ATTORNEY GENERAL WILLIAM P. BARR ANNOUNCES
EDWARD O'CALLAGHAN AS ACTING DEPUTY ATTORNEY GENERAL

WASHINGTON - William P. Barr issued the following statement:

"Yesterday in the Great Hall at the Department of Justice, we celebrated Rod Rosenstein's 29 years of outstanding service to the Department of Justice, and bid a fond farewell to an exceptional Department leader and friend. Over the last year, Rod has been well-served by his Principal Deputy, Ed O'Callaghan. Ed is a top-notch attorney whose intellect, competence, judgment, and experience are evident in every task he takes on. That is why I have asked him to serve as the Acting Deputy Attorney General until the Senate confirms Deputy Attorney General Rosenstein's successor, Jeffrey Rosen. I am confident that Ed will be an excellent Acting Deputy Attorney General during this interim period."

DEPUTY ATTORNEY GENERAL ROD J. ROSENSTEIN DELIVERS REMARKS AT THE WHARTON SCHOOL'S LEGAL STUDIES AND BUSINESS ETHICS LECTURE SERIES

Philadelphia, PA

Remarks as prepared for delivery

Thank you for that kind introduction, Dean Ruger. It is a great honor to join you here.

When I spoke at Wharton two years ago, it was one of my first significant public events as Deputy Attorney General. I came back today for one of my last significant events as Deputy Attorney General. Each time, I brought one of my daughters.

I encourage my children to spend time in Philadelphia for two reasons. First, I grew up about 20 miles from here. I arrived on this campus in 1982, at age 17. This city, and this university, shaped me. The second and more important reason is that Philadelphia is the home of the United States Constitution. I mention the Constitution in almost every speech. It is not just the words that matter. The history and context matter.

History and context are important. When I attended Penn, we had fewer sources of information. As a result, my world seemed a lot smaller than yours, and a great deal slower. News arrived twice a day - mornings and evenings - and there were only a few outlets. Reporters generally refrained from passing on gossip and innuendo. Most people had limited ability to communicate with anyone beyond their neighborhood.

Today, you are relentlessly bombarded with information, much of it of unknown reliability. The internet lets people share their most ignorant thoughts. Many news stories rely on anonymous sources, without providing details to assess their credibility and bias. Some critics worry that our society will be unable to distinguish fact from opinion, and truth from fiction.

But I remain optimistic about your generation. Most adults were raised with the mindset that they could rely on one or two trusted intermediaries to deliver objective facts - a local newspaper, perhaps, and a favorite television news anchor.

But members of your generation take a different approach. You do not rely on any one news source. You recognize that some people who appear regularly on television - the ones who always form an opinion before they know the facts - those characters are in the entertainment business. Because you understand that, you are more skeptical, and less gullible.

I work in a town where almost everyone is obsessed with breaking news, but I unplugged the television in my office. I try not to worry too much about what a commentator may say in the next 30 minutes. Instead, our law enforcement team focuses on what it takes to keep America safe for the next 30 years, and beyond.

When you study history, you learn to focus on the things that matter. How many of you know the origin of the phrase, "There is nothing new under the sun?" It is from the Book of Ecclesiastes, written 2,500 years ago. It is not meant to be taken literally. It is a lesson about human nature. Human nature is why we need rules, and it is why rules only work if we enforce them.

In 1787, Benjamin Franklin joined other leaders at Independence Hall to establish rules for America. When Franklin was walking home from the Constitutional Convention - about two miles from here - a woman named Elizabeth Powel asked him what type of government the Founders created. Franklin replied with these words: "A republic, ... if you can keep it."

Mrs. Powel's question illustrates that it was not certain that our nation would be a democratic republic. Franklin's answer reminds us that it is not inevitable that we will remain a democratic republic. The Constitution comes with a condition.

Some people think that politicians are responsible for keeping the republic. But Franklin spoke to an ordinary citizen - a woman, who did not even have the right to vote. The lesson is that everyone is responsible.

When I was drafting these remarks last night, my daughter showed me an essay she wrote about a time when she asked me a question and referred to the government as "they." And I replied, "Who are they?" They are us. The people are the government. This is a participatory activity.

I have worked with law enforcement professionals for three decades. Some of them do the job for the money, but most are inspired by the realization that they are the government, a calling that we recognize as patriotism.

At the Department of Justice, our patriotic mission is to promote the rule of law.

The term "rule of law" describes the government's obligation to follow neutral principles. The idea dates at least to the fourth century BC, when Greek philosopher Aristotle wrote that "[i]t is more proper that law should govern than any one of the citizens."

Last year, President Donald Trump issued a proclamation explaining that "we govern ourselves in accordance with the rule of law rather [than] ... the whims of an elite few or the dictates of collective will. Through law, we have ensured liberty."

