On June 15, 2018, the United States Department of Justice and Department of Agriculture committed to working together to promote elder justice in rural and tribal communities. Elder justice refers to a society’s response to elder abuse, which includes physical abuse, caregiver neglect, financial exploitation, psychological abuse, sexual abuse, and abandonment. Each year in America, at least 10% of older adults (age 60 or older) experience one or more forms of elder abuse. This is unacceptable.

Higher rates of social isolation in rural communities is a factor known to increase the risk of experiencing elder abuse. Likewise, rural older adults are more likely to own their own homes, thereby making them targets for financial exploitation. Meanwhile, large geographic distances compounded by staffing shortages impose significant demands and burdens on rural service providers who, despite less training overall, must wear multiple hats and handle a wide array of matters. This Summit, as well as the Rural Summit Resource Guide you are reading, are designed to support the thousands of elder justice professionals serving and working with older adults in rural and tribal communities around the country. The Summit will accomplish this by (1) gaining a better understanding of the challenges rural and tribal communities face in responding to elder abuse; (2) identifying promising practices, resources, and tools available to rural and tribal communities; and (3) exploring what more can be done to break down silos and foster greater collaboration at the tribal, local, state, and federal levels.

The Report to the President of the United States from the Task Force on Agriculture and Rural Prosperity provided a federal framework for addressing challenges facing rural America, and the 2017 and 2018 Connectivity Summits have shed light on the challenges of rural aging and combating social isolation. These foundational efforts provide the framework to promote elder justice in rural communities. We will continue to build upon the strengths inherent in rural communities that buffer against elder abuse and will find ways to undermine the factors thought to contribute to elder abuse. Reflecting on justice, social services, and public health frameworks, we chose to partner with the US Department of Health and Human Services’ Administration for Community Living, the American Bar Association’s Commission on Law & Aging, the National Adult Protective Services Association, the National Association of Area Agencies on Aging to identify:

- evidence-based and promising practices to respond to elder abuse;
- existing federal and state resources and gaps in knowledge, resources, and responses.

This Rural and Tribal Elder Justice Summit will kick off this initiative. The goal of the Summit and subsequent activities is to enhance the ability of elder justice professionals to more robustly respond to the unique needs of older adults residing in rural and tribal communities by sharing best practices and proposing innovative strategies to fill the identified gaps in service needs, all with the goal of enhancing the lives of older Americans everywhere.

The vast majority of America consists of rural lands, where 25% of older adults reside. Rural older residents enjoy the benefits associated with a rural lifestyle. Many rural communities are grounded in the institutions of faith and family, bound by tradition and strong commitments to the community. They turn to family and friends for comfort and support. Older rural residents are both fiercely independent and interdependent, with community members concerned for the welfare of one another. All of these factors are believed to reduce the likelihood of elder abuse. At the same time, rural and tribal communities face challenges that put them at greater risk of elder abuse while impeding the ability of elder justice professionals to respond to and support victims of elder abuse.

The Department of Justice has taken sweeping action to stop crimes of elder fraud and abuse, and we are working to do more. Crimes against older adults in rural communities pose a special challenge in which law enforcement agencies can be spread thin and where there often are fewer support services available. In partnership with the US Department of Agriculture, the Summit reflects the Department’s commitment to ensuring that our state and local partners have the most current resources and robust support to combat elder fraud and abuse in their communities. Fraud and abuse against older adults is something that no civilized society should tolerate. President Trump has prioritized increasing the quality of life in rural America, including in tribal communities, and that encompasses building strong community support for both older adults and those who respond to their needs.

Tribal Elder Justice Statement

American Indian and Alaskan Native elders are the bedrock on which the welfare of tribal communities are built. Tribal elders protect and preserve tribal cultural practices and traditions so that they may be passed on to future generations. Tribal elders also feature a high percentage of American military veterans as Native Americans have served in the United States military at a higher per capita rate than any other ethnic group. Elder abuse, including abuse of elder veterans, continues to be a challenge in Indian country. At the core of any work being done in this area is the fact that tribal elders must be involved in the development and implementation of any initiatives aimed at combating elder abuse in Indian country to ensure success. To do this, we must gather better data to more fully understand the scope of elder abuse in Indian country.

