QUESTION PRESENTED

Section 1231(a)(1) of Title 8 of the United States Code provides that when an alien has been ordered removed from the United States, the Attorney General shall remove the alien within 90 days. Section 1231(a)(2) requires the detention during the 90-day removal period of aliens who have been found removable based on a conviction for an aggravated felony. Section 1231(a)(6) then provides, in relevant part, that an alien who is removable for having committed an aggravated felony or "who has been determined by the Attorney General to be a risk to the community or unlikely to comply with the order of removal, may be detained beyond the removal period and, if released, shall be subject to the terms of supervision in paragraph (3)." 8 U.S.C. 1231(a)(6) (Supp. IV 1998). The question presented is:

Whether the Attorney General is authorized to continue to detain an alien beyond the 90-day removal period under 8 U.S.C. 1231(a)(6) (Supp. IV 1998) if the alien cannot be removed immediately from the country but the Attorney General has determined that the alien would pose a risk of flight or danger to the community if released and the alien's custody is subject to periodic administrative review.

8 U.S.C. 1231(a) (Supp. IV 1998).

STATEMENT

1. a. Respondent is a native and citizen of Laos. App., infra, 12a. He entered the United States as a refugee on August 27, 1981, and adjusted his status to lawful permanent resident in 1986. INS Alien file A25263177, at 133 (A-file).

On July 22, 1996, the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) issued respondent an order to show cause why he should not be deported, charging that respondent was subject to deportation under 8 U.S.C. 1251(a)(2)(A)(ii) (1994), as an alien convicted of two or more crimes involving moral turpitude, not arising out of a single scheme of criminal misconduct. A-file 135. That charge was based on respondent's conviction in state court on March 3, 1994, of reckless endangerment in the first degree, and on May 10, 1996, of rape in the third degree. Id. at 133-138. The first conviction involved a fight during which gunshots were fired (id. at 277) and the rape involved a 15-year-old victim (id. at 278-280).

In addition, respondent has several other adult convictions, including a June 1994 conviction for possession of marijuana and a October 1994 conviction for attempt to elude. A-file 276. Respondent also has two juvenile adjudications for robbery. Id. at 275. According to state court records, respondent admitted his involvement in both robberies (id. at 277), but during his custody review interview with the INS, respondent denied involvement in the second robbery (id. at 149). At the time of those two offenses, respondent was 17 years old and a member of the Red Cobra Bloods street gang. Id. at 277. The first robbery occurred when respondent and five other gang members "forced their way into a home where 16 adults and 4 small children were celebrating a birthday. [Respondent] and his accomplices all had ski masks on or bandannas over their faces. They also had weapons, two of which were sawed-off shotguns. [Respondent] and his accomplices entered the residence by crashing through a glass patio door. While pointing weapons at the adults, two or three of the [gang members] went around grabbing purses and wallets." Ibid. The second robbery occurred when respondent and other gang members burglarized a war surplus store. "While armed with deadly weapons, [respondent] and his accomplices were able to steal pistols, revolvers, rifles and shotguns." Ibid. The gang members then encountered the police and one gang member was shot and killed. Respondent was apprehended after a long foot chase. Ibid. Respondent's criminal history also reflects at least four arrests for failure to appear and two for probation violations. Id. at 148-149, 198-200. Respondent was released from his state term of imprisonment into the custody of the INS on March 6, 1997. Id. at 148.

b. On October 27, 1997, an immigration judge ordered respondent removed to Laos. A-file 22. Respondent did not appeal that order to the Board of Immigration Appeals, rendering his removal order final. App., infra, 4a, 12a.

c. On December 22, 1997, the INS sent a request for a travel document for respondent to the consulate of Laos. A-file 148. The INS has been unable to effectuate respondent's removal because the Laotian government has not responded to the request. Ibid. The INS continued to detain respondent under 8 U.S.C. 1231(a)(6) (Supp. IV 1998), subject to periodic administrative reviews of his custody. The most recent decision was based on the determination that respondent is "considered to be a risk to the safety of the community due to [his] long and violent criminal history and the considerable number of failures to appear [he has] on [his] record," and that respondent would not abide by the conditions imposed if he were released. 5/28/00 Decision to Continue Detention Following Interview; see also A-file 148-150 (earlier decision to continue in custody, also noting respondent's behavior while in custody, which included disciplinary action for possession of a sharpened instrument).

