine” can bar review of certain issues that the Constitution delegates to one of the other branches, but that bar does not apply to constitutional claims related to voting (other than claims brought under the Guaranty Clause of Article IV, §4):

We hold that this challenge to an apportionment presents no nonjusticiable “political question.” The mere fact that the suit seeks protection of a political right does not mean it presents a political question. Such an objection “is little more than a play upon words.”

Baker, 369 U.S. at 209. As in Baker, litigation over political rights is not the same as a political question.

E. This case presents a federal question, and abstention principles do not apply.

Article III, § 2, of the Federal Constitution provides that, “The judicial Power shall extend to all Cases, in Law and Equity, arising under this Constitution, the Laws of the United States, and Treaties made, or which shall be made, under their Authority[.]” It is clear that the cause of action is one which “arises under” the Federal Constitution. Baker, 369 U.S. at 199. In Baker, the Plaintiffs alleged that, by means of a 1901 Tennessee statute that arbitrarily and capriciously apportioned the seats in the General Assembly among the State’s 95 counties and failed to reapportion them subsequently notwithstanding substantial growth and redistribution of the State’s population, they suffered a “debasement of their votes” and were thereby denied the equal protection of the laws guaranteed them by the Fourteenth Amendment. They sought, inter alia, a declaratory judgment that the 1901 statute is unconstitutional and an injunction restraining certain state officers from conducting any further elections under it. Id. The Baker line of cases recognizes that “that voters who allege facts showing disadvantage to themselves as individuals have standing to sue.”

The federal and constitutional nature of these controversies deprives abstention doctrines of any relevance whatsoever. First, state laws for the appointment of presidential electors are federalized by the operation of The Electoral Count Act of 1887. McPherson v. Blacker, 146 U.S. 1, 27 (1892); Bush v. Gore, 531 U.S. 98, 113 (2000) (Rehnquist, C.J., concurring) (“A significant departure from the legislative scheme for appointing Presidential electors presents a federal constitutional question.”). Second, “[i]t is no original prerogative of State power to appoint a representative, a senator, or President for the Union.” J. Story, 1 COMMENTARIES ON THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES § 627 (3d ed. 1858). Logically, “any state authority to regulate election to [federal] offices could not precede their very creation by the Constitution,” meaning that any “such power had to be delegated to, rather than reserved by, the States.” Cook v. Gralike, 531 U.S. 510, 522 (2001) (internal quotations omitted).

A more quintessentially federal question than which slate of electors will be counted under the 12th Amendment and 3 U.S.C. § 15 to elect the President and Vice President can scarcely be imagined.

F. Plaintiffs are entitled to an expedited declaratory judgment.

Under Rule 57, an expedited declaratory judgment is appropriate where, as here, it would “terminate the controversy” based on undisputed or relatively undisputed facts. See FED. R. CIV. P. 57, Advisory Committee Notes. The facts relevant to this controversy are not in dispute, namely: (1) there are competing slates of electors for Arizona and the other Contested States that have been or will be submitted to the Electoral College; (2) the Contested States collectively have sufficient (contested) electoral votes to determine the winner of the 2020 General Election—President Trump or former Vice President Biden; (3) legislators in Arizona and other Contested States have contested the certification of their State’s electoral votes by State executives, due to substantial evidence of voter fraud that is the subject of ongoing litigation and investigations; and

(4) Senators and Members of the House of Representatives have expressed their intent to challenge the electors and electoral votes certified by State executives in the Contested States.

As a result, Defendant Vice President Pence, in his capacity as President of the Senate and as the Presiding Officer for the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress will be have to decide between (a) following the requirements of the Twelfth Amendment, and exercising his exclusive authority and sole discretion in deciding which slate of electors and electoral votes to count for Arizona, or neither, or (b) following the distinct and inconsistent procedures set forth in Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act. The expedited declaratory judgment requested, namely, declaring that Section 5 and 15 of the Electoral Count Act are unconstitutional to the extent they conflict with the Twelfth Amendment and the Electors Clause, and that Defendant Pence may not follow these unconstitutional procedures, will terminate the controversy. Further, as discussed below, the requested declaratory judgment would also establish that Plaintiffs meet all of the requirements for any additional injunctive relief required to effectuate the declaratory judgment by enjoining Defendant Pence from violating the Twelfth Amendment.

II. PLAINTIFFS ARE ENTITLED TO EMERGENCY INJUNCTIVE RELIEF.

“A plaintiff seeking a preliminary injunction must establish that he is likely to succeed on the merits, that he is likely to suffer irreparable harm in the absence of preliminary relief, that the balance of equities tips in his favor, and that an injunction is in the public interest.” Winter v. Natural Resources Defense Council, Inc., 555 U.S. 7, 21 (2008). If this Court grants the requested declaratory judgment, then all elements required for injunctive relief will have been met.

A. Plaintiffs have a substantial likelihood of success.

The first—and most important—Winter factor is the likelihood of movants’ prevailing. Winter, 555 U.S. at 20. Plaintiffs are likely to prevail because this Court has jurisdiction for this action, see Section I, supra, and because the Electoral Count Act is blatantly unconstitutional.

1. Unconstitutional laws are nullities.

At the outset, if the Electoral Count Act violates the Constitution, the Electoral Count Act is a nullity:

[I]t is the province and duty of the judicial department to determine in cases regularly brought before them, whether the powers of any branch of the government, and even those of the legislature in the enactment of laws, have been exercised in conformity to the Constitution; and if they have not, to treat their acts as null and void.

Powell, 395 U.S. at 506 (interior quotations omitted, emphasis added). “Due respect for the decisions of a coordinate branch of Government demands that we invalidate a congressional enactment only upon a plain showing that Congress has exceeded its constitutional bounds.” United States v. Morrison, 529 U.S. 598, 607 (2000) (finding Congress exceeded its authority under the Commerce Clause in regulating an area of the law left to the States. “Constitutional deprivations may not be justified by some remote administrative benefit to the State.” Harman v. Forssenius, 380 U.S. 528, 542-43 (1965). Put simply, “that which is not supreme must yield to that which is supreme.” Brown v. Maryland, 25 U.S. (12 Wheat.) 419, 448 (1827). Although Brown arose in a federal-versus-state context, the same simple truth applies in a constitution-versus-statute context: the supreme enactment controls the lesser enactment.

2. The Electoral Count Act violates the Electors Clause and the Twelfth Amendment.

The requested expedited summary proceeding granting declaratory judgment will address the merits of Plaintiffs’ claims, which raise only legal issues as to whether the provisions of Sections 5 and 15 of the Electoral Count Act addressing the counting of electoral votes from competing slates of electors for a given state are in conflict with the Twelfth Amendment and the Electors Clause and are therefore unconstitutional. In other words, if the Court grants the requested relief, that holding and relief will be granted because the Court has found that these provisions of the Electoral Count Act are unconstitutional and that Plaintiffs have in fact succeeded on the merits.

Under 3 USC § 5, the Presidential electors of a state and their appointment by the State shall be conclusive:

If any State shall have provided, by laws enacted prior to the day fixed for the appointment of the electors, for its final determination of any controversy or contest concerning the appointment of all or any of the electors of such State, by judicial or other methods or procedures, and such determination shall have been made at least six days before the time fixed for the meeting of the electors, such determination made pursuant to such law so existing on said day, and made at least six days prior to said time of meeting of the electors, shall be conclusive, and shall govern in the counting of the electoral votes as provided in the Constitution, and as hereinafter regulated, so far as the ascertainment of the electors appointed by such State is concerned.

3 USCS § 5.

This statutory provision takes away the authority given to the Vice-President under the Twelfth Amendment in determining which electoral votes are conclusive. 3 U.S.C. §15 in relevant part states that both Houses, referencing the House of Representatives and the Senate, may concurrently reject certified votes, and further that if there is a disagreement, then, in that case, the votes of the electors who have been certified by the Executive of the State shall be determinative:

...When all objections so made to any vote or paper from a State shall have been received and read, the Senate shall thereupon withdraw, and such objections shall be submitted to the Senate for its decision; and the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall, in like manner, submit such objections to the House of Representatives for its decision; and no electoral vote or votes from any State which shall have been regularly given by electors whose appointment has been lawfully certified to according to section 6 of this title [3 USCS § 6] from which but one return has been received shall be rejected, but the two Houses concurrently may reject the vote or votes when they agree that such vote or votes have not been so regularly given by electors whose appointment has been so certified. If more than one return or paper purporting to be a return from a State shall have been received by the President of the Senate, those votes, and those only, shall be counted which shall have been regularly given by the electors who are shown by the determination mentioned in section 5 [3 USCS § 5] of this title to have been appointed, if the determination in said section provided for shall have been made, or by such successors or substitutes, in case of a vacancy in the board of electors so ascertained, as have been appointed to fill such vacancy in the mode provided by the laws of the State; but in case there shall arise the question which of two or more of such State authorities determining what electors have been appointed, as mentioned in section 5 of this title [3 USCS § 5], is the lawful tribunal of such State, the votes regularly given of those electors, and those only, of such State shall be counted whose title as electors the two Houses, acting separately, shall concurrently decide is supported by the decision of such State so authorized by its law; and in such case of more than one return or paper purporting to be a return from a State, if there shall have been no such determination of the question in the State aforesaid, then those votes, and those only, shall be counted which the two Houses shall concurrently decide were cast by lawful electors appointed in accordance with the laws of the State, unless the two Houses, acting separately, shall concurrently decide such votes not to be the lawful votes of the legally appointed electors of such State. But if the two Houses shall disagree in respect of the counting of such votes, then, and in that case, the votes of the electors whose appointment shall have been certified by the executive of the State, under the seal thereof, shall be counted. When the two Houses have voted, they shall immediately again meet, and the presiding officer shall then announce the decision of the questions submitted. No votes or papers from any other State shall be acted upon until the objections previously made to the votes or papers from any State shall have been finally disposed of.

3 U.S.C. § 15.

This expressly conflicts with the Twelfth Amendment which has already set what role the House and the Senate play in addressing the votes of electors:

The electors shall meet in their respective states and vote by ballot for President and Vice-President, one of whom, at least, shall not be an inhabitant of the same state with themselves; they shall name in their ballots the person voted for as President, and in distinct ballots the person voted for as Vice-President, and they shall make distinct lists of all persons voted for as President, and of all persons voted for as Vice-President, and of the number of votes for each, which lists they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the seat of the government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate;--The President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and the votes shall then be counted;--the person having the greatest number of votes for President, shall be the President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of electors appointed; and if no person have such majority, then from the persons having the highest numbers not exceeding three on the list of those voted for as President, the House of Representatives shall choose immediately, by ballot, the President. But in choosing the President, the votes shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote; a quorum for this purpose shall consist of a member or members from two-thirds of the states, and a majority of all the states shall be necessary to a choice. And if the House of Representatives shall not choose a President whenever the right of choice shall devolve upon them, before the fourth day of March next following, then the Vice-President shall act as President, as in the case of the death or other constitutional disability of the President. The person having the greatest number of votes as Vice-President, shall be the Vice-President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of electors appointed, and if no person have a majority, then from the two highest numbers on the list, the Senate shall choose the Vice-President; a quorum for the purpose shall consist of two-thirds of the whole number of Senators, and a majority of the whole number shall be necessary to a choice. But no person constitutionally ineligible to the office of President shall be eligible to that of Vice-President of the United States.

U.S. CONST. amend. XII. (emphasis added).

The Constitution is unambiguously clear that: “The President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and the votes shall then be counted” “... and if no person have such majority, then from the persons having the highest numbers not exceeding three on the list of those voted for as President, the House of Representatives [who] shall choose immediately, by ballot, the President. But in choosing the President, the votes shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote.” Whereas 3 U.S.C. §15 and the incorporated referenced to 3 U.S.C. §5 delegate the authority to the Executive of the State in the event of disagreement, in direct conflict with the Twelfth Amendment and directly taking the opportunity of Presidential Electors' competing slates from being counted.<sup>3</sup>

3. The Electoral Count Act violates the Constitution's structural protections of liberty.

The Electoral Count Act exceeds the power of Congress to enact because “one legislature may not bind the legislative authority of its successors,” United States v. Winstar Corp., 518 U.S. 839, 872 (1996), which is a foundational and “centuries-old concept,” id., that traces to Blackstone’s maxim that “Acts of parliament derogatory from the power of subsequent parliaments bind not.” Id. (quoting 1 WILLIAM BLACKSTONE, COMMENTARIES *90). “There is no constitutionally prescribed method by which one Congress may require a future Congress to interpret or discharge a constitutional responsibility in any particular way.” Laurence H. Tribe, Erog v. Hsub and Its Disguises: Freeing Bush v. Gore from Its Hall of Mirrors, 115 HARV. L. REV. 170, 267 n.388 (2001). Thus, the Electoral Count Act is a nullity because it exceeded the power of Congress to enact.

The Electoral Count Act also violates the Presentment Clause by purporting to create a type of bicameral order, resolution, or vote that is not presented to the President:

Every Order, Resolution, or Vote, to Which the Concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary (except on a question of Adjournment) shall be presented to the President of the United States; and before the Same shall take Effect, shall be approved by him, or being disapproved by him, shall be repassed by

---

<sup>3</sup> Similarly, 3 U.S.C. § 6 is inconsistent with the Electors Clause—which provides that electors “shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the seat of the government of the United States” the results of their vote, U.S. Const. art. II, § 1, cl. 2-3—because § 6 relies on state executives to forward the results of the electors’ vote to the Archivist for delivery to Congress. 3 U.S.C. § 6. Although the means of delivery are arguably inconsequential, the Constitution vests state executives with no role whatsoever in the process of electing a President. A state executive lends no official imprimatur to a given slate of electors under the Constitution.

two thirds of the Senate and House of Representatives, according to the Rules and Limitations prescribed in the Case of a Bill.

U.S. CONST. art. I, § 7, cl. 3 (emphasis added). The House and Senate cannot resolve the issues that the Electoral Count Act asks them to resolve without either a supermajority in both houses or presentment.

The Electoral Count Act similarly improperly restricts the authority of the House of Representatives and the Senate to control their internal discretion and procedures pursuant to Article I, Section 5 which provides that “[e]ach House may determine the Rules of its Proceedings ...” U.S. CONST. art. I, § 5, cl. 2. The Electoral Count Act also delegates tie-breaking authority to State executives (who have no agency under the Electors Clause or election amendments) when a State presents competing slates that Congress cannot resolve. As such, the Electoral Count Act also violates the non-delegation doctrine, the separation-of-powers and anti-entrenchment doctrines. See generally Chris Land & David Schultz, On the Unenforceability of the Electoral Count Act, 13 Rutgers J.L. & Pub. Policy 340, 364-377 (2016).

As indicated, Plaintiffs have standing to press these structural protections of liberty because Plaintiffs also suffer concrete injury through the debasement of their votes. See Section I.A.4, supra.

B. Plaintiffs will suffer irreparable injury.

Plaintiffs’ votes will be counted or not counted at the January 6 joint session. The failure to count a lawful vote is an irreparable injury. See, e.g., Obama for Am. v. Husted, 697 F.3d 423, 436 (6th Cir. 2012) (“A restriction on the fundamental right to vote . . . constitutes irreparable injury.”). Indeed, the deprivation of any fundamental right constitutes irreparable injury, Murphree v. Winter, 589 F. Supp. 374, 381 (S.D. Miss. 1984) (citing Elrod v. Burns, 427 U.S. 347, 373-74 (1976)), and voting rights are “a fundamental political right, because preservative of all rights.” Reynolds v. Sims, 377 U.S. 533, 561-62 (1964) (internal quotations omitted). Moreover, if the counting of votes proceeds under the Electoral Count Act, Plaintiffs’ votes will be adjudicated via an unconstitutional procedure, which also qualifies as irreparable harm: there will be no opportunity to revisit the issue. As with standing for procedural injuries, irreparable harm from a procedural violation requires an underlying concrete injury or due-process interest, which Plaintiffs have and which will be irretrievably lost if the Vice President proceeds under the Electoral Count Act. Under the circumstances, Plaintiffs’ procedural harms also are irreparable. Commissioner v. Shapiro, 424 U.S. 614, 629-30 (1976).

C. Plaintiffs need not demonstrate irreparable harm for declaratory relief.

“The traditional prerequisite for the granting of injunctive relief, demonstration of irreparable injury, is not a prerequisite to the granting of a declaratory relief” because the Declaratory Judgments Act “provides an adequate remedy and at law, and hence a showing of irreparable injury is unnecessary.” 10 FED. PROC., L. ED. §23 :4 (citing 28 U.S.C. § 2201 and Steffel v. Thompson, 415 U.S. 452 (1974)). “The existence of another adequate remedy does not preclude a declaratory judgment that is otherwise appropriate.” FED. R. CIV. P. 57. In fact, the central purpose of the Declaratory Judgments Act is to enable parties to adjudicate their rights without waiting until after the injury has occurred or damages have accrued. See, e.g., Russian Standard Vodka (USA), Inc. v. Allied Domecq Spirits & Wine USA, Inc., 523 F.Supp.2d 376, 381 (S.D.N.Y. 2007) (citing In re Combustion, 838 F.2d 35, 36 (2d Cir. 1988)).

In any event, the irreparable-harm requirement for injunctive relief does not apply to declaratory relief. The fact that another remedy would be equally effective affords no ground for declining declaratory relief: “Rule 57 ... expressly states that the availability of an alternative remedy does not prevent the district court from granting a declaratory judgment.” Marine Chance Shipping v. Sebastian, 143 F.3d 216, 218-19 (5th Cir. 1998); see also 28 U.S.C. §2201; Hurley v.

Reed, 288 F.2d 844, 848 (D.C. Cir. 1961); Tierney v. Schweiker, 718 F.2d 449, 457 (D.C. Cir. 1983). A prior formal or informal demand to the defendant is not a prerequisite to seeking declaratory relief, Rowan Cos. v. Griffin, 876 F.2d 26, 28 (5th Cir. 1989), and showing “irreparable injury... is not necessary for the issuance of a declaratory judgment.” Tierney, 718 F.2d at 457 (citing Steffel v. Thompson, 415 U.S. 452, 471-72 (1974)). Thus, even if not entitled to injunctive relief, Plaintiffs still would be entitled to declaratory relief.

The requested declaratory judgment would terminate the controversy, offer relief from uncertainty, and eliminate the need for Plaintiffs to suffer the irreparable harm from the certainty that their electoral votes would be disregarded that would occur if Defendant Vice President Pence were to count electoral votes, and resolve disputes regarding competing slates of electors, under the unconstitutional provisions of the Electoral Count Act, rather than the procedures set forth in the Twelfth Amendment.

D. The balance of equities favors Plaintiffs.

“Traditional equitable principles requiring the balancing of public and private interests control the grant of declaratory or injunctive relief in the federal courts.” Webster v. Doe, 486 U.S. 592, 604-05 (1988). The scope of requested injunctive relief—directing Defendant Pence to carry out his duties as President of the Senate and as Presiding Officer for the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress in compliance with the U.S. Constitution—is drawn as narrowly as possible and does not require Defendant Pence to take any affirmative action apart from those he is authorized to take under the Twelfth Amendment. Moreover, it is difficult to imagine how the relief requested, which expands rather than restricts Defendant’s discretion and authority, by eliminating facially unconstitutional restrictions on the same could cause any hardship to Defendant.

E. The public interest favors Plaintiffs.

The last stay criterion is the public interest. Where the parties dispute the lawfulness of government actions, the public interest collapses into the merits: “It is always in the public interest to prevent the violation of a party’s constitutional rights.” Jackson Women’s Health Org. v. Currier, 760 F.3d 448, 458 n.9 (5th Cir. 2014) (alterations omitted); cf. Tex. Democratic Party v. Benkiser, 459 F.3d 582, 595 (5th Cir. 2006) (“injunction serves the public interest in that it enforces the correct and constitutional application of Texas’s duly-enacted election laws”) League of Women Voters of the United States v. Newby, 838 F.3d 1, 12 (D.C. Cir. 2016) (“no public interest in the perpetuation of unlawful [government] action”); accord ACLU v. Ashcroft, 322 F.3d 240, 247 (3d Cir. 2003) (“the public interest [is] not served by the enforcement of an unconstitutional law”) (interior quotation omitted); Washington v. Reno, 35 F.3d 1093, 1103 (6th Cir. 1994) (recognizing “greater public interest in having governmental agencies abide by the federal laws”); Pac. Frontier v. Pleasant Grove City, 414 F.3d 1221, 1237 (10th Cir. 2005).

Here the declaratory and injunctive relief sought vindicates both Defendant Vice President’s plenary authority as President of the Senate and Presiding Officer to count electoral votes, as well as the constitutional rights of the Plaintiffs to have their electoral votes counted in the manner that the Constitution provides, the rights of the Arizona legislative Plaintiffs under the Electors Clause to appoint Presidential Electors for the State of Arizona, and the right of Rep Gohmert and those he represents to have their vote counted in the manner that the Twelfth Amendment provides.

CONCLUSION

Therefore, it is respectfully requested that the Court grant Plaintiffs' Motion and the Court grant a declaratory judgment declaring 3 U.S.C. §5 - §15 unconstitutional on its face for violating the specific delegated authorities of the Twelfth Amendment of the Constitution.

Dated: December 28, 2020

Respectfully submitted,

Howard Kleinhendler
Howard Kleinhendler Esquire
NY Bar No. 2657120
369 Lexington Ave., 12th Floor
New York, New York 10017
Tel: (917) 793-1188
Fax: (732) 901-0832
Email: howard@kleinhendler.com

/s/William L. Sessions
William Lewis Sessions
Texas Bar No. 18041500
Sessions & Associates, PLLC
14591 North Dallas Parkway, Suite 400
Dallas, TX 75254
Tel: (214) 217-8855
Fax: (214) 723-5346 (fax)
Email: lsessions@sessionslaw.net

Lawrence J. Joseph
DC Bar No. 464777
Law Office of Lawrence J. Joseph
1250 Connecticut Ave, NW, Suite 700-1A
Washington, DC 20036
Tel: (202) 355-9452
Fax: 202) 318-2254
Email: ljoseph@larryjoseph.com

Julia Z. Haller
DC Bar No. 466921
Brandon Johnson
DC Bar No. 491370
Defending the Republic
601 Pennsylvania Ave., NW
Suite 900
South Building
Washington, DC 20004
Tel: (561) 888-3166
Fax:
Email: hallerjulia@outlook.com
Email: brandoncjohnson6@aol.com

Counsel for Plaintiffs

CERTIFICATE OF CONFERENCE

I hereby certify that as counsel for Plaintiffs, I have complied with the meet and confer requirement in Local Rule CV-7(h) in the following respects: I have personally contacted and spoken this morning with Gregory F. Jacob, Counsel for Vice President Michael R. Pence, the Defendant. I have caused Mr. Jacob to receive a copy of the Complaint for Expedited Declaratory and Emergency Injunctive Relief and a duplicate unfiled copy of Plaintiffs' Emergency Motion for Expedited Declaratory Judgment and Emergency Motion for Injunctive Relief without the certificate of conference or certificate of service. Mr. Jacob, co-counsel Larry Joseph, and I discussed the legal merits of the foregoing motion at length. Mr. Jacob advised that he needed to consult with his client, who was absent from his office and on vacation, and would contact Mr. Joseph and me regarding Vice President Pence's position on the merits of the motion after conferring with his client. Counsel for Defendant Pence stated that he did not presently have authority to agree to or oppose the motion. In light of the emergency nature of this motion and the fact that the parties' counsel could not presently agree on the merits of the motion, undersigned counsel has concluded that the parties are presently at an impasse, leaving an open issue for the court to resolve. Undersigned counsel will immediately advise the Court of any change in the parties' positions.

Dated: December 28, 2020

William Lewis Sessions
Counsel for Plaintiffs

CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE

I hereby certify that on the date specified below, I electronically filed the foregoing motion (together with its accompanying proposed order) with the Clerk of the Court using the CM/ECF system. In addition, because counsel for the defendant has not yet filed an appearance, I served one true and correct copy via Federal Express, next-day delivery, on the defendant and on the United States Attorney for the Eastern District of Texas at the following addresses, with a courtesy copy via facsimile and/or email to the addresses specified:

Gregory F. Jacob
Counsel to the Vice President
Office of the Vice President
Eisenhower Executive Office Building
Washington, DC 20501
E-mail: gregory.f.jacob@ovp.eop.gov

Stephen J. Cox
United States Attorney
350 Magnolia Ave., Suite 150
Beaumont, Texas 77701
Tel. (409) 839-2538
Fax: (409) 839-2550
Email: stephen.j.cox@usdoj.gov

Dated: December 28, 2020

William Lewis Sessions
Counsel for Plaintiffs

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF TEXAS
TYLER DIVISION

LOUIE GOHMERT, TYLER BOWYER, NANCY
COTTLE, JAKE HOFFMAN, ANTHONY KERN,
JAMES R. LAMON, SAM MOORHEAD, ROBERT
MONTGOMERY, LORAIN PELLEGRINO, GREG
SAFSTEN, KELLI WARD and MICHAEL WARD,

Plaintiffs,

v.

THE HONORABLE MICHAEL R. PENCE, VICE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, in his official capacity,

Defendant.

Civil Action No. 6:20-cv-00660

(Election Matter)

[PROPOSED] ORDER GRANTING EMERGENCY INJUNCTIVE RELIEF

The Court has before it Plaintiffs' Emergency Motion for Expedited Declaratory Judgment and Emergency Motion for Injunctive Relief filed December 28, 2020 ("Motion") and the Plaintiffs' December 27, 2020 Complaint for Expedited Declaratory Judgment and Emergency Injunctive Relief ("Complaint") seeking:

1. A declaratory judgment finding that:
  - a. Sections 5 and 15 of the Electoral Count Act, 3 U.S.C. §§ 5 and 15, are unconstitutional insofar as they conflict with and violate the Electors Clause and the Twelfth Amendment, U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1, cl. 1 & amend. XII;
  - b. That Defendant Vice-President Michael R. Pence, in his capacity as President of Senate and Presiding Officer of the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress under the Twelfth Amendment, is subject solely to the requirements of the Twelfth Amendment and may exercise the exclusive authority and sole discretion in determining which electoral votes to count for a given State, and must ignore and may not rely on any provisions of the Electoral Count Act that would limit his exclusive authority and at his sole discretion to determine which of two or more competing slates of electors' votes are to be counted for President;

- c. That, with respect to competing slates of electors the State of Arizona or other Contested States, the Twelfth Amendment contains the exclusive dispute resolution mechanisms, namely, that (i) Vice-President Pence determines which slate of electors' votes shall be counted, or neither, for that State and (ii) if no person has a majority, then the House of Representatives (and only the House of Representatives) shall chose the President where "the votes [in the House of Representatives] shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote," U.S. CONST. amend. XII;
- d. That, also with respect to competing slates of electors, the alternative dispute resolution procedure or priority rule in 3 U.S.C. § 15, is null and void insofar as it nullifies and replaces the Twelfth Amendment rules above by with an entirely different procedure in which the House and Senate each separately "decide" which slate is to be counted, and in the event of a disagreement, then only "the votes of the electors whose appointment shall have been certified by the executive of the State ... shall be counted," 3 U.S.C. § 15; and

2. An order granting any other declaratory or injunctive relief necessary to support or effectuate the foregoing declaratory judgments.

The Court has reviewed the terms and conditions of the December 28, 2020 Motion and Complaint, and the Court's Declaratory Judgment issued December 31, 2020, granting the requested expedited declaratory judgments in Paragraphs 1(a)-1(d) above and for good cause shown IT IS HEREBY ORDERED THAT:

1. Defendant Vice President Michael R. Pence shall, in his capacity as President of the Senate and as Presiding Officer for the January 6, 2021 Joint Session of Congress ("Joint Session"), solely follow the terms of the Twelfth Amendment in counting the electoral votes at the Joint Session and any other proceedings addressing the counting of electoral votes for choosing the next President in connection with the 2020 General Election;
2. Defendant Vice President Pence shall not follow the provisions of Sections 5 or 15 of the Electoral Count Act that this Court has found to be unconstitutional and in conflict with the Twelfth Amendment, and in particular, Defendant Vice President Pence
  - a. Shall not "call for objections" from Senators or House Members following the reading of any certificate or paper from electors for a given State, and instead shall exercise his exclusive authority and sole discretion under the Twelfth Amendment to "count" the electoral votes for a given state, including the decision as to which of the competing slates of electors' electoral votes to count, or not to count, for that State;

- b. Shall not give any preference or priority in counting electors certified by the State's executive over any other slate of electors, and shall instead give effect to the provisions of the Electors Clause for electors appointed by the State Legislature in whatever manner indicated by that State's legislatures;
- c. Shall not submit any disputes between competing slates of electors to be resolved under the procedures set forth in Section 15 of the Electoral Count Act, nor as Presiding Officer shall he permit any such objections or disputes to interrupt the counting of electoral votes at the Joint Session or delegate his exclusive authority under the Twelfth Amendment to Congress to determine which electoral votes are to be counted; and
- d. If and only if neither President Trump nor former Vice President Biden fails to receive a majority of electoral votes at the Joint Session, is he relieved of his exclusive authority to count electoral votes for choosing the President, at which point he shall direct the House of Representatives to "choose immediately by ballot" the President where "the votes shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote," as required under the Twelfth Amendment.

SO ORDERED.

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

---

Wisconsin Voters Alliance, et al.,

Case No. _____

Plaintiffs,

v.

Motion for Preliminary Injunction

Vice President Michael Richard Pence, et al.,

Defendants.

---

MOTION

Plaintiffs Wisconsin Voters Alliance, et al., by and through undersigned counsel, hereby move this Court to issue a preliminary injunction enjoining Defendants from certifying Presidential electors who have not received state legislative post-election certification and from counting Presidential elector votes from Presidential electors who have not received state legislative post-election certification for the election of President and Vice President.

Under Local Rule 47(f), Plaintiffs request oral argument for this motion.

Dated: December 22, 2020

/s/ Erick G. Kaardal

Erick G. Kaardal (WI0031)
Special Counsel for Amistad Project of
Thomas More Society
Mohrman, Kaardal & Erickson, P.A.
150 South Fifth Street, Suite 3100
Minneapolis, Minnesota 55402
Telephone: (612) 341-1074
Facsimile: (612) 341-1076
Email: kaardal@mklaw.com
Attorneys for Plaintiffs

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

---

Wisconsin Voters Alliance, et al.,

Case No. _____

Plaintiffs,

v.

Vice President Michael Richard Pence, et al.,

Defendants.

---

Plaintiffs' Memorandum in Support of Motion for Preliminary Injunctive Relief

---

TABLE OF CONTENTS

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES .....	iv
INTRODUCTION.....	1
BACKGROUND.....	3
A. Defendants, except the constitutionally-required state legislatures, are involved in post-election certification of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors or counting of their ballots to elect the President and Vice President.....	3
B. None of the Presidential Electors certified by the Governors of the Defendant States received state legislative post-election certification; their votes should not be counted by Congress and the Vice President on January 6, 2021. ....	7
C. Federal and state court post-election Presidential election contests and recounts preclude state legislative post-election certification of Presidential votes and Presidential electors.....	8
1. The U.S. Supreme Court and Florida Supreme Court decisions in Bush v. Gore are examples of federal court and state court interference conflicting with a state legislature’s Article II post-election certification prerogatives. ....	8
2. The Defendant States have election contest or recount laws, which apply to Presidential elections. ....	9
3. In 2020, approximately thirty post-election lawsuits are filed in Defendants States regarding election official errors and improprieties. ....	9
4. In 2020, Texas sued Pennsylvania, Michigan, Wisconsin and Georgia in the U.S. Supreme Court to adjudicate election irregularities and improprieties. ....	9
D. The Defendants violate the Plaintiffs’ constitutionally-protected voting rights by certifying Presidential electors who have not received state legislative post-election certification and by counting their votes.....	10
E. This motion for preliminary injunction is filed to avoid a constitutional crisis.....	11
ARGUMENT.....	12
I. The D.C. Circuit applies a four-part test for granting a preliminary injunction.....	13
II. The Plaintiffs are likely to succeed on the merits. ....	13
A. Federal law—3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6, 15—and the state laws—Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B), Mich. Comp. Laws. § 168.46, Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166—are constitutionally unauthorized and they violate voters’ rights to state legislative post-election certifications.....	14

1. Voter rights are guaranteed under Article II to the state legislatures’ post-election certifications of their votes and of Presidential electors.....	14
2. Article II’s imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections requires that only the votes of Presidential electors who have received state legislative post-election certification count toward election of President and Vice President. ....	15
3. 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15 fail to constitutionally guarantee state legislative post-election certifications of votes and of Presidential electors.....	16
4. Congress lacks Congressional authority to enact 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15 which preempt constitutionally-mandated state legislative post-election certification of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors, violating voting rights related thereto.....	18
a. The textualist argument supports that the state legislatures, not Governors must conduct post-election certification of Presidential votes and of post-election certification of Presidential electors.....	18
b. The textual argument supports that 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15 are unconstitutional.....	22
c. Structuralist arguments also support that 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15 are unconstitutional.....	26
1) The Anti-Congress Principle .....	27
2) The Anti-Governors Principle .....	28
3) The Pro-State Legislatures Principle .....	29
4) Conclusion .....	30
5. The Defendant States violate Article II by their respective constitution and their respective state laws—Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B), Mich. Comp. Laws. § 168.46, Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166—by cancelling state legislatures out of post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors. ....	31
a. The Arizona Constitution and laws do not require state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors so their votes can be constitutionally counted by the federal Defendants—violating voters’ rights. ....	32
b. The Georgia Constitution and laws do not require state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors so their votes can be constitutionally counted by the federal Defendants—violating voters’ rights. ....	33

c.	The Michigan Constitution and laws do not require state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors so their votes can be constitutionally counted by the federal Defendants—violating voters’ rights. ....	33
d.	The Pennsylvania Constitution and laws do not require state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors so their votes can be constitutionally counted by the federal Defendants—violating voters’ rights. ....	34
e.	The Wisconsin Constitution and laws do not require state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors so their votes can be constitutionally counted by the federal Defendants—violating voters’ rights. ....	35
6.	The Presidential post-election court proceedings—like Bush v. Gore , the Texas original action and the thirty post-election lawsuits in Defendant States—are in constitutional error and unnecessarily politicize the federal and state courts. ....	36
III.	The Plaintiffs have standing as voters because the Defendants are violating their voting rights to state legislative post-election certifications of their votes and of Presidential electors and to only the votes of Presidential electors so certified being counted toward the election of President and Vice President. ....	36
IV.	The Plaintiffs are likely to suffer irreparable harm in the absence of preliminary relief. ....	42
V.	The balance of equities and the public interest tips in the Plaintiffs’ favor. ....	43
CONCLUSION.....		45

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Cases

Aamer v. Obama , 742 F.3d 1023 (D.C.Cir.2014).....	13
Anderson v. Celebrezze , 460 U.S. 780 (1983).....	41
Arizona v. California , 589 U. S. ____ (Feb. 24, 2020) .....	10
Arkansas Dairy Co-op Ass'n, Inc. v. U.S. Dep't of Agric. , 573 F.3d 815 (D.C. Cir. 2009) .....	43
Baker v. Carr , 369 U.S. 186 (1962).....	37
*Baten v. McMaster , 967 F.3d 345 (4th Cir. 2020) .....	14, 37
Burdick v. Takushi , 504 U.S. 428 (1992) .....	39
*Bush v. Gore , 531 U.S. 98 (2000) .....	8, 36
Clapper v. Amnesty Int'l USA , 568 U.S. 398 (2013) .....	36
Davis v. Pension Ben. Guar. Corp. , 571 F.3d 1288 (D.C.Cir.2009) .....	13
Dumonde v. U.S. , 87 Fed. Cl. 651 (Fed. Cl. 2009) .....	39
Garcia v. San Antonio Metropolitan Transit Authority , 469 U.S. 528 (1985).....	18
*Gill v. Whitford , 138 S. Ct. 1916 (2018) .....	37, 38, 40
Guttenberg v. Emery , 26 F.Supp.3d 88 (D.D.C. 2014) .....	42
Johnson v. FCC , 829 F.2d 157 (D.C. Cir. 1987).....	38
Lane County v. Oregon , 74 U.S. 71 (1869) .....	18
Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife , 504 U.S. 555 (1992) .....	36
Marbury v. Madison , 1 Cranch 137, 5 U.S. 137 (1803) .....	39
Mazurek v. Armstrong , 520 U.S. 968 (1997).....	13
McCulloch v. Maryland , 17 U.S. 316 (1819) .....	18
Mdewakanton Sioux Indians of Minn. v. Zinke , 255 F.Supp.3d 48 (D.D.C. 2017) .....	42
New York v. U.S. , 505 U.S. 144 (1992) .....	18
Newman v. U.S. of America ex rel Frixell , 238 U.S. 537 (1915) .....	2, 11, 44

Perez v. United States , 402 U.S. 146 (1971) .....	18
Purcell v. Gonzalez , 549 U.S. 1 (2006) .....	38
Reynolds v. Sims , 377 U.S. 533 (1964) .....	38
Sherley v. Sebelius , 644 F.3d 388 (D.C.Cir.2011) .....	13
Susan B. Anthony List v. Driehaus , 573 U.S. 149 (2014) .....	37
Timmons v. Twin Cities Area New Party , 520 U.S. 351 (1997) .....	39
United States v. Darby , 312 U.S. 100 (1941) .....	18
Wash. Metro. Area Transit Comm'n v. Holiday Tours, Inc. , 559 F.2d 841 (D.C.Cir.1977) .....	13
Wesberry v. Sanders , 376 U.S. 1 (1964) .....	39
Winter v. NRDC, Inc. , 555 U.S. 7 (2008) .....	42, 43

Constitutional Provisions

U.S. Constitution, Article I .....	23, 24, 26
U.S. Constitution, Article II .....	passim
U.S. Constitution, Article III .....	36, 37
Georgia Constitution of 1798 ( http://founding.com/founders-library/government-documents/american-state-and-local-government-documents/state-constitutions/georgia-constitution-of-1798/ ) (last visited: December 18, 2020) .....	7, 29

Statutes

3 U.S.C. § 5, 6 and 15 .....	passim
Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B) .....	passim
Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-672 .....	9, 36
D.C. Code § 16-3501 .....	2, 11, 43, 44
Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B) .....	passim
Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-521 .....	9, 36
Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.46 .....	passim
Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.862 .....	9, 36

25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166 ..... passim

25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3312 .....9, 36

25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3351 .....9, 36

Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) ..... passim

Wis. Stat. § 9.01 .....9, 36

INTRODUCTION

The Plaintiffs move for a preliminary injunction enjoining the federal Defendants and state Defendants from Pennsylvania, Michigan, Wisconsin, Georgia and Arizona (Defendant States) from certifying Presidential electors and counting their votes where the Presidential electors did not receive state legislative post-election certification as required by Article II.

Article II contains an imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections that state legislatures, every four years, may direct the manner of state appointment of Presidential electors:

He shall hold his office during the term of four years, and, together with the Vice President, chosen for the same term, be elected, as follows: Each state shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors, equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress: but no Senator or Representative, or person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States, shall be appointed an elector.

Specifically, the challenged federal and state laws<sup>1</sup> requiring Governor post-election certification of Presidential electors, currently considered as having full legal force and effect, have the legal consequence that the state legislatures, every four years, “may” NOT “direct” the “manner” of “appointing” the Presidential electors. Under this one constitutional imperative sentence, the state legislatures, not the Governors, have the constitutional prerogative to post-election certification. Absent the state legislative post-election certification of the Presidential electors, the federal Defendants cannot constitutionally count the votes of the Presidential electors from the Defendant States.

The Plaintiffs are voters who have constitutionally-protected voting rights to state legislative post-election certification regarding their votes for Presidential electors and constitutionally-protected voting rights that only the votes of Presidential electors who have received state legislative post-election certification be counted by the federal Defendants to elect the President and Vice President.

---

<sup>1</sup> 3 U.S.C. § 5, 6 and 15 and Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B), Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.46, Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166.

A preliminary injunction is necessary to avoid a constitutional crisis. The constitutional crisis may be caused, after the January 20, 2021 inauguration of the President and Vice President, by a Presidential candidate or Presidential electors filing a post-inaugural civil action for writ of quo warranto to oust the President and Vice President.<sup>2</sup> The U.S. District Court has jurisdiction over a post-inaugural ouster of the United States President and Vice President. Specifically, D.C. Code § 16-3501, et seq., authorizes the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia, in proper cases, instituted by proper officers or persons, to post-inaugural ouster of national officers of the United States including the President and Vice President of the United States. Newman v. U.S. of America ex rel Frizzell, 238 U.S. 537 (1915).

The Presidential candidate or Presidential electors could make two constitutional arguments against the votes the federal Defendants counted in the election of President and Vice President. First, U.S.C. § 5, 6 and 15 are unconstitutional because Congress does not have constitutional authority to assign post-election certification to the Governors as executives of the Defendant States and to direct Congress and the Vice President to count votes of Presidential electors who have not received state legislative post-election certification. Second, the Defendant States' state legislatures have unconstitutionally acquiesced to the federal laws by enacting state laws transferring post-election certification from the state legislatures to state executive branch officials: Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B) (Arizona Secretary of State), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B) (Georgia Secretary of State and Governor), Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.46 (Michigan State Board of Canvassers and Governor),

---

<sup>2</sup> The Epoch Times, "Electors in 7 states cast dueling votes for Trump" at https://www.theepochtimes.com/mkt\_app/electors-in-7-states-cast-dueling-votes-for-trump\_3620059.html (last visited: Dec. 18, 2020).

Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) (Wisconsin Elections Commission); and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166 (Secretary of Commonwealth and Governor).

The Plaintiffs agree with these constitutional arguments, but disagree about the wisdom of using the post-inaugural ouster procedure to litigate them. Waiting for the post-inaugural ouster creates an unnecessary constitutional crisis. Instead, the post-inaugural ouster should be the option of last resort.

Plaintiffs' motion for preliminary injunction is a better vehicle for this Court to adjudicate these constitutional claims in a timely way so that the constitutional provisions of the U.S. Constitution regarding Presidential electors, Article II and the Twelfth Amendment, are followed and a President and a Vice President are lawfully inaugurated on January 20, 2021.

BACKGROUND

A. Defendants, except the constitutionally-required state legislatures, are involved in post-election certification of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors or counting of their ballots to elect the President and Vice President.

Under 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15, each of the Defendants, except the state legislative leaders and their state legislatures, have a role to play in state post-election certification of Presidential votes, state post-election certification of a state's Presidential electors or counting of the Presidential Electors' votes. Under 3 U.S.C. § 15, "Congress shall be in session on the sixth day of January succeeding every meeting of electors. The Senate and House of Representatives shall meet in the Hall of the House of Representatives at the hour of 1 o'clock in the afternoon on that day." Under 3 U.S.C. § 15, Vice President Michael Richard Pence is the presiding officer on January 6, 2021: "and the President of the Senate shall be their presiding officer."

Vice President Pence, the U.S. Senate and the U.S. House of Representatives are Defendants who presume under 3 U.S.C. §§ 5 and 6, that each state's Presidential elector votes can be counted

because they are designated by the Governor of each Defendant State—even without state legislative post-election certification. 3 U.S.C. § 5 provides:

If any State shall have provided, by laws enacted prior to the day fixed for the appointment of the electors, for its final determination of any controversy or contest concerning the appointment of all or any of the electors of such State, by judicial or other methods or procedures, and such determination shall have been made at least six days before the time fixed for the meeting of the electors, such determination made pursuant to such law so existing on said day, and made at least six days prior to said time of meeting of the electors, shall be conclusive, and shall govern in the counting of the electoral votes as provided in the Constitution, and as hereinafter regulated, so far as the ascertainment of the electors appointed by such State is concerned.

3 U.S.C. § 6 provides:

It shall be the duty of the executive of each State, as soon as practicable after the conclusion of the appointment of the electors in such State by the final ascertainment, under and in pursuance of the laws of such State providing for such ascertainment, to communicate by registered mail under the seal of the State to the Archivist of the United States a certificate of such ascertainment of the electors appointed, setting forth the names of such electors and the canvass or other ascertainment under the laws of such State of the number of votes given or cast for each person for whose appointment any and all votes have been given or cast; and it shall also thereupon be the duty of the executive of each State to deliver to the electors of such State, on or before the day on which they are required by section 7 of this title to meet, six duplicate-originals of the same certificate under the seal of the State; and if there shall have been any final determination in a State in the manner provided for by law of a controversy or contest concerning the appointment of all or any of the electors of such State, it shall be the duty of the executive of such State, as soon as practicable after such determination, to communicate under the seal of the State to the Archivist of the United States a certificate of such determination in form and manner as the same shall have been made; and the certificate or certificates so received by the Archivist of the United States shall be preserved by him for one year and shall be a part of the public records of his office and shall be open to public inspection; and the Archivist of the United States at the first meeting of Congress thereafter shall transmit to the two Houses of Congress copies in full of each and every such certificate so received at the National Archives and Records Administration.

The Plaintiffs claim that the Federal Defendants' presumption is constitutionally incorrect; under Article II's imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections, Defendants Vice President Pence, the U.S. House of Representatives and the United States Senate can only open up and count Presidential elector ballots if the state legislature has affirmatively voted post-election to certify the Presidential electors; otherwise, the votes of the Presidential electors cannot be counted. The Plaintiffs claim that the Vice President and U.S. Congress act unconstitutionally in this Presidential election and future Presidential elections when they count votes of Presidential electors where the respective state legislature has not affirmatively voted in favor of post-election certification.

Similarly, the Defendant States' executives, Governor Tom Wolf of Pennsylvania, Governor Gretchen Whitmer of Michigan, Governor Tony Evers of Wisconsin, Governor Brian Kemp of Georgia, and Governor Doug Ducey of Arizona under 3 U.S.C. § 6 and their respective state's laws, have designated the Presidential electors based on the assumption that state executive branch certification is all that is required.

But, Governor Tom Wolf of Pennsylvania, Governor Gretchen Whitmer of Michigan, Governor Tony Evers of Wisconsin, Governor Brian Kemp of Georgia, and Governor Doug of Arizona are constitutionally mistaken because the designation by the Governor of each Defendant State cannot cure that the Presidential electors are without state legislative post-election certification. Until the state legislature certifies the Presidential votes and the Presidential electors, the respective Governor's designation under 3 U.S.C. § 6 and their respective state's laws have no legal effect. Absent the state legislative post-election certification required by Article II's imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections, the Governor's designation of Presidential electors has no legal effect because their votes cannot be counted by the Vice President, U.S. Senate and U.S. House of Representatives.

Finally, Article II's imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections requires the Defendants' state legislative leaders to act to vote on post-election certification of the Presidential electors. But, instead, the state legislatures unconstitutionally defer because of their respective state laws which are a perpetual and wholesale delegation of post-election certification to state executive branch officials—as has been done in Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B) (Arizona Secretary of State), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B) (Georgia Secretary of State and Governor), Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.46

(Michigan State Board of Canvassers and Governor), Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) (Wisconsin Elections Commission); and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166 (Secretary of Commonwealth and Governor).

The Plaintiffs claim that Article II’s imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections, and its non-delegation doctrine, permanently left it to the state legislatures to “direct” post-election certification of Presidential electors, not to delegate post-election certification, perpetually and in a wholesale fashion, to state executive branch officials as a ministerial duty.

In this way, the Defendant States’ legislative leaders, including Speaker Bryan Carter of the Pennsylvania House of Representatives, Senate Majority Leader Jake Corman of the Pennsylvania Senate, Speaker Lee Chatfield of the Michigan House of Representatives, Senate Majority Leader Mike Shirkey of the Michigan Senate, Speaker Robin Vos of the Wisconsin State Assembly, Senate Majority Leader Howard Marklein of the Wisconsin Senate, Speaker David Ralston of the Georgia House of Representatives, Senate President Pro Tempore Butch Miller of the Georgia Senate, Speaker Russell Bowers of the Arizona House of Representatives, and Senate Majority Leader Rick Gray of the Arizona Senate are violating their duties under the federal Constitution by not voting on post-election certification of the Presidential electors so their votes can constitutionally count.

State legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors is a part of federally-guaranteed voting rights.

Further, the state constitutions of the Defendant States fail to require the state legislature to meet for post-election certification of the Presidential electors in violation of state legislative constitutional duties under Article II’s imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections of the U.S. Constitution. Arizona’s, Georgia’s and Pennsylvania’s Constitutions have the state legislature adjourned until January 2021 subject to special sessions called by the Governor or state legislature. Arizona Const.; Georgia Const.; Pennsylvania Const. Michigan’s and Wisconsin’s Constitutions permit the state legislature to be in session, but do not require a joint session of the state legislature to affirmatively vote for post-election certification of Presidential electors. Michigan Const.; Wisconsin Const. By contrast, for example, the Georgia Constitution of 1798, Article IV, section 2, subsequently repealed, had clear procedures for state legislative certification of Presidential electors:

Sec. 2. All elections by the general assembly shall be by joint ballot of both branches of the legislature; and when the senate and house of representatives unite for the purpose of electing, they shall meet in the representative chamber, and the president of the senate shall in such cases preside, receive the ballots, and declare the person or persons elected. In all elections by the people the electors shall vote viva voce until the legislature shall otherwise direct.<sup>3</sup>

Each voter who votes—distinguishable from those who don’t—has a constitutionally-protected interest in state legislative post-election certification of their vote and of their state’s Presidential electors. The federal Defendants violate those voting rights by counting ballots of Presidential electors without the constitutionally-required state legislative post-election certifications. The state Defendants violate those voting rights by not complying with constitutionally-required state legislative post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors.

B. None of the Presidential Electors certified by the Governors of the Defendant States received state legislative post-election certification; their votes should not be counted by Congress and the Vice President on January 6, 2021.

On December 14, the Presidential electors for Biden and Trump met and voted in their Defendant States. The Presidential electors for Biden in the Defendant States are certified by state executive branch officials under 3 U.S.C. § 6 and the respective states’ election certification laws. Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B) (Arizona Secretary of State), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B) (Georgia Secretary of State and Governor), Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.46 (Michigan State Board of Canvassers and Governor), Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) (Wisconsin Elections Commission); and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166 (Secretary of Commonwealth and Governor). The Presidential electors for Trump are not certified in this way. But, neither the Presidential electors for Biden nor the Presidential electors for Trump in the Defendant States received a state legislative post-election affirmative vote for certification. The Presidential electors for Biden in the Defendant States voted for Biden as President and Harris as Vice President.<sup>4</sup> The Presidential electors for Trump in the Defendant States voted for Trump as President and Pence as Vice President. But, under Article II, none of these votes count because no Presidential electors have received state legislative post-election certification.

---

<sup>3</sup> Georgia Constitution of 1798 (<http://founding.com/founders-library/government-documents/american-state-and-local-government-documents/state-constitutions/georgia-constitution-of-1798/>) (last visited: December 18, 2020).

C. Federal and state court post-election Presidential election contests and recounts preclude state legislative post-election certification of Presidential votes and Presidential electors.

Federal and state court post-election Presidential election contests and recounts preclude the state legislatures' post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors. Under the Plaintiffs' interpretation of Article II, pre-election judicial proceedings are not a constitutional problem, but judicial post-election Presidential election contests and recounts conflict with the state legislatures' post-election certifications under Article II.

1. The U.S. Supreme Court and Florida Supreme Court decisions in Bush v. Gore are examples of federal court and state court interference conflicting with a state legislature's Article II post-election certification prerogatives.

The court decisions in Bush v. Gore reflect examples of federal court and state court proceedings conflicting with a state legislature's Article II post-election certification prerogatives. On December 12, 2000, the U.S. Supreme Court issued a decision in Bush v. Gore, 531 U.S. 98 (2000), settling a state court recount dispute in Florida's 2000 presidential election between George W. Bush and Al Gore. The U.S. Supreme Court decision allowed the previous vote certification made by Florida Secretary of State Katherine Harris to stand for George W. Bush, who thereby won

---

<sup>4</sup>The Epoch Times, "Electors in 7 states cast dueling votes for Trump" at https://www.theepochtimes.com/mkt\_app/electors-in-7-states-cast-dueling-votes-for-trump\_3620059.html (last visited: Dec. 18, 2020).

Florida's 25 electoral votes—and the Presidential election. Neither the court decisions, nor Florida law, included the Florida state legislature conducting post-election certifications of the Presidential vote and of the Presidential electors.

2. The Defendant States have election contest or recount laws, which apply to Presidential elections.

Similarly, the Defendant States have election contest or recount laws, which apply to Presidential elections—like Florida's laws did in 2000: Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-672; Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-521; Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.862; Wis. Stat. § 9.01; and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3351. The Defendant States' laws do not provide for the state legislatures to engage in post-election certifications. Interestingly, the Pennsylvania laws have a state legislative post-election certification process for its Governor and Lieutenant Governor elections. 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3312, et seq.

3. In 2020, approximately thirty post-election lawsuits are filed in Defendants States regarding election official errors and improprieties.

Approximately thirty post-election lawsuits regarding Pennsylvania, Michigan, Wisconsin, Georgia and Arizona election official errors and improprieties were filed.<sup>5</sup> The Complaint and its citations to the appendix detail allegations of Pennsylvania, Michigan, Wisconsin, Georgia and Arizona election official errors and improprieties. In Defendants' states, voter allegations exists which are the election officials' errors and improprieties exceed the razor-thin margins of Presidential contests.

4. In 2020, Texas sued Pennsylvania, Michigan, Wisconsin and Georgia in the U.S. Supreme Court to adjudicate election irregularities and improprieties.

On December 7, 2020, Texas filed an original action in the U.S. Supreme Court, Case No. 22O155, against Pennsylvania, Michigan, Wisconsin and Georgia for election irregularities and improprieties. On December 9, Missouri and 16 other states filed a motion for leave to file an amicus curiae brief in support of Texas. On December 10, U.S. Representative Mike Johnson and 105 other members submitted a motion for leave to file amicus brief in support of Texas. On December 11, the U.S. Supreme Court dismissed the original action in a text order:

---

<sup>5</sup>See "Postelection lawsuits related to the 2020 United States presidential election," found at https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Postelection\_lawsuits\_related\_to\_the\_2020\_United\_States\_presidential\_election#Wood\_v.\_Raffensperger (last visited: Dec. 15, 2020).

The State of Texas’s motion for leave to file a bill of complaint is denied for lack of standing under Article III of the Constitution. Texas has not demonstrated a judicially cognizable interest in the manner in which another State conducts its elections. All other pending motions are dismissed as moot. Statement of Justice Alito, with whom Justice Thomas joins: In my view, we do not have discretion to deny the filing of a bill of complaint in a case that falls within our original jurisdiction. See Arizona v. California, 589 U. S. ____ (Feb. 24, 2020) (Thomas, J., dissenting). I would therefore grant the motion to file the bill of complaint but would not grant other relief, and I express no view on any other issue.<sup>6</sup>

D. The Defendants violate the Plaintiffs’ constitutionally-protected voting rights by certifying Presidential electors who have not received state legislative post-election certification and by counting their votes.

The Defendants violate the Plaintiffs’ constitutionally-protected voting rights by recognizing Presidential electors who have not received state legislative post-election certification and by counting their votes. Under Article II’s imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections, Defendants can only certify Presidential electors and count their votes if they have received state legislative post-election certification—which none have.

The federal laws regarding the Presidential electors, 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15, are constitutionally unauthorized. Article II and the Twelfth Amendment of the Constitution establish a non-delegable process where at least state legislative post-election certification of the state’s Presidential electors is constitutionally required for Presidential elector votes to be counted in the election of the President and Vice President. In contradiction, the federal laws, 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and

---

<sup>6</sup> Plaintiffs agree that the State of Texas lacked standing, but the original action itself begs the question, “Is the U.S. Supreme Court the final adjudicator for certification of Presidential electors?” The Plaintiffs’ answer is no; the respective state legislatures are the final determiner of certification of Presidential electors—and, in a non-delegable way.

15, establish a different process where Presidential electors are designated by the Governor of each Defendant State without state legislative post-election certification—and, then, their votes are counted to elect the President and Vice President.

The Defendant States have legally acquiesced to the federal laws by enacting statutes transferring post-election certification from the state legislatures to state executive branch officials: Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B) (Arizona Secretary of State), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B) (Georgia Secretary of State and Governor), Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.46 (Michigan State Board of Canvassers and Governor), Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) (Wisconsin Elections Commission); and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166 (Secretary of Commonwealth and Governor). These state laws also violate Article II which establishes the state legislative prerogative to post-election certification of Presidential electors.

E. This motion for preliminary injunction is filed to avoid a constitutional crisis.

The Plaintiffs file this complaint to avoid a constitutional crisis that would be involved in a post-inaugural ouster of the United States President and Vice President under D.C. Code § 16-3501, et seq., which authorizes the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia, in proper cases, instituted by proper officers or persons, to oust national officers of the United States post-election, including the President and Vice President of the United States. Newman v. U.S. of America ex rel. Frizzell, 238 U.S. 537 (1915).

Instead, to avoid that post-inaugural constitutional crisis, the Plaintiffs as voters file this preliminary injunction motion against federal officials in the District of Columbia and Governors and state legislative leaders in Arizona, Georgia, Michigan, Pennsylvania and Wisconsin (“Defendant States”) requiring a constitutionally-compliant process for state-by-state post-election certification of Presidential electors and counting of their votes for the November 3, 2020 Presidential election and future elections.

ARGUMENT

The Plaintiffs as voters file this motion for preliminary injunction against federal officials in the District of Columbia and Governors and state legislative leaders in Arizona, Georgia, Michigan, Pennsylvania and Wisconsin (“Defendant States”) seeking a constitutionally-compliant process for state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors and counting of their votes prior to the Presidential and Vice Presidential inaugural on January 20, 2021.

Under Article II's imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections, Congress lacks legal authority to enact laws interfering with the state-by-state state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors as it has done with 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15. Analogously, under Article II's imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections, the state legislatures lack legal authority to enact state laws which are a perpetual and wholesale delegation of post-election certification to state executive branch officials—as they have done in Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B) (Arizona Secretary of State), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B) (Georgia Secretary of State and Governor), Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.46 (Michigan State Board of Canvassers and Governor), Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) (Wisconsin Elections Commission); and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166 (Secretary of Commonwealth and Governor). Article II's imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections, and its non-delegation doctrine, left it to the state legislatures to “direct” post-election certification of Presidential electors, not to delegate post-election certification, perpetually and in a wholesale fashion, to state executive branch officials as a ministerial duty. Under Article II's imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections, if there is no state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors in the Defendant States, then those Defendant States' Presidential electors' votes, not so certified, cannot be counted by the federal Defendants for the election of President and Vice President. So, the preliminary injunction should issue to require constitutional compliance.<sup>7</sup>

I. The D.C. Circuit applies a four-part test for granting a preliminary injunction.

A party seeking a preliminary injunction must establish (1) that he is likely to succeed on the merits, (2) that he is likely to suffer irreparable harm in the absence of preliminary relief, (3) that the balance of equities tips in his favor, and (4) that an injunction is in the public interest.” Aamer v. Obama, 742 F.3d 1023, 1038 (D.C.Cir.2014) (quoting Sherley v. Sebelius, 644 F.3d 388, 392 (D.C.Cir.2011)) (emphasis in text deleted). A preliminary injunction “is an extraordinary and drastic remedy, one that should not be granted unless the movant, by a clear showing, carries the burden of persuasion.” Mazurek v. Armstrong, 520 U.S. 968, 972 (1997) (quoting 11A C. Wright, A. Miller, & M. Kane, Federal Practice And Procedure § 2948 (2d ed.1995)) (emphasis in original).

II. The Plaintiffs are likely to succeed on the merits.

The Plaintiffs are likely to succeed on the merits. The D.C. Circuit has, in the past, followed the “sliding scale” approach to success on the merits, where “a court, when confronted with a case in which the other three factors strongly favor interim relief may exercise its discretion to grant a stay if the movant has made a substantial case on the merits.” Wash. Metro. Area Transit Comm’n v. Holiday Tours, Inc., 559 F.2d 841, 843 (D.C.Cir.1977). Under the sliding scale approach, “if the movant makes a very strong showing of irreparable harm and there is no substantial harm to the nonmovant, then a correspondingly lower standard can be applied for likelihood of success.” Davis v. Pension Ben. Guar. Corp., 571 F.3d 1288, 1292 (D.C.Cir.2009).

---

<sup>7</sup> For a review of the constitutional convention’s deliberations on selecting the president, see Neal R. Peirce and Lawrence D. Longley, The People’s President: The Electoral College in American History and the Direct Vote Alternative (1968; New Haven, 1981) at 10-30.

- A. Federal law—3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6, 15—and the state laws—Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B), Mich. Comp. Laws. § 168.46, Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166—are constitutionally unauthorized and they violate voters’ rights to state legislative post-election certifications.

The plaintiffs have voting rights under Article II guaranteeing state legislative post-election certification of their votes and of Presidential electors. See Baten v. McMaster, 967 F.3d 345, 352–53 (4th Cir. 2020) (voters who vote in Presidential elections have standing on claims of government causing disenfranchisement). 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6, 15, Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B), Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.46, Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166 are constitutionally unauthorized. The federal and state laws violate voters’ rights by preempting state legislative post-election certification of their Presidential votes and post-election certification of the Presidential electors. 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6, 15 also unconstitutionally allow counting of votes of Presidential electors who have not received the constitutionally-required state legislative post-election certification.

