

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE WESTERN DISTRICT OF VIRGINIA
LYNCHBURG DIVISION

LIBERTY UNIVERSITY, Inc., a Virginia)
Nonprofit corporation, MICHELE G. WADDELL,) DAVID STEIN, M.D., JOANNE V. MERRILL,) DELEGATE KATHY BYRON, and JEFF) HELGESON)

Plaintiffs)

v.)

TIMOTHY GEITHNER, Secretary of the) Treasury of the United States, in his official) capacity, KATHLEEN SEBELIUS, Secretary) of the United States Department of Health and) Human Services, in her official capacity, HILDA)
L. SOLIS, Secretary of the United States) Department of Labor, in her official capacity,) and ERIC HOLDER, Attorney General of the) United States, in his official capacity,) Defendants.)

Case No. 6:10-cv-00015-nkm

REPLY MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO DISMISS

Judge Norman K. Moon

TABLE OF CONTENTS

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES. iii

INTRODUCTION..... 1

ARGUMENT..... 2

 I. THIS COURT LACKS SUBJECT MATTER JURISDICTION..... 2

 A. No plaintiff has suffered an injury-in-fact. 2

 B. Plaintiffs’ claims are unripe..... 4

 C. The Anti-Injunction Act bars plaintiffs’ claims..... 6

 II. THE COMPREHENSIVE REGULATORY MEASURES OF THE ACA, INCLUDING THE MINIMUM COVERAGE PROVISION, ARE A PROPER EXERCISE OF CONGRESS’S POWERS UNDER THE COMMERCE AND NECESSARY AND PROPER CLAUSES. 7

 A. The minimum coverage provision, which regulates the financing of health care services, is integral to the larger regulatory scheme and is necessary and proper to the regulation of interstate commerce..... 7

 B. The minimum coverage provision regulates conduct that substantially affects interstate commerce. 9

 C. Plaintiffs cannot deny these substantial effects by characterizing the decision to forego insurance as “inactivity”. 12

 D. The minimum coverage provision is a valid exercise of Congress’s independent power under the General Welfare Clause. 15

 E. The employer responsibility provision is a valid exercise of Congress’s
 Commerce Clause authority and, independently, its General Welfare
 Clause power. 16

 F. The ACA does not violate the Tenth Amendment. 17

 G. The ACA does not offend the Guarantee Clause..... 18

 III. PLAINTIFFS’ FIRST AMENDMENT CLAIMS ARE MERITLESS. 18

A.	The ACA does not violate the Free Exercise Clause or the Religious Freedom Restoration Act.....	18
B.	The ACA does not violate plaintiffs’ free speech or free association rights.....	22
C.	The ACA’s religious exemptions are consistent with the Establishment Clause.	22
IV.	PLAINTIFFS’ EQUAL PROTECTION CLAUSE CLAIM SHOULD BE DISMISSED.....	23
V.	THE ACA IS NOT A DIRECT TAX OR A CAPITATION TAX.	24

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Cases:

Adams v. Comm’r,
170 F.3d 173 (3d Cir. 1999)..... 20, 21

Alexander v. “Americans United” Inc.,
416 U.S. 752 (1974)..... 7

Anheuser-Busch, Inc. v. Schmoke,
63 F.3d 1305 (1995)..... 8

Ashcroft v. Iqbal,
129 S. Ct. 1937 (2009)..... 4

Baldwin v. Sebelius,
No. 10-1033, 2010 WL 3418436 (S.D. Cal. Aug. 27, 2010)..... 4

Barr v. United States,
736 F.2d 1134 (7th Cir. 1984). 6

Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly,
550 U.S. 544 (2007)..... 4

Bob Jones Univ. v. Simon
416 U.S. 725 (1974)..... 6, 15

Brooklyn Legal Servs. Corp. v. Legal Servs. Corp., 462 F.3d 219 (2d Cir. 2006)..... 17

Browne v. United States,
176 F.3d 25 (2d Cir. 1999)..... 20

Brzonkala v. Va. Polytechnic Inst.,
169 F.3d 820 (4th Cir. 1999). 10

Carter v. Carter Coal Co.,
298 U.S. 238 (1936)..... 15

Citizens United v. FEC,
130 S. Ct. 876 (2010).....3

City of Boerne v. Flores,
521 U.S. 507 (1997).....21

Dickens v. United States,
671 F.2d 969 (6th Cir. 1982). 7

Droz v. Comm’r,
48 F.3d 1120 (9th Cir. 1995). 20, 21

EEOC v. Wyoming,
460 U.S. 226 (1983). 17

Emp’t Div. v. Smith,
494 U.S. 872 (1990). 19

Enochs v. Williams Packing & Nav. Co.,
370 U.S. 1 (1962). 7

FCC v. Beach Communications,
508 U.S. 307 (1993). 24

Goehring v. Brophy,
94 F.3d 1294 (9th Cir. 1996). 21

Gonzales v. O Centro Espirita Beneficente Uniao do Vegetal,
546 U.S. 418 (2006). 20