As the President recognized, law provides the framework for freedom. At its best, law reflects moral choices; principled decisions that promote society's best interests, and protect citizens' fundamental rights. That is the point of the Penn motto: "Leges sine moribus vanae." Laws without morals are useless.

The rule of law is indispensable to a thriving and vibrant society. It shields citizens from government overreach. It allows businesses to invest with confidence. It gives innovators protection for their discoveries. It keeps people safe from dangerous criminals. And it allows us to resolve differences peacefully through reason and logic.

When you follow the law, it does not always yield the outcome you would choose. In fact, one indicator that you are following the law is when you respect a result although you do not agree with it. You respect it because it is dictated by the facts and the law.

Abraham Lincoln discussed the issue in his first published speech, in 1838. Lincoln worried about sharp political divisions and rising passions in our young republic. He argued that respect for the law is essential to bind society together.

"Let reverence for the laws," he implored, "be breathed by every American [parent] . . . let it be taught in schools, in seminaries, and in colleges; let it be written in Primers, spelling books, and in Almanacks — let it be preached from the pulpit, proclaimed in legislative halls, and enforced in courts of justice."

And, Lincoln concluded, "let it become the political religion of the nation; and let the old and the young, the rich and the poor, the grave and the gay, of all sexes and tongues, and colors and conditions" keep the rule of law.

Two decades later, in 1858, Lincoln engaged in a series of seven lengthy debates with his Senate opponent, Stephen Douglas. The opening speaker addressed the audience for one hour. The other speaker took an hour and a half to reply. Then the first debater spent another half hour to respond.

People disagreed - sometimes vehemently - but they listened patiently, and they learned about opposing arguments.

Attention spans are much shorter today. The structural protections that preserve liberty are difficult to explain in a soundbite. But it remains essential for citizens to understand them. Our system of government is not self-executing. Liberty is protected by cultural norms as well as by constitutional text.

Theodore Roosevelt observed that a government's survival depends on the character of citizens. He said that "[t]he average citizen must be a good citizen if our republics are to succeed."

Many of you will hold leadership roles in the private sector. Even if you never serve in government, you will be responsible for supporting the law, even when it is difficult, or costly.

A scholar once described the legal system as “wise restraints that make men free.” Law provides the framework for people to conduct their lives freely and enter into transactions with confidence. Business depends on law. It provides the floor that supports the market, and the walls around it.

The integrity and reliability of the financial system rests on the credibility of the legal system. Our economy attracts investors because they expect fair treatment in our courts. And investors and consumers are more confident when they know that the Department of Justice will protect them from fraud.

White collar crime skews the playing field for law-abiding competitors. It erodes confidence that hard work, discipline, and talent lead to success.

Some people mistakenly describe white-collar crime as victimless. The damage is not always obvious, but financial fraud, bribery, corruption, price-fixing, insider trading - all those crimes harm people.

Prosecutions are an important deterrent to crime, but strong corporate compliance programs are the first line of defense.

That is why the Department of Justice should reward companies that try in good faith to deter crime - those that voluntarily implement meaningful compliance programs. When crimes occur, good corporate citizens investigate it, report it to the authorities, cooperate in investigations, and implement appropriate remedies.

Law enforcement agencies should give the greatest consideration to companies that establish effective compliance programs, because it frees our agents and prosecutors to focus on people who commit more serious financial crimes or pose other threats to America.

During my tenure as Deputy Attorney General, we updated Department policies to reflect those principles and to create stronger incentives to uphold the law.

We also completed a comprehensive review and streamlining of other Department guidance. Our team executed a strategy to maximize the impact of our $28 billion budget and 115,000 employees. We consulted stakeholders, revised policies, and used results-driven management to build morale, cut bureaucracy, and increase efficiency. Our productivity increased more in 2018 than ever before, and crime fell.

Changes within large organizations can be difficult. But the ability to adapt to change is essential. A distinguished Wharton alumnus, Nassim Nicholas Taleb, coined the term “anti-fragile” to describe the most successful business model. According to Taleb, the opposite of fragility is not merely robustness or resiliency. Anti-fragile things do not just bounce back. They grow stronger, like muscles.

Complacency can be deadly. Taleb tells a story that illustrates the danger of forgetting that past performance is never a reliable indicator of future outcomes: "Consider a turkey that is fed every day. Every ... feeding [strengthens] the bird's [confidence] that it is the general rule of life [that humans always] 'look... out for its best interests' On the ... [day] before Thanksgiving, something unexpected will happen to the turkey." Taleb refers to that as a "Black Swan" event - a occurrence so low in probability that we ignore the risk, but so great in impact that it renders projections meaningless.