- 1. Voter rights are guaranteed under Article II to the state legislatures’ post-election certifications of their votes and of Presidential electors.

Article II guarantees to voters that the state legislature will vote on post-election certification of votes and post-election certification of Presidential electors and that only ballots of legislatively-certified Presidential electors will be counted for the election of President and Vice President. See Baten v. McMaster, 967 F.3d at 352–53 (4th Cir. 2020). It is part of the social contract embedded in the Constitution.

Specifically, Article II provides that the state legislature—not Congress, nor the Governors—shall be the deciding body for Presidential electors:

He shall hold his office during the term of four years, and, together with the Vice President, chosen for the same term, be elected, as follows: Each state shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors, equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress: but no Senator or Representative, or person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States, shall be appointed an elector.

Under Article II and the Tenth Amendment, the state legislatures' power to determine the manner of appointment of Presidential electors includes the power of post-election certification. Moreover, the state legislatures' choice for elections as the manner to appoint Presidential electors does not abrogate nor diminish the state legislatures' constitutional obligations to conduct post-election certification of their respective Presidential electors.

2. Article II's imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections requires that only the votes of Presidential electors who have received state legislative post-election certification count toward election of President and Vice President.

The purpose of Article II's imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections is for state legislatures to certify voters' Presidential votes in order to certify Presidential electors who cast ballots for President and Vice President—which are opened and counted by the federal Defendants. The voters in the Presidential elections are constitutionally-guaranteed that the state legislature, after the election, will certify their vote and, based on the Presidential vote returns, certify the Presidential electors. All Presidential election contests are to be heard by the state legislatures—not the federal courts nor the state courts. The constitutional protection of the state legislatures' constitutional prerogatives over selection of Presidential electors is that the Federal Defendants can only count the votes of the Presidential electors who have state legislative post-election certification; otherwise, constitutionally, the votes of Presidential electors without state legislative post-election certification do not count.

3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6, 15, Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B), Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.46, Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166 are also constitutionally unauthorized because the Federal Defendants count votes of Presidential electors who do not have state legislative post-election certification. The federal laws and state laws authorize an unconstitutional method for electing the President and Vice President. Because the federal laws are not constitutionally authorized, the threat of a post-inaugural ouster under D.C. Code 16-3501, et seq., is legally imminent.

3. 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15 fail to constitutionally guarantee state legislative post-election certifications of votes and of Presidential electors.

3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15 constitute significant federal regulation of the state appointment of Presidential electors and counting their votes for President and Vice President. Meanwhile, these federal laws fail to guarantee state legislative certifications of votes and of Presidential electors. Sections 5 and 6 set a deadline for the state executive branch officials and judges of December 8, 2020, to determine election controversies as to appointment of electors and designates the Governor of each state to communicate the appointment of the Presidential electors to the federal government. Section 5 sets the deadline as six days before the Electors meet to vote which was December 14, 2020:

If any State shall have provided, by laws enacted prior to the day fixed for the appointment of the electors, for its final determination of any controversy or contest concerning the appointment of all or any of the electors of such State, by judicial or other methods or procedures, and such determination shall have been made at least six days before the time fixed for the meeting of the electors, such determination made pursuant to such law so existing on said day, and made at least six days prior to said time of meeting of the electors, shall be conclusive, and shall govern in the counting of the electoral votes as provided in the Constitution, and as hereinafter regulated, so far as the ascertainment of the electors appointed by such State is concerned.

Section 6 designates the Governors, the executives of the states, to be the public officials to exclusively communicate the list of Presidential electors and their votes to the federal government:

It shall be the duty of the executive of each State, as soon as practicable after the conclusion of the appointment of the electors in such State by the final ascertainment, under and in pursuance of the laws of such State providing for such ascertainment, to communicate by registered mail under the seal of the State to the Archivist of the United States a certificate of such ascertainment of the electors appointed, setting forth the names of such electors and the canvass or other ascertainment under the laws of such State of the number of votes given or cast for each person for whose appointment any and all votes have been given or cast; and it shall also thereupon be the duty of the executive of each State to deliver to the electors of such State, on or before the day on which they are required by section 7 of this title to meet, six duplicate-originals of the same certificate under the seal of the State; and if there shall have been any final determination in a State in the manner provided for by law of a controversy or contest concerning the appointment of all or any of the electors of such State, it shall be the duty of the executive of such State, as soon as practicable after such determination, to communicate under the seal of the State to the Archivist of the United States a certificate of such determination in form and manner as the same shall have been made; and the certificate or certificates so received by the Archivist of the United States shall be preserved by him for one year and shall be a part of the public records of his office and shall be open to public inspection; and the Archivist of the United States at the first meeting of Congress thereafter shall transmit to the two Houses of Congress copies in full of each and every such certificate so received at the National Archives and Records Administration.

Section 15 contains procedures for the Vice President of the United States as President of the Senate, the U.S. Senate and the U.S. House of Representatives to meet on January 6 following the Presidential election and for counting the Presidential electors' votes from the respective states. There is nothing in section 15 stating that only the ballots of Presidential electors who have received state legislative post-election certification will be counted:

Congress shall be in session on the sixth day of January succeeding every meeting of the electors. The Senate and House of Representatives shall meet in the Hall of the House of Representatives at the hour of 1 o'clock in the afternoon on that day, and the President of the Senate shall be their presiding officer. Two tellers shall be previously appointed on the part of the Senate and two on the part of the House of Representatives, to whom shall be handed, as they are opened by the President of the Senate, all the certificates and papers purporting to be certificates of the electoral votes, which certificates and papers shall be opened, presented, and acted upon in the alphabetical order of the States, beginning with the letter A; and said tellers, having then read the same in the presence and hearing of the two Houses, shall make a list of the votes as they shall appear from the said certificates; and the votes having been ascertained and counted according to the rules in this subchapter provided, the result of the same shall be delivered to the President of the Senate, who shall thereupon announce the state of the vote, which announcement shall be deemed a sufficient declaration of the persons, if any, elected President and Vice President of the United States, and, together with a list of the votes, be entered on the Journals of the two Houses.

Thus, none of these federal laws—3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15—guarantee state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors before their votes are counted.

4. Congress lacks Congressional authority to enact 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15 which preempt constitutionally-mandated state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors, violating voting rights related thereto.

Two legal standards cover cases challenging Congress's constitutional authority to enact statutes. The first legal standard applies when the party claims an Act of Congress is not authorized by one of the powers delegated to Congress in Article I of the Constitution. See, e.g., Perez v. United States, 402 U.S. 146 (1971); McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U.S. 316 (1819).

The second legal standard applies when the party claims an Act of Congress invades the province of state sovereignty granted by an express constitutional provision or reserved by the Tenth Amendment. See, e.g., Garcia v. San Antonio Metropolitan Transit Authority, 469 U.S. 528 (1985); Lane County v. Oregon, 74 U.S. 71 (1869). "If a power is delegated to Congress in the Constitution, the Tenth Amendment expressly disclaims any reservation of that power to the States; if a power is an attribute of state sovereignty reserved by the Tenth Amendment, it is necessarily a power the Constitution has not conferred on Congress." New York v. U.S., 505 U.S. 144, 156 (1992) (citations omitted). It is in this sense that the Tenth Amendment "states but a truism that all is retained which has not been surrendered." United States v. Darby, 312 U.S. 100, 124 (1941).

The Plaintiffs here assert that the 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6, 15 is both constitutionally unauthorized and 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6, 15 invades the state legislature's power to post-election certifications of Presidential votes and Presidential electors granted by Article II and reserved by the Tenth Amendment. So, both legal standards apply.

a. The textualist argument supports that the state legislatures, not Governors must conduct post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors.

One Congressional researcher has defined judicial textualism:

Textualism is a mode of interpretation that focuses on the plain meaning of the text of a legal document. Textualism usually emphasizes how the terms in the Constitution would be understood by people at the time they were ratified, as well as the context in which those terms appear. Textualists usually believe there is an objective meaning of the text, and they do not typically inquire into questions regarding the intent of the drafters, adopters, or ratifiers of the Constitution and its amendments when deriving meaning from the text.<sup>8</sup>

The textualist argument supports that the state legislatures, not Governors, must conduct post-election certification of Presidential votes and post-election certification of Presidential electors.

The textualist argument in this memorandum is based on one sentence in Article II of the U.S. Constitution. The sentence has eighty-five words. The constitutional sentence provides:

He shall hold his office during the term of four years, and, together with the Vice President, chosen for the same term, be elected, as follows: Each state shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors, equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress: but no Senator or Representative, or person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States, shall be appointed an elector.

The Plaintiffs claim, based on this sentence, that post-election certification of Presidential votes and post-election certification of Presidential electors are state legislative decisions. In turn, the Plaintiffs claim that 3 U.S.C. § 5, 6 and 15 and state laws (such as Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B), Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.46, Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166) eviscerating these state legislative prerogatives, every four years, are unconstitutional.

Several textualist interpretative keys open up the relevant meanings of the constitutional text as interpreted by Plaintiffs. First, the constitutional sentence is an imperative sentence. Second, the imperative sentence requires the election of President and Vice President every “four years.” Third, every four years, the “state” appoints the Presidential electors. Fourth, every four years, “the legislature may “direct” the “manner” of appointing.

The constitutional sentence is an imperative sentence requiring that the President and Vice President “be elected” “every four years.” The sentence phrase “as follows” provides specific directions on how the Presidential election is to occur. This imperative sentence is an instruction to all constitutional actors identified—President, Vice President, U.S Congress, Presidential electors, states and state legislatures—and those not identified—Governors, federal judiciary and state judiciaries.

---

<sup>8</sup>Brandon J. Murrill, “Modes of Constitutional Interpretation” at 2, Congressional Research Service (Mar. 15, 2018).

The Plaintiffs focus on the imperative nature of the constitutional sentence to make their textualist interpretation. To begin, the imperative sentence, in relevant part, requires that all the constitutionally-identified actors—President, Vice President, U.S Congress, Presidential electors, states and state legislatures—conduct an election of President and Vice President every “four years.” This interpretation can hardly be disputed since that is what the text says. And, ever since its adoption, the United States has conducted, every four years, an election for President and Vice President. Consistently, the challenged federal and state laws—3 U.S.C. § 5, 6 and 15 and Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B), Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.46, Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166—all presume a Presidential election every four years.

Next, the imperative constitutional section requires that, every four years, the “state” appoints the Presidential electors. This interpretation also can hardly be disputed since that is what the text says. And, ever since its adoption, the states, every four years, have appointed Presidential electors for the purpose of electing a President and Vice President. Consistently, the challenged federal and state laws—3 U.S.C. § 5, 6 and 15 and Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B), Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.46, Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166—presume that the states, every four years, appoint Presidential electors for the purpose of electing a President and Vice President.

Finally, the imperative constitutional section requires that, every four years, “the legislature” may “direct” the “manner” of appointing of the Presidential electors. Plaintiffs claim that it is this aspect of the constitutional imperative sentence that is violated when the challenged federal and state laws--3 U.S.C. § 5, 6 and 15 and Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B), Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.46, Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166)—legally preclude state legislative post-election certification of Presidential votes and post-election certification of Presidential electors. Plaintiffs claim that, every four years, “the legislature must be involved in such post-election certification so that it may “direct” the “manner” of “appoint[ing]” of the Presidential electors—as the constitutional imperative sentence requires.

To be sure, in the previous sentence of this memorandum, the “-ing” at the end of “appoint[ing]” is in brackets because the word “appoint” is in the constitutional text not the word “appointing.” To explain, please engage in a thought experiment sympathetic to Plaintiffs’ position. Substitute “engage in appointing” for “appoint” in the constitutional sentence. Such substitution does not change the meaning of that part of the constitutional sentence. The phrase “every four years, the state shall appoint” has the same meaning as “every four years, the state shall engage in appointing.” However, such a substitution does confirm Plaintiffs’ constitutional argument. The substitution does not contradict any other part of the constitutional imperative sentence. The state legislature, every four years, may direct the manner of the state engaging in appointing the Presidential electors. So, the state legislatures, every four years, applies their respective parliamentary rules to the state appointments of Presidential electors. The federal laws and state laws which contradict with the state legislatures’ quadrennial prerogatives are constitutionally unauthorized.

To be balanced, a similar thought experiment sympathetic to the opposition should be tried. Now, substitute the phrase “have laws regarding appointment” for “appointment” in the constitutional sentence. Quickly, two contradictions arise. First, the first part of sentence “[The President] shall hold his office during the term of four years, and, together with the Vice President, chosen for the same term, be elected, as follows.” So, state laws contradict with the phrase that the states “have laws regarding appointment.” The contradiction is that the constitutional imperative sentence is the exclusive law requiring that every four years the Presidential elections shall occur “as follows”; so, state laws “directing” the “manner” of “appointing” the Presidential electors are constitutionally unauthorized. Second, the later part of the sentence “in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct” contradicts “have laws regarding appointment.” The contradiction is that the constitutional imperative sentence is the exclusive law requiring that every four years the Presidential elections shall occur “as follows” including the state legislature “may” “direct” the “manner” of “appointing” the Presidential electors. So, state laws “directing” the “manner” of “appointing” the Presidential electors are constitutionally unauthorized. Specifically, the challenged federal laws and state laws requiring Governor post-election certification of Presidential electors, currently considered as having full legal force and effect, have the legal consequence that the state legislatures, every four years, “may” NOT “direct” the “manner” of “appointing” the Presidential electors. Again, the state legislatures, not the Governors, have the constitutional prerogatives for post-election certification.

b. The textual argument supports that 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15 are unconstitutional.

The textual argument for unconstitutionality of 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15 is straightforward.<sup>9</sup> Under textualism, the Constitution’s text supports that the unconstitutionality of 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15 because they fail to guarantee voter’s rights to the state legislature’s post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors to vote for President and Vice President.

Congress neither has express constitutional authority nor implied constitutional authority to enact 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15. Further, the federal laws violate voter’s rights in Presidential elections because they interfere with state legislative post-election certifications of Presidential votes and Presidential electors and that only the votes of such certified Presidential electors may be counted in the election of President and Vice President.

---

<sup>9</sup> See, generally, Vasan Kesavan, Is the Electoral Count Act Unconstitutional, 80 N.C. L. Rev. 1653, 1696-1759 (2002).

First, Congress has no express constitutional authority to enact 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15 which regulate state appointment of Presidential electors and regulate counting Presidential elector votes to elect a President and Vice President. Article II puts state appointment of Presidential electors in the exclusive hands of the state legislatures every four years, “Each state shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct.” By contrast, Article II lacks the express grant of authority to Congress in Article I’s Elections Clause for Congressional elections:

The Times, Places and Manner of holding Elections for Senators and Representatives, shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by Law make or alter such Regulations, except as to the Places of chusing Senators.

There, the Constitution provides a power to Congress “to make or alter such [state] Regulations” by state in Article I. But, that Constitutionally-conferred power is absent in Article II.

Lacking express constitutional authority in Article II’s imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections, the only alternative for Congressional authority is an implied constitutional authority. The only candidates for the government’s implied constitutional authority would be Article I’s the Necessary and Proper Clause and Article II itself.

The first candidate for implied Congressional authority is the Necessary and Proper Clause. The Necessary and Proper Clause provides that Congress shall have power “[t]o make all Laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into Execution the foregoing Powers, and all other Powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any Department or Officer thereof.” A careful parsing of the Necessary and Proper Clause reveals that there are three prongs of power. Under the Clause, Congress has power for carrying into execution (1) “the foregoing Powers,” (2) “all other Powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States," and (3) "all other Powers vested by this Constitution... in any Department or Officer thereof." None of these prongs support the constitutionality of 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15.

First, the phrase "foregoing Powers" refers to the enumerated powers of Article I. None of the enumerated Congressional powers in Article I cover the appointment of and voting by Presidential electors—which is covered by Article II. So, the “foregoing powers” requirement is not satisfied.

Second, the phrase "all other Powers vested by this Constitution... in any Department or Officer thereof" does not include Congress or Congressional members. Congress is not a Department. Members of Congress are not Officers. In fact, Congressional members are subject to impeachment by the House of Representatives and conviction by the Senate because they are not "civil Officers of the United States." See U.S. Const., art. II, § 4 ("The President, Vice President, and all civil Officers of the United States, shall be removed from Office on Impeachment for, and Conviction of, Treason, Bribery, or other high Crimes and Misdemeanors."). Furthermore, the Ineligibility Clause of Article I, Section 6 provides that "no Person holding any Office under the United States, shall be a Member of either House during his Continuance in Office." So the phrase "all other Powers vested by this Constitution... in any Department or Officer thereof" is not satisfied.

Third, the phrase "all other Powers vested by this Constitution... in any Department or Officer thereof" does not apply because the U.S. Congress is not a Department or Officer. The text of Article II's imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections does not employ the word “power” referencing to Congress. Article II's imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections does not vest “power” in Congress over state legislatures’ express power to determine the manner of appointment of Presidential electors every four years, including the post-election certification of Presidential electors. Therefore, the phrase "all other Powers vested by this Constitution... in any Department or Officer thereof" is not satisfied.

The second candidate for implied constitutional authority is Article II itself. But, similarly, Article II supports that it is the state legislatures' exclusive constitutional prerogative to determine the state's appointment of Presidential electors, including post-certification of the Presidential electors to vote for President and Vice President. Article II's imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections and the Twelfth Amendment do not grant Congress any "power" over the state legislatures' constitutional prerogatives over Presidential electors. Instead, these constitutional texts define a very limited and specific role for the Vice President, U.S. Senate and U.S. House of Representatives.

Congress's enactment of 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15 goes far beyond the constitutionally-prescribed roles for Vice President, U.S. Senate and the U.S. House of Representatives in Article II's imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections and the Twelfth Amendment. So, Article II's imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections and the Twelfth Amendment do not provide an implied constitutional authority for 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15.

Additionally, there is a textualist argument based on the negative implication. When the Constitution provides Congressional power regarding the Presidency, it says so—twice. First, Article II, Section 1, Clause 4 which provides that "[t]he Congress may determine the Time of chusing the Electors, and the Day on which they shall give their Votes; which Day shall be the same throughout the United States." Second, the Presidential Succession Clause of Article II provides that:

[i]n Case of the Removal of the President from Office, or of his Death, Resignation, or Inability to discharge the Powers and Duties of the said Office, the Same shall devolve on the Vice President, and the Congress may by Law provide for the Case of Removal, Death, Resignation or Inability, both of the President and Vice President, declaring what Officer shall then act as President, and such Officer shall act accordingly, until the Disability be removed, or a President shall be elected.

In both of these instances, the Constitution provides Congress with express authority over a limited, narrowly-prescribed aspect of Presidential elections. By negative implication, then, Article II's imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections and selection of Presidential electors every four years does not provide implied constitutional authority for Congress to regulate the state legislatures' post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors.

Finally, the constitutional text also provides an intertextual argument. When the Constitution provides a Congressional role in election, the Constitution says so. First, Article I's Elections Clause provides that "[t]he Times, Places and Manner of holding Elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by Law make or alter such Regulations, except as to the Places of chusing Senators." Second, The House Judging Clause provides that "[e]ach House shall be the Judge of the Elections, Returns and Qualifications of its own Members." In both instances, the Constitution provides Congress with express constitutional authority regarding elections involving Congress. However, regarding Presidential electors, there is constitutional silence—no express power is granted to Congress—because Article II empowers the state legislatures, exclusively, to govern the states' appointments of Presidential electors.

c. Structuralist arguments also support that 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15 are unconstitutional.

The interpretivist's structuralist arguments<sup>10</sup> also support the unconstitutionality of 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15.<sup>11</sup> One Congressional researcher has defined judicial structuralism:

Another mode of constitutional interpretation draws inferences from the design of the Constitution: the relationships among the three branches of the federal government (commonly called separation of powers); the relationship between the federal and state governments (known as federalism); and the relationship between the government and the people.<sup>12</sup>

---

<sup>10</sup> See, generally, Charles L. Black, Jr., Structure And Relationship In Constitutional Law (1969); Philip Bobbit, Constitutional Fate: Theory Of The Constitution 74-92 (1982).

<sup>11</sup> See, generally, Vasan Kesavan, Is the Electoral Count Act Unconstitutional, 80 N.C. L. Rev. 1653, 1759-1793 (2002).

The structure of Article II is to empower the state legislatures, not Congress or the state's Governors, to appoint the Presidential electors. 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15 violate Article II's structure because they empower Congress and the state's Governors in the Presidential elector process—excluding the state legislatures from the Presidential elector certification process.

The structure of the Article II for Presidential elections is anti-Congress, anti-Governors and pro-state legislatures. Article II's imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections puts the state legislatures in exclusive control of a state's appointment of Presidential electors. The state legislatures, who enact the state elections law applicable to federal elections, are identified to choose the manner of appointment of the Presidential electors. Congress and the Governors are to have no substantive role in the procedures of certifying Presidential electors to vote for President and Vice President. The Federal Defendants are just there to count the Presidential electors' votes of the Presidential electors who have received state legislative post-election certification.

Article II contains an anti-Congress principle, anti-Governors principle and a pro-state legislatures principle. These principles should be brought to bear on any interpretation of Article II and 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15. If these principles are applied, 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15 is constitutionally unauthorized.

1) The Anti-Congress Principle

The Constitution mistrusts Congress in Presidential elections. This is the anti-Congress principle of Article II. Congress is to have a limited, narrowly-prescribed role in Presidential elections. Congress is not to interfere with the state legislature directing the appointment of Presidential electors. Congress is not trusted in Article II.

---

<sup>12</sup> Brandon J. Murrill, “Modes of Constitutional Interpretation” at 2, Congressional Research Service (Mar. 15, 2018).

First, Article II's electoral college method of selecting a President and Vice President is a rejection of Congressional decision-making. The Constitution replaced the Articles of Confederation which authorized Congress to elect a President of the United States in Congress assembled—parliamentary style. Under the Articles of Confederation, John Hanson was the first President of the United States in Congress Assembled and served from November 5, 1781 to November 4, 1782. The Constitution replaced that parliamentary system with the Electoral College based on the anti-Congress principle of Article II. Article II prohibits Congress selecting the President.

Second, Article II's Elector Incompatibility Clause, stating that “no Senator or Representative, or Person holding an Office or Trust of Profit under the United States, shall be appointed as an Elector,” is a rejection of Congressional decision-making. The relevant purpose of the Elector Incompatibility Clause is to absolutely separate the Presidential electors from Congress. The Presidential electors are to be independent from Congress.

2) The Anti-Governors Principle

The Constitution mistrusts Governors in Presidential elections. This is the anti-Governors principle of Article II. The Governors are to have no role in Presidential selection. The states' Governors are not trusted in Article II. Article II's electoral college method of selecting a President and Vice President empowers the state legislatures, not the Governors.

First, Article II's imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections specifies “state legislatures”—not Governors nor “state executives”—to have the power over the appointment of Electors:

Each State shall appoint, in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a Number of Electors, equal to the whole Number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress...

So, one of the purposes of Article II's imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections was to exclude the states' Governors from having a role in Presidential elections.

Second, the Electors Clause specifies that the Presidential electors are to vote in their states and the Vice President and Congress, not the State's Governors, would open and count the Presidential electors' ballots for President and Vice President:

The Electors shall meet in their respective States, and vote by Ballot for two Persons, of whom one at least shall not be an Inhabitant of the same State with themselves. And they shall make a List of all the Persons voted for, and of the Number of Votes for each; which List they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the Seat of the Government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate. The President of the Senate shall, in the Presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the Certificates, and the Votes shall then be counted.

One of the purposes of the Electors Clause was also to exclude the states' Governors from having a role in opening and counting the Presidential electors' ballots.

3) The Pro-State Legislatures Principle

The Constitution trusts state legislatures in Presidential elections. This is the pro-state legislatures principle of Article II. The state legislatures, not Congress nor the states' Governors, are to direct the selection of Presidential electors. Article II trusts state legislatures to choose Presidential electors—even trusting them to directly elect them as was done by some state in the 1800's.<sup>13</sup>

First, Article II's imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections empowers “state legislatures”—not Congress, nor the State's Governors—to have the power over the appointment of Presidential electors:

He shall hold his office during the term of four years, and, together with the Vice President, chosen for the same term, be elected, as follows: Each State shall appoint, in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a Number of Electors, equal to the whole Number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress...

---

<sup>13</sup> See, e.g., Georgia Constitution of 1798, Art. IV, sec. 2 (<http://founding.com/founders-library/government-documents/american-state-and-local-government-documents/state-constitutions/georgia-constitution-of-1798/>) (last visited: Dec. 18, 2020).

So, one of the purposes of Article II's imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections was to empower state legislatures to appoint the Presidential electors.

Second, the Electors Clause specifies that the Presidential electors are to vote in their states and specifies the Vice President and Congress will have limited, defined roles of opening and counting the Presidential electors' ballots for the election of President and Vice President:

The Electors shall meet in their respective States, and vote by Ballot for two Persons, of whom one at least shall not be an Inhabitant of the same State with themselves. And they shall make a List of all the Persons voted for, and of the Number of Votes for each; which List they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the Seat of the Government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate. The President of the Senate shall, in the Presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the Certificates, and the Votes shall then be counted.

One of the purposes of the Electors Clause was to limit and define the Vice President's and Congress's role in the Electoral College process to ensure that the state legislature would have the exclusive power to appoint the Presidential electors.

4) Conclusion

Structuralist arguments based on Article II support the unconstitutionality of 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15. Article II contains an anti-Congress principle, an anti-Governors principle and a pro-state legislatures principle. The structure of Article II is to empower the state legislatures, not Congress or the Governors, to appoint the Presidential electors. 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15 violate Article II's structure because they empower Congress and the state's Governors in the Presidential elector certification and counting process—cancelling the state legislatures out of the Presidential certification and subsequent counting process.

- 5. The Defendant States violate Article II by their respective constitution and their respective state laws—Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B), Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.46, Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166—by cancelling state legislatures out of post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors.

Under Article II’s imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections, the Defendant States lack congressional authority to enact state laws which cancel their respective state legislatures out of post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors—as they have done. Arizona in Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B) has delegated post-election certifications to the Arizona Secretary of State. Georgia in Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B) has delegated post-election certifications to the Georgia Secretary of State and Governor. Michigan in Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.46 has delegated post-election certifications to the Michigan State Board of Canvassers and the Governor. Wisconsin in Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) has delegated post-election certifications to the Wisconsin Elections Commission. Pennsylvania in 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166 has delegated post-election certifications to the Secretary of Commonwealth and the Governor.

But, Article II’s imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections, and its non-delegation doctrine, empowers the state legislatures, every four years, to “direct” post-election certification of Presidential electors, not to delegate post-election certification, perpetually and in a wholesale fashion, to state executive branch officials as a ministerial duty. As detailed above, there are textual and structural arguments for these state statutes being unconstitutional. Therefore, the Court should hold Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B), Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.46, Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b), 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166 as an unconstitutional delegation of the state legislative prerogative of post-election certification of Presidential voters.

Notably, even the current state constitutions of the Defendant States fail to require the state legislature to meet for post-election certification of the Presidential electors in violation of state legislative constitutional duties under Article II’s imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections. Arizona’s, Georgia’s and Pennsylvania’s Constitutions have the state legislature adjourned until January 2021. Arizona Const.; Georgia Const.; Pennsylvania Const. Michigan’s and Wisconsin’s Constitutions permit the state legislature to be in session, but do not require a joint session of the state legislature to affirmatively vote for post-election certification of Presidential electors. Michigan Const.; Wisconsin Const.

a. The Arizona Constitution and laws do not require state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors so their votes can be constitutionally counted by the federal Defendants—violating voters’ rights.

The Arizona Constitution and laws do not require state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors so their votes can be constitutionally counted by the federal Defendants—violating voters’ rights. Under Article II’s imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections, Arizona lacks legal authority to enact laws which are a perpetual and wholesale delegation of post-election certification to state executive branch officials—as it has done. Arizona in Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B) has delegated certification of Presidential electors to the Arizona Secretary of State—and has deferred to the Arizona Governor’s certification of Presidential electors under 3 U.S.C. § 6.

But, Article II’s imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections, and its non-delegation doctrine, empowers the Arizona state legislature to “direct” post-election certification of Presidential electors, not to delegate post-election certification, perpetually and in a wholesale fashion, to state executive branch officials as a ministerial duty. As detailed above, there are textual and structural arguments for these state statutes being unconstitutional. Therefore, the Court should find that the Arizona Constitution and Arizona laws, including Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B), are an unconstitutional delegation of the Article II state legislative prerogatives of post-election certification of Presidential votes and post-election certification of Presidential electors.

b. The Georgia Constitution and laws do not require state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors so their votes can be constitutionally counted by the federal Defendants—violating voters’ rights.

The Georgia Constitution and laws do not require state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors so their votes can be constitutionally counted by the federal Defendants—violating voters’ rights. Under Article II’s imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections, Georgia lacks legal authority to enact state laws which are a perpetual and wholesale delegation of post-election certification to state executive branch officials—as it has done. Georgia in Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B), has delegated certification of Presidential electors to the Georgia Secretary of State and the Georgia Governor—consistent with the Georgia Governor’s certification of Presidential electors under 3 U.S.C. § 6.

But, Article II’s imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections, and its non-delegation doctrine, empowers the Georgia state legislature to “direct” post-election certification of Presidential electors, not to delegate post-election certification, perpetually and in a wholesale fashion, to state executive branch officials as a ministerial duty. As detailed above, there are textual and structural arguments for these state statutes being unconstitutional. Therefore, the Court should find that the Georgia Constitution and Georgia laws, including Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B), are an unconstitutional delegation of the Article II state legislative prerogatives of post-election certification of Presidential votes and post-election certification of Presidential electors.

c. The Michigan Constitution and laws do not require state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors so their votes can be constitutionally counted by the federal Defendants—violating voters’ rights.

The Michigan Constitution and laws do not require state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors so their votes can be constitutionally counted by the federal Defendants—violating voters’ rights. Under Article II’s imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections, Michigan lacks legal authority to enact state laws which are a perpetual and wholesale delegation of post-election certification to state executive branch officials—as it has done. Michigan in Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.46 has delegated certification of Presidential electors to Michigan State Board of Canvassers and Michigan Governor—consistent with the Michigan Governor’s certification of Presidential electors under 3 U.S.C. § 6.

But, Article II’s imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections, and its non-delegation doctrine, empowers the Michigan state legislature to “direct” post-election certification of Presidential electors, not to delegate post-election certification, perpetually and in a wholesale fashion, to state executive branch officials as a ministerial duty. As detailed above, there are textual and structural arguments for these state statutes being unconstitutional. Therefore, the Court should find that the Michigan Constitution and Michigan laws, including Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.46, are an unconstitutional delegation of the Article II state legislative prerogatives of post-election certification of Presidential votes and post-election certification of Presidential electors.

d. The Pennsylvania Constitution and laws do not require state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors so their votes can be constitutionally counted by the federal Defendants—violating voters’ rights.

The Pennsylvania Constitution and laws do not require state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors so their votes can be constitutionally counted by the federal Defendants—violating voters’ rights. Under Article II’s imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections, Pennsylvania lacks legal authority to enact state laws which are a perpetual and wholesale delegation of post-election certification to state executive branch officials—as it has done. Pennsylvania in 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166 has delegated certification of Presidential electors to the Secretary of Commonwealth and the Pennsylvania Governor—consistent with the Pennsylvania Governor’s certification of Presidential electors under 3 U.S.C. § 6.

But, Article II’s imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections, and its non-delegation doctrine, empowers the Pennsylvania state legislature to “direct” post-election certification of Presidential electors, not to delegate post-election certification, perpetually and in a wholesale fashion, to state executive branch officials as a ministerial duty. As detailed above, there are textual and structural arguments for these state statutes being unconstitutional. Therefore, the Court should find that the Pennsylvania Constitution and Pennsylvania laws, including 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166, are an unconstitutional delegation of the Article II state legislative prerogatives of post-election certification of Presidential votes and post-election certification of Presidential electors.

e. The Wisconsin Constitution and laws do not require state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors so their votes can be constitutionally counted by the federal Defendants—violating voters’ rights.

The Wisconsin Constitution and laws do not require state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors so their votes can be constitutionally counted by the federal Defendants—violating voters’ rights. Under Article II’s imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections, Wisconsin lacks legal authority to enact state laws which are a perpetual and wholesale delegation of post-election certification to state executive branch officials—as it has done. Wisconsin in Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) has delegated certification of Presidential electors to the Wisconsin Elections Commission—and has deferred to the Arizona Governor’s certification of Presidential electors under 3 U.S.C. § 6.

But, Article II’s imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections, and its non-delegation doctrine, empowers the Wisconsin state legislature to “direct” post-election certification of Presidential electors, not to delegate post-election certification, perpetually and in a wholesale fashion, to state executive branch officials as a ministerial duty. As detailed above, there are textual and structural arguments for these state statutes being unconstitutional. Therefore, the Court should find that the Wisconsin Constitution and Wisconsin laws, including Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b), are an unconstitutional delegation of the Article II state legislative prerogatives of post-election certification of Presidential votes and post-election certification of Presidential electors.

6. The Presidential post-election court proceedings—like Bush v. Gore, the Texas original action and the thirty post-election lawsuits in Defendant States—are in constitutional error and unnecessarily politicize the federal and state courts.

The Presidential post-election court proceedings—like Bush v. Gore, the Texas original action and the thirty post-election lawsuits in Defendant States—are in constitutional error and unnecessarily politicize the federal and state courts. Under Article II, all of those cases should be dismissed for lack of jurisdiction—and the plaintiffs should be instructed to file their election contests with their respective state legislatures. The Defendant States have election contest or recount laws, which apply to Presidential elections, but preclude state legislative certifications: Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-672; Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-521; Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.862; Wis. Stat. § 9.01; and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3351. Interestingly, the Pennsylvania laws have a state legislative post-election certification process for its Governor and Lieutenant Governor elections—but not for President and Vice President. 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3312, et seq. The Defendant States’ laws precluding state legislative post-election certification in Presidential election contests and recounts violates Article II.

III. The Plaintiffs have standing as voters because the Defendants are violating their voting rights to state legislative post-election certifications of their votes and of Presidential electors and to only the votes of Presidential electors so certified being counted toward the election of President and Vice President.

As voters, the Plaintiffs have legal standing to bring these constitutional claims to ensure that Presidential elections are constitutionally conducted by Defendants. Article III of the Constitution limits the jurisdiction of federal courts to “Cases” and “Controversies.” U.S. Const., Art. III, § 2. The doctrine of standing gives meaning to these constitutional limits by “identify[ing] those disputes which are appropriately resolved through the judicial process.”<sup>5</sup> Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560 (1992). “The law of Article III standing, which is built on separation-of-powers principles, serves to prevent the judicial process from being used to usurp the powers of the political branches.” Clapper v. Amnesty Int’l USA, 568 U.S. 398, 408 (2013). To establish Article III standing, a plaintiff must show (1) an “injury in fact,” (2) a sufficient “causal connection between the injury and the conduct complained of,” and (3) a “likel[i]hood” that the injury “will be redressed by a favorable decision.” Lujan, supra, at 560–561 (internal quotation marks omitted). Pre-enforcement constitutional challenges must meet the same standing requirements. See Susan B. Anthony List v. Driehaus, 573 U.S. 149, 157–58 (2014).

The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit recognized standing in Baten v. McMaster, 967 F.3d 345, 352–53 (4th Cir. 2020) for Plaintiffs alleging their votes for Democratic presidential candidates were, in effect, discarded under South Carolina's winner-take-all process. Id., citing Gill v. Whitford, — U.S. —, 138 S. Ct. 1916, 1920–21 (2018) (citing Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186, 206 (1962)) (contrasting the individual harm felt by a voter who casts his ballot in a gerrymandered district with the “generalized grievance” of one who disapproves of gerrymandering in his state but does not live in a gerrymandered district). The Fourth Circuit held this type of disenfranchisement “is the type of concrete, particularized injury that Article III contemplates.” Id. at 353.

Similarly, the Plaintiffs claim they have been disenfranchised. The Plaintiffs claim that Article II of the U.S. Constitution provides a voter a constitutional right to the voter’s Presidential vote being certified as part of the state legislature’s post-election certification of Presidential electors. Absence such certification, the Presidential electors’ votes from that state cannot be counted by the federal Defendants toward the election of President and Vice President. Because the Plaintiffs’ votes are not counted as part of the constitutionally-required state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors, the Plaintiffs are disenfranchised.

The Defendants’ disenfranchisement of the Plaintiffs’ voting rights is that the Plaintiffs’ votes are never properly certified by the state legislature, which based on that certification, certifies the Presidential electors whose votes are counted by the federal Defendants to elect the President and Vice President. The Defendants’ disenfranchisement of the Plaintiffs’ voting rights is caused by

3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6, 15, and the Defendants' state constitutions and state laws including Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B), Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.46, Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166.

When Defendants violate the Constitution as it relates to Presidential elections in the Defendant States, all voters in Presidential elections suffer an injury-in-fact caused by the Defendants. Voters in a Presidential election, in this instance, have an injury-in-fact different than the public because they voted and they thus had an interest that the election in which they voted is constitutionally-conducted. The same is true of future elections. Finally, the Court can redress the Plaintiffs' injuries by issuing a declaratory judgment and accompanying injunction to enjoin the Defendants' unconstitutional conduct.

Furthermore, as voters, each Plaintiff has a fundamental right to vote.<sup>14</sup> Thus, each Plaintiff has a recognized protectable interest in voting. As the U.S. Supreme Court has long recognized, a person's right to vote is "individual and personal in nature."<sup>15</sup> Thus, "voters who allege facts showing disadvantage to themselves as individuals have standing to sue" to remedy that disadvantage.<sup>16</sup> "Safeguarding the integrity of the electoral process is a fundamental task of the Constitution, and [the courts] must be keenly sensitive to signs that its validity may be impaired."<sup>17</sup> "Confidence in the integrity of our electoral processes is essential to the functioning of our participatory democracy."<sup>18</sup>

By federal and state election laws, the federal and state governments have agreed to protect the fundamental right to vote by maintaining the integrity of an election contest as fair, honest, and

---

<sup>14</sup> Reynolds v. Sims, 377 U.S. 533, 554–55, 562 (1964).

<sup>15</sup> Id. 377 U.S. at 561.

<sup>16</sup> Gill v. Whitford, 138 S. Ct. 1916, 1929 (2018).

<sup>17</sup> Johnson v. FCC, 829 F.2d 157, 163 (D.C. Cir. 1987).

<sup>18</sup> Purcell v. Gonzales, 549 U.S. 1, 4 (2006).

unbiased to maintain the structure of the democratic process.<sup>19</sup> The voters, in turn, agree to accept the government's announcement of the winner of an election contest, including Presidential elections, to maintain the integrity of the democratic system of the United States. "No right is more precious in a free country than that of having a voice in the election of those who make the laws under which, as good citizens, we must live."<sup>20</sup> But the right to vote is the right to participate in an electoral process that is necessarily structured to maintain the integrity of the democratic system."<sup>21</sup>

This constitutional arrangement constitutes a "social contract" between the voter and the government as an agreement among the people of a state about the rules that will define their government.<sup>22</sup> Social contract theory provided the background against which the Constitution was adopted. "Because of this social contract theory, the Framers and the public at the time of the revolution and framing conceived governments as resulting from an agreement among people to provide a means for enforcing existing rights."<sup>23</sup> "The aim of a social contract theory is to show that members of some society have reason to endorse and comply with the fundamental social rules, laws, institutions, and principles of that society. Put simply, it is concerned with public justification, i.e., 'of determining whether or not a given regime is legitimate and therefore worthy of loyalty.'"<sup>24</sup>

State legislative post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors is part of the social contract to protect the right to vote. Hence, the right to vote is intertwined with

---

<sup>19</sup> Timmons v. Twin Cities Area New Party, 520 U.S. 351, 364 (1997) ("States certainly have an interest in protecting the integrity, fairness, and efficiency of their ballots and election processes as means for electing public officials."). See also, e.g. Plts Amended Compl. ¶¶37–45.

<sup>20</sup> Burdick v. Takushi, 504 U.S. 428, 441 (1992) quoting Wesberry v. Sanders, 376 U.S. 1, 17 (1964).

<sup>21</sup> Id. (citations omitted). See also, e.g. Plts Amended Compl. ¶¶46–49.

<sup>22</sup> Dumonde v. U.S., 87 Fed. Cl. 651, 653 (Fed. Cl. 2009) ("Historically, the Constitution has been interpreted as a social contract between the Government and people of the United States," citing Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch 137, 5 U.S. 137, 176 (1803). See e.g. Plts Amended Compl. ¶50.

<sup>23</sup> Greg Serienko, Social Contract Neutrality and the Religion Clauses of the Federal Constitution, 57 Ohio St. L. J. 1263, 1269.

<sup>24</sup> Contemporary Approaches to the Social Contract, <https://plto.stanford.edu/entries/contractarianism-contemporary/> (last visited Dec. 8, 2020).

the integrity of an election process. The loss of the integrity of the election process renders the right to vote meaningless.<sup>25</sup> Here, the Defendant States' election irregularities and improprieties, including no state legislative post-election certification of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors, so exceed the razor-thin margins in the Defendant States to cast doubt on the razor-thin margins of victory and, thus, threaten the social contract itself.

The Article II social contract with the voters is, in part, the assurance of their state legislatures voting, based on voters' Presidential votes in that state, for post-election certification of Presidential electors. Arising from the social contract is the integrity of the election process to protect the voter's right to vote.

In the Defendant States enacting constitutions and state laws cancelling state legislatures out of post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors, the Defendant states have breached the social contract of Article II.

This social contract, protecting the individual right to vote, is what is personally at risk for the Plaintiffs in the outcome of this controversy.<sup>26</sup> As much as the government has a compelling interest in fair and honest elections with accompanying laws and regulations to ensure that objective to preserve the democratic system of government, so too the voter has an interest against state and local election officials violating the election laws in favor of a pre-determined result. Under the social contract, state legislative post-election certification of the Presidential vote is the voters' remedy against state and local election officials' shenanigans. The Defendant States have unconstitutionally deprived their voters of that remedy in their respective state legislatures.

---

<sup>25</sup> "Legitimacy is the crucial currency of government in our democratic age. Only elections that are transparent and fair will be regarded as legitimate...But elections without integrity cannot provide the winners with legitimacy, the losers with security and the public with confidence in their leaders and institutions." <https://www.kofiannanfoundation.org/supporting-democracy-and-elections-with-integrity/uganda-victory-without-legitimacy-is-no-victory-at-all/> (Last visited Dec. 8, 2020).

<sup>26</sup> Gill, 138 S.Ct. at 1923.

Furthermore, the voter has a compelling interest in the maintenance of a democratic system of government under the Ninth Amendment through the election process, beyond controversies regarding governmental attempts to interfere with the right to vote. Here, the voter did not enter into a social contract with the Governors and the state and local election officials to give them discretion for state election irregularities and improprieties—and to cancel post-election certifications by the state legislatures—regardless of how benign the public officials might be.

Instead, the voters' social contract is with the state legislatures—which must under Article II conduct post-election certification of all Presidential votes and of the Presidential electors. The Article II requirement of the state legislature casting post-election certification votes is the voters' constitutional “insurance policy” against the risk of Governors and state and local election officials engaging in election irregularities and improprieties in favor of a pre-determined outcome.

The voters have been willing to accept federal and state laws and regulations imposed upon a Presidential election process to serve the government's compelling interest in the integrity of that process. So, while it is fair for the government to create public governmental regulatory schemes to promote the compelling interests to protect the right to vote, and therefore, to protect a voter's right of associational choices under the First Amendment,<sup>27</sup> those rights are infringed when the Defendant States cancel the state legislatures out of post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of the Presidential electors.<sup>28</sup>

For Presidential elections, the Defendant States under Article II have no legal authority to cancel state legislatures out of post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors. Yet, they did. That is the harm for the voters. Article II's imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections that gives voters the right to have their respective state legislatures engage in post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors—not Governors nor state or local election officials.

---

<sup>27</sup> Anderson v. Celebrezze, 460 U.S. 780, 788–89 (1983).

<sup>28</sup> Id.

This lawsuit is not about voter fraud. The harm from the federal law—3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6, 15—and the state laws—including Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B), Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.46, Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166—is the loss of a voter remedy of state legislative post-election certifications required as a core governmental function under Article II.

In turn, the Federal Defendants’ acceptance of the Presidential electors’ votes without state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors breaches the social contract between the voter and the government—causing more injury to the voter.

Finally, these injuries to the voters are redressable by the Court. For example, the Court could grant the requested preliminary injunction requiring that the federal Defendants on January 6, 2021, only count the votes of Presidential electors if they have received state legislative post-election certification. Otherwise, the votes don’t count toward the election of President and Vice President.

IV. The Plaintiffs are likely to suffer irreparable harm in the absence of preliminary relief.

“Plaintiffs here must at least ‘demonstrate that irreparable injury is likely in the absence of an injunction.’” Guttenberg v. Emery, 26 F.Supp.3d 88, 101 (D.D.C. 2014)(quoting Winter v. NRDC, Inc., 555 U.S. 7, 22 (2008)). “Under Winter, even a ‘strong likelihood of prevailing on the merits’ cannot make up for a deficient showing of irreparable injury.” Id. (quoting Winter, 555 U.S. at 21–22). “Regardless of how the other three factors are analyzed, it is required that the movant demonstrate an irreparable injury.” Mdewakanton Sioux Indians of Minn. v. Zinke, 255 F.Supp.3d 48, 51, n.3 (D.D.C. 2017).

The Plaintiffs’ irreparable injury here is the disenfranchisement of Plaintiffs’ vote when the Presidential electors’ votes are counted without constitutionally-required state legislative post-election certifications of the Plaintiffs' votes and of the Presidential electors. The federal and state constitutions and laws are a violation of Article II's imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections. Further, without state legislative post-election certification, Plaintiffs will never have their votes counted in the state legislature.

Further, the Plaintiffs will never have the same opportunity to challenge in their state legislatures the election officials' irregularities and illegalities associated with the November 3, 2020 election. Allegedly, the election officials' irregularities and illegalities exceed the razor-thin margins in the Defendant States. Absent the injunction, the Plaintiffs will never have their proverbial "day" in the state legislature to challenge the Presidential election results.

In turn, the Plaintiffs will be subjected to an unlawfully-elected President because none of the Presidential electors received a state legislative post-election certification—as Article II requires.

In the absence of the preliminary injunction, the Plaintiffs and the nation will be subjected to a post-inaugural ouster of the sitting President and Vice President under D.C. Code § 16-3501, et seq. That proceeding and subsequent ouster will cause irreparable injury to the Plaintiffs—and the nation.

V. The balance of equities and the public interest tips in the Plaintiffs' favor.

The final two factors that the Court must consider are the balance of equities and the public's interest in the issuance of an injunction. See Arkansas Dairy Co-op Ass'n, Inc. v. U.S. Dep't of Agric., 573 F.3d 815, 821 (D.C. Cir. 2009). When "balanc[ing] the competing claims of injury," the Court must "consider the effect on each party of the granting or withholding of the requested relief." Winter, 555 U.S. at 24, 129 S.Ct. 365 (citations omitted). Additionally, "courts of equity should [have] particular regard for the public consequences in employing the extraordinary remedy of injunction." Id. (internal quotation marks and citations omitted).

The Plaintiffs file this preliminary injunction motion to avoid a constitutional crisis that would be involved in a post-inaugural ouster of the United States President and Vice President. D.C. Code § 16-3501, et seq., authorizes this Court, in proper cases, instituted by proper officers or persons, to post-election ouster of national officers of the United States including the President and Vice President of the United States. Newman v. U.S. of America ex rel Frizzell, 238 U.S. 537 (U.S. 1915).

Instead, to avoid that post-inaugural constitutional crisis, the Plaintiffs as voters file this preliminary injunction motion against federal officials in the District of Columbia and Governors and state legislative leaders in Arizona, Georgia, Michigan, Pennsylvania and Wisconsin requiring a constitutionally-compliant process for state-by-state post-election certification of Presidential electors and counting of their votes for the November 3, 2020 Presidential election and future elections.

The balancing of equities favors the Plaintiffs. Granting a preliminary injunction in this proceeding is better for everyone than a post-inaugural ouster. If the preliminary injunction is denied, the Plaintiffs lose something real and concrete: their voting rights are disenfranchised by an unconstitutional post-election certification process. The Plaintiffs also lose their post-election opportunity in their respective state legislatures to seek election integrity and protect their vote. On the other hand, the Defendants lose nothing by doing what the law requires: following Article II's imperative sentence regarding Presidential elections and obtaining state legislative post-election certifications prior to counting the Presidential electors' votes for President and Vice President on January 6, 2021.

The public interest favors granting the preliminary injunction too. The constitutional crisis of post-inaugural ouster should be avoided. The United States, the federal government and the states, should operate in every subject area in a constitutional way. State legislative post-election certifications of Presidential votes and Presidential electors is constitutionally-required. So, the federal government and the states are legally obligated to honor that constitutional authority.

State legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors is an important way to develop public acceptance of close Presidential election results. State legislative post-election certification would help build public confidence in the states' voting systems too. Every four years, the state legislatures would be authorized to examine Presidential voters and voters' complaints as part of their post-election certifications—and would make electoral reforms accordingly. Consequently, the state legislatures' direct involvement in election integrity would build public confidence in the voting system reducing the amount of Presidential election litigation which now seems to be occurring in a cycle of every four years. It is far better to have the state legislatures hear election disputes state-by-state, as intended in Article II, then the United States Supreme Court hear all the states' election disputes as proposed in the Texas original action against Pennsylvania, Michigan, Wisconsin and Georgia—which was supported by Missouri and sixteen other states and U.S. Representative Mike Johnson and 105 other Congressional members.

CONCLUSION

The Court should issue the preliminary injunction prior to January 6, 2021, when federal Defendants meet to count the Presidential electors to elect a President and Vice President, because the Plaintiffs have met the factors required.

Dated: December 22, 2020

/s/ Erick G. Kaardal
Erick G. Kaardal (WI0031)
Special Counsel for Amistad Project of
Thomas More Society
Mohrman, Kaardal & Erickson, P.A.
150 South Fifth Street, Suite 3100
Minneapolis, Minnesota 55402
Telephone: (612) 341-1074
Facsimile: (612) 341-1076
Email: kaardal@mklaw.com
Attorneys for Plaintiffs

Erick G. Kaardal (WI0031)
Special Counsel for Amistad Project of
Thomas More Society
Mohrman, Kaardal & Erickson, P.A.
150 South Fifth Street, Suite 3100
Minneapolis, Minnesota 55402
Telephone: (612) 341-1074
Facsimile: (612) 341-1076
Email: kaardal@mklaw.com
Attorneys for Plaintiffs

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

---

Case No. _____

WISCONSIN VOTERS ALLIANCE
E3530 Townline Road
Kewaunee, Wisconsin 54216;

PENNSYLVANIA VOTERS ALLIANCE
1621 Huddel Avenue Lower
Chichester, Pennsylvania, 19061;

GEORGIA VOTERS ALLIANCE
151 Main Street
Senior, Georgia 30276;

ELECTION INTEGRITY FUND
1715 Northumberland Drive
Rochester Hills, Michigan 48309;

ARIZONA VOTER INTEGRITY ALLIANCE
8019 East Tuckey Lane
Scottsdale, Arizona 85250;

LYNIE STONE
10410 East Prince Road
Tucson, Arizona 85749;

BARON BENHAM
8019 East Tuckey Lane
Scottsdale, Arizona 85250;

DEBI HAAS
5530 Rivers Edge Drive
Commerce, Michigan 48382;

---

---

BRENDA SAVAGE
1715 Northumberland Drive
Rochester Hills, Michigan 48309;

MATTHEW DADICH
1621 Huddel Avenue
Lower Chichester, Pennsylvania 19061;

LEAH HOOPES
241 Sulky Way
Chadds Ford, Pennsylvania 19317;

RON HEUER
E3530 Townline Road
Kewaunee, Wisconsin 54216;

RICHARD W. KUCKSDORF
W2289 Church Drive
Bonduel, Wisconsin 54107;

DEBBIE JACQUES
1839 South Oneida Street
Green Bay, Wisconsin 54304;

JOHN WOOD
151 Main Street
Senior, Georgia 30276;

SENATOR SONNY BORRELLI
2650 Diablo Dr
Lake Havasu City AZ 86406

REPRESENTATIVE WARREN PETERSON
2085 E Avenida del Valle Ct
Gilbert AZ 85298

REPRESENTATIVE MATTHEW MADDOCK
1150 South Milford Road
Milford, Michigan 48381;

REPRESENTATIVE DAIRE RENDON,
4833 River Wood Road
Lake City, Michigan 49651;

REPRESENTATIVE DAVID STEFFEN
715 Olive Tree Court
Green Bay, Wisconsin 54313;

---

---

REPRESENTATIVE JEFF L. MURSAU

4 Oak Street
Crivitz, Wisconsin 54114;

SENATOR WILLIAM T. LIGON

90 Bluff Road South
White Oak, Georgia 31568; and

SENATOR BRANDON BEACH

3100 Brierfield Road
Alpharetta, GA 30004

Plaintiffs,

v.

VICE PRESIDENT MICHAEL RICHARD PENCE,
in his official capacity as President of the United States Senate,
Office of the Vice President
1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W.
Washington, DC 20500;

U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
U.S. Capitol
First St SE
Washington, DC 20004;

U.S. SENATE,
U.S. Capitol
First St SE
Washington, DC 20004;

ELECTORAL COLLEGE,
U.S. Capitol
First St SE
Washington, DC 20004;

GOVERNOR TOM WOLF OF PENNSYLVANIA,
in his official capacity,
508 Main Capitol Building
Harrisburg, PA 17120;

SPEAKER BRYAN CARTER OF THE PENNSYLVANIA
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, in his official capacity,
139 Main Capitol Building
PO Box 202100
Harrisburg, PA 17120-2100;

---

---

SENATE MAJORITY LEADER JAKE CORMAN
OF THE PENNSYLVANIA SENATE,
in his official capacity,
Senate Box 203034
Harrisburg, PA 17120-3034;

GOVERNOR GRETCHEN WHITMER OF MICHIGAN,
in her official capacity,
111 S Capitol Avenue
Lansing, Michigan 48933;

SPEAKER LEE CHATFIELD OF THE MICHIGAN
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
in his official capacity,
124 N Capitol Avenue
Lansing, Michigan 48933;

SENATE MAJORITY LEADER MIKE SHIRKEY
OF THE MICHIGAN SENATE,
in his official capacity,
S-102 Capitol Building
Lansing, Michigan 48933;

GOVERNOR TONY EVERS OF WISCONSIN,
in his official capacity,
P.O. Box 7863
Madison, Wisconsin 53707;

SPEAKER ROBIN VOS OF THE WISCONSIN
STATE ASSEMBLY,
in his official capacity,
960 Rock Ridge Road
Burlington, Wisconsin 53105;

SENATE MAJORITY LEADER HOWARD MARKLEIN
OF THE WISCONSIN SENATE,
in his official capacity,
PO Box 7882
Madison, Wisconsin 53707;

GOVERNOR BRIAN KEMP OF GEORGIA,
in his original capacity,
111 State Capitol
Atlanta, Georgia 30334;

---

---

SPEAKER DAVID RALSTON OF THE GEORGIA HOUSE
OF REPRESENTATIVES,
in his official capacity,
332 State Capitol
Atlanta, Georgia 30334;

PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE BUTCH MILLER OF THE GEORGIA SENATE,
in his official capacity,
321 State Capitol
Atlanta, Georgia 30334;

GOVERNOR DOUG DUCEY OF ARIZONA,
in his official capacity,
1700 W. Washington Street
Phoenix, Arizona 85007;

SPEAKER RUSSELL BOWERS OF THE
ARIZONA HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
in his official capacity,
1700 West Washington
Room 223
Phoenix, Arizona 85007; and

SENATE MAJORITY LEADER RICK GRAY
OF THE ARIZONA SENATE,
in his official capacity,
1700 West Washington
Room 301
Phoenix, Arizona 85007,

Defendants.

---

COMPLAINT

---

The above-named Plaintiffs Wisconsin Voters Alliance, Pennsylvania Voters Alliance,
Georgia Voters Alliance, Election Integrity Fund, Arizona Election Integrity Alliance, Lynie Stone,
Baron Benham, Debi Haas, Brenda Savage, Matthew Dadich, Leah Hoopes, Ron Heuer, Richard W.
Kucksdorf, Debbie Jacques, John Wood, Sonny Borrelli, Warren Peterson, Matthew Maddock,

Daire Rendon, David Steffen, Jeff L. Mursau, William T. Ligon and Brandon Beach, for their complaint allege as follows:

INTRODUCTION

A. State Legislatures are Prohibited from Fulfilling Their Constitutional Responsibility.

This lawsuit seeks protection of voters' rights in Presidential elections. Voters in Presidential elections have a constitutional right to have their respective state legislatures meet after the election and certify their votes and, based on the votes, certify the Presidential electors whose votes are counted in Congress to elect the President and Vice President.

In drafting Article II, the Framers of the Constitution reasoned state legislatures should select Presidential electors so as "to afford as little opportunity as possible to tumult and disorder" and to place "every practicable obstacle [to] cabal, intrigue, and corruption," including "foreign powers" that might try to insinuate themselves into our elections.<sup>1</sup>

Article II limited Congress's role in selecting the President and provided no constitutional role for Governors. Yet, at present state legislatures are unable to meet. This inability to meet has existed from election day and continues through various congressionally set deadlines for the appointment of presidential electors and the counting of presidential elector votes. The states legislatures of Pennsylvania, Michigan, Wisconsin, Georgia and Arizona ("Defendant States") are unable to review the manner in which the election was conducted, are prevented from exercising their investigative powers and are unable to vote, debate or as a body speak to the conduct of the election. In sum, State legislatures are impotent to respond to what happened in the November 3, 2020 election.

---

<sup>1</sup> Hamilton, Alexander. Federalist No. 68, at 410-11 (C. Rossiter, ed. 1961).

This impotency is caused by the ministerial functions of Congress and the Vice President regarding the counting of the Presidential Elector's votes and also by state law prohibiting the legislative body from meeting without a supermajority or governor or leadership agreement during a time they can respond to what happened in the election. Accordingly, even if the state legislatures were aware of clear fraud by the executive branch – the state legislatures could not meet unless a supermajority, or a governor, or legislative leadership agreed they should meet.

This wholesale delegation of legislative authority operates contrary to the Constitution by inviting “cabal, intrigue and corruption” rather than operating to prevent the same. State legislative bodies have been relegated to observing the ministerial functions of a small group of executive officials who have refused various requests by legislators to be called into special session. Consequently, the legislative bodies as a whole of Defendant States have not engaged in any open discussion, review, investigation, or debate regarding the 2020 general election.

B. A Cabal of Public-Private Partnerships Directed the Manner of the Election Contrary to State Law Creating Disorder the State Legislatures were Unable to Address.

The management of elections is a core government function of Congress and state legislatures whose responsibilities are constitutionally defined.<sup>2</sup> “Safeguarding the integrity of the electoral process is a fundamental task of the Constitution, and [the courts] must be keenly sensitive to signs that its validity may be impaired.”<sup>3</sup>

This is especially so when state legislatures have abrogated their responsibilities through the improper delegation of their authority and when a cabal of state and local executives have partnered with private interests to undermine state statutes and plans designed to protect the integrity of the election.

---

<sup>2</sup> U.S. Const. Art. II, Section 1, Cl. 1; U.S. Const. Art. 4, Section 1, Cl. 1.

<sup>3</sup> Johnson v. FCC, 829 F.2d 157, 163 (D.C. Cir. 1987).

“Confidence in the integrity of our electoral processes is essential to the functioning of our participatory democracy”<sup>4</sup> and due to the wholesale delegation of legislative responsibility only judicial action restoring legislative authority can check unlawful conduct by the involved state executives.

C. Unprecedented Private Monies Purchased Local Election Offices and Dictated Election Management Encouraging the Evasion of State Laws and Government Partisan Involvement.

On March 27, 2020 President Trump signed into law the Coronavirus Aid, Relief, and Economic Security Act (CARES) which provided $400 million to states to manage the 2020 elections during the pandemic.<sup>5</sup> This funding joined previous monies provided by the Help America Vote Act (HAVA) to afford states sufficient federal funding to assist in managing the election.

The CARES Act funding, however, was exceeded by one individual who passed $400 million to local and state executives through a private charity that dictated how the recipient local government officials would manage the election.<sup>6</sup>

These dictates included the unprecedented use of drop boxes, mobile ballot retrieval, the location and number of polling places or satellite locations, and the consolidation of urban counting centers. Election judges, inspectors and poll workers were paid by these private funds and the tabulating machines purchased with private monies.<sup>7</sup>

The private funds flowed through the Center for Tech and Civic Life (CTCL) and were targeted to facilitate voter turnout of certain demographics in geographic areas dominated by one political

---

<sup>4</sup> Purcell v. Gonzalez, 549 U.S. 1, 4 (2006).