Gonzales v. Raich,
545 U.S. 1 (2005). 7, 8, 10, 12

Heller v. Doe by Doe,
509 U.S. 312 (1993). 24

Hodel v. Va. Surface Mining & Reclamation Ass’n,
452 U.S. 264 (1981). 21

Hoffman v. Hunt,
126 F.3d 575 (4th Cir. 1997). 10

Hylton v. United States,
3 U.S. (3 Dall.) 171 (1796). 25

Jenkins v. Comm’r,
483 F.3d 90 (2d Cir. 2007). 20

Kimel v. Fla. Bd. of Regents,
528 U.S. 62 (2000). 17

Knowlton v. Moore,
 178 U.S. 41 (1900)..... 25

Lake Carriers’ Ass’n v. Macmullan,
 406 U.S. 498 (1972)..... 5

Largess v. Supreme Judicial Court for State of Mass., 373 F.3d 219 (1st Cir. 2004)..... 18

Lottery Case,
 188 U.S. 321 (1903)..... 9

Luxton v. North River Bridge Co.,
 153 U.S. 525 (1894)..... 14

M’Culloch v. Maryland,
 17 U.S. (4 Wheat.) 316 (1819)..... 9

McConnell v. FEC,
 540 U.S. 93 (2003)..... 3, 4

Medeiros v. Vincent,
 431 F.3d 25 (1st Cir. 2005)..... 17

New York v. United States,
 505 U.S. 144 (1992)..... 17

Nurad, Inc. v. William E. Hooper & Sons Co.,
 966 F.2d 837 (4th Cir. 1992). 14

Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. v. State Energy Res. Conservation & Dev. Comm’n,
 461 U.S. 190 (1983)..... 5

Perez v. United States,
 402 U.S. 146, 154 (1971)..... 12

Pierce v. Soc’y of Sisters,
 268 U.S. 510 (1925)..... 5

Raines v. Byrd,
 521 U.S. 811 (1997)..... 2

Regional Rail Reorganization Act Cases,
 419 U.S. 143 (1974)..... 5

Roberts v. U.S. Jaycees,
468 U.S. 609 (1984)..... 22

Rodgers v. United States,
138 F.2d 992 (6th Cir. 1943). 25

Sabri v. United States,
541 U.S. 600 (2004)..... 10

Sanner v. Bd. of Trade of City of Chicago,
62 F.3d 918 (7th Cir. 1995). 5

Sonzinsky v. United States,
300 U.S. 506 (1937)..... 15

Tenn. Elec. Power Co. v. TVA,
306 U.S. 118 (1939)..... 17

Toilet Goods Ass'n v. Gardner,
387 U.S. 158 (1967)..... 5

Union Elec. Co. v. United States,
363 F.3d 1292 (Fed. Cir. 2004)..... 25

United States v. Aiken,
974 F.2d 446 (4th Cir. 1992). 15

United States v. Clintwood Elkhorn Mining Co.,
553 U.S. 1 (2008)..... 7

United States v. Comstock,
130 S. Ct. 1949 (2010)..... 9

United States v. Hacker,
565 F.3d 522 (8th Cir.) 17

United States v. Indianapolis Baptist Temple,
224 F.3d 627 (7th Cir. 2000). 20

United States v. Jones,
976 F.2d 176 (4th Cir. 1992). 15

United States v. Kahriger,
345 U.S. 22 (1953)..... 16

United States v. Lee , 455 U.S. 252 (1982).....	19, 20, 21
United States v. Lopez , 514 U.S. 549 (1995).....	7, 10
United States v. Morrison , 529 U.S. 598 (2000).....	10
United States v. Olin Corp. , 107 F.3d 1506 (11th Cir. 1997).	14
United States v. Parker , 362 F.3d 1279 (10th Cir.)	17
United States v. Sage , 92 F.3d 101 (2d Cir. 1996).....	13
United States v. Sanchez , 340 U.S. 42 (1950).....	15, 16
Virginia v. Am. Booksellers Ass'n , 484 U.S. 383 (1988).....	5
Western and Southern Life Insurance Co. v. State Bd. of Equalization of California , 451 U.S. 654 (1981).....	24
Williamson v. Lee Optical of Okla. , 348 U.S. 483 (1955).....	24
Constitution and Statutes:
U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 1	15
6 U.S.C. § 443(a)(1).....	13
16 U.S.C. § 1441(c)(4).....	13
18 U.S.C. § 228(a).	13
26 U.S.C. § 1402(g)(1).	22, 23
26 U.S.C. § 5000A(g)(1).....	6
26 U.S.C. § 5000A(d)(2)(A).	23