Corporations need to prepare for unexpected events, but government should provide certainty when possible.

That principle underlies my approach to corporate liability. Companies can be held legally responsible for criminal acts by their employees, but that is not always the most reasonable outcome. In our Foreign Corrupt Practices Act cases, we established a policy that incentivizes exemplary corporate conduct. Companies that self-report violations, cooperate with investigations, and remediate harm are rewarded with a presumption that we will decline to pursue the company with criminal charges. Instead, we focus our limited resources on companies that fail to take compliance obligations seriously.

We also changed our individual accountability policies to recognize differences between criminal and civil corporate enforcement matters.

The most effective deterrent to most crimes is identifying and punishing the individuals who engaged in criminal activity. But civil cases are different. The primary goal of affirmative civil enforcement cases is to recover money, so we revised our policy to permit us to negotiate civil releases for individuals when obtaining damages from individual employees is not feasible.

That allows us to resolve matters and provide certainty to companies and their employees when the resolution achieves the government's objectives. There is no reason to delay a settlement that favorably resolves civil claims only because of a bureaucratic prohibition on releasing individuals we would not sue anyway.

At the Department of Justice, we work to encourage good corporate citizenship and deter fraud. I encourage you to do your part. Embrace change, adapt to new circumstances, but always emphasize your commitment to the rule of law.

Speaking of change, technological developments pose significant law enforcement challenges, because people who create and market new tools often do not consider the implications for public safety.

Electronic devices collect and transmit tremendous amounts of information about their customers. Many users do not understand that the companies use that data for commercial advantage. And all users are vulnerable when hackers steal data.

Then there are social media platforms, which provide unprecedented opportunities for the free exchange of ideas. But many people do not realize how they are exploited by malicious actors who deceive them.

Soon, we will need to come to terms with “deep fake” videos, which may defeat our ability to rely on things that we see and hear directly.

The speed and volume of technological advances exceeds the capacity of most people to comprehend the risks, let alone to protect against them.

Criminals are early adopters. They will deploy smarter, adaptive malware capable of thwarting existing defenses. They will use impenetrable communications platforms that defeat our ability to detect and prevent crimes.

Forestalling those ominous consequences will require concrete steps.

First, innovators should place security on the same footing as novelty and convenience, and design technology accordingly, in the same way that we build automobiles with horns, emergency lights, seatbelts and airbags; we equip ships with lifeboats and floatation devices; and we construct high-rise buildings with sprinklers and fire escapes. Anticipating worst-case scenarios must be part of the development process.

Second, we need companies to work cooperatively with law enforcement agencies to address novel risks.

The trajectory that we are on now - a culture in which some technology companies work to defeat legitimate law enforcement activities - will not end well. Protecting honest people from being harmed by criminals is a worthy endeavor, but protecting criminals from being caught imposes a heavy cost.

To return to my theme: upholding the law is not the job of government alone. It depends on countless decisions citizens make as they go about their lives. That is why it is so difficult to reform corrupt foreign governments. You cannot just adopt a Constitution. It only works in tandem with a culture of honesty, fairness, and integrity.

My time as a law enforcement official is coming to an end, a lot later than I expected. People joke about the revolving door between government and the private sector. The door never revolved for me. It was one way in, and one way out.

Thirty-five years ago - when I was sitting in your chairs - if I used my Wharton education and my HP-12C calculator to compute the net present value of my likely career, I would have taken a different path. My first law enforcement job paid less than half of a private law firm salary. My wife reminds me that the gap grows each year. But the noble mission of the Department of Justice inspires me every day. The rewards are difficult to measure in monetary terms.

When you study anyone's career, there usually appears to be an obvious logic to their path. Each person was in the right place, at the right time, to take advantage of the next opportunity. But that appearance of logic is always wrong. It is a product of hindsight bias, the tendency to see a pattern in retrospect that never exists in real time.

The truth is that everyone's life is a product of random events and consequential decisions. The random events are things that happen to you, beyond your control. The consequential decisions are what you choose to do in response.

I hope many of you will choose to devote at least a few years to public service. If you do, remember that truth is not determined by opinion polls, and history is not written by television pundits. Ignore the mercenary critics and focus on the things that matter, because a republic that endures for centuries is not governed by the news cycle.

I am proud of what the Department of Justice accomplished on my watch in the Trump Administration. We made rapid progress in achieving the Administration's law enforcement priorities - reducing violent crime, enhancing support for the police, curtailing opioid abuse, protecting consumers, and restoring immigration enforcement - while preserving national security, and strengthening federal efforts in many other areas. Our nation is safer, elections are more secure, and citizens are better informed about covert foreign influence efforts and schemes to commit fraud, steal intellectual property, and launch cyberattacks.