The Department of Justice is fully committed to upholding public safety in Indian country. Spearheading efforts in Indian country for the Department is the Native American Issues Subcommittee (NAIS). The NAIS is the oldest subcommittee of the Attorney General’s Advisory Committee (AGAC) and is vital to the department’s mission in Indian Country to build and sustain safe and secure communities for future generations, including the protection of Tribal elders. The AGAC was created in 1973 to serve as the voice of the U.S. Attorneys and to advise the Attorney General on policy, management, and operational issues impacting the offices of the U.S. Attorneys. The NAIS is currently made up of 50 U.S. Attorneys from across the United States whose Districts contain Indian Country or one or more federally recognized tribes. The NAIS focuses exclusively on Indian Country issues, including both criminal and civil matters, and is responsible for making policy recommendations to the Attorney General of the United States regarding public safety and legal issues that impact tribal communities. The NAIS works closely with the Executive Office for United State Attorneys (EOUSA), Office of Tribal Justice, and other relevant Justice Department or Interior Department components to fulfill its mission in Indian country.

The United States Attorneys’ Offices (USAOs) are on the forefront of the fight to combat elder abuse in tribal communities. This work is most often coordinated by the Tribal Liaison for the district. The Tribal Liaison Program remains one of the most important components of the Department’s efforts in Indian country. The EOUSA established the program in 1995 and it was codified in the Tribal Law and Order Act (TLOA) in 2010. TLOA requires that the United States Attorney for each district with Indian country appoint at least one Assistant United States Attorney to serve as a Tribal Liaison for that district. Tribal Liaisons serve as the driving force for the Department in working with the Tribes in their Districts, learning about and respecting Tribal cultural norms, and navigating the often-complex jurisdictional and legal issues involved in working in Indian country. They foster and facilitate relationships between Federal and Tribal partners that are vital to reducing violent crime in Tribal communities. As part of their duties, Tribal Liaisons assist in developing Tribal multi-disciplinary teams to combat child abuse, work with sexual assault response teams, conduct community outreach in Tribal communities, and coordinate the prosecution of Federal crimes that occur in Indian country.

USAOs are partnering with Tribal leaders and elders to better understand the needs of tribal communities in appropriately addressing elder abuse. Through collaborative efforts between the Justice Department and Tribes, risk factors for and acts of elder abuse are being identified. Many tribes are developing tribal codes - often with the assistance of or in coordination with USAOs - that criminalize acts of abuse against tribal elders. In addition, USAOs and the Department are working to provide training to tribal law enforcement, prosecutors, and community members on signs of elder abuse and how to combat it. USAOs are also responsible for prosecuting felony level violations against tribal elders and holding those accountable who commit these offenses. Together with the Tribes, the Department is working to combat elder abuse in Indian country so that communities can continue to honor and respect their elders and benefit from their wisdom.

Elder Abuse: Know the Facts

Population of Older Adults
Adults age 65 or older comprise 14.9% of the total population in the USA.

Projections anticipate the percentage of the population age 65 and older will continue to grow in the coming decades.

Definition
Elder abuse is “An intentional act or failure to act by a caregiver or another person in a relationship involving an expectation of trust that causes or creates a risk of harm to an older adult”. It is a term under which five types of abuse are reflected:
- Caregiver Neglect
- Financial Fraud & Exploitation
- Psychological Abuse
- Physical Abuse
- Sexual Abuse

Prevalence of Elder Abuse
At least 10% of adults age 65 and older will experience some form of elder abuse in a given year, with some older adults simultaneously experiencing more than one type of abuse.

The Majority of Older Adults Live in the Community
As over 90% of older adults reside in the community (as opposed to various forms of congregate living situations), most elder abuse is occurring among older adults living in the community.

The Consequences of Elder Abuse
The trauma of elder abuse may result in health issues such as a deterioration in health, hospitalization and increased mortality, clinical issues such as depression and suicide, social issues such as disrupted relationships, and financial loss, all leading to diminished independence and quality of life.

Rural Aging and Elder Abuse

Most of America is Rural
In 2010, 97% of the nation’s land was non-urban.

Demographic Trends
In 920 rural counties in America (orange sections), older adults comprise 20% or more of the county’s population.

Comparison Over Time of the Older Adult Population in Rural vs. Urban Areas
As of July 2017, 19 percent of the rural population was 65 years or older, compared with 15 percent in urban areas.

Baby Boomers are Migrating to Rural Communities
In the coming decade, there are projections that the number of rural older adults will continue to increase as baby boomers migrate from the big city to rural communities and small towns across America.

Outmigration of Young People
There is a higher percentage of older adults in rural areas in part because of the outmigration of young people from rural to urban areas.

Dementia Rate Higher Among Rural Older Adults
Rural older adults are more likely to exhibit some of the risk factors associated with elder abuse, most prominently dementia.