26 U.S.C. § 5000A(d)(2)(B).	23
26 U.S.C. § 5000A(d)(2)(B)(ii)(II).	23
26 U.S.C. § 6651.	25
26 U.S.C. § 6671(a).	6
26 U.S.C. § 7421(a).	6
30 U.S.C. § 1257(f).	13
42 U.S.C. § 2210(a).	13
42 U.S.C. § 2243(d)(1).	13
42 U.S.C. § 2458c(b)(2)(A).	13
42 U.S.C. § 4012a(a).	13
42 U.S.C. § 4012a(b).	13
42 U.S.C. § 4012a(e).	13
42 U.S.C. § 9601.	13
42 U.S.C. § 9607(a).	14
45 U.S.C. § 358(a).	13
49 U.S.C. § 13906(a)(1).	13
Pub. L. No. 111-148, 124 Stat. 119 (2010)
§ 1321(b)	18
§ 1321(c)	18
§ 1501(b)	23
§ 1501(a)(2).	21
§ 1501(a)(2)(I)	8
§ 1501(a)(2)(F)	9
§ 10106(a).	8, 9

Miscellaneous:

Alan C. Monheit et al., Community Rating and Sustainable Individual Health Insurance Markets in New Jersey, 23 Health Affairs 167 (2004)..... 8

Congressional Budget Office, Key Issues in Analyzing Major Health Insurance Proposals (2008).....13

Congressional Budget Office, How Many Lack Health Insurance and for How Long? (May 2003).....13

Health Reform in the 21st Century: Insurance Market Reforms: Hearing Before the H. Comm. on Ways and Means, 111th Cong. 13 (2009)..... 8

Stephen T. Parente & Tarren Bragdon, Healthier Choice: An Examination of Market Based Reforms for New York’s Uninsured, Medical Progress Report No. 10 at i (Manhattan Institute, Sept. 2009).....8

Uninsured and Untreated: A Look at Uninsured Adults Who Received No Medical Care for Two Years (Kaiser Fam. Found. 2010).....12

Summary Health Statistics for U.S. Children: National Health Interview Survey 2008 (Centers for Disease Control and Prevention 2009)12

INTRODUCTION

The dire pronouncements in plaintiffs’ opposition—that the ACA, for example, “threatens the foundational principles of the Constitution” and grants the federal government “absolute sovereignty” and a “censorial power over the people,” Opp’n 34, 35—signal the political rather than legal nature of plaintiffs’ many claims. Beneath the rhetoric, what plaintiffs ask this Court to do is disregard the jurisdictional limits of Article III and the Anti-Injunction Act, abandon the deference courts pay to duly enacted legislation, and depart from settled law. Contrary to plaintiffs’ accusations, upholding the minimum coverage provision and the employer responsibility provision requires no “unparalleled expansion of the Commerce Clause.” Id. at 1. These provisions are important, but incremental, extensions of decades of federal regulation of the health care market—extensions that are by no means revolutionary. They are necessary and proper to ensure the success of the ACA’s broader insurance reforms. And apart from ensuring the viability of the ACA’s regulations of the insurance industry, these provisions by themselves regulate economic decisions about how to finance health care services that impose tens of billions of dollars annually in costs on interstate commerce.

Plaintiffs’ trail of Article IV, First Amendment, Fifth Amendment, Tenth Amendment, and statutory claims also leads nowhere. Contrary to plaintiffs’ doomsday predictions, the ACA does not spell the end of a republican form of government in the United States. Nor does it prevent plaintiffs from “making healthy lifestyle choices” (id. at 36), require them to pay for unnecessary medical procedures, or require them to obtain health care services that conflict with their religious beliefs; there is therefore no violation of the Free Exercise Clause or the Religious Freedom Restoration Act. Plaintiffs cannot salvage their free speech and free association claims by asserting that Congress has never before mandated that “individuals and employers involuntarily participate in economic activity,” id. at 39, as this consideration—even if it were true—is irrelevant to whether the coverage provisions affect plaintiffs’ ability to express a message. Nor do the ACA’s two religious exemptions raise an Establishment Clause question; these exemptions do not require any more “intrusive monitoring of religious belief” than the “monitoring” that already occurs under a nearly identical exemption in the Internal Revenue Code—an exemption courts have repeatedly upheld. Plaintiffs’ equal protection challenge is equally baseless; they deem the ACA’s existing exemptions irrational for not accommodating more conscientious objectors, but it is well settled that under-inclusiveness alone does not render a law irrational. Finally, plaintiffs’ belated attempt to raise a Tenth Amendment anti-commandeering challenge must fail, as only a state has standing to bring such a suit.

