My son is part owner of a blueberry farm in Eugene, Oregon, called Royal Blue Organics. He gets no encouragement, no subsidies, and no breaks from the government to help grow, sell or promote a crop that is sustainable and doesn't burden the land or waterways with toxic chemicals. Why is this? We organic consumers know the organic farmers don't have the clout that Big Business such as Monsanto does in the government. Monsanto et al. have lied to farmers, congress and consumers about the benefits of its toxic products. No strict standards can be legislated as the money from Monsanto and others infest our government. Their profits are in conflict with our health and the sustainability of our farms. Please do something about it now.

Thank you for letting me comment.
Sincerely

Sincerely,

Enid Griffin