<sup>5</sup> Coronavirus Aid, Relief & Econ. Security Act, Pub. L. 116-136, §15003, 134 Stat. 281, 531.

<sup>6</sup> Mark Zuckerberg donated $400M to help local election offices during pandemic, INDEPENDENT, Nov. 11, 2020. <https://www.independent.co.uk/news/world/americas/mark-zuckerberg-donation-election-facebook-covid-b1721007.html>.

<sup>7</sup> Id.

party.<sup>8</sup> CTCL recruited specific cities to apply for the grants and provided grants to select cities to assist those cities in their grant applications.<sup>9</sup>

The funding to local election officials in Democratic strongholds was provided simultaneously with executive decisions to close in-person voting locations in areas not receiving CTCL grants. The CTCL funding and local executive official acceptance created a two-tier election system in which geographic areas benefitting one political party were flush with cash used to increase voter opportunities and turnout, including one city's no-bid purchase of a $250,000 Winnebago for local voter turnout efforts. The geographic areas dominated by the other party, however, experienced greater difficulty voting due to COVID emergency orders.<sup>10</sup>

For example, CTCL provided funds to 100% of the Pennsylvania counties carried by Hillary Clinton in 2016, including over $10 million to Philadelphia County.<sup>11</sup> The charity required the heavily Democratic county to establish 800 "satellite" voting locations and implement the drop box collection of ballots. In neighboring Democratic Delaware County, Pennsylvania one drop box was available for every 4,000 voters and one drop box was placed for every four-square-miles.

On the other hand, President Trump carried 59 of 67 Pennsylvania counties in 2016. CTCL contributed to 22% of those counties providing much smaller grants. There was one drop box for every 72,000 voters and every 1,159 square-miles in those counties.

---

<sup>8</sup> See, e.g., (city of Philadelphia grant communications), Unconstitutional? Wisconsin city election officials sought private money to register voters, <https://justthenews.com/politics-policy/elections/documents-show-wi-municipal-authorities-sought-use-grant-money-voter>; City of Green Bay – Center for Tech and Civic Life grant agreement (July 24, 2020).

<sup>9</sup> See Approval by Center for Tech and Civic Life of grant request for City of Racine, App. 247-48; see also Petition for Permanent Injunction and Declaratory Judgment on behalf of the State of Louisiana, App. 1504-1536.

<sup>10</sup> See Grant Spending Approval by City of Racine for Purchase of Winnebago, App. 1492; see also Carlson Report, App. 31-38.

<sup>11</sup> See Approval by Center for Tech and Civic Life of grant request for City of Philadelphia, App. 1493-1503.

CTCL funding produced similar results in the other Defendant States. Moreover, the use of drop boxes materially breached the chain of custody of ballots. For example, ballot transfer forms in Cobb County, Georgia show 78% of the 89,000 absentee ballots were not transported as Georgia election rules require.<sup>12</sup> Additionally, the use of drop boxes and changes in the signature comparison requirements for absentee ballots were approved by the Georgia Secretary of State without legislative approval.<sup>13</sup>

The presence of CTCL funds in other states facilitated conduct contrary to state law as well. In Wisconsin, at CTCL's request, five cities used CTCL seed monies to draft the "Wisconsin Safe Voting Plan 2020," so named despite the failure of the city leaders to include any other Wisconsin election officials. The plan, and communications relating to the plan, provided for extensive voter turnout efforts, considered state voter identification laws an obstacle and required the use of drop boxes, curbside voting and salaries for additional staffing."<sup>14</sup>

CTCL funding was used to "dramatically expand voter and community education and outreach, particularly to historically disenfranchised residents."<sup>15</sup>

---

<sup>12</sup> Ballot Transfer Forms Show 78 Percent of 89,000 Absentee Ballots from Drop Boxes in Cobb County, Georgia Were Not Transported to the Registrar 'Immediately' As the Election Code Requires – The Georgia Star News, <https://georgiastarnews.com/2020/12/11/ballot-transfer-forms-show-78-percent-of-89000-absentee-ballots-from-drop-boxes-in-cobb-county-were-not-transported-to-registrar-immediately-as-election-code-rule-requires/>.

<sup>13</sup> Georgia Secretary of State and State Election Board Changed Absentee Ballot Signature Verification and Added Drop Boxes Without State Legislature's Approval, <https://georgiastarnews.com/2020/12/16/georgia-secretary-of-state-and-state-election-board-changed-absentee-ballot-signature-verification-and-added-drop-boxes-without-state-legislatures-approval/>.

<sup>14</sup> Wisconsin Safe Voting Plan 2020, at 4 (submitted to the Center for Tech and Civic Life by the cities of Green Bay, Kenosha, Madison, Milwaukee and Racine)(June 15, 2020). The report states "[v]oting absentee by mail has been complicated by a fairly recent imposition of state law requiring voters to provide an image of their valid photo ID prior to first requesting an absentee ballot." Id., at 6. The CTCL funding provided "voter navigators" and professional witnesses to increase turnout and $2.5 million to "overcome these particular barriers." Id. at 8-11. The cities received over $2 million for additional staffing, including pay for poll workers, election "chief inspectors." Id., at 11-12 and 18-19. An additional $216,500 was provided for drop boxes. Id., at 10-11.

<sup>15</sup> Id., at 13.

CTCL funding enabled urban areas in defendant states to consolidate counting facilities. This consolidation precipitated the exclusion of Republican officials from the ability to view the management, handling and counting of absentee and mail-in ballots.

Election transparency is a prophylactic to fraud. Each defendant state has laws requiring members of both major political parties be present in the location of the receipt, management and counting of ballots. Such common-sense policy is necessary due to the significant afforded election officials.

Local election officials determine the ballots to be received, the ballots eligible to be counted and supervise the count of the ballots. Legislatures have wisely determined the best way to bring accountability to such decisions is to require the participation, or at least the observation, of both political parties.

Yet, these laws were not followed. In Wayne County, Michigan, CTCL paid poll workers boarded up the windows to the counting facility to prevent observation.<sup>16</sup> Inside Detroit's TCF Center, election inspectors were receiving, counting and "curing" absentee ballots. The "curing" process involves discerning the voting intent of an absent voter and reflecting that intent on a newly ballot which is then cast and counted.

Michigan law requires representatives of both major political parties to view the process and then sign a form stating the "curing" was completed consistent with voter intent.<sup>17</sup> Yet, Republican inspectors were not appointed in Wayne County. Moreover, Republican poll watchers were kept at such a distance in the cavernous TCF Center they were unable to view the conduct of the inspectors at the 134 counting tables operating in the center.<sup>18</sup> City election officials later argued that allowing republicans in the “place” of the counting satisfied state law despite the “place” these poll watchers were required to stand was so remote they could not observe the activity of the democrat party officials.

---

<sup>16</sup> There's a Simple Reason Workers Covered Windows at a Detroit Vote-Counting Site, THE NEW YORK TIMES (Nov. 5, 2020) (<https://www.nytimes.com/2020/11/05/technology/michigan-election-ballot-counting.html>, retrieved Dec. 20, 2020) (windows covered to prevent "photographs").

<sup>17</sup> See Mich. Comp. Laws §168.674(2) (Thomson/West 2006).

Urban election officials in other Defendant States which received CTCL funding also restricted or prohibited Republican poll watchers from viewing the receipt, management, curing and counting of ballots.<sup>19</sup> Local election officials in each state represented here received significant funds from CTCL and each also engaged in election improprieties with local officials acting contrary to state law.

State hostility to Republican participation in reviewing the management of the 2020 general election manifested in threats to Republican officeholders and their counsel in Michigan. On December 14, 2020 Governor Gretchen Whitmer mobilized the state police to secure the state capitol to prevent Republican legislators entry to the building while allowing Democrat legislators to enter.<sup>20</sup>

---

<sup>18</sup> See, e.g., Watch, Detroit Absentee Ballot Counting Chaos As Workers Block Windows, Bar Observers, BREITBART (Nov. 4, 2020) (<https://www.breitbart.com/politics/2020/11/04/watch-detroit-absentee-ballot-counting-chaos-as-workers-block-windows-bar-observers/>, retrieved Dec. 12, 2020); Chaos erupts at TCF Center as Republican vote challengers cry foul in Detroit, DETROIT FREE PRESS (Nov. 4, 2020) (<https://www.freep.com/story/news/politics/elections/2020/11/04/tcf-center-challengers-detroit-michigan/6164715002/>, retrieved Dec. 20, 2020).

<sup>19</sup> See, e.g., Affidavit of Gregory Stenstrom (date); ‘The Steal is On’ in Pennsylvania: Poll Watchers Denied Access, Illegal Campaigning at Polling Locations, Breitbart (Nov. 3, 2020) (<https://www.breitbart.com/politics/2020/11/03/the-steal-is-on-in-pennsylvania-poll-watchers-denied-access-illegal-campaigning-at-polling-locations/>, retrieved Dec. 20, 2020);

<sup>20</sup> Michigan governor Gretchen Whitmer and legislative leadership initially claimed COVID-19 necessitated the closing of the Michigan capitol building on December 14, 2020, the congressional deadline for the certification of the presidential electors. Shirkey: ‘Bad Judgment’ to keep Michigan Capitol closed during electors meeting, <https://www.detroitnews.com/story/news/politics/2020/12/14/shirkey-bad-judgment-capitol-closed-during-elector-meeting/6536863002/>. Later, Governor Whitmer claimed the closing occurred due to a security threat. Michigan State House, Senate close over ‘threats of violence’ during Electoral College Meeting, December 14, 2020, <https://www.usatoday.com/story/news/politics/2020/12/14/michigan-legislative-buildings->

Moreover, Democrat Michigan Attorney General Dana Nessel announced she was criminally investigating Republican legislators who voiced concerns regarding the election outcome and threatened those officials with criminal prosecution for “bribery, perjury, and conspiracy.”<sup>21</sup>

General Nessel also tweeted a claim “GOP efforts to overturn President Trump’s electoral defeat...and [t]hreats against election officials are domestic terrorism. My message to them is ‘We are looking for you. We will find you. You will be held accountable.’”<sup>22</sup> The Michigan State Police whom the Governor ordered to bar Republicans from entering the capitol on the fourteenth<sup>23</sup>, however, announced they “did not recommend the closure of legislative offices ahead of the Electoral College meeting and they were not aware of ‘any credible threats of violence related to Michigan....’”<sup>24</sup>

General Nessel continued her threats with calls for ethics investigations of Republican attorneys. She also chilled free speech during the election by issuing “cease-and-desist letters” to political organizations engaged in political speech.<sup>25</sup>

---

closed-security-concerns-covid-19/6536919002/, see also <https://www.npr.org/sections/biden-transition-updates/2020/12/14/946243439/michigan-gov-whitmer-addresses-security-threat-to-electoral-college-vote>. Despite both claims, Democrats were allowed in the state capitol on December 14, 2020 while republican legislators were prohibited from entering. <https://www.prnewswire.com/news-releases/got-freedom-video-shows-police-preventing-gop-electors-in-michigan-from-performing-lawful-duties-301192474.html>. The Michigan State Police, however, revealed that they acted on the Governor’s orders and that the state police were not aware of any credible threat to the capitol or its occupants. <https://nbc25news.com/news/local/michigan-house-and-senate-offices-closed-tomorrow-because-of-safety-concerns>.

<sup>21</sup> Michigan attorney general ponders criminal probes of state and local officials who bend to Trump’s will on overturning election results, https://www.washingtonpost.com/politics/michigan-attorney-general-canvassing-board-lawmakers/2020/11/20/87d19ce6-2b65-11eb-8fa2-06e7cbb145c0\_story.html.

<sup>22</sup> <https://twitter.com/dananessel/status/1338494176883847170>.

<sup>23</sup> Live Update: Denied to Perform Constitutional Duty in Michigan, GOT FREEDOM? (December 14, 2020) (<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=6nH6ZvfAD2w>, (video of entry denial)).

<sup>24</sup> State Police say there were not aware of any credible threats to the capitol on Monday, <https://nbc25news.com/news/local/michigan-house-and-senate-offices-closed-tomorrow-because-of-safety-concerns>.

<sup>25</sup> Nessel issues cease-desist letters to those spreading misinformation during election, <https://www.wxyz.com/news/election-2020/nessel-issues-cess-and-desist-letters-to-those-spreading-misinformation-during-election>.

Accordingly, the Plaintiffs who are voter groups, voters and state legislators in Pennsylvania, Michigan, Wisconsin, Georgia and Arizona file this complaint seeking to restore the constitutional authority and duty of the legislative bodies of their respective states in the selection of presidential electors to correct “the tumult and disorder”<sup>26</sup> and lawlessness

The federal laws regarding the Presidential electors, codified at 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15 are constitutionally unauthorized and violate Presidential voters’ rights to state legislative post-election certification. Article II of the Constitution establishes a non-delegable process where at least state legislative post-election certification of the state’s Presidential electors is constitutionally required for Presidential elector votes to be counted in the election of the President and Vice President. In contradiction, the federal laws, particularly 3 U.S.C. §§ 5 and 6, establish a different process where Presidential electors are designated by the Governor of each Defendant State without state legislative post-election certification. Then, 3 U.S.C. § 15 authorizes the Vice President and Congress to count those votes in contradiction of the constitutional obligation to only count votes of Presidential electors who have state legislative post-election certification.

Further, the Defendant States have legally acquiesced to the federal laws by enacting statutes transferring post-election certification from the state legislatures to state executive branch officials: Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B) (Arizona Secretary of State), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B) (Georgia Secretary of State and Governor), Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 168.46 (Michigan State Board of Canvassers and Governor), Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) (Wisconsin Elections Commission); and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166 (Secretary of Commonwealth and Governor). These state laws also violate Article II which establishes the state legislative prerogative to post-election certification of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors.

---

<sup>26</sup> Federalist No. 68, at 410-11.

Plaintiffs hope a constitutional crisis can be avoided. There is time before the January 20, 2021 inaugural of the President and Vice President for the Court to require the state legislatures to meet and consider post-election certification of the Presidential electors. The people's representatives comprising the state legislatures of the respective states must be afforded the opportunity to act as a whole to fulfill their constitutional responsibilities and to restore faith in the election process.

Moreover, this Court has continuing jurisdiction, after this Presidential election, because the federal laws and state laws violating Article II have continuing force applied to future Presidential elections.

JURISDICTION

1. The Court has jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C § 1331 (federal question), 28 U.S.C. § 1343 (civil rights and elective franchise), 28 U.S.C. § 2201 (declaratory judgment), 28 U.S.C. § 1651 (“All Writs Act”), 42 U.S.C. § 1983 (civil rights) and D.C. Code § 16-3501, et seq (ouster of national officials).

2. The Court has venue under 28 U.S.C. § 1391 because many of the Defendants reside or are located in the District of Columbia and a substantial part of the events or omissions giving rise to the claim occurred or will occur there.

PARTIES

A. Plaintiffs

3. Plaintiffs Wisconsin Voters Alliance, Pennsylvania Voters Alliance, Georgia Voters Alliance, Election Integrity Forum and Arizona Election Integrity Alliance are election integrity entities and associations which have a purpose of promoting election integrity in Pennsylvania, Wisconsin, Georgia, Michigan and Arizona, respectively. They do not support any particular candidate for any public office.

4. Plaintiffs Lynie Stone and Baron Benham are residents, voters and taxpayers of Arizona. They are members of the Arizona Election Integrity Alliance.

5. Plaintiffs Debi Haas and Brenda Savage are residents, voters and taxpayers of Michigan. They are members of the Election Integrity Forum.

6. Plaintiffs Matthew Dadich and Leah Hoopes are residents, voters and taxpayers of Pennsylvania. They are members of the Pennsylvania Voters Alliance.

7. Plaintiffs Ron Hueur, Richard W. Kucksdorf and Debbie Jacques are residents, voters and taxpayers of Wisconsin. They are members of the Wisconsin Voters Alliance.

8. Plaintiff John Wood is a resident, voter and taxpayer of Georgia. He is a member of the Georgia Voters Alliance.

9. Plaintiff Senator Sonny Borrelli member of the Arizona Senate.

10. Plaintiff Representative Warren Peterson is a member of the Arizona House of Representatives.

11. Plaintiff Representative Matthew Maddock is a member of the Michigan House of Representatives.

12. Plaintiff Representative Daire Rendon is a member of the Michigan House of Representatives.

13. Plaintiff Representative David Steffen is a member of the Wisconsin State Assembly.

14. Plaintiff Representative Jeff L. Mursau is a member of the Wisconsin State Assembly.

15. Plaintiff Senator William T. Ligon is a member of the Georgia Senate.

16. Plaintiff Senator Brandon Beach is a member of the Georgia Senate.

17. All of the individual Plaintiffs are residents, voters and taxpayers of their respective states.

18. All of the individual Plaintiffs voted in the November 3, 2020 election for President and Vice President and plan to vote in future Presidential elections.

B. Defendants

19. Vice President Michael Richard Pence is a Defendant sued in his official capacity as President of the United States Senate. As such, Pence is identified as having legal obligations under the Constitution and federal law regarding opening and counting the ballots of Presidential electors for President and Vice President.

20. The U.S House of Representatives, U.S. Senate, and Electoral College are Defendants. They are constituted under the Constitution and federal law.

21. Governor Tom Wolf of Pennsylvania is a Defendant sued in his official capacity. He has legal responsibilities under federal and state law in post-election certification of Presidential electors.

22. Speaker Bryan Carter of the Pennsylvania House of Representatives and Senate Majority Leader Jake Corman of the Pennsylvania Senate, are sued in their official capacities. They and their respective houses of their state legislature have legal responsibilities under federal and state law in post-election certification of Presidential electors.

23. Governor Gretchen Whitmer of Michigan is a Defendant sued in her official capacity. She has legal responsibilities under federal and state law in post-election certification of Presidential electors.

24. Speaker Lee Chatfield of the Michigan House of Representatives and Senate Majority Leader Mike Shirkey of the Michigan Senate are sued in their official capacities. They and their respective houses of their state legislature have legal responsibilities under federal and state law in post-election certification of Presidential electors.

25. Governor Tony Evers of Wisconsin is a Defendant sued in his official capacity. He has legal responsibilities under federal and state law in post-election certification of Presidential electors.

26. Speaker Robin Vos of the Wisconsin State Assembly and Senate Majority Leader Howard Marklein of the Wisconsin Senate are sued in their official capacities. They and their respective houses of their state legislature have legal responsibilities under federal and state law in post-election certification of Presidential electors.

27. Governor Brian Kemp of Georgia is a Defendant sued in his official capacity. He has legal responsibilities under federal and state law in post-election certification of Presidential electors.

28. Speaker David Ralston of the Georgia House of Representatives and President Pro Tempore Butch Miller of the Georgia Senate are sued in their official capacities. They and their respective houses of their state legislature have legal responsibilities under federal and state law in post-election certification of Presidential electors.

29. Governor Doug Ducey of Arizona is a Defendant sued in his official capacity. He has legal responsibilities under federal and state law in post-election certification of Presidential electors.

30. Speaker Russell Bowers of the Arizona House of Representative and Senate Majority Leader Rick Gray of the Arizona Senate are sued in their official capacities. They and their respective houses of their state legislature have legal responsibilities under federal and state law in post-election certification of Presidential electors.

STANDING

31. As voters, the Plaintiffs have legal standing to bring these constitutional claims to ensure that Presidential elections are constitutionally conducted by Defendants.<sup>27</sup>

32. The Plaintiffs claim that Article II of the U.S. Constitution provides a voter a constitutional right to the voter's Presidential vote being certified as part of the state legislature's post-election certification of Presidential electors. Absence such certification, the Presidential electors' votes from that state cannot be counted by the federal Defendants toward the election of President and Vice President. Because the Plaintiffs' votes are not counted as part of the constitutionally-required state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors, the Defendants are causing the Plaintiffs to be disenfranchised. See Baten v. McMaster, 967 F.3d 345, 352–53 (4th Cir. 2020) (voters who vote in Presidential elections have standing on claims of government causing disenfranchisement).

33. When Defendants violate the Constitution as it relates to Presidential elections in the Defendant, all voters in Presidential elections suffer an injury-in-fact caused by the Defendants. Voters in a Presidential election, in this instance, have an injury-in-fact different than the public because when they voted and they had an interest that the election in which they voted is constitutionally-conducted. The same is true of future elections. Finally, the Court can redress the Plaintiffs' injuries by issuing a declaratory judgment and accompanying injunction to enjoin the Defendants' unconstitutional conduct.

34. As voters, each Plaintiff has a fundamental right to vote.<sup>28</sup> Thus, each Plaintiff has a recognized protectable interest. As the U.S. Supreme Court has long recognized, a person's right to vote is “individual and personal in nature.”<sup>29</sup> Thus, “voters who allege facts showing disadvantage to themselves as individuals have standing to sue” to remedy that disadvantage.<sup>30</sup> “Safeguarding the integrity of the electoral process is a fundamental task of the Constitution, and [the courts] must be keenly sensitive to signs that its validity may be impaired.”<sup>31</sup> “Confidence in the integrity of our electoral processes is essential to the functioning of our participatory democracy.”<sup>32</sup>

---

<sup>27</sup> See Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560–61 (U.S. 1992).

<sup>28</sup> Reynolds v. Sims, 377 U.S. 533, 554–55, 562 (1964).

35. By federal and state election laws, the federal and state governments have agreed to protect the fundamental right to vote by maintaining the integrity of an election contest as fair, honest, and unbiased to maintain the structure of the democratic process.<sup>33</sup> The voters, in turn, agree to accept the government’s announcement of the winner of an election contest, including federal elections, to maintain the integrity of the democratic system of the United States. “No right is more precious in a free country than that of having a voice in the election of those who make the laws under which, as good citizens, we must live.”<sup>34</sup> But the right to vote is the right to participate in an electoral process that is necessarily structured to maintain the integrity of the democratic system.”<sup>35</sup>

36. This arrangement constitutes a “social contract” between the voter and the government as an agreement among the people of a state about the rules that will define their government.<sup>36</sup> Social contract theory provided the background against which the Constitution was adopted. “Because of this social contract theory, the Framers and the public at the time of the

---

<sup>29</sup> Id. 377 U.S. at 561.

<sup>30</sup> Gill v. Whitford, 138 S. Ct. 1916, 1929 (2018).

<sup>31</sup> Johnson v. FCC, 829 F.2d 157, 163 (D.C. Cir. 1987).

<sup>32</sup> Purcell v. Gonzalez, 549 U.S. 1, 4 (2006).

<sup>33</sup> Timmons v. Twin Cities Area New Party, 520 U.S. 351, 364 (1997) (“States certainly have an interest in protecting the integrity, fairness, and efficiency of their ballots and election processes as means for electing public officials.”).

<sup>34</sup> Burdick v. Takushi, 504 U.S. 428, 441 (1992) quoting Wesberry v. Sanders, 376 U.S. 1, 17 (1964).

<sup>35</sup> Id. (citations omitted).

<sup>36</sup> Dumonde v. U.S., 87 Fed. Cl. 651, 653 (Fed. Cl. 2009) (“Historically, the Constitution has been interpreted as a social contract between the Government and people of the United States,” citing Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch 137, 5 U.S. 137, 176 (1803).

revolution and framing conceived governments as resulting from an agreement among people to provide a means for enforcing existing rights.”<sup>37</sup> “The aim of a social contract theory is to show that members of some society have reason to endorse and comply with the fundamental social rules, laws, institutions, and/or principles of that society. Put simply, it is concerned with public justification, i.e., ‘of determining whether or not a given regime is legitimate and therefore worthy of loyalty.’”<sup>38</sup>

37. The uniformity of election laws is part of that contract to protect the right to vote. Hence, the right to vote is intertwined with the integrity of an election process. The loss of the integrity of the election process renders the right to vote meaningless.<sup>39</sup> Here, the Defendant States’ election irregularities and improprieties so exceed the razor-thin margins to cast doubt on the razor-thin margins of victory and, thus, threaten the social contract itself.

38. The same will happen in future elections too if it is not stopped.

39. The Article II social contract with the voters is, in part, the assurance of their state legislature voting for post-election certification of Presidential electors. Arising from the social contract is the integrity of the election process to protect the voter’s right to vote. In the state legislatures perpetually delegating post-election certification of Presidential electors to election officials—as a core government function—the state legislatures, required by federal law, delegated

---

<sup>37</sup> Greg Serienko, Social Contract Neutrality and the Religion Clauses of the Federal Constitution, 57 Ohio St. L. J. 1263, 1269.

<sup>38</sup> Contemporary Approaches to the Social Contract, <https://plto.stanford.edu/entries/contractarianism-contemporary/> (last visited Dec. 21, 2020).

<sup>39</sup> “Legitimacy is the crucial currency of government in our democratic age. Only elections that are transparent and fair will be regarded as legitimate...But elections without integrity cannot provide the winners with legitimacy, the losers with security and the public with confidence in their leaders and institutions.”<https://www.kofiannanfoundation.org/supporting-democracy-and-elections-with-integrity/uganda-victory-without-legitimacy-is-no-victory-at-all/> (Last visited Dec. 8, 2020).

post-election certification to state executive branch officials when Article II requires the state legislatures to conduct post-election certification of every voter's vote.

40. This social contract is what is personally at risk for the Plaintiffs in the outcome of the controversy.<sup>40</sup> As much as the government has a compelling interest in fair and honest elections with accompanying laws and regulations to ensure that objective to preserve the democratic system of government, so too the voter has an interest in state and local election officials violating the election laws in favor of a pre-determined result.

41. Furthermore, the voter has a compelling interest in the maintenance of a democratic system of government under the Ninth Amendment through the election process, beyond controversies regarding governmental attempts to interfere with the right to vote. Here, the voter did not enter into a contract with the state election official to give them discretion for state election irregularities and improprieties—of any kind—regardless of how benign they might be. The voter's social contract is with the state legislature—who under Article II must conduct post-election certification of the Presidential electors. The Article II requirement of the state legislature casting a post-election certification vote for Presidential electors is the voters' constitutional "insurance policy" against the risk of state and local election officials engaging in election irregularities and improprieties in favor of a pre-determined outcome.

42. The voters have been willing to accept laws and regulations imposed upon an election process to serve the government's compelling interest in the integrity of that process. So, while it is fair to create public governmental regulatory schemes to promote the compelling interests to protect the right to vote, and therefore, a voter's right of associational choices under the First

---

<sup>40</sup> Gill, 138 S.Ct. at 1923.

Amendment,<sup>41</sup> those rights are infringed when the state legislatures abdicate the constitutionally-required role of post-election certification of Presidential electors.<sup>42</sup>

43. For federal elections, state legislatures under Article II have no authority to delegate post-election certification of Presidential electors to state executive branch officials. Yet, they did. That is the harm for the voters. It is the Electors Clause that gives state legislatures the exclusive right to post-election certification of Presidential electors—not state executive branch officials.

44. This lawsuit is not about voter fraud. The harm here is the loss of a voter remedy under Article II conducted as a core governmental function under federal and state election laws to ensure the integrity of the election. In turn, the acceptance of the outcome without state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors interferes with the social contract between the voter and the government—causing injury to the voter.

BACKGROUND

A. Legal background

45. Under the Supremacy Clause, the “Constitution, and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof ... shall be the supreme law of the land.”<sup>43</sup>

46. “The individual citizen has no federal constitutional right to vote for electors for the President of the United States unless and until the state legislature chooses a statewide election as the means to implement its power to appoint members of the electoral college.”<sup>44</sup>

---

<sup>41</sup> Anderson v. Celebrezze, 460 U.S. 780, 788–89 (1983).

<sup>42</sup> Id.

<sup>43</sup> U.S. Const. Art. VI, cl. 2.

<sup>44</sup> Bush v. Gore, 531 U.S. 98, 104 (citing U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1).

47. State legislatures have plenary power to set the process for appointing presidential electors: “Each State shall appoint, in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a Number of Electors.”<sup>45</sup>

48. At the time of the Founding, most States did not appoint electors through popular statewide elections. In the first presidential election, six of the ten States that appointed electors did so by direct legislative appointment.<sup>46</sup>

49. In the second presidential election, nine of the fifteen States that appointed electors did so by direct legislative appointment.<sup>47</sup>

50. In the third presidential election, nine of sixteen States that appointed electors did so by direct legislative appointment. Id. at 31. This practice persisted in lesser degrees through the Election of 1860.

51. Though “[h]istory has now favored the voter,” Bush, 531 U.S. at 104, “there is no doubt of the right of the legislature to resume the power [of appointing presidential electors] at any time, for it can neither be taken away nor abdicated.”<sup>48</sup>

52. Given the State legislatures’ constitutional primacy in selecting presidential electors, the ability to set rules governing the casting of ballots and counting of votes cannot be usurped by other branches of state government—nor the federal government.

53. The Framers of the Constitution decided to select the President through the Electoral College “to afford as little opportunity as possible to tumult and disorder” and to place

---

<sup>45</sup> U.S. Const. Art. II, §1, cl. 2; see also Bush v. Gore, 531 U.S. at 104 (“[T]he state legislature’s power to select the manner for appointing electors is plenary.” (emphasis added)).

<sup>46</sup> McPherson v. Blacker, 146 U.S. 1, 29-30 (1892).

<sup>47</sup> Id. at 32.

<sup>48</sup> McPherson, 146 U.S. at 35 (emphasis added); cf. 3 U.S.C. § 2 (“Whenever any State has held an election for the purpose of choosing electors, and has failed to make a choice on the day prescribed by law, the electors may be appointed on a subsequent day in such a manner as the legislature of such State may direct.”).

“every practicable obstacle [to] cabal, intrigue, and corruption,” including “foreign powers” that might try to insinuate themselves into our elections.<sup>49</sup> Federalist No. 68, at 410-11 (C. Rossiter, ed. 1961) (Madison, J.).

54. The Plaintiffs constitutional claims in this lawsuit are principally based on one sentence in Article II of the U.S. Constitution. The sentence has eighty-five words. The constitutional sentence provides:

He shall hold his office during the term of four years, and, together with the Vice President, chosen for the same term, be elected, as follows: Each state shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors, equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress: but no Senator or Representative, or person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States, shall be appointed an elector.

55. The Plaintiffs’ claims, based on this constitutional, imperative, sentence, are that post-election certification of Presidential votes and post-election certification of Presidential electors are exclusively state legislative decisions; accordingly, Governors, federal courts and state courts have no constitutionally-permitted role in post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors.

56. Accordingly, the Plaintiffs claim that 3 U.S.C. § 5, 6 and 15 and state laws (such as Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B), Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.46, Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166) eviscerating these state legislative prerogatives, every four years, are unconstitutional.

57. Under Article II, Congress lacks legal authority to enact laws interfering with the state-by-state state legislative post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors as it has done with 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15. There are textual and structural arguments for these federal statutes being unconstitutional.<sup>50</sup> The Plaintiffs claim that 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15 are unconstitutional interferences with the state legislative prerogatives guaranteed by the Constitution.

---

<sup>49</sup> See, supra, Note 14.

58. Analogously, under Article II, the state legislatures lack legal authority to enact state laws which are a perpetual and wholesale delegation of post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors to state executive branch officials—as they have done in Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B) (Arizona Secretary of State), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B) (Georgia Secretary of State and Governor), Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 168.46 (Michigan State Board of Canvassers and Governor), Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) (Wisconsin Elections Commission); and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166 (Secretary of Commonwealth and Governor).

59. Article II, and its non-delegation doctrine, left it to the state legislatures to “direct” post-election certification of Presidential electors—not to “delegate” post-election certifications, perpetually and in a wholesale fashion, to state executive branch officials as a ministerial duty. There are textual and structural arguments for these state statutes being unconstitutional. Plaintiffs claim that Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B), Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 168.46, Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b), 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166 are unconstitutional delegation of the state legislative prerogatives of post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors.

60. Further, the state constitutions of the Defendant States do not require the state legislature to meet for post-election certification of the Presidential electors. Arizona’s, Georgia’s and Pennsylvania’s Constitutions have the state legislature adjourned until January 2021.<sup>51</sup> Michigan’s and Wisconsin's Constitutions permit the state legislature to be in session, but do not require a joint session of the state legislature to affirmatively vote for Presidential post-election certifications.<sup>52</sup>

---

<sup>50</sup> Vasan Kesavan, Is the Electoral Count Act Unconstitutional, 80 N.C. L. Rev. 1653, 1696-1793 (2002).

<sup>51</sup> Ariz. Const. Art. IV, Part 2, Sec. 3; Ga. Const. Art. III, § IV, ¶ 1(a). Pa. Const. Art. II, § 4.

61. Based on this legal background, Plaintiffs claim, under the Article II, that if there is no state legislative post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors in the Defendant States, then those Defendant States' Presidential electors votes, not so certified, cannot be counted by the federal Defendants for President and Vice President under Article II.

B. The Defendants, except state legislatures, are involved in post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors or counting their ballots to elect the President and Vice President.

62. Under 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 12, each of the Defendants, except the state legislatures, have a role to play in state post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of a state's Presidential electors or counting of the Presidential Electors' votes.

63. Under 3 U.S.C. § 15, "Congress shall be in session on the sixth day of January succeeding every meeting of electors. The Senate and House of Representatives shall meet in the Hall of the House of Representatives at the hour of 1 o'clock in the afternoon on that day."

64. Under 3 U.S.C. § 15, Vice President Michael Richard Pence is the presiding officer on January 6, 2021: "and the President of the Senate shall be their presiding officer."

65. Vice President Pence, the U.S. Senate and the U.S. House of Representatives are Defendants presume under 3 U.S.C. §§ 5 and 6, that each state's Presidential elector votes because they are designated by the Governor of each Defendant State can be counted without state legislative post-election certification.

66. 3 U.S.C. § 5 provides:

If any State shall have provided, by laws enacted prior to the day fixed for the appointment of the electors, for its final determination of any controversy or contest concerning the appointment of all or any of the electors of such State, by judicial or other methods or procedures, and such determination shall have been made at least six days before the time fixed for the meeting of the electors, such determination made pursuant to such law so existing on said day, and made at least six days prior to said time of meeting of the electors, shall be conclusive, and shall govern in the counting of the electoral votes as provided in the Constitution, and as hereinafter regulated, so far as the ascertainment of the electors appointed by such State is concerned.

---

<sup>52</sup> Mich. Const. Art. IV, § 13; Wis. Const. Art. IV, § 11.

67. 3 U.S.C. § 6 provides:

It shall be the duty of the executive of each State, as soon as practicable after the conclusion of the appointment of the electors in such State by the final ascertainment, under and in pursuance of the laws of such State providing for such ascertainment, to communicate by registered mail under the seal of the State to the Archivist of the United States a certificate of such ascertainment of the electors appointed, setting forth the names of such electors and the canvass or other ascertainment under the laws of such State of the number of votes given or cast for each person for whose appointment any and all votes have been given or cast; and it shall also thereupon be the duty of the executive of each State to deliver to the electors of such State, on or before the day on which they are required by section 7 of this title to meet, six duplicate-originals of the same certificate under the seal of the State; and if there shall have been any final determination in a State in the manner provided for by law of a controversy or contest concerning the appointment of all or any of the electors of such State, it shall be the duty of the executive of such State, as soon as practicable after such determination, to communicate under the seal of the State to the Archivist of the United States a certificate of such determination in form and manner as the same shall have been made; and the certificate or certificates so received by the Archivist of the United States shall be preserved by him for one year and shall be a part of the public records of his office and shall be open to public inspection; and the Archivist of the United States at the first meeting of Congress thereafter shall transmit to the two Houses of Congress copies in full of each and every such certificate so received at the National Archives and Records Administration.

68. The Plaintiffs claim that the presumption is constitutionally incorrect; under Article II, Defendants Vice President Pence, the U.S. House of Representatives and the United States Senate can only open up and count Presidential elector ballots if the state legislature has affirmatively voted to certify the Presidential electors; otherwise, the votes of the Presidential electors cannot be counted. The Plaintiffs claim that the Vice President and U.S. Congress act unconstitutionally in this election and future elections when they count votes of Presidential electors where the respective state legislature has not affirmatively voted in favor of post-election certification.

69. Similarly, the Defendant States' executives, Governor Tom Wolf of Pennsylvania, Governor Gretchen Whitmer of Michigan, Governor Tony Evers of Wisconsin, Governor Brian Kemp of Georgia, and Governor Doug Ducey of Arizona under 3 U.S.C. § 6 and their respective state's laws, have designated the Presidential electors under the assumption that state executive branch certification is all that is required.<sup>53</sup>

70. But, Governor Tom Wolf of Pennsylvania, Governor Gretchen Whitmer of Michigan, Governor Tony Evers of Wisconsin, Governor Brian Kemp of Georgia, and Governor Doug Ducey of Arizona are constitutionally mistaken because the designated by the Governor of each Defendant State cannot cure that the Presidential electors are without state legislative post-election certification. Until the state legislature certifies the Presidential electors, the respective Governor's designation under 3 U.S.C. § 6 and their respective state's laws have no legal effect.

71. Absent the state legislative post-election certification required by Article II, the Governor's designation of Presidential electors has no legal effect because their votes cannot be counted by the Vice President, U.S. Senate and U.S. House of Representatives.

72. Finally, Article II requires the Defendants' state legislative leaders to act to vote on post-election certification of the Presidential electors. But, instead, the state legislatures violate this constitutional duty because of their state laws which are a perpetual and wholesale delegation of post-election certifications to state executive branch officials—as they have done in Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B) (Arizona Secretary of State), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B) (Georgia Secretary of State and Governor), Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 168.46 (Michigan State Board of Canvassers and Governor), Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) (Wisconsin Elections Commission); and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166 (Secretary of Commonwealth and Governor).

---

<sup>53</sup> See 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166; Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 168.46; W.S.A. § 7.70; Ga. Code Ann., § 21-2-499(b); Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212.

73. The Plaintiffs claim that Article II, and its non-delegation doctrine, permanently left it to the state legislatures to “direct” post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors, not to delegate post-election certifications, perpetually and in a wholesale fashion, to state executive branch officials as a ministerial duty.

74. In this way, the Defendant States’ legislative leaders, including Speaker Bryan Carter of the Pennsylvania House of Representatives, Senate Majority Leader Jake Corman of the Pennsylvania Senate, Speaker Lee Chatfield of the Michigan House of Representatives, Senate Majority Leader Mike Shirkey of the Michigan Senate, Speaker Robin Vos of the Wisconsin State Assembly, Senate Majority Leader Howard Marklein of the Wisconsin Senate, Speaker David Ralston of the Georgia House of Representatives, Senate President Pro Tempore Butch Miller of the Georgia Senate, Speaker Russell Bowers of the Arizona House of Representatives, and Senate Majority Leader Rick Gray of the Arizona Senate are violating their duties under Article II by not voting on post-election certification of the Presidential electors so their votes can constitutionally count.

75. State legislative post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors are part of constitutionally-protected voting rights. Everyone who votes—distinguishable from those who don’t—have a constitutionally-protected interest in state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors. The Defendants violate those voting rights by counting ballots of Presidential electors without the constitutionally-required state legislative post-election certification.

C. Presidential post-election court proceedings—like the 2000 Bush v. Gore litigation, the 2020 Texas original action and the 2020 thirty post-election lawsuits in Defendant States—are in constitutional error and unnecessarily politicize the federal and state courts in a national way.

76. The Presidential post-election court proceedings—like the 2000 Bush v. Gore litigation, the 2020 Texas original action and the 2020 thirty post-election lawsuits in Defendant

States—are in constitutional error and unnecessarily politicize the federal and state courts—and in a nationwide way. Under Article II, all of those Presidential post-election cases should have been dismissed for lack of jurisdiction—and the plaintiffs should have been instructed to file their Presidential election contests with their respective state legislatures.

77. The Defendant States have election contest or recount laws, which apply to Presidential elections, but unconstitutionally preclude state legislative post-election certifications of Presidential votes and Presidential electors: Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-672; Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-521; Mich. Comp. Laws § 168.862; Wis. Stat. § 9.01; and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3351.

78. Interestingly, the Pennsylvania laws have a state legislative post-election certification process for its Governor and Lieutenant Governor elections—but not for President and Vice President. 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3312, et seq.

D. In 2000, the U.S. Supreme Court engaged in a Presidential post-election litigation in Florida.

79. In 2000, the U.S. Supreme Court engaged in Presidential post-election litigation in Florida. Bush v. Gore, 531 U.S. 98 (2000).

80. Plaintiffs claim, under Article II, that this post-election case in 2000 likely should have been dismissed for lack of jurisdiction with instructions for the Plaintiffs to file their election claims with the Florida state legislature.

E. In 2020, approximately thirty post-election lawsuits are filed in Defendants States regarding election official errors and improprieties.

81. Approximately thirty post-election lawsuits regarding Pennsylvania, Michigan, Wisconsin, Georgia and Arizona election official errors and improprieties were filed.<sup>54</sup>

---

<sup>54</sup>See “Postelection lawsuits related to the 2020 United States presidential election,” found at https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Postelection\_lawsuits\_related\_to\_the\_2020\_United\_States\_presidential\_election#Wood\_v.\_Raffensperger (last visited: Dec. 15, 2020). This complaint’s citations to the appendix, principally, detail lawsuit allegations found in these Pennsylvania, Michigan, Wisconsin, Georgia and

82. Plaintiffs claim, under Article II, that these post-election cases should have been dismissed for lack of jurisdiction with instructions that the Plaintiffs should file such claims with their respective state legislatures in Pennsylvania, Michigan, Wisconsin, Georgia and Arizona.

F. In 2020, Texas sued Pennsylvania, Michigan, Wisconsin and Georgia in the U.S. Supreme Court to adjudicate election irregularities and improprieties.

83. On December 7, 2020, Texas filed an original action in the U.S. Supreme Court, Case No. 20O155, against Pennsylvania, Michigan, Wisconsin and Georgia for election irregularities and improprieties. On December 9, Missouri and 16 other states filed a motion for leave to file an amicus curiae brief in support of Texas. On December 10, U.S. Representative Mike Johnson and 105 other members submitted a motion for leave to file amicus brief in support of Texas. On December 11, the U.S. Supreme Court dismissed the original action in a text order:

The State of Texas’s motion for leave to file a bill of complaint is denied for lack of standing under Article III of the Constitution. Texas has not demonstrated a judicially cognizable interest in the manner in which another State conducts its elections. All other pending motions are dismissed as moot. Statement of Justice Alito, with whom Justice Thomas joins: In my view, we do not have discretion to deny the filing of a bill of complaint in a case that falls within our original jurisdiction. See Arizona v. California, 589 U. S. ____ (Feb. 24, 2020) (Thomas, J., dissenting). I would therefore grant the motion to file the bill of complaint but would not grant other relief, and I express no view on any other issue.<sup>55</sup>

84. Plaintiffs claim, under Article II, that this post-election case filed in the U.S. Supreme Court should have been dismissed for lack of jurisdiction with instructions that voter in each state could file their respective claims with their respective state legislatures in Pennsylvania, Michigan, Wisconsin and Georgia.

---

Arizona lawsuits alleging election official errors and improprieties. In Defendants’ states, voter allegations exist which allege that the election officials’ errors and improprieties exceed the razor-thin margins of Presidential contests—as further herein.

<sup>55</sup> Plaintiffs agree that the State of Texas lacked standing, but the original action itself begs the question, “Is the U.S. Supreme Court the final adjudicator for certification of Presidential electors?” The Plaintiffs’ answer is no; the respective state legislatures are the final determiner of post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors—and, in a non-delegable way.

G. The Presidential electors for Biden and Trump in the Defendant States voted on December 14, but none of the Presidential Electors received state legislative post-election certification.

85. Under 3 U.S.C. §§ 5 and 6, the Presidential electors for Biden and Trump met and voted in their Defendant States on December 14.

86. The Presidential electors for Biden in the Defendant States were certified by state executive branch officials in the Defendant States under 3 U.S.C. §§ 5 and 6 and the respective state laws.

87. Neither the Presidential electors for Biden nor the Presidential electors for Trump in the Defendant States received a state legislative post-election affirmative vote for certification.

88. The Presidential electors for Biden in the Defendant States voted for Biden as President and Harris as Vice President.

89. The Presidential electors for Trump in the Defendant States voted for Trump as President and Pence as Vice President.<sup>56</sup>

90. Plaintiffs claim that none of these Presidential electors' votes should be counted by federal Defendants in the election of President and Vice President until the Presidential electors receive from their respective state legislatures an affirmative vote for post-election certification.

H. Under federal and state law, in the Defendant States, the respective state legislatures do not vote on post-election certification of Presidential electors.

91. Congress has enacted 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15 which significantly restrict state legislatures' constitutional prerogative to post-election certification of Presidential electors.

92. In turn, the state legislatures in the Defendant States have enacted state laws which are a perpetual and wholesale delegation of post-election certification to state executive branch officials—as they have done in Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B) (Arizona Secretary of State), Ga. Code

---

<sup>56</sup> See Michigan Trump Electors Certificate, Appendix 1471.

Ann. § 21-2-499 (B) (Georgia Secretary of State and Governor), Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 168.46 (Michigan State Board of Canvassers and Governor), Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) (Wisconsin Elections Commission); and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166 (Secretary of Commonwealth and Governor).

93. Further, the state constitutions of the Defendant States fail to require the state legislature to meet for post-election certification of the Presidential electors in violation of state legislative constitutional duties under Article II of the U.S. Constitution. Arizona's, Georgia's and Pennsylvania's Constitutions have the state legislature adjourned until January 2021.<sup>57</sup> Michigan's and Wisconsin's Constitutions permit the state legislature to be in session, but do not require a joint session of the state legislature to affirmatively vote for post-election certification of Presidential electors.<sup>58</sup>

I. Voters' allegations in each of the Defendant States—alleging election officials' absentee ballot errors and improprieties exceed Presidential vote margins—are constitutionally resolved by state legislative post-certifications of Presidential votes and Presidential electors—not in this Court or any other court.

94. Plaintiffs allege that voters allege in each of the Defendant States that election officials' absentee ballot errors and improprieties exceed Presidential vote margins.

95. The Defendant States' voters' claims should be constitutionally resolved by state legislative post-certifications of Presidential votes and Presidential electors—as Article II requires.

96. None of the voters' allegations in each of the Defendant States—that is the allegations stated further below—should be adjudicated in this Court or any other Court, because it is the exclusive constitutional prerogative of the state legislatures to determine post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors.

---

<sup>57</sup> Ariz. Const. Art. IV, Part 2, Sec. 3; Ga. Const. Art. III, § IV, ¶ 1(a). Pa. Const. Art. II, § 4.

<sup>58</sup> Mich. Const. Art. IV, § 13; Wis. Const. Art. IV, § 11.

J. Defendant States' voters allege Zuckerberg moneys gifted to urban election officials in Defendant States who violated absentee ballot security measures.

97. Defendant States' voters have alleged, in 2020, a systematic effort was launched in Defendant States, using $350,000,000 in private money sourced to Mark Zuckerberg, the Facebook billionaire, to illegally circumvent absentee voting laws to cast tens of thousands of illegal absentee ballots.<sup>59</sup>

98. Defendants States' votes have alleged that the Zuckerberg-funded private organization, the Center for Technology and Civic Life (CTCL), gifted millions of dollars to election officials in Democratic Party urban strongholds in Georgia, Wisconsin, Pennsylvania, Michigan and Arizona in order for those cities to facilitate the use of absentee voting: Fulton County (GA), Milwaukee (WI), Madison (WI), Philadelphia (PA), Wayne County (MI) and Maricopa County (AZ).<sup>60</sup>

99. Defendant States' voters have alleged that in these counties and cities receiving CTCL funds, election officials adopted various respective policies and customs eviscerating state law absentee ballot security measures such as witness address, name and signature requirements and voter address, name and signature requirements.<sup>61</sup>

100. Defendant States' voters have alleged that these urban election officials also used the CTCL funds for absentee ballot drop boxes treating urban voters preferentially to small-town and rural voters.<sup>62</sup>

---

<sup>59</sup> See App. 21-30; 31-38; and 1079-1112.

<sup>60</sup> Id.

<sup>61</sup> Id.

<sup>62</sup> Id.

K. The government's pre-election certification error rate of voting system's software and hardware is 0.0008%.

101. The federal government has a pre-election standard for state voting system's software and hardware.<sup>63</sup>

102. Under federal law, this maximum-acceptable error rate is one in 500,000 ballot positions, or, alternatively one in 125,000 ballots—0.0008 %.<sup>64</sup>

103. Section 3.2.1 of the voting systems standards issued by the Federal Elections Commission (FEC) which were in effect on the date of the enactment of the Help America Vote Act (HAVA) provides that the voting system shall achieve a maximum acceptable error rate in the test process of one in 500,000 ballot positions.<sup>65</sup>

104. A ballot position is every possible selection on the ballot, to include empty spaces. As stated in the voting systems standards (VSS), “[t]his rate is set at a sufficiently stringent level such that the likelihood of voting system errors affecting the outcome of an election is exceptionally remote even in the closest of elections.”<sup>66</sup>

105. An update to the FEC VSS was made by the Election Assistance Commission (EAC) to enhance the FEC VSS standards, which each state has adopted by law.<sup>67</sup>

106. The FEC VSS standard provides for an error rate of one in 125,000 ballots (0.0008%) as an alternative to the one in 500,000 ballot positions to make it easier to calculate the error rate.<sup>68</sup>

---

<sup>63</sup> See Expert Report of Dennis Nathan Cain (I), App. 52-59; 1411-1418.

<sup>64</sup> Id.

<sup>65</sup> Id.

<sup>66</sup> Id.

<sup>67</sup> Id.

<sup>68</sup> Id.

107. The FEC standards, which are incorporated into the Help America Vote Act § 301(a)(5), require that all systems be tested in order to certify that they meet the maximum-acceptable error rate set by federal law.<sup>69</sup>

L. Voters' allegations in each of the Defendant States support that election officials' absentee ballot errors and improprieties exceed Presidential vote margins.

108. The use of absentee and mail-in ballots skyrocketed in 2020, not only as a public-health response to the COVID-19 pandemic but also at the urging of mail-in voting's proponents, and most especially executive branch officials in Defendant States. According to the Pew Research Center, in the 2020 general election, a record number of votes—about 65 million—were cast via mail compared to 33.5 million mail-in ballots cast in the 2016 general election—an increase of more than 94 percent.<sup>70</sup>

109. In the wake of the contested 2000 election, the bipartisan Jimmy Carter-James Baker commission identified absentee ballots as “the largest source of potential voter fraud.”<sup>71</sup>

110. Concern over the use of mail-in ballots is not novel to the modern era,<sup>72</sup> but it remains a current concern.<sup>73</sup>

111. Absentee and mail-in voting are the primary opportunities for unlawful ballots to be cast.

---

<sup>69</sup> Id.

<sup>70</sup> Desilver, Drew. Most mail and provisional ballots got counted in past U.S. elections – but many did not. Pew Research Center. 10 November 2020. <https://www.pewresearch.org/fact-tank/2020/11/10/most-mail-and-provisional-ballots-got-counted-in-past-u-s-elections-but-many-did-not/> Accessed 12.18.20.

<sup>71</sup> Building Confidence in U.S. Elections: Report of the Commission on Federal Elections, at 46 (Sept. 2005).

<sup>72</sup> Dustin Waters, Mail-in Ballots Were Part of a Plot to Deny Lincoln Reelection in 1864, Wash. Post (Aug. 22, 2020)

<sup>73</sup> Crawford v. Marion Cty. Election Bd., 553 U.S. 181, 194-96 & n.11 (2008); see also Texas Office of the Attorney General, AG Paxton Announces Joint Prosecution of Gregg County Organized Election Fraud in Mail-In Balloting Scheme (Sept. 24, 2020); Harriet Alexander & Ariel Zilber, Minneapolis police opens investigation into reports that Ilhan Omar's supporters illegally harvested Democrat ballots in Minnesota, Daily Mail, Sept. 28, 2020.

112. Defendant States voters allege that as a result of expanded absentee and mail-in voting in Defendant States, combined with Defendant States' unconstitutional modification of statutory protections designed to ensure ballot integrity, Defendant States created a massive opportunity for fraud.

113. Defendant States voters allege that the Defendant States have made it difficult or impossible to separate the constitutionally tainted mail-in ballots from all mail-in ballots.

114. Defendant States voters allege that rather than augment safeguards against illegal voting in anticipation of the millions of additional mail-in ballots flooding their States, Defendant States materially weakened, or did away with, security measures, such as witness or signature verification procedures, required by their respective legislatures. Their legislatures established those commonsense safeguards to prevent—or at least reduce—fraudulent mail-in ballots.

115. Defendant States voters allege, in Defendant States, that Democrat voters voted by mail at two to three times the rate of Republicans. Thus, the Democratic candidate for President thus greatly benefited from this unconstitutional usurpation of legislative authority, and the weakening of legislative mandated ballot security measures.

116. Defendant States voters allege that the outcome of the Electoral College vote is directly affected by the constitutional violations committed by Defendant States. Defendant States violated the Constitution in the process of appointing presidential electors by unlawfully abrogating state election laws designed to protect the integrity of the ballots and the electoral process, and those violations proximately caused the unconstitutional appointment of presidential electors.

117. Plaintiffs will therefore be injured if Defendant States' unlawful certification of these Presidential electors, because the Presidential electors have not received state legislative post-election certification, is allowed to stand.

1. Commonwealth of Pennsylvania voters allege election official errors and improprieties which exceed the Presidential vote margin.<sup>74</sup>

118. Commonwealth of Pennsylvania voters allege election official errors and improprieties which exceed the Presidential vote margin.

119. Pennsylvania has 20 electoral votes, with a statewide vote tally currently estimated at 3,363,951 for President Trump and 3,445,548 for former Vice President Biden, a margin of 81,597 votes.<sup>75</sup>

120. Pennsylvania voters have alleged the number of votes affected by the various constitutional violations exceeds the margin of votes separating the candidates.

121. By letter dated December 13, 2019, the Auditor General of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, Eugene A. DePasquale, issued to the Governor of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania a Performance Audit Report of the Pennsylvania Department of State's Statewide Uniform Registry of Electors.<sup>76</sup>

122. The Performance Audit Report was conducted pursuant to an Interagency Agreement between the Pennsylvania Department of State and the Pennsylvania Department of the Auditor General.

123. The Performance Audit Report contained seven Findings, to wit:

- i. Finding One: As a result of the Department of State's denial of access to critical documents and excessive redaction of documentation, the Department of the Auditor General was severely restricted from meeting its audit objectives in an audit which the Department of State itself had requested.

---

<sup>74</sup> See Timeline of Electoral Policy Activities, Issues, and Litigation Pennsylvania, Michigan, Wisconsin, Georgia, Arizona, and Nevada August 2003 to November 2020, App. 1-20 (demonstrating full extent of inappropriate activities).

<sup>75</sup> WNWP 2020 Pennsylvania Election Results. <https://www.wnep.com/elections> (last visited Dec. 18, 2020).

<sup>76</sup> See Auditor General's Performance Audit Report, App. 413-604; see also App. 397-412.

- ii. Finding Two: Data analysis identified tens of thousands of potential duplicate and inaccurate voter records, as well as voter records for nearly three thousand potentially deceased voters that had not been removed from the SURE system.
- iii. Finding Three: The Department of State much implement leading information technology security practices and information technology general controls to protect the SURE system and ensure the reliability of voter registration.
- iv. Finding Four: Voter record information is inaccurate due to weakness in the voter registration application process and the maintenance of voter records in the SURE system.
- v. Finding Five: Incorporating edit checks and other improvements into the design of the replacement system for SURE will reduce data errors and improve accuracy.
- vi. Finding Six: A combination of a lack of cooperation by certain county election offices and PennDOT, as well as source documents not being available for seventy percent of our test sample, resulted in our inability to form any conclusions as to the accuracy of the entire population of voter records maintained in the SURE system.
- vii. Finding Seven: The Department of State should update current job aids and develop additional job aids and guidance to address issues such as duplicate voter records, records of potentially deceased voters on the voter rolls, pending applications, and records retention. See Auditor General's Performance Audit Report.<sup>77</sup>

124. In addition to the Findings, the Performance Audit Report contained specific detailed Recommendations to correct the significant deficiencies identified in the Findings of the Performance Audit Report.

125. In 2018, Secretary Boockvar was quoted as stating "Rock the Vote's web tool was connected to our system, making the process of registering through their online programs, and those of their partners, seamless for voters across Pennsylvania."<sup>78</sup>

---

<sup>77</sup> Supra.

<sup>78</sup> Rock the Vote, 2018 Annual Report, pg. 12. <https://www.rockthevote.org/wp-content/uploads/Rock-the-Vote-2018-Annual-Report.pdf>. (last visited Dec. 18, 2020).

126. In addition, Plaintiffs have obtained a sworn Affidavit from Jesse Richard Morgan, who was contracted to haul mail for the United States Postal Service within the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. Mr. Morgan's Affidavit alleges that he was directed to transport from New York to Pennsylvania what he believes to be completed Pennsylvania ballots in the 2020 General Election.<sup>79</sup>

127. Plaintiffs based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations that this matter is currently under investigation by various entities and that such investigation is essential to the determination of whether or not approximately 200,000 ballots were delivered into the Pennsylvania System improperly or illegally. Pending such determination, there is no possible way that the validity of Pennsylvania's Presidential Election could possibly be certified by anyone.

128. Based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, there is evidence of possible back-dating of ballots in the United States Postal facility at Erie, Pennsylvania. And, further, Francis X. Ryan's Report, discussed in detail below, evidences thousands of questionable or improper ballots cast in the 2020 Presidential Election in Pennsylvania.<sup>80</sup>

129. In addition, Plaintiffs have obtained a Declaration from Ingmar Njus in support of Mr. Morgan's Affidavit.<sup>81</sup>

130. Based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, in the run-up to the election, the Pennsylvania Supreme Court usurped the powers of the General Assembly when it permitted county boards of election to accept hand-delivered mail-in ballots at locations other than the respective offices of the boards of election, including through the use of drop-boxes arbitrarily located

---

<sup>79</sup> See Jesse Richard Morgan Declaration, App. 152-179; 605-632; see also Declaration of Leslie J. Brabandt, App. 187-189; see also Expert Declaration of Roland Smith, App. 190-200.

<sup>80</sup> See Francis X. Ryan Declaration, App. 660-666. For additional evidence, see App. 667-834.

<sup>81</sup> See Ingmar Njus Declaration, App. 183-186; 633-636.

throughout the county; and, when it extended the deadline for receipt of absentee and mail-in ballots by three days from 8:00 p.m. on Election Day to 5:00 p.m. on November 6, 2020.<sup>82</sup>

131. In the same Opinion, the Court held that "although the Election Code provides the procedure for casting and counting a vote by mail, it does not provide for the 'notice and opportunity to cure' ..."<sup>83</sup>

132. The Court went on to state "... we agree that the decision to provide a 'notice and opportunity to cure' procedure ... is one best suited for the Legislature."<sup>84</sup>

133. Of note, Secretary Boockvar agreed with the Court that Pennsylvania's Election Code does not provide a notice and opportunity to cure procedure.

134. Based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, despite the lack of any statutory authorization or legal authority, county boards of elections in democratic counties, such as, Montgomery County, routinely helped identify, facilitate and permitted electors to alter their defective absentee and mail-in ballots in violation of Pennsylvania's Election Code.<sup>85</sup>

135. In an October 31, 2020, e-mail, Frank Dean, Director of Mail-in Elections of Montgomery County emailed the latest list of confidential elector information to two other Montgomery County election officials, Lee Soltysiak and Josh Stein, and wrote:

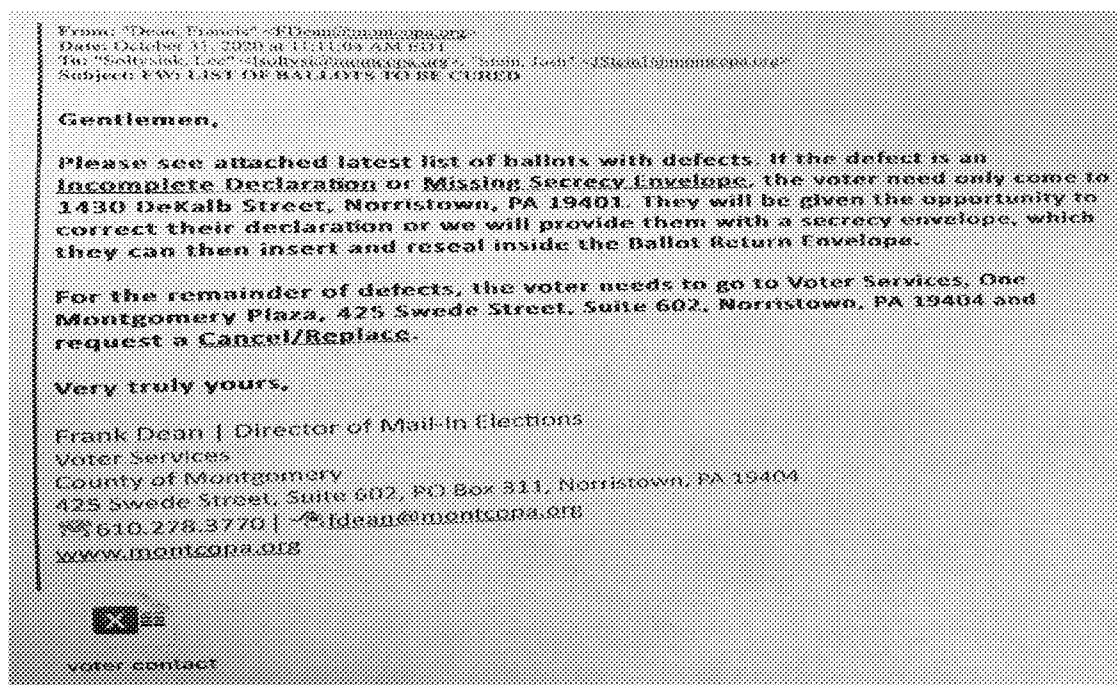

---

<sup>82</sup> Pennsylvania Democratic Party v. Boockvar, No. 133 MM 2020, 2020 WL 5554644, at *20 (Pa. Sept. 17, 2020); see also In re: November 3, 2020 General Election, 2020 WL 6252803, at *7 (Pa. Oct. 23, 2020).

