

From: George Moore <listenin33@hotmail.com>
Sent: Wednesday, December 23, 2009 2:32 PM
To: ATR-Agricultural Workshops <agriculturalworkshops@usdoj.gov>
Subject: Regarding the antitrust investigation into corporate food monopolies

---

Legal Policy Section, Antitrust Division, U.S. Department of Justice,

I find industrial food to be, by far most often, nutrient poor and poisoned with preservatives, and flavor and color enhancers. Why should we ever waste precious, limited resources on that crap?

Industrial scale food processing is not safer. Monoculture growing, an absolute necessity for large scale production, has devastating consequences on our environment. Employment in agriculture is at an all time low, while large scale production does not create jobs, it takes away jobs.

Aggression, amounting to assault on communities and farmers who do not bow to the corporate will, does not foster healthy relationships or healthy products. Why should we ever waste precious, limited resources on that crap?

Sincerely,

Howard Traite
Wynantskill, NY

---

Hotmail: Trusted email with powerful SPAM protection. Sign up now.