Elder Abuse is Reported Less in Rural Communities
According to one report from New York state, the rate of reporting is lower in rural compared to urban communities.

Tribal Aging and Elder Abuse

According to the U.S. Census Bureau’s 2010 data roughly 5.2 million indigenous people live in the U.S. The population is estimated to more than double by 2060.

A snapshot of indigenous people from the 2010 Census reveals:

- 432,343 people are age 65 and older. 22% live on reservations or on other trust lands, with reservations ranging in size from 1.32 acres to 16 million acres.
- 29.2% on reservations live in poverty, the highest rate of any racial or ethnic group in the U.S.

In 2005, Baker-Demaray conducted a survey with 470 participants age 55 and over with 54% residing on a reservation or in a Native village and 23% reported living in urban areas. Their greatest concerns were neglect, emotional abuse, and financial exploitation.

Using the term “disrespect” may help native elders to self-identify elder abuse.

Tribal communities recognize Spiritual Abuse as a type of elder abuse, and define it as: Causing harm to an elder’s spiritual well-being. This may include not taking elders to spiritual ceremonies or taking elders’ ceremonial items.
It is widely recognized that access to broadband is not simply a luxury, but important to many aspects of living in today’s society.

How Federal Support for Rural Communities Impacts Elder Abuse

The lack of or limited infrastructure may contribute to the incidence of elder abuse and impede accessing or receiving elder abuse services. Learn how available federal infrastructure resources to build strong and resilient rural communities can reduce the risk of elder abuse and enhance the response of service providers.
It is widely recognized that access to broadband is not simply a luxury, but important to many aspects of living in today’s society. Lack of or limited broadband access in rural communities negatively impacts older adults who are unable to use mobile devices to call for emergency assistance, locate available resources online, or interact with others to reduce social isolation, all actions that could help guard against elder abuse. Learn how your community can increase rural and tribal communities’ access to broadband and potentially reduce the risk of elder abuse.

Funds the construction, maintenance, improvement, and expansion of telephone service and broadband in extremely rural areas with a population of 5,000 or less.

Broadband Grant-Loan Pilot Program

This program encourages more high-speed broadband to be installed in high-need areas by awarding grants ($600 million), in combination with current USDA loan funding ($425m), to high-need rural and tribal areas, for a total investment of over $1b. Public comment period closed September 10, 2018.

Broadband Interagency Working Group (BIWG)

More than 25 federal agencies participate in the BIWG to improve coordination across programs, reduce regulatory barriers to broadband deployment, promote awareness of the importance of federal support for broadband investment and digital inclusion programs, and collect and share information with communities about available federal resources for broadband deployment and digital inclusion efforts.
A well-integrated system of transportation is critical for enabling older adults to maintain independence. In contrast, the absence of or limited public transportation fosters reliance on others and increased dependency, factors associated with elder abuse. In addition, the large geographic distance between home and services without adequate transportation options present an unsurmountable barrier to older adults accessing much needed services. Learn how your community can increase access to transportation services for rural older adults and possibly reduce the risk of elder abuse.

The National Rural Transit Assistance Program (RTAP)
RTAP is a technical assistance center funded by Formula Grants for Rural Areas, the Federal Transit Administration, US Department of Transportation.

Rural Transportation Toolkit: Older Adults and People with Disabilities
The Rural Transportation toolkit provides several resources to address the rural transportation needs of older adults.

The National Aging and Disability Transportation Center (NADTC)
Co-directed with the National Association for Area Agencies on Aging (n4a), NADTC is working to increase access to transportation for older adults, people with disabilities and caregivers. NADTC is funded by the Enhanced Mobility of Seniors and Individuals with Disabilities, Federal Transit Administration, US Department of Transportation.

Tribal Transit Program
Section 5311(j) of the FAST Act, Public Law 114-94 (December 4, 2015), authorizes the Public Transportation on Indian Reservations Program (Tribal Transit Program (TTP)) for Fiscal Years (FY) 2016-2020. The TTP continues to be a set-aside from the Formula Grants for Rural Areas program but now consists of a $30 million formula program and a $5 million competitive grant program subject to the availability of appropriations.
Health and nutrition are foundational to successful aging by maintaining independence. However, rural older adults suffer higher rates of poor health, a factor believed to contribute to elder abuse. In addition, there are generally fewer services for rural older adults, including health care services. This both reduces opportunities for health care providers to identify elder abuse and to respond once elder abuse has been identified. Learn about programs to assist rural older adults to maintain their health and nutritional needs and possibly reduce the risk of elder abuse.