Clearly, plaintiffs disagree with the policy judgments embodied in the statute, as they are entitled to do. But this Court is not the proper place to resolve that disagreement.

ARGUMENT

I. THIS COURT LACKS SUBJECT MATTER JURISDICTION

A. No plaintiff has suffered an injury-in-fact

Plaintiffs do not dispute that the two legislator plaintiffs—Delegate Kathy Byron and Council Member Jeff Helgeson—cannot base standing on injuries that are institutional and ideological. See Opening Br. 17-18; Raines v. Byrd, 521 U.S. 811, 816 (1997). Further, they neither explain how the ACA’s so-called “layers of bureaucratic regulation” will affect Dr. David Stein’s practice nor cite any provision of the ACA that will “interfere with Dr. Stein’s liberty interest in practicing his profession,” Second Am. Compl. ¶ 35. These claims of injury reduce to mere ideological umbrage at the statute Congress has enacted. As for the claims of plaintiffs Liberty, Waddell, and Merrill—it is fatal, without more, that they seek to enjoin statutory provisions that will not take effect until 2014. Any alleged injury from a provision not scheduled to take effect for years is “too remote temporally” to support standing. McConnell v. FEC, 540 U.S. 93, 226 (2003), overruled in part on other grounds by Citizens United v. FEC, 130 S. Ct. 876 (2010).¹

Indeed, the remoteness of any alleged injury renders plaintiffs’ claims entirely speculative. Liberty asserts that it “assuredly faces significant penalties” in 2015 because “the University’s coverage will almost certainly be determined insufficient” in 2014, Opp’n 3, but the basis for Liberty’s assurance on this point is unclear. As explained previously, Opening Br. 14-15, Liberty’s current coverage may satisfy the employer responsibility provision, and even if it does not, it is also quite possible that no full-time employee will receive a premium tax credit in a health insurance Exchange, in which case Liberty would not be liable for any penalty. As for the individual plaintiffs, by 2014, any number of changes in their personal or financial situation may lead them to satisfy the minimum coverage provision. As the first and only court to address this standing issue reasoned, “even if [the plaintiff] does not have insurance at this time, he may well satisfy the minimum coverage provision of the Act by 2014: he may take a job that offers health insurance, or qualify for Medicaid or Medicare, or he may choose to purchase health insurance before the effective date of the Act.” Baldwin v. Sebelius, No. 10-1033, 2010 WL 3418436, at *3 (S.D. Cal. Aug. 27, 2010).

¹ According to plaintiffs, the conclusion in McConnell rested on “[t]he contingent nature of a claim that a regulation might affect future decisions that might be made if other decisions are made.” Opp’n 13. Plaintiffs misread McConnell. The Court did not base its conclusion on the likelihood that Senator McConnell would run for reelection or on the probability that the alleged injury would occur. The Court reasoned instead that an injury five years in the future is simply “too remote temporally” to support standing. McConnell, 540 U.S. at 226. So too here.

B. Plaintiffs’ claims are unripe

For the same reasons, plaintiffs’ claims are not ripe for review. Plaintiffs cannot transform the speculative possibility of future injury into current concrete harm by asserting that the coverage provisions require them “either [to] begin extensive reorganization of their personal and financial affairs or risk being liable for thousands of dollars in penalties beginning in 2014.” Opp’n 9. Such reasoning would render the standing requirement meaningless. A plaintiff could always assert a current need to prepare for the most remote and ill-defined harms. Indeed, if plaintiffs’ theory were correct, in McConnell, Senator McConnell could easily have circumvented his lack of standing merely by alleging that he was preparing now for the possibility that he might run for reelection five years in the future. In any event, plaintiffs do not explain how the minimum coverage provision or the employer responsibility provision is forcing them now, years before these provisions will take effect, to undergo “significant lifestyle and occupational changes.” Id. Their “naked assertion[s] devoid of ‘further factual enhancement’” do not suffice to show an actual, imminent injury. Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949 (2009) (quoting Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 557 (2007)) (alteration in original).

