I am concerned about the lack of competition in agricultural markets. Just one company, Monsanto, controls the majority of seeds in the US, and regularly threatens farmers who don't buy its seeds.

Why aren't there labels informing consumers where it grew, what chemicals are on it, and if it's genetically modified?

Food is grown and raised in ways that are terrible for the environment, with methods that pollute the water, poison the soil, and threaten our long-term food security.

Please ensure that both farmers' and consumers' rights are protected in the food market and that companies aren't given a free pass to do whatever they please.