Rural older adults are more likely to own their home. However, home ownership may also make them targets for financial exploitation, with some older adults losing their home and moving into subsidized senior housing. For those who remain in their home, aging in place is preferable and contributes to their independence, but may require costly home modifications. Learn about housing options and home modification programs to meet the housing needs of rural older adults and possibly reduce the risk of elder abuse.

The Impact of Social Isolation on Elder Abuse

Over the last two decades, social determinants of health (SDOH) have been identified as key factors affecting population health outcomes. SDOH are broadly defined as conditions in the environments in which people are born, live, work and play that affect health, functioning, quality of life outcomes and risks. In 2003, the World Health Organization’s list of social determinants included: social gradient, early life experiences, social exclusion, work, unemployment, social support, addiction, food, stress, transportation and the environment/community.

Social isolation is a condition defined by a lack of social engagement or meaningful relationships, and it can be exacerbated by various physical and societal factors. In and of itself, social isolation is recognized as a significant risk to health and wellbeing. It can raise the risk of premature death and is as harmful as smoking 15 cigarettes a day.

Loneliness is closely related to social isolation, with an important distinction: social isolation is objectively measurable while loneliness is subjectively based on an individual’s perception of being alone or having less connection than desired. Both, however, are deemed harmful to health. Interventions based on developing/enhancing social relationships represent an opportunity to enhance the quality of life and health.

Social science researchers believe isolation is growing and that the problem affects all age groups. Older adults become more vulnerable to the risk of social isolation, which rises as people age and their social networks shrink as a result of life changes, such as retirement; loss of a spouse or partner; loss of mobility due to health issues; or serving as a caregiver for a family member who needs assistance with activities of daily living (ADLs). The results of social isolation on older adults cost an estimated $6.7 billion in additional Medicare spending annually.

Living (and growing older) in a rural area is considered a primary risk factor for social isolation. One in five older people make their home in rural America, where health outcomes often lag behind those of the rest of the country. Individuals living in rural areas have a higher prevalence of chronic disease, higher disability rate, lower prevalence of healthy behaviors and a gap in life expectancy.

The health-related challenges for individuals living in rural areas are complex. Incomes are generally lower and there are fewer resources to fund infrastructure and public and private sector services. Young people who could provide social interaction and other forms of support for aging adults frequently move to more densely populated areas where there are more job opportunities. Forty percent of rural counties have no public transportation, making it difficult for older adults who can no longer drive or do not have a vehicle.

Social isolation, considered in the context of the inherent challenges to health of living in rural areas, has the potential to exacerbate the impact of other social determinants and raise the risk of depression, dementia and/or cognitive decline; addiction; financial or physical abuse and neglect.

Recognizing the need to reverse these trends, communities across the country are experimenting with small scale interventions that provide older adults with the opportunity to stay engaged and connected. For example, peer transportation solutions that facilitate older adults’ access to social activities are being developed in pockets of the country. Increasing access to and comfort with technology to maintain social relationships are being provided in select communities. A growing number of communities are adopting age-friendly principles that enable older adults to more easily access services by periodically placing resting benches along routes to these services that thereby enable older adults to walk to where they need to go. These are but a few examples of the ways in which communities are striving to facilitate older adults forming and maintaining social relationships. Through sharing ideas like these, all communities are encouraged to adopt practices that promote social connectedness so critical to a meaningful quality of life for older adults.

President Donald J. Trump issued Executive Order 13790 that established an Interagency Task Force on Agriculture and Rural Prosperity. The purpose and function of this Task Force have been to identify legislative, regulatory, and policy changes to promote agriculture, economic development, job growth, infrastructure improvements, technological innovation, energy security, and quality of life in rural America. Our elderly are the heart of rural America and to ensure rural prosperity we must take care of our elderly.

USDA Interagency Task Force on Rural Prosperity

The task force identified over 100 recommendations for the federal government to consider in order to help improve life in rural America. We are called to action to improve the quality of life for rural America, including those that are aging by improving health services, rural housing, community resiliency and infrastructure.

USDA Adult Development & Aging Programs on Rural Prosperity

The National Institute for Food and Agriculture (NIFA) Division of Family and Consumer Science (DFCS), in partnership with the land-grant universities, is committed to addressing priority issues related to older adults through research, education, and Extension. Together, through this unique partnership, resources are made available to meet the educational and decision-making needs of older adults, their families, and those who care for them.