Finally, even if plaintiffs were currently taking some action in anticipation of the minimum coverage and employer responsibility provisions, this action is not fairly traceable to the ACA. Any decision that plaintiffs make now to “extensive[ly] reorganiz[e] . . . their personal and financial affairs” (Opp’n 9) “stems not from the operation of [the challenged statute] but from [plaintiffs’] own . . . personal choice.” McConnell, 540 U.S. at 228. Indeed, this Court would “simply will not be able to determine whether” the ACA caused plaintiffs’ alleged injuries. Sanner v. Bd. of Trade of City of Chi., 62 F.3d 918, 924 (7th Cir. 1995). As in Sanner, “a host of articulable and inarticulable reasons” may lead plaintiffs to decide “not to purchase”; plaintiffs’ assertions that the ACA is the sole culprit are thus insufficient as a matter of law. Id. at 923-24 (internal citations and quotation marks omitted).

Plaintiffs also say that the issues here are fit for judicial decision because they are purely legal. Opp’n 8. Ripeness, however, turns not merely on the nature of the claim, but on whether and when it will arise. Or, as the Supreme Court framed the inquiry in Toilet Goods Ass’n v. Gardner, the issue is not only “how adequately a court can deal with the legal issue presented, but also . . . the degree and nature of the regulation’s present effect on those seeking relief.” 387 U.S. 158, 164 (1967) (emphasis added). Even where the issue presented is “a purely legal question,” id. at 163, uncertainty whether a statutory provision will harm the plaintiffs renders the controversy not ripe for review, id. at 163-64. The cases plaintiffs cite do not hold otherwise; rather, they confirm that an actual or imminent injury, or a credible threat of an immediate criminal penalty if the plaintiff violates the law, is a prerequisite for a ripe claim.²

² See Pac. Gas & Elec. Co. v. State Energy Res. Conservation & Dev. Comm’n, 461 U.S. 190, 201 (1983) (plaintiffs had to spend millions to build nuclear facilities before resolution of the legal issue); Virginia v. Am. Booksellers Ass’n, 484 U.S. 383, 392-93 (1988) (“[T]he law is aimed directly at plaintiffs, who, if their interpretation of the statute is correct, will have to take significant and costly compliance measures or risk criminal prosecution.”); Pierce v. Soc’y of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510, 532 (1925) (“The Compulsory Education Act of 1922 has already caused the withdrawal from its schools of children who would otherwise continue, and their income has steadily declined.” (emphasis added)); Reg’l Rail Reorganization Act Cases, 419 U.S. 102, 144 (1974) (The Act “necessitates the present denial to the railroads in reorganization of options otherwise available.” (emphasis added)); Lake Carriers’ Ass’n v. Macmullan, 406 U.S. 498, 506-07 (1972) (plaintiffs were “required under Michigan law to install sewage storage devices [and are] now under such an obligation.” (emphasis added)).

C. The Anti-Injunction Act bars plaintiffs' claims

The Anti-Injunction Act (“AIA”) likewise bars jurisdiction here. Plaintiffs raise three failing arguments to the contrary. First, plaintiffs try to evade the AIA by arguing that the provision imposes a penalty rather than a tax. Opp’n 14. This characterization is irrelevant. As with many provisions of the Internal Revenue Code, interpretation requires several steps, but each is crystal clear. The AIA itself applies to “any tax,” 26 U.S.C. § 7421(a), and 26 U.S.C. § 6671(a) directs that “any reference in this title to ‘tax’ imposed by this title shall be deemed also to refer to the penalties and liabilities provided by this subchapter,” i.e., subchapter B of chapter 68 (emphasis added). The minimum coverage provision, 26 U.S.C. § 5000A(g)(1), in turn directs that “[t]he penalty provided by this section shall . . . be assessed and collected in the same manner as an assessable penalty under subchapter B of chapter 68” (emphasis added). Thus, like the other penalties in subchapter B of chapter 68, the minimum coverage provision is subject to the AIA. See Barr v. United States, 736 F.2d 1134, 1135 (7th Cir. 1984).