<sup>83</sup> Id. at 20.

<sup>84</sup> Id. at 20.

<sup>85</sup> See Carlson Report on Voter Suppression through Executive and Administrative Actions, App. 31-38.

136. Based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, there is no authority within Pennsylvania's Election Code that authorizes election officials to manually alter the information contained within the SURE system for the purposes described by Director Dean.

137. In order to cancel or replace an elector's absentee or mail-in ballot, election officials would be required to manually alter or override the information contained in the Commonwealth's Statewide Uniform Registry of Electors ("SURE").

138. Based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, there is no authority within Pennsylvania's Election Code that authorizes election officials to cancel and/or replace an elector's absentee or mail-in ballot as described by Director Dean.

139. Further, based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, in violation of electors' right to secrecy in their ballots, election officials in democratic counties, such as Montgomery County, used the information gathered through their inspection of the ballot envelopes to identify the names of electors who had cast defective absentee or mail-in ballot envelopes.<sup>86</sup>

<sup>86</sup> Art. VII, Error! Main Document Only. §4 PA Const.

140. Based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, the Excel spreadsheet attached to Director Dean's October 31, 2020, e-mail notes that when mail-in or absentee ballot envelopes were found to be defective, some electors were provided with the opportunity to alter their ballot envelopes.

141. Based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, the photograph below shows some of the thousands of absentee and mail-in ballots pre-canvassed by the Montgomery County Board of Elections in violation of the Election Code.<sup>87</sup> These defective ballots were not secured in any way and were easily accessible to the public.<sup>88</sup>

142. Further, based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, the next picture shows page 1 or 124 pages that include thousands of defective ballot envelopes that Montgomery County elections officials were trying to "cure" in violation of Pennsylvania's Election Code and Constitution.

---

<sup>87</sup> This "Ballots for Sale" photo was taken on 11/01/2020 by Robert Gillies during a tour of the Montgomery County mail-in ballot storage and canvass facility.

<sup>88</sup> See Expert Declaration of Gregory Moulthrop, App. 48-51.

1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	10	11	12	13	14	15	16	17	18	19	20	21	22	23	24	25	26	27	28	29	30	31	32	33	34	35	36	37	38	39	40	41	42	43	44	45	46	47	48	49	50	51	52	53	54	55	56	57	58	59	60	61	62	63	64	65	66	67	68	69	70	71	72	73	74	75	76	77	78	79	80	81	82	83	84	85	86	87	88	89	90	91	92	93	94	95	96	97	98	99	100	101	102	103	104	105	106	107	108	109	110	111	112	113	114	115	116	117	118	119	120	121	122	123	124	125	126	127	128	129	130	131	132	133	134	135	136	137	138	139	140	141	142	143	144	145	146	147	148	149	150	151	152	153	154	155	156	157	158	159	160	161	162	163	164	165	166	167	168	169	170	171	172	173	174	175	176	177	178	179	180	181	182	183	184	185	186	187	188	189	190	191	192	193	194	195	196	197	198	199	200	201	202	203	204	205	206	207	208	209	210	211	212	213	214	215	216	217	218	219	220	221	222	223	224	225	226	227	228	229	230	231	232	233	234	235	236	237	238	239	240	241	242	243	244	245	246	247	248	249	250	251	252	253	254	255	256	257	258	259	260	261	262	263	264	265	266	267	268	269	270	271	272	273	274	275	276	277	278	279	280	281	282	283	284	285	286	287	288	289	290	291	292	293	294	295	296	297	298	299	300	301	302	303	304	305	306	307	308	309	310	311	312	313	314	315	316	317	318	319	320	321	322	323	324	325	326	327	328	329	330	331	332	333	334	335	336	337	338	339	340	341	342	343	344	345	346	347	348	349	350	351	352	353	354	355	356	357	358	359	360	361	362	363	364	365	366	367	368	369	370	371	372	373	374	375	376	377	378	379	380	381	382	383	384	385	386	387	388	389	390	391	392	393	394	395	396	397	398	399	400	401	402	403	404	405	406	407	408	409	410	411	412	413	414	415	416	417	418	419	420	421	422	423	424	425	426	427	428	429	430	431	432	433	434	435	436	437	438	439	440	441	442	443	444	445	446	447	448	449	450	451	452	453	454	455	456	457	458	459	460	461	462	463	464	465	466	467	468	469	470	471	472	473	474	475	476	477	478	479	480	481	482	483	484	485	486	487	488	489	490	491	492	493	494	495	496	497	498	499	500	501	502	503	504	505	506	507	508	509	510	511	512	513	514	515	516	517	518	519	520	521	522	523	524	525	526	527	528	529	530	531	532	533	534	535	536	537	538	539	540	541	542	543	544	545	546	547	548	549	550	551	552	553	554	555	556	557	558	559	560	561	562	563	564	565	566	567	568	569	570	571	572	573	574	575	576	577	578	579	580	581	582	583	584	585	586	587	588	589	590	591	592	593	594	595	596	597	598	599	600	601	602	603	604	605	606	607	608	609	610	611	612	613	614	615	616	617	618	619	620	621	622	623	624	625	626	627	628	629	630	631	632	633	634	635	636	637	638	639	640	641	642	643	644	645	646	647	648	649	650	651	652	653	654	655	656	657	658	659	660	661	662	663	664	665	666	667	668	669	670	671	672	673	674	675	676	677	678	679	680	681	682	683	684	685	686	687	688	689	690	691	692	693	694	695	696	697	698	699	700	701	702	703	704	705	706	707	708	709	710	711	712	713	714	715	716	717	718	719	720	721	722	723	724	725	726	727	728	729	730	731	732	733	734	735	736	737	738	739	740	741	742	743	744	745	746	747	748	749	750	751	752	753	754	755	756	757	758	759	760	761	762	763	764	765	766	767	768	769	770	771	772	773	774	775	776	777	778	779	780	781	782	783	784	785	786	787	788	789	790	791	792	793	794	795	796	797	798	799	800	801	802	803	804	805	806	807	808	809	810	811	812	813	814	815	816	817	818	819	820	821	822	823	824	825	826	827	828	829	830	831	832	833	834	835	836	837	838	839	840	841	842	843	844	845	846	847	848	849	850	851	852	853	854	855	856	857	858	859	860	861	862	863	864	865	866	867	868	869	870	871	872	873	874	875	876	877	878	879	880	881	882	883	884	885	886	887	888	889	890	891	892	893	894	895	896	897	898	899	900	901	902	903	904	905	906	907	908	909	910	911	912	913	914	915	916	917	918	919	920	921	922	923	924	925	926	927	928	929	930	931	932	933	934	935	936	937	938	939	940	941	942	943	944	945	946	947	948	949	950	951	952	953	954	955	956	957	958	959	960	961	962	963	964	965	966	967	968	969	970	971	972	973	974	975	976	977	978	979	980	981	982	983	984	985	986	987	988	989	990	991	992	993	994	995	996	997	998	999	1000
---	---	---	---	---	---	---	---	---	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	------

Page 1 of 124

143. Based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, in a further effort to circumvent Pennsylvania's Election Code and the prohibition against efforts to "cure" absentee and mail-in ballot envelopes, Secretary Boockvar, issued guidance, through Jonathan Marks, the Deputy Secretary of Elections and Commissions, just hours before Election Day directing county boards of elections to provide electors who have cast defective absentee or mail-in ballots with provisional ballots and to promptly update the SURE system.

144. The Deputy Secretary for Elections and Commissions issued an email which stated:

Sent: Monday, November 2, 2020 8:38 PM

To: Marks, Jonathan

Subject: Important DOS Email - Clarification regarding Ballots Set Aside During Pre-canvass

*** This is an external email. Please use caution when clicking on links and downloading attachments ***

Dear County Election Directors,

The Department of State has been asked whether county boards of elections can provide information to authorized representatives and representatives of political parties during the pre-canvass about voters whose absentee and mail-in ballots have been rejected. The Department issued provisional ballot guidance on October 21, 2020, that explains that voters whose completed absentee or mail-in ballots are rejected by the county board for reasons unrelated to voter qualifications may be issued a provisional ballot. To facilitate communication with these voters, the county boards of elections should provide information to party and candidate representatives during the pre-canvass that identifies the voters whose ballots have been rejected and should promptly update the SURE system.

Kind regards,

Jonathan M. Marks

Deputy Secretary for Elections & Commissions

Pennsylvania Department of State

302 North Office Building | Harrisburg, PA 17120

☎ 717.783.2035 📠 717.787.1734

✉ jmarks@pa.gov

145. Based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, in order to obtain a provisional ballot on Election Day, an elector who previously requested an absentee or mail-in ballot must sign an affidavit stating "I do solemnly swear or affirm that my name is ... and that this is the only ballot that I cast in this election."<sup>89</sup>

146. Based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, if an elector has already submitted an absentee or mail-in ballot and that ballot was received by his or her county board of elections, the elector cannot truthfully affirm that the provisional ballot is the only ballot cast by them in the election. The provisional ballot would in fact be a second ballot cast by the elector.

---

<sup>89</sup> 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. §3146.8; 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. §3050.

147. Based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, Secretary Boockvar's actions appear conveniently timed with the actions of the Democratic Party who apparently considered the matter to be URGENT.

148. Based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, Deputy Secretary Marks issued his email at 8:38 p.m. on November 2, 2020, on the eve of Election Day. Under the Election Code, provisional ballots are only used on Election Day. Less than twelve hours after Deputy Secretary Marks' email, the Democratic Party had printed handbills telling electors "Public records show that your ballot had errors and was not accepted." and to "Go in person to vote at your polling place today by 8:00 EST and ask for a provisional ballot."

149. Based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, the effect to utilize provisional ballots to "cure" defective absentee and mail-in ballots is in clear violation of Pennsylvania's Election Code. The number of provisional ballots cast in Pennsylvania is approximately 90,000 which is significantly higher than previous General Elections.

150. Further, based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, it is not clear what Deputy Secretary Marks intended when he stated "To facilitate communication with these voters, the county boards of elections should provide information to party and candidate representatives during the pre-canvassing that identifies the voters whose ballots have been rejected and should promptly update the SURE system."

151. Based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, Pennsylvania's Election Code makes no provision for the acceptance or rejection of ballots during the pre-canvassing process, nor does the Election Code provide boards of elections with the authority to "update the SURE system" so that an electors who previously submitted an absentee or mail-in ballot may vote with a provisional ballot.

152. The Pennsylvania Supreme Court ruled that county boards of elections are prohibited from using signature comparison to challenge and reject absentee or mail-in ballots.<sup>90</sup>

153. Based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, the Court's decision is contrary to the applicable provisions of Pennsylvania's Election Code.

154. In addition, the Pennsylvania Supreme Court ruled that county boards of elections could prevent and exclude designated representatives of the candidates and political parties, who are authorized by the Election Code to observe the pre-canvassing and canvassing of ballots, from being in the room during pre-canvassing and canvassing of ballots.<sup>91</sup>

---

<sup>90</sup> In Re: November 3, 2020, General Election, 149 MM 2020 (Oct. 23, 2020).

<sup>91</sup> See In Re: Canvassing Observation, 30 EAP 2020 (Nov. 17, 2020).

155. Based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, in predominantly Democratic counties, such as Philadelphia, Delaware and Montgomery Counties, authorized representative of the candidates and the Republican Party attempted to observe the actions of election officials; however, the authorized representatives were routinely denied the access necessary to properly observe the handling of ballot envelopes and ballots during the pre-canvassing and canvassing process.

156. Plaintiffs have obtained a sworn Affidavit from Gregory Stenstrom, who was appointed by the Delaware County Republican Party to observe the election process within Delaware County. Mr. Stenstrom attests to numerous election code violations by the Delaware County Board of Elections. Plaintiffs have numerous other Declarations regarding similar election code violations in other predominantly Democratic counties.<sup>92</sup>

157. Based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, absentee and mail-in ballots are required to be canvassed in accordance with subsection (g) of Section 3146.8 - Canvassing of official absentee and mail-in ballots.<sup>93</sup>

158. Based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, Pennsylvania's Election Code defines the term "pre-canvass" to mean "the inspection and opening of all envelopes containing official absentee ballots or mail-in ballots, the removal of such ballots from the envelopes and the counting, computing and tallying of the votes reflected on the ballots. The term does not include the recording or publishing of the votes reflected on the ballots."<sup>94</sup>

---

<sup>92</sup> See Gregory Stenstrom Declaration, Appendix pgs. 129-151; 637-659; see Expert Opinion of Anthony J. Couchenor, App. 42-47; see also expert opinion of Jovan Hutton Pulitzer, App. 90-118.

<sup>93</sup> 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. §3146.8(g) (1)(i-ii) & (1.1).

<sup>94</sup> 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 2602(q.1).

159. Prior to any pre-canvassing meeting, county boards of elections are required to provide at least forty-eight hours' notice by publicly posting a notice of a pre-canvass meeting on its publicly accessible Internet website.<sup>95</sup>

160. Each candidate and political party is entitled to have one designated and authorized representative in the room any time absentee and mail-in ballots are being canvassed by a board of elections.<sup>96</sup>

161. The candidates' watchers or other representatives are permitted to be present any time the envelopes containing absentee and mail-in ballots are opened.<sup>97</sup>

162. The candidates and political parties are entitled to have watchers present any time there is canvassing of returns.<sup>98</sup>

163. Based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, in predominantly Democratic counties, such as Montgomery, election would weigh absentee and mail-in ballot envelopes to determine whether secrecy envelopes were contained within the outer envelopes. Election officials would also review and inspect the absentee and mail-in ballot envelopes to determine whether they complied with the requirements of the Election Code.

164. Based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, this pre-canvassing of ballot envelopes is in direct violation of Pennsylvania's Election Code.

165. Based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, under the Election Code, county boards of elections are required, upon receipt of sealed official absentee and mail-in ballot envelopes, to

---

<sup>95</sup> 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3146.8(g)(1.1).

<sup>96</sup> 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. §3146.8(g)(2).

<sup>97</sup> 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. §3146.8.

<sup>98</sup> 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. §2650(a).

"safely keep the ballots in sealed or locked containers until they are to be canvassed by the county board of elections."<sup>99</sup>

166. County boards of elections are prohibited from pre-canvassing absentee and mail-in ballots prior to 7:00 a.m. of Election Day.<sup>100</sup>

167. As such, from the time ballot envelopes are received by county boards of elections through 7:00 a.m. on Election Day, the ballot envelopes are to be safely kept in sealed or locked containers.<sup>101</sup> Stated in a different way, county boards of elections are not permitted to remove absentee and mail-in ballot envelopes from their sealed or locked containers until the ballots are pre-canvassed at 7:00 a.m. on Election Day.

168. Based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, the Pennsylvania Supreme Court ruled that county boards of elections were not required to enforce or follow Pennsylvania's Election Code requirements for absentee and mail-in ballot envelopes, including the requirements related to elector signatures, addresses, dates, and signed declarations.<sup>102</sup>

169. During pre-canvassing, county boards of elections are required to examine each ballot cast to determine if the declaration envelope is properly completed and to compare the information with the information contained in the Registered Absentee and Mail-in Voters File.<sup>103</sup>

170. Only then are county boards of elections authorized to open the outer envelope of every unchallenged absentee or mail-in envelope in such a manner so as not to destroy the declaration executed thereon.<sup>104</sup>

---

<sup>99</sup> 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. §3146.8(a).

<sup>100</sup> 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3146.8(g)(1.1.)

<sup>101</sup> 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. §3146.8(a).

<sup>102</sup> In Re: Canvass of Absentee and Mail-in Ballots of November 3, 2020 General Election, 31 EAP 2020 (Nov. 23, 2020).

<sup>103</sup> 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3146.8(g)(3).

<sup>104</sup> 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3146.8(g)(4)(i).

171. Based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, in predominantly Democratic counties, such as Allegheny County, election officials disregarded the requirements of the Election Code and counted absentee and mail-in ballot ballots with defective elector signatures, addresses, dates, and signed declarations.<sup>105</sup> In other counties, such as Westmoreland, such ballots were not counted by the county board of elections.

172. In addition to substantial evidence of the violations of Pennsylvania's Election Code, as set forth above, Plaintiffs have produced an expert report authored by Francis X. Ryan who could testify and identify significant and dispositive discrepancies and errors which call into questions the results of the Presidential Election in Pennsylvania.<sup>106</sup>

173. Based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, as described above, the 2020 General Election in Pennsylvania was fraught with numerous violations of Pennsylvania's Election Code perpetrated by predominantly Democratic county election officials. In addition, there are countless documented election irregularities and improprieties that prevent an accurate accounting of the election results in the Presidential election.

174. Based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, many of the irregularities directly relate to the county boards of elections' handling of absentee and mail-in ballots; the pre-canvassing and canvassing of ballots; the failure to permit legally appropriate and adequate oversight and transparency of the process; and, the failure to maintain and secure ballot integrity and security throughout the election process.

175. Based on Pennsylvania voters' allegations, as such, the 2020 General Election results are so severely flawed that it is impossible to certify the accuracy of the purported results.

---

<sup>105</sup> In Re: Canvass of Absentee and Mail-in Ballots of November 3, 2020 General Election, 31 EAP 2020 (Nov. 23, 2020).

<sup>106</sup> See Francis X. Ryan Declaration, App. 660-666. For additional evidence see App. 667-834.

176. Based on analysis by data analyst Matthew Braynard and Professor Steven J. Miller, in Pennsylvania, the government data shows election officials' absentee ballot errors of 121,297 far exceed the margin of victory of 81,749.<sup>107</sup>

177. According to the Braynard-Miller analysis, the government data shows election officials' absentee ballot error rate of at least 1.43% which far exceeds federal law's pre-election certification error rate for voting systems' hardware and software of 0.0008%.<sup>108</sup>

Pennsylvania Voter Election Contest
Margin +81,749
Type of error*	Description		Margin
1) Unlawful Ballots	Estimate of ballots requested in the name of a registered Republican by someone other than that person <sup>109</sup>		53,909
2) Legal Votes Not Counted	Estimate of Republican ballots that the requester returned but were not counted <sup>110</sup>		44,892
Total Votes: 98,801	Error Rate (Compared to Total Vote)		1.43%
3) Illegal Votes Counted	Electors voted where they did not reside <sup>111</sup>		14,328
4) Illegal Votes Counted	Out of State Residents Voting in State <sup>112</sup>		7,426
5) Illegal Votes Counted	Double Votes <sup>113</sup>		742
TOTAL			121,297
	Of total votes cast 6,924,006

*May overlap.

<sup>107</sup> See Chart and Pennsylvania Declaration of Matthew Braynard, App. 1331-1340 ¶3.

<sup>108</sup> See Expert Report of Dennis Nathan Cain (III), App. 1433-1445.

<sup>109</sup> See Declaration of Steven J. Miller, App. 1325-1330.

<sup>110</sup> Id.

<sup>111</sup> See Pennsylvania Declaration of Matthew Braynard, App. 1331-1340 ¶3.

<sup>112</sup> See Pennsylvania Declaration of Matthew Braynard, App. 1331-1340.

<sup>113</sup> See Pennsylvania Declaration of Matthew Braynard, App. 1331-1340 ¶4.

2. State of Georgia voters allege election official errors and improprieties which exceed the Presidential vote margin.<sup>114</sup>

178. State of Georgia voters allege election official errors and improprieties which exceed the Presidential vote margin.

179. Georgia has 16 electoral votes, with a statewide vote tally currently estimated at 2,458,121 for President Trump and 2,472,098 for former Vice President Biden, a margin of approximately 12,670 votes.

180. The number of votes affected by the various constitutional violations exceeds the margin of votes dividing the candidates.

181. Based on Georgia voters' allegations, Georgia's Secretary of State, Brad Raffensperger, without legislative approval, unilaterally abrogated Georgia's statute governing the signature verification process for absentee ballots.<sup>115</sup>

182. O.C.G.A. § 21-2-386(a)(2) prohibits the opening of absentee ballots until after the polls open on Election Day: In April 2020, however, the State Election Board adopted Secretary of State Rule 183-1-14-0.9-.15, Processing Ballots Prior to Election Day.

183. Based on Georgia voters' allegations, that rule purports to authorize county election officials to begin processing absentee ballots up to three weeks before Election Day.

184. Based on Georgia voters' allegations, Georgia law authorizes and requires a single registrar or clerk—after reviewing the outer envelope—to reject an absentee ballot if the voter failed to sign the required oath or to provide the required information, the signature appears invalid, or the required information does not conform with the information on file, or if the voter is otherwise found ineligible to vote.<sup>116</sup>

---

<sup>114</sup> For full extent of inappropriate activities, see Timeline of Electoral Policy Activities, Issues, and Litigation Pennsylvania, Michigan, Wisconsin, Georgia, Arizona, and Nevada August 2003 to November 2020, Appendix 1-20.

<sup>115</sup> See Expert Declaration of Harry Haury, Appendix 69-89.

185. Georgia law provides absentee voters the chance to “cure a failure to sign the oath, an invalid signature, or missing information” on a ballot’s outer envelope by the deadline for verifying provisional ballots (i.e., three days after the election).<sup>117</sup> To facilitate cures, Georgia law requires the relevant election official to notify the voter in writing: “The board of registrars or absentee ballot clerk shall promptly notify the elector of such rejection, a copy of which notification shall be retained in the files of the board of registrars or absentee ballot clerk for at least two years.”<sup>118</sup>

186. Based on Georgia voters’ allegations, on March 6, 2020, in Democratic Party of Georgia v. Raffensperger, No. 1:19-cv-5028-WMR (N.D. Ga.), Georgia’s Secretary of State entered a Compromise Settlement Agreement and Release with the Democratic Party of Georgia (the “Settlement”) to materially change the statutory requirements for reviewing signatures on absentee ballot envelopes to confirm the voter’s identity by making it far more difficult to challenge defective signatures<sup>119</sup> beyond the express mandatory procedures.<sup>120</sup>

187. Based on Georgia voters’ allegations, among other things, before a ballot could be rejected, the Settlement required a registrar who found a defective signature to now seek a review by two other registrars, and only if a majority of the registrars agreed that the signature was defective could the ballot be rejected but not before all three registrars’ names were written on the ballot envelope along with the reason for the rejection. These cumbersome procedures are in direct

---

<sup>116</sup> O.C.G.A. § 21-2-386(a)(1)(B)-(C).

<sup>117</sup> O.C.G.A. §§ 21-2-386(a)(1)(C), 21-2-419(c)(2).

<sup>118</sup> O.C.G.A. § 21-2-386(a)(1)(B).

<sup>119</sup> See Expert Report of A.J. Jaghori, Appendix 39-41. See Settlement Agreement, Appendix 1222-1229.

<sup>120</sup> O.C.G.A. § 21-2-386(a)(1)(B).

conflict with Georgia's statutory requirements, as is the Settlement's requirement that notice be provided by telephone (i.e., not in writing) if a telephone number is available. Finally, the Settlement purports to require election officials to consider issuing guidance and training materials drafted by an expert retained by the Democratic Party of Georgia.

188. Based on Georgia voters' allegations, Georgia's legislature has not ratified these material changes to statutory law mandated by the Compromise Settlement Agreement and Release, including altered signature verification requirements and early opening of ballots. The relevant legislation that was violated by Compromise Settlement Agreement and Release did not include a severability clause.

189. Based on Georgia voters' allegations, this unconstitutional change in Georgia law materially benefitted former Vice President Biden. According to the Georgia Secretary of State's office, former Vice President Biden had almost double the number of absentee votes (65.32%) as President Trump (34.68%).

190. Based on Georgia voters' allegations, specifically, there were 1,305,659 absentee mail-in ballots submitted in Georgia in 2020. There were 4,786 absentee ballots rejected in 2020. This is a rejection rate of .37%. In contrast, in 2016, the 2016 rejection rate was 6.42% with 13,677 absentee mail-in ballots being rejected out of 213,033 submitted, which more than seventeen times greater than in 2020.<sup>121</sup>

191. Based on Georgia voters' allegations, if the rejection rate of mailed-in absentee ballots remained the same in 2020 as it was in 2016, there would be 83,517 less tabulated ballots in 2020. The statewide split of absentee ballots was 34.68% for Trump and 65.2% for Biden. Rejecting at the higher 2016 rate with the 2020 split between Trump and Biden would decrease Trump votes

---

<sup>121</sup> See Charles J. Cicchetti Declaration at ¶ 24, Appendix pgs. 1315-1324.

by 28,965 and Biden votes by 54,552, which would be a net gain for Trump of 25,587 votes. This would be more than needed to overcome the Biden advantage of 12,670 votes, and Trump would win by 12,917 votes. Regardless of the number of ballots affected, however, the non-legislative changes to the election rules violated Article II.

192. Further, based on Georgia voters' allegations, the Zuckerberg-funded absentee drop boxes caused a disparate impact in Georgia.<sup>122</sup>

193. Georgia is comprised of 159 counties. In 2016, Hillary Clinton garnered 1,877,963 votes in the state of Georgia.<sup>123</sup> Clinton won four counties in major population centers, Fulton (297,051), Cobb (160,121), Gwinnett (166,153), and Dekalb Counties (251,370).<sup>124</sup> These four counties represented 874,695 votes for Hillary Clinton.<sup>125</sup>

194. Georgia has 300 total drop boxes for electors to submit absentee ballots.<sup>126</sup>

195. In 2020, Georgia counties utilized CTCL funding to install additional drop boxes in areas that would make it easier for voters to cast their absentee ballot. The four counties won by the Clinton campaign contain a plurality of the drop boxes.

196. Fulton County was home to 39 drop boxes<sup>127</sup>, Cobb County provided 16 drop boxes,<sup>128</sup> 23 drop boxes in Gwinnett County<sup>129</sup>, and Dekalb County has 34 boxes.<sup>130</sup>

---

<sup>122</sup> See App. 1168-1234; 1477-1491.

<sup>123</sup> Georgia Election Results 2016 – The New York Times (nytimes.com)

<sup>124</sup> Georgia Election Results 2016 – The New York Times (nytimes.com)

<sup>125</sup> Georgia Election Results 2016 – The New York Times (nytimes.com)

<sup>126</sup> <https://georgiapeanutgallery.org/2020/09/28/drop-box-locations-for-november-3-2020-election/>

<sup>127</sup> Fulton County nearly doubles number of ballot drop off boxes (fox5atlanta.com)

<sup>128</sup> <https://www.cobbcounty.org/elections/news/6-additional-absentee-ballot-drop-boxes-available-september-23rd>

<sup>129</sup> https://www.gwinnettcountry.com/static/departments/elections/2020\_Election/pdf/BallotDropBoxMap\_2020.pdf

<sup>130</sup> <https://www.dekalbcountyga.gov/sites/default/files/users/user304/DeKalb%20Dropbox%20Locations%20103120%20V7.pdf>

197. These four localities account for 112 drop boxes, spread out over 1,587 square miles.<sup>131</sup> Meaning, voters in these four Clinton strongholds have one drop box for every 14 square miles. Meanwhile, in the remaining 155 counties, spread out over 55,926 square miles, a republican voter will find one drop box for every 294 square miles.

198. Based on Georgia voters' allegations, the effect of this unconstitutional change in Georgia election law, which made it more likely that ballots without matching signatures would be counted, had a material impact on the outcome of the election.<sup>132</sup>

199. Finally, in Georgia, analysis of government data by data analyst Matthew Braynard and Professor Qianying (Jennie) Zhang shows election officials' absentee ballot errors of 204,143 far exceed the margin of victory of 12,670.<sup>133</sup>

200. And, the Braynard-Zhang analysis of the government data shows election officials' absentee ballot error rate of at least 1.28% which far exceeds federal law's pre-election certification error rate for voting systems' hardware and software of 0.0008%.<sup>134</sup>

Georgia Voter Election Contest
Margin +12,670

Type of error*	Description	Margin
1) Unlawful Ballots	Estimate of the minimum number of absentee ballots requested which were not requested by the person identified in the state's database <sup>135</sup>	20,431
		43,688

<sup>131</sup> The areas for the respective counties are: Fulton 534 square miles; Cobb 345 square miles; Gwinnett 437 square miles; and DeKalb 271 square miles.

<sup>132</sup> See Appendix 1235-1311.

<sup>133</sup> See Chart and Georgia Expert Report of Matthew Braynard, Appendix pgs. 1350-1374.

<sup>134</sup> See Expert Report of Dennis Nathan Cain (III), Appendix 1433-1445.

<sup>135</sup> See Georgia Expert Report of Qianying (Jennie) Zhang, Appendix pgs. 1341-1349 ¶ 1.

2) Legal Votes Not Counted	Estimate of the minimum number of absentee ballots that the requester returned but were not counted <sup>136</sup>
Category 1 & 2 Total Votes: 64,119	Error Rate (Compared to Total Vote)	1.28%
3) Illegal Votes Counted	Electors voted where they did not reside <sup>137</sup>	138,221
4) Illegal Votes Counted	Out of state residents voting in Georgia <sup>138</sup>	20,312
5) Illegal Votes Counted	Double Votes <sup>139</sup>	395
TOTAL		204,143
	of total votes cast 4,998,482

*May overlap.

3. State of Michigan voters allege election official errors and improprieties which exceed the Presidential vote margin.<sup>140</sup>

201. State of Michigan voters allege election official errors and improprieties which exceed the Presidential vote margin.

<sup>136</sup> See Georgia Expert Report of Qianying (Jennie) Zhang, Appendix pgs. 1341-1349.

<sup>137</sup> See Georgia Expert Report of Matthew Braynard, Appendix pgs. 1350-1374. ¶3.

<sup>138</sup> See Georgia Expert Report of Matthew Braynard, Appendix pgs. 1350-1374.

<sup>139</sup> See Georgia Expert Report of Matthew Braynard, Appendix pgs. 1350-1374. ¶4.

<sup>140</sup> For full extent of inappropriate activities See Timeline of Electoral Policy Activities, Issues, and Litigation Pennsylvania, Michigan, Wisconsin, Georgia, Arizona, and Nevada August 2003 to November 2020, Appendix 1-20.

202. Michigan has 16 electoral votes, with a statewide vote tally currently estimated at 2,650,695 for President Trump and 2,796,702 for former Vice President Biden, a margin of 146,007 votes. In Wayne County, Mr. Biden's margin (322,925 votes) significantly exceeds his statewide lead.

203. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, the number of votes affected by the various constitutional violations exceeds the margin of votes dividing the candidates.

204. Michigan law generally allows the public the right to observe the counting of ballots. See MCL 168.765a(12) ("At all times, at least 1 election inspector from each major political party must be present at the absent voter counting place and the policies and procedures adopted by the secretary of state regarding the counting of absent voter ballots must be followed.").

205. The Michigan Constitution provides all lawful voters with "[t]he right to have the results of statewide elections audited, in such a manner as prescribed by law, to ensure the accuracy and integrity of elections."<sup>141</sup>

206. Indeed, "[a]ll rights set forth in this subsection shall be self-executing. This subsection shall be liberally construed in favor of voters' rights in order to effectuate its purposes."<sup>142</sup>

207. The public's right to observe applies to counting both in-person and absentee ballots.<sup>143</sup>

---

<sup>141</sup> Mich. Const. 1963, art 2, § 4(1)(h).

<sup>142</sup> Id. (emphasis added).

<sup>143</sup> Regrettably, Defendants and their agents have exclusive possession of the ballots, ballot boxes, and other indicia of voting irregularities so a meaningful audit cannot timely occur. Normally, "[a] person requesting access to voted ballots is entitled to a response from the public body within 5 to 10 business days; however, the public body in possession of the ballots may not provide access for inspection or copying until 30 days after certification of the election by the relevant board of canvassers." Op.Atty.Gen.2010, No. 7247, 2010 WL 2710362.

208. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, Michigan's election officials failed to grant meaningful observation opportunities to the public over the absentee ballots.<sup>144</sup>

209. Wayne County is the most populous county in Michigan.

210. Detroit is the largest city in Wayne County.

211. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, the City of Detroit's observation procedures, for example, failed to ensure transparency and integrity as it did not allow the public to see election officials during key points of absentee ballot processing in the AVCBs at TCF Arena (f/k/a Cobo Hall). Id.

212. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, these irregularities were repeated elsewhere in Wayne County, including in Canton Township, and throughout the State.<sup>145</sup>

213. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, for instance, when absentee ballots arrived, the ballots should have been in an envelope, signed, sealed (and delivered) by the actual voter. Often it was not.

---

<sup>144</sup> See Michigan Petitioners Appendix, Appendix 835; Affidavit of Andrew John Miller, Appendix 1313-1314 at ¶12; Affidavit of Angelic Johnson, Appendix 860-861 at ¶12; Affidavit of Zachary C. Larsen, Appendix 836-845 at ¶¶37-55; Affidavit of G Kline Preston IV, Appendix 886-889 at ¶8; Affidavit of Articia Boomer, Appendix 897-900 at ¶21; Affidavit of Phillip O'Halloran, Appendix 901-910 at ¶¶18-19; Affidavit of Robert Cushman, Appendix 928-930 at ¶3; Affidavit of Jennifer Seidl, Appendix 931-938 at ¶6; Affidavit of Andrew Sitto, Appendix 890-893 at ¶¶23; Affidavit of Kristina Karamo, Appendix 894-896 at ¶5; Affidavit of Jennifer Seidl, Appendix 931-938 at ¶35, 932 at ¶42; Affidavit of Cassandra Brown Appendix 939-944 at ¶33; Affidavit of Adam di Angeli, Appendix 951-967 at ¶30; Affidavit of Kayla Toma Appendix 977-983 at ¶¶14-15, 978 at ¶21, 979 at ¶¶31-32; Affidavit of Matthew Mikolajczak, Appendix 985-991; Affidavit of Braden Giacobazzi, Appendix 995-1000 at ¶¶3, 5, 996 at ¶8; Affidavit of Kristy Klamer Appendix 1006-1009 at ¶¶4-5, 1007 at ¶¶6-9.

<sup>145</sup> See, generally, Affidavits of Cassandra Brown Appendix 939-944 at ¶34; Lucille Ann Huizinga, Appendix 1016-1020 at ¶31; Laurie Ann Knott, Appendix 1010-1015 at ¶¶34-35; Marilyn Jean Nowak Appendix 1021-1023 at ¶17; Marlene K. Hager, Appendix 1024-1027 at ¶¶19-23; and Sandra Sue Workman Appendix 1028-1032 at ¶33 (allegedly sending ballots from Grand Rapids to TCF Center to be processed and counted).

214. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, ballots were taken from their envelopes and inspected to determine whether any deficiencies would obstruct the ballot from being fed through a tabulation machine. If any deficiencies existed (or were created by tampering), the ballot was hand duplicated.

215. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, Democrat officials and election workers repeatedly scanned ballots in high-speed scanners, often counting the same ballot more than once.<sup>146</sup>

216. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, the evidence will also show that these hand duplication efforts ignored the legislative mandate to have one person from each major party sign every duplicated vote (i.e., one Republican and one Democrat had to sign each "duplicated" ballot and record it in the official poll book).

217. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, several poll watchers, inspectors, and other whistleblowers witnessed the surge of unlawful practices described above.<sup>147</sup>

218. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, these unlawful practices provided cover for careless or unscrupulous officials or workers to mark choices for any unfilled elections or questions on the ballot, potentially and substantially affecting down ballot races where there are often significant undervotes, or causing the ballots to be discarded due to overvotes.

a. Michigan Voters Allege Election Malfeasance at the TCF Center Shows Widespread Problems.<sup>148</sup>

219. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, there were many issues of mistake, fraud, and other malfeasance at the TCF Center during the Election and during the counting process

---

<sup>146</sup> Affidavit of Articia Boomer, Appendix 897-899 at ¶¶10-11, 13; Affidavit of William Carzon, Appendix 973-976 at ¶8; Affidavit of Matthew Mikolajczak Appendix 985-991; Affidavit of Melissa Carone, Appendix 992-994 at ¶¶3-4.

<sup>147</sup> Affidavit of Melissa Carone, Appendix 992-994 at ¶9.

<sup>148</sup> See Expert Declaration of Dennis Nathan Cain (II), Appendix 60-68.

thereafter.<sup>149</sup>

220. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, on election day, election officials at the TCF Center systematically processed and counted ballots from voters whose names failed to appear in either the Qualified Voter File ("QVF") or in the supplemental sheets. When a voter's name could not be found, the election worker assigned the ballot to a random name already in the QVF to a person who had not voted.<sup>150</sup>

221. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, on election day, election officials at the TCF Center instructed election workers to not verify signatures on absentee ballots, to backdate absentee ballots, and to process such ballots regardless of their validity.<sup>151</sup>

222. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, after the statutory deadlines passed and local officials had announced the last absentee ballots had been received, another batch of unsecured and unsealed ballots, without envelopes, arrived in unsecure trays at the TCF Center.

223. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, there were tens of thousands of these late-arriving absentee ballots, and apparently every ballot was counted and attributed only to Democratic candidates.<sup>152</sup>

224. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, election officials at the TCF Center instructed election workers to process ballots that appeared after the election deadline and to inaccurately report or backdate those ballots as having been received before the November 3, 2020, deadline.<sup>153</sup>

225. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, election officials at the TCF Center

---

<sup>149</sup> See Affidavit of Senator Ruth Johnson, Appendix at 849-850.

<sup>150</sup> See Affidavit of Zachary C. Larsen, Appendix 836-845 at ¶33; Affidavit of Robert Cushman, Appendix 928-930 at ¶7.

<sup>151</sup> See Affidavit of Jessy Jacobs, Appendix 846-848 at ¶15.

<sup>152</sup> See Affidavit of John McGrath Appendix 968-972 at ¶8.

<sup>153</sup> See Affidavit of Jessy Jacobs, Appendix 846-848 at ¶17.

systematically used inaccurate information to process ballots.<sup>154</sup>

226. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, many times, the election workers overrode the software by inserting new names into the QVF after the election deadline or recording these new voters as having a birthdate of "1/1/1900," which is the "default" birthday.<sup>155</sup>

227. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, each day before the election, City of Detroit election workers and employees coached voters to vote for Joe Biden and the Democratic Party candidates.<sup>156</sup>

228. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, these workers, employees, and so-called consultants encouraged voters to vote a straight Democratic Party ticket. These election workers went over to the voting booths with voters to watch them vote and to coach them as to which candidates they should vote for.<sup>157</sup>

229. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, before and after the statutory deadline, unsecured ballots arrived at the TCF Center loading garage, loose on the floor not in sealed ballot boxes—with no chain of custody and often with no secrecy envelopes.<sup>158</sup>

230. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, election officials and workers at the TCF Center duplicated ballots by hand without allowing poll challengers to check if the duplication was accurate.<sup>159</sup>

---

<sup>154</sup> Affidavit of Cassandra Brown, Appendix 939-944 at ¶33.

<sup>155</sup> See Affidavit of John McGrath Appendix 968-972 at ¶8; Affidavit of Kristina Karamo Appendix 894-896 at ¶6; Affidavit of Robert Cushman, Appendix 928-930 at ¶¶10-12, 929 at ¶16; Affidavit of Jennifer Seidl, Appendix 931-938 at ¶¶52-53; Affidavit of Braden Giacobazzi Appendix 995-1000 at ¶10; Affidavit of Kristy Klammer Appendix 1006-1009 at ¶13.

<sup>156</sup> See Affidavit of Jessy Jacobs, Appendix 846-848 at ¶8.

<sup>157</sup> See Affidavit of Jessy Jacobs, Appendix 846-848 at ¶8.

<sup>158</sup> Affidavit of Articia Boomer, Appendix 897-900 at ¶8, 898 at ¶¶9, 18.

<sup>159</sup> See Affidavit Andrew Sitto, Appendix 890-893 at ¶9; Affidavit of Phillip O'Halloran Appendix 901-910 at ¶22; Affidavit of Cynthia O'Halloran Appendix 911-914; Affidavit of Eugene Dixon, Appendix 947-948 at ¶5; Affidavit of Jason Humes Appendix 918-922.

231. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, election officials repeatedly obstructed poll challengers from observing.<sup>160</sup>

232. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, election officials violated the plain language of the law MCL 168.765a by permitting thousands of ballots to be filled out by hand and duplicated on site without oversight from bipartisan poll challengers.

233. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, after poll challengers started uncovering the statutory violations at the TCF Center, election officials and workers locked credentialed challengers out of the counting room so they could not observe the process, during which time tens of thousands of ballots, if not more, were improperly processed.<sup>161</sup>

b. Michigan voters Allege Suspicious Funding and Training of Election Workers

234. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, in September, the Detroit City council approved a $1 million contract for the staffing firm P.I.E. Management, LLC to hire up to 2,000 workers to work the polls and to staff the ballot counting machines at the TCF Center. P.I.E. Management, LLC is owned and controlled by a Democratic Party operative.

235. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, a week after approval, P.I.E. Management, LLC began advertising for workers, stating, "Candidates must be 16 years or older. Candidates are required to attend a 3-hour training session before the General Election. The position offers two shifts and pay-rates: 1) From 7 am to 7 pm at $600.00; and 2) From 10 pm to 6 am at $650."

---

<sup>160</sup> See Affidavit of Zachary C. Larsen, Appendix 836-845 at ¶¶37-55; Affidavit of Janice Hermann, Appendix 915-917 at ¶5; Affidavit of Jennifer Seidl, Appendix 931-938 at ¶29, 932 at ¶42; Affidavit of Cassandra Brown, Appendix 939-944 at ¶33.

<sup>161</sup> See Affidavit of Zachary C. Larsen, Appendix 836-845 at ¶¶37-55; Affidavit of Janice Hermann, Appendix 915-917 at ¶5; Affidavit of Jennifer Seidl, Appendix 931-938 at ¶29, 932 at ¶32, 933 at ¶42; Affidavit of Cassandra Brown, Appendix 939-944 at ¶¶33; Affidavit of Anna England, Appendix 949-950 at ¶¶5,7; Affidavit of Matthew Mikolajczak Appendix 985-991; Affidavit of Braden Giacobazzi, Appendix 995-1000 at ¶6.

Consequently, these temporary workers were earning at least $50 per hour—far exceeding prevailing rates at most rural communities.

236. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, the evidence exists to show that this money and much more came from a single private source: Mark Zuckerberg and his spouse, through the charity called Center for Tech and Civic Life (CTCL), which paid over $400 million nationwide to Democrat-favoring election officials and municipalities.<sup>162</sup>

237. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, the improper private funding to Michigan exceeded $9.8 million.<sup>163</sup>

c. Michigan Voter Allege Forging Ballots on the QVF

238. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, whistleblowers observed election officials processing ballots at the TCF Center without confirming that the voter was eligible to vote.<sup>164</sup>

239. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, whistleblowers observed election officials assigning ballots to different voters, causing a ballot being counted for a non-eligible voter by assigning it to a voter in the QVF who had not yet voted.<sup>165</sup>

d. Michigan Voters Allege Changing Dates on Ballots

240. All lawful absentee ballots were supposed to be in the QVF system by 9:00 p.m. on November 3, 2020.

241. This deadline had to be met to ensure an accurate final list of absentee voters who returned their ballots before the statutory deadline of 8:00 p.m. on November 3, 2020.

---

<sup>162</sup> See, generally, Expert Report of James Carlson, Appendix pgs. 21-30.

<sup>163</sup> See Expert Report of James Carlson, Appendix pgs. 1079-1111.

<sup>164</sup> See Affidavit of Zachary C. Larsen, Appendix 836-845 at ¶12.

<sup>165</sup> See Affidavit of John McGrath Appendix 968-972 at ¶8; Affidavit of Kristina Karamo Appendix 894-896 at ¶6; Affidavit of Robert Cushman, Appendix 928-930 at ¶¶10-12, 929 at ¶16; Affidavit of Jennifer Seidl, Appendix 931-938 at ¶¶52-53; Affidavit of Braden Giacobazzi Appendix 995-1000 at ¶10; Affidavit of Kristy Klammer Appendix 1006-1009 at ¶13.

242. To have enough time to process the absentee ballots, election officials told polling locations to collect the absentee ballots from the drop-boxes every hour on November 3, 2020.

243. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, on November 4, 2020, a City of Detroit election whistleblower at the TCF Center was told to improperly pre-date the receive date for absentee ballots that were not in the QVF as if they had been received on or before November 3, 2020. The Whistleblower swore she was told to alter the information in the QVF to inaccurately show that the absentee ballots had been timely received. She estimates that this was done to thousands of ballots.<sup>166</sup>

e. Michigan Voters allege Double Voting.

244. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, an election worker in the City of Detroit observed several people who came to the polling place to vote in-person, but they had already applied for an absentee ballot.<sup>167</sup>

245. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, election officials allowed these people to vote in-person, and they did not require them to return the mailed absentee ballot or sign an affidavit that the voter lost or "spoiled" the mailed absentee ballot as required by law and policy.

246. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, this illicit process allowed people to vote in person and to send in an absentee ballot, thereby voting twice. This "double voting" was made possible by the unlawful ways in which election officials were counting and inputting ballots at the TCF Center from across the City's several polling places.

247. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, the Secretary of State's absentee ballot scheme exacerbated this "double voting," as set forth further in this Petition.<sup>168</sup>

---

<sup>166</sup> See Affidavit of Jessy Jacobs, Appendix 846-848 at ¶17.

<sup>167</sup> See Affidavit of Jessy Jacobs, Appendix 846-848 at ¶10; Affidavit of Anna England, Appendix 949-950 at ¶45.

<sup>168</sup> See, also, Expert Report of Matthew Braynard, Appendix 1112-1122 at ¶6.

f. Michigan Voters Allege Problems With First Wave of New Ballots at TCF Center.

248. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, early in the morning of November 4, 2020, tens of thousands of ballots were suddenly brought into the counting room at the TCF Center through the back door.<sup>169</sup>

249. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, these new ballots were brought to the TCF Center by vehicles with out-of-state license plates.<sup>170</sup>

250. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, whistleblowers claim that all of these new ballots were cast for Joe Biden.<sup>171</sup>

251. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, these ballots still do not share or have the markings establishing the proper chain of custody from valid precincts and clerks and are among the approximately 70% of unmatched AVCB errors identified by Palmer and Hartmann.

g. Michigan Voters Allege Problems With Second Wave of New Ballots at TCF Center.

252. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, the ballot counters needed to check every ballot to confirm that the name on the ballot matched the name on the electronic poll list—the list of all persons who had registered to vote on or before November 1, 2020 (the QVF).

253. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, the ballot counters were also provided with supplemental sheets which had the names of all persons who had registered to vote on either November 2, 2020 or November 3, 2020.

---

<sup>169</sup> See Affidavit of John McGrath Appendix 968-972 at ¶4 (around 3:00 a.m.); Affidavit of Articia Boomer, Appendix 897-900 at ¶18 (around 4:00 a.m.); Affidavit of William Carzon, Appendix 973-976 at ¶11 (around 4:00 a.m.); Affidavit Andrew Sitto, Appendix 890-893 at ¶16 (alleges about 4:30 a.m.).

<sup>170</sup> See Affidavit of Andrew Sitto, Appendix 890-893 at ¶15.

<sup>171</sup> See Affidavit of Andrew Sitto, Appendix 890-893 at ¶¶17-18.

254. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, the validation process for a ballot requires the name on the ballot match with a registered voter on either the QVF or the supplemental sheets.

255. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, at around 9:00 p.m. on Wednesday, November 4, 2020, several more boxes of ballots were brought to the TCF Center. This was a second wave of new ballots.

256. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, election officials instructed the ballot counters to use the "default" date of birth of January 1, 1900, on all of these newly appearing ballots.<sup>172</sup>

257. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, none of the names on these new ballots corresponded with any registered voter on the QVF or the supplemental sheets.<sup>173</sup>

258. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, despite election rules requiring all absentee ballots to be inputted into the QVF system before 9:00 p.m. the day before, election workers inputted these new ballots into the QVF, manually adding each voter to the list after the deadline.

259. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, almost all of these new ballots were entered into the QVF using the "default" date of birth of January 1, 1900.<sup>174</sup>

260. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, these newly received ballots were either fabricated or apparently cast by persons who were not registered to vote before the polls closed at 8:00 p.m. on election day.

---

<sup>172</sup> See Affidavit of John McGrath Appendix 968-972 at ¶8; Affidavit of Kristina Karamo Appendix 894-896 at ¶6; Affidavit of Robert Cushman, Appendix 928-930 at ¶¶10-12, 929 at ¶16; Affidavit of Jennifer Seidl, Appendix 931-938 at ¶¶52-53; Affidavit of Braden Giacobazzi Appendix 995-1000 at ¶10; Affidavit of Kristy Klammer Appendix 1006-1009 at ¶13.

<sup>173</sup> See Affidavit of John McGrath, Appendix 968-972 at ¶¶7, 14, 969 at ¶¶16-18.

<sup>174</sup> See Affidavit of John McGrath, Appendix 968-972 at ¶8; Affidavit of Kristina Karamo, Appendix 894-896 at ¶6; Affidavit of Robert Cushman, Appendix 928-930 at ¶¶10-12, 929 at ¶16; Affidavit of Jennifer Seidl, Appendix 931-938 at ¶¶52-53; Affidavit of Braden Giacobazzi, Appendix 995-1000 at ¶10; Affidavit of Kristy Klammer, Appendix 1006-1009 at ¶13.

261. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, these ballots still do not share or have the markings establishing the proper chain of custody from valid precincts and clerks and are among the approximately 70% of unmatched AVCB errors identified by Palmer and Hartmann.<sup>175</sup>

262. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, this means there were more votes tabulated than there were ballots in over 71% of the 134 AVCBs in Detroit. That equates to over 95 AVCB being significantly "off." Id.

263. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, according to public testimony before the state canvassers on November 23, City of Detroit Election Consultant Daniel Baxter admitted in some instances the imbalances exceeded 600 votes per AVCB. He did not reveal the total disparity.

h. Michigan Voters Allege a Concealment of the Malfeasance in Violation of Michigan law.

264. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, many election challengers were denied access to observe the counting process by election officials at the TCF Center.<sup>176</sup>

265. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, after denying access to the counting rooms, election officials at the TCF Center used large pieces of cardboard to block the windows to the counting room, thereby preventing anyone from watching the ballot counting process.<sup>177</sup>

---

<sup>175</sup> See generally Affidavits of Monica Palmer and William Hartman, Appendix 851-859 at ¶¶6 and 852 at ¶14.

<sup>176</sup> See Affidavit of Angelic Johnson, Appendix 860-861 at ¶12; Affidavit of Zachary C. Larsen, Appendix 836-845 at ¶¶37-55; Affidavit of G Kline Preston IV, Appendix 886-889 at ¶8; Affidavit of Articia Boomer, Appendix 897-900 at ¶21; Affidavit of Phillip O'Halloran, Appendix 901-910 at ¶¶18-19; Affidavit of Robert Cushman, Appendix 928-930 at ¶3; Affidavit of Jennifer Seidl, Appendix 931-938 at ¶6; Affidavit of Andrew Sitto, Appendix 890-893 at ¶23; Affidavit of Kristina Karamo, Appendix 894-896 at ¶5; Affidavit of Jennifer Seidl, Appendix 931-938 at ¶35, 932 at ¶42; Affidavit of Cassandra Brown Appendix 939-944 at ¶33; Affidavit of Adam di Angeli Appendix 951-967 at ¶30; Affidavit of Kayla Toma Appendix 977-983 at ¶¶14-15, 979 at ¶21, 980 at ¶¶31-32; Affidavit of Matthew Mikolajczak Appendix 985-991; Affidavit of Braden Giacobazzi Appendix 995-1000 at ¶¶3, 5, 996 at ¶8; Affidavit of Kristy Klamer Appendix 1006-1009 at ¶¶4-5, 1007 at ¶¶6-9.

<sup>177</sup> See Affidavit of Zachary C. Larsen, Appendix 836-845 at ¶52; Affidavit of John McGrath Appendix 968-972 at ¶10; Affidavit of Andrew Sitto, Appendix 890-893 at ¶22.

266. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, election officials have continued to conceal their efforts by refusing meaningful bipartisan access to inspect the ballots. Even if Republicans were involved in oversight roles by statute (such as with the Wayne County Canvassing Board), the Republican members have been harassed, threatened, and doxed (including publicly revealing where their children go to school) to pressure them to capitulate and violate their statutory duties. This conduct is beyond the pale and shocking to the conscience.<sup>178</sup>

i. Michigan voters allege unsecured QVF Access further Violating MCL 168.765a, *et seq.

267. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, whenever an absentee voter application or in-person absentee voter registration was finished, election workers at the TCF Center were instructed to input the voter's name, address, and date of birth into the QVF system.

268. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, the QVF system can be accessed and edited by any election processor with proper credentials in the State of Michigan at any time and from any location with Internet access.

269. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, this access permits anyone with the proper credentials to edit when ballots were sent, received, and processed from any location with Internet access.

270. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, many of the counting computers within the counting room had icons that revealed that they were connected to the Internet.

---

<sup>178</sup> See Affidavit of William Hartman; Appendix 851-856 at ¶¶8; Affidavit of Monica Palmer, Appendix 857-859 at ¶¶18-22, and 24; Affidavit of Dr. Phillip O'Halloran, Appendix 901-910 at ¶¶24-25; Affidavit of Jennifer Seidl, Appendix 931-938 at ¶23, 932 at ¶¶27, 30-31, 933 at ¶¶36-37; Affidavit of Eugene Dixon, Appendix 947-48 at ¶9; Affidavit of Matthew Mikolajczak, Appendix 985-991; Affidavit of Melissa Carone Appendix 992-994 at ¶12; Affidavit of Braden Giacobazzi, Appendix 995-1000 at ¶3, 996 at ¶7, 997 at 12, 998 at ¶¶12-14; Affidavit of Kaya Toma Appendix 977-983 at ¶15; Affidavit of Kristy Klamer Appendix 1009-1009 at ¶¶4-5, 1010 at ¶¶6-9.

271. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, Secretary of State Benson executed a contract to give a private partisan group, Rock the Vote, unfettered real-time access to Michigan's QVF.<sup>179</sup>

272. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, Benson sold or gave Michigan citizens' private voter information to private groups in furtherance of her own partisan goals.

273. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, Benson and the State repeatedly concealed this unlawful contract and have refused to tender a copy despite several lawful requests for the government contract under FOIA.

274. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, improper access to the QVF was one of the chief categories of serious concern identified by the Michigan Auditor General's Report.<sup>180</sup>

275. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, a poll challenger witnessed tens of thousands of ballots, and possibly more, being delivered to the TCF Center that were not in any approved, sealed, or tamper-proof container.

276. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, large quantities of ballots were delivered to the TCF Center in what appeared to be mail bins with open tops.<sup>181</sup> See the photo of the TCF Center below:

---

<sup>179</sup> See Rock the Vote Agreement, Appendix 1152-1167.

<sup>180</sup> See Appendix pgs. 1039-1078 at material finding #2

<sup>181</sup> See Affidavit of Daniel Gustafson, Appendix 945-946 at ¶¶4-6.

277. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, these ballot bins and containers did not have lids, were unsealed, and could not have a metal seal.<sup>182</sup>

278. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, some ballots were found unsecured on the public sidewalk outside the Department of Elections in the City of Detroit, reinforcing the claim that boxes of ballots arrived at the TCF Center unsealed, with no chain of custody, and with no official markings. A photograph of ballots found on the sidewalk outside the Department of Elections appears below:

279. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, the City of Detroit held a drive-in ballot drop off where individuals would drive up and drop their ballots into an unsecured tray. No verification was done. This was not a secured drop-box with video surveillance. To encourage this practice, free food and beverages were provided to those who dropped off their ballots using this method.<sup>183</sup>

---

<sup>182</sup> See Affidavit of Rhonda Webber, Appendix 877-879 at ¶3.

j. Michigan Voters Allege a Breaking of the Seal of Secrecy Undermines Constitutional Liberties under Michigan Constitution Art 2, § 4(1)(a).

280. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, many times, election officials at the TCF Center broke the seal of secrecy for ballots to check which candidates the individual voted for on his or her ballot, thereby violating the voter's expectation of privacy.<sup>184</sup>

281. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, voters in Michigan have a constitutional right to open elections, and the Michigan Legislature provided them the right to vote in secret. The election officials' conduct, together with others, violates both of these hallmark principles.<sup>185</sup>

282. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, in Michigan, it is well-settled that the election process is supposed to be transparent and the voter's ballot secret, not the other way around.

283. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, the election officials' absentee ballot scheme has improperly revealed voters' preferences exposing Petitioners' and similarly-situated voters to dilution or spoliation while simultaneously obfuscating the inner workings of the election process.

284. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, now the Michigan election officials seek to perform an "audit" on themselves.

k. Michigan Voters Allege Statewide Irregularities Over Absentee Ballots Reveal Widespread Mistake or Fraud.

285. When a person requested an absentee ballot either by mail or in-person, that person needed to sign the absentee voter application.

---

<sup>183</sup> See Affidavit of Cynthia Cassell Appendix 862-876 at ¶3 and 863 ¶¶9-10.

<sup>184</sup> See Affidavit of Zachary C. Larsen; Appendix 836-845 at ¶16-18, 20.

<sup>185</sup> See Affidavit of Jennifer Seidl, Appendix 931-938 at ¶18.

286. When the voter returned their absentee ballot to be counted, the voter was required to sign the outside of the envelope that contained the ballot.

287. Election officials who process absentee ballots are required to compare the signature on the absentee ballot application with the signature on the absentee ballot envelope.<sup>186</sup>

288. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, election officials at the TCF Center, for example, instructed workers not to validate or compare signatures on absentee ballot applications and absentee ballot envelopes to ensure their authenticity and validity.<sup>187</sup>

289. Michigan law requires absentee votes to be counted by election inspectors in a particular manner. It requires, in relevant part:

(10) The oaths administered under subsection (9) must be placed in an envelope provided for the purpose and sealed with the red state seal. Following the election, the oaths must be delivered to the city or township clerk. Except as otherwise provided in subsection (12), a person in attendance at the absent voter counting place or combined absent voter counting place shall not leave the counting place after the tallying has begun until the polls close. Subject to this subsection, the clerk of a city or township may allow the election inspectors appointed to an absent voter counting board in that city or township to work in shifts. A second or subsequent shift of election inspectors appointed for an absent voter counting board may begin that shift at any time on election day as provided by the city or township clerk. However, an election inspector shall not leave the absent voter counting place after the tallying has begun until the polls close. If the election inspectors appointed to an absent voter counting board are authorized to work in shifts, at no time shall there be a gap between shifts and the election inspectors must never leave the absent voter ballots unattended. At all times, at least 1 election inspector from each major political party must be present at the absent voter counting place and the policies and procedures adopted by the secretary of state regarding the counting of absent voter ballots must be followed. A person who causes the polls to be closed or who discloses an election result or in any manner characterizes how any ballot being counted has been voted in a voting precinct before the time the polls can be legally closed on election day is guilty of a felony.<sup>188</sup>

290. Under MCL 168.31, the Secretary of State can issue instructions and rules consistent with Michigan statutes and the Constitution that bind local election authorities. Likewise, under

---

<sup>186</sup> See Affidavit of Jennifer Seidl, Appendix 931-938 at ¶60.

<sup>187</sup> See Affidavit of Jessy Jacobs, Appendix 846-848 at ¶15.

<sup>188</sup> MCL 168.765a (10) (emphasis added).

MCL 168.765a(13), the Secretary can develop instructions consistent with the law for the conduct of Absent Voter Counting Boards (“AVCB”) or combined AVCBs. “The instructions developed under [] subsection [13] are binding upon the operation of an absent voter counting board or combined absent voter counting board used in an election conducted by a county, city, or township.”<sup>189</sup>

291. Benson also promulgated an election manual that requires bipartisan oversight:

Each ballot rejected by the tabulator must be visually inspected by an election inspector to verify the reason for the rejection. If the rejection is due to a false read the ballot must be duplicated by two election inspectors who have expressed a preference for different political parties. Duplications may not be made until after 8 p.m. in the precinct (place the ballot requiring duplication in the auxiliary bin). At an AV counting board duplications can be completed throughout the day. NOTE: The Bureau of Elections has developed a video training series that summarizes key election day management issues, including a video on Duplicating Ballots. These videos can be accessed at the Bureau of Elections web site at www.michigan.gov/elections; under “Information for Election Administrators”; Election Day Management Training Videos. Election Officials Manual, Michigan Bureau of Elections, Chapter 8, last revised October 2020.<sup>190</sup>

292. Based on Michigan voters’ allegations, election officials at the TCF Center flouted § 168.765a because there were not, at all times, at least one inspector from each political party at the absentee voter counting place. Rather, the many tables assigned to precincts under the authority of the AVCB were staffed by inspectors for only one party. Those inspectors alone were deciding on the processing and counting of ballots.<sup>191</sup>

293. Based on Michigan voters’ allegations, this processing included the filling out of brand new “cure” or “duplicate” ballots. The process the election officials sanctioned worked in this way. When an absentee ballot was processed and approved for counting, it was fed into a counting machine. Some ballots were rejected—that is, they were a “false read”—because of tears, staining

---

<sup>189</sup> MCL 168.765a(13).

