THE GRAND JURY CHARGES:

INTRODUCTION

At times relevant to this Indictment, unless otherwise indicated:

A. The Medicaid Program

1. The New York State Medicaid program ("Medicaid") was a federal and state health care program providing benefits to low-income individuals and families who met specified financial and other eligibility requirements. The Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services ("CMS"), a federal agency under the United States Department of Health and Human Services ("HHS"), was responsible for overseeing the Medicaid program in participating states, including New York. The New York State Department of Health administered the Medicaid program in New York State. Individuals who received benefits under Medicaid were referred to as "recipients."

2. Medicaid covered the costs of various medical services and products ranging from routine preventive medical care for children to institutional care for the elderly and disabled. Among the specific medical services covered by Medicaid were transportation services, which provided recipients with transportation to access medical care in non-emergency situations, including medical appointments.

3. To bill Medicaid, providers were required regularly to certify, among other things, that the claimed services were provided in accordance with applicable federal and state laws and regulations, that no material information had been omitted, and that the provider understood that payment of the claims were from federal, state, and local public funds.

4. Medical providers and service providers were authorized to submit claims to Medicaid only for services that were medically necessary, were provided by an authorized provider, and were not induced by payment of a kickback, among other requirements.

5. As with other Medicaid providers, to submit claims for reimbursement to Medicaid, transportation providers were required to apply for enrollment, to be enrolled, and to periodically revalidate that enrollment.

6. In New York State, recipients who sought transportation to and from medical appointments paid for by Medicaid could request such rides through Company-1, a third-party company that brokered transportation service for Medicaid in New York State. Recipients also had standing orders for recurring medical appointments, including methadone maintenance therapy.

7. Recipients could request that a particular transportation provider through Company-1, which would then connect with the requested provider to schedule the trip through an internet-based application. If no provider was requested by a recipient, Company-1 would assign a provider.

8. To obtain Medicaid reimbursement for a trip, the transportation provider would certify the details of the trip, including the name of the patient, the address the recipient was picked up from, the address of the medical appointment, and the address where the patient was returned. This information was submitted to the New York State Department of Health, which processed Medicaid reimbursements for New York State through servers located in Rensselaer County, New York. Where providers were reimbursed by Automated Clearing House (“ACH”) transfers, the claims process involved the sending of wire communications to Key Bank, N.A., which caused transmission of interstate wires through the processing of ACH transfers processed on servers located outside New York State.

9. Transportation providers were reimbursed for eligible trips by Medicaid with payment of a flat fee per recipient plus mileage. For group rides, transportation providers were reimbursed a flat fee for each recipient plus mileage for the recipient who was picked up and dropped off farthest. Transportation providers were not entitled to obtain mileage for each passenger in a group ride, and reimbursement was typically lower for group rides than for individual rides involving the same number of people in the group.

10. The Medicaid program was a “health care benefit program,” as defined by 18 U.S.C. § 24(b), and a “Federal health care program,” as defined by 42 U.S.C. § 1320a-7b(f).