In 1940, Attorney General Robert Jackson explained that government lawyers "must at times risk ourselves and our records to defend our legal processes from discredit, and to maintain a dispassionate, disinterested, and impartial enforcement of the law," even if it requires us to incur criticism.

I took more than my fair share of criticism. But I kept the faith, I followed the rules, and I left my office in good hands. Those are the things that matter.

So let me conclude with advice that a legendary Philadelphian, Rocky Balboa, gave to his son: "The world ain't all sunshine and rainbows.... But it ain't about how hard you hit. It's about how hard you can get hit, and keep moving forward; how much you can take, and keep moving forward... [Y]ou got to be willing to take the hits."

My daughter inscribed that on a plaque and gave it to me as a birthday gift, so I know she got the point. I hope you get it, too.

Thank you very much.

Subject: DC Next Week

Ed:

Here are some options:

1) I can get to DC next week, Thursday — Friday, 2/21-2/22. My availability would be from 4:30 pm on Thursday, until 3:00 pm on Friday when I would need to be out the door to the airport.

2) I could be there the following week, Monday — Tuesday, 2/25-2/26. My availability would be from 4:30 pm on Monday, until 3:00 pm on Tuesday when I would need to be out the door to the airport.

3) I will be in town for regular AGAC meetings, Monday — Thursday, 3/4-3/7. Of course, I would be around and available during those days. (With the similar routine: after 4:30 on Monday until 3:00 on Thursday).

At your convenience, please let me know if any of these options would work on your end.

Subject: Personal Message for U.S. Attorneys

The relative quiet in the halls of Main Justice this week gave me an opportunity to review the Department's accomplishments over the past year.

Our U.S. Attorneys made remarkable progress in achieving the Administration's law enforcement priorities – reducing violent crime, supporting law enforcement officers, combating opioid abuse, protecting consumers, and improving immigration enforcement – while preserving national security and maintaining federal efforts in other areas.

Almost all of our U.S. Attorneys reported significant improvements in productivity, and almost every office is at record strength. I appreciate the Attorney General's Advisory Committee's focus on effective management practices. Given the large proportion of new employees, I encourage you to direct even more attention to local training next year. The time you invest in hiring and training will be richly rewarded.

I am glad that most of you attended the Project Safe Neighborhoods conference in Kansas City. PSN does not just involve prosecuting a large volume of gun cases in federal court; it is about working with local and state partners to identify individuals and gangs responsible for fomenting violence, and finding ways to keep them off the streets. I saw that strategy work in Baltimore. Recent experience shows how quickly progress can be reversed, to the detriment of community residents, if officials turn away from the mission of fighting crime. I encourage you to make every effort to engage state and local officials in developing a unified and comprehensive strategy, and sustaining it with meaningful performance measurements.

At Main Justice, we continue to emphasize responsiveness and consider the practical impact of DOJ policies. I hope you see those efforts reflected in quicker answers on matters that require approval from DOJ components, as well as in the new Justice Manual, the reduced volume of EOUSA email messages, the revised individual accountability and guidance memo policies, fast-track hiring, streamlined mandatory training, and other initiatives.

All of our achievements are attributable to outstanding employees and contractors. For many of them, the appropriations lapse may create challenges, financial and otherwise. Please keep track of things that need to be done during the lapse, coordinate with your administrative officer on messaging to furloughed staff, and concentrate on building morale when everyone gets back to work.

Several ODAG staffers remain on duty to handle ongoing Department business. Feel free to contact me directly if any issue arises that you cannot resolve. You can reach me pretty much anytime.

I want to leave you with these words of wisdom from Edward Levi's first formal address after becoming Attorney General in 1975:

"As law enforcement officials, you, more than anyone else, represent the power and quality of the state. You hold a unique and difficult position of enormous responsibility to our society. It is by watching you that many of our citizens learn what kind of a country this is."

Those remarks apply particularly to U.S. Attorneys. Employees, law enforcement partners, and citizens look to their U.S. Attorney to set the standard for leadership, professionalism, and urgency. I know that you will not disappoint them.

Best wishes for a happy New Year!

When we last tried to get it scheduled, we never heard back from Maya when she said she would get a day and time from OAG (I presumed that she never got a positive response to her inquiry). We have been in waiting mode on our end and still happy to make it happen.

I wasn't aware Greg Scott was with OAG now.

Ed, here is the full story:

In FY 2019, DEA has requested a total of 10 chemists for $3.06M. This is the for the Fentanyl Signature Profiling program, and 7 for the Heroin Enforcement Teams, offset by a reduction of 2 chemists per DEA from unspecified offices.