Second, plaintiffs argue that they “are challenging the constitutionality of a comprehensive healthcare reform law, not attempting to halt the Internal Revenue Service’s collection of taxes.” Opp’n 15. For AIA purposes, this is immaterial. Rejecting a similar argument in Bob Jones University v. Simon, the Supreme Court reasoned that “[b]ecause an injunction preventing the Service from withdrawing a § 501(c)(3) ruling letter would necessarily preclude the collection of FICA, FUTA, and possibly income taxes from the affected organization . . . a suit seeking such relief falls squarely within the literal scope of the Act.” 416 U.S. 731-32 (1974). Plaintiffs’ suit, if successful, “would necessarily preclude” the assessment or collection of the penalty described by § 5000A, and is accordingly barred. Id.; see also Dickens v. United States, 671 F.2d 969, 971 (6th Cir. 1982) (AIA is “not limited to suits aimed at the specific act of assessment or collection”).

Third, plaintiffs insist that the AIA is inapplicable because they are “seeking redress for violations of fundamental constitutional rights” which “cannot be regained by receipt of a refund check.” Opp’n 15. But the AIA’s jurisdictional limitations apply even where a plaintiff raises a constitutional challenge: “The ‘decisions of this Court make it unmistakably clear that the constitutional nature of a taxpayer’s claim . . . is of no consequence’ to whether the prohibition against tax injunctions applies.” United States v. Clintwood Elkhorn Mining Co., 553 U.S. 1, 10 (2008) (quoting Alexander v. “Americans United” Inc., 416 U.S. 752, 759 (1974)). And “[a] taxpayer cannot render an available review procedure an inadequate remedy at law by voluntarily forgoing it.” Americans United, Inc., 416 U.S. at 762 n.13.³

II. THE COMPREHENSIVE REGULATORY MEASURES OF THE ACA, INCLUDING THE MINIMUM COVERAGE PROVISION, ARE A PROPER EXERCISE OF CONGRESS’S POWERS UNDER THE COMMERCE AND NECESSARY AND PROPER CLAUSES

A. The minimum coverage provision, which regulates the financing of health care services, is integral to the larger regulatory scheme and is necessary and proper to the regulation of interstate commerce

Congress may regulate even wholly intrastate, wholly non-economic matters that form “an essential part of a larger regulation of economic activity, in which the regulatory scheme could be undercut unless the intrastate activity were regulated.” Gonzales v. Raich, 545 U.S. 1, 24-25 (2005) (quoting United States v. Lopez, 514 U.S. 549, 561 (1995)). As explained previously, Congress rationally determined that it was necessary to regulate the means in which health care services are financed so that health insurance would become more available and affordable.

³ Nor do plaintiffs fall within the exception to the Anti-Injunction Act created by Enochs v. Williams Packing & Navigation Co., 370 U.S. 1 (1962). The Williams Packing exception permits suits only to remedy exceptionally clear and irreparable infringements. Congress acted well within its Article I powers by enacting the ACA. To say the least, the merits of plaintiffs’ contrary claim are not “so obvious that the Government [has] no chance of prevailing.” Clintwood Elkhorn Mining Co., 553 U.S. at 14.

Plaintiffs concede that Congress has authority to require the ACA's insurance reforms. Opp'n 25. And they do not dispute that, if there were no minimum coverage requirement, the Act's insurance reforms would lead some individuals to "wait to purchase health insurance until they needed care." Pub. L. No. 111-148, §§ 1501(a)(2)(I), 10106(a). These concessions resolve the matter because, without the minimum coverage provision, the incentive to delay obtaining coverage would lead to higher premiums and less affordable coverage, ultimately driving the insurance market "into extinction." Health Reform in the 21st Century: Insurance Market Reforms: Hearing Before the H. Comm. on Ways and Means, 111th Cong. 13 (2009) (Uwe Reinhardt, Ph.D.).⁴ Research on the experience of states that have attempted "guaranteed issue" and "community rating" reforms without an accompanying minimum coverage provision confirms that this danger may not be merely theoretical.⁵ The minimum coverage provision is thus essential to the larger regulatory scheme of the ACA, which is designed to make health insurance more available and affordable. Pub. L. No. 111-148, §§ 1501(a)(2)(I), 10106(a); Raich, 545 U.S. at 24-25.

⁴ Plaintiffs object to consideration of Congressional Budget Office studies, committee hearings, and letters to members of Congress on this motion to dismiss. Opp'n 20-21. But plaintiffs' objection has been squarely rejected by the Fourth Circuit. See Anheuser-Busch, Inc. v. Schmoke, 63 F.3d 1305, 1312 (1995) ("For purposes of Rule 12(b)(6), the legislative history of an ordinance is not a matter beyond the pleadings but is an adjunct to the ordinance which may be considered by the court as a matter of law."), vacated and remanded on other grounds, 517 U.S. 1206 (1996) (mem.).

