Hello. A lot of people have been talking about the consequences that the country is facing due to the Monsanto monopoly. However, I think that the issue should also be examined from another angle. I would not have a problem with Monsanto if they were a monopoly that was helping the agricultural system and the ecosystem and actually cared about feeding families and supporting sustainability, but that doesn't seem to be the case. Monsanto is essentially destroying the world for profit. They must be addicted to the money they make because no one who saw the effects of genetic engineering on local agriculture and the effects of pesticide run-off on the environment could ethically (or intelligently) rationalize his or her actions. Their organization needs to be significantly curtailed for the sake of the country and planet's natural resources.