USDA Rural Development

USDA is committed to helping improve the economy and quality of life in rural America. Through our programs, we help rural Americans in many ways. We have various programs that support economic development and essential services. We have offices in every state.

Cooperative Extension System (CES)

NIFA supports both universities and local offices of the CES to provide research-based information to its range of audiences, including farmers and residents of rural communities. Older adults can participate in a variety of non-formal education and learning activities that promote healthy aging and quality of life.
Many federal departments and agencies have projects whose work intersects with elder justice and rural aging. A directory of departments are listed below with a selection of highlighted resources of use to elder justice professionals. Additional outreach materials specifically crafted for a public audience can be found in the outreach chapter of this guide.

US DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES

Administration for Community Living Services for Native Americans

Administration for Community Living (ACL) funds programs that support American Indians, Alaska Natives and Native Americans in the areas of nutrition, supportive services for older adults, and caregiver services. The nutrition and supportive services grants include congregate and home-delivered meals, information and referral, transportation, personal care, chores, health promotion and disease prevention, and other supportive services. The caregiver services grants include assisting families in caring for older relatives with chronic illness or disability, and grandparents caring for grandchildren. There are other necessary services provided by ACL grants so the people we serve have meaningful support to help them live independently in their communities.

Administration for Native Americans

The Administration for Native Americans (ANA) is a division of the Administration for Children and Families. The mission of ANA is to promote economic and social self-sufficiency for American Indians, Alaska Natives, Native Hawaiians, and other Native Pacific Islanders. ANA provides community-based project funding to improve the lives of native children and families thereby reducing long-term dependency on public assistance. Funding is provided to eligible tribes and nonprofit Native American organizations through three competitive discretionary grant programs.

US DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Office of Tribal Justice

The Office of Tribal Justice (OTJ) was initially formed in 1995 in response to requests from Tribal leaders for a dedicated point of contact for Indian country-specific legal and policy matters. The office was made permanent on July 29, 2010, with the passage of the Tribal Law and Order Act (TLOA). 25 U.S.C. § 3665a(2010). The duties of the Office are described in Section 106 of the Act:

(c) DUTIES.—The Office of Tribal Justice shall—
(1) serve as the program and legal policy advisor to the Attorney General with respect to the treaty and trust relationship between the United States and Indian tribes;
(2) serve as the point of contact for federally recognized tribal governments and tribal organizations with respect to questions and comments regarding policies and programs of the Department and issues relating to public safety and justice in Indian country; and
(3) coordinate with other bureaus, agencies, offices, and divisions within the Department of Justice to ensure that each component has an accountable process to ensure meaningful and timely consultation with tribal leaders in the development of regulatory policies and other actions that affect-
(A) the trust responsibility of the United States to Indian tribes;
(B) any tribal treaty provision;
(C) the status of Indian tribes as sovereign governments; or
(D) any other tribal interest.

Takes a high-level look at the various types of justice used in tribal areas. Tribal justice systems can vary from traditional Western-style systems to tribal courts and traditional courts, including family and community forums.

NATIONAL RESOURCES

National Indigenous Elder Justice Initiative

Most cases of elder abuse are undetected, under reported, and unresolved resulting in injury, financial decimation, and even death. The National Indigenous Elder Justice Initiative (NIEJI) was created to address the lack of culturally appropriate information and community education materials on elder abuse, neglect, and exploitation in Indian Country.

StrongHearts

StrongHearts is a culturally-appropriate, anonymous, confidential service dedicated to serving Native American survivors of domestic violence and concerned family members and friends. By dialing 1-844-7NATIVE (1-844-762-8483) Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. CST, callers can connect at no cost one-on-one with knowledgeable StrongHearts advocates who can provide lifesaving tools and immediate support to enable survivors to find safety and live lives free of abuse.

Tribal Resource Tool

The Office for Victims of Crime of the U.S. Department of Justice has funded the National Center for Victims of Crime, National Congress of American Indians, and Tribal Law and Policy Institute to create a web-based resource mapping tool to:

- Provide a listing of all services available for AI/AN survivors of crime and abuse
- Help identify gaps in services so those can be addressed.

The tool includes services for:

- all forms of victimization
- all locations (on or off reservations, in areas that are remote, rural, urban, or suburban)
- all needs of victims, including justice, safety, healing, and support.

Help continue to engage others in this important project by sharing information widely and asking the appropriate providers to fill out the provider inclusion survey.