⁵ See Alan C. Monheit et al., Community Rating & Sustainable Individual Health Insurance Markets in New Jersey, 23 Health Affairs 167, 168 (2004); Stephen T. Parente & Tarren Bragdon, Healthier Choice: An Examination of Market Based Reforms for New York's Uninsured, Medical Progress Report No. 10, at i (Manhattan Inst., Sept. 2009).

For similar reasons, the minimum coverage provision is a valid exercise of Congress's authority under the Necessary and Proper Clause. In response, plaintiffs do not deny that the minimum coverage provision satisfies the rational basis standard applied under the Necessary and Proper Clause since M'Culloch v. Maryland, 17 U.S. (4 Wheat.) 316 (1819). They instead suggest that United States v. Comstock, 130 S. Ct. 1949 (2010), (without saying so) overthrew centuries of precedent and demanded a heightened standard of review for exercises of power under the Necessary and Proper Clause. Opp'n 26-28. But Comstock did no such thing. It did not create a new five-part test under the Necessary and Proper Clause; it instead reiterated M'Culloch and its progeny, which recognize that the Clause "leaves to Congress a large discretion as to the means that may be employed in executing a given power," Comstock, 130 S. Ct. at 1957 (quoting Lottery Case, 188 U.S. 321, 355 (1903)), and identified five considerations, specific to that case, that supported the Court's judgment.

B. The minimum coverage provision regulates conduct that substantially affects interstate commerce

Even if Congress had enacted the minimum coverage provision by itself, it would still fall within the commerce power, as the provision regulates conduct that substantially affects interstate commerce. Plaintiffs nowhere dispute that uninsured individuals consume billions of dollars in uncompensated care each year—$43 billion in 2008 alone—shifting their costs to health care providers, to the insured population in the form of higher premiums, to governments, and to taxpayers. Pub. L. No. 111-148, §§ 1501(a)(2)(F), 10106(a). This point is decisive, because Congress may regulate activity that, in the aggregate, imposes substantial and direct burdens on an interstate market.

Plaintiffs nonetheless liken this case to United States v. Morrison and United States v. Lopez, where the Supreme Court struck down statutes as exceeding Congress's Commerce Clause authority. But in each case, as explained previously, the statute had at best a highly attenuated connection to any economic activity, and did not form a part of a broader scheme of economic regulation. In Morrison, the Court invalidated the cause of action created in VAWA, finding that any link between gender-motivated violence and economic activity could be established only through a chain of speculative assumptions. Similarly, in Lopez, the Court struck down a ban on possession of a handgun in a school zone because the ban was not part of an overall scheme of firearms regulation, and it related to economic activity only insofar as the presence of guns near schools might impair learning, which in turn might undermine economic productivity. The Court reasoned that Congress may not "pile inference upon inference" to find a link between the regulated activity and interstate commerce. Lopez, 514 U.S. at 567.⁶

In this case, the direct connection with interstate commerce is nothing like the chains of inferences found insufficient in Morrison and Lopez. "No piling is needed here to show that Congress was within its prerogative" to regulate interstate commerce. Sabri v. United States, 541 U.S. 600, 608 (2004). As Congress found, many uninsured individuals will inevitably receive health care services for which they cannot pay, imposing billions of dollars in costs on the national economy. Indeed, it is difficult to imagine legislation more clearly economic than regulation of how health care services are financed. And the decision about how to finance one's health care services—whether to purchase insurance or to attempt to pay later, out of pocket—is plainly “economic.” These decisions—viewed in the aggregate—clearly and directly affect health care providers, taxpayers, and the insured population, who ultimately, and inevitably, pay for the care provided to those who go without insurance. Congress may address those effects under the Commerce Clause.

⁶ Indeed, even before Raich, the Fourth Circuit had made clear that Congress may regulate even noneconomic activity that burdens an interstate market. The court upheld the Freedom of Access to Clinic Entrances Act ("FACE Act"), which makes it unlawful to obstruct access to a reproductive health care facility. See Hoffman v. Hunt, 126 F.3d 575, 583-88 (4th Cir. 1997), cert. denied, 523 U.S. 1136 (1998). The relevant question is not (as plaintiffs would have it, Opp'n 23) whether the immediate subject of the regulation is economic, but whether it is "related to interstate commerce in a manner that is clear, relatively direct, and distinct from the type of relationship that can be hypothesized to exist between every significant activity and interstate commerce." Brzonkala v. Va. Polytechnic Inst., 169 F.3d 820, 837 (4th Cir. 1999) (en banc), aff'd sub nom. United States v. Morrison, 529 U.S. 598 (2000).