2. a. Meanwhile, respondent filed a habeas corpus petition in the United States District Court for the District of Nevada on April 19, 1999, challenging the constitutionality of his continued detention. The district court consolidated respondent's case with six other cases involving continued detention under Section 1231(a)(6).

On January 6, 2000, five judges of the district court entered a joint order in all seven cases denying the petitions for habeas relief. App., infra, 3a-11a. The court held that, under Barrera-Echavarria v. Rison, 44 F.3d 1441 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 976 (1995), respondent has no constitutional due process interest in freedom from detention. The court agreed with the decision of the Fifth Circuit in Zadvydas v. Underdown, 185 F.3d 279 (1999), cert. granted, 121 S. Ct. 297 (2000), that, once a final deportation order is entered against an alien, the alien is in the same position as was the excludable alien in Barrera-Echavarria. App., infra, 7a-9a. The court also agreed with the Zadvydas holding that, after entry of a final order of deportation, "the Government's sovereignty interest to detain and deport aliens, who have committed deportable offenses, is the same whether the alien's status is resident [like respondent's] or excludable [like the alien in Barrera-Echavarria]." Id. at 9a. Finding that there was no protected liberty interest, the court examined whether the administrative procedures employed by the INS to review respondent's custody status on a periodic basis denied him procedural due process. The court found that the INS's procedures have a rational relationship to a legitimate governmental interest and do not violate due process. Id. at 9a-10a.

b. On April 10, 2000, the Ninth Circuit issued its decision in Ma v. Reno, 208 F.3d 815, holding that the INS lacked authority as a statutory matter under 8 U.S.C. 1231(a)(6) (Supp. IV 1998) to detain an alien beyond the initial 90-day removal period described in 8 U.S.C. 1231(a)(1)(A) (Supp. IV 1998), notwithstanding that the Attorney General had continued to detain the alien because he posed a risk to the community, the alien's detention was subject to periodic administrative review, and the country to which the alien was ordered removed (Cambodia) is engaged in ongoing negotiations with the United States concerning a process for the return of its nationals ordered removed by the INS. The Ninth Circuit in Ma did not reach the constitutional grounds on which the district court had relied.

c. On August 1, 2000, the district court entered an order, in light of Ma, that respondent be released from detention immediately, pending the final outcome of his appeal. App., infra, 12a-14a.

d. On August 11, 2000, the court of appeals entered an order summarily vacating the district court's judgment denying habeas relief and remanding the case for reconsideration and further proceedings consistent with Ma. App., infra, 1a-2a.

ARGUMENT

This case presents the question whether the Attorney General is authorized to continue to detain an alien beyond the initial 90-day removal period under 8 U.S.C. 1231(a)(6) (Supp. IV 1998) if the alien cannot be removed immediately from the United States but the Attorney General has determined that the alien would pose a risk of flight or danger to the community if released and the alien's custody is subject to periodic administrative review. The court of appeals summarily vacated the judgment of the district court and remanded the case in light of its holding in Ma v. Reno, 208 F.3d 815 (9th Cir. 2000), that the INS lacks such authority. On October 10, 2000, this Court granted the petition for a writ of certiorari in Reno v. Ma, 121 S. Ct. 297, to review that decision of the Ninth Circuit. On the same date, the Court also granted the petition for a writ of certiorari in Zadvydas v. Underdown, 121 S. Ct. 297, to review a decision of the Fifth Circuit (185 F.3d 279 (1999)) that rejected a constitutional challenge to continued detention under Section 1231(a)(6), without questioning the statutory authority of the Attorney General to detain an alien in such circumstances. Because the question presented in this case is already before the Court in Ma and Zadvydas, the petition for a writ of certiorari should be held pending the Court's decisions in those cases.

CONCLUSION

The petition for a writ of certiorari should be held pending this Court's decisions in Reno v. Ma, No. 00-38, and Zadvydas v. Underdown, No. 99-7791, and then be disposed of as appropriate in light of the decisions in those cases.

Respectfully submitted.

The court vacates the district court's judgment and remands this 28 U.S.C. § 2241 petition for a writ of habeas corpus for reconsideration and further proceedings consistent with Ma v. Reno, 208 F.3d 815 (9th Cir. 2000), petition for cert. filed, 69 U.S.L.W. ___ (U.S. July 5, 2000) (No. 00-38).

IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION SERVICE, RESPONDENT

[Filed: Jan. 6, 2000]

ORDER

I. Introduction

Petitioners are a lead group selected from more than ninety (90) petitioners for writs of habeas corpus pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 2241. All seek release from detention of the Immigration and Naturalization Service ("INS"). We determined that all of the petitions presented common legal issues. The parties briefed these issues, and the matter was submitted after oral argument. We have jurisdiction to consider these petitions. 28 U.S.C. § 2241 (1994); Magana-Pizano v. INS, Nos. 97-15678, 97-70384, 1999 WL 1249703, at *5-6 (9th Cir. Dec. 27, 1999).

II. Background

Each lead Petitioner, and all Petitioners but one, have come to the United States from one of four countries: Vietnam, Cambodia, Laos, and Cuba. Some became lawful permanent residents. Others, including Petitioner Carlos Mejias Caraballo, came to the United States as refugees and never adjusted their status to lawful permanent residence. The Petitioners have been ordered removed to their native countries because they were convicted of deportable offenses. The Petitioners did not appeal the orders of deportation to the Board of Immigration Appeals or the Court of Appeals. Nevertheless, the INS has been unable to remove the Petitioners despite the final order of removal because their countries of origin will not receive them. Petitioners are currently being held in State facilities in this district pending removal. Therefore, Petitioners challenge their continued detention on both procedural and substantive due process grounds.

Before 1996, aliens could not be detained pending deportation more than six months once there was a final order of deportation. Former INA § 242(c), 8 U.S.C. § 1252(c) (1994). In 1996, Congress enacted the Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996 (AEDPA), Pub. L. 104-132, 110 Stat. 1214 (enacted on April 24, 1996), and the Illegal Immigration Reform and Immigrant Responsibility Act of 1996 (IIRIRA), Pub.

L. 104-208, 110 Stat. 3009 (enacted on September 30, 1996). The IIRIRA provides for the mandatory detention of criminal aliens during removal proceedings and for ninety (90) days thereafter, during which time removal should generally occur. INA § 241(a)(2), 8 U.S.C. 1231(a)(6) (1999). After the ninety-day period the Attorney General retains discretion to detain the criminal aliens that she determines are "a risk to the community or unlikely to comply with the order of removal." INA § 241(a)(2), 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(6) (1999). The Attorney General has delegated this discretionary power for release to the INS District Directors. See 8 C.F.R. § 241.4 (1999); 8 C.F.R. § 236.1(d)(2)(ii) (1999). Pursuant to these regulations, and prior to release, the alien must show "by clear and convincing evidence that the release would not pose a danger to the community or a significant flight risk." 8 C.F.R. § 241.4(a).

III. Exhaustion of Administrative Remedies

The INS has several administrative procedures to review an alien's status and to determine whether the alien should be released. An alien can request a review of custody status in writing. 8 C.F.R. § 236.1(d)(2)(ii); 8 C.F.R. § 241.4. The INS has also started to automatically review aliens' custody status according to procedures that the INS has not yet formally promulgated as regulations ("Interim Rules"). See Chi Thon Ngo v. INS, 192 F.3d 390, 400-01 (3d Cir. 1999) (Appendix). All lead Petitioners have made written requests for review of their custody.

Courts will not require exhaustion when the administrative body has no power to determine certain issues, such as the constitutionality of a statute or regulation. However, courts will often require exhaustion when the issues presented are procedural errors that the administrative appeals process can correct, even when the procedural errors might also violate the constitutional guarantee of due process. See Liu v. Waters, 55 F.3d 421, 425 (9th Cir. 1995).

Petitioners claim that their continued detention and the custody review procedures violate the guarantees of the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment. The administrative appeals process cannot determine this type of claim, and thus requiring exhaustion of administrative remedies would serve no purpose. See, e.g., Tam v. INS, 14 F. Supp. 2d 1184, 1189 (E.D. Cal. 1998) (citing Wang v. Reno, 81 F.3d 808, 814-15 (9th Cir. 1996)).