PROFESSIONAL EDUCATION

American Indian/Alaska Native Populations (Online Training)

The American Indian/Alaska Native Populations module covers key issues impacting American Indian and Alaska Native victims of crime. It also describes barriers American Indian and Alaska Native victims face when seeking help after being the victims of crime and provides strategies for serving American Indian and Alaska Native victims.

National Indigenous Elder Justice Initiative Online Interactive Educational Module

The National Indigenous Elder Justice Initiative (NIEJI) released a new Healthcare Module as part of their Online Interactive Elder Justice Curriculum. This new Healthcare Module was developed to train healthcare providers working... with Native elderly on factors for recognizing, identifying, and reporting suspected elder abuse and neglect. Professionals who may find this module relevant include: physicians, nurses, certified nursing assistants (CNA), community health representatives (CHR), home health aides, psychologists, behavioral health consultants, physical therapists, occupational therapists, dieticians, emergency medical technicians, and other medical personnel.

Partners in Justice: BIA Victim Specialists
This video, prepared by the U.S. Department of Justice’s Office for Victims of Crime (OVC) and the U.S. Department of the Interior’s Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA), presents an overview of the BIA Victim Specialist Program and identifies some of the program’s successes and challenges providing services to victims of crime in Indian Country. BIA’s National Victim Assistance Coordinator and BIA Victim Specialists who are based in Indian Country provide viewers with an explanation of the services available to native victims of crime through the program, and also discuss how BIA’s Victim Specialist Program complements tribally operated victim services programs.

Tribal Elder Protection Team Toolkit: Developing Your Team
This webinar introduces the Tribal Elder Protection Team Toolkit, a resource designed to assist tribal communities in developing tribal elder protection teams (EPT). The toolkit aims to help identify vested partners or potential EPT members to help respond to elder abuse in Indian Country. The speakers cover each section of the EPT Toolkit, how to develop a tribal EPT and Tribal Elder Protection Codes, selecting team members, and additional tips on culturally sensitive and appropriate practices commonly accepted in tribal communities.

Social Services Best Practices
The aim of this National Indigenous Elder Justice Initiative webinar is to understand the best practices in the social services disciplines regarding elder abuse and neglect in Indian Country.

Voice Your Experience

The Federal Trade Commission (FTC) wants to hear about your experience. According to the Consumer Sentinel Network Data Book 2017, the FTC takes in complaints from consumers about problems they experience in the marketplace. The complaints are stored in the Consumer Sentinel Network (Sentinel), a secure online database available only to law enforcement.

Why Submitting Complaints is Important

FTC and its law enforcement partners use Sentinel to identify problematic business practices, patterns and trends, and potential targets for investigation. Sentinel only works, however, if YOU share your experience and let us know what happened to you. Please submit your experience through the Complaint Assistant and help make a difference in the lives of your fellow consumers.

How We Handle Your Information

The FTC cannot resolve individual complaints, but we can provide information about what next steps to take.

How much information you give us is up to you. We share your report with local, state, federal, and foreign law enforcement partners. Your report might be used to investigate cases or in a legal proceeding. If we need to know more about your report, it helps us to have your contact information. Please read our Privacy Policy to learn how we protect your personal information, and when we share it outside the FTC.

Median Individual Monetary Loss Reported by Age

Among consumers reporting a financial loss, the largest individual median losses were reported by people ages 60 and older. Consumers ages 80 and older reported the largest median loss, a loss which was more than twice the median amount as consumers under age 60.

Median Loss by Contact Method

Telephone scams are a tremendous problem for all consumers. However, consumers ages 60 and older who indicated that they were contacted by telephone reported approximately twice the median loss compared to their younger counterparts.

Median Loss Reports by Age and Method of Contact
Tips On Combating Fraud and Protecting Yourself

1 | Spot fraud – by strangers and people close to you
Scams can happen to anyone, including people of all ages and people with high and low levels of income and assets. Understanding the scams that often target older adults is helpful so you can spot them and stop them. Watch for people who seem to be someone you trust – like a government official, a charity, or a company you do business with – who then ask you to pay by gift card or wiring money. No matter the circumstances, that’s always a scam. Financial abuse can also occur at the hands of family members: depleting a joint checking account, promising care in exchange for money or property – but not delivering, outright theft, neglect of basic needs, and physical abuse, threats or intimidation. If you spot any of these things happening to an older person you know, contact Adult Protective Services.