In FY 2020, DEA has sought another 3 chemists and $823K for their Heroin Enforcement Teams, and this is pending at OMB. We'll know OMB response the week after Thanksgiving. Lee

Ed and Brad, my flight has equipment problems so I won't be there at 5:00. I still need to run some items by you both so maybe we can find a few minutes late tonight or tomorrow morning. (Or another time this week).

I apologize.

That question was not from me, although it appears so in your in-box. It might be from Richard. That is a very annoying quirk of the Outlook program that I have complained about before: if someone responds to a calendar invitation it appears to come from the meeting organizer. (I was also not actually the organizer)

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
TUESDAY, JUNE 5, 2018

DEPUTY ATTORNEY GENERAL ROD J. ROSENSTEIN
DELIVERS REMARKS TO THE ASSOCIATED ALUMNI OF CENTRAL HIGH SCHOOL ANNUAL DINNER

Philadelphia, PA

Remarks as prepared for delivery

Thank you, Cynthia, for that kind introduction. I am honored to join you tonight in Philadelphia, the cradle of liberty.

Center City encompasses one of my favorite historical sites. In 1776, the Second Continental Congress signed the Declaration of Independence at the Pennsylvania State House. Eleven years later, the founders wrote the Constitution in the same building, now known as Independence Hall.

I attended high school one mile outside the city line, but Central High School played a big role in my family. My grandfather, Morris Rosenstein, matriculated with the 142nd Class almost 100 years ago. My father, Robert Rosenstein, is a proud alumnus of the 199th Class. He hosted a lunch today for 33 classmates, to celebrate their 65th reunion. Congratulations to the Class of 1953!

My dad earned a degree from Temple University and ran a small business. My mom, Geraldine Stoloff Rosenstein, graduated from Gratz High School then Temple, and went on to work as a bookkeeper and serve on our local school board.

My own interest in public service grew after I interned in the United States Attorney's Office during law school. The federal prosecutors and agents who worked there demonstrated great intellect and tremendous integrity. They took pride in their duty to defend America against all enemies, foreign and domestic.

I wanted to work with patriots like them. So I took a law enforcement job that paid less than half of a private law firm salary. My wife reminds me that the gap grows each year. But the noble mission of the Department of Justice inspires me every day.

I have served as a Senate-confirmed Presidential appointee for thirteen years. President Bush appointed me as Maryland's U.S. Attorney. He later nominated me to serve as a federal appellate judge, but the Senate did not approve.

President Trump appointed me to be Deputy Attorney General last year, and this time the Senate gave its consent.

The Deputy functions as the chief operating officer of the Department of Justice. My job is to help formulate the Trump Administration's law enforcement policies and make sure Department employees faithfully implement them.

Presidential appointees in the Department of Justice bear unique responsibilities. We are accountable for pursuing the President's priorities, and we are obligated to do so while complying with laws, regulations, and ethical principles that prohibit us from taking partisan political considerations into account when deciding what to do in individual cases. If we consider partisan factors, then judges can dismiss our cases, revoke our law licenses, and order us to reimburse the defendant.

The need to prove our claims in court imposes a powerful discipline on prosecutors. When we file a criminal allegation, the defendant is presumed innocent. We need to introduce sufficient credible evidence to satisfy a judge and prove our case beyond any reasonable doubt to the unanimous satisfaction of a jury of 12 random citizens. The government must disclose any exculpatory evidence, and the defendant may cross-examine our witnesses and offer his own evidence. Even if the defendant remains silent, the court presumes him innocent. If any single juror is not persuaded beyond a reasonable doubt, the defendant goes free.

Sometimes people look at our high conviction rates and mistakenly assume that the job is easy. But the opposite is true. Conviction rates are high because federal prosecutors exercise great care before we accuse anyone of wrongdoing. The scrutiny makes us appropriately cautious.

We use the term "rule of law" to describe our obligation to follow neutral principles. The idea dates to the fourth century BC, when Greek philosopher Aristotle wrote that "[i]t is more proper that law should govern than any one of the citizens."

Many nations do not follow the rule of law. Some claim that they do; they even write it into their constitutions. But as Justice Antonin Scalia noted, the rule of law is not just about words on paper. The rule of law depends on the character of the people responsible for enforcing the law.

John MacArthur Maguire described law as a system of "wise restraints that make men free." The restraints preserve liberty because they are prescribed in advance, and they apply equally to everyone, without regard to rank or status.

The rule of law is one of the primary reasons for America's prosperity. It protects people from arbitrary government action. It allows businesses to enter into enforceable contracts. And it establishes an objective mechanism to resolve disputes.

Justice Anthony Kennedy explained it this way: in a rule of law system, when you apply to a government clerk for a permit and you satisfy the objective criteria, you are not asking the clerk to do you a favor. You are entitled to the permit, and it is the clerk's duty to give it to you. In many countries, that concept of a government bound by law to serve the people does not exist.

