“Access EOIR” is an ongoing effort by the Executive Office for Immigration Review (EOIR) to make immigration court easier to navigate. As part of Action Month, EOIR announced today its latest update to the Access EOIR effort.

Many individuals who come before the immigration court do not have an attorney or legal representation, and some can find it daunting to file an application or document with the court. To make court filings easier for the unrepresented, EOIR will now upload their paper applications and documents into the agency’s electronic case management system (ECAS). As an additional courtesy to the unrepresented, EOIR will also provide a copy of the filed application or document to the Department of Homeland Security.

Providing this assistance to persons without an attorney or legal representation will promote both fairness in proceedings and efficiency for the court.
