China: Whether Family Planning authorities, including in Guangdong and Fujian provinces, enforce the two-child policy through forced abortions, sterilization, and other birth control methods; information on measures taken against parents who fail to register additional children, including fines (replaces CHN106235 of 1 October 2019)

Research Directorate, Immigration and Refugee Board of Canada

1. Overview

According to sources, an aging population [and a declining birthrate (AP 18 Feb. 2019; US 10 Oct. 2018, 143)] led to the implementation of the two-child policy in 2016 (AP 18 Feb. 2019; Australia 21 Dec. 2017, 29). In correspondence with the Research Directorate, a senior scientist with the Department of Obstetrics and Gynecology at the University of Wisconsin-Madison, who has written about family planning policy in China, stated that the government has begun to adjust its population policy in recognition of the seriousness of the "population crisis" (Senior Scientist 15 Mar. 2019).

Sources indicate that in 2017, regions [up to thirty-one provinces, regions and municipalities (CGTN 19 July 2018)] started to offer incentives to parents who give birth to a second child, including longer maternity leave, subsidies (China Daily 5 Sept. 2018; CGTN 19 July 2018) and "flexible work hours" for new mothers (China Daily 5 Sept. 2018). According to sources, however, policy adjustments are "too slow" to reverse the [declining] population trend (Senior Scientist 15 Mar. 2019; The Wall Street Journal 29 Apr. 2018). Sources explain that this is due to the reluctance of officials to make drastic changes (The Wall Street Journal 29 Apr. 2018) or "political inertia" (Senior Scientist 15 Mar. 2019). In a telephone interview with the Research Directorate, an associate dean at Hong Kong University of Science and Technology, who conducts research on the links between population and policy in Asia, indicated that the family planning apparatus is being dismantled and becoming less important (Associate Dean 1 Aug. 2019). Further and corroborating information could not be found among the sources consulted by the Research Directorate within the time constraints of this Response.

2. Legislation

3. Enforcement of the Two-Child Policy

According to the 2018 annual report of the US Congressional-Executive Commission on China (CECC), official speeches and government reports from provinces across China, including Fujian and Guangdong, "continued to promote the implementation of harsh and invasive family planning measures" (US 10 Oct. 2018, 145). The Associate Dean indicated that despite the change in the demographic landscape, the two-child policy is still being "strongly" enforced and people in China are being encouraged to only have the number of children that they are allowed (Associate Dean 1 Aug. 2019). Similarly, the Associated Press (AP) reports that despite the encouragement from Chinese leaders for couples to have more children, local government officials are eager for revenues from "'social maintenance fee [s]'" [also called "social compensation fees" (Australia 21 Dec. 2017, 30), "social support fee" (Town in Hunan Province n.d.), or "social support payment" (Town in Hunan Province 2018)] and have a vested interest in "maintaining the rules that justify their jobs and authority" (AP 18 Feb. 2019). According to Jin Wei, a journalist quoted in the AP article, "'[t]he low birthrate has everyone on edge, yet the local governments care only about collecting fees'" (AP 18 Feb. 2019).

The Associate Dean stated that for some corrupt officials in certain regions, the "social maintenance fee" is a "good money generating service" (Associate Dean 1 Aug. 2018). The Senior Scientist similarly indicated that local governments are "very motivated" to implement the family planning policy due to profits, "even if violence is used" (Senior Scientist 15 Mar. 2019). Sources indicate that "social maintenance fees," meant to compensate for the resources used by the "extra" child (Associate Dean 1 Aug. 2019; AP 18 Feb. 2019), represent an estimated fifteen to thirty percent of local government's discretionary funding, and can be used for various purposes, including salaries and travel expenses (AP 18 Feb. 2019).