I visited the nation of Armenia in 1994, when it was emerging from seven decades of Soviet domination. I gave a lecture about public corruption. When I finished, a student raised his hand. He asked, "If you can't pay bribes in America, then how do you get electricity?"

That pragmatic question illustrated how the young man learned to think about his society. Corruption undermines law. It stifles innovation, creates inefficiency, and inculcates distrust.

Our Constitution was designed to protect the rule of law.

During the Constitutional Convention in 1787, Benjamin Franklin lived about half a mile from here. A woman named Elizabeth Powel approached Franklin when he was walking home from Independence Hall. Mrs. Powel asked Franklin what type of government the Founders had created. Franklin replied with these words: "A republic, if you can keep it."

Mrs. Powel's question demonstrates that it was not inevitable that our nation would begin as a democratic republic.

Franklin's answer reminds us that it was not inevitable that America would remain a democratic republic.

The Constitution comes with a condition: we need to keep it.

In modern English, the word "keep" means to hold a thing in your possession: "Here's a ten-dollar bill; keep the change."

Keeping something, in that sense, is passive.

But that was not Franklin's meaning. He used the word "keep" in the same way that someone today might say, "Keep the Sabbath." It is an active verb. It means there are things you need to do, if you want to preserve it.

Some people think that it is up to politicians to keep our government. But Franklin spoke to an ordinary citizen — a woman, who at that time did not even have the right to vote. He said that it was up to her, not him, to keep the republic.

The lesson is that we are all keepers of the republic. But the farther we get from the founding generation, the less we appreciate how much it depends on people rather than just words.

In the courtyard of the Department of Justice headquarters, there is a sculpture of the scales of justice with an inscription that reads, in Latin: "Privilēgium Obligatiō." It means that when you accept a privilege, you incur an obligation. Working for Justice is a privilege.

Attorney General John Ashcroft liked to point out that our Department is named for a moral value. We aspire to live up to it.

Our goal is to instill a culture of ethical conduct from the first day employees take the oath of office – an oath to support and defend the Constitution, to bear true faith and allegiance, and to well and faithfully execute the duties of the office. Our employees learn that their job is to seek the truth, apply the law, follow the Department's policies and respect its principles.

The rule of law is our most important principle. Patriots should always defend the rule of law, even when it is not in their immediate self-interest.

Consider the Boston massacre, in 1770. Five colonists died after British soldiers fired on a crowd. A captain and eight soldiers were charged with murder. Many people believed that the soldiers deserved to be executed.

Most lawyers were unwilling to represent the suspects, but future President John Adams stepped into the breach. His political views were firmly with the colonists; Adams agreed that the soldiers should have returned to England. But Adams felt obligated to protect their rights under the rule of law.

Defending British soldiers was a very unpopular cause. Adams faced a serious risk, in his words, of "infamy," or even "death." In a diary entry about the trial, he wrote as follows: "In the Evening I expressed to Mrs. Adams all my Apprehensions: That excellent Lady, who has always encouraged me, burst into ... Tears.... [S]he was very sensible of all the Danger to her and to our Children as well as to me, but she thought I had done as I ought, [and] she was ... willing to share in all that was to come and place her trust in Providence."

The rhetoric mirrors an earlier letter that Adams wrote to explain his preference for personal integrity over public acclaim. Adams wrote that in theaters "the applause of the audience is of more importance to the actors than their own approbation. But upon the stage of life, while conscience claps, let the world hiss."

Adams endured harsh criticism in the court of public opinion. But in the court of law, he secured the acquittal of the British captain and six soldiers. Two others were convicted of manslaughter, but received only minor punishments.

For lawyers like Adams, truth is about solid evidence, not strong opinions. A 19th century Philadelphia doctor named Caspar Morris remarked that “sincerity of belief is not the test of truth.” Many people believe things that are just not true. If you drink deadly poison because you sincerely believe it is harmless, the truth will always defeat your opinion.

So people who seek the truth need to avoid confirmation bias and remain open to the possibility that the truth may not match their preconceptions.

John Adams made that point during his closing argument in the Boston Massacre trial. He said that “[f]acts are stubborn things; and whatever may be our wishes, our inclinations, or the dictates of our passions, they cannot alter the state of facts and evidence.”

Adams weathered considerable abuse for defending the rule of law, from people who thought they knew better. He risked a reputation that he had worked hard to earn, and he incurred “clamour and popular suspicions and prejudices” that he feared would never be forgotten. Years later, Adams wrote that his decision “procured me anxiety, and obloquy It was, however, one of the most gallant, generous, manly, and disinterested actions of my whole life, and one of the best pieces of service I ever rendered my country.”