2 | Protect your information
A few simple steps can help protect your personal information. Shred documents before you throw them out, give your Social Security number only when you must, and use strong passwords online. Check your bank and credit card statements to make sure you recognize the activity. Regularly monitor your credit at AnnualCreditReport.com. And never give out personal information over the phone to someone who contacts you.

3 | Reduce unwanted calls and protect your mail
Signing up for the Do Not Call Registry can help reduce unwanted calls – but if you’re still getting calls, consider a call-blocking service or a call-blocking device that you can buy. And remember that caller ID can be faked, so the number you see might not be real. Be careful with your mail. Don’t let incoming mail sit in your mailbox for a long time. When you send out sensitive mail, drop it off at a secure collection box or at the post office. To get more tips on protecting yourself from fraud, visit consumer.ftc.gov.

4 | Consider how you pay – and get paid
Credit cards have significant fraud protection built in, but some payment methods don’t. Never pay a caller by wiring money or providing the codes from gift cards and reloadable cards such as MoneyPak or Reloadit. Honest companies won’t require you to use these payment methods. If you paid money to a scammer, contact the payment provider (such as the bank, credit card company, gift card company, or money transfer company) right away to report the fraud and ask for your money back.

Use direct deposit for benefits checks to make sure that checks go right into your accounts and are protected.

5 | Spot Medicare scams
Someone might offer you a service or a product and say it will be paid for by Medicare, but do your research about the company and your Medicare coverage first. Also check your Medicare statement, because scammers sometimes bill Medicare for things you never got – or even agreed to. You can help fight scams by protecting your Medicare number as you do your credit card, banking, and Social Security numbers. Never let anyone else use it. Never give your Medicare number or other personal information over the phone unless you initiated the call. And report anything suspicious to 1-800-MEDICARE.

6 | Get donation requests in writing
Someone calls – or shows up at your door – and asks you to donate to a charity. Always say, “I never give to anyone who calls or visits me unannounced. Send me something in writing.” For donation requests you get in the mail, do your research on the company to make sure your donation counts. Rule out anyone who asks you to pay with cash, with a gift card, or by wiring money. Learn more about spotting charity scams at ftc.gov/charity.

7 | Take your time, do your research
Before you part with your money, stop and check it out. Maybe a caller says he’s your grandchild in an emergency. Maybe someone came to your door selling home repair or something big. Before you pay anyone, talk to someone you trust first. If it’s the so-called family emergency, talk with someone in the family right away. For a purchase, search online for name of the company and the word “complaint” or “scam.” If they tell you to pay in cash, by wiring money, or with a gift card, that’s always a scam. And don’t be rushed into making a decision. Sign up for free alerts to keep up with the latest scams: ftc.gov/scams.

8 | Pass it on — stay involved!
You may already know the tips on this page, but chances are you know someone who can use a friendly reminder. Share these tips in your community – and visit ftc.gov/PassItOn for more. Staying active and involved is important because isolation can put people at greater risk for elder abuse. To find services nearby, visit the Eldercare Locator or contact your local senior center.
Every Power of Attorney should be carefully tailored to the needs of the individual creating the power (called the principal). Because of the potential for misuse of powers by the person named as one’s agent, the selection of a trusted person to act as your agent is by far your most important decision. Regardless of whom you pick, consider including the following safeguards:

1. Require an inventory of assets when your agent begins managing your affairs.

   This provides a baseline for future comparison. Require that it be shared with a trusted 3rd person you name.

2. Require some form of annual accounting to a trusted 3rd person.

   Powers of attorney normally have no monitoring or oversight after the principal loses capacity. Having a second set of eyes on the money provides a higher level of transparency. Accountings should at least provide an inventory of assets and documentation of the dates, nature, and amount of all financial transactions.

3. Appoint co-agents or require a second signature for large transactions.

   Two agents can help spread the burden of responsibility and creates some checks and balances, but the agents must be able to work together. Alternatively, approval by a trusted 3rd person for large transactions provides one extra step to ensure the appropriateness of large transactions, such as the sale of a home, or sale of a large investment.

4. Clearly define the power of the agent to make gifts.

   The safest option is to prohibit gifts, but many people want to continue their pattern of giving even after they lose capacity. Limiting gifting requires identifying the permitted recipients or class of recipients and limits on the amounts and frequency.

5. Limit any changes to beneficiary designations.

   This may include rights of survivorship under bank accounts, or changes in beneficiary designations under wills, trusts, life insurance policies, annuities, investment portfolios, or other instruments.