<sup>190</sup> https://www.michigan.gov/documents/sos/VIII\_Absent\_Voter\_County\_Boards\_265998\_7.pdf (emphasis added).

<sup>191</sup> See Affidavit of Jennifer Seidl, Appendix 931-938 at ¶9; Affidavit of Eugene Dixon, Appendix 947-948 at ¶5; Affidavit of Mellissa Carone, Appendix 992-994 at ¶5.

(such as coffee spills), over-votes, and other errors. In some of these cases, inspectors could visually inspect the rejected ballot and determine what was causing the machine to find a “false read.” When this happened, the inspectors could duplicate the ballot, expressing the voter’s intent in a new ballot that could then be fed into the machine and counted.

294. Under § 168.765a and the Secretary of State’s controlling manual, as cited above, an inspector from each major party must be present and must sign to show that they approve of the duplication.

295. Based on Michigan voters’ allegations, rather than following this controlling mandate, the AVCB was allowing a Democratic Party inspector only to fill out a duplicate. Republicans would sign only “if possible.”<sup>192</sup> A photograph evidencing this illicit process appears below:

296. Based on Michigan voters’ allegations, the TCF Center election officials allowed hundreds or thousands of ballots to be “duplicated” solely by the Democratic Party inspectors and then counted in violation of Michigan election law.<sup>193</sup>

<sup>192</sup> See Affidavit of Patricia Blackmer, Appendix 923-927 at ¶11.

<sup>193</sup> See Affidavit of Zachary C. Larsen, Appendix 836-845 at ¶¶37-55; Affidavit of Janice Hermann, Appendix 915-917 at ¶¶4-5; Affidavit of Jennifer Seidl, Appendix 931-938 at ¶29, 933 at ¶42; Affidavit of Cassandra Brown, Appendix 939-944 at ¶¶33; Affidavit of Phillip O’Halloran, Appendix 901-910 at ¶22; Affidavit of Anna England, Appendix 949-950 at ¶8.

297. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, according to eyewitness accounts, election officials at the TCF Center habitually and systematically disallowed election inspectors from the Republican Party to be present in the voter counting place and refused access to election inspectors from the Republican party to be within a close enough distance from the absentee voter ballots to see for whom the ballots were cast.

298. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, election officials at the TCF Center refused entry to official election inspectors from the Republican Party into the counting place to observe the counting of absentee voter ballots. Election officials even physically blocked and obstructed election inspectors from the Republican party by adhering large pieces of cardboard to the transparent glass doors so the counting of absent voter ballots was not viewable.<sup>194</sup>

299. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, absentee ballots from military members, who tend to vote Republican in the general elections, were counted separately at the TCF Center. All (100%) of the military absentee ballots had to be duplicated by hand because the form of the ballot was such that election workers could not run them through the tabulation machines used at the TCF Center.<sup>195</sup>

300. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, these military ballots were supposed to be the last ones counted, but there was another large drop of ballots that occurred during the counting of the military absentee ballots.<sup>196</sup>

---

<sup>194</sup> See Affidavit of Zachary C. Larsen, Appendix 836-845 at ¶¶37-55; Affidavit of Janice Hermann, Appendix 915-917 at ¶5; Affidavit of Jennifer Seidl, Appendix 931-938 at ¶29, 932 at ¶32, 933 at ¶42; Affidavit of Cassandra Brown, Appendix 939-944 at ¶¶33; Affidavit of Anna England, Appendix 949-950 at ¶¶5,7; Affidavit of Matthew Mikolajczak, Appendix 985-991; Affidavit of Braden Giacobazzi, Appendix 995-1000 at ¶6.

<sup>195</sup> See Affidavit of Janice Hermann, Appendix 915-917 at ¶16.

<sup>196</sup> Id. see also, Affidavit of Robert Cushman, Appendix 928-930 at ¶¶4-5.

301. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, the military absentee ballot count at the TCF Center occurred after the Republican challengers and poll watchers were kicked out of the counting room.<sup>197</sup>

302. The Michigan Legislature also requires City Clerks to post the following absentee voting information anytime an election is conducted that involves a state or federal office:

- a. The clerk must post before 8:00 a.m. on Election Day: 1) the number of absent voter ballots distributed to absent voters 2) the number of absent voter ballots returned before Election Day and 3) the number of absent voter ballots delivered for processing.
- b. The clerk must post before 9:00 p.m. on Election Day: 1) the number of absent voter ballots returned on Election Day 2) the number of absent voter ballots returned on Election Day which were delivered for processing 3) the total number of absent voter ballots returned both before and on Election Day and 4) the total number of absent voter ballots returned both before and on Election Day which were delivered for processing.
- c. The clerk must post immediately after all precinct returns are complete: 1) the total number of absent voter ballots returned by voters and 2) the total number of absent voter ballots received for processing.<sup>198</sup>

303. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, the clerk for the City of Detroit failed to post by 8:00 a.m. on "Election Day" the number of absentee ballots distributed to absent voters and failed to post before 9:00 p.m. the number of absent voter ballots returned both before and on "Election Day."

304. According to Michigan Election law, all absentee voter ballots must be returned to the clerk before polls close at 8 p.m.<sup>199</sup> Any absentee voter ballots received by the clerk after the close of the polls on election day should not be counted.

305. The Michigan Legislature allows for early counting of absentee votes before the closings of the polls for large jurisdictions, such as the City of Detroit and Wayne County.

---

<sup>197</sup> Id. Affidavit of Jennifer Seidl, Appendix 931-938 at ¶42.

<sup>198</sup> See MCL 168.765(5).

<sup>199</sup> MCL 168.764a.

306. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, receiving tens of thousands more absentee ballots in the early morning hours after Election Day and after the counting of the absentee ballots had already concluded, without proper oversight, with tens of thousands of ballots attributed to just one candidate, Joe Biden, confirms that election officials failed to follow proper election protocols and established Michigan election law.<sup>200</sup>

307. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, missing the statutory deadline proscribed by the Michigan Legislature for turning in the absentee ballot or timely updating the QVF invalidates the vote under Michigan Election Law and the United States Constitution.

308. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, poll challengers observed election workers and supervisors writing on ballots themselves to alter them, apparently manipulating spoiled ballots by hand and then counting the ballots as valid, counting the same ballot more than once, adding information to incomplete affidavits accompanying absentee ballots, counting absentee ballots returned late, counting unvalidated and unreliable ballots, and counting the ballots of "voters" who had no recorded birthdates and were not registered in the QVF or on any supplemental sheets.<sup>201</sup>

1. Michigan Voters Allege that Flooding the Election with Absentee Ballots was Improper.

309. Michigan does not permit "mail-in" ballots per se, and for good reason: mail-in ballots facilitate fraud and dishonest elections.<sup>202</sup>

---

<sup>200</sup> See Affidavit of John McGrath Appendix 968-972 at ¶4; Affidavit of Robert Cushman, Appendix 928-930 at ¶14.

<sup>201</sup> See Affidavit of Angelic Johnson Appendix 860-861 at ¶7; Affidavit of Adam di Angeli Appendix 951-967 at ¶61; see also, Affidavit of John McGrath, supra; Affidavit of Kristina Karamo, supra; Affidavit of Robert Cushman, supra; Affidavit of Jennifer Seidl, supra; Affidavit of Braden Giacobazzi, supra; Affidavit of Kristy Klammer, supra.

<sup>202</sup> See, e.g., Veasey v Abbott, 830 F3d 216, 256, 263 (5th Cir. 2016) (observing that "mail-in ballot fraud is a significant threat—unlike in-person voter fraud," and comparing "in-person voting—a form of

310. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, Secretary of State Benson's absentee ballot scheme, as explained above, achieved the same purpose as mail-in ballots—contrary to Michigan law. In the most charitable light, this was profoundly naïve and cut against the plain language and clear intent of the Michigan Legislature to limit fraud. More cynically, this was an intentional effort to favor her preferred candidates.

311. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, Benson put this scheme in place because it is generally understood that Republican voters were more likely to vote in-person. This trend has been true for decades and proved true with this Election too.<sup>203</sup>

312. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, to counter this (i.e., the fact that Republicans are more likely than Democrats to vote in-person), Benson implemented a scheme to permit mail-in voting, leading to this dispute and the absentee ballot scheme that unfairly favored Democrats over Republicans.

313. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, in her letter accompanying her absentee ballot scheme, Benson misstated, "You have the right to vote by mail in every election." Playing on the fears created by the current pandemic, Benson encouraged voting "by email," stating, "During the outbreak of COVID-19, it also enables you to stay home and stay safe while still making your voice heard in our elections."<sup>204</sup>

314. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, prior to Election Day, the Democratic Party's propaganda was to push voters to vote by mail and to vote early. Democratic candidates used the fear of the current pandemic to promote this agenda—an agenda that would benefit Democratic voting with little proven incidence of fraud" with "mail-in voting, which the record shows is far more vulnerable to fraud").

---

<sup>203</sup> See Expert Report of John McLaughlin, Appendix 1135-1146.

<sup>204</sup> Affidavit of Christine Muise, Appendix 880-886 at ¶2, Ex A.

Party candidates. For example, on September 14, 2020, the Democratic National Committee announced the following:

Today Biden for President and the Democratic National Committee are announcing new features on IWillVote.com—the DNC’s voter participation website—that will help voters easily request and return their ballot by mail, as well as learn important information about the voting process in their state as they make their plan to vote.

Previously, an individual could use the site to check or update their registration and find voting locations. Now the new user experience will also guide a voter through their best voting-by-mail option . . . .<sup>205</sup>

According to the Associated Press:

“We have to make it easier for everybody to be able to vote, particularly if we are still basically in the kind of lockdown circumstances we are in now,” Biden told about 650 donors. “But that takes a lot of money, and it’s going to require us to provide money for states and insist they provide mail-in ballots.”<sup>206</sup>

315. Based on Michigan voters’ allegations, similar statements were repeatedly publicly on the Secretary of State’s website:

Voters are encouraged to vote at home with an absentee ballot and to return their ballot as early as possible by drop box, in person at their city or township clerk’s office, or well in advance of the election by mail.<sup>207</sup>

316. The Michigan Legislature set forth detailed requirements for absentee ballots, and these requirements are necessary to prevent voter fraud because it is far easier to commit fraud via an absentee ballot than when voting in person.<sup>208</sup> Michigan law plainly limits the ways you may get an absentee ballot:

(1) Subject to section 761(3), at any time during the 75 days before a primary or special primary, but not later than 8 p.m. on the day of a primary or special primary, an elector may apply for an absent voter ballot. The elector shall apply in person or by mail with the clerk of

---

<sup>205</sup> (available at <https://democrats.org/news/biden-for-president-dnc-announce-new-vote-by-mail-features-on-iwillvote-com/> (last visited Dec. 21, 2020)).

<sup>206</sup> (available at <https://apnews.com/article/6cf3ca7d5a174f2f381636cb4706f505> (last visited Nov. 17, 2020)).

<sup>207</sup> https://www.michigan.gov/sos/0,4670,7-127-1633\_101996---,00.html (emphasis added).

<sup>208</sup> See, e.g., Griffin v Roupas, 385 F3d 1128, 1130-31 (CA7, 2004) (“Voting fraud is a serious problem in U.S. elections generally . . . and it is facilitated by absentee voting”).

the township or city in which the elector is registered. The clerk of a city or township shall not send by first-class mail an absent voter ballot to an elector after 5 p.m. on the Friday immediately before the election. Except as otherwise provided in section 761(2), the clerk of a city or township shall not issue an absent voter ballot to a registered elector in that city or township after 4 p.m. on the day before the election. An application received before a primary or special primary may be for either that primary only, or for that primary and the election that follows. An individual may submit a voter registration application and an absent voter ballot application at the same time if applying in person with the clerk or deputy clerk of the city or township in which the individual resides. Immediately after his or her voter registration application and absent voter ballot application are approved by the clerk or deputy clerk, the individual may, subject to the identification requirement in section 761(6), complete an absent voter ballot at the clerk's office.

(2) Except as otherwise provided in subsection (1) and subject to section 761(3), at any time during the 75 days before an election, but not later than 8 p.m. on the day of an election, an elector may apply for an absent voter ballot. The elector shall apply in person or by mail with the clerk of the township, city, or village in which the voter is registered. The clerk of a city or township shall not send by first-class mail an absent voter ballot to an elector after 5 p.m. on the Friday immediately before the election. Except as otherwise provided in section 761(2), the clerk of a city or township shall not issue an absent voter ballot to a registered elector in that city or township after 4 p.m. on the day before the election. An individual may submit a voter registration application and an absent voter ballot application at the same time if applying in person with the clerk or deputy clerk of the city or township in which the individual resides. Immediately after his or her voter registration application and absent voter ballot application are approved by the clerk, the individual may, subject to the identification requirement in section 761(6), complete an absent voter ballot at the clerk's office.

(3) An application for an absent voter ballot under this section may be made in any of the following ways:

- (a) By a written request signed by the voter.
- (b) On an absent voter ballot application form provided for that purpose by the clerk of the city or township.
- (c) On a federal postcard application.

(4) An applicant for an absent voter ballot shall sign the application. Subject to section 761(2), a clerk or assistant clerk shall not deliver an absent voter ballot to an applicant who does not sign the application. A person shall not be in possession of a signed absent voter ballot application except for the applicant; a member of the applicant's immediate family; a person residing in the applicant's household; a person whose job normally includes the handling of mail, but only during the course of his or her employment; a registered elector requested by the applicant to return the application; or a clerk, assistant of the clerk, or other authorized election official. A registered elector who is requested by the applicant to return his or her absent voter ballot application shall sign the certificate on the absent voter ballot application.

(5) The clerk of a city or township shall have absent voter ballot application forms available in the clerk's office at all times and shall furnish an absent voter ballot application form to anyone upon a verbal or written request.<sup>209</sup>

317. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, the Secretary of State sent unsolicited absentee ballot applications to every household in Michigan with a registered voter, no matter if the voter was still alive or lived at that address.

318. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, the Secretary of State also sent absentee ballot requests to non-residents who were temporarily living in Michigan, such as out-of-state students who are unregistered to vote in Michigan.

319. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, in many instances, the Secretary of State's absentee ballot scheme led to the Secretary of State sending ballot requests to individuals who did not request them.<sup>210</sup>

m. Michigan Voters Allege that Expert Analysis of these Statutory Violations Reveals Widespread Inaccuracies and Loss of Election Integrity.

320. Data analyst Matthew Braynard analyzed the State's database for the Election and related data sets, including its own call center results.<sup>211</sup>

321. Dr. Zhang, a statistician, analyzed the data to extrapolate the datasets statewide.<sup>212</sup>

n. Unlawful unsolicited ballots cast in General Election

322. Braynard opined to a reasonable degree of scientific certainty that out of the 3,507,410 individuals who the State's database identifies as applying for and the State sending an

---

<sup>209</sup> MCL 168.759 (emphasis added).

<sup>210</sup> See Affidavit of Christine Muise, Appendix 880-885 at ¶¶3. Affidavit of Rena M. Lindevaldesen, Appendix 1001-1005 at ¶¶1,3 and 1002 ¶5.

<sup>211</sup> See, generally, Expert Report of Matthew Braynard, Appendix 1112-1122.

<sup>212</sup> See, generally, Expert Report of Dr. Quanying "Jennie" Zhang, Appendix 1123-1134.

absentee ballot, that in his sample of this universe, 12.23% of those absentee voters that did not request an absentee ballot to the clerk's office.<sup>213</sup>

323. These data extrapolate with 99% confidence interval that between 326,460 and 531,467 of the absentee ballots the State issued that were counted were not requested by an eligible State voter (unsolicited).<sup>214</sup>

o. Unsolicited ballots not cast in General Election

324. Out of the 139,190 individuals who the State's database identifies as having not requested (unsolicited) and not returned an absentee ballot, 24.14% of these absentee voters in the State did not request an absentee ballot.<sup>215</sup>

325. These data extrapolate with 99% confidence interval that between 28,932 and 38,409 of the absentee ballots the State issued were not requested by an eligible State voter (unsolicited).<sup>216</sup>

326. Using the most conservative boundary, taken together, these data suggest Michigan election officials violated Michigan Election Law by sending unsolicited ballots to at least 355,392 people.<sup>217</sup>

p. Absentee ballots were also cast but not properly counted (improperly destroyed or spoiled)

327. Out of the 139,190 individuals who the State's database identifies as having not returned an absentee ballot, 22.95% of those absentee voters did in fact mail back an absentee ballot to the clerk's office.<sup>218</sup>

328. This suggests many ballots were destroyed or not counted.

---

<sup>213</sup> See Expert Report of Matthew Braynard, Appendix 1112-1122 at ¶1.

<sup>214</sup> Expert Report of Dr. Quanying "Jennie" Zhang, Appendix 1123-1134 at ¶1.

<sup>215</sup> See Expert Report of Matthew Braynard, Appendix 1112-1122 at ¶2.

<sup>216</sup> Expert Report of Dr. Quanying "Jennie" Zhang, Appendix 1123-1134 at ¶2.

<sup>217</sup> Id. See also, Affidavit of Sandra Sue Workman, Appendix 1028-1032 at ¶28.

<sup>218</sup> See Expert Report of Matthew Braynard, Appendix 1112-1122 at ¶3.

329. These data extrapolate with 99% confidence interval that between 29,682 and 39,048 of absentee ballots that voters returned but were not counted in the State's official records.<sup>219</sup>

330. Out of the 51,302 individuals that had changed their address before the election who the State's database shows as having voted, 1.38% of those individuals denied casting a ballot.<sup>220</sup>

331. This suggests that bad actors exploited election officials' unlawful practice of sending unsolicited ballots and improperly harvested ballots on a widespread scale.

332. Indeed, by not following the anti-fraud measures mandated by the Michigan Legislature, the Secretary of State's absentee ballot scheme invited the improper use of absentee ballots and promoted such unlawful practices as ballot harvesting.<sup>221</sup>

333. Using the State's databases, the databases of the several states, and the NCOA database, at least 13,248 absentee or early voters were not residents of Michigan when they voted.<sup>222</sup>

334. Of absentee voters surveyed and when comparing databases of the several states, at least 317 individuals in Michigan voted in more than one state.<sup>223</sup>

q. Election officials ignored other statutory signature requirements

335. The Secretary of State also sent ballots to people who requested ballots online, but failed to sign the request.<sup>224</sup>

336. As of October 7, 2020, Brater admits sending at least 74,000 absentee ballots without a signed request as mandated by the Michigan Legislature.<sup>225</sup>

---

<sup>219</sup> Expert Report of Dr. Quanying "Jennie" Zhang, Appendix 1123-1134 at ¶3.

<sup>220</sup> Id. at ¶4.

<sup>221</sup> See Affidavit of Rhonda Weber, Appendix 877-879 at ¶7.

<sup>222</sup> See Expert Report of Matthew Braynard, Appendix 1112-1122 at ¶5.

<sup>223</sup> See Expert Report of Matthew Braynard, Appendix 1112-1122 at ¶6.

<sup>224</sup> See adverse Affidavit of Jonathan Brater, Head of Elections Appendix 1147-1151 at ¶10.

<sup>225</sup> Id.

337. By the Election, we must infer that the actual number of illegal ballots sent was much higher.

338. According to state records, another 35,109 absentee votes counted by Benson listed no address.<sup>226</sup>

339. As a result of the absentee ballot scheme, the Secretary of State improperly flooded the election process with absentee ballots, many of which were fraudulent.

340. The Secretary of State's absentee ballot scheme violated the checks and balances put in place by the Michigan Legislature to ensure the integrity and purity of the absentee ballot process and thus the integrity and purity of the 2020 general election.<sup>227</sup>

341. Without limitation, according to state records, 3,373 votes counted in Michigan were ostensibly from voters 100 years old or older.<sup>228</sup>

342. According to census data, however, there are only about 1,747 centenarians in Michigan,<sup>229</sup> and of those, we cannot assume a 100% voting rate.<sup>230</sup>

343. According to state records, at least 259 absentee ballots counted listed their official address as "email" or "accessible by email," which are unlawful per se and suggests improper ballot harvesting.<sup>231</sup>

---

<sup>226</sup> See Braynard Report, supra.

<sup>227</sup> See, generally, Affidavits of Lucille Ann Huizinga, Appendix 1016-1020 at ¶¶31; Laurie Ann Knott, Appendix 1010-1015 at ¶¶34-35; Marilyn Jean Nowak Appendix 1021-1023 at ¶17; Marlene K. Hager, Appendix 1024-1027 at ¶¶19-23; and Sandra Sue Workman Appendix 1028-1032 at ¶33.

<sup>228</sup> See Braynard, supra.

<sup>229</sup> Based on the US Census, 0.0175 percent of Michigan's population is 100 years or older (1,729 centenarians of the total of 9,883,640 people in Michigan in 2010). Census officials estimated Michigan's population at 9,986,857 as of July 2019, which puts the total centenarians at 1,747 or fewer. Source:

<https://www.census.gov/content/dam/Census/library/publications/2012/dec/c2010sr-03.pdf>

<sup>230</sup> See McLaughlin, supra.

<sup>231</sup> See Braynard, supra.

344. According to state records, at least 109 people voted absentee from the Center for Forensic Psychiatry at 8303 PLATT RD, SALINE, MI 48176 (not necessarily ineligible felons, but the State does house the criminally insane at this location), which implies improper ballot harvesting.

345. According to state records, at least 63 people voted absentee at PO BOX 48531, OAK PARK, MI 48237, which is registered to a professional guardian and implies improper ballot harvesting.

346. When compared against the national social security and deceased databases, at least 9 absentee voters in Michigan are confirmed dead as of Election Day, which invalidates those unlawful votes.<sup>232</sup>

347. Taken together, these irregularities far exceed common sense requirements for ensuring accuracy and integrity.

r. Election officials did not fix other recent errors or serious irregularities either.

348. These are the same types of serious concerns raised by the Michigan Auditor General in December 2019.<sup>233</sup>

349. The Auditor General specifically found several violations of MCL 168.492:

- i. 2,212 Electors voted more than once;
- ii. 230 voters were over 122 years old;<sup>234</sup> Id.
- iii. Unauthorized users had access to QVF; Id.; and
- iv. Clerk and Elected Officials had not completed required training.<sup>235</sup>

---

<sup>232</sup> See Braynard, supra.

<sup>233</sup> Appendix 1039-1078.

<sup>234</sup> The oldest living person confirmed by the Guinness Book of World Records is 117 years old and she lives in Japan, not Michigan.

<sup>235</sup> Id.

350. The Auditor General found election officials had not completed required training to obtain or retain accreditation in 14% of counties, 14% of cities, and 23% of townships.<sup>236</sup>

351. The Auditor General found 32 counties, 83 cities, and 426 townships where the clerk had not completed initial accreditation training or, if already accredited, all continuing education training as required by law.<sup>237</sup>

352. The Auditor General found 12 counties, 38 cities, and 290 townships where the clerk had not completed the initial accreditation or continuing education training requirements and no other local election official had achieved full accreditation.<sup>238</sup>

353. Not only were the Auditor General's red flags ignored by Benson, but she arguably made them worse through her absentee ballot scheme.

354. This not only suggests malfeasance, but the scheme precipitated and revealed manifest fraud and exploitation at a level Michigan has never before encountered in its elections.

355. The abuses permitted by the Secretary of State's ballot scheme were on display at the TCF Center, and elsewhere throughout the State.

356. Because this absentee ballot scheme applied statewide, it undermined the integrity and purity of the general election statewide, and it dilutes the lawful votes of millions of Michigan voters.

s. Michigan Voters Allege Flooding Local Election Officials with Private Money

357. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, inappropriate secrecy and lack of transparency began months before Election Day with an unprecedented and orchestrated infusion of hundreds of millions of dollars into local governments nationwide.

---

<sup>236</sup> Id.

<sup>237</sup> Id.

<sup>238</sup> Id.

358. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, more than $9.8 million in private money was poured into Michigan to create an unfair, two-tier election system in Michigan.<sup>239</sup>

359. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, the 2020 election saw the evisceration of state statutes designed to treat voters equally, thereby causing disparate treatment of voters and thus violating the constitutional rights of millions of Michiganders and Americans citizens.

360. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, to date, investigations have uncovered more than $400 million funneled through a collection of non-profits directly to local government coffers nationwide dictating to these local governments how they should manage the election, often contrary to state law.<sup>240</sup>

361. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, these funds were mainly used to: 1) pay "ballot harvesters" bounties, 2) fund mobile ballot pick up units, 3) deputize and pay political activists to manage ballots; 4) pay poll workers and election judges (a/k/a inspectors or adjudicators); 5) establish drop-boxes and satellite offices; 6) pay local election officials and agents "hazard pay" to recruit cities recognized as Democratic Party strongholds to recruit other cities to apply for grants from non-profits; 7) consolidate AVCBs and counting centers to facilitate the movement of hundreds of thousands of questionable ballots in secrecy without legally required bi-partisan observation; 8) implement a two-tier ballot "curing" plan that unlawfully counted ballots in Democrat Party strongholds and spoiled similarly situated ballots in Republican Party areas; and 9) subsidized and designed a scheme to remove the poll watchers from one political party so that the critical responsibility of determining the accuracy of the ballot and the integrity of the count could be done without oversight.

---

<sup>239</sup> See Carlson Report, supra.

<sup>240</sup> See Carlson Report, supra.

362. The Help America Vote Act of 2002 (HAVA) controls how money is spent under federal law. See 42 USC 15301, et seq; see also, MCL 168.18. In turn, Congress used HAVA to create the non-regulatory Election Assistance Commission (EAC), which was delegated the responsibility of providing information, training standards, and funding management to states. The mechanism for administering HAVA is legislatively adopted state HAVA Plans.

363. Michigan's HAVA Plan is undisputed.<sup>241</sup>

364. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, these private funds exceeded the federal government's March 2020 appropriation under HAVA and CARES Acts to help local governments manage the general election during the pandemic.

365. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, as these unmonitored funds flowed through the pipeline directly to hand-picked cities, the outlines of two-tiered treatment of the American voter began to take place. Local governments in Democrat Party strongholds were flush with cash to launch public-private coordinated voter registration drives allowing private access directly to government voter registration files, access to early voting opportunities, the provision of incentives such as food, entertainment, and gifts for early voters, and the off-site collection of ballots. Outside the urban core and immediate suburbs, unbiased election officials were unable to start such efforts for lack of funding.

366. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, difficult to trace private firms funded this scheme through private grants, which dictated methods and procedures to local election officials and where the grantors retained the right to "claw-back" all funds if election officials failed to reach privately set benchmarks—thus entangling the private-public partnership in ways that demand transparency—yet none has been given.

---

<sup>241</sup> See Certified Michigan HAVA State Plan of 2003, Terri Lynn Land Secretary, FR Vol. 69. No. 57 March 24 2004.

367. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, the state officials implicated, and the private interests involved, have refused repeated demands for the release of communications outlining the rationale and plan behind spending more than $400 million provided directly to various election officials before the 2020 general election.

368. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, these funds greased the skids of Democrat-heavy areas violating mandates of the Michigan Legislature, the Michigan HAVA Plan, the dictates of Congress under HAVA, and equal protection and Separation of Powers demanded under the United States Constitution.

369. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, in Michigan specifically, CTCL had awarded eleven grants as of the time of this survey. CTCL funded cities were:

- i. Detroit ($3,512,000);
- ii. Lansing ($443,742);
- iii. East Lansing ($43,850);
- iv. Flint ($475,625);
- v. Ann Arbor ($417,000);
- vi. Muskegon ($433,580);
- vii. Pontiac ($405,564);
- viii. Romulus ($16,645);
- ix. Kalamazoo ($218,869); and
- x. Saginaw ($402,878).<sup>242</sup>

370. In the 2016 election, then candidate Donald Trump only won Saginaw; then candidate Hillary Clinton won the remaining cities.

---

<sup>242</sup> See Expert Report of James Carlson, Appendix 1079-1111. (last updated November 25, 2020).

371. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, in 2020, CTCL funneled $9,451,235 (95.7%) to the ten jurisdictions where candidate Clinton won and only $402,878 (4.3%) to where candidate Trump won.<sup>243</sup>

t. Michigan Voters Allege Unacceptable Antrim County Machine Error Rate.

372. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, Antrim County, Michigan, reported errors arising from the November 3, 2020 election.

373. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, a report regarding Antrim County, Michigan, alleges that Dominion Voting Systems, the election technology used by Antrim County and elsewhere, "is intentionally and purposefully designed with inherent errors to create systemic fraud and influence election results." It's unclear how Allied Security Operations Group (ASOG) reached this conclusion, however.<sup>244</sup>

374. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, likewise, the report, authored by Russell James Ramsland, Jr., who is part of ASOG's management team, says the group found an "error rate" of 68% when examining "the tabulation log" of the server for Antrim County. It's also unclear what the "error rate" data refers to specifically and how it impacts the results.<sup>245</sup>

375. Based on Michigan voters' allegations, "The results of the Antrim County 2020 election are not certifiable," Ramsland wrote. "This is a result of machine and/or software error, not human error."<sup>246</sup>

---

<sup>243</sup> Id.

<sup>244</sup> See Expert Report of Russell J. Ramsland, Jr., Appendix 1146-1168. See Expert Opinion of Anthony J. Couchenor, Appendix 42-47. See Expert Opinion of Dr. Navid Keshavarz-Nia, Appendix 119-128.

<sup>245</sup> Id.

<sup>246</sup> See Ramsland Report, Appendix pg. 2 ¶ 7.

u. Michigan Voters Allege Absentee Ballot Errors.

376. As mentioned above, the Braynard-Zhang analysis, in Michigan, based on the government data shows election officials' absentee ballot errors of 548,016 far exceed the margin of victory of 148,152.

377. The Braynard-Zhang analysis of the government data shows election officials' absentee ballot error rate of at least 6.05% which far exceeds federal law's pre-election certification error rate for voting systems' hardware and software of 0.0008%.<sup>247</sup>

Michigan Voter Election Contest
Michigan Margin +148,152
Type*	Description	Margin
1) Unlawful Ballots	Unsolicited Ballots <sup>248</sup>	355,392
Category 1	Error Rate (Based on Total Votes)	6.05%
2) Illegal Votes Counted	Estimate of ballots requested in the name of a registered voter. Registered Voter did not request ballot	27,825
3) Legal Votes Not Counted	Estimate of ballots that the requester returned but were not counted <sup>249</sup>	29,682
Category 2 and 3 <sup>250</sup>
Total Votes: 53,968	Error Rate (Based on Total Votes)	0.97%
4) Illegal Votes Counted	Electors with no address. <sup>251</sup>	35,109
5) Illegal Votes Counted		259

<sup>247</sup> See Expert Report of Dennis Nathan Cain (III), Appendix 1433-1445.

<sup>248</sup> The number of unsolicited ballots come from the combination of 326,460 absentee ballots issued by the State but not requested by an eligible State voter and the 28,932 absentee ballots the State claims were not returned but who claim they in fact mailed their absentee ballot back. Both of these numbers are the conservative end of Dr. Zhang's 99% confidence interval. Expert Report of Dr. Quanying "Jennie" Zhang, Appendix 1123-1134 at ¶2-3.

<sup>249</sup> Expert Report of Dr. Quanying "Jennie" Zhang, Appendix 1123-1134 at ¶3.

<sup>250</sup> Categories 2 and 3 are mutually exclusive.

<sup>251</sup> See Expert Report of Matthew Braynard, Appendix 1112-1122.

	Electors voted listing email only <sup>252</sup>
6) Unlawful Ballots	No signature required to obtain ballot <sup>253</sup>	74,000
7) Illegal Votes Counted	Absentee or Early Voters Not Residents when they voted <sup>254</sup>	13,248
8) Illegal Votes Counted	Double Votes (Voted in multiple states) <sup>255</sup>	317
TOTAL		548,016
Of total votes cast in MI: 5,547,053

4. State of Wisconsin voters allege election official errors and improprieties which exceed the Presidential vote margin.<sup>256</sup>

378. State of Wisconsin voters allege election official errors and improprieties which exceed the Presidential vote margin.

376. Wisconsin has 10 electoral votes, with a statewide vote tally currently estimated at 1,610,151 for President Trump and 1,630,716 for former Vice President Biden (i.e., a margin of 20,565 votes). In two counties, Milwaukee and Dane, Mr. Biden's margin (364,298 votes) significantly exceeds his statewide lead.

379. In the 2016 general election some 146,932 mail-in ballots were returned in Wisconsin out of more than 3 million votes cast. In stark contrast, 1,275,019 mail-in ballots, nearly a 900 percent increase over 2016, were returned in the November 3, 2020 election.

380. Based on Wisconsin voters' allegations, on November 30, 2020, Governor Tony Evers certified Joe Biden's victory in Wisconsin in a Certificate of Ascertainment, soon after he received a certification from Ann Jacobs, chairwoman of the Wisconsin Election Commission.

<sup>252</sup> See Expert Report of Matthew Braynard, Appendix 1112-1122.

<sup>253</sup> See Declaration of Jonathan Brater, Appendix 1147-1151 at ¶ 10.

<sup>254</sup> See Expert Report of Matthew Braynard, Appendix 1112-1122 at ¶ 5.

<sup>255</sup> See Expert Report of Matthew Braynard, Appendix 1112-1122 at ¶ 6.

<sup>256</sup> For full extent of inappropriate activities See Timeline of Electoral Policy Activities, Issues, and Litigation Pennsylvania, Michigan, Wisconsin, Georgia, Arizona, and Nevada August 2003 to November 2020, Appendix 1-20.

Jacobs signed a statement of canvass to confirm who won the election. The Wisconsin Election Commission was due to meet on Tuesday, December 1, 2020. Republican Commissioners Dean Knudson had requested that Jacobs wait until Tuesday, when the Commission was to meet, to determine the results, the statutory deadline.<sup>257</sup>

381. Based on Wisconsin voters' allegations, by certifying the election on her own, Jacobs usurped power that belongs to the Wisconsin Election Commission. Wisconsin Statutes § 7.70 sets forth the proper procedure for certifying Wisconsin's election results. The chairperson is required to examine the certified statements of the county board of canvassers, and obtain input from the county boards if it appears material mistakes have been made. Thereafter, under § 7.70(3)(d), the chairperson is to "examine and make a statement of the total number of votes cast at any election for the offices involved in the election for president and vice president..." Under § 7.70(3)(f), these statements are to show the "persons' names receiving votes" and "the whole number of votes given to each..." § 7.70(3)(g) states that following "each other election [other than a primary election] the chairperson of the commission or the chairperson's designee shall prepare a statement certifying the results of the election and shall attach to the statement a certificate of determination which shall indicate the names of persons who have been elected to any state or national office .... The chairperson of the commission or the chairperson's designee shall deliver each statement and determination to the commission."<sup>258</sup>

382. Based on Wisconsin voters' allegations, Wisconsin Statutes § 7.70(5)(b) states what is supposed to come next in a presidential election. "For presidential electors, the commission shall prepare a certificate showing the determination of the results of the canvass and the names of the persons elected, and the governor shall sign, affix the great seal of the state, and transmit the certificate by registered mail to the U.S. administrator of general services. The governor shall also prepare 6 duplicate originals of such certificate and deliver them to one of the presidential electors on or before the first Monday after the 2nd Wednesday in December.” (emphasis supplied).

---

<sup>257</sup> See Supplement to Emergency Petition, Appendix 384-396. See Also Wisconsin Elections Committee Letter, Appendix 1469-1470.

<sup>258</sup> See Wisconsin Finance Committee E-mails and Wisconsin Republican Presidential Elector Signatures, Appendix 1473-1476.

383. Based on Wisconsin voters’ allegations, as set forth clearly in the statute, Wisconsin law requires the chairperson of the commission to prepare a certificate of the votes received by each candidate in the presidential election, and transmit these results to the commission. Thereafter, the commission is required to prepare a certificate showing the names of the persons elected, and transmit this certificate to the governor. Only then is the governor authorized to transmit this certificate to the U.S. administrator of general services.

384. Based on Wisconsin voters’ allegations, Chairwoman Jacobs certified these results, without authority, before the Wisconsin Election Commission meeting, in an attempt to bypass the Wisconsin Election Commission, who had a lawful duty to examine and certify the results for themselves. Chairwoman Jacobs’ certification is a usurpation of the statutory authority of the Wisconsin Election Commission. Furthermore, the Governor’s Certificate of Ascertainment, based on Chairwoman Jacobs’ certification, rather than the lawful certification of the Commission, is a usurpation of authority, and is legally null and void.

385. Further, based on Wisconsin voters’ allegations, Wisconsin statutes guard against fraud in absentee ballots: “[V]oting by absentee ballot is a privilege exercised wholly outside the traditional safeguards of the polling place. The legislature finds that the privilege of voting by absentee ballot must be carefully regulated to prevent the potential for fraud or abuse[.]”<sup>259</sup>

---

<sup>259</sup> Wis. Stat. § 6.84(1).

386. Based on Wisconsin voters' allegations, in direct contravention of Wisconsin law, leading up to the 2020 general election, the Wisconsin Elections Commission ("WEC") and other local officials unconstitutionally modified Wisconsin election laws—each time taking steps that weakened, or did away with, established security procedures put in place by the Wisconsin legislature to ensure absentee ballot integrity.<sup>260</sup>

387. Based on Wisconsin voters' allegations, for example, the WEC undertook a campaign to position hundreds of drop boxes to collect absentee ballots—including the use of unmanned drop boxes.

388. Based on Wisconsin voters' allegations, the mayors of Wisconsin's five largest cities—Green Bay, Kenosha, Madison, Milwaukee, and Racine, which all have Democrat majorities—joined in this effort, and together, developed a plan use purportedly "secure drop-boxes to facilitate return of absentee ballots." Wisconsin Safe Voting Plan 2020, at 4 (June 15, 2020).<sup>261</sup>

389. Based on Wisconsin voters' allegations, it was alleged in an action filed in United States District Court for the Eastern District of Wisconsin that over five hundred unmanned, illegal, absentee ballot drop boxes were used in the Presidential election in Wisconsin.

390. Based on Wisconsin voters' allegations, however, the use of any drop box, manned or unmanned, is directly prohibited by Wisconsin statute. The Wisconsin legislature specifically described in the Election Code "Alternate absentee ballot site[s]" and detailed the procedure by which the governing body of a municipality may designate a site or sites for the delivery of absentee ballots "other than the office of the municipal clerk or board of election commissioners as the location from which electors of the municipality may request and vote absentee ballots and to which voted absentee ballots shall be returned by electors for any election.”<sup>262</sup>

---

<sup>260</sup> See Appendix 201-269; 378-383.

<sup>261</sup> See Appendix pgs. 270-290; 291-346.

391. Based on Wisconsin voters’ allegations, any alternate absentee ballot site “shall be staffed by the municipal clerk or the executive director of the board of election commissioners, or employees of the clerk or the board of election commissioners.”<sup>263</sup> Likewise, Wis.Stat. 7.15(2m) provides, “[i]n a municipality in which the governing body has elected to establish an alternate absentee ballot site under s. 6.855, the municipal clerk shall operate such site as though it were his or her office for absentee ballot purposes and shall ensure that such site is adequately staffed.”

392. Based on Wisconsin voters’ allegations, thus, the unmanned absentee ballot drop-off sites are prohibited by the Wisconsin Legislature as they do not comply with Wisconsin law expressly defining “[a]lternate absentee ballot site[s].”<sup>264</sup>

393. Based on Wisconsin voters’ allegations, in addition, the use of drop boxes for the collection of absentee ballots, positioned predominantly in Wisconsin’s largest cities, is directly contrary to Wisconsin law providing that absentee ballots may only be “mailed by the elector, or delivered in person to the municipal clerk issuing the ballot or ballots.”<sup>265</sup>

394. Based on Wisconsin voters’ allegations, The fact that other methods of delivering absentee ballots, such as through unmanned drop boxes, are not permitted is underscored by Wis. Stat. § 6.87(6) which mandates that, “[a]ny ballot not mailed or delivered as provided in this subsection may not be counted.” Likewise, Wis. Stat. § 6.84(2) underscores this point, providing that Wis. Stat. § 6.87(6) “shall be construed as mandatory.” The provision continues—“Ballots cast in contravention of the procedures specified in those provisions may not be counted. Ballots counted in

---

<sup>262</sup> Wis. Stat. 6.855(1).

<sup>263</sup> Wis. Stat. 6.855(3).

<sup>264</sup> Wis. Stat. 6.855(1), (3).

<sup>265</sup> Wis. Stat. § 6.87(4)(b)1 (emphasis added).

contravention of the procedures specified in those provisions may not be included in the certified result of any election.”<sup>266</sup>

395. Based on Wisconsin voters’ allegations, as a result of the Zuckerberg-funded absentee drop boxes, the Milwaukee County and Dane County had 1 drop box for every 30.7 square miles. But, the rest of Wisconsin had 1 drop box for every 145 square miles. Wisconsin localities provided approximately 514 ballot drop boxes leading up to the 2020 election.<sup>267</sup>

396. In 2016, Hillary Clinton received 1,382,536 votes in Wisconsin.<sup>268</sup> Of those 1.3M votes, Milwaukee and Dane Counties accounted for 506,519<sup>269</sup> of Clinton’s votes.<sup>270</sup>

397. Wisconsin is a total of 65,498 square miles. Milwaukee and Dane Counties represent a combined 2,427 square miles. These two counties received about one-sixth of the total number of ballot drop boxes with 79 boxes. Milwaukee received 25 drop boxes, while Dane County (Madison) had 54 drop boxes.<sup>271</sup> This left the rest of the state with 435 ballot drop boxes.<sup>272</sup>

398. Voters in Hillary Clinton’s two largest counties: Milwaukee and Dane, where she received 506,519 votes, received 79 drop boxes spread out over a combined 2,427 square miles, or 1 drop box for every 30.7 square miles. Meanwhile, voters in the rest of the state received 435 drop

---

<sup>266</sup> Wis. Stat. § 6.84(2) (emphasis added).

<sup>267</sup> <https://www.wisconsinwatch.org/2020/10/wisconsin-absentee-ballot-drop-box-search/>. See Expert Declaration of Dennis Nathan Cain (II), Appendix 60-68. See Also Appendix 353-377.

<sup>268</sup> <https://www.nytimes.com/elections/2016/results/wisconsin-president-clinton-trump>

<sup>269</sup> <https://www.nytimes.com/elections/2016/results/wisconsin-president-clinton-trump>

<sup>270</sup> The next eight largest Wisconsin counties gave Hillary Clinton an additional 346,352 votes.

<https://www.nytimes.com/elections/2016/results/wisconsin-president-clinton-trump>
Waukesha (Milwaukee area) had 5 drop boxes, Brown County (Green Bay) had 13 drop boxes, 13 in Racine, Outagamie 5, Winnebago 5, Kenosha 8, Rock 26, Marathon 10.<sup>270</sup>

Wisconsin has sixteen counties with over 100k residents: Milwaukee, Dane (Madison), Waukesha, Brown (Green Bay), Racine, Outagamie, Winnebago, Kenosha, Rock, Washington, Marathon, La Crosse, Sheboygan, Eau Claire, Walworth, Fond du Lac.<sup>270</sup>

<sup>271</sup> <https://www.wisconsinwatch.org/2020/10/wisconsin-absentee-ballot-drop-box-search/>

<sup>272</sup> 514-79 = 435

boxes to cover 63,071 square miles, meaning that the rest of Wisconsin had a single drop box for every 145 square miles.

399. Based on Wisconsin voters' allegations, these were not the only Wisconsin election laws that the WEC violated in the 2020 general election. The WEC and local election officials also took it upon themselves to encourage voters to unlawfully declare themselves "indefinitely confined"—which under Wisconsin law allows the voter to avoid security measures like signature verification and photo ID requirements.

400. Specifically, registering to vote by absentee ballot requires photo identification, except for those who register as "indefinitely confined" or "hospitalized."<sup>273</sup> Registering for indefinite confinement requires certifying confinement "because of age, physical illness or infirmity or [because the voter] is disabled for an indefinite period."<sup>274</sup> Should indefinite confinement cease, the voter must notify the county clerk,<sup>275</sup> who must remove the voter from indefinite-confinement status.<sup>276</sup>

401. Wisconsin election procedures for voting absentee based on indefinite confinement enable the voter to avoid the photo ID requirement and signature requirement.<sup>277</sup>

402. Based on Wisconsin voters' allegations, on March 25, 2020, in clear violation of Wisconsin law, Dane County Clerk Scott McDonnell and Milwaukee County Clerk George Christensen both issued guidance indicating that all voters should mark themselves as "indefinitely confined" because of the COVID-19 pandemic.<sup>278</sup>

---

<sup>273</sup> Wis. Stat. § 6.86(2)(a), (3)(a).

<sup>274</sup> Id. § 6.86(2)(a).

<sup>275</sup> Id.

<sup>276</sup> Id. § 6.86(2)(b).

<sup>277</sup> Id. § 6.86(1)(ag)/(3)(a)(2).

<sup>278</sup> See Appendix pgs. 347-349.

403. Based on Wisconsin voters' allegations, believing this to be an attempt to circumvent Wisconsin's strict voter ID laws, the Republican Party of Wisconsin petitioned the Wisconsin Supreme Court to intervene. On March 31, 2020, the Wisconsin Supreme Court unanimously confirmed that the clerks' "advice was legally incorrect" and potentially dangerous because "voters may be misled to exercise their right to vote in ways that are inconsistent with WISC. STAT. § 6.86(2)."

404. Based on Wisconsin voters' allegations, on May 13, 2020, the Administrator of WEC issued a directive to the Wisconsin clerks prohibiting removal of voters from the registry for indefinite-confinement status if the voter is no longer "indefinitely confined."

405. Based on Wisconsin voters' allegations, the WEC's directive violated Wisconsin law. Specifically, WISC. STAT. § 6.86(2)(a) specifically provides that "any [indefinitely confined] elector [who] is no longer indefinitely confined ... shall so notify the municipal clerk." WISC. STAT. § 6.86(2)(b) further provides that the municipal clerk "shall remove the name of any other elector from the list upon request of the elector or upon receipt of reliable information that an elector no longer qualifies for the service."

406. Based on Wisconsin voters' allegations, according to statistics kept by the WEC, nearly 216,000 voters said they were indefinitely confined in the 2020 election, nearly a fourfold increase from nearly 57,000 voters in 2016. In Dane and Milwaukee counties, more than 68,000 voters said they were indefinitely confined in 2020, a fourfold increase from the roughly 17,000 indefinitely confined voters in those counties in 2016.

407. Under Wisconsin law, voting by absentee ballot also requires voters to complete a certification, including their address, and have the envelope witnessed by an adult who also must sign and indicate their address on the envelope.<sup>279</sup> The sole remedy to cure an “improperly completed certificate or [ballot] with no certificate” is for “the clerk [to] return the ballot to the elector[.]”<sup>280</sup> “If a certificate is missing the address of a witness, the ballot may not be counted.”<sup>281</sup>

408. Based on Wisconsin voters’ allegations, however, in a training video issued April 1, 2020, the Administrator of the City of Milwaukee Elections Commission unilaterally declared that a “witness address may be written in red and that is because we were able to locate the witnesses’ address for the voter” to add an address missing from the certifications on absentee ballots. The Administrator’s instruction violated WISC. STAT. § 6.87(6d). The WEC issued similar guidance on October 19, 2020, in violation of this statute as well.<sup>282</sup>

409. Based on Wisconsin voters’ allegations, in the Wisconsin Trump Campaign Complaint, it is alleged, supported by the sworn affidavits of poll watchers, that canvas workers carried out this unlawful policy, and acting pursuant to this guidance, in Milwaukee used red-ink pens to alter the certificates on the absentee envelope and then cast and count the absentee ballot. These acts violated WISC. STAT. § 6.87(6d) (“If a certificate is missing the address of a witness, the ballot may not be counted”).<sup>283</sup>

410. Wisconsin’s legislature has not ratified these changes, and its election laws do not include a severability clause.

411. Based on Wisconsin voters’ allegations, in addition, Ethan J. Pease, a box truck delivery driver subcontracted to the U.S. Postal Service (“USPS”) to deliver truckloads of mail-in

---

<sup>279</sup> See Wis. Stat. § 6.87.

<sup>280</sup> Id. § 6.87(9).

<sup>281</sup> Id. § 6.87(6d) (emphasis added).

<sup>282</sup> See Appendix pgs. 350-352.

<sup>283</sup> See also Wis. Stat. § 6.87(9) (“If a municipal clerk receives an absentee ballot with an improperly completed certificate or with no certificate, the clerk may return the ballot to the elector . . . whenever time permits the elector to correct the defect and return the ballot within the period authorized.”).

ballots to the sorting center in Madison, WI, testified that USPS employees were backdating ballots received after November 3, 2020.<sup>284</sup> Further, Pease testified how a senior USPS employee told him on November 4, 2020 that “[a]n order came down from the Wisconsin/Illinois Chapter of the Postal Service that 100,000 ballots were missing” and how the USPS dispatched employees to “find[] . . . the ballots.”<sup>285</sup> One hundred thousand ballots supposedly “found” after election day would far exceed former Vice President Biden margin of 20,565 votes over President Trump.

412. Finally, in Wisconsin, the Braynard-Zhang analysis of government data shows election officials’ absentee ballot errors of 159,559 far exceed the margin of victory of 20,608.<sup>286</sup>

413. The Braynard-Zhang analysis of government data shows election officials’ absentee ballot error rate of at least 0.89% which far exceeds federal law’s pre-election certification error rate for voting systems’ hardware and software of 0.0008%.<sup>287</sup>

Wisconsin Voter Election Contest
Margin +20,608 votes

Type of error*	Description	Votes
1) Unlawful Ballots	Estimate of the minimum number of absentee ballots requested which were not requested by the person identified in the state’s database <sup>288</sup>	15,423
2) Legal Votes Not Counted	Estimate of ballots that the requester returned but were not counted <sup>289</sup>	13,826
Category 1 & 2 Total Votes: 29,249	Error Rate (Compared to Total Vote)	0.89%

<sup>284</sup> Declaration of Ethan J. Pease, Appendix pgs. 180-182 at ¶¶ 3-13.

<sup>285</sup> Id. ¶¶ 8-10.

<sup>286</sup> See Chart and WI Declaration of Matthew Braynard, Appendix pgs. 1384-1395.

<sup>287</sup> See Expert Report of Dennis Nathan Cain (III), Appendix 1433-1445.

<sup>288</sup> See WI Zhang Declaration Appendix pgs. 1375-1383 ¶ 1.

<sup>289</sup> See WI Zhang Declaration Appendix pgs. 1375-1383 ¶ 2.

3) Illegal Votes Counted	Electors voted where they did not reside <sup>290</sup>	26,673
4) Illegal Votes Counted	Electors who avoided Wisconsin Voter ID laws by voting absentee as an “indefinitely confined” elector and were not indefinitely confined <sup>291</sup>	96,437
5) Illegal Votes Counted	Out of State Residents Voting in State <sup>292</sup>	6,848
6) Illegal Votes Counted	Double Votes <sup>293</sup>	234
TOTAL		159,559
	Of total votes cast 3,289,946

*May overlap.

5. State of Arizona voters allege election official errors and improprieties which exceed the Presidential vote margin.<sup>294</sup>

414. State of Michigan voters allege election official errors and improprieties which exceed the Presidential vote margin.

415. Arizona has 11 electoral votes, with a statewide vote tally currently estimated at 1,661,686 for President Trump and 1,672,143 for former Vice President Biden (i.e., a margin of 10,457 votes).

416. Based on Arizona voters’ allegations, there was a disparate impact caused by absentee drop boxes.

417. Arizona is composed of fifteen counties.

<sup>290</sup> See WI Declaration of Matthew Braynard, Appendix pgs. 1384-1395.

<sup>291</sup> See WI Declaration of Matthew Braynard Appendix pgs. 1384-1395 ¶ 5. This number is derived from  $.4523 * 213,215$

<sup>292</sup> See WI Declaration of Matthew Braynard Appendix pgs. 1384-1395 ¶ 4.

<sup>293</sup> See WI Declaration of Matthew Braynard Appendix pgs. 1384-1395 ¶ 6.

<sup>294</sup> For full extent of inappropriate activities See Timeline of Electoral Policy Activities, Issues, and Litigation Pennsylvania, Michigan, Wisconsin, Georgia, Arizona, and Nevada August 2003 to November 2020, Appendix 1-20.

418. The state of Arizona is 113,998 square miles.

419. In 2016, Hillary Clinton received 1,161,167 votes from Arizona.<sup>295</sup> Over half of these votes came from Maricopa County with 702,907 votes in 2016.<sup>296</sup>

420. Based on Wisconsin voters' allegations, this vote-rich area of only 9,224 square miles, was given more drop boxes and early voting centers than the rest of Arizona's 104,764 square miles combined.

421. Maricopa County, only 9,224 square miles, has over 125 vote-by-mail drop boxes available to its citizens, leaving one drop box for every 73 square miles.<sup>297</sup> Conversely, the other fourteen counties had a total of 119 drop boxes and early voting sites combined, meaning every other non-Arizona county combined had one vote-by-mail drop box for every 880 square miles.<sup>298</sup>

---

<sup>295</sup> <https://www.nytimes.com/elections/2016/results/arizona>

<sup>296</sup> <https://www.nytimes.com/elections/2016/results/arizona>

<sup>297</sup> <https://www.google.com/maps/d/u/0/viewer?ll=33.361088282128144%2C-112.03699115344182&z=11&mid=1MksFw9pIMM80IE-3WVkJXAr9a2BBizir7>

<sup>298</sup> Coconino Co., 8 drop boxes - <https://www.coconino.az.gov/DocumentCenter/View/36811/Coconino-County-Ballot-Drop-Box-Locations-2020-Primary?bidId=>

- Pinal Co., 7 drop boxes - <https://www.pinalcountyaz.gov/Recorder/Pages/EarlyVoteRegister.aspx>
- Gila Co., 8 drop boxes - https://www.gilacountyaz.gov/government/recorder/drop\_off\_boxes.php
- Pima Co., 14 dropbox/early voting sites - <https://www.recorder.pima.gov/EarlyVotingSites>
- Cochise Co., 5 drop boxes - <https://www.cochise.az.gov/recorder/ballot-box-locations>
- La Paz Co. 1 early voting site - https://www.parkerpioneer.net/news/article\_1a2fd0ee-1d4c-11eb-af74-5f2cf0d805cb.html
- Maricopa Co., 125+ drop boxes - <https://www.google.com/maps/d/u/0/viewer?ll=33.361088282128144%2C-112.03699115344182&z=11&mid=1MksFw9pIMM80IE-3WVkJXAr9a2BBizir7>
- Mohave Co., 3 early voting sites - <https://mohavedailynews.com/news/11214/early-voting-begins-in-arizona/>
- Graham Co., 5 drop boxes - <https://www.graham.az.gov/314/How-To-Return-Your-Early-Ballot>
- Navajo Co., 16 drop boxes - <https://www.navajocountyaz.gov/Departments/Elections/Voter-Information/Early-Voting-Sites>

422. This strategy worked to benefit Democratic voters at a greater rate than republican voters.

423. In the 2020 November, election Vice-President Biden increased his vote total by almost more than 300,000 votes over Hillary Clinton's 2016 numbers in Maricopa with 1,040,774 votes.

424. Alternatively, President Trump gained only about 150,000 votes.<sup>299</sup>

425. This type of disparate impact by government officials in Maricopa County clearly favored Democratic voters, to the detriment of Republican voters

426. Additionally, in Arizona, the Braynard-Zhang analysis of the government data shows election officials' absentee ballot errors of 371,498 far exceed the margin of victory of 10,457.<sup>300</sup>

427. The Braynard-Zhang government data shows election officials' absentee ballot error rate of at least 10.2% which far exceeds federal law's pre-election certification error rate for voting systems' hardware and software of 0.0008%.<sup>301</sup>

Arizona Voter Election Contest
Margin +10,457

Type of error*	Description	Margin
1) Unlawful Ballots	Estimate of the minimum number of absentee ballots requested which were not requested by the person identified in the state's database <sup>302</sup>	214,526
2) Legal	Estimate of ballots that the

-
- Maricopa Co. - <https://www.12news.com/article/news/politics/elections/map-ballot-drop-box-maricopa-county-for-november-2020-general-election-list/75-81c64546-9092-4f8e-9531-f9f10e6d1aa8>
  - Yavapai Co., 19 drop boxes - <https://www.yavapai.us/electionsvr/early-voting>

<sup>299</sup> <https://www.politico.com/2020-election/results/arizona/>

<sup>300</sup> See Chart and AZ Declaration of Matthew Braynard, Appendix pgs. 1419-1428

<sup>301</sup> See Expert Report of Dennis Nathan Cain (III), Appendix 1433-1445.

<sup>302</sup> See AZ Zhang Declaration Appendix pgs. 1396-1405 ¶ 1.

Votes Not Counted	requester returned but were not counted <sup>303</sup>	131,092
Category 1 &amp; 2 Total Votes: 346,618	Error Rate (Compared to Total Vote)	10.2%
3) Illegal Votes Counted*	Electors voted where they did not reside <sup>304</sup>	19,997
4) Illegal Votes Counted*	Out of State Residents Voting in State <sup>305</sup>	5,726
5) Illegal Votes Counted*	Double Votes <sup>306</sup>	157
TOTAL		371,498
	of total votes cast 3,397,388

*May overlap

M. The government data, state-by-state, shows election officials' absentee ballot errors far exceed the margin of victory—and they far exceed the pre-election certification error rate of 0.0008%.

428. The federal government has a pre-election standard for state voting system's software and hardware.

429. As explained above, this maximum-acceptable error rate is one in 500,000 ballot positions, or, alternatively one in 125,000 ballots—0.0008 %.<sup>307</sup>

430. Based on the Defendant States' voters' allegations, the government data shows Wisconsin, Pennsylvania, Michigan, Georgia and Arizona election officials' absentee ballot errors<sup>308</sup> far exceed the Presidential margins of victory.

<sup>303</sup> See AZ Zhang Declaration Appendix pgs. 1396-1405 ¶ 2.

<sup>304</sup> See AZ Declaration of Matthew Braynard, Appendix pgs. 1419-1428 ¶3.

<sup>305</sup> See AZ Declaration of Matthew Braynard, Appendix pgs. 1419-1428 ¶4.

<sup>306</sup> See AZ Declaration of Matthew Braynard, Appendix pgs. 1419-1428 ¶5.

<sup>307</sup> See Expert Report of Dennis Nathan Cain (III), Appendix 1433-1445.

<sup>308</sup> According to Plaintiffs' analysis, it is possible to have more than one type of error per ballot (e.g., double voting and voting while resident of another state).

431. Based on the Defendant States' voters' allegations, the government data in each of the states shows election officials' absentee ballot errors far exceed the federal law's pre-election certification error rate for voting systems' hardware and software.

COUNT 1:
ARTICLE II

432. Plaintiffs repeat and re-allege the allegations above, as if fully set forth herein.

433. The Plaintiffs as voters file this complaint against federal and state officials in Arizona, Georgia, Michigan, Pennsylvania and Wisconsin seeking a declaratory judgment, and related injunction, for a constitutionally-compliant process for state-by-state post-election certification of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors and for counting of their votes for the November 3, 2020 Presidential election and future elections.

434. Under Article II, if a state has authorized a Presidential election in that state, voters have voting rights to state legislative post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors.

435. Since Defendant States have authorized Presidential elections, voters in the Defendant States, including Plaintiffs, have voting rights under Article II to state legislative post-election certification of their Presidential votes and of Presidential electors.

436. Part of Plaintiffs' voting rights in Defendant States under Article II is the right that their Presidential votes be counted by in their respective state legislatures' post-election certifications of Presidential votes and Presidential electors in the 2020 and future elections.

437. Under Article II, Congress lacks legal authority to enact laws interfering with the state-by-state state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors as it has done with 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15.

438. The text and structure of the Constitution—as evidenced in Article II and the rest of the Constitution—preempts 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15 as unconstitutional interference with the state legislative prerogative to post-election Presidential elector certification guaranteed by the Constitution.<sup>309</sup>

439. Therefore, Article II renders 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15, in the 2020 and future Presidential elections, as unconstitutional interference with the state legislative prerogative to post-election Presidential elector certification guaranteed by the Constitution—and a violation of voters’ rights.<sup>310</sup>

440. Analogously, under Article II, the Defendant States lack legal authority to enact state laws which are a perpetual and wholesale delegation of post-election certifications to state executive branch officials—as they have done in Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B) (Arizona Secretary of State), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B) (Georgia Secretary of State and Governor), Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 168.46 (Michigan State Board of Canvassers and Governor), Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b) (Wisconsin Elections Commission); and 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166 (Secretary of Commonwealth and Governor).