Seven decades later, Abraham Lincoln passionately supported the rule of law in a speech prophetically titled, “The Perpetuation of Our Political Institutions.” The year was 1838. Adams and the other founding fathers had passed away. At age 28, Lincoln was alarmed by rising political passions in our young republic. He worried about reports of people taking the law into their own hands: lynching suspected criminals and murdering political opponents. In his first published address, Lincoln argued that we can best preserve the Constitution by enshrining respect for law in the hearts of the citizens.

“Let reverence for the laws,” he implored, “be breathed by every American mother ... let it be taught in schools, in seminaries, and in colleges; let it be written in Primers, spelling books, and in Almanacks — let it be preached from the pulpit, proclaimed in legislative halls, and enforced in courts of justice.”

And, Lincoln concluded, “let it become the political religion of the nation; and let the old and the young, the rich and the poor, the grave and the gay, of all sexes and tongues, and colors and conditions” keep the rule of law.

The rule of law endures. When President Trump spoke about American values last summer, he said that “[w]e treasure the rule of law.” Attorney General Jeff Sessions explained that “the Department of Justice does not represent any narrow interest or any subset of the American people. We represent all of the American people and protect the integrity of our Constitution.”

One of our nation’s most famous Attorneys General held a similar view. In his

One of our nation's most famous Attorneys General held a similar view. In his first speech after taking office in 1940, Robert Jackson spoke about the duty of government officials to serve the public interest. He said that "most ... mistakes ... [result from] failure to observe the fiduciary principle ... the principle of trusteeship, without which our kind of society cannot long endure."

Jackson reportedly directed his subtle criticism to the mistakes of two predecessors: Harry Daugherty, who failed to investigate the Teapot Dome scandal; and Frank Murphy, who made public comments about ongoing investigations and instigated criticism of Jackson.

Jackson explained that lawyers "who sit temporarily in the position of government counsel, are subject to [obligations] ... that those outside the profession never" face. He contrasted the special duties of government lawyers with what he called "the volatile values of politics."

Jackson understood that "[f]undamental things in our American way of life depend on ... government lawyers." He said that "lawyers must at times risk ourselves and our records to defend our legal processes from discredit, and to maintain a dispassionate, disinterested, and impartial enforcement of the law."

Jackson believed that although political tempers flare from time to time, any "temporary passion" will eventually yield to "sober second thought" about the rule of law. "We must have the courage to face any temporary criticism," Jackson urged, because "the moral authority of our legal process" depends on the commitment of government lawyers to act impartially.

Less than three years later, Jackson was a Justice of the Supreme Court, and World War II brought "dissension and lawlessness" to "much of the world." In November 1942, Jackson discussed the role of lawyers in preserving liberty.

Jackson invoked a parable about three stonecutters asked to describe what they are doing. The first stonecutter focuses on how the job benefits him. He says, "I am earning a living." The second narrowly describes his personal task: "I am cutting stone." The third man has a very different perspective. His face lights up as he explains what the work means to others: "I am helping to build a cathedral."

"[W]hether we are aware of it or not," Jackson explained, lawyers "do more than earn [a] living[]; we do more than [litigate] [individual] cases. We are building the legal structure that will protect ... human liberty, [for centuries to come]."

Whatever you do for a living, you should never forget about the cathedral. Take the time to consider the big picture. You are always building a legacy, whether you realize it or not. You set an example for your colleagues, you establish a standard for your constituents, and you lay a foundation for your successors.

Let me conclude by quoting a legendary Philadelphian, Rocky Balboa. The original Rocky premiered in 1976, when I was in seventh grade. It captures the grit of this great city, and the spirit of America.

The remarks of John Adams and Robert Jackson bring to mind a scene from the 2006 sequel, when Rocky tells his son: "The world ain't all sunshine and rainbows.... But it ain't about how hard you hit. It's about how hard you can get hit, and keep moving forward."

That advice applies in boxing, in law, and in life.

Privilēgium Obligātiō. Privilege comes with obligations. If you like the rule of law, you need to keep it.

Thank you, and good night.

Jim,

Hope you're well.

I'm introducing you via e-mail to John Huber, our distinguished U.S. Attorney in Utah. John would like to meet with Chris the next time John is in DC (early January). If you could connect with John (or his scheduler) to find a mutually convenient time, I'd be grateful.

May make sense to have Dave Bowdich attend too, but I'll defer to John and Chris on that.

I believe Chris knows the subjects to be covered. Any questions, please let me know.