Antoinette T. Bacon
Antoinette T. Bacon is the National Elder Justice Coordinator and an Associate Deputy Attorney General for the United States Department of Justice. Antoinette is a highly decorated attorney from Cleveland, Ohio, having earned two of the highest awards in the Department of Justice, along with special awards from the IRS, U.S. Postal Service, and U.S. Attorney’s Office for her prosecutions of fraud, waste, abuse, and corruption. She is nationally recognized as one of the country’s premier public corruption attorneys for having successfully prosecuted nearly 100 targets and having led one of the largest corruption cases in this country’s history. Dubbed the Cuyahoga County Corruption Case, this 9-year investigation involved the prosecution of 60+ public officials and business executives, including a County Commissioner, a County Auditor, a Cleveland City Council member, two sitting judges, nine attorneys (five former prosecutors), two union leaders, and two senior hospital executives. Once the two most powerful elected officials in the County, the Commissioner and Auditor ran a political machine, which the media described as rivaling Tammany Hall. This prosecution resulted in sentences that served as nationwide benchmarks and inspired an overhaul in Cuyahoga County government. Prior to serving in the Office of the Deputy Attorney General, Antoinette served as the national White Collar Crime Coordinator at the Executive Office for United States Attorneys, where she collaborated with prosecutors, agencies, law makers, corporate counsel, and other stakeholders to address our nation’s most serious economic crime threats.

Antoinette joined the Department of Justice through the Honors Program, as a Trial Attorney in the Antitrust Division, where she investigated international price fixing cartels. Prior to joining the Antitrust Division, Antoinette clerked for the Honorable Henry Coke Morgan, Jr., United States District Judge, Eastern District of Virginia.

Antoinette earned a J.D. from the University of Virginia and a B.A. in Communications, Law, Economics, and Government from American University.

Sandy Markwood
Sandy Markwood is a national advocate for aging issues and a champion for ensuring that people have the best supports to age well at home and in their communities. As the CEO of the National Association of Area Agencies on Aging (n4a) since 2002, she has been committed to ensuring that as a society we value and support people across the lifespan. That commitment has taken many forms including advocacy with multiple Administrations and on Capitol Hill for the passage of legislation aimed at supporting older adults including access to critical information, in-home services, and caregiver support.

A passionate advocate, Sandy and her organization have launched campaigns focused on combating social isolation of older adults, preventing elder abuse, promoting the health benefits of volunteering and engagement no matter your age, exploring new transportation and housing options as we age, among others. Her goal and the goal of n4a is to ensure that we all have the ability to age with good health, independence, and the quality of life we all deserve. Aging isn’t just about adding years to our lives…it’s about adding life to those years.

Tom Miller
Attorney General Tom Miller was born and raised in Dubuque. He graduated from Wahlert High School, earned his undergraduate degree at Loras College, and completed his law degree at Harvard Law School in 1969.

After serving as a Legal Services lawyer, and then as the city attorney in McGregor and Marquette, Tom Miller was first elected Attorney General in 1978. In 1991, for four years, he worked at a Des Moines law firm, and then returned to public service. He is serving his ninth four-year term and is the longest-serving state attorney general in the nation.

At the forefront of Attorney General Miller’s distinguished public service career is protecting consumers. His Consumer Protection Division is nationally recognized for safeguarding Iowans and holding those accountable who try to defraud them.

Mr. Miller also has a long record of leading cooperative and bipartisan efforts by state attorneys general across the nation to take on some of the country’s largest and most powerful special interests.

In 1998, the Attorney General was a leader in the 46-state, $200 billion settlement with the tobacco industry. He led many subprime lending and mortgage servicing cases, including the historic $51 billion National Mortgage Settlement in 2012. These settlements transformed how certain lenders and mortgage servicers must treat borrowers, and they provided significant relief for Iowa borrowers.

In addition to Attorney General Miller’s consumer protection efforts, his office also prosecutes criminals, provides help to crime victims, represents the state’s legal interests, and stands up for ordinary Iowans.

On behalf of the Department of Justice, we would like to thank our planning partners, without whose help this Summit would not be possible. We thank the Administration for Community Living at the United States Department of Health and Human Services and the United States Department of Agriculture for leadership and efforts in supporting rural and tribal communities. We thank the National Association of Area Agencies in Aging, the National Association of Adult Protective Services, and the American Bar Association’s Commission on Law and Aging for their support and input in the planning of the Summit. Lastly, we thank the Elder Justice Initiative, the Office for Victims of Crime, and the United States Attorney’s Office for the Southern District of Iowa for their tireless efforts, creativity, and perseverance putting together this Summit.