IV. Due Process

The Petitioners suggested for the first time at oral argument that three prior Ninth Circuit decisions require the issuance of writs in this case. Wolck v. Weedin, 58 F.2d 928 (9th Cir. 1932); Saksagansky v. Weedin, 53 F.2d 13 (9th Cir. 1931); Caranica v. Nagle, 28 F.2d 955 (9th Cir. 1928). While the court in each of these cases stated that if the immigration authorities could not promptly effect the deportation, the aliens were to be released, the court did not ground its decision on constitutional due process. Instead, the statute that the court relied on contained no authorization for immigration authorities to detain an alien after the entry of a final order of deportation. Former 8 U.S.C. § 156 (1940). Therefore, we conclude that these cases are not controlling on the issues currently before us.

Analysis of whether government action violates the protections of the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment requires us to determine if the interest that Petitioners propose is a fundamental right or protected liberty interest. Reno v. Flores, 507 U.S. 292, 301-02 (1993). Our definition or the proposed interest must be careful and restrained. Id. at 302. Here, the proposed interest is the right to be free from immigration detention pending deportation, when the INS cannot effect prompt deportation. If we find that there is a fundamental right or protected liberty interest, then any INS infringements upon that interest must be narrowly tailored to serve a compelling governmental interest. Id. If there is no protected liberty interest, then any INS infringements upon that interest must be rationally related to a legitimate governmental interest. Id. at 305.

A. Substantive Due Process

In Barrera-Echavarria v. Rison, a case involving a Cuban who came to the United States in the Mariel boatlift and who was an excludable alien, the Ninth Circuit concluded that "applicable Supreme Court precedent squarely precludes a conclusion that [excludable aliens] have a constitutional right to be free from detention, even for an extended time." 44 F.3d 1441, 1449 (9th Cir. 1995). The court noted that the case did not involve "the constitutionality of 'indefinite' or 'permanent' detention with no prospect of release", and that "Barrera's case continues to be reviewed at least annually to determine if he meets established criteria for granting parole." Id. at 1450. See also Chi Thon Ngo v. INS, 192 F.3d 390 (3d Cir. 1999). The holding in Barrera is directly applicable to Petitioner Carlos Mejias Caraballo, who was paroled into the United States as a refugee from Cuba and who has never adjusted his status. He has never been a lawful permanent resident. Therefore he has no protected liberty interest in being free from immigration detention. Id. at 1450.

The remaining Petitioners urge us not to extend the holding of Barrera to resident aliens as the Fifth Circuit in Zadvydas v. Underdown, 185 F.3d 279 (5th Cir. 1999) has done.[1]

In Zadvydas, the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit held that there is no constitutional distinction between resident aliens and excludable aliens "when both the right asserted and the governmental interest are identical to those in the parallel case of an excludable alien." 185 F.3d at 295. Zadvydas did not-as the Petitioners in this case do not-challenge the procedure used by the Government in deciding to deport, or the final result. The court held that the interest in freedom from detention asserted by a resident alien who was ordered deported is identical to the right asserted by an excludable alien. Id. at 297. With respect to the Government's interest, the court held:

> "In the circumstances presented here, the national interest in effectuating deportation is identical regardless of whether the alien was once resident or excludable. When a former resident alien is—with the adequate and unchallenged procedural due pro> cess to which his assertion of a right to remain in the country entitles him-finally ordered deported, the decision has irrevocably been made to expel him from the national community. Nothing remains but to effectuate this decision. The need to expel such an alien is identical, from a national sovereignty perspective, to the need to remove an excludable alien who has been finally and properly ordered returned to his county of origin." Id. at 296.

[1] These Petitioners also cite Landon v. Plasencia, 459 U.S. 21, 32 (1982) for the proposition that once an alien gains entry to the United States, her constitutional status changes such that she is entitled to a fair hearing when threatened with deportation. While true, this is inapposite; no Petitioner here claims that a fair deportation or removal hearing was denied.

We agree with the Fifth Circuit that once a final deportation order is entered the Government's sovereignty interest to detain and deport aliens, who have committed deportable offenses, is the same whether the alien's status is resident or excludable. Clearly, the power to exclude aliens is a "fundamental sovereign attribute exercised by the Government's political departments largely immune from judicial control." Shaughnessy v. United States ex rel. Mezei, 345 U.S. 206, 210 (1953). We also agree that the interest in freedom from detention is the same whether an alien is resident or excludable, once that alien has been properly ordered removed. Because Barrera holds that excludable aliens have no such right to be free under the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment, we conclude that Petitioners who were resident aliens also have no such right.