Sources indicate that the "social maintenance fee" is the most common form of penalty (Australia 21 Dec. 2017, 30; Associate Dean 1 Aug. 2019). A Country Information Report on China by Australia's Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade (DFAT) indicates that authorities calculate the "social compensation fee" based on the "'last year's local disposable annual income per capita' in urban places, and 'the net annual income per capita' in rural places," and that those income differ "according to the county, city or district" (Australia 21 Dec. 2017, 30). The Associate Dean similarly indicated that the calculation of the "social compensation fee" varies by location, but it is most commonly based on the local income, and in some places where the individual income is significant, the calculation is based on the individual income (Associate Dean 1 Aug. 2019). According to Global Times, a state-run newspaper (US 10 Oct. 2018, 147), citing an article by the Beijing Daily, a Chinese-language party-run newspaper (HKFP 28 Oct. 2017), the "social maintenance fee" in Liaoning Province is "up to 10 times [the] per capita disposable income," which is the highest among all the provinces, while in provinces such as Hunan, Shanxi and Guizhou, the "social maintenance fee" is calculated according to families' salaries (Global Times 3 Aug. 2017). An English translation of the "proposal" for the collection of "social compensation fees" in 2018 issued by the People's Government of a town in Hunan Province, provided by the Senior Scientist, is attached to this Response (Attachment 1).

According to Freedom House, "forced abortions and sterilizations are less common than in the past but continue to occur" (Freedom House 4 Feb. 2019). The Senior Scientist similarly stated that forced abortion and sterilisation in China are still carried out, and mandatory birth control continues to exist (Senior Scientist 15 Mar. 2019). The US CECC report, citing Chinese domestic media and local government reports, indicates that some local authorities "imposed targets" and "instructed family planning officials to carry out the invasive 'three inspections' (intrauterine device (IUD), pregnancy, and health inspections) and 'four procedures' (IUD insertion, first trimester abortion, mid- to late-term abortion, and sterilization)" (US 10 Oct. 2018, 145). The same source cites a report produced by the Longhui County Health and Family Planning Bureau in Hunan, which indicates that 204 IUD insertions, 19 sterilizations, and 67 abortions were carried out by county authorities in the winter of 2017 (US 10 Oct. 2018, 145).

4. Measures Taken Against Parents Who Violated Family Planning Regulations, Including Fines

The Paper, a state-funded Chinese news website (Foreign Policy 23 July 2014), indicates that, based on a search of China Judgements Online [1] using the keywords "'social maintenance fee'" and "'enforcement action'," it is [translation] "more prevalent" for family planning authorities to successfully apply in court for enforcement action against families who owe overdue social compensation fees (The Paper 13 Feb. 2019). The search, conducted in February 2019, indicates that there have been 163 rulings since the beginning of 2019, and the courts sided with the family planning authorities in 148 rulings (The Paper 13 Feb. 2019). The same source states that the highest number of applications were filed in Hebei (40 rulings), Jiangxi (30 rulings) and Hunan (22 rulings) (The Paper 13 Feb. 2019). Of the five rulings that were made public for Fujian Province, three were withdrawn after family planning authorities successfully applied for "enforcement action," which usually indicates that the parties paid the "social maintenance fee" after an application was further corroborating information could not be found among the sources consulted by the Research Directorate within the time constraints of this Response. The English translation of a sample of an administrative ruling by Guangdong’s Higher People’s Court, on an application for the re-adjudication of a social maintenance fee, is attached to this Response (attachment 2).

English translations of samples of government-issued documents provided by the Senior Scientist give examples of "social maintenance fees" levied on individuals who have violated family planning regulations; these fees range approximately between 12,000 Chinese Yuan (CNY) [C$2,300] and 110,000 CNY [C$20,600] (Attachments 4-6, 8-13).

According to the Senior Scientist, parents who do not pay the "social maintenance fee" on time will have their saving accounts frozen by the court and will be listed as "dishonest judgment debtors" [2], which will prevent them from finding a new job or travelling by plane or train (Senior Scientist 15 Mar. 2019). Sources indicate that a couple in Shandong province was ordered to pay a "social maintenance fee" of 64,626 (CNY) [C$12,307] for having their third child in January 2017 and had their bank account of 22,957 CNY [C$4,372] frozen in 2019 after failing to pay the "fee" within the deadline (AP 18 Feb. 2019; Beijing News 12 Feb. 2019).

Sources report that civil servants who violate the family planning policy, including those who work for state-owned enterprises, can lose their jobs or promotions (Associate Dean 1 Aug. 2019; Global Times 13 Dec. 2017). The English translation of a sample of a letter of [translation] "termination of [l]abor [r]elations" for having violated family law regulations, provided by the Senior Scientist, is attached to this Response (attachment 3).