441. Article II, and its non-delegation doctrine, left it exclusively to the state legislatures to “direct” post-election certifications of Presidential voters and of Presidential electors—not to Defendant States to “delegate” post-election certifications, perpetually and in a wholesale fashion, to state executive branch officials as a ministerial duty.

442. The text of Article II preempts Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B), Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 168.46, Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b), 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166 and similar state laws which delegate Presidential post-election certifications to state executive branch officials when it is constitutionally-required for state legislatures to conduct post-election Presidential election certifications.

---

<sup>309</sup> Vasan Kesavan, Is the Electoral Count Act Unconstitutional, 80 N.C. L. Rev. 1653, 1759-1793 (2002).

<sup>310</sup> Id. at 1696-1759 (2002).

443. The structure of the Constitution, as evidenced in Article II and the rest of the Constitution, preempts Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B), Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 168.46, Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b), 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166 and similar state laws which delegate Presidential post-election certifications to state executive branch officials when it is constitutionally-required for state legislatures to conduct post-election Presidential election certifications.

444. Therefore, the Court should hold Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B), Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 168.46, Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b), 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166 and similar laws unconstitutional as they apply to Presidential state legislative post-election certifications.

445. The Defendant States' lack of state legislative post-election certifications of Presidential votes and Presidential electors in the 2020 and future Presidential elections violate the Plaintiffs' voting rights under Article II.

446. The Defendant States, in violation of Article II, have failed to provide state legislative post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of the Presidential Electors; so, voters' votes in the Defendant States do not count in the current and future elections—a disenfranchisement.

447. A declaratory judgment should issue, applicable to the current and future elections, declaring that Article II requires state legislative post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors for Presidential elector votes to count in the U.S. Congress for the election of the President and Vice President.

448. Further, any count of Presidential electors in the November 3, 2020 or future elections should be declared invalid if based on votes of Presidential electors who have not received state legislative post-election certification.

449. The Vice President and U.S. Congress should be enjoined from counting Presidential elector votes from any states in the current and future elections unless their respective state legislatures have voted affirmatively in a post-election vote to certify Presidential votes and their Presidential electors for the current and future Presidential elections.

COUNT 2:
EQUAL PROTECTION CLAUSE

450. Plaintiffs repeat and re-allege the allegations above, as if fully set forth herein.

451. Plaintiffs are entitled to state legislative post-election certification of their Presidential votes and of Presidential electors so their votes count equally with other states' citizens' votes.

452. The Equal Protection Clause prohibits the use of differential standards in the treatment and tabulation of ballots within a State. Bush, 531 U.S. at 107.

453. The one-person, one-vote principle requires counting valid votes and not counting invalid votes. Reynolds, 377 U.S. at 554-55; Bush, 531 U.S. at 103 (“the votes eligible for inclusion in the certification are the votes meeting the properly established legal requirements”).

454. The Defendant States, in violation of the Equal Protection Clause, have failed to provide state legislative post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of the Presidential Electors as they do in other states; so, voters' votes in the Defendant States will not count—a disenfranchisement of that state's voters.

455. Absent the state legislative post-election certification of Presidential electors and of the Presidential Electors in the Defendant States, the Defendant States violate the one-person, one-vote principle because their Presidential votes and their state's Presidential electors' votes will not count toward the election of President and Vice President.

456. Plaintiffs are therefore harmed by Defendants' unconstitutional conduct in violation of the Equal Protection Clause.

457. A declaratory judgment should issue, applicable to the current and future elections, declaring that the Equal Protection Clause requires state legislative post-election certification of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors for Presidential elector votes to count in the U.S. Congress for the election of the President and Vice President.

458. Further, any count of Presidential electors in the November 3, 2020 or future elections should be declared invalid if based on votes of Presidential electors who have not received state legislative post-election certification.

459. The Vice President and U.S. Congress should be enjoined from counting Presidential elector votes from states in the current election and future elections unless the respective state legislatures has voted affirmatively in a post-election vote to certify Presidential votes and their Presidential electors.

COUNT 3:
DUE PROCESS CLAUSE

460. Plaintiff repeats and re-alleges the allegations above, as if fully set forth herein.

461. Plaintiffs as voters are entitled to state legislative post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors so their votes are subjected to the same due process as other citizens' votes.

462. When election practices reach "the point of patent and fundamental unfairness," the integrity of the election itself violates substantive due process. Griffin v. Burns, 570 F.2d 1065, 1077 (1st Cir. 1978); Duncan v. Poytbress, 657 F.2d 691, 702 (5th Cir. 1981); Florida State Conference of N.A.A.C.P. v. Browning, 522 F.3d 1153, 1183-84 (11th Cir. 2008); Roe v. State of Ala. By & Through Evans, 43 F.3d 574, 580-82 (11th Cir. 1995); Roe v. State of Ala., 68 F.3d 404, 407 (11th Cir. 1995); Marks v. Stinson, 19 F. 3d 873, 878 (3rd Cir. 1994).

463. Under this Court's precedents on procedural due process, not only intentional failure to follow election law as enacted by a State's legislature but also random and unauthorized acts by state election officials and their designees in local government can violate the Due Process Clause. Parratt v. Taylor, 451 U.S. 527, 537-41 (1981), overruled in part on other grounds by Daniels v. Williams, 474 U.S. 327, 330-31 (1986); Hudson v. Palmer, 468 U.S. 517, 532 (1984).

464. The difference between intentional acts and random and unauthorized acts is the degree of pre-deprivation review.

465. Defendants acted unconstitutionally by certifying Presidential electors and counting their votes without prior state legislative post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors.

466. Defendant States acted unconstitutionally by their state legislatures not voting for post-election certifications of Presidential votes and Presidential electors.

467. Federal Defendants acted unconstitutionally under federal laws requiring counting votes of Presidential electors who have not received state legislative post-election certification.

468. The actions set out in the paragraphs above constitute intentional violations of the law by Defendants in violation of the Due Process Clause.

469. The Defendants, in violation of the Due Process Clause, prohibit state legislative post-election certifications of Presidential votes and of the Presidential Electors.

470. Plaintiffs' voting rights are disenfranchised by Defendants' unconstitutional conduct in violation of the Due Process Clause.

471. A declaratory judgment should issue, applicable to current and future elections, declaring that the Due Process Clause requires state legislative post-election certification of Presidential votes and of Presidential electors for Presidential elector votes to count in the U.S. Congress for the election of the President and Vice President.

472. Further, any count of Presidential electors in the current and future elections should be declared invalid if based on votes of Presidential electors who have not received state legislative post-election certification.

473. The Vice President and U.S. Congress should be enjoined from counting Presidential elector votes, in the current and future elections, unless their respective state legislature has voted affirmatively in a post-election vote to certify Presidential votes and their Presidential electors.

PRAYER FOR RELIEF

WHEREFORE, Plaintiffs respectfully request that this Court issue the following relief for the 2020 and future Presidential elections:

- A. Issue a declaratory judgment, applying to the current and future elections, declaring that 3 U.S.C. §§ 5, 6 and 15 were and are unconstitutional deprivations of the state legislatures' constitutional prerogative to post-election certification of the Presidential electors;
- B. Issue a declaratory judgment, applying to current and future elections, declaring that Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 16-212 (B), Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499 (B), Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 168.46, Wis. Stat. § 7.70 (5) (b), 25 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 3166 and similar state laws are unconstitutional delegations by the respective states of post-election Presidential election certification duties to their respective executive branch officers when Article II requires such certifications to be made by the respective state legislatures;
- C. Issue a declaratory judgment, applying to current and future elections, that the Plaintiff-voters' constitutionally-protected voting rights in Presidential elections are being violated by Defendants;
- D. Issue a declaratory judgment, applying to current and future elections, that the Plaintiffs' voting rights were violated under Article II, the Equal Protection Clause and the Due Process Clause;
- E. Enjoin the Vice President and U.S. Congress, in the current and future elections, from counting Presidential elector votes from states unless their respective state legislatures vote affirmatively in a post-election vote to certify their Presidential electors;
- F. Alternatively, enjoin, in the current and future elections, the State Defendants' state legislatures to meet in their respective States to consider post-election certification of their respective Presidential electors;
- G. Award attorney's fees and costs under 42 U.S.C. § 1988 to Plaintiffs against State Defendants; and

H. Grant such other relief as the Court deems just and proper.

DATED: December 22,, 2020

/s/Erick G. Kaardal
Erick G. Kaardal (WI0031)
Special Counsel for Amistad Project of
Thomas More Society
Mohrman, Kaardal & Erickson, P.A.
150 South Fifth Street, Suite 3100
Minneapolis, Minnesota 55402
Telephone: (612) 341-1074
Facsimile: (612) 341-1076
Email: kaardal@mklaw.com

Attorney for Plaintiffs

CIVIL COVER SHEET

JS-44 (Rev. 6/17 DC)

I (a) PLAINTIFFS Wisconsin Voters Alliance, et al.  (b) COUNTY OF RESIDENCE OF FIRST LISTED PLAINTIFF _____ (EXCEPT IN U.S. PLAINTIFF CASES)	DEFENDANTS Vice President Michael Richard Pence, et al.  COUNTY OF RESIDENCE OF FIRST LISTED DEFENDANT _____ (IN U.S. PLAINTIFF CASES ONLY) <small>NOTE: IN LAND CONDEMNATION CASES, USE THE LOCATION OF THE TRACT OF LAND INVOLVED</small>
(c) ATTORNEYS (FIRM NAME, ADDRESS, AND TELEPHONE NUMBER) Erick G. Kaardal, Mohrman, Kaardal & Erickson, P.A. 150 South Fifth Street, Suite 3100 Minneapolis, Minnesota 55402 Telephone: (612) 341-1074	ATTORNEYS (IF KNOWN) Not Known.

II. BASIS OF JURISDICTION (PLACE AN x IN ONE BOX ONLY) <table style="width: 100%;"> <tr> <td><input type="radio"/> 1 U.S. Government Plaintiff</td> <td><input checked="" type="radio"/> 3 Federal Question (U.S. Government Not a Party)</td> </tr> <tr> <td><input type="radio"/> 2 U.S. Government Defendant</td> <td><input type="radio"/> 4 Diversity (Indicate Citizenship of Parties in item III)</td> </tr> </table>	<input type="radio"/> 1 U.S. Government Plaintiff	<input checked="" type="radio"/> 3 Federal Question (U.S. Government Not a Party)	<input type="radio"/> 2 U.S. Government Defendant	<input type="radio"/> 4 Diversity (Indicate Citizenship of Parties in item III)	III. CITIZENSHIP OF PRINCIPAL PARTIES (PLACE AN x IN ONE BOX FOR PLAINTIFF AND ONE BOX FOR DEFENDANT) FOR DIVERSITY CASES ONLY! <table style="width: 100%;"> <thead> <tr> <th></th> <th>PTF</th> <th>DFT</th> <th></th> <th>PTF</th> <th>DFT</th> </tr> </thead> <tbody> <tr> <td>Citizen of this State</td> <td><input type="radio"/> 1</td> <td><input type="radio"/> 1</td> <td>Incorporated or Principal Place of Business in This State</td> <td><input type="radio"/> 4</td> <td><input type="radio"/> 4</td> </tr> <tr> <td>Citizen of Another State</td> <td><input type="radio"/> 2</td> <td><input type="radio"/> 2</td> <td>Incorporated and Principal Place of Business in Another State</td> <td><input type="radio"/> 5</td> <td><input type="radio"/> 5</td> </tr> <tr> <td>Citizen or Subject of a Foreign Country</td> <td><input type="radio"/> 3</td> <td><input type="radio"/> 3</td> <td>Foreign Nation</td> <td><input type="radio"/> 6</td> <td><input type="radio"/> 6</td> </tr> </tbody> </table>		PTF	DFT		PTF	DFT	Citizen of this State	<input type="radio"/> 1	<input type="radio"/> 1	Incorporated or Principal Place of Business in This State	<input type="radio"/> 4	<input type="radio"/> 4	Citizen of Another State	<input type="radio"/> 2	<input type="radio"/> 2	Incorporated and Principal Place of Business in Another State	<input type="radio"/> 5	<input type="radio"/> 5	Citizen or Subject of a Foreign Country	<input type="radio"/> 3	<input type="radio"/> 3	Foreign Nation	<input type="radio"/> 6	<input type="radio"/> 6
<input type="radio"/> 1 U.S. Government Plaintiff	<input checked="" type="radio"/> 3 Federal Question (U.S. Government Not a Party)
<input type="radio"/> 2 U.S. Government Defendant	<input type="radio"/> 4 Diversity (Indicate Citizenship of Parties in item III)
	PTF	DFT		PTF	DFT
Citizen of this State	<input type="radio"/> 1	<input type="radio"/> 1	Incorporated or Principal Place of Business in This State	<input type="radio"/> 4	<input type="radio"/> 4
Citizen of Another State	<input type="radio"/> 2	<input type="radio"/> 2	Incorporated and Principal Place of Business in Another State	<input type="radio"/> 5	<input type="radio"/> 5
Citizen or Subject of a Foreign Country	<input type="radio"/> 3	<input type="radio"/> 3	Foreign Nation	<input type="radio"/> 6	<input type="radio"/> 6

IV. CASE ASSIGNMENT AND NATURE OF SUIT

(Place an X in one category, A-N, that best represents your Cause of Action and one in a corresponding Nature of Suit)

<input checked="" type="radio"/> A. Antitrust  <input type="checkbox"/> 410 Antitrust	<input checked="" type="radio"/> B. Personal Injury/ Malpractice <input type="checkbox"/> 310 Airplane <input type="checkbox"/> 315 Airplane Product Liability <input type="checkbox"/> 320 Assault, Libel & Slander <input type="checkbox"/> 330 Federal Employers Liability <input type="checkbox"/> 340 Marine <input type="checkbox"/> 345 Marine Product Liability <input type="checkbox"/> 350 Motor Vehicle <input type="checkbox"/> 355 Motor Vehicle Product Liability <input type="checkbox"/> 360 Other Personal Injury <input type="checkbox"/> 362 Medical Malpractice <input type="checkbox"/> 365 Product Liability <input type="checkbox"/> 367 Health Care/Pharmaceutical Personal Injury Product Liability <input type="checkbox"/> 368 Asbestos Product Liability	<input checked="" type="radio"/> C. Administrative Agency Review <input type="checkbox"/> 151 Medicare Act Social Security <input type="checkbox"/> 861 HIA (1395ff) <input type="checkbox"/> 862 Black Lung (923) <input type="checkbox"/> 863 DIWC/DIWW (405(g)) <input type="checkbox"/> 864 SSID Title XVI <input type="checkbox"/> 865 RSI (405(g)) Other Statutes <input type="checkbox"/> 891 Agricultural Acts <input type="checkbox"/> 893 Environmental Matters <input type="checkbox"/> 890 Other Statutory Actions (If Administrative Agency is Involved)	<input checked="" type="radio"/> D. Temporary Restraining Order/Preliminary Injunction  Any nature of suit from any category may be selected for this category of case assignment.  (If Antitrust, then A governs)
<input checked="" type="radio"/> E. General Civil (Other) OR <input checked="" type="radio"/> F. Pro Se General Civil
Real Property <input type="checkbox"/> 210 Land Condemnation <input type="checkbox"/> 220 Foreclosure <input type="checkbox"/> 230 Rent, Lease & Ejectment <input type="checkbox"/> 240 Torts to Land <input type="checkbox"/> 245 Tort Product Liability <input type="checkbox"/> 290 All Other Real Property  Personal Property <input type="checkbox"/> 370 Other Fraud <input type="checkbox"/> 371 Truth in Lending <input type="checkbox"/> 380 Other Personal Property Damage <input type="checkbox"/> 385 Property Damage Product Liability	Bankruptcy <input type="checkbox"/> 422 Appeal 27 USC 158 <input type="checkbox"/> 423 Withdrawal 28 USC 157  Prisoner Petitions <input type="checkbox"/> 535 Death Penalty <input type="checkbox"/> 540 Mandamus & Other <input type="checkbox"/> 550 Civil Rights <input type="checkbox"/> 555 Prison Conditions <input type="checkbox"/> 560 Civil Detainee – Conditions of Confinement  Property Rights <input type="checkbox"/> 820 Copyrights <input type="checkbox"/> 830 Patent <input type="checkbox"/> 835 Patent – Abbreviated New Drug Application <input type="checkbox"/> 840 Trademark	Federal Tax Suits <input type="checkbox"/> 870 Taxes (US plaintiff or defendant) <input type="checkbox"/> 871 IRS-Third Party 26 USC 7609  Forfeiture/Penalty <input type="checkbox"/> 625 Drug Related Seizure of Property 21 USC 881 <input type="checkbox"/> 690 Other  Other Statutes <input type="checkbox"/> 375 False Claims Act <input type="checkbox"/> 376 Qui Tam (31 USC 3729(a)) <input type="checkbox"/> 400 State Reapportionment <input type="checkbox"/> 430 Banks & Banking <input type="checkbox"/> 450 Commerce/ICC Rates/etc. <input type="checkbox"/> 460 Deportation	<input type="checkbox"/> 462 Naturalization Application <input type="checkbox"/> 465 Other Immigration Actions <input type="checkbox"/> 470 Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organization <input type="checkbox"/> 480 Consumer Credit <input type="checkbox"/> 490 Cable/Satellite TV <input type="checkbox"/> 850 Securities/Commodities/Exchange <input type="checkbox"/> 896 Arbitration <input type="checkbox"/> 899 Administrative Procedure Act/Review or Appeal of Agency Decision <input type="checkbox"/> 950 Constitutionality of State Statutes <input type="checkbox"/> 890 Other Statutory Actions (if not administrative agency review or Privacy Act)

<input type="radio"/> G. Habeas Corpus/ 2255  <input type="checkbox"/> 530 Habeas Corpus – General <input type="checkbox"/> 510 Motion/Vacate Sentence <input type="checkbox"/> 463 Habeas Corpus – Alien Detainee	<input type="radio"/> H. Employment Discrimination  <input type="checkbox"/> 442 Civil Rights – Employment (criteria: race, gender/sex, national origin, discrimination, disability, age, religion, retaliation)  (If pro se, select this deck)	<input type="radio"/> I. FOIA/Privacy Act  <input type="checkbox"/> 895 Freedom of Information Act <input type="checkbox"/> 890 Other Statutory Actions (if Privacy Act)  (If pro se, select this deck)	<input type="radio"/> J. Student Loan  <input type="checkbox"/> 152 Recovery of Defaulted Student Loan (excluding veterans)
<input type="radio"/> K. Labor/ERISA (non-employment)  <input type="checkbox"/> 710 Fair Labor Standards Act <input type="checkbox"/> 720 Labor/Mgmt. Relations <input type="checkbox"/> 740 Labor Railway Act <input type="checkbox"/> 751 Family and Medical Leave Act <input type="checkbox"/> 790 Other Labor Litigation <input type="checkbox"/> 791 Empl. Ret. Inc. Security Act	<input checked="" type="radio"/> L. Other Civil Rights (non-employment)  <input checked="" type="checkbox"/> 441 Voting (if not Voting Rights Act) <input type="checkbox"/> 443 Housing/Accommodations <input type="checkbox"/> 440 Other Civil Rights <input type="checkbox"/> 445 Americans w/Disabilities – Employment <input type="checkbox"/> 446 Americans w/Disabilities – Other <input type="checkbox"/> 448 Education	<input type="radio"/> M. Contract  <input type="checkbox"/> 110 Insurance <input type="checkbox"/> 120 Marine <input type="checkbox"/> 130 Miller Act <input type="checkbox"/> 140 Negotiable Instrument <input type="checkbox"/> 150 Recovery of Overpayment & Enforcement of Judgment <input type="checkbox"/> 153 Recovery of Overpayment of Veteran's Benefits <input type="checkbox"/> 160 Stockholder's Suits <input type="checkbox"/> 190 Other Contracts <input type="checkbox"/> 195 Contract Product Liability <input type="checkbox"/> 196 Franchise	<input type="radio"/> N. Three-Judge Court  <input type="checkbox"/> 441 Civil Rights – Voting (if Voting Rights Act)

V. ORIGIN
☒ 1 Original Proceeding  
 ☐ 2 Removed from State Court  
 ☐ 3 Remanded from Appellate Court  
 ☐ 4 Reinstated or Reopened  
 ☐ 5 Transferred from another district (specify)  
 ☐ 6 Multi-district Litigation  
 ☐ 7 Appeal to District Judge from Mag. Judge  
 ☐ 8 Multi-district Litigation – Direct File

VI. CAUSE OF ACTION (CITE THE U.S. CIVIL STATUTE UNDER WHICH YOU ARE FILING AND WRITE A BRIEF STATEMENT OF CAUSE.)
 3 USC 1-21; Elector's Clause; Twelfth Amendment to Constitution; Federal Statutes are unconstitutional interferences with

VII. REQUESTED IN COMPLAINT	CHECK IF THIS IS A CLASS ACTION UNDER F.R.C.P. 23 <input type="checkbox"/>	DEMAND $	JURY DEMAND: YES <input type="checkbox"/> NO <input checked="" type="checkbox"/>
VIII. RELATED CASE(S) IF ANY	(See instruction)	YES <input type="checkbox"/> NO <input checked="" type="checkbox"/>	If yes, please complete related case form

DATE: 12/22/2020	SIGNATURE OF ATTORNEY OF RECORD: /s/Erick G. Kaardal
------------------	--

INSTRUCTIONS FOR COMPLETING CIVIL COVER SHEET JS-44
Authority for Civil Cover Sheet

The JS-44 civil cover sheet and the information contained herein neither replaces nor supplements the filings and services of pleadings or other papers as required by law, except as provided by local rules of court. This form, approved by the Judicial Conference of the United States in September 1974, is required for the use of the Clerk of Court for the purpose of initiating the civil docket sheet. Consequently, a civil cover sheet is submitted to the Clerk of Court for each civil complaint filed. Listed below are tips for completing the civil cover sheet. These tips coincide with the Roman Numerals on the cover sheet.

- I. COUNTY OF RESIDENCE OF FIRST LISTED PLAINTIFF/DEFENDANT (b) County of residence: Use 11001 to indicate plaintiff if resident of Washington, DC, 88888 if plaintiff is resident of United States but not Washington, DC, and 99999 if plaintiff is outside the United States.
- III. CITIZENSHIP OF PRINCIPAL PARTIES: This section is completed only if diversity of citizenship was selected as the Basis of Jurisdiction under Section II.
- IV. CASE ASSIGNMENT AND NATURE OF SUIT: The assignment of a judge to your case will depend on the category you select that best represents the primary cause of action found in your complaint. You may select only one category. You must also select one corresponding nature of suit found under the category of the case.
- VI. CAUSE OF ACTION: Cite the U.S. Civil Statute under which you are filing and write a brief statement of the primary cause.
- VIII. RELATED CASE(S), IF ANY: If you indicated that there is a related case, you must complete a related case form, which may be obtained from the Clerk's Office.

Because of the need for accurate and complete information, you should ensure the accuracy of the information provided prior to signing the form.

District of Columbia

Civil Action No.

SUMMONS IN A CIVIL ACTION

To: (Defendant's name and address) Vice President Michael Richard Pence, in his official capacity as President of
the United States Senate,
Office of the Vice President
1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W.
Washington, DC 20500

A lawsuit has been filed against you.

Within 21 days after service of this summons on you (not counting the day you received it) — or 60 days if you are the United States or a United States agency, or an officer or employee of the United States described in Fed. R. Civ. P. 12 (a)(2) or (3) — you must serve on the plaintiff an answer to the attached complaint or a motion under Rule 12 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. The answer or motion must be served on the plaintiff or plaintiff's attorney, whose name and address are: Erick G. Kaardal

Erick G. Kaardal
Special Counsel for Amistad Project of Thomas More Society
Mohrman, Kaardal & Erickson, P.A.
150 South Fifth Street, Suite 3100
Minneapolis, Minnesota 55402
(612) 465-0927 kaardal@mkllaw.com

If you fail to respond, judgment by default will be entered against you for the relief demanded in the complaint. You also must file your answer or motion with the court.

ANGELA D. CAESAR, CLERK OF COURT

Date: _____

Signature of Clerk or Deputy Clerk

Civil Action No. _____

PROOF OF SERVICE(This section should not be filed with the court unless required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 4 (l))*

This summons for (name of individual and title, if any) _____
 was received by me on (date) _____.

☐ I personally served the summons on the individual at (place) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I left the summons at the individual's residence or usual place of abode with (name) _____,
 a person of suitable age and discretion who resides there,
 on (date) _____, and mailed a copy to the individual's last known address; or

☐ I served the summons on (name of individual) _____, who is designated by law to accept service of process on behalf of (name of organization) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I returned the summons unexecuted because _____; or

☐ Other (specify): _____

My fees are $ _____ for travel and $ _____ for services, for a total of $ 0.00.

I declare under penalty of perjury that this information is true.

Date: _____

_____
Server's signature

_____
Printed name and title

_____
Server's address

Additional information regarding attempted service, etc:

District of Columbia

Wisconsin Voters Alliance, et al.,

Plaintiff(s)

V.

Vice President Michael Richard Pence, et al.,

Defendant(s)

Civil Action No.

SUMMONS IN A CIVIL ACTION

To: (Defendant's name and address) U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, U.S. Capitol
First St SE
Washington, DC 20004

A lawsuit has been filed against you.

Within 21 days after service of this summons on you (not counting the day you received it) — or 60 days if you are the United States or a United States agency, or an officer or employee of the United States described in Fed. R. Civ. P. 12 (a)(2) or (3) — you must serve on the plaintiff an answer to the attached complaint or a motion under Rule 12 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. The answer or motion must be served on the plaintiff or plaintiff's attorney, whose name and address are: Erick G. Kaardal

Erick G. Kaardal
Special Counsel for Amistad Project of Thomas More Society
Mohrman, Kaardal & Erickson, P.A.
150 South Fifth Street, Suite 3100
Minneapolis, Minnesota 55402
(612) 465-0927 kaardal@mkllaw.com

If you fail to respond, judgment by default will be entered against you for the relief demanded in the complaint. You also must file your answer or motion with the court.

ANGELA D. CAESAR, CLERK OF COURT

Date: _____

Signature of Clerk or Deputy Clerk

Civil Action No. _____

PROOF OF SERVICE(This section should not be filed with the court unless required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 4 (l))*

This summons for (name of individual and title, if any) _____
 was received by me on (date) _____.

☐ I personally served the summons on the individual at (place) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I left the summons at the individual's residence or usual place of abode with (name) _____,
 a person of suitable age and discretion who resides there,
 on (date) _____, and mailed a copy to the individual's last known address; or

☐ I served the summons on (name of individual) _____, who is designated by law to accept service of process on behalf of (name of organization) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I returned the summons unexecuted because _____; or

☐ Other (specify): _____

My fees are $ _____ for travel and $ _____ for services, for a total of $ 0.00.

I declare under penalty of perjury that this information is true.

Date: _____

_____
Server's signature

_____
Printed name and title

_____
Server's address

Additional information regarding attempted service, etc:

District of Columbia

Civil Action No.

Signature of Clerk or Deputy Clerk

Civil Action No. _____

PROOF OF SERVICE(This section should not be filed with the court unless required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 4 (l))*

This summons for (name of individual and title, if any) _____
 was received by me on (date) _____.

☐ I personally served the summons on the individual at (place) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I left the summons at the individual's residence or usual place of abode with (name) _____,
 a person of suitable age and discretion who resides there,
 on (date) _____, and mailed a copy to the individual's last known address; or

☐ I served the summons on (name of individual) _____, who is designated by law to accept service of process on behalf of (name of organization) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I returned the summons unexecuted because _____; or

☐ Other (specify):

My fees are $ _____ for travel and $ _____ for services, for a total of $ 0.00.

I declare under penalty of perjury that this information is true.

Date: _____

_____
Server's signature

_____
Printed name and title

_____
Server's address

Additional information regarding attempted service, etc:

District of Columbia

Civil Action No.

Signature of Clerk or Deputy Clerk

Civil Action No. _____

PROOF OF SERVICE(This section should not be filed with the court unless required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 4 (l))*

This summons for (name of individual and title, if any) _____
 was received by me on (date) _____.

☐ I personally served the summons on the individual at (place) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I left the summons at the individual's residence or usual place of abode with (name) _____,
 a person of suitable age and discretion who resides there,
 on (date) _____, and mailed a copy to the individual's last known address; or

☐ I served the summons on (name of individual) _____, who is designated by law to accept service of process on behalf of (name of organization) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I returned the summons unexecuted because _____; or

☐ Other (specify): _____

My fees are $ _____ for travel and $ _____ for services, for a total of $ 0.00.

I declare under penalty of perjury that this information is true.

Date: _____

_____
Server's signature

_____
Printed name and title

_____
Server's address

Additional information regarding attempted service, etc:

District of Columbia

Civil Action No.

Signature of Clerk or Deputy Clerk

Civil Action No. _____

PROOF OF SERVICE(This section should not be filed with the court unless required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 4 (l))*

This summons for (name of individual and title, if any) _____
 was received by me on (date) _____.

☐ I personally served the summons on the individual at (place) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I left the summons at the individual's residence or usual place of abode with (name) _____,
 a person of suitable age and discretion who resides there,
 on (date) _____, and mailed a copy to the individual's last known address; or

☐ I served the summons on (name of individual) _____, who is designated by law to accept service of process on behalf of (name of organization) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I returned the summons unexecuted because _____; or

☐ Other (specify): _____

My fees are $ _____ for travel and $ _____ for services, for a total of $ 0.00.

I declare under penalty of perjury that this information is true.

Date: _____

_____
Server's signature

_____
Printed name and title

_____
Server's address

Additional information regarding attempted service, etc:

District of Columbia

Civil Action No.

Signature of Clerk or Deputy Clerk

Civil Action No. _____

PROOF OF SERVICE(This section should not be filed with the court unless required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 4 (l))*

This summons for (name of individual and title, if any) _____
 was received by me on (date) _____.

☐ I personally served the summons on the individual at (place) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I left the summons at the individual's residence or usual place of abode with (name) _____,
 a person of suitable age and discretion who resides there,
 on (date) _____, and mailed a copy to the individual's last known address; or

☐ I served the summons on (name of individual) _____, who is designated by law to accept service of process on behalf of (name of organization) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I returned the summons unexecuted because _____; or

☐ Other (specify): _____

My fees are $ _____ for travel and $ _____ for services, for a total of $ 0.00.

I declare under penalty of perjury that this information is true.

Date: _____

_____
Server's signature

_____
Printed name and title

_____
Server's address

Additional information regarding attempted service, etc:

District of Columbia

Civil Action No.

Signature of Clerk or Deputy Clerk

Civil Action No. _____

PROOF OF SERVICE(This section should not be filed with the court unless required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 4 (l))*

This summons for (name of individual and title, if any) _____
 was received by me on (date) _____.

☐ I personally served the summons on the individual at (place) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I left the summons at the individual's residence or usual place of abode with (name) _____,
 a person of suitable age and discretion who resides there,
 on (date) _____, and mailed a copy to the individual's last known address; or

☐ I served the summons on (name of individual) _____, who is designated by law to accept service of process on behalf of (name of organization) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I returned the summons unexecuted because _____; or

☐ Other (specify): _____

My fees are $ _____ for travel and $ _____ for services, for a total of $ 0.00.

I declare under penalty of perjury that this information is true.

Date: _____

_____
Server's signature

_____
Printed name and title

_____
Server's address

Additional information regarding attempted service, etc:

District of Columbia

Civil Action No.

Signature of Clerk or Deputy Clerk

Civil Action No. _____

PROOF OF SERVICE(This section should not be filed with the court unless required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 4 (l))*

This summons for (name of individual and title, if any) _____
 was received by me on (date) _____.

☐ I personally served the summons on the individual at (place) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I left the summons at the individual's residence or usual place of abode with (name) _____,
 a person of suitable age and discretion who resides there,
 on (date) _____, and mailed a copy to the individual's last known address; or

☐ I served the summons on (name of individual) _____, who is designated by law to accept service of process on behalf of (name of organization) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I returned the summons unexecuted because _____; or

☐ Other (specify): _____

My fees are $ _____ for travel and $ _____ for services, for a total of $ 0.00.

I declare under penalty of perjury that this information is true.

Date: _____

_____
Server's signature

_____
Printed name and title

_____
Server's address

Additional information regarding attempted service, etc:

District of Columbia

Civil Action No.

Signature of Clerk or Deputy Clerk

Civil Action No. _____

PROOF OF SERVICE(This section should not be filed with the court unless required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 4 (l))*

This summons for (name of individual and title, if any) _____
 was received by me on (date) _____.

☐ I personally served the summons on the individual at (place) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I left the summons at the individual's residence or usual place of abode with (name) _____,
 a person of suitable age and discretion who resides there,
 on (date) _____, and mailed a copy to the individual's last known address; or

☐ I served the summons on (name of individual) _____, who is designated by law to accept service of process on behalf of (name of organization) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I returned the summons unexecuted because _____; or

☐ Other (specify): _____

My fees are $ _____ for travel and $ _____ for services, for a total of $ 0.00.

I declare under penalty of perjury that this information is true.

Date: _____

_____
Server's signature

_____
Printed name and title

_____
Server's address

Additional information regarding attempted service, etc:

District of Columbia

Civil Action No.

Signature of Clerk or Deputy Clerk

Civil Action No. _____

PROOF OF SERVICE(This section should not be filed with the court unless required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 4 (l))*

This summons for (name of individual and title, if any) _____
 was received by me on (date) _____.

☐ I personally served the summons on the individual at (place) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I left the summons at the individual's residence or usual place of abode with (name) _____,
 a person of suitable age and discretion who resides there,
 on (date) _____, and mailed a copy to the individual's last known address; or

☐ I served the summons on (name of individual) _____, who is designated by law to accept service of process on behalf of (name of organization) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I returned the summons unexecuted because _____; or

☐ Other (specify): _____

My fees are $ _____ for travel and $ _____ for services, for a total of $ 0.00.

I declare under penalty of perjury that this information is true.

Date: _____

_____
Server's signature

_____
Printed name and title

_____
Server's address

Additional information regarding attempted service, etc:

District of Columbia

Civil Action No.

Signature of Clerk or Deputy Clerk

Civil Action No. _____

PROOF OF SERVICE(This section should not be filed with the court unless required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 4 (l))*

This summons for (name of individual and title, if any) _____
 was received by me on (date) _____.

☐ I personally served the summons on the individual at (place) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I left the summons at the individual's residence or usual place of abode with (name) _____,
 a person of suitable age and discretion who resides there,
 on (date) _____, and mailed a copy to the individual's last known address; or

☐ I served the summons on (name of individual) _____, who is designated by law to accept service of process on behalf of (name of organization) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I returned the summons unexecuted because _____; or

☐ Other (specify): _____

My fees are $ _____ for travel and $ _____ for services, for a total of $ 0.00.

I declare under penalty of perjury that this information is true.

Date: _____

_____
Server's signature

_____
Printed name and title

_____
Server's address

Additional information regarding attempted service, etc:

District of Columbia

Civil Action No.

Signature of Clerk or Deputy Clerk

Civil Action No. _____

PROOF OF SERVICE(This section should not be filed with the court unless required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 4 (l))*

This summons for (name of individual and title, if any) _____
 was received by me on (date) _____.

☐ I personally served the summons on the individual at (place) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I left the summons at the individual's residence or usual place of abode with (name) _____,
 a person of suitable age and discretion who resides there,
 on (date) _____, and mailed a copy to the individual's last known address; or

☐ I served the summons on (name of individual) _____, who is designated by law to accept service of process on behalf of (name of organization) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I returned the summons unexecuted because _____; or

☐ Other (specify): _____

My fees are $ _____ for travel and $ _____ for services, for a total of $ 0.00.

I declare under penalty of perjury that this information is true.

Date: _____

_____
Server's signature

_____
Printed name and title

_____
Server's address

Additional information regarding attempted service, etc:

District of Columbia

Civil Action No.

Signature of Clerk or Deputy Clerk

Civil Action No. _____

PROOF OF SERVICE(This section should not be filed with the court unless required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 4 (l))*

This summons for (name of individual and title, if any) _____
 was received by me on (date) _____.

☐ I personally served the summons on the individual at (place) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I left the summons at the individual's residence or usual place of abode with (name) _____,
 a person of suitable age and discretion who resides there,
 on (date) _____, and mailed a copy to the individual's last known address; or

☐ I served the summons on (name of individual) _____, who is designated by law to accept service of process on behalf of (name of organization) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I returned the summons unexecuted because _____; or

☐ Other (specify): _____

My fees are $ _____ for travel and $ _____ for services, for a total of $ 0.00.

I declare under penalty of perjury that this information is true.

Date: _____

_____
Server's signature

_____
Printed name and title

_____
Server's address

Additional information regarding attempted service, etc:

District of Columbia

Civil Action No.

Signature of Clerk or Deputy Clerk

Civil Action No. _____

PROOF OF SERVICE(This section should not be filed with the court unless required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 4 (l))*

This summons for (name of individual and title, if any) _____
 was received by me on (date) _____.

☐ I personally served the summons on the individual at (place) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I left the summons at the individual's residence or usual place of abode with (name) _____,
 a person of suitable age and discretion who resides there,
 on (date) _____, and mailed a copy to the individual's last known address; or

☐ I served the summons on (name of individual) _____, who is designated by law to accept service of process on behalf of (name of organization) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I returned the summons unexecuted because _____; or

☐ Other (specify): _____

My fees are $ _____ for travel and $ _____ for services, for a total of $ 0.00.

I declare under penalty of perjury that this information is true.

Date: _____

_____
Server's signature

_____
Printed name and title

_____
Server's address

Additional information regarding attempted service, etc:

District of Columbia

Civil Action No.

Signature of Clerk or Deputy Clerk

Civil Action No. _____

PROOF OF SERVICE(This section should not be filed with the court unless required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 4 (l))*

This summons for (name of individual and title, if any) _____
 was received by me on (date) _____.

☐ I personally served the summons on the individual at (place) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I left the summons at the individual's residence or usual place of abode with (name) _____,
 a person of suitable age and discretion who resides there,
 on (date) _____, and mailed a copy to the individual's last known address; or

☐ I served the summons on (name of individual) _____, who is designated by law to accept service of process on behalf of (name of organization) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I returned the summons unexecuted because _____; or

☐ Other (specify):

My fees are $ _____ for travel and $ _____ for services, for a total of $ 0.00.

I declare under penalty of perjury that this information is true.

Date: _____

_____
Server's signature

_____
Printed name and title

_____
Server's address

Additional information regarding attempted service, etc:

District of Columbia

Civil Action No.

Signature of Clerk or Deputy Clerk

Civil Action No. _____

PROOF OF SERVICE(This section should not be filed with the court unless required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 4 (l))*

This summons for (name of individual and title, if any) _____
 was received by me on (date) _____.

☐ I personally served the summons on the individual at (place) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I left the summons at the individual's residence or usual place of abode with (name) _____,
 a person of suitable age and discretion who resides there,
 on (date) _____, and mailed a copy to the individual's last known address; or

☐ I served the summons on (name of individual) _____, who is designated by law to accept service of process on behalf of (name of organization) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I returned the summons unexecuted because _____; or

☐ Other (specify): _____

My fees are $ _____ for travel and $ _____ for services, for a total of $ 0.00.

I declare under penalty of perjury that this information is true.

Date: _____

_____
Server's signature

_____
Printed name and title

_____
Server's address

Additional information regarding attempted service, etc:

District of Columbia

Civil Action No.

Signature of Clerk or Deputy Clerk

Civil Action No. _____

PROOF OF SERVICE(This section should not be filed with the court unless required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 4 (l))*

This summons for (name of individual and title, if any) _____
 was received by me on (date) _____.

☐ I personally served the summons on the individual at (place) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I left the summons at the individual's residence or usual place of abode with (name) _____,
 a person of suitable age and discretion who resides there,
 on (date) _____, and mailed a copy to the individual's last known address; or

☐ I served the summons on (name of individual) _____, who is designated by law to accept service of process on behalf of (name of organization) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I returned the summons unexecuted because _____; or

☐ Other (specify):

My fees are $ _____ for travel and $ _____ for services, for a total of $ 0.00.

I declare under penalty of perjury that this information is true.

Date: _____

_____
Server's signature

_____
Printed name and title

_____
Server's address

Additional information regarding attempted service, etc:

District of Columbia

Civil Action No.

Signature of Clerk or Deputy Clerk

Civil Action No. _____

PROOF OF SERVICE(This section should not be filed with the court unless required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 4 (l))*

This summons for (name of individual and title, if any) _____
 was received by me on (date) _____.

☐ I personally served the summons on the individual at (place) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I left the summons at the individual's residence or usual place of abode with (name) _____,
 a person of suitable age and discretion who resides there,
 on (date) _____, and mailed a copy to the individual's last known address; or

☐ I served the summons on (name of individual) _____, who is designated by law to accept service of process on behalf of (name of organization) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I returned the summons unexecuted because _____; or

☐ Other (specify):

My fees are $ _____ for travel and $ _____ for services, for a total of $ 0.00.

I declare under penalty of perjury that this information is true.

Date: _____

_____
Server's signature

_____
Printed name and title

_____
Server's address

Additional information regarding attempted service, etc:

District of Columbia

Civil Action No.

Signature of Clerk or Deputy Clerk

Civil Action No. _____

PROOF OF SERVICE(This section should not be filed with the court unless required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 4 (l))*

This summons for (name of individual and title, if any) _____
 was received by me on (date) _____.

☐ I personally served the summons on the individual at (place) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I left the summons at the individual's residence or usual place of abode with (name) _____,
 a person of suitable age and discretion who resides there,
 on (date) _____, and mailed a copy to the individual's last known address; or

☐ I served the summons on (name of individual) _____, who is designated by law to accept service of process on behalf of (name of organization) _____
 _____ on (date) _____; or

☐ I returned the summons unexecuted because _____; or

☐ Other (specify): _____

My fees are $ _____ for travel and $ _____ for services, for a total of $ 0.00.

I declare under penalty of perjury that this information is true.

Date: _____

_____
Server's signature

_____
Printed name and title

_____
Server's address

Additional information regarding attempted service, etc:

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF TEXAS
TYLER DIVISION

Louie Gohmert, Tyler Bowyer,
Nancy Cottle, Jake Hoffman,
Anthony Kern, James R. Lamon,
James Moorhead, Robert Montgomery,
Loraine Pellegrino, Greg Safsten,
Kelli Ward and Michael Ward
Plaintiffs

v.

Civil Action No. 6:20-cv-00660
(Election Matter)

The Honorable Michael R. Pence, Vice President of the United States,
in his official capacity,
Defendant

Emergency Opposed Motion of Timothy P. Dowling to Intervene

To the Honorable Jeremy D. Kernodle, United States District Court Judge:

Timothy P. Dowling (“Dowling”) hereby files his motion to intervene in this case, and in support thereof would show the Court the following.

1. Dowling is an American citizen who is a resident of Texas. Dowling has been a continuously licensed Texas attorney since 1981. Dowling files this motion pro se (he represents no person or entity in this case).

Dowling voted for Joseph R. Biden in the 2020 presidential election, and he wishes for Mr. Biden to become the President of the United States on January 20, 2021. Dowling requests that he be permitted to intervene in this case as a matter of right under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 24 (a), or alternatively, be allowed to permissibly intervene in this case under Rule 24 (b).

2. In this case Plaintiffs have sued a “friendly” Defendant, Vice President Michael Pence, who was the 2020 Republican nominee for the office of Vice President, and who has served as the Vice President of the United States of America since January 20, 2017. Plaintiff Louie Gohmert is a Republican member of the House of Representatives. The other Plaintiffs are Republicans who allegedly live in Arizona.

3. In this case Plaintiffs are asking this Court to authorize a de jure coup by overturning the results of the 2020 presidential election so that Defendant Pence can use his imagined “discretion” to determine which of allegedly competing slates of Presidential Electors should be recognized from various states of the United States. The goal of this suit is to permit that to occur so that the current President of the United States remains as the President of the United States and that Joseph R. Biden does not become the President of the United States on January 20, 2021.

4. Intervention as a matter of right. Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 24(a)(2) provides in relevant part that “on timely motion, the court must permit anyone to intervene who... claims an interest relating to the property or transaction that is the subject of the action, and is so situated that disposing of the action may as a practical matter impair or impede the movant’s ability to protect its interest, unless existing parties adequately represent that interest” (emphasis added). As an American citizen who wishes Mr. Biden to be the President of the United States beginning on January 20, 2021, Dowling has a direct and very consequential interest in the matters that are the subject of this lawsuit. He is clearly “so situated that disposing of the action may as a practical matter impair or impede” his ability to protect his interest in having Mr. Biden become President of the United States on January 20, 2021. There is currently no party in this case who adequately represents Dowling’s interest. Indeed, the Defendant, the current Vice President of the United States, has an interest contrary to that Mr. Dowling, since Defendant is the Vice President under the current President who Plaintiffs wish to have remain as President. Therefore Dowling clearly has the right to intervene in this case.

5. Dowling's motion has been brought timely, as this case was filed on Sunday, December 27, 2020. Plaintiffs filed an emergency motion on December 28, 2020 seeking very expedited relief, and they are in no position to complain of Dowling seeking emergency relief in this motion.
6. Permissive intervention. Dowling also requests that the Court permit Dowling to permissibly intervene under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 24(b). That Rule provides in relevant part that "on timely motion the court may permit anyone to intervene who... has a claim or defense that shares with the main action a common question of law or fact." In compliance with Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 24(c), the pleading that Dowling seeks to file in this case is attached hereto as Exhibit 1. As this pleading indicates, Dowling has defenses in this case regarding common questions of law and fact.
7. Dowling requests that the Court order that Dowling be made a party to this case based on intervention as a matter of right under Rule 24(a), and that Dowling also be permitted to permissibly intervene in this case under Rule 24(b). The Court should grant this motion immediately because Plaintiffs seek relief prior to January 6, 2021, and there is inadequate time for the typical response period to a motion to expire before this imminent date. Dowling will be irreparably harmed if this motion is not granted at this time, as granting it after any hearings are held in this case would likely be meaningless.

8. Dowling requests that he be permitted to appear at any hearings in this case by telephone or video if the Court authorizes participation at any hearings by either or both of both methods. It is a more than 7 hour trip from Dowling's home to the Court. Dowling is 65 years of age, and given the current pandemic, substantial risk is involved in travelling this distance and appearing in court in person. Therefore good cause exists for Dowling to appear at hearings in this case by telephone or video.
9. Dowling requests that the Court grant this relief by signing the proposed order attached hereto as Exhibit 2, and additionally grant him such further additional relief, whether in law or in equity, as may be just.

/s/ Timothy P. Dowling

Pro se

Texas State Bar No. 06083900

8017 Villefranche Dr.

Corpus Christi, TX 78414

(361) 960-3135

Relampago@aol.com

Certificate of consultation

Dowling and lead counsel for Plaintiffs, William Lewis Sessions, complied by telephone with the meet and confer requirement of Local Rule CV-7(h) on December 29, 2020 at approximately 11:45am. This discussion conclusively ended in an impasse, leaving an open issue for the Court to resolve. This motion is opposed by Plaintiffs.

/s/ Timothy P. Dowling

Certificate of service

The undersigned hereby certifies that counsel for Plaintiffs were served by filing this motion with the Clerk of this Court, and such counsel (and other counsel) were also served by email service on December 31, 2020 as follows:

lsessions@sessionslaw.net

William Sessions

howard@kleinhendler.com

Howard Kleinhendler

ljoseph@larryjoseph.com

Lawrence Joseph

hallerjulia@outlook.com

Julia Haller

brandoncjohnson6@aol.com

Brandon Johnson

gregory.f.jacob@ovp.eop.gov
Gregory F. Jacob

stephen.j.cox@usdoj.gov
Stephen J. Cox

Christopher.Healy@usdoj.gov
Christopher Healy

Tanya.Senanayake@usjog.gov
Tanya Senanayake

alan.kennedy@aya.yale.edu
Alan Kennedy

/s/ Timothy P. Dowling

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF TEXAS
TYLER DIVISION

Louie Gohmert, Tyler Bowyer,
Nancy Cottle, Jake Hoffman,
Anthony Kern, James R. Lamon,
James Moorhead, Robert Montgomery,
Loraine Pellegrino, Greg Safsten,
Kelli Ward and Michael Ward
Plaintiffs

v.

Civil Action No. 6:20-cv-00660
(Election Matter)

The Honorable Michael R. Pence, Vice President of the United States,
in his official capacity,
Defendant

Emergency Motion of Timothy P. Dowling to Dismiss

To the Honorable Jeremy D. Kernodle, United States District Court Judge:

Timothy P. Dowling (“Dowling”) hereby files his motion to dismiss this case. He does so pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12 (for among other reasons, lack of subject matter jurisdiction, “failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted,” and “failure to join a party under Rule 19;” see Fed. R. Civ. Pro. 12(b)), and any other applicable law. Dowling represents no person or entity other than himself. Dowling has also filed a motion to intervene. If the Court does not grant Dowling’s motion to intervene, Dowling requests that the Court consider this pleading as an amicus brief. Dowling believes that the filing of an amicus brief is appropriate for the reasons stated in the motion for leave to file amicus brief filed by John Campbell (Document No. 13). Given the immediate relief sought by Plaintiffs, Dowling’s motion to dismiss should be considered at this time. In support of his motion to intervene and his motion to dismiss Dowling would show the Court the following.

1. Summary of Dowling’s arguments

Plaintiffs ask this Court to do what no court in the history of our Republic has ever done: convert the loser of a free and fair Presidential election (as determined by the Administrations’ own Justice Department) into the winner. Plaintiffs are twelve Republicans, led by the Chair of the Arizona Republican Party (Kelli Ward), ten other purported (but not actual) Presidential Electors from Arizona, and the Republican Congressman who resides in the Congressional district where this Court sits. The Defendant is the Vice President of the United States, who was on the losing ticket in the 2020 Presidential election. Accordingly Defendant would be delighted if this Court grants the preposterous relief requested by Plaintiffs. There are prosaic procedural grounds to dismiss this case even if the substantive relief requested by Plaintiffs was not absurd (see pages 15-25).

There are also four procedural bases to dismiss this case. First, Plaintiffs have no standing, and this Court has no jurisdiction to address this “friendly suit” (see pages 4-6). Second, Plaintiffs have no evidence to support their claims that there was sufficient electoral fraud to overturn the Presidential election results (a conclusion shared by the former Attorney General of the United States, William Barr, and many courts around the country) (see pages 12-13). Third, there are factual disputes that make the extremely summary disposition of this case requested by Plaintiffs inappropriate (see pages 10-11). Fourth, Plaintiffs have failed to show that they are entitled to injunctive relief (see pages 13-14). Plaintiffs must hurdle each of these procedural obstacles to even be entitled to address the constitutional questions they raise, yet they can surmount none of them.

Even if this Court does not dismiss this case at this time, there are multiple reasons that prevent the Court from properly making a summary immediate ruling granting injunctive relief as Plaintiffs request. First, Plaintiffs chose to ignore their obligation to make certain persons who are clearly indispensable parties under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 19 defendants (see pages 6-8). That must be corrected if this case proceeds any further. Second, it appears that as a result of 28 U.S.C. 2403(a), the Attorney General of United States must be given an opportunity to intervene before this case proceeds any further (see pages 8-9). Third, Plaintiffs have failed to plead fraud with the “particularity” required by Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9, and that must be corrected (see pages 9-10). But delay based on the points is not the appropriate thing to do. Rather this Court should dismiss this case with prejudice at this time.

2. Plaintiffs lack standing and this Court does not have subject matter jurisdiction over this “friendly suit”

One of the twelve Plaintiffs in this case is a Republican member of the House and Representatives, and the other eleven plaintiffs are Republicans who purportedly are proper presidential electors from Arizona (the “Purported Electors”). Very extensive litigation occurred in Arizona with the goal of having the Purported Electors be Arizona’s electors in the Electoral College. That litigation went up to the Arizona Supreme Court with the result that the Purported Electors were not determined to be Arizona’s actual Presidential Electors. See <https://patch.com/arizona/phoenix/az-supreme-court-affirms-ruling-dismiss-gop-election-lawsuit>.

One of the Plaintiffs in this case, Ms. Kelli Ward, is the Chair of the Arizona Republican Party. Ms. Ward stated a few days ago that this lawsuit is a “friendly lawsuit”, we “love Vice President Pence”, that this suit was filed to assist him in doing what she considers to be his job, and to “give him the tools necessary.” See https://www. https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=eGLXD8zblJU. Defendant Pence has the relevant “tools” the law makes available to him regarding the upcoming count of Presidential Electors on January 6, 2021, and he does not need the help of Ms. Ward (or of the other Plaintiffs), or an advisory opinion from this Court, to use whatever legal “tools” he may have. Ms. Ward’s video is a party admission of what is obvious -- there is no real case or controversy here. All Plaintiffs and the lone Defendant wish to achieve the same result: have Donald Trump remain as the President of the United States after January 20, 2021. This lawsuit is a phony dispute, and this Court should decline Plaintiffs’ invitation to swim in these political waters where it does not have proper subject matter jurisdiction over this bogus alleged controversy. The federal courts are not in business to provide advisory opinions over fake controversies.

The only credibly arguable plaintiff with standing to make the argument that the Electoral Count Act (“ECA”) is unconstitutional is in fact the Defendant in this case. The Vice President arguably would have standing as a plaintiff to argue something like “the ECA is unconstitutional, and I should not be required on January 6, 2021 to comply with its unconstitutional procedures regarding Presidential Electoral votes.” The proper and indispensable defendants in a lawsuit by the Vice President making such an allegation would at a minimum be the United States, Joseph Biden, Kamala Harris, Arizona’s actual certified (Democratic) Electors. Instead this person who arguably does have standing to make this unconstitutionality argument is not the plaintiff in this case, but the defendant, which furthermore underscores the “friendly” nature of this bogus dispute. Of course if the Vice President was the plaintiff in this case there would be no proper venue in this Court. See 28 U.S.C. 1391.

Plaintiffs have no standing, and since there is no genuine case or controversy here, this Court lacks proper subject matter jurisdiction. That means that this Court must dismiss this case, because Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(h)(3) provides that “if the court determines at any time that it lacks subject matter jurisdiction, the court must dismiss the action” (emphasis added).

3. The Court should make no rulings in this case until Plaintiffs’ failure to join indispensable parties under Rule 19 is corrected

This is a “friendly suit” where the Defendant wishes to achieve the same ultimate result as Plaintiffs. Plaintiffs’ Complaint (Document No. 1) violates Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 19 (b), which provides in relevant part that “a person who is subject to service of process and whose joinder will not deprive the court of subject-matter jurisdiction must be joined as a party if... that person claims an interest relating to the subject of the action and is so situated that disposing of the action in that person's absence may... as a practical matter impair or impede the person's ability to protect the interest." Plaintiffs' failure to name as defendants genuine adverse parties, which at a minimum would include the United States, Joseph Biden and Kamala Harris (whose interests are directly impacted by the relief Plaintiffs seek), and Arizona's actual certified (Democratic) Electors as defendants (and perhaps the Congress), means Plaintiffs have clearly violated Rule 19(a)(1)(B).

This violation is especially reprehensible because Rule 19(c) unequivocally states that "when asserting a claim for relief a party must state... the name, if known, of any person who is required to be joined if feasible but is not joined and... the reasons for not joining that person." Clearly Plaintiffs know who the Democratic nominees for President and Vice President are and who the Democratic Arizona Electors (the "Actual Electors") are. The Complaint does not state why they were not joined and nor does it offer any explanation for why Plaintiffs chose to join as a defendant only the "friendly" defendant Vice President Pence. When a person "has not been joined as required, the court must order that the person be made a party." Fed. R. Civ. Pro. 19(a)(2) (emphasis added).

Therefore if this Court does not dismiss this case, the Court must enter in order at a minimum requiring that the United States, Mr. Biden, Ms. Harris, and the Actual Electors be made defendants, and then give them a sufficient opportunity to oppose the relief sought by Plaintiffs before the Court makes any rulings.

4. Consistent with 28 U.S.C. 2403(a) the Court should make no ruling until the Attorney General of the United States has intervened in this case

If a party in a federal lawsuit contends that a federal statute affecting the public interest is unconstitutional, the court “shall certify such fact to the Attorney General,” and permit him or her to intervene in the case. 28 U.S.C. 2403(a). There is an exception if the “United States or any agency, officer or employee thereof is ... a party”, and superficially this exception may seem to apply because the Defendant is the Vice President. However the Defendant is not a party who is adverse to Plaintiffs, as all of the present parties seek a ruling that the statutes in question in this case are unconstitutional since they believe that would result in Donald Trump remaining as the President. Therefore if the Court i does not dismiss this case at this time, it must permit the Attorney General to intervene to defend the constitutionality of the federal statutes challenged by Plaintiffs.

Alternatively Dowling requests that he and the other parties be given adequate time to examine the legal question of whether the above exception in section 2403(a) applies in the bizarre lineup of the parties here where they are seek the same ultimate result, and provide the results of that research in briefs to the Court before the Court makes any rulings.

5. If the Court does not dismiss this case at this time, it should not make any rulings until after Plaintiffs have complied with Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b)

Plaintiffs Complaint is premised on alleged “massive multi-state electoral fraud committed on Biden’s behalf that changed electoral results in Arizona” and what Plaintiffs describe as other “Contested States.” Complaint at 2-3 (paragraph 5; emphasis added); id. at 20 (paragraph 57; reference to an allegedly "fraudulently produced election result" in Arizona). Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b) states that “in alleging fraud ... a party must state with particularity the circumstances constituting fraud” (emphasis added). Plaintiffs have failed to allege any, or alternatively adequately allege, “circumstances constituting fraud” with “particularity” although they are required to do so. The best that Plaintiffs do is to allege that “public reports” [that is to say, inadmissible hearsay documents] have highlighted [alleged] wide-spread election fraud in the other Contested States.” Complaint at 10, paragraph 26. Such broad brush conclusions from documents that are not admissible in evidence unquestionably do not satisfy Rule 9(b)’s “particularity” requirement (to say nothing about the many courts around the country that Plaintiffs ignore that have failed to find such alleged fraud). Therefore if this Court does not dismiss this case at this time, Court should defer any rulings in this case until at least ten days after Plaintiffs have filed a pleading that complies with Rule 9(b).

6. There are factual disputes in this case, and therefore the immediate and definitive ruling sought by Plaintiffs without any pretrial discovery is inappropriate

In the Complaint and in other pleadings Plaintiffs contend either that there are no factual disputes, or no meaningful ones. This is not accurate. First, obviously the question of whether there was any electoral fraud across the many states alleged by Plaintiffs, or alternatively sufficient electoral fraud to change the result of the Presidential election, is sharply disputed.

Second, Plaintiffs contend that “with the permission and endorsement of the Arizona Legislature” they cast Arizona’s electoral votes for President Trump. Complaint at 2 (paragraph 5). On information and belief, Dowling believes that approximately only 17 of the 60 members of the Arizona House supported this alleged action of the Purported Electors and that only five of the 30 members of the Arizona Senate did so.

Furthermore, Dowling cannot improve upon the very recent statement made about this by Northwestern University Law school professor Steven Lubet:

“Rep. Louie Gohmert, along with the eleven Trump/Pence would-be electors from Arizona, sued Vice President Pence in a Texas federal court, seeking to (1) declare the Electoral Count Act unconstitutional, and (2) confer exclusive authority on Pence to recognize electors, which (3) would mean accepting the votes of the "alternative" slate of Republican electors from Arizona and perhaps other states. Others have addressed the merits of the legal claims. Here, I want to point out that the central factual predicate of the complaint is apparently untrue. The complaint alleges,

“The Arizona Electors have cast Arizona’s electoral votes for President Donald J. Trump on December 14, 2020, at the Arizona State Capitol with the permission and endorsement of the Arizona Legislature” (emphasis added).

As far as I can tell, the bolded allegation is a false statement of fact. Although the eleven Trump electors, who are also plaintiffs in the case, purported to cast votes for Trump/Pence on December 14, they had at most the support of 22 Arizona legislators (out of 90) who signed a purported “joint resolution,” which was manifestly not the endorsement of the Arizona Legislature (which appears not even to have been in session at the time). The assertion that the actual Arizona legislature endorsed the Republican slate is material to the Gohmert complaint, as it comprises the underlying factual basis for the claimed dispute over "which electoral votes may be counted." Without the so-called legislative endorsement, there could be no "competing slates of Republican and Democratic electors" for Pence to choose between.”<https://www.thefacultylounge.org/>

The forgoing makes it very clear that given these factual disputes, Rule 57, which Plaintiffs rely on for this Court to make the most consequential ruling imaginable to the citizens of the United States on an expedited basis with no pretrial discovery and no presentation of evidence to this Court, cannot serve as a proper procedural vehicle to grant them the breathtakingly audacious and preposterous relief they seek. Therefore for this reason alone the Court must deny all of the relief sought by Plaintiffs.

7. The Court must dismiss this case because Plaintiffs have no evidence to support the relief they seek Plaintiff seeks the most expansive relief imaginable--overturning the result of the duly held Presidential election. In order for the Court to even consider such an audacious request, Plaintiffs must produce admissible evidence to support the relief they seek. Their case, like many other post-election cases brought by President Trump or his allies, have the same fundamental flaw: they have no, or insufficient, admissible evidence to support their contentions. Plaintiffs have filed no documents with this Court (not even affidavits of any kind) to support the relief they seek. Plaintiffs have not even deigned to file documentary evidence with the Court that may be evaluated to determine if it merits granting Plaintiffs any relief.