November 22, 2017

Hon. John W. Huber
United States Attorney for
The District of Utah
111 South Main Street
Suite 1800
Salt Lake City, UT 84111

Dear Mr. Huber:

In consultation with the Deputy Attorney General, I have requested that you review the matters referenced in the enclosed November 13, 2017, letter from Assistant Attorney General Stephen Boyd to House Judiciary Committee Chairman Robert Goodlatte and make recommendations to me or the Deputy Attorney General, as appropriate. Your review need not include matters that you determine are within the scope of the investigation being conducted by Special Counsel Robert Mueller.

Your recommendations should include whether any matters not currently under investigation warrants the opening of an investigation, whether any matters currently under investigation require further resources or further investigation, and whether any matters would merit the appointment of a Special Counsel.

Sincerely,

Jefferson B. Sessions III
Attorney General

U.S. Department of Justice

Office of Legislative Affairs

Office of the Assistant Attorney General

Washington, D.C. 20530

The Honorable Robert W. Goodlatte
Chairman
Committee on the Judiciary
U.S. House of Representatives
Washington, DC 20515

NOV 13 2017

Dear Chairman Goodlatte:

This responds to your letters dated July 27, 2017, and September 26, 2017, in which you and other Members request the appointment of a Special Counsel to investigate various matters, including the sale of Uranium One, alleged unlawful dealings related to the Clinton Foundation and other matters. We are sending identical responses to the other Members who joined your letter.

As noted during our prior meeting in response to your letters, the Department of Justice (Department) takes seriously its responsibility to provide timely and accurate information to Congress on issues of public interest, and seeks to do so in a non-political manner that is consistent with the Department's litigation, law enforcement, and national security responsibilities. Additionally, the Department's leadership has a duty to carefully evaluate the status of ongoing matters to ensure that justice is served and that the Department's communications with Congress are accurate and complete.

To further that goal, the Attorney General has directed senior federal prosecutors to evaluate certain issues raised in your letters. These senior prosecutors will report directly to the Attorney General and the Deputy Attorney General, as appropriate, and will make recommendations as to whether any matters not currently under investigation should be opened, whether any matters currently under investigation require further resources, or whether any matters merit the appointment of a Special Counsel. This will better enable the Attorney General and the Deputy Attorney General to more effectively evaluate and manage the caseload. In conducting this review, all allegations will be reviewed in light of the Principles of Federal Prosecution. (USAM 9-27.000)

As you know, consistent with longstanding policy, the Department does not ordinarily confirm or deny investigations, and this letter should not be construed to do so. While this policy can be frustrating, especially on matters of great public concern, it is necessary to ensure that the Department acts with fairness and thoughtfulness, and always in a manner consistent with the law and rules of the Department.

Page Two

In addition, you must know the Department will never evaluate any matter except on the facts and the law. Professionalism, integrity, and public confidence in the Department's work is critical for us, and no priority is higher.

Your letter referenced various allegations related to the Federal Bureau of Investigation's (FBI) handling of the investigation into former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton's use of a personal email server. On January 12, 2017, the Department's Inspector General (IG) sent a letter to you and other Members advising that the IG's office was initiating a review of, among other things:

- Allegations that Department or FBI policies or procedures were not followed in connection with, or in actions leading up to or related to, the FBI Director's public announcement on July 5, 2016, and the Director's letters to Congress on October 28 and November 6, 2016, and that certain underlying investigative decisions were based on improper considerations;
- Allegations that the FBI Deputy Director should have been recused from participating in certain investigative matters;
- Allegations that Department and FBI employees improperly disclosed non-public information; and
- Allegations that decisions regarding the timing of the FBI's release of certain Freedom of Information Act documents on October 30 and November 1, 2016, and the use of a Twitter account to publicize the same, were influenced by improper considerations.

These investigations include issues raised in your letters. In addition, the Department has forwarded a copy of your letters to the IG so he can determine whether he should expand the scope of his investigation based on the information contained in those letters.

Once the IG's review is complete, the Department will assess what, if any, additional steps are necessary to address any issues identified by that review.

We will conduct this evaluation according to the highest standards of justice. We hope this information is helpful. Please do not hesitate to contact this office if we may provide additional assistance regarding this or any other matter.

Very truly yours,

Stephen E. Boyd
Assistant Attorney General

Folks – I am not sure whom to send this to, so I thought I'd start with a blast to you three. For over two years now, our office has been hosting a training series for congregations of all faiths in Colorado that are interested in doing all they can to keep their houses of worship safe. We have put together almost 20 of these events all over the state, and they all have been well attended and well received. We put together this resource guide in January 2016 and shared it with all USAOs back then (I think through the AGAC, but I was not the USA at the time so I can't recall the exact mechanism we used). I am sending it to you now, after Sutherland Springs, so that ODAG is aware of this event series and this resource guide. Please call if you want to discuss this or get more info – we stand ready to help in any way we can to empower church safety and security. Thanks.