B. Procedural Due Process.

There being no protected liberty interest, we examine whether the procedures employed by the INS have a rational relationship to a legitimate governmental interest. Flores, 507 U.S. at 305. We find that they do.

It is the duty of the INS to remove Petitioners. Until they can do that, it is also their duty to keep Petitioners from fleeing or endangering the community. Where, as here, an excludable or resident alien has not been deported after ninety days, the Interim Rules provide for the review of the custody status of the alien. See Chi Thon Ngo, 193 F.3d at 400-01 (Appendix). These reviews are conducted after notice and afford the alien the opportunity to be assisted by a representative and to present oral and written information at the review in support of release. The alien's criminal record does not create a presumption against release. If the decision is to continue detention, the alien is entitled to receive a written statement of reasons for the decision. Moreover, the INS then reviews the alien's status semi-annually-sooner if requested-by a process to which all lead Petitioners already have availed themselves.[2] Id.; see also 8 C.F.R. § 241.4.

The Court finds these procedures have a rational relationship to a legitimate government interest and therefore do not offend procedural due process.

V. International Law/Treaties

Petitioners also argue that their continued detention violates international law. It is well settled, however, that a controlling legislative or executive act, or a controlling judicial decision, displaces international law. Barrera, 44 F.3d at 1451 (citing The Paquette Habana,

[2] At oral argument, Petitioners' counsel reported anecdotally that he had attended some custody reviews and believed that the District Directors or other officers of the INS were not following the Interim Rules. Even if true, it is not necessarily common to all Petitioners and therefore is outside the embrace of this Order.

175 U.S. 637, 700 (1900). Legislation authorizes the Attorney General to detain Petitioners. 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(6). Moreover, Barrera is a controlling judicial decision. Therefore, international law has been displaced.

VI. Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons the petitions are denied without prejudice to any subsequent claims that the INS has not followed its own procedures.

OUDONE MOUNSAVENG, PETITIONER

[Filed: Aug. 1, 2000]

ORDER

Before the Court are Petitioner's Supplemental Points and Authorities, Respondent's "Opposition to Petitioner's Motion for Order Granting Habeas Relief and Immediate Release and Motion to Hold in Abeyance," and Petitioner's "Reply to Respondent's Opposition for Order Granting Habeas Relief and Immediate Release and Motion to Hold in Abeyance, and Petitioner's Request That This Matter Be Given Emergency Consideration." The Court sees no need to wait for Respondent's Reply regarding the Motion to Hold in Abeyance.

Petitioner is a native of Laos. Petitioner has established that he entered the United States, that his removal or deportation order became final on October 27, 1997, and that the ninety-day removal period of 8

U.S.C. § 1231 expired on January 25, 1998. Ma v. Reno, 208 F.3d 815 (9th Cir. 2000), thus applies to Petitioner.

The United States does not have a repatriation agreement with Laos. Respondent cannot hold Petitioner in custody pursuant to 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(6) beyond the ninety-day removal period. Ma, 208 F.3d at 822.

The Court cannot grant the Petition for a Writ of Habeas Corpus. Petitioner is currently appealing the denial of his Petition. See Order #25. However, the Court has the ability to grant an interim release order in habeas corpus cases that are on appeal. See Stein v. Wood, 127 F.3d 1187, 1189 (9th Cir. 1997); see also Fed. R. App. P. 23(b)(3). Given Ma, the Court would grant the Petition were this case not on appeal. Therefore, the Court will order Petitioner released pending the final outcome of his appeal, subject to the supervision requirements of 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(3).

Respondent's Motion to Hold in Abeyance is without merit. Ma is the final judgment of the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, and it is binding precedent upon this Court. Wedbush, Noble, Cooke, Inc. v. S.E.C., 714 F.2d 923, 924 (9th Cir. 1983). This Court cannot hold this action in abeyance until such time as the Supreme Court grants or denies the Government's petition for a writ of certiorari regarding Ma. Yong v. I.N.S., 208 F.3d 1116, 1119-21 (9th Cir. 2000).

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that the Motion to Hold in Abeyance is DENIED.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that Respondent shall release Petitioner from detention immediately, pending the final outcome of his appeal, subject to the supervision requirements of 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(3).

DATED this 31st day of July, 2000.