Plaintiffs' Complaint on occasion makes reference to various news reports (e.g., Complaint at 7 n.3; 8 n. 6-8; 10 n. 12-13), but all such reports are inadmissible hearsay. Indeed, any such reports have multiple levels of hearsay, since a "report" by definition contains alleged statements heard by the "reporter" from other people. Plaintiffs of course must establish a hearsay exception for each hearsay statement. They will be unable to do so. Furthermore, Plaintiffs' efforts are focused on what happened in Arizona, and even if the Court was convinced that Arizona's eleven electoral vote should be cast for President Trump, Mr. Biden would still have more than the necessary 270 Electoral votes to become the next President. There is no evidentiary basis to support the relief sought by Plaintiffs, and this Court should dismiss this case.

8. Plaintiffs are not entitled to any injunctive relief

Plaintiffs in their motion seeking emergency injunctive relief (Document No. 2; the “Injunction Motion”) correctly cite the typical four elements for obtaining injunctive relief: the plaintiff is likely to succeed on the merits, he will likely suffer irreparable harm absent the injunctive relief sought, the equities are in his favor, and that injunctive relief is in the public interest. Injunction Motion at 23 (the reference to “23” is to the ECF page number, not page 17 as Plaintiffs have enumerated this motion). However, Plaintiffs conveniently omit an indispensable requirement for obtaining injunctive relief. Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 65(c) states that the court may injunctive relief order “only if the movant gives security in the amount that the court considers proper to pay the costs and damages sustained by any party found to have been wrongfully enjoined or restrained” (emphasis added). Typically a party seeking injunctive relief will inform the Court in its pleading what it believes the appropriate amount of its bond should be under Rule 65(c). Plaintiffs have failed to do so. Dowling submits that the word “party” in this Rule in the present context must justly include the more than 81 million Americans who voted for Mr. Biden instead of for Mr. Trump. For the reasons pointed out below, if Plaintiff’s interpretation of the Constitution is adopted, our nation will be transformed from a democracy into an autocratic one-party state.

What is the appropriate amount of a bond to prevent that from happening?

Dowling respectfully submits that that amount is one larger than Plaintiffs could ever pay.

For this reason alone, Plaintiffs' inability to comply with Rule 65(c), the Court must deny Plaintiff's any injunctive relief.

Even if Plaintiffs could post this bond, they are not entitled to injunctive relief. First, for all of the reasons pointed out in this pleading, they clearly are not "likely to succeed on the merits." Second, Plaintiffs will not suffer irreparable harm if the legal mechanisms for counting Electoral votes proceeds. Plaintiffs are seeking to disregard the results of a duly held Presidential election where the Republican Majority Leader of the Senate recognized over two weeks ago that the Democratic presidential nominee is now the Present-elect. The "equities" are most definitely not in Plaintiffs' favor, since to do as they ask will be to overturn the will of the people of the United States in the 2020 Presidential election. Fourth, the usurpation of democracy advocated by Plaintiffs is most definitely not "in the public interest." For all of these reasons the Court must deny Plaintiffs any injunctive relief.

9. Each State tells Defendant Pence who their Presidential Electors are; he does not tell them who they are

The foregoing shows that there are eight independent reasons to deny Plaintiffs any relief and this time, and that there are four independent bases to dismiss this case now (lack of jurisdiction and standing, lack of evidence, factual disputes that make summary disposition inappropriate, and failure to satisfy the requirements for injunctive relief). Even if Plaintiffs could surmount all of these hurdles so that addressing the merits of their substantive arguments was appropriate (which they clearly cannot do), Plaintiffs' statutory and Constitutional arguments are meritless for the reasons explained below.

Plaintiffs' substantive arguments are most concisely summarized in the Injunction Motion at 8-9. Reduced to its essence, their argument is that if a State submits two purported separate slates of Presidential Electors, the Vice President gets to decide which slate he approves. That means that the Vice President, not each of the separate States, decides who each State's Electors are. This outlandish contention plainly violates basic concepts of federalism and a proper constitutional balance of powers, as it would give the person with a direct and massive conflict of interest, the Vice President, the ultimate decision-making role in choosing the next President. Dowling agrees that Defendant opens and counts Electoral votes. But the Vice President does not have the power as Plaintiffs contend to decide WHAT Electoral votes to count. That is decided by each of the separate States of the Union. Each separate State tells the Vice President who its Presidential Electors are. The Vice President does not tell any State who its Electors are. The Vice President's role is merely ministerial, just as it is when he presides in the Senate and announces the result of the Senate's vote on a particular bill, such as "Regarding Senate Bill 1216, the 'ayes' are 57 and the 'nays' are 43." The Vice President when making this announcement does not get to change the vote of any Senator so that the total vote count conforms to his desires. Neither does the Vice President have the power to change the Electoral College votes for President (or Vice President) to conform to his desires. Plaintiffs' contention that he does is entirely antithetical to the democratic principles of our Republic.

Plaintiffs repeat ad nauseam in their pleadings that the Vice President has the "exclusive authority and sole discretion" under the Twelfth Amendment to decide which votes to count in the apparent hope that repetition of this mantra will cause it to be less outlandish and preposterous that it is. See, e.g., Complaint at paragraphs 63, 70, 71, and 73(C-D); Injunction Motion at 2, 8). Yet Plaintiffs have been unable to refer the Court to even a single legal authority that supports their contention that the sitting Vice President can determine who the next President will be. The Vice President's Constitutional role is entirely ministerial—he open envelopes with certified Electoral votes from the fifty States and simply mathematically announces the votes in those envelopes.

If Plaintiffs' position is accepted, our Republic will be transformed from a democracy, where sometimes the President comes from one political party, and at other times he or she comes from the other political party, into a permanent one party autocracy. Here is the simple playbook to make that happen if the Court were to accept Plaintiffs' arguments:

1. Allege electoral fraud in the states that the Republican candidate for President did not win. Do this even if you do not have any evidence that fraud (if any) is sufficient to change the result of who won the Presidential election in the state.
2. Republicans send Electors from each state they won, but also, and critically relevant here, from each state they lost (assuming for the same of argument that was legitimate).
3. Contend that the Vice President of the United States (who currently is a Republican) has the "sole discretion" to choose which slate of Electors from each State will be recognized from the State's two slates of competing Electors.
4. The Republican Vice President (in this instance, Defendant Pence) chooses the Republican Electors in all states where the Republican candidate for President won, plus enough additional Republican Electors from States the Republican candidate for President lost to get the Republican Presidential candidate over the 270 College votes threshold he needs to become (or remain) President.
5. By this simple yet fundamentally fatally constitutionally flawed playbook the current Republican Vice President, and his later successors, forever determines who is elected President of the United States of America (the same would be true if the current Vice President was a Democrat).

The Court should reject out of hand Plaintiffs' absurd contention that this is what the authors of the Constitution intended, or what Congress intended when the ECA was passed. Surely they did not intend for one person to have the power to decide who the next President will be, especially when that person has a direct and monumental conflict of interest in the outcome.

Plaintiffs in their Complaint cite a Law Review article co-authored by Edward Foley Complaint at 13 n. 14. Mr. Foley is a law professor at Ohio State University and is an election law expert. He is the former Ohio Solicitor General, and he clerked for the United States Supreme Court (his biographical summary is located here: <https://ucom.osu.edu/for-media/faculty-experts/a-m/foley-edward.html>). This is what Professor Foley had to say about issues relevant in this case two days ago:

“The Constitution and the Electoral Count Act of 1887 intended the Jan. 6 session to address a narrow question: Are the electoral votes received by Congress ones cast by electors the states appointed?

This limited inquiry requires Congress simply to authenticate the documents. Remember, these rules were formulated in the 19th century, when there was a realistic risk of counterfeit papers pretending to be official. Thus, the 1887 act requires a state’s governor to affix “the seal of the State” to the certificate confirming the appointment of electors.

Further, the 1887 act obligates Congress to consider “conclusive” a state’s own “final determination” of litigation over a state’s appointment of electors when two conditions are met. The “final determination” must occur by a certain date, Dec. 8 this year, and must be based on state laws existing before Election Day, Nov. 3. Congress instructs governors to provide verification of these two conditions in their certifications.

This is the opposite of Trump allies’ feverish imaginings about using the session as an opportunity for congressional fact-finding on whether fraud or error tainted the tally of the state’s popular vote.

This provision, part of the 12th Amendment that reengineered the electoral college after the calamitous Jefferson-Burr tie in 1800, presumed that counting a state's electoral votes would be straightforward: The joint session would merely identify the state's electoral votes and add them up.

It would not be Congress's job to second-guess the state's appointment of its own electors. And it certainly would not be Congress's job to let a sitting vice president — as Adams had been in 1796 or Jefferson in 1800 — determine the election's outcome by deciding unilaterally whether or not to count a state's electoral votes. Note that, Vice President Pence.

While the Constitution makes each house of Congress the “judge” of elections to its own body, there's no comparable provision for presidential elections. In fact, it's the reverse. To prevent the electoral college from being subservient to Congress, the Constitution requires Congress to accept whatever the state decides regarding the appointment of its electors.

The constitutionally appropriate venue for claiming fraud in the counting of a state's popular vote, therefore, is the state's own courts. Trump sued there but failed — because his claims lacked merit. Having lost, he can't now relitigate his allegations in a congressional proceeding designed solely to receive what the state sent. As Justice Joseph Bradley explained during the disputed 1876 election, “It is the business and jurisdiction of the State to prevent frauds from being perpetrated in the appointment of its electors, and not the business or jurisdiction of the Congress.”

Imagine if Richard Nixon had tried Trump's stunt. Nixon in 1960 had far better grounds for claiming fraud. But it would have been inappropriate for Nixon, who as vice president chaired the joint session, to insist that Congress adjudicate claims that John F. Kennedy's allies in Illinois and Texas had stolen the election. Nixon knew Congress was bound by what the states themselves determined.

Even more preposterous is the idea that Nixon would have been entitled to unilaterally disqualify the electoral votes from these two states just because he personally distrusted them. Yet that is the desperate argument being made in a new lawsuit brought by Rep. Louie Gohmert (R-Tex.). According to Gohmert, a vice president can dictate the outcome of an election in which he is a candidate. Al Gore could have decided by himself the fate of Florida's electoral votes in 2000.

Giving any individual this kind of self-serving power is contrary to a Constitution that aims at checks and balances” (emphasis added).

<https://www.washingtonpost.com/opinions/2020/12/29/sorry-president-trump-january-6-is-not-an-election-do-over/>

Professor Foley has additional scholarly writing relevant to the present dispute that is found in the Law Review article cited by Plaintiffs (Complaint at 13 n. 14; Symposium: How Far Have We Come Since 2000?: Article: The Twelfth Amendment: A Constitutional Ticking Time Bomb, N. Colvin and E. Foley, 64 U. Miami L. Rev. 475 (2010) (hereafter the “Foley Article”) as follows:

Regarding Presidential Elector disputes Professor Foley concludes that “the Framers must not have anticipated that they were placing an individual likely to have a conflict of interest--the Vice President of the United States--at the center of the storm. Sure enough, the sitting Vice President has been a candidate for President or Vice President, while simultaneously serving in his capacity as President of the Senate. If the Vice President's role is merely ministerial, there is not much of a conflict of interest as a practical matter; but if the Vice President's duty encompasses resolving potentially decisive controversies over which candidate gets a state's electoral votes, then the conflict is monumental.” Foley Article at 481 (emphasis added); accord Bruce Ackerman & David Fontana, Thomas Jefferson Counts Himself into the Presidency, 90 Va. L. Rev. 551, 556 (2004) (“The Vice-President ... is a natural candidate in the next presidential contest. It is an obvious mistake to designate him as the presiding officer over the electoral vote count.”).

Professor Foley also drew these additional very relevant conclusions:

“[Supreme Court Associate] Justice [Joseph] Bradley [Justice Bradley was a member of the Electoral Commission that resolved the disputed 1876 Presidential Commission; that dispute lead to the Electoral Count Act at issue in this case] first concluded that the President of the Senate has merely ministerial powers, with no authority to conduct any investigation behind the certificates; any proper investigation "must be performed and exercised by the two Houses." But, Bradley noted that the "extreme reticence" of the Constitution left serious doubt about whether Congress had any power to go behind the returns. Bradley turned next to Article II of the Constitution, which appeared to ensure that the "mode of appointment belong exclusively to the State. Congress has nothing to do with it, and no control over it, except ... to determine the time of choosing the electors, and the day on which they shall give their votes." Thus, Bradley concluded, the state controls all of the mechanics of the elections. However, this exclusive power and control of the State is ended and determined when the day fixed by Congress for voting has arrived, and the electors have deposited their votes and made out the lists and certificates required by the Constitution. Up to that time the whole proceeding (except the time of election) is conducted under State law and State authority. All machinery, whether of police, examining boards, or judicial tribunals, deemed requisite and necessary for securing and preserving the true voice of the State in the appointment of electors, is prescribed and provided for by the State itself.

With this timing in mind, Bradley argued that "the findings and recorded determinations of the State board or constituted authorities [should be] binding and conclusive since the State can only act through its constituted authorities[.]" Addressing whether this meant that Congress must accept potentially fraudulent results in the appointment of electors, Justice Bradley concluded that Congress has no jurisdiction to do otherwise because it is entirely within the state's jurisdiction to prevent frauds. Florida statute imposed a duty upon the Florida governor to certify the returns, and Justice Bradley held that the certificate must at least be prima facie evidence of a valid return. Justice Bradley summarized his conclusion as follows:

The governor's certificate is prima-facie evidence that the State canvassers performed their duty. Indeed, it is conceded by the objectors that they made a canvass and certified or declared the same. It is not the failure of the board to act, or to certify and declare the result of their action, but an illegal canvass, of which they complain. To review that canvass, in my judgment, the Houses of Congress have no jurisdiction or power."

Foley Article at 508-09 (footnotes omitted) (emphasis added); see id. at 508 n. 192 ("Going further, Justice Bradley noted that the prohibition against federal office holders acting as electors makes clear that the Constitution intended to remove any congressional or federal influence from the process)."

The foregoing makes it clear that Arizona and the other 49 States decide who their Presidential Electors are, and neither the Vice President (as Plaintiffs contend) nor Congress has the power to change their decisions. The Purported Electors' remedy was in the Arizona courts. They vigorously pursued their remedies there to the highest court in Arizona. They lost. They do not have a “do-over” opportunity in this federal Court, and nor will Defendant Pence have an opportunity on January 6, 2021 to reverse the results of how Arizona (or any other state) chose its Presidential Electors.

Professor Foley’s conclusion in the document he wrote two days ago cited above is shared by other scholars. One of the co-authors of the document quoted directly below is Neal K. Katyal, a law professor at Georgetown University and a former acting Solicitor General of the United States. Two days ago Professor Katyal had this to say about the issues present here:

““On Monday Representative Louie Gohmert of Texas and other politicians filed a frivolous lawsuit, which has multiple fatal flaws in both form and substance, in an attempt to force the vice president to appoint pro-Trump electors.

But as a matter of constitutional text and history, any effort on Jan. 6 is doomed to fail. It would also be profoundly anti-democratic and unconstitutional.

Both Article II of the Constitution and the 12th Amendment say that the votes of the Electoral College are to be opened by the “president of the Senate,” meaning the vice president. The Electoral Count Act, passed in 1887 to avoid chaotic counts like the one that followed the 1876 election, adds important details. It provides a detailed timeline to tabulate electoral votes, culminating with the final count to take place on Jan. 6, and it delineates the powers of the vice president.

He is to be the “presiding officer” (meaning he is to preserve order and decorum), open the ballot envelopes, provide those results to a group of tellers, call for any objection by members of Congress, announce the results of any votes on objections, and ultimately announce the result of the vote.

Nothing in either the text of the Constitution or the Electoral Count Act gives the vice president any substantive powers. His powers are ministerial, and that circumscribed role makes general sense: The whole point of an election is to let the people decide who will rule them. If an incumbent could simply maneuver to keep himself in office — after all, a maneuver to protect Mr. Trump also protects Mr. Pence — the most foundational precept of our government would be gravely undermined. In America, “we the people,” not “we, the vice president,” control our destiny.

The drafters of the Electoral Count Act consciously insisted on this weakened role for the vice president. They guarded against any pretense he might have to throw out a particular state’s votes, saying that the vice president must open “all certificates and papers purporting to be” electoral votes. They further said, in the event of a dispute, both chambers of Congress would have to disagree with a particular state’s slate of electoral votes to reject them. And they made it difficult for Congress to disagree, adding measures such as a “safe harbor” provision and deference to certification by state officials.

In this election, certification is clear. There are no ongoing legal challenges in the states of any merit whatsoever. All challenges have lost, spectacularly and often, in the courts. The states and the electors have spoken their will. Neither Vice President Pence nor the loyal followers of President Trump have a valid basis to contest anything.

To be sure, this structure creates awkwardness, as it forces the vice president to announce the result even when personally unfavorable.

After the close election of 1960, Richard Nixon, as vice president, counted the votes for his opponent, John Kennedy. Al Gore, in perhaps one of the more dramatic moments of our Republic’s short history, counted the votes and reported them in favor of George W. Bush.

Watching Mr. Gore count the votes, shut off all challenges and deliver the presidency to Mr. Bush was a powerful moment in our democracy. By the time he counted the votes, America and the world knew where he stood. And we were all lifted up when Mr. Gore, at the end, asked God to bless the new president and vice president and joined the chamber in applause.

Republican leaders — including Senators McConnell, Roy Blunt and John Thune — have recognized the outcome of the election, despite the president’s wrath. Mr.

McConnell put it in clear terms: “The Electoral College has spoken. So today, I want to congratulate President-elect Joe Biden.”

Notably, Mr. Pence has been silent. He has not even acknowledged the historic win by Kamala Harris, the nation’s first female, first African-American and first Asian-American vice president.

He now stands on the edge of history as he begins his most consequential act of leadership. The question for Vice President Pence, as well as other members of Congress, is which side of history he wants to come down on. Can he show the integrity demonstrated by every previous presidential administration? The American people accept a graceful loser, but a sore loser never goes down well in the history books.

We urge Mr. Pence to study our first president. After the Revolutionary War, the artist Benjamin West reported that King George had asked him what General Washington would do now that America was independent. West said that Washington would give up power and go back to farming. King George responded with words to the effect that “if he does that, he will be the greatest man in the world.”

Indeed, Washington did so, surrendering command of the army to Congress and returning to Mount Vernon for years until he was elected president. And he again relinquished power eight years later, even though many would have been happy to keep him president for life. Washington in this way fully realized the American Republic, because there is no Republic without the peaceful transfer of power.

And it’s now up to Mr. Pence to recognize exactly that. Like all those that have come before him, he should count the votes as they have been certified and do everything he can to oppose those who would do otherwise. This is no time for anyone to be a bystander — our Republic is on the line.”

<https://www.nytimes.com/2020/12/29/opinion/mike-pence-electoral-college-votes-congress.html?action=click&module=Opinion&pgtype=Homepage> (emphasis added).

The States have told Defendant Pence, and our Republic, who their Presidential Electors are. Defendant does not have the power to overrule their instruction, and reach his own conclusion about who any State’s Electors will be.

Since the entire basis of Plaintiffs' suit rests on the contention that Defendant Pence can decide who a State's Presidential Electors are, and that contention is patently meritless, this Court must dismiss this suit with prejudice at this time.

10. Conclusion and request for relief

This Court should reject Plaintiffs' invitation to be the first court in American history to overturn the result of a Presidential election. The Court should do so by dismissing this case with prejudice. The grounds to do so are multiple, on both procedural and substantive grounds. On the merits, each of the respective fifty States tell the Vice President who their Presidential Electors are. The Vice President has no statutory or constitutional authority to disagree with them and make his own choices about who their Presidential Electors are.

There are also four procedural bases to dismiss this case. First, Plaintiffs have no standing to bring this suit, and the Court has no jurisdiction to grant Plaintiffs relief in this "friendly suit." Second, Plaintiffs have no evidence to support their claims that there was sufficient electoral fraud that the Presidential election results should be overturned (these claims were rejected by the former Attorney General of the United States, William Barr, and by many courts around the country). Third, there are factual disputes that make the extremely summary disposition of this case requested by Plaintiffs inappropriate. Fourth, Plaintiffs have failed to show that they are entitled to injunctive relief (and they could not post a bond as required by Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 65 of adequate size even if they were otherwise entitled to such relief). Plaintiffs must hurdle each of these procedural obstacles to even be entitled to address the constitutional questions they raise. They can surmount none of them.

Even if this Court does not dismiss this case at this time, there are multiple reasons that prevent the Court from properly making an immediate ruling as Plaintiffs request. First, Plaintiffs chose to ignore their obligation to make certain persons who are clearly indispensable parties under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 19 defendants. That must be corrected if this case proceeds any further in any way. Second, it appears that as a result of 28 U.S.C. 2403(a), the Attorney General of the United States must be given an opportunity to intervene before this case proceeds any further. Third, Plaintiffs have failed to plead fraud with the “particularity” required by Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9, and that must be corrected.

This Court should do as so many other courts around our Republic have recently done by denying any relief to those who seek to overturn the results of the 2020 Presidential election. Dowling requests that the Court grant his motion: (1) to intervene by signing the proposed order attached hereto as Exhibit 1; and (2) dismiss this case by signing the proposed order attached hereto as Exhibit 2.

Dowling requests that the Court additionally grant him such further additional relief, whether in law or in equity, as may be just.

/s/ Timothy P. Dowling

Pro se

Texas State Bar No. 06083900

8017 Villefranche Dr.

Corpus Christi, TX 78414

(361) 960-3135

Relampago@aol.com

Certificate of service

The undersigned hereby certifies that counsel for Plaintiffs were served by filing this motion with the Clerk of this Court, and such counsel (and other counsel) were also served by email service on December 31, 2020 as follows:

lsessions@sessionslaw.net

William Sessions

howard@kleinhendler.com

Howard Kleinhendler

ljoseph@larryjoseph.com

Lawrence Joseph

hallerjulia@outlook.com

Julia Haller

brandoncjohnson6@aol.com

Brandon Johnson

gregory.f.jacob@ovp.eop.gov

Gregory F. Jacob

stephen.j.cox@usdoj.gov

Stephen J. Cox

Christopher.Healy@usdoj.gov

Christopher Healy

Tanya.Senanayake@usjog.gov

Tanya Senanayake

alan.kennedy@aya.yale.edu

Alan Kennedy

/s/ Timothy P. Dowling

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF TEXAS
TYLER DIVISION

Louie Gohmert, Tyler Bowyer,
Nancy Cottle, Jake Hoffman,
Anthony Kern, James R. Lamon,
James Moorhead, Robert Montgomery,
Loraine Pellegrino, Greg Safsten,
Kelli Ward and Michael Ward
Plaintiffs

v.

Civil Action No. 6:20-cv-00660
(Election Matter)

The Honorable Michael R. Pence, Vice President of the United States,
in his official capacity,
Defendant

Order Granting the Emergency Opposed Motion of Timothy P. Dowling to Intervene

Came on properly for consideration on _____, 202__ the Emergency Opposed Motion of Timothy P. Dowling (“Dowling”) to Intervene (“Motion”). Upon consideration of the Motion, any response filed to the Motion, and all other relevant matters, the Court hereby finds that Dowling is entitled to intervene in this case as a matter of right pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 24(a), but even if that was not the case, the Court further finds that Dowling should be permitted to permissively intervene in this case pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 24(b). Accordingly Dowling is a party in this case and he shall be served by email sent to Relampago@aol.com, and he shall be entitled to participate in all hearings in this case (including being authorized to participate remotely by telephone or video conference call if the Court holds any hearings using either or both of those means of communication).

SO ORDERED.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

WISCONSIN VOTERS ALLIANCE, et al.,

Plaintiffs,

v.

VICE PRESIDENT MICHAEL R.
PENCE, et al.,

Defendants.

Civil Action No. 20-3791 (JEB)

MEMORANDUM OPINION

Plaintiffs' aims in this election challenge are bold indeed: they ask this Court to declare unconstitutional several decades-old federal statutes governing the appointment of electors and the counting of electoral votes for President of the United States; to invalidate multiple state statutes regulating the certification of Presidential votes; to ignore certain Supreme Court decisions; and, the coup de grace, to enjoin the U.S. Congress from counting the electoral votes on January 6, 2021, and declaring Joseph R. Biden the next President.

Voter groups and individual voters from the states of Wisconsin, Pennsylvania, Georgia, Michigan, and Arizona have brought this action against Vice President Michael R. Pence, in his official capacity as President of the Senate; both houses of Congress and the Electoral College itself; and various leaders of the five aforementioned states. Simultaneous with the filing of their Complaint, Plaintiffs moved this Court to preliminarily enjoin the certifying of the electors from the five states and the counting of their votes. In addition to being filed on behalf of Plaintiffs without standing and (at least as to the state Defendants) in the wrong court and with no effort to even serve their adversaries, the suit rests on a fundamental and obvious misreading of the Constitution. It would be risible were its target not so grave: the undermining of a democratic election for President of the United States. The Court will deny the Motion.

I. Background

To say that Plaintiffs’ 116-page Complaint, replete with 310 footnotes, is prolix would be a gross understatement. After explicitly disclaiming any theory of fraud, see ECF No. 1 (Complaint), ¶ 44 (“This lawsuit is not about voter fraud.”), Plaintiffs spend scores of pages cataloguing every conceivable discrepancy or irregularity in the 2020 vote in the five relevant states, already debunked or not, most of which they nonetheless describe as a species of fraud. E.g., id., at 37–109. Those allegations notwithstanding, Plaintiffs’ central contention is that certain federal and state election statutes ignore the express mandate of Article II of the Constitution, thus rendering them invalid. Id. at 109–12. Although the Complaint also asserts causes of action for violations of the Equal Protection and Due Process Clauses, those are merely derivative of its first count. Id. at 112–15.

In order to provide an equitable briefing and hearing schedule on a very tight timetable, this Court immediately instructed Plaintiffs to file proofs of service on Defendants so that they could proceed on their preliminary-injunction Motion. See 12/23/20 Min. Order; Fed. R. Civ. P. 65(a)(1) (“The court may issue a preliminary injunction only on notice to the adverse party.”). Twelve days later, Plaintiffs have still not provided proof of notice to any Defendant, let alone filed a single proof of service or explained their inability to do so.

II. Legal Standard

“A preliminary injunction is an extraordinary remedy never awarded as of right.” Winter v. NRDC, 555 U.S. 7, 24 (2008). “A plaintiff seeking a preliminary injunction must establish [1] that he is likely to succeed on the merits, [2] that he is likely to suffer irreparable harm in the absence of preliminary relief, [3] that the balance of equities tips in his favor, and [4] that an injunction is in the public interest.” Sherley v. Sebelius, 644 F.3d 388, 392 (D.C. Cir. 2011) (quoting Winter, 555 U.S. at 20). “The moving party bears the burden of persuasion and must demonstrate, ‘by a clear showing,’ that the requested relief is warranted.” Hospitality Staffing Solutions, LLC v. Reyes, 736 F. Supp. 2d 192, 197 (D.D.C. 2010) (citing Chaplaincy of Full Gospel Churches v. England, 454 F.3d 290, 297 (D.C. Cir. 2006)).

Before the Supreme Court’s decision in Winter, courts weighed these factors on a “sliding scale,” allowing “an unusually strong showing on one of the factors” to overcome a weaker showing on another. Davis v. Pension Ben. Guar. Corp., 571 F.3d 1288, 1291–92 (D.C. Cir. 2009) (quoting Davenport v. Int’l Bhd. of Teamsters, 166 F.3d 356, 361 (D.C. Cir. 1999)). Both before and after Winter, however, one thing is clear: a failure to show a likelihood of success on the merits alone is sufficient to defeat the motion. Ark. Dairy Coop. Ass’n, Inc. v. USDA, 573 F.3d 815, 832 (D.C. Cir. 2009) (citing Apotex, Inc. v. FDA, 449 F.3d 1249, 1253–54 (D.C. Cir. 2006)); Archdiocese of Wash. v. Wash. Metro. Area Transit Auth., 281 F. Supp. 3d 88, 99 (D.D.C. 2017), aff’d on other grounds, 897 F.3d 314 (D.C. Cir. 2018).

III. Analysis

Given that time is short and the legal errors underpinning this action manifold, the Court treats only the central ones and in the order of who, where, what, and why. Most obviously, Plaintiffs have not demonstrated the “irreducible constitutional minimum of standing.” Lujan v. Defs. of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560 (1992). Although they claim to have been “disenfranchised,” ECF No. 4 (PI Mem.) at 37, this is plainly not true. Their votes have been counted and their electors certified pursuant to state-authorized procedures; indeed, any vote nullification would obtain only were their own suit to succeed. To the extent that they argue more broadly that voters maintain an interest in an election conducted in conformity with the Constitution, id. at 38, they merely assert a “generalized grievance” stemming from an attempt to have the Government act in accordance with their view of the law. Hollingsworth v. Perry, 570 U.S. 693, 706 (2013). This does not satisfy Article III’s demand for a “concrete and particularized” injury, id. at 704, as other courts have recently noted in rejecting comparable election challenges. See Wood v. Raffensperger, 981 F.3d 1307, 1314–15 (11th Cir. 2020); Bowyer v. Ducey, No. 20-2321, 2020 WL 7238261, at *4–5 (D. Ariz. Dec. 9, 2020); King v. Whitmer, No. 20-13134, 2020 WL 7134198, at *10 (E.D. Mich. Dec. 7, 2020). Plaintiffs’ contention that the state legislature is being deprived of its authority to certify elections, moreover, cannot suffice to establish a distinct injury-in-fact to the individuals and organizations before this Court. Finally, to the extent that Plaintiffs seek an injunction preventing certain state officials from certifying their election results, see PI Mem. at 1, that claim is moot as certification has already occurred. Wood, 981 F.3d at 1317.

Moving on from subject-matter jurisdiction, the Court must also pause at personal jurisdiction. Plaintiffs cannot simply sue anyone they wish here in the District of Columbia. On the contrary, they must find a court or courts that have personal jurisdiction over each Defendant, and they never explain how a court in this city can subject to its jurisdiction, say, the Majority Leader of the Wisconsin State Senate. Absent personal jurisdiction over a particular Defendant, of course, this Court lacks authority to compel him to do anything.

Even if the Court had subject-matter and personal jurisdiction, it still could not rule in Plaintiffs’ favor because their central contention is flat-out wrong. “Plaintiffs claim that Article II of the U.S. Constitution provides a voter a constitutional right to the voter’s Presidential vote being certified as part of the state legislature’s post-election certification of Presidential electors.

Absence [sic] such certification, the Presidential electors' votes from that state cannot be counted by the federal Defendants toward the election of President and Vice President.” Compl., ¶ 32 (emphasis added); see also PI Mem. at 1. More specifically, “Plaintiffs [sic] constitutional claims in this lawsuit are principally based on one sentence in Article II of the U.S. Constitution.” Compl., ¶ 54; see also PI Mem. at 1. That sentence states in relevant part that the President “shall hold his Office during the Term of four Years, and . . . be elected[] as follows: [¶] Each State shall appoint, in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a Number of Electors . . . .” U.S. Const., art. II, § 1.

Plaintiffs somehow interpret this straightforward passage to mean that state legislatures alone must certify Presidential votes and Presidential electors after each election, and that Governors or other entities have no constitutionally permitted role. See Compl., ¶ 55. As a result, state statutes that delegate the certification to the Secretary of State or the Governor or anyone else are invalid. Id., ¶ 58. That, however, is not at all what Article II says. The above-quoted language makes manifest that a state appoints electors in “such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct.” So if the legislature directs that the Governor, Secretary of State, or other executive-branch entity shall make the certification, that is entirely constitutional. This is precisely what has happened: in each of the five states, the legislature has passed a statute directing how votes are to be certified and electors selected. See Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 16-212(B); Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499(b); Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 168.46; Wis. Stat. Ann. § 7.70(5)(b); 25 Pa. Stat. § 3166.

For example, Georgia requires its Secretary of State to “certify the votes cast for all candidates . . . and lay the returns for presidential electors before the Governor. The Governor shall enumerate and ascertain the number of votes for each person so voted and shall certify the slates of presidential electors receiving the highest number of votes.” Ga. Code Ann. § 21-2-499(b). Similarly, under Michigan law, “the governor shall certify, under the seal of the state, to the United States secretary of state, the names and addresses of the electors of this state chosen as electors of president and vice-president of the United States.” Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 168.46. Plaintiffs’ theory that all of these laws are unconstitutional and that the Court should instead require state legislatures themselves to certify every Presidential election lies somewhere between a willful misreading of the Constitution and fantasy.

Plaintiffs readily acknowledge that their position also means that the Supreme Court’s decisions in Bush v. Gore, 531 U.S. 98 (2000), and Texas v. Pennsylvania, No. 155 (Orig.), 2020 WL 7296814 (U.S. Dec. 11, 2020), “are in constitutional error.” Compl., ¶ 76. They do not, however, explain how this District Court has authority to disregard Supreme Court precedent. Nor do they ever mention why they have waited until seven weeks after the election to bring this action and seek a preliminary injunction based on purportedly unconstitutional statutes that have existed for decades — since 1948 in the case of the federal ones. It is not a stretch to find a serious lack of good faith here. See Trump v. Wis. Elections Comm’n, No. 20-3414, 2020 WL 7654295, at *4 (7th Cir. Dec. 24, 2020).

Yet even that may be letting Plaintiffs off the hook too lightly. Their failure to make any effort to serve or formally notify any Defendant — even after reminder by the Court in its Minute Order — renders it difficult to believe that the suit is meant seriously. Courts are not instruments through which parties engage in such gamesmanship or symbolic political gestures. As a result, at the conclusion of this litigation, the Court will determine whether to issue an order to show cause why this matter should not be referred to its Committee on Grievances for potential discipline of Plaintiffs’ counsel.

IV. Conclusion

As Plaintiffs have established no likelihood of success on the merits here, the Court will deny their Motion for Preliminary Injunction. A contemporaneous Order so stating will issue this day.

/s/ James E. Boasberg
JAMES E. BOASBERG
United States District Judge

Date: January 4, 2021

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

WISCONSIN VOTERS ALLIANCE, et al.,

Plaintiffs,

v.

VICE PRESIDENT MICHAEL R.

PENCE, et al.,

Defendants.

Civil Action No. 20-3791 (JEB)

ORDER

For the reasons set forth in the accompanying Memorandum Opinion, the Court ORDERS that Plaintiffs' Motion for Preliminary Injunction is DENIED.

/s/ James E. Boasberg
JAMES E. BOASBERG
United States District Judge

Date: January 4, 2021

PLAINTIFFS' APPENDIX TABLE OF CONTENTS

Ackerman, Bruce & Fontana, David, Thomas Jefferson Counts Himself into the Presidency , 90 VA. L. REV. 551 (2004).	1
Colvin, Nathan L. & Foley, Edward B., The Twelfth Amendment: A Constitutional Ticking Time Bomb , 65 U. MIAMI L. REV. 475 (2010).	53
Hawley, Joshua D., The Transformative Twelfth Amendment , 55 WM. & MARY L. REV. 1501 (2014).	97
Josephson, William, Senate Election of the Vice President and House of Representatives Election of the President , 11 U. PA. J. CONST. L. 597 (2009).	152
Kesavan, Vasan, Is the Electoral Count Act Unconstitutional? , 80 N.C. L. REV. 1653 (2002).	207
Land, Chris & Schultz, David, On the Unenforceability of the Electoral Count Act , 13 RUTGERS J.L. & PUB. POL'Y 340 (2016).	318
Neumann, Richard K., The Revival of Impeachment as a Partisan Political Weapon , 34 HASTINGS CONST. L.Q. 161 (2007).	345
Siegel, Stephen A., The Conscientious Congressman's Guide to the Electoral Count Act of 1887 , 56 FLA. L. REV. 541 (2004).	460

90 Va. L. Rev. 551

Virginia Law Review
 April 2004

Articles

Bruce Ackerman<sup>al</sup> David Fontana<sup>aal</sup>

Copyright (c) 2004 Virginia Law Review Association; Bruce Ackerman; David Fontana

THOMAS JEFFERSON COUNTS HIMSELF INTO THE PRESIDENCY

	Introduction	551
I.	Original Misunderstandings	554
	A. Founding Blunders	554
	B. A World Without Parties	557
II.	The Vermont Precedent	567
	A. The Rise of Party	568
	B. Rumors and Restraint	571
	C. Vote-Counting Day in Philadelphia	579
III.	The Election of 1800	581
	A. The Run-Up	582
	B. Jefferson's Problem	587
	C. Jefferson's Decision	599
IV.	Jefferson in Context	610
	A. Substance Over Form	611
	B. Prudence and Publicity	614
	C. Pinckney for President?	618
	D. Jefferson and the Rule of Law	624
	E. Dumb Luck	625
V.	Jefferson's Ghost	629
	A. From Cautionary Tale to Legal Precedent	630
	B. The Gloss of 1877	634
	C. The 1887 Act	640

Introduction

THE President of the Senate shall, in the Presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the Certificates, and the Votes shall then be counted.”<sup>1</sup>

*552 We last glimpsed the dangers lurking in these lines during the electoral crisis of 2000. As sitting Vice-President, Al Gore was the President of the Senate on January 6, 2001. So it fell to him to “open all the Certificates” and preside over the vote count.

What if there had still been a dispute over the electoral votes from Florida? Consider the following scenario: After much Sturm und Drang, the Florida courts decide that Gore is the winner, but the Florida legislature grants the state's twenty-five electoral votes to George W. Bush. These rival authorities transmit competing electoral college certificates to Washington D.C., ready to be opened when the moment of truth arrives. Pursuant to constitutional command, the Vice-President “open[s] all the Certificates.” What happens next?

The constitutional text does not speak clearly. It authorizes the Vice-President to “open” the certificates but leaves the extent of his further powers hidden in the passive voice: “and the Votes shall then be counted.”

APPENDIX - 1

These textual penumbras can be enlightened by precedents that have gone largely unnoticed for two centuries: the electoral vote disputes of 1796 and 1800. On these two occasions, John Adams and Thomas Jefferson found themselves in Al Gore's position. As Vice-Presidents in the preceding administration, they were presiding over a vote count in which they were leading candidates, and in both instances, they used their power to make rulings that favored their own election as President of the United States. This Article will present the first in-depth treatment of these precedents,<sup>2</sup> emphasizing the dramatic moment when Thomas Jefferson made a questionable ruling that enhanced his chances of becoming the next President of the United States, rather than John Adams or Charles Cotesworth Pinckney.

Adams's decisions in 1797 were perfectly sensible but frame an analysis of Jefferson's problematic conduct the next time around. Vermont had cast four electoral votes for Adams and his running mate Thomas Pinckney, but the legality of the state's action had been publicly impugned and privately questioned by newspapers and politicians from both political parties.

*553 When Adams opened the formal certificates from Vermont they seemed completely regular, containing no hint of legal deficiency. Despite their facial perfection, Adams provided members of Congress a formal opportunity to challenge Vermont's four electoral votes before announcing that he had won the election by three votes over Jefferson. He declared himself President only after the Republicans remained silent.

Thomas Jefferson was remarkably aggressive as President of the Senate. Georgia's certificate--granting four electoral votes to Jefferson and four electoral votes to Aaron Burr--was constitutionally defective on its face, a deficiency that was announced on the floor of Congress and reported by leading newspapers of the day.<sup>3</sup> To resolve all doubts, we have located Georgia's certificate in the National Archives, and it does indeed reveal striking constitutional irregularities. Nevertheless, and in contrast to Adams, Jefferson failed to pause before counting Georgia's four electoral votes into the Republican column, declaring the final vote as if nothing were amiss.

This ruling had serious consequences. With the Georgia votes included, the official tally was Jefferson seventy-three, Burr seventy-three, Adams sixty-five, Charles C. Pinckney sixty-four, and John Jay one. To resolve this tie, the two leading candidates went to their famous runoff in the House, which was only resolved in Jefferson's favor on the thirty-sixth ballot.

Had Georgia's ballot been excluded, the vote count for Jefferson and for Burr sinks to sixty-nine each, and this would have made a big difference under the electoral ground rules framed in Philadelphia. As we will explain,<sup>4</sup> these rules would have admitted all five candidates into a runoff in the House. Including Adams, Pinckney, and Jay in the runoff would have dealt a serious blow to Jefferson's prospects. The Federalists would no longer have been stuck with Aaron Burr as the only alternative to their archenemy Jefferson. They could have rallied around a much more attractive "compromise" candidate: Charles Pinckney of South Carolina. Without the *554 decisive use of his power as President of the Senate, Jefferson might never have become President of the United States.

This point was appreciated by contemporaries, but has dropped out of modern constitutional consciousness.<sup>5</sup> After bringing this forgotten precedent into public view, we will consider its potential relevance for future Electoral College crises, using a variation on Bush v. Gore<sup>6</sup> as an analytic platform.

I. Original Misunderstandings

This Part sets the stage for Jefferson's moment of truth as President of the Senate in 1801. Why did the Framers choose the sitting Vice-President to preside over the vote count in the first place? What were the rules, and animating ideals, of the Electoral College prior to enactment of the Twelfth Amendment?

A. Founding Blunders

The vice-presidency gave the Framers a lot of problems. They believed that a backstop was needed for the President, but they *555 were hard-put to figure out what to do with him while the President was alive.<sup>7</sup> For want of anything better, they assigned him the largely ceremonial office of President of the Senate.

APPENDIX - 2

But, alas, this office was not entirely ceremonial, and the Framers simply did not think through the full ramifications of this point. They recognized that the Senate would generate tie votes from time to time, and expressly granted the President of the Senate a tie-breaking vote.<sup>8</sup> They failed, however, to consider other moments when the Vice-President might wield real power.

Their most obvious blunder involves impeachment proceedings. The Founders recognized the absurdity of allowing the Vice-President to preside over the Senate when the President was on trial for “high Crimes and Misdemeanors.”<sup>9</sup> He was inevitably an interested party in this affair, rising to the presidency if the incumbent were convicted. Given his personal stake in the matter, it was inappropriate for him to preside over the trial as President of the Senate, and so the text explicitly designates the Chief Justice as the presiding officer.<sup>10</sup>

They failed, however, to consider that the Vice-President might also be impeached. Rather than designating the Chief Justice to preside over these trials as well, the text leaves this task to the President of the Senate.<sup>11</sup> Read literally, the Constitution seems to *556 authorize the Vice-President to preside over his own impeachment.<sup>12</sup>

Our present problem reflects the same sort of technical incompetence. Although the Vice-President may be perfectly acceptable as a ceremonial leader of the Senate, he is a natural candidate in the next presidential contest. It is an obvious mistake to designate him as the presiding officer over the electoral vote count. The temptations for abuse of power are too great-- especially since the textual description of the vote count procedure is so inadequate. Even if the text had been elaborated with great precision, it was still wrong to give one candidate any sort of strategic advantage over his rivals. The designation of the President of the Senate as presiding officer was nothing more than a thoughtless extension of a ceremonial post to a position of power.

If anyone had focused on the matter, the Convention could have cured the lapse easily. There was an obvious solution: The Constitution expressly replaced the Vice-President with the Chief Justice when it comes to presiding over the Senate during presidential impeachments. Just as the Chief Justice displaced him on these occasions, he could have replaced him at the electoral vote count.<sup>13</sup>

*557 But the Convention never spotted this problem, or its obvious cure, and the forces of intellectual inertia propelled the President of the Senate into an unsuitable role. This failure is understandable, if not precisely excusable. The Convention spent an enormous amount of time on methods for selecting the President, repeatedly failing to find a solution that commanded enduring support. Hoping to get out of Philadelphia, the delegates finally pushed the problem onto the docket of a special committee, chaired by David Brearley, charged with solving previously irresolvable issues.<sup>14</sup> Despite the pressures of time, the delegates did spend most of two days-- September 5 and 6, 1787--on the Brearley proposals,<sup>15</sup> but two days were not nearly enough to confront all the problems involved in their novel design. There were many larger questions at stake than the role of the President of the Senate. With their eyes wandering to the exits, the Framers never focused on the absurdity of their job assignment.<sup>16</sup>

So our problem arises as the result of technical incompetence at the Founding--which does not make it any less of a problem.

B. A World Without Parties

To set the stage further, consider the larger structure within which John Adams and Thomas Jefferson were operating at the moment of the vote count. We must return to the original understanding of the Electoral College before the enactment of the Twelfth Amendment. This requires something more than the mastery *558 of a few antiquated rules. These rules were based on an entirely different vision of American politics, and we will not get very far without grasping how this Founding vision differs from our own.

For modern Americans, the two-party system is a pillar of democratic life. Fair competition between political parties is viewed as the great engine for disciplining despotic power. For us, an election without party competition is no election at all.

This was not so for the Founders. They equated party with faction, and thought parties an unmitigated evil. Worse yet, they did not reach this judgment after soberly considering the democratic case for party competition. Nothing resembling the modern party system had yet emerged as a historical reality.<sup>17</sup>

APPENDIX - 3

Nor did classical republican theory encourage the Founders to glimpse the future that lay just over the horizon. The great republican writers of the past--Aristotle and Cicero, Machiavelli and Harrington--presented very different visions of the well-ordered state. They were alike, however, in one crucial respect: Each equated party division with factional strife and deemed it the great nemesis of civilization. Republics died when leaders factionalized, with each cabal placing its narrow interests ahead of the public good. The result was an escalating cycle of instability and incivility, culminating in the despotic ascendancy of a Caesar or a Cromwell. The fundamental challenge was somehow to induce leaders to put the public good ahead of their own--and to sustain the unity of the Commonwealth against the ever-present dangers of factional disintegration.<sup>18</sup>

These classical teachings resonated with the Founders' revolutionary experience. During their struggle against England, political division meant weakness before the imperial foe and bordered on betrayal: We will all hang separately if we do not hang together. This attitude, once formed and battle-hardened, was difficult to transcend.

*559 Even Madison did not attempt to do so. His work at the Constitutional Convention and in The Federalist linked party with faction, condemning it as evil.<sup>19</sup> Madison's aim was to use Enlightenment political science to design a better constitutional machine to constrain the beast.<sup>20</sup> Rather than organizing a sound two-party system, the Madisonian republic tried to create a space for leaders to transcend the rule of faction altogether. The Constitution's basic tactic is divide-and-conquer. By creating government on a continental scale, the Framers hoped to make it difficult to organize large parties: Rather than one or two continental groupings, there would be a host of self-interested factions pushing and shoving for power. This labile structure would make it possible for patrician civic leaders like George Washington to rise above the fray and govern in the public interest. Rather than draft a Constitution for a two-party democracy, the Framers sought to organize a non-party republic.<sup>21</sup>

Though this notion is strange to us, the original design of the Electoral College makes no sense without it. For us, it seems only natural for the major parties to take on the primary burden of selecting the leading candidates for the presidency, but this was a non-starter for the Framers. Rather than delegating this task to political parties, they hoped to design a scheme by which great statesmen would transcend the dynamics of faction. The model for such a leader, of course, sat before them as the presiding officer of the Constitutional Convention: George Washington. The challenge was to construct a system that would enable others like him to rise to the top.

The problem was made more acute by the nature of eighteenth-century society. Politics, much more so than now, was emphatically local. Commercial and landed elites might compete for attention in each of the states, but few local leaders would have the opportunity to prove their mettle on a national basis.

*560 As the Founders well understood, the war against England provided the revolutionary generation with exceptional opportunities to project themselves onto the continental stage. By virtue of their service in the patriots' army, Washington and others had demonstrated their republican virtue--or lack of it-- to an attentive audience in all thirteen states. The difficulties of wartime coordination also required civilian politicians to engage in extraordinary levels of interstate interaction as well as mutual assessment. But in ordinary times, would there be a steady supply of such "Continental Characters"?<sup>22</sup>

The more optimistic members of the Convention predicted that "Continental Characters will multiply as we more & more coalesce,"<sup>23</sup> but others were not so sure.<sup>24</sup> Unless steps were taken, each state's electors might join together and vote for a favorite son, leading to perplexity when all the votes were counted. This is where the Founders tried to economize on the short supply of true leaders through clever institutional engineering. Why not give two votes to each elector, but allow him to cast only one for a citizen from his own state? As Gouverneur Morris explained, "one vote is to be given to a man out of the State, and as this vote will not be thrown away, y the votes will fall on characters eminent & generally known."<sup>25</sup>

The vice-presidency became a functional imperative at this stage in the constitutional design. If the Framers had trusted electors to ignore local favorites, they might well have dispensed with the office. *561<sup>26</sup> Instead of creating a do-nothing (and politically mischievous) President of the Senate, they could have responded to the problem of presidential death or resignation by simply designating an official--perhaps the Secretary of State, perhaps the Speaker of the House--to serve as acting President until a special election could be held. In fact, this was the method used by the Second Congress to resolve the succession problem if both the President and Vice-President died or resigned.<sup>27</sup>

APPENDIX - 4

The Framers' ingenious two-vote system, however, invited the creation of two distinct offices. Without the vice-presidency, electors might leave one of their ballots blank and vote the other for a native son. But with the second spot in existence, the electors would hardly let it go to waste. One can imagine the thought process: "Of course George Washington is an out-of-stater, but I might as well vote for the best man since the Constitution requires me to move beyond our favorite sons. And in any event, I did get a chance to cast a ballot for our regional favorite, the Honorable John Q. Squire, who might even have a chance to be Vice-President!" Although most Vice-Presidents would likely waste their time in office as senatorial figureheads, this was beside the point. The underlying goal was to construct a clever system for selecting a President with a broad-based reputation for political virtue. When Elbridge Gerry (himself a future Vice-President) expressed a desire to eliminate the office, another delegate--Hugh Williamson of North Carolina--responded that "such an officer as *562 vice-President was not wanted. He was introduced only for the sake of a valuable mode of election which required two to be chosen at the same time."<sup>28</sup>

The original design had a second clever feature. Suppose, as was the case in both 1796 and 1800, that the College contained 138 members who cast 276 votes. Under the 1787 Constitution, the top choice could become President even if his name appeared on only seventy of the 276 votes.<sup>29</sup> The point of the Enlightenment machine was to construct the impression that the President was a man of truly national character even if the pickings were pretty slim. A man could become President when he was the second choice of a bare majority of electors.

Even this clever expedient could sometimes fail to produce the simulacrum of a George Washington. Politics might become so state-centered that no candidate could gain even a minimal level of national support. How to proceed?

The Brearley Committee proposed a back-up procedure under which the President would be selected by the Senate from the top five vote-getters in the Electoral College.<sup>30</sup> But the Senate had already been granted many special powers, and granting it still more threatened to give the entire system an "aristocratic complexion."<sup>31</sup> This objection proved persuasive, leading to the most peculiar voting system known to our constitutional system. The Convention shifted the locus of authority from the Senate to the House, but retained the Senate's principle of equality in state voting power. For *563 presidential purposes only, each state delegation in the House would cast a single vote--Delaware's single representative and Virginia's large delegation counting equally<sup>32</sup>--and the balloting would proceed until a candidate received the votes of an absolute majority of the states.<sup>33</sup>

This transformation of the people's House into a state-centered assembly may seem odd to us, but it made quite a bit of sense within the overall Founding framework. To put the point in numerical terms: If no single candidate garnered as many as seventy of the 276 votes cast by 138 electors, this would indicate that American politics had taken an emphatically decentralizing turn. As a consequence, should not the back-up mechanism likewise decentralize by giving an equal vote to each state in the Union?

Perhaps, though, strong nationalists like Madison and Hamilton were not convinced. They tried to eliminate the back-up procedure, or at least reduce the frequency of its use.<sup>34</sup> These efforts were successfully resisted by the small states, which feared that electors from three or four large states might otherwise be in a position to dictate the presidential choice when a consensus candidate *564 was lacking.<sup>35</sup> If no national figure could gain one of the two places on a majority of the electors' ballots, the small states insisted on a runoff in the House in which each state counted equally. Under this scenario, the large states might dominate the process of nomination, but the small ones had a large say in the final decision.

All this may have seemed sensible enough, but the time devoted to hammering it out led the Convention to slight a second design issue. This did not involve the failure of a candidate of continental stature to emerge from the Electoral College, but a mathematical oddity arising from the complexities of the emerging design. Since the Founders had given each elector two votes in their desire to overcome localism, it was now mathematically possible for several candidates to turn up on a majority of ballots--indeed, two could end up in a dead heat, with each winning, say, seventy-three votes apiece. How to break this tie?

This question raises issues distinct from those involved when no presidential candidate has gained widespread support. In the no-majority case, the small states might reasonably suppose that the leader in the Electoral College would be a "favorite son" from a large state. After all, these local favorites could fish from a larger pool of electors than notables from small states, and so they would get to the top of a long list of candidates of merely local eminence. Since the small states would not play a major role in nominating candidates, it was reasonable for them to insist on greater importance in the final selection.

APPENDIX - 5

But the small states had no similar grievance when two candidates tied with the same majority vote total. Under this scenario, both candidates would have won their seventy-three votes by collecting electors from states of all sizes. In contrast to the no-majority case, there was no obvious bias against the small states in the tied-majority case. It follows that the Founders' odd voting rule--under which each state delegation in the House cast a single *565 ballot to select a President--was distinctly undermotivated in the tied-majority context. While it might have been sensible to give equal voting power to big Virginia and little Delaware when no candidate gained broad national support, this curious rule made little sense when two broad-based candidacies gained precisely the same number of votes.

Generally speaking, the delegates were quite skilled at identifying fine-grained issues of institutional design. Indeed, they spotted an analogous issue in an earlier debate on presidential selection, but nothing came of it.<sup>36</sup> If they had given themselves adequate time, some sharp-eyed delegate likely would have remarked upon the distinctive character of the tied-majority case. Time was running short, however, when the Brearley proposals came to the floor, and no one focused on the problem in the rush to resolve a host of more contentious issues.<sup>37</sup>

The Founders' lapse can be extenuated if we recall that they were legislating for a world without national political parties. In such a world, centuries might go by without a dead-heat between *566 two candidates with the national stature required to win a majority. Did not the Convention have better things to do than create wheels within wheels for dealing with such an unlikely possibility?

Rather than create an entirely new voting system for the tied-majority case, the Convention modified only one feature of its standard House runoff to take it into account. If the odd case did arise, the Constitution provides that only the two candidates locked in the tie would enter the House runoff. When all candidates fell short of a majority, however, the five leading candidates enter the runoff (even if the top two were tied).

Since this rule-within-a-rule is central to our story, the relevant constitutional text deserves careful scrutiny:

The Person having the greatest Number of Votes shall be the President, if such Number be a Majority of the whole Number of Electors appointed; and if there be more than one who have such Majority, and have an equal Number of Votes, then the House of Representatives shall immediately chuse by Ballot one of them for President; and if no person have a Majority, then from the five highest on the List the said House shall in like Manner chuse the President.<sup>38</sup> Since these rules are rather complex, we explore their operation through a series of mathematical examples. Begin with the case of perfect compliance, where the electoral vote count proceeds without a legal hitch. During both the elections of 1796 and 1800, there were 138 electors casting 256 votes for President. So long as we assume perfect compliance, the operation of the runoff rules is straightforward. The magic number is seventy: "a Majority of the whole Number of Electors appointed." If the two leading candidates tie with seventy votes or more, the text requires a two-man runoff; if they get sixty-nine or less, it requires the two leaders to join in a race involving the top five candidates.

Matters get trickier when there is imperfect compliance, since there are two different ways in which a state may fail to register its electoral preferences. The first scenario arose in 1796 and involved Vermont. The problem--or so it was alleged--was that the state had failed to appoint its four electors in a legally valid fashion. As *567 we shall see, this charge was rejected. If the attack on Vermont had been upheld, however, the total number of electors "appointed" by the states would have amounted only to 134, not 138. This reduction, in turn, would have required a change in the "magic number" of electoral votes needed to avoid a five-candidate runoff. With only 134 electors "appointed," the constitutional majority required was no longer seventy, but sixty-eight, votes.

A different result obtains under the second scenario of imperfect compliance, which arose in 1800 and involved Georgia. This time around, nobody alleged that Georgia had failed to make a valid appointment of its four electors. The difficulty arose only at the second stage--the four electors did not cast ballots that satisfied the formal requirements laid down by the Constitution. While this might have resulted in the disqualification of the four Georgia votes, it did not require a recalculation of the "magic number." Since Georgia's electors had undoubtedly been "appointed," the number of electors from the entire Union remained at 138, and candidates required a majority of at least seventy votes to avoid a five-man runoff in the House.

APPENDIX - 6

This point would create a big problem when Jefferson presided over the electoral vote count of 1801. But we are now talking about 1787. As the days grew short in September, nobody at the Convention worried about the outside chance that an incumbent Vice-President, sitting as the President of the Senate, might manipulate an oddball rule to push himself into a House runoff with one rival rather than four. There were many more serious things to think about, as the Framers contemplated the fierce struggle for ratification that lay ahead.

II. The Vermont Precedent

Washington's presence at the head of the Constitutional Convention assured the delegates that their larger vision of a non-party republic was a living reality. Here was a man who had proved his public spirit through years of selfless service on the battlefield. This demonstration of "public character," not any display of partisan wiles, would predictably win him a unanimous vote for the presidency.<sup>39</sup> Once he had set the nation on the right course, would the *568 constitutional machine assist his successors in sustaining his example of nonpartisan statesmanship?

Washington was grimly determined to try. He included both Hamilton and Jefferson in his first Cabinet, and desperately sought to keep these great rivals in harness. But it was not to be. By the end of his first administration, the two party leaders were already locked in highly charged ideological conflict, and by the time Washington left office, the division between Federalists and Republicans had come to dominate the political scene.<sup>40</sup> The ink was hardly dry on the Constitution before its fundamental political premise began to disintegrate. America was becoming a proto-modern two-party democracy, raising entirely unexpected challenges to the Founding design for a republic dominated by non-party notables.<sup>41</sup>

A. The Rise of Party

Washington's Farewell Address nicely framed the transition to this new order.<sup>42</sup> On the one hand, it was a great act of nonpartisan statesmanship--in refusing a third term in office, Washington established a precedent against the pernicious tendency toward presidencies-for-life. On the other hand, partisan politics provided a backdrop to Washington's grave farewell. He postponed his announcement until September 17, 1796. This put the Republicans at a serious disadvantage in the presidential election campaign, as Jefferson and his supporters were not prepared to contest Washington's decision to continue in office.<sup>43</sup> Nevertheless, the Republicans almost managed to defeat John Adams, Washington's Vice-President and a man devoted to Washington's non-party ideal, who *569 was now obliged to make his way in the ascendant world of party politics.

Adams's official position as Vice-President and his past service to the country made him an obvious candidate, but Alexander Hamilton was the true leader of the Federalist Party. Hamilton attempted to manipulate the Founders' ingenious two-vote system to deprive Adams of the presidency without allowing Thomas Jefferson to take the prize.<sup>44</sup> His scheme involved propelling the Federalists' second candidate, Thomas Pinckney of South Carolina,<sup>45</sup> to first place in the Electoral College. If every Federalist elector in the north voted for both Adams and Pinckney, this would allow South Carolina to put its favorite son ahead by voting for Pinckney but not Adams. To achieve this end, Hamilton engaged in some devious maneuvers that created a problem when the time came for the President of the Senate to count the votes.

For Hamilton's scheme to succeed, he needed to convince the northern Federalists to resist the temptations of regional favoritism in their second ballot choices and cast their ballots for Pinckney as well as Adams. Professor Manning Dauer tells the story:

[Hamilton] attempted to supply the stimulus which would cause the electors to support Pinckney. In the Boston Centinel of December 7, just as the electors were meeting, the following paragraph appeared, under a New York date line of November 26: "We have good authority to believe the election of electors in Vermont is invalid---being grounded on a Resolve of the Legislature, not a law."

Underneath this there appeared a note by the editor declaring that it was certainly to be hoped that this would not be true. If so, it shows the "necessity of union in the electors."<sup>46</sup> The editor's implicit logic was clear enough. Since the race with the Republicans was going to be close, the loss of Vermont's four votes *570 for Adams and Pinckney might mean that the only Federalist who could beat Jefferson was Pinckney, aided by South Carolina's favorite-son vote. While South Carolina's desertion of Adams might be regrettable, surely Pinckney was better than Jefferson.

APPENDIX - 7

Hamilton's rumor failed to generate its desired effect.<sup>47</sup> Despite the disheartening news from Vermont, only thirteen of Massachusetts's electors voted a straight Adams-Pinckney ticket.<sup>48</sup> The other three voted for Adams but then cast a ballot for regional favorites--as did ten other Federalist electors from northern states. As a consequence, Pinckney lagged far behind Adams in the electoral vote--he received only fifty-nine votes to Adams's seventy-one. This gave the vice-presidency to Jefferson, with sixty-eight votes. Jefferson's running mate, Aaron Burr, was also victimized by favorite-son voting, and gained only thirty votes.<sup>49</sup>

Though Hamilton's stratagem failed to produce northern solidarity for Pinckney, it did succeed in casting a shadow on the vote-counting ritual. If Vermont's four votes were ruled invalid, Adams would lose the presidency to Jefferson by a single vote, sixty-eight to sixty-seven.<sup>50</sup> With remarkable speed, the Framers' technical *571 blunders were coming home to roost. It was a serious enough mistake to allow the sitting Vice-President to preside over his own election returns in the gentlemanly world of non-party notables. But this error was compounded once the vice-presidency had become swept up in the overheated context of a new and unfamiliar form of party competition. How would the system respond to the challenge?