Sources indicate that the Central government asked provinces, including Guangdong [and Fujian (SCMP 14 Mar. 2018)] to revise regulations allowing job terminations for individuals who violate family planning regulations (SCMP 14 Mar. 2018; US 10 Oct. 2018, 147). The US CECC report, citing The Paper, states that as of April 2018, some provincial authorities amended their family planning regulations accordingly, while others indicated that "they had plans to do so" (US 10 Oct. 2018, 147). For information on the amendments to the Regulations on Population and Family Planning for the provinces of Guangdong and Fujian, see Response to Information Request CHN106271 of April 2019.

5. Format of Official Documents Issued to Individuals Who Violated Family Planning Regulation

According to the Associate Dean, while noting that he has only seen documents from areas where he has worked, primarily in Shenzhen in Guangdong province, the appearance of official documents issued to individuals who have violated family planning regulations are different in format "almost everywhere" (Associate Dean 1 Aug. 2019).

5.1 Guangdong Province

English translations of the following government-issued documents, describing measures taken against parents in Guangdong Province, are attached to this Response:

- A 2017 "Administrative Ruling" of the Higher People's Court of Guangdong Province dismissing the application for a [translation] "re-adjudication" of a "social maintenance fee" on the birth of a second child (Attachment 2);
- A 2018 "Notice of Termination of Labour Relations" issued by the Maternity and Child Health Care Institute of a city in Guangdong on the birth of a second child (Attachment 3);
- A 2019 "Administrative Execution Ruling" of a District People's Court in a city in Guangdong, allowing the application of the District Health and Family Planning Bureau to enforce the payment of a "social maintenance fee" on an individual who failed to pay the fine by the deadline (Attachment 4);
- A 2019 "Administrative Execution Ruling" of the a District People's Court in a city in Guangdong, allowing the application of the District Health and Family Planning Bureau to enforce the payment of a "social maintenance fee" on an individual who failed to pay the fine by the deadline (Attachment 5).

5.2 Fujian Province
English translations of the following government-issued documents, describing measures taken against parents in Fujian Province, are attached to this Response:

- A 2018 "Notice of Payment Required from Litigant" issued by a District People's Court in a city in Fujian (attachment 6);
- A 2018 "Order to Report Assets" issued by a District People's Court in a city in Fujian (Attachment 7);
- A 2018 "Notice of Execution" issued by a District People's Court of a city in Fujian, ordering the litigant to pay a fee to the City Health and Family Planning Bureau and an additional amount for the "execution application fee" (Attachment 8).

5.3 Provinces of Henan, Hunan, Jiangxi and Shandong

English translations of the following government-issued documents, describing measures taken against parents in the provinces of Henan, Hunan, Jiangxi and Shandong, are attached to this Response:

- A 2018 "Notice of Collection for Social Support Fees" issued by the Health and Family Planning Bureau of a county in Shandong Province (Attachment 9);
- A 2018 "Executive Written Verdict" issued by the People's Court of a county in Jiangxi Province, approving enforcement action against a couple who did not pay the social compensation fee within the deadline (Attachment 10);
- A 2018 "Notice of Social Support Payment Required for Violation of Birth Laws" issued by the County Family Planning Enforcement General Office of a town in Hunan Province, for giving birth to a second child (Attachment 11);
- A 2018 "Notice of Collection for Social Support Fees" issued by the County Health and Family Planning Commission of a town in Henan Province, for the birth of a third child in 2017 (Attachment 12);
- An undated "Notice of Social Support Payment Required for Violation of Birth Laws" issued by the Family Planning Enforcement General Office of a town in Hunan Province, for giving birth to the [translation] first "supernumerary" child (Attachment 13).

Notes
[1] China Judgements Online is an online platform of the Supreme People's Court that contains all judgements by Chinese courts (The University of Melbourne 17 July 2019). As of 29 August 2016, all "judgment documents" such as "payment orders" and "state compensation decisions" must be posted on the website within seven days (The University of Melbourne 17 July 2019).

[2] According to a judicial interpretation on the enforcement of judgments in civil cases released by the Supreme People's Court, cited by the US Law Library of Congress, once a person is on the list of "Dishonest Judgement Debtors," the person has restrictions on spending, and will not be allowed to purchase plane or high-speed train tickets, real estate, non-business related vehicles, "expensive" insurance products or send his or her children to "expensive" private schools (US 26 Apr. 2017).