B. Rumors and Restraint

The four Vermont electors for President and Vice-President cast their ballots on December 7, 1796<sup>51</sup>--two full months before John Adams was scheduled to preside over the vote count on February 8, 1797. As word of the Vermont votes trickled out of Montpelier to the larger world, newspapers and politicians throughout the country attacked their validity.<sup>52</sup> The New York Minerva & Mercantile Evening Advertiser began the controversy on November 26:

*572 We have good authority to believe the election of Electors in Vermont is invalid--being grounded only on a Resolve of the Legislature, not a law. This is supposed to have been known to the 'Patriots,' of that State at the time. It being now too late to correct the mistake, it has leaked out in whispers.<sup>53</sup> Newspaper attacks on the Vermont vote continued through December.<sup>54</sup>

*573 These reports contained three charges. The first denied that Vermont had enacted a valid law authorizing the procedure by which it had selected its electors. Though it was broadly recognized that Vermont had passed such a law in 1791, "We understand that the law alluded to made provision only for the election in 1792, and of course then expired."<sup>55</sup> The second claimed that Vermont's appointments were invalid because they were made through a "resolve" rather than a formal legislative enactment.<sup>56</sup> The third argued that Vermont had violated a 1792 federal statute requiring the states to appoint their electors within a period of "thirty-four days preceding the first Wednesday in December."<sup>57</sup>

*574 None of these charges had legal merit. We have personally examined the Vermont archives<sup>58</sup> and we have determined that the 1791 statute regulating presidential electors was not a temporary measure for 1792 but a standing procedure for the indefinite future. Under its terms, Vermont's electors would be selected by a majority of the members of a "Grand Committee" consisting of "the Governor and Council and House of Representatives."<sup>59</sup> There *575 is abundant evidence indicating that this procedure was followed in 1796.<sup>60</sup>

The distinctive character of the Vermont procedure also refutes the complaint that the electors were selected through a "resolve" rather than ordinary legislation. Since Vermont's Governor cast a ballot for the electors along with members of his council and the Vermont House of Assembly, the "Grand Committee" was not an ordinary legislative body capable of enacting statutes. The Grand Committee chose electors by means of a "resolve" because it was specifically delegated this authority by the validly enacted 1791 statute. And finally, it simply is not true that Vermont had violated the federal statute by selecting its electors before the beginning of the prescribed thirty-four day period. The records reveal that the Grand Committee made its choices on November 4, 1796, thirty-three days before “the first Wednesday in December.”<sup>61</sup>

APPENDIX - 8

This was not enough, however, to make the charges unimportant. The newspaper accounts were sufficient to generate a cloud of suspicion. If the Republicans had chosen to press the issue, it *576 would have been difficult for Adams or anybody else to respond decisively at the time of the vote count. Consider especially the first of the three complaints--that the original Vermont protocol was a one-shot regulation designed specifically for the 1792 election, without legal force for 1796. The only way to learn the truth would have been to send a messenger to Vermont to inspect all the legislative records, but a round-trip journey to Montpelier would have taken weeks.<sup>62</sup> All sorts of mischief might have been attempted in the meantime.

If the Republicans had raised a formal objection, therefore, Adams would have confronted a very real political problem--but not an irresolvable one. He could have responded by rejecting the Republicans' complaint on the basis of a legal presumption. After all, there was nothing formally defective on the face of Vermont's electoral documents.<sup>63</sup> And so the President of the Senate might announce that the state's papers were entitled to a presumption of legal regularity that could not be rebutted without a compelling showing of an underlying substantive problem. This might seem plausible, but the credibility of such a ruling would have been undercut by Adams's self-interest in the affair. Whatever he might say, and however justifiable, his ruling would have eliminated further inquiry into votes that provided his crucial margin of victory.

This would have been a particularly awkward moment for such a ruling because 1796 marked the first contested presidential election in the nation's history. There were warring political parties. If Adams counted himself into the presidency, the Constitution would be off to a very bad start, even if the country accepted the legitimacy of the outcome.

Only the self-restraint of the Republican leadership permitted the Constitution to avoid this early test of credibility. Rather than demagogue the issue, Jefferson self-consciously retired it from public view. The Vermont controversy simmered in the newspapers *577 throughout December,<sup>64</sup> and uncertainty about the Vermont vote was reflected in the ongoing informal tallies of the electoral vote. Since Jefferson was at Monticello throughout this period,<sup>65</sup> Madison was functioning as the operational leader in Philadelphia and regularly wrote to his chief for marching orders. His letter of Christmas Day 1796 begins with the caveat: “I can not yet entirely remove the uncertainty in which my last [letter] left the election. Unless the Vermont election of which little has of late been said, should contain some fatal vice, in it, Mr. Adams may be considered as the President elect.”<sup>66</sup> Jefferson replied on January 16, 1797:

I observe doubts are still expressed as to the validity of the Vermont election. Surely in so great a case, substance & not form should prevail. I cannot suppose that the Vermont constitution has been strict in requiring particular forms of expressing the legislative will. As far as my disclaimer may have any effect, I pray you to declare it on every occasion foreseen or not foreseen by me, in favor of the choice of the people substantially expressed, and to prevent the phaenomenon of a Pseudo-president at so early a day.<sup>67</sup> Jefferson's words were decisive: The Vermont controversy dropped from public view during the run-up to the formal vote count on February 8, with Republican newspapers conceding the victory to Adams.<sup>68</sup> *578 Jefferson's decision adds some useful complexity to our larger story. We have stressed how the Framers' failure to anticipate the two-party system threatened to throw the constitutional system into a severe crisis. But Jefferson's letter suggests that the survival of classical republican ideals--condemning faction, praising civic unity--tempered the very crisis that the Framers had failed to anticipate. Both Adams and Jefferson were hardly political innocents, and they were perfectly prepared to compete for power in the new partisan environment. Nevertheless, they remained powerfully attracted to the animating spirit of the Founding. When push came to shove, they sometimes--not always--managed to put these principles into practice in ways that softened the party assault on the non-party Constitution of 1787.

Jefferson's January 16 letter was one such instance.<sup>69</sup> There can be no doubt that he was right: The country could ill afford “the phaenomenon of a Pseudo-president at so early a day.”<sup>70</sup>

APPENDIX - 9

*579 We will return to this theme in discussing the main subject of this essay: Jefferson's use of his power as Senate President to give himself a significant advantage in the Electoral College crisis of 1801. Before turning to this forgotten story, there is an additional lesson to be learned from our prelude.

C. Vote-Counting Day in Philadelphia

Without a doubt, most of the suspense had disappeared, but there was still a potential for intrigue on February 8, 1797, the day the votes were counted to pick the second President of the United States. Newspapers had ceased printing stories about the Vermont votes, but Adams and his supporters could not know for sure whether the Republicans were planning some last minute tricks. The stakes were enormous. If the Vermont electors had not been validly appointed, Adams would lose the state's four votes and Jefferson would become President by a margin of sixty-eight to sixty-seven.<sup>71</sup>

The constitutional mathematics raised a strategic question for Adams: Would he provide his political enemies an explicit procedural opportunity to raise the Vermont matter and its potentially devastating consequences? Or would he make it as hard as possible for the Republicans to mount a challenge?

The Annals of Congress describes the proceedings:

The President of the Senate [John Adams] then thus addressed the two Houses:

Gentlemen of the Senate, and of the House of Representatives:

By the report which has been made to me by the tellers appointed by the two Houses to examine the votes, there are 71 votes for John Adams, 68 for Thomas Jefferson, 59 for Thomas Pinckney, 30 for Aaron Burr, 15 for Samuel Adams, 11 for Oliver Ellsworth, 7 for George Clinton, 5 for John Jay, 3 for James Iredell, 2 for George Washington, 2 for John Henry, 2 for Samuel Johnston, and 1 for Charles C. Pinckney. The whole number of votes are 138; 70 votes, therefore, make a majority; so that the person who has 71 votes, which is the highest number, is elected President, and the person who has 68 votes, which is the next highest number, is elected Vice President.

The President of the Senate then sat down for a moment, and rising again, thus addressed the two Houses:

In obedience to the Constitution and Law of the United States, and to the commands of both Houses of Congress, expressed in their resolution passed in the present session, I declare that

John Adams is elected President of the United States, for four years, to commence with the fourth day of March next; and that Thomas Jefferson is elected Vice President of the United States, for four years, to commence with the fourth day of March next.<sup>72</sup>

"The President of the Senate then sat down for a moment." Four years earlier, Vice-President Adams had also presided over the vote count, but the Annals of Congress contains no similar notation.<sup>73</sup> Indeed, no such pause is noted in any of the first fourteen presidential vote counts. It would seem, then, that Adams's action *581 was deliberate. Only one previous scholar has explicitly noted this incident: "Mr. Adams himself could certainly not raise the question of the validity of the Vermont votes; but he seems to have given an opportunity for objections if anyone should see fit to raise them."<sup>74</sup>

A deflationary interpretation is available--perhaps Adams was only marking a transition between two phases of the proceeding, symbolizing that the vote count had concluded and the time had come for a final and authoritative declaration of the result. Yet this seems unlikely. Adams was no fool: By sitting down, he was putting himself at the mercy of the Republican opposition in a close election.<sup>75</sup> He would not have paused unless he harbored some doubts about his authority as President of the Senate to resolve disputed issues unilaterally.

Thomas Jefferson would take a different view four years later.

APPENDIX - 10

III. The Election of 1800

When John Adams opened the documents from Vermont in 1797, they were in perfect order. Thomas Jefferson faced a different situation when he opened Georgia's electoral votes in 1801: The certificate was illegal on its face. We begin by setting the problem in a larger context before focusing on Jefferson's response.

*582 A. The Run-Up

Washington's delay in announcing his Farewell Address constrained the ferocity of party competition in 1796. With the Great Man departing the scene at the end of September, the two sides had little time to escalate their struggle to fever pitch. Four years later, partisan battle reached one of its historic highs.<sup>76</sup>

For both parties, the very future of the republic was at stake. For the Federalists, the Republicans were vicious factionalists who sought revolutionary upheaval along Jacobin lines.<sup>77</sup> For the Republicans, the Federalists were cryptomonarchists, aping English models at home and damaging the republican cause abroad.<sup>78</sup> Both sides reacted with extreme measures that testified to their high anxiety. Republican politicians in Kentucky and Virginia issued resolutions calling for extraordinary state actions to check the abuse of Federalist power, while Federalist judges threw Republican newspaper editors into jail for seditious libel.<sup>79</sup>

As the moment of electoral truth neared, the written Constitution failed to discharge its most basic function. Whatever else it may or may not accomplish, a written constitution is supposed to provide everyone with undisputable rules of the game--telling *583 them what they must do to win elections, and how to determine who has lost. When judged by this key criterion, the Philadelphia Convention was a miserable failure.

The rise of two-party competition had transformed the Framers' clever effort at institutional engineering into a constitutional nightmare. Failing to anticipate the rise of national parties, the Convention had focused on a different set of problems when designing its system of presidential selection. In the Framers' estimation, their big problem was state provincialism, and so they had developed their complex two-vote scheme to mitigate its effects. Despite the impact of political parties on the election of 1796, the system managed to operate more or less as the Framers envisioned. With second votes scattering on behalf of regional favorites, the number-two spot went to Thomas Jefferson, leader of the Republican party but also a "continental character" of the sort they wanted to guide the nation.

As the 1800 race intensified, though, the electoral system became the object of intense partisan manipulation. On the state level, parties used their political power to manipulate the process of selecting electors--shifting to legislative selection, or changing the mode of popular choice, depending on their perception of partisan advantage.<sup>80</sup> The Federalists attempted the same maneuver on the national level, where they were in firm control of the presidency and both houses of Congress. Under the leadership of Federalist Senator James Ross, the Senate passed a bill establishing a special committee to "inquire, examine, decide, and report upon" irregularities that might occur in connection with the electoral vote.<sup>81</sup> This "Grand Committee" was to include six senators, six representatives, and the Chief Justice of the United States.<sup>82</sup> It was *584 to meet in secret<sup>83</sup> and its report would serve as the "final and conclusive determination of the admissibility or inadmissibility of the votes given by the electors for President and Vice-President of the United States."<sup>84</sup>

Passed on a party-line vote of sixteen to twelve in March 1800, the bill would have become law but for Congressman John Marshall's intervention in the House. Speaking before a House select committee,<sup>85</sup> Marshall raised constitutional objections to the proposed bill.<sup>86</sup> His amendments stripped the Committee of its authoritative status, giving the last word to both houses of Congress, meeting separately. The Committee's rejection of a state's electoral vote would be upheld only if a majority of both houses accepted its recommendation.<sup>87</sup> Marshall's success in weakening the proposal angered the more extreme Federalists. His measure passed the House but was rejected on another party-line vote in the Senate--with hard-line Federalists insisting that a Committee rejection be upheld if only one house supported its recommendation.<sup>88</sup> This demand led to an impasse, and the Ross initiative came to nothing, leaving the President of the Senate and Congress to confront the painfully inadequate constitutional text if a vote-counting problem should arise.<sup>89</sup>

APPENDIX - 11

*585 This ticking time-bomb was momentarily forgotten once the electoral returns started rolling in. In contrast to 1796, electors had sworn off the practice of substituting a favorite son for their party's vice-presidential candidate. With four years of battle under their belts, every elector voted a straight party-line ticket, with one exception. The Federalists wasted one of their second ballots on John Jay, giving John Adams a one-vote edge over his running mate Charles Cotesworth Pinckney, and neatly avoiding a House runoff if they won a majority.

The Republicans were less astute. All of their electors voted a straight ticket, giving Jefferson and Burr an equal number of votes and throwing the race into the House. “[A]fter the most energetic efforts, crowned with success, we remain in the hands of our enemies by want of foresight in the original arrangement”<sup>90</sup> --so wrote Jefferson to Monroe on December 20.

Almost two months remained before the day designated for the formal vote count, Wednesday, February 11, 1801.<sup>91</sup> This was a period of feverish activity, as Republicans and Federalists prepared their forces for the looming House runoff between Jefferson and Burr. If the protagonists had been aware of a problem with Georgia's electoral votes, they would have engaged in a related round of strategic maneuvering. Without Georgia's four electors, Jefferson and Burr could only claim sixty-nine valid votes apiece. As we have explained,<sup>92</sup> this would have forced them into a five-man runoff that included Adams, Pinckney, and Jay.<sup>93</sup> The possibility of a five-man race should have provoked an intense round of politicking--and yet we have found absolutely no documentary evidence of any such activity. In contrast, there is voluminous evidence detailing efforts by Federalist and Republican politicians to gain support from *586 House members in the two-man race between Jefferson and Burr they believed was in the offing.<sup>94</sup> The silence about the five-man possibility is deafening--no one seems to have anticipated the constitutional pitfalls awaiting Jefferson when he opened the ballots on February 11.

Our conclusion is bolstered by Jefferson's confident treatment of an administrative matter. To ensure that all the electoral votes arrived in Washington in time, the governing statutes authorized the Secretary of State, then John Marshall, to “send a special messenger” if any state's electoral certificates had not arrived by the “first Wednesday in January.”<sup>95</sup>

The states were sending envelopes containing their ballots to Jefferson, in his capacity as President of the Senate.<sup>96</sup> On December 28, he wrote Marshall that no special messengers would be required.<sup>97</sup> Jefferson's confidence was perfectly understandable--as we will see, the outside of the envelope from Georgia bears no indication of the constitutional problems contained within.<sup>98</sup> Moreover, it was perfectly understandable that Jefferson would go no further than the surface of the envelope, as the Constitution explicitly required him to “open all the Certificates” in full view of the House and Senate,<sup>99</sup> and he would have raised suspicions about ballot-tampering had he taken a peek beforehand.

The emerging situation was the mirror image of the Vermont scenario of 1797. The complaints about Vermont were raised in the newspapers long before Adams opened the envelopes.<sup>100</sup> This gave the sitting Vice-President an opportunity to consider in advance how to conduct himself at the moment of truth. The potential legal *587 difficulty was made easier by the fact that the Vermont ballot was formally perfect.<sup>101</sup> And strategically, the stakes had been lowered dramatically when, thanks to Jefferson's behind-the-scenes intervention, the Republicans were no longer publicly complaining about the legality of the Vermont votes. When Adams provided his political enemies with a formal opportunity to protest at the vote-counting ritual, he could be quite confident that his enemies would not exploit the situation, and if they did, that he could legally justify a decision to place the Vermont votes in his column.

Things were different in 1801. When the obvious defect in Georgia's ballot became evident on February 11, everybody would be in for a surprise, and high-stakes decisions would be required in a matter of minutes. Worse yet, the written Constitution served only to exacerbate the explosive situation. Rather than providing clear rules for resolving electoral vote problems, it explicitly handed the gavel to the worst possible presiding officer--the man with the most to gain by including Georgia's defective ballot--and failed to provide him with any rules to govern the tough cases.

B. Jefferson's Problem

Whatever its other obscurities, Article II of the Constitution contains some plain instructions for each state's electors: "And they shall make a List of all the Persons voted for, and of the Number of Votes for each; which List they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the Seat of the Government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate."<sup>102</sup> Call this the electoral vote, and it is the document that created legal problems for Georgia in 1800.

A few statutory requirements are also relevant. George Washington's first election preceded the first session of Congress, but in 1792 Congress enacted a framework law for future contests. The statute instructs the "executive authority of each state" to create a second document that certifies the names of the electors who have been selected by the state.<sup>103</sup> Call this the certificate of ascertainment. The statute instructs the electors to enclose this certificate *588 with their electoral vote.<sup>104</sup> Once they have placed both documents in an envelope for delivery to the President of the Senate, they must also "certify[]" on the envelope "that a list of the votes of such state for President and Vice President is contained therein."<sup>105</sup>

The Georgia electors fulfilled both of these statutory requirements in 1801, but their electoral vote--the key document required by the Constitution-- dramatically fails to comply with the requirements of Article II and the norms established by the uniform practice of the states in every early election.<sup>106</sup> In 1796, for example, this is what Georgia's vote looked like:<sup>107</sup>

*589 Figure 1

TABULAR OR GRAPHIC MATERIAL SET FORTH AT THIS POINT IS NOT DISPLAYABLE

As the Constitution prescribes, the upper half of the document contains "a List of all the Persons voted for, and of the Number of Votes for each."<sup>108</sup> The bottom half complies with the second part of the constitutional command: "which List they shall sign and certify."<sup>109</sup> Georgia's 1796 submission also contains a certificate of ascertainment *590 from the Governor certifying the four electors whose signatures appear on the electoral vote.<sup>110</sup>

In contrast, Georgia's envelope of 1800 contains a single sheet of paper, not the two provided by every other state. On one side of the sheet, there is a legally perfect certificate of ascertainment, signed by Governor James Jackson, identifying the state's four electors in the standard fashion. There is, however, no physically distinct electoral vote. The only indication of the electors' preferences appears on the obverse side of the certificate of ascertainment. This is what it looks like:

*591 Figure 2

TABULAR OR GRAPHIC MATERIAL SET FORTH AT THIS POINT IS NOT DISPLAYABLE

*592 To what extent does this primitive document satisfy the constitutional requirements? If we restrict ourselves to the four corners of the document, the answer is: not at all. To be sure, there is a "list" of four names under the headings "Jefferson" and "Burr," but there is no statement certifying that the four individuals were casting the state's electoral votes for these two candidates.

To clarify the formal deficiencies, simply measure the Georgia "vote" against the terms of the constitutional text. The Georgia document indeed contains a "List,"<sup>111</sup> but it does not say that it represents a list of "the Persons voted for."<sup>112</sup> The four names appearing below "Jefferson" and "Burr" are those of the individuals certified by Governor Jackson, but the electors themselves have not "sign[ed] and certifi[ed]" that the list actually represents a true statement of their preferences.<sup>113</sup>

These constitutional requirements are purely technical, but they are not trivial. To the contrary, when read as part of the grander constitutional scheme, they seem quite important. Immediately after the Constitution imposes elaborate formalisms on each state's electoral vote, it proceeds to a provision that should, by now, be familiar: "The President of the Senate shall, in the Presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the Certificates, and the Votes shall then be counted."<sup>114</sup>

Given the opacity of this provision, formalism might be just the thing needed to ensure its smooth operation. Since the text does not explicitly contemplate complex disputes over the validity of electoral votes, perhaps the best way to make it operational is to impose a crisp rule on the President of the Senate. When opening each ballot, he should assure himself that the voting papers comply *593 with the formal constitutional and statutory requirements. If they do, the vote “shall then be counted;”<sup>115</sup> if not, it should not. Any other approach threatens to involve the President of the Senate in an uncertain proceeding in which he might be an interested party. The formalist's premise of a smoothly functioning machine, moreover, was regularly fulfilled during the early years of the republic: Each state in every prior election had submitted technically perfect electoral votes and certificates of ascertainment.<sup>116</sup>

Yet formalism has the vices of its virtues: The disqualification of an entire state is a very serious matter. In 1800, Georgia was a frontier region without great legal sophistication.<sup>117</sup> If the Georgians had merely made a technical error in expressing their choice of Jefferson and Burr, would it not be wrong to disqualify them? Worse yet, the blunder had decisive national ramifications, transforming a two-man House runoff into a five-man race. Why should the nation's fate hinge on some backwoods blunder?

But was the mistake merely technical?

Viewing the matter from Washington, D.C., it would have been hard to know for sure. First of all, no other frontier state had ever made such a legal mistake. Tennessee, for example, had a much shorter history of organized government than did Georgia, but it had had no trouble complying with the explicit commands of the Constitution and the 1792 Act. Here is Tennessee's 1800 ballot:<sup>118</sup>

*594 Figure 3

TABULAR OR GRAPHIC MATERIAL SET FORTH AT THIS POINT IS NOT DISPLAYABLE

*595 Not only did Georgia's ballot stick out like a sore thumb, but there was something particularly suspicious about it: Its electoral vote had been plastered on the backside of the certificate of ascertainment. This anomaly raises the disturbing possibility of a classic “bait and switch” operation. Under this scenario, Georgia's four electors actually did what everybody else did: They prepared a proper ballot, put it into the envelope with the certificate of ascertainment, and then signed the outside of the envelope.<sup>119</sup> At this point, some devious character enters the scene, removes the standard ballot, and casts four defective votes for Jefferson and Burr on the backside of the remaining certificate. He then seals the envelope and sends it on its merry way.

The missing electoral document was not only suspicious in itself. The “bait and switch” scenario put the legal deficiencies of the ersatz ballot in a new and disturbing light. Criminals do not spend much time reading the Constitution. If a fraudster had removed the genuine ballot prepared by the true electors, it is not surprising that he created a legal mess when writing up his counterfeit. On this scenario, Georgia's legal mess was the result of a fraudster's elimination of the genuine item originally prepared by the true electors.

Worse yet, Georgia was already notorious for shady dealing. In the Yazoo scandals, the state's leading politicians had sold vast tracts of public land at ridiculously low prices: “[O]nly one of the legislators voting for [the Yazoo act] had not been bribed in some way by the land companies.”<sup>120</sup> To be sure, Georgia's voters had recently *596 swept the corrupt politicians out of office,<sup>121</sup> but could Jefferson, sitting from a great distance in Washington, D.C., be confident that their replacements were not playing similar games?

So much for the dark side. There were other bits of concrete evidence that pointed in a more reassuring direction. Pursuant to statutory instructions, Georgia's four electors had “certif[ied]” on their envelope to the President of the Senate “that a list of the votes . . . for President and Vice President [was] contained therein.”<sup>122</sup> As Figure 4 suggests, these four signatures match quite well with their name-sakes on the defective ballot illustrated in Figure 2:

*597 Figure 4

TABULAR OR GRAPHIC MATERIAL SET FORTH AT THIS POINT IS NOT DISPLAYABLE

The history of mankind is littered with clever forgeries, and even today, handwriting analysis is more art than science. Nevertheless, if Jefferson were to compare the ballot with the envelope, he would not detect evidence of an obvious forgery.

So perhaps the *598 unconstitutional Georgia ballot was indeed the result of mere legal incompetence rather than gross skullduggery.

This benign interpretation is supported by a final consideration. All through January, newspapers were reporting regularly that Jefferson and Burr had won all four of Georgia's electoral votes.<sup>123</sup> Given the broad publicity, surely the Federalists would have launched a vocal protest if they thought they had really won. The election of 1800 was one of the closest, and most partisan, in American history. If any of the Georgia electors had actually voted *599 for Adams or Pinckney, common sense suggests that they never would have remained silent as they saw their votes publicly misrepresented. Once the Georgia envelope was opened, clever lawyers might debate endlessly about the possibility of a "bait and switch" operation, yet for the sober statesman, the public silence in the period leading up to February 11 might seem more eloquent than anything lawyers might say afterward.

This final point seems the most powerful argument supporting a decision to credit Jefferson and Burr with Georgia's four electoral votes in 1801. But is it sufficiently powerful to outweigh all the arguments on the other side?

This was the key question facing Jefferson as he confronted his constitutional responsibilities as Senate President. How did he respond?

C. Jefferson's Decision

A glance at the official report of the vote count in the Annals of Congress is not the slightest bit revealing:

Mr. Speaker, attended by the House, then went into the Senate Chamber, and took seats therein, when both Houses being assembled, Mr. Rutledge and Mr. Nicholas, the tellers on the part of this House, together with Mr. Wells, the teller on the part of the Senate, took seats at a table provided for them, in the front of the President of the Senate.

The President of the Senate, in the presence of both Houses, proceeded to open the certificates of the Electors of the several States, beginning with the State of New Hampshire; and as the votes were read, the tellers on the part of each house, counted and took lists of the same, which, being compared, were delivered to the President of the Senate, and are as follows:

STATES.	Thomas Jefferson.	Aaron Burr.	John Adams.	Charles C. Pinckney.	John Jay.
New Hampshire- - -	-	-	6	6
Massachusetts- - -	-	-	16	16
Rhode Island- - -	-	-	4	3	1
Connecticut- - -	-	-	9	9
Vermont- - -	-	-	4	4
New York- - -	12	12
New Jersey- - -	-	-	7	7
Pennsylvania- - -	8	8	7	7
Delaware- - -	-	-	3	3
Maryland- - -	5	5	5	5
Virginia- - -	21	21
Kentucky- - -	4	4
North Carolina- - -	8	8	4	4
Tennessee- - -	3	3
South Carolina- - -	8	8
Georgia- - -	4	4
	73	73	65	64	1

*600 Recapitulation of the votes of the Electors.

APPENDIX - 15

Thomas Jefferson	-	-	-	-73
Aaron Burr-	-	-	-	-73
John Adams-	-	-	-	-65
Charles Cotesworth Pinckney			-	-64
John Jay-	-	-	-	- 1

The President of the Senate, in pursuance of the duty enjoined upon him, announced the state of the votes to both Houses, and declared that Thomas Jefferson, of Virginia, and Aaron Burr, of New York, having the greatest number, and a majority of the votes of all the Electors appointed, and, being *601 equal, it remained for the House of Representatives to determine the choice.

The two Houses then separated; and the House of Representatives, being returned to their Chamber, proceeded, in the manner prescribed by the Constitution, to the choice of a President of the United States . . . .<sup>124</sup>

There is no indication of a problem with the Georgia ballot. In contrast to John Adams in 1797, Jefferson does not sit down after the vote count to give others a chance to raise an objection.<sup>125</sup> He immediately pushes the proceedings to the next stage: a House runoff between Burr and himself for the presidency. So far as the Annals and all of the other official versions are concerned, there was no problem with the Georgia vote.

The newspapers tell a different story. Here is the account from the Philadelphia Aurora & General Advertiser: “The Tellers declared there was some informality in the votes of Georgia, but believing them to be the true votes, reported them as such.”<sup>126</sup> The Aurora was the leading Republican paper of the time, noteworthy for its partisanship in a partisan age.<sup>127</sup> Since its story cast a shadow (however slight) on Jefferson's claim to an Electoral College majority, it certainly would not have fabricated the incident out of whole cloth.

The Aurora's report was copied verbatim in Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and even Savannah, by newspapers of every political leaning.<sup>128</sup> At least one other paper--Boston's Mercury and New- *602 England Palladium--published a story that varied the language slightly: “The votes from Georgia, were rather informal--but accepted.”<sup>129</sup> To further enhance verisimilitude, all the newspapers put a precise time on their report: “half past 3 o'clock, p.m.”<sup>130</sup>

No newspaper explicitly described Jefferson's role in the affair. Those following the Aurora flashed a searchlight on the “tellers.” It was these gentlemen, two from the House and one from the Senate, who “declared [that] there was some informality . . . but believing them to be the true votes, reported them as such.”<sup>131</sup>

As a constitutional matter, however, the tellers lacked the authority to make a binding decision. Article II does not mention their existence, let alone vest them with any decisionmaking authority.<sup>132</sup> Moreover, the official proceedings did not give the last word to the tellers, but to Jefferson:

The President of the Senate, in pursuance of the duty enjoined upon him, announced the state of the votes to both Houses, and declared that Thomas Jefferson, of Virginia, and Aaron Burr, of New York, having the greatest number, and a majority of the votes of all the Electors appointed, and, being equal, it remained for the House of Representatives to determine the choice.<sup>133</sup> *603 We are now in a position to present a stripped-down version of our story:

Strong evidence demonstrates that the tellers told Jefferson (apparently loud enough for the news to get out to the public<sup>134</sup>) that there was a problem with the Georgia vote. Our inspection of the original documents tells us that they were right. Nevertheless, Jefferson asserted his authority, as President of the Senate, to proceed in the face of this report. He decisively resolved the issue by counting Georgia's vote as part of the final tally, even though he was an interested party in the affair. Despite the extraordinary character of this action, nobody rose to protest.<sup>135</sup>

APPENDIX - 16

If we limit ourselves to strictly contemporaneous sources, this is all we are entitled to say--more than enough, as we shall see, to raise a host of historiographic and constitutional issues. Before broadening the inquiry, we trace the remarkable fate of this incident in American history. After all, it is no small thing to learn that Thomas Jefferson counted his rivals out of the race in the House runoff for the presidency. This remarkable fact, however, has somehow eluded the devoted attentions of generations of Jefferson lovers and Jefferson haters.<sup>136</sup> And it would have eluded our attention *604 as well, except for the serendipitous discovery of a remarkable book by Matthew Livingston Davis.<sup>137</sup> Written in 1836, Davis's two-volume Memoirs of Aaron Burr contains a graphic description of the scene:

On the 11th of February the ballots were opened. During the performance of this ceremony a most extraordinary incident occurred. As it is known to but few now living, and never been publicly spoken of, it has been deemed proper to record it here, as a part of the history of that exciting contest.

The Aurora of the 16th of February, 1801, remarks, that "the tellers declared that there was some informality in the votes of Georgia; but, believing them to be true votes, reported them as such." No explanation of the nature of this informality was given; nor is it known that any has ever been given since.

....

... Mr. Jefferson was the presiding officer. On opening the package [of] endorsed Georgia votes, it was discovered to be totally irregular. The statement now about to be given is derived from an honourable gentleman, a member of Congress from the state of New-York during the administration of Mr. Jefferson, and yet living in this state. He says that Mr. Wells (a teller on the part of the Senate) informed him that the envelope was blank; *605 that the return of the votes was not authenticated by the signatures of the electors, or any of them, either on the outside or the inside of the envelope, or in any other manner; that it merely stated in the inside that the votes of Georgia were, for Thomas Jefferson four, and for Aaron Burr four, without the signature of any person whatsoever. Mr. Wells added, that he was very undecided as to the proper course to be pursued by the tellers. It was, however, suggested by one of them that the paper should be handed to the presiding officer, without any statement from the tellers except that the return was informal; that he consented to this arrangement under the firm conviction that Mr. Jefferson would announce the nature of the informality from the chair; but, to his utmost surprise, he (Mr. Jefferson) rapidly declared that the votes of Georgia were four for Thomas Jefferson and four for Aaron Burr, without noticing their informality, and in a hurried manner put them aside, and then broke the seals and handed to the tellers the package from the next state. Mr. Wells observed, that as soon as Mr. Jefferson looked at the paper purporting to contain a statement of the electoral vote of the state of Georgia, his countenance changed, but that the decision and promptitude with which he acted on that occasion convinced him of that which he (a federalist) and his party had always doubted, that is to say, Mr. Jefferson's decision of character, at least when his own interest was at hazard.<sup>138</sup> How much weight should be given to this astonishing account?

On its face, it is double hearsay. Davis heard the account from an anonymous New York Congressman who had heard it from Wells. There were three tellers at the proceedings: Federalist William Wells from the Senate, Federalist John Rutledge, and Republican John Nicholas from the House. Our search of the principal archives containing Davis's papers, and those of the tellers, has failed to uncover further corroboration.<sup>139</sup> Worse yet, Davis was a *606 long-time Burr loyalist and an active and life-long Jefferson-hater.<sup>140</sup> During his moderately successful career in New York politics, he certainly did not have a standout reputation for integrity.<sup>141</sup> When publishing a posthumous selection of Burr's papers, he aimed to put his hero in the best light, sometimes destroying or altering originals for this greater good.<sup>142</sup>

APPENDIX - 17

Nevertheless, Davis is sometimes careful in his treatment of sources. While he excludes Burr's love letters from his book, he is scrupulous enough to announce the omission in his Preface<sup>143</sup> --a *607 punctilio that other editors of the era would have considered unnecessary. A similar candor marks his report of the vote-counting episode of 1801. He does not puff up the truth value of his account, but clearly states that it is double hearsay, leaving it up to the reader to assess its ultimate validity.<sup>144</sup> What is more, Davis did not create the story out of whole cloth. The Aurora does say what he says it says<sup>145</sup> and, most crucially, our inspection of the original documents in the National Archives confirms the key fact that the Georgia ballot was legally defective, and blatantly so.

Davis goes beyond our contemporaneous sources in one important particular. While the newspapers focus on the tellers' public announcement of Georgia's deficiency, Davis highlights Jefferson's aggressive action to preempt further consideration of the matter. Should we believe Davis on this point?

Perhaps the final answer is tucked away in some forgotten archive. Until some lucky researcher hits pay-dirt, it certainly will elude us. Moreover, Davis's hearsay report does contain errors on other matters. While Federalist Senator William Wells was indeed the teller designated by the Senate, he did not discover that "the envelope was blank; that the return of the votes was not authenticated by the signatures of the electors, or any of them, either on the outside or the inside of the envelope, or in any other manner."<sup>146</sup> As Figure 2 demonstrates, the electors did sign their names, as required by statute, on the outside of the envelope.<sup>147</sup> Davis is also incorrect in asserting that the Georgia ballot "merely stated in the inside that the votes of Georgia were, for Thomas Jefferson four, and *608 for Aaron Burr four, without the signature of any person whatsoever."<sup>148</sup> As we have seen, the paper does contain signatures, but the signatories do not specify that they are casting an electoral ballot, much less certify their ballot by the standard method.

It is easy to make too much of such discrepancies, which often afflict hearsay reports as they proceed from one speaker to the next. As Senator Wells's report moved to an anonymous Congressman and then to Davis, some noise entered the signal, but not to the point of overwhelming the basic story: Georgia's ballot was obviously defective. And if this much of the message came through, one should hesitate before dismissing the further report of Jefferson's explicit ruling.

After all, the Constitution delegated to Jefferson, and only Jefferson, an affirmative role in the vote-counting ritual.<sup>149</sup> While it is debatable whether the text gave him the authority to make a decisive ruling, it is abundantly clear that the tellers had absolutely no authority to resolve the matter, and it was perfectly logical for them to relieve themselves of the decisional burden by handing the ballot to Jefferson. Once they had done so, no responsible presiding officer would have proceeded without examining the suspect ballot papers. Davis's report, while melodramatic, comports with the common sense of the situation.<sup>150</sup>

*609 What is more, we have uncovered another evidentiary source testifying to Jefferson's involvement. Apparently, his decisive action was memorable enough to survive as an oral tradition in Congress as late as 1876, when Senator Hannibal Hamlin recalled the event:

[T]here was no certificate accompanying the return that the Electors met and balloted. It had nothing on its face to show that the votes were given for anybody. Clearly it did not conform to the Constitution, but it was counted as shown by the record.

There was a tradition that the tellers handed it back to Mr. Jefferson, who returned it to them, and decided that it must be counted.<sup>151</sup>

In contrast to Davis, Hamlin reports the details surrounding Georgia's ballot with perfect accuracy. Despite the passage of seventy-five years, he says-- correctly--that the Georgia envelope contained a certificate of ascertainment, but that the ballot "had nothing on its face to show that the votes were given for anybody."<sup>152</sup> His invocation of "tradition" seems to go back to a source that is independent of Davis.

APPENDIX - 18

Of course, these two post-1801 sources contribute their confirming testimony thirty-five and seventy-five years after the fact. Nevertheless, *610 modern historians have entirely failed to take it into account, allowing the entire episode to fall out of sight and mind for more than a hundred years.<sup>153</sup>

Our story is constructed out of three categories of material. Official documents demonstrate the illegality of the Georgia ballot, and that counting them was necessary in pushing the electoral vote totals for Jefferson and Burr beyond the crucial threshold of seventy votes. They also reveal that Jefferson, “in pursuance of the duty enjoined upon him” as President of the Senate,<sup>154</sup> expressly found that he and Burr had gained “a majority of the votes of all the Electors appointed.”<sup>155</sup> Only on this basis did he send the matter to “the House of Representatives to determine the choice”<sup>156</sup> for President in a runoff limited to two, rather than five, candidates. Contemporaneous newspaper reports establish that Jefferson did not make his decision inadvertently, but that the tellers clearly and publicly announced the defect in the Georgia vote. Subsequent hearsay accounts confirm that Jefferson made a focused and self-conscious decision about the Georgia ballot, and resolved the question in a manner that dramatized the intrinsic weakness of the Founding design.

But enough detective work. The next Part considers the larger constitutional significance of the Georgia episode. We examine this question on two fronts: first putting Jefferson's decision in its concrete historical context, and then considering its enduring implications as a precedent for future Electoral College disputes.

IV. Jefferson in Context

So the Founders made some serious mistakes, as did Thomas Jefferson. Constitutional muckraking isn't much the fashion in these hagiographic times, but it is tough to ignore some embarrassing questions: Surely the Framers should have been clever enough to note the danger of appointing the fox to superintend the chicken coop? Surely Jefferson should have been more up-front about excluding *611 his Federalist rivals from the House runoff on the basis of a transparently defective ballot?

And yet, there is another side to our story. Placed in a greater historical context, Jefferson's decision may come to seem something more than a sorry tale of shabby self-dealing. Difficult though it may be to believe, Jefferson may have chosen the most statesmanlike way out of an impossible situation.

There are even extenuating circumstances surrounding the initial blunder by the Founders: It was stupid to place the President of the Senate in the chair, but the outcome in 1801 might well have been worse had the Founders made a different institutional choice in 1787. Or so we shall argue.

A. Substance Over Form

Begin by recalling Jefferson's response to the controversy swirling around the Vermont ballot in 1796. Adams was a mere three votes ahead, and Vermont's total of four represented his margin of victory. Nevertheless, Jefferson refused to quibble his way into the presidency. Remember his words to Madison: “Surely in so great a case, substance & not form should prevail. . . . I pray you to declare it on every occasion foreseen or not foreseen by me, in favor of the choice of the people substantially expressed, and to prevent the phaenomenon of a Pseudo-president at so early a day.”<sup>157</sup>

Jefferson's self-restraint in 1797 casts new light on his apparent self-dealing in 1801. Perhaps he was acting, in both cases, on the same principle: do not allow legal quibbling to produce “the phaenomenon of a Pseudo-president” not rooted in the “choice of the people.” In 1797, this principle meant supporting Adams; in 1801, himself.

But, of course, this recharacterization begs a substantial question: How could Jefferson be so sure that the defect in Georgia's ballot was merely formal, and not the result of fraudulent misrepresentation?

The question turns primarily on the weight properly accorded a single fact: During the final run-up to the vote count, Georgia's votes for Jefferson and Burr seemed a foregone conclusion. Newspapers *612 around the country were regularly placing them in the Republican column without controversy.<sup>158</sup> Nobody in Washington had made any contrary suggestions. Given the ferocity of partisan combat at the time and the closeness of the election, the deafening silence had a plain meaning: No smoke equals no fire. For a man of the world-- and Jefferson was nothing if not a man of the world--there was an obvious inference. If the Federalists weren't complaining, then there was nothing to complain about. Despite the formal deficiencies, Georgia's votes should count in the Republican column, with form giving way to substance.

APPENDIX - 19

Of course, Jefferson's judgment call may have been wrong, and one of us has traveled to Georgia on a factfinding mission to explore the matter further.<sup>159</sup> Our conclusion: The state's four electors indisputably voted for Jefferson and Burr, "to the great satisfaction of a large concourse of people assembled on the occasion."<sup>160</sup> This report by Governor Jackson is abundantly confirmed in local *613 newspapers.<sup>161</sup> There is no question about it: If Georgia's votes had not been counted in Washington, form would have indeed triumphed over substance.

We have been less successful in finding out why the Georgians failed, on this one occasion, to comply with constitutional rules consistently followed elsewhere. It is clear, however, that the Georgians had been particularly inattentive to federal requirements during the 1800 campaign. At an earlier stage, the legislature had passed a statute providing for the selection of electors as part of the general election scheduled in early October.<sup>162</sup> In taking this step, it violated a federal law requiring all states to pick their electors "within thirty-four days preceding the first Wednesday in December."<sup>163</sup> When the bill reached Governor Jackson's desk, he identified the legal problem and vetoed the plan.<sup>164</sup> The legislature then refused to hold an additional election within the thirty-four-day window, and chose to select the four electors itself.<sup>165</sup>

*614 Unfortunately, the Governor was not equally vigilant when the electors assembled before a "large concourse" to cast their ballots. Nobody intervened to correct Georgia's legal error, but there was no doubt about the underlying intent of the electors.<sup>166</sup> Jefferson was on solid ground in refusing to make a federal case out of frontier ineptitude.

B. Prudence and Publicity

But Jefferson did not merely place Georgia's votes into the Republican column; he did not publicly acknowledge the existence of any sort of problem. In contrast to John Adams four years earlier, he did not give his opponents a clear opportunity to raise the issue. Instead, he immediately proceeded to cut his Federalist opponents out of the runoff.<sup>167</sup> Although Jefferson's decision turned out to be substantively sound, surely it was procedurally defective?

Perhaps not. Though Jefferson did not speak, the tellers announced the existence of the problem before handing him the Georgia document, and loud enough for the newspapers to carry the story throughout the land.<sup>168</sup> Two of the three tellers were Federalists, and one of them--if Davis is to be believed--was shocked by Jefferson's rapid disposition of the affair.<sup>169</sup> He certainly was in a position to stop the vote count and raise a formal objection if he chose, but he did not do so.

There is every reason to suppose that the Georgia delegation was among the members of the House and Senate whose "presence" is constitutionally required at the vote-counting ceremony. Two of these Georgians--Benjamin Taliaferro of the House and *615 James Gunn of the Senate--had been elected as Federalists.<sup>170</sup> Surely one or another would have protested if he believed that the electors had actually voted a Federalist ticket. No intense partisanship was required to raise this point had it been well founded.

It is wrong, then, to accuse Jefferson of exploiting his position to keep his opponents in the dark. His official silence helped conceal his ruling from posterity, but the Georgia problem was not a secret to the assembled congressmen. Jefferson had simply shifted the burden of going forward to the Federalists in the audience. If they wished to create a "Pseudo-president" by raising some legal quibbles, it was up to them to make a clear and focused objection. Jefferson certainly was not going to do anything to make their task any easier.<sup>171</sup>

Jefferson's silence seems particularly sensible in the context of the confused legal situation prevailing in 1801. Just the year before, Congress tried to pass a statute creating an explicit procedure for dealing with electoral vote challenges,<sup>172</sup> but it failed to achieve consensus,<sup>173</sup> leaving everybody with the painfully ambiguous words of the Constitution as a guide. The text simply does not specify who is to have the last word. Though the President of the Senate *616 "opens" the votes, he is not expressly authorized to do more; though vote counting occurs in the “presence” of the two houses, they are not expressly granted any sort of decisionmaking authority, let alone decisive power.<sup>174</sup>

APPENDIX - 20

Jefferson's silence allowed everybody to resolve the matter without a heated legalistic battle. And there can be no question that the battle would have been heated. The Federalists had a clear majority in Congress.<sup>175</sup> This gave them an overwhelming interest in stretching the constitutional language to give the final word to the House and Senate; while Jefferson, outraged by the partisan theft of four crucial votes, would have had every incentive to insist upon an expansive reading of his own power to “open” the votes.

As the parties struggled in legal limbo, they would soon confront another danger. There was no obvious method by which to resolve their argument. They would be facing an infinite regress: On the one hand, the President of the Senate could claim the right to decide whether the President of the Senate possessed the contested power; and on the other, senators and representatives might insist that their “presence” at the vote count authorized them to override the President's ruling.

Worse yet, dispatching a factfinding mission to Georgia was not feasible. It was the dead of winter, and a snowstorm was swirling around the half-built Capitol.<sup>176</sup> Even during calmer weather, it would take a week or two to travel on terrible roads all the way to Augusta, the state capitol.<sup>177</sup> Only three weeks remained, however, before the inauguration of a new President. Time would run out *617 before a delegation could complete its factfinding mission and return with a report to the nation's capitol.<sup>178</sup>

With factfinding unfeasible, and the constitutional text obscure, the proceedings might have simply disintegrated amidst a cloud of bitter legalisms--the worst possible result. The nation was already in an uproar over the Electoral College tie that had thrown the presidency into the House. Confusion would have been compounded if the House runoff had been postponed indefinitely while partisans quarreled without any obvious means of closing the debate. The year 1801 marked the first time in American history that a political party was called upon to yield power to its rival. Even without a prolonged debate over Georgia, it took almost a week for the House to choose Jefferson over Burr on its thirty-sixth ballot.<sup>179</sup> During this short period, the country was teetering on the brink of violence. It is not at all clear whether the forces for violent resolution could have been kept in check much longer.<sup>180</sup>

There was a good deal of constitutional prudence in Jefferson's decision to keep silent. Any express ruling from the chair invited his opponents to initiate a counterproductive struggle between the President of the Senate and the two houses of Congress over their relative competence in the affair. In contrast, the notice from the tellers hit just the right note--placing the burden on the Federalists to raise an objection if there was any factual basis for supposing that Georgia's electors had cast their ballots for the Federalist candidates.

The wisdom of Jefferson's decision is confirmed by another pregnant silence over the next few weeks. As we have seen, leading newspapers all around the country reported the problem with *618 Georgia's ballot.<sup>181</sup> Yet we have found no newspaper that contained even a hint of an objection to Jefferson's resolution of the issue--and this at a time when so many other aspects of the Electoral College crisis generated ceaseless controversy. The ready acceptance of this decision testifies to Jefferson's wisdom in avoiding a grand institutional confrontation that had no easy constitutional answer.

C. Pinckney for President?

To make a final point, suppose that Jefferson had single-mindedly pursued a formalist course. Once alerted to the problem by the tellers, he publicly inspects the documents and proclaims that the plain meaning of the Constitution requires him to disqualify the Georgia votes.<sup>182</sup> This would have left Jefferson and Burr with only sixty-nine votes remaining in their respective columns--one shy of the seventy needed to exclude Adams, Pinckney, and Jay from the House runoff.<sup>183</sup> A shift to a five-man runoff would have been legally significant, but would it have changed the final outcome?

Winning the runoff proved difficult for Jefferson even when Burr was his only opponent. Thanks to another Founding blunder, the House making the choice was the lame-duck body elected in 1798--a year when the Federalists scored significant election victories.<sup>184</sup> Although the party had suffered a number of defections, it still controlled the House when its members voted in ordinary fashion.

APPENDIX - 21

But the runoff was decided under special constitutional rules giving each state delegation a single vote.<sup>185</sup> This placed the Federalists at a strategic disadvantage--too many of their congressmen were bunched in too few states. When some Federalists defected to Jefferson, *619 the party could deliver only six states to Burr, while their great antagonist won the vote of eight states. This would have generated an easy victory for Jefferson but for another technical glitch by the Founders. The Constitution required the winning candidate to gain an absolute majority of all state delegations without considering the possibility that some delegations might divide equally. Had the Framers focused on this issue, perhaps they would have awarded a half-vote to each of the contending candidates. The absence of specific instructions had a devastating impact in 1801, however, when two of the states--Vermont and Maryland--split evenly and failed to cast a ballot.<sup>186</sup> As a consequence, Jefferson fell one vote short of the nine required, and the initial ballot resulted in a deadlock: eight for Jefferson, six for Burr, and two not voting.<sup>187</sup>

The second ballot revealed a drop in Jefferson's support. Eleven Federalists initially voted for Jefferson in recognition of the obvious fact that he, rather than Burr, was the Republican candidate for President. When Jefferson fell short, five of these congressmen returned to their party, giving Burr a two or three vote majority.<sup>188</sup> Luckily for the Republicans, this shift in individual votes did not change the balance of power in any state delegation, and the impasse continued until the thirty-sixth ballot, with the Federalists desperately searching for a few additional votes. In the words of Congressman James Bayard, a key Federalist leader, "By deceiving one Man (a great blockhead) and tempting two (not incorruptible) [Burr] might have secured a majority of the States."<sup>189</sup>

*620 Jefferson did prevail in the end,<sup>190</sup> but the transformation of the runoff into a five-candidate affair would have made this final victory more difficult. Burr was not the Federalists' candidate of choice--they backed him only as a last-ditch effort to stop their archenemy Jefferson. With a five-man runoff, they could back real Federalists, and this might have made a difference. As we have seen, six Federalist congressmen were unwilling to vote for Burr, but they might have been happy to vote for Adams. At the very least, their blocking coalition would have had even more staying power.<sup>191</sup> In addition, after fifty or sixty ballots, the exhausted House might have broken the impasse by selecting a compromise candidate from among the three remaining contenders.

At this point, the Federalists' vice-presidential candidate--Charles Cotesworth Pinckney--would have likely emerged as an exceptionally attractive dark horse. Pinckney was the sort of "continental character" the Founders envisioned as President, with a long and distinguished record of public service. He had had a fine career as a military officer during the Revolution<sup>192</sup> and he served as a delegate to the Constitutional Convention.<sup>193</sup> He also had established *621 a record of moderation during the 1790s--supporting his party when it came to the war with France,<sup>194</sup> but opposing it when it came to the oppressive Alien and Sedition Acts.<sup>195</sup> He would have had the wholehearted backing of the formidable Alexander Hamilton.<sup>196</sup> Indeed, once Adams left the scene, Pinckney became the Federalist standard-bearer for the presidential elections of 1804 and 1808.<sup>197</sup> Last but not least, Pinckney was a South Carolinian, making him an especially attractive compromise candidate. The bulk of Jefferson's support was in the South.<sup>198</sup> Had it become clear that Jefferson could never win nine state delegations, his followers *622 might have bitterly consented to the selection of another southerner of great distinction.<sup>199</sup>

All of this is sheer speculation, but Pinckney's dark-horse candidacy gains a measure of reinforcement from one of our sources. Writing thirty-five years after the event, Davis concludes his hearsay account by putting words in the mouth of Senator William Wells, one of the three tellers: "Mr. Wells further stated, that if the votes of Georgia had not been thus counted, as it would have brought all the candidates into the House, Mr. Pinckney among the number, Mr. Jefferson could not have been elected President."<sup>200</sup> Although Davis has been proven correct on his basic point about Georgia, his story contains too many other minor errors to justify *623 great confidence in this particular.<sup>201</sup> Nevertheless, his decision to mention Pinckney should not be discounted entirely. Whatever his other failings, Davis was politically astute. He would not have included the reference if he thought the dark-horse candidacy was a complete nonstarter.

So there it is: With Jefferson and Adams battling to a hopeless impasse in the five-candidate runoff, the third President of the United States might well have been Charles Cotesworth Pinckney.

APPENDIX - 22

Consider the resulting uproar when it was discovered, weeks later, that Jefferson actually had won all four Georgia votes, and that his constitutional punctilios as President of the Senate had led to his own defeat by Federalist partisanship in the five-man runoff. The resulting crisis would have been far worse than those occurring in the aftermath of Hayes-Tilden in 1876 or Bush-Gore in 2000. Both of these crises bitterly disappointed the losers, but they could never prove, beyond a reasonable doubt, that they had actually won the underlying electoral votes in controversy. In contrast, Jeffersonians would have been in a position to establish, to a certainty, that their candidate had been denied the presidency on a mere technicality.

Perhaps, however, the operation of a final constitutional gimmick might have saved the situation. If the House of Representatives had selected Adams or Pinckney, it would have been up to the Senate to select the Vice-President under yet another set of rules. The Constitution generally gives this office to the defeated presidential candidate with the most votes, but the Senate is authorized to choose among candidates “who have equal votes” after the President has been selected--Jefferson or Burr in this case.<sup>202</sup> If the Senate had sought to console Jefferson with the number two spot, a national crisis might have been avoided if Pinckney (or Adams) had responded to the subsequent news from Georgia by voluntarily *624 allowing the Vice-President to become the fourth President of the United States.<sup>203</sup>

If Pinckney or Adams refused to resign the country might, however, have found itself on the brink of civil war. Even during the two-man runoff, Republican governors were organizing military force in the event the House Federalists managed to reject Jefferson. Jefferson himself was making some very dark threats during the impasse.<sup>204</sup> But in the end, the Federalists chose to abandon Burr rather than push the country over the edge. Would they have shown similar restraint had their favorites remained in the running? This was a crisis the infant republic did well to avoid.

D. Jefferson and the Rule of Law

When we first discovered Georgia's electoral ballot in the National Archives, we believed we had a first-rate scandal on our hands. The meaning of it all seemed painfully clear: Jefferson egregiously violated the express terms of the Constitution in the pursuit of overweening ambition. His presidency was born of constitutional original sin. In its own way, this was as bad as Sally Hemings.

The more we have pondered, however, the less we have been scandalized. To be sure, it is always a serious matter to ignore the rules laid down by the text, even when they are incompetently drafted. But in our constitutional tradition, the rule of rules is only one component of a more complex understanding of the rule of law.<sup>205</sup> Placed in full historical context, Jefferson's decision provokes renewed appreciation for the complexities of constitutional interpretation, with three distinct dimensions salient in the present case. The first --principle. As his actions in 1796 demonstrate, Jefferson was *625 serious about avoiding the “the phenomenon of a Pseudo-president.”<sup>206</sup> Invalidating the Georgia ballot on a legal technicality would have been at war with this principle. Jefferson had ample reason to believe that Georgia had in fact cast its votes for the Republican ticket. He was correct to use his power as Senate President to assure that the vote-counting ritual in Washington corresponded to the true electoral decisions made in the states. The second --prudence. Jefferson was confronting a genuinely difficult institutional question. A high-visibility ruling on the Georgia ballot would have provoked an intense struggle between the President of the Senate and the Houses of Congress over their respective constitutional prerogatives. So long as notice of the Georgia problem had been conveyed to the opposition, was it not wise for Jefferson to avoid such a counterproductive struggle if at all possible? The third --pragmatism. Strict compliance with the formal rules risked genuinely catastrophic consequences. Sending all five candidates into the House runoff could have pushed the country to the brink of civil war.

All in all, it was not the best moment for a rule of rules unvarnished by principle, prudence, or pragmatism to prevail. By recognizing this, Jefferson provides a glimpse into the meaning of constitutional statesmanship well worth bringing to light after all these years.

E. Dumb Luck

A dose of historicism adds nuance to our earlier critique of the Founding blunder--or better, blunders--in connection with the construction of the Electoral College. Recall that the most significant mistake involved the Founders' failure to anticipate the rise of national political parties. Others were more perceptive, most notably Edmund Burke, who had already begun to reflect on this great change in political practice.<sup>207</sup> Had the Founders been equally far-sighted, they would never have chosen their “two-vote” scheme for the Electoral College.

Putting this big mistake to one side, it was still silly to give the sitting Vice-President a central position in the vote count. Had the Convention considered the likelihood that the President of the Senate might run for the presidency, they would have changed the text in a minute. But they did not, so they did not do so, and this failure is nothing to brag about.

Nevertheless, the Georgia episode adds an ironic gloss to this Founding blunder. To see our point, suppose that the Framers had adverted to the problem and consider how they most probably would have solved it: If the sitting Vice-President was a poor choice to supervise the ballot count, who should be his replacement?

The obvious pick was the Chief Justice--the only constitutional official possessing the impartiality required of the vote-counting job. Indeed, the Founders made this choice when confronting a similar problem in designing the impeachment process. The impeachment trial took place before the Senate, and the President of the Senate would preside unless the Convention made a special exception for his removal from the chair. The Founders spotted the absurdity of allowing the sitting Vice-President to preside over a proceeding that could make him President. Article I, Section 3 explicitly provides that “When the President . . . is tried, the Chief Justice shall preside.”<sup>208</sup> They undoubtedly would have made an identical substitution had they focused on the identical problem raised by the vote-counting ritual.

This is the point at which our paradox emerges: Had the Founders possessed greater foresight, the result would have turned out much worse. Jefferson's replacement as chair on February 11 would have been John Marshall, whom the Federalists had placed in office only the week before.<sup>209</sup> While the Founding blunder placed Jefferson in an awkward position, our ultimate conclusion is that he made the best of a bad situation--elevating substance over form and preventing a legitimization crisis of the first magnitude. In contrast, Chief Justice Marshall would almost certainly have acted differently. A confirmed Jefferson-hater,<sup>210</sup> he would have found himself in the delightful position of making a technically correct ruling against Georgia that favored Federalist interests. Since the Constitution explicitly requires that all the electors “sign and certify” their state's return, and clearly designate the persons they were “vot[ing] for,” the formal case was open and shut: “Sorry Georgia, but you don't count (and, alas, given the execrable postal service southwards, your formal deficiency cannot be cured by March 4).” So the Chief Justice rules that the vote total stands at sixty-nine for Jefferson and Burr, one short of a majority, and the Federalists get their men into the runoff.

To be sure, Marshall was eminently capable of transcending formalism when it got in the way of his constitutional vision, but this vision certainly did not include Thomas Jefferson as President of the United States. Not even the most partisan Jeffersonian could reasonably complain if the Chief Justice, following the express commands of the Constitution, declared that there were only sixty-nine valid votes in favor of Jefferson and Burr. After all, had not the Founders put the Chief Justice in the chair precisely to assure that vote counting would proceed in strict compliance with the law?

No less important, the Jeffersonians would have been in no position to launch an effective challenge to Chief Justice Marshall's decision. The Federalists controlled both houses of Congress and would have voted down any Republican motion to overrule the chair.<sup>211</sup> If the Framers had done their homework, therefore, the vote count would have provided Marshall with a splendid opportunity to enter history, slightly prematurely, as a great defender of the written Constitution--but with a very different result.

Consider a few scenarios. Suppose that, despite Chief Justice Marshall's ruling, Jefferson emerged victorious from the five-man runoff. Marshall then would have been clearly marked by Jefferson as Public Enemy Number One. With the President threatening reprisals, would Marshall have had the courage to write Marbury v. Madison?<sup>212</sup> Would his fellow Justices have joined him in this premeditated assault on the Jeffersonian presidency? And even if they had pushed forward, would the Supreme Court have emerged unscathed? After all, Jefferson's campaign to sweep the Federalist Justices from the Court only failed when the Senate refused to impeach Justice Samuel Chase in a very close vote.<sup>213</sup> Jefferson would have prosecuted this campaign even more fiercely had his great judicial antagonist sought to block his way to the presidency during the vote count controversy.

Chief Justice Marshall's prospects would have been no less grim had his ruling led to the victory of his patron Adams,<sup>214</sup> or his friend Pinckney.<sup>215</sup> At best, the Chief Justice would have tied his judicial reputation to a ruling that would have been reviled by a large portion of the population; at worst, his decision of February 11 would *629 have helped precipitate a bloody conflict over presidential succession.<sup>216</sup>

APPENDIX - 24

As we contemplate these scenarios it is impossible to mistake the contribution of dumb luck to the affair--“dumb luck” in the technical sense. By “dumb” we mean that the Founders were mistaken in putting the Vice-President in a constitutional situation marked by an egregious conflict of interest; by “luck” we mean that we are all lucky that they were dumb, since if they had been smarter, things would have come out worse, possibly much worse.

V. Jefferson's Ghost

Perhaps our discovery has historical value, but does it have enduring legal significance?

At the very least, the story serves as a cautionary tale. The republic avoided a serious crisis in 1801, yet there is no reason to rely on dumb luck when lightning strikes again. We urgently require a constitutional amendment removing the sitting Vice-President from the chair. And yet, despite the 2000 fiasco, there has been no serious effort to focus on the time bomb that might explode the next time around if the existing vote-counting process operates without judicial interference.