Plaintiffs also insist that the minimum coverage provision reflects a “socialist mentality” that “would allow Congress to nationalize anything on the assumption that all must pay in order to make the object of regulation affordable to all.” Opp’n 24. According to plaintiffs, the minimum coverage provision “is analogous to Congress compelling every person in America to purchase a Chevrolet.” Id. at 25. But the better analogy is to Congress requiring persons who already do buy Chevrolets (and invariably will continue to buy them) to finance the purchase through a means that will minimize the economic burdens on others. The market for Chevrolets is unlike the market for health care services; many people do not participate in the market for Chevrolets or, for that matter, any other type of car. But no one can opt out of the health care services market. And, unlike other markets, individuals cannot reliably predict whether and when they or their families will need health care. The healthy 20-year-old biker who is seriously injured instantly becomes a consumer of costly medical care, as does the healthy 40-year old who develops a brain tumor. The question is how participants in the health care market finance medical expenses—through insurance, or through an attempt to pay out of pocket, often unsuccessfully, with a backstop of uncompensated care funded by third parties. In contrast to the health care market, one who appears at a dealership without any money will not receive a free Chevrolet and shift his cost to other participants in the market for automobiles. The distinctive characteristics of the health care market—a combination of universal need, unavoidable uncertainty, and the associated cost-shifting—make it unique. Regulating the financing of health care goods and services in a way that reduces these untoward economic effects does not open the floodgates to the “socialist mentality” that plaintiffs fear.

C. Plaintiffs cannot deny these substantial effects by characterizing the decision to forego insurance as “inactivity”

Plaintiffs attempt to portray those individuals who make the economic decision to forego health insurance as “not engaged in any activity” and “simply existing.” Opp’n 23. But individuals who make the economic choice to finance their medical needs without insurance have not opted out of the health care market. To the contrary, far from being inactive bystanders, the majority of the population—even of the uninsured population—has participated in the health care market by receiving medical services.⁷ See, e.g., Uninsured and Untreated: A Look at Uninsured Adults Who Received No Medical Care for Two Years 1 (Kaiser Fam. Found. 2010) (available at <http://www.kff.org/uninsured/upload/8083.pdf>) (noting that 62% of the uninsured below 133% of the Federal Poverty Level have used some medical care in the last two years).⁸

⁷ Plaintiffs assert that this argument “contradict[s] the allegations of the Complaint—that Plaintiffs pay for their health care costs regardless of whether they have insurance.” Opp’n 24. But even if plaintiffs were among the fortunate and small number of people who will always be able to pay for their own health care expenses (which, of course, they cannot know now), they would still be subject to congressional regulation under the Commerce Clause. “Where the class of activities is regulated and that class is within the reach of federal power, the courts have no power to excise, as trivial, individual instances of the class.” Raich, 545 U.S. at 23 (quoting Perez v. United States, 402 U.S. 146, 154 (1971) (internal quotation omitted)).

⁸ See also Summary Health Statistics for U.S. Children: National Health Interview Survey 2008, at tbl. 13 at 37 (Centers for Disease Control and Prevention 2009) (available at http://www.cdc.gov/nchs/data/series/sr_10/sr10_244.pdf) (noting that nearly half of uninsured

Nor do those individuals reside passively outside the market for health insurance. Instead, individuals make economic decisions as to whether to finance their medical needs through insurance, or to try to do so out-of-pocket with the backstop of free emergency room care. Indeed, a majority of those without insurance coverage at any point in fact move in and out of coverage, and have had coverage at some point within the same year. Cong. Budget Office, How Many Lack Health Insurance and For How Long? 4, 9 (May 2003); see also Cong. Budget Office, Key Issues in Analyzing Major Health Insurance Proposals 11 (Dec. 2008).

Plaintiffs' description of these economic decisions as "inactivity" or "simply existing" is both wrong and wholly beside the point. Opp'n 23, 49. Congress may use its commerce power to regulate conduct, even conduct that can creatively be described as "inactivity," so long as it determines that the conduct substantially affects interstate commerce. Courts have rejected, for example, challenges to the Child Support Recovery Act, 18 U.S.C. § 228(a), which affirmatively requires child support payments in interstate commerce.⁹ And it is well-settled that Congress may require private parties to enter into insurance contracts where failing to do so would impose costs on other market participants.¹⁰ Moreover, under the Superfund Act, or CERCLA, 42 U.S.C. §§ 9601, et seq., Congress requires "covered persons," including property owners children had seen a doctor in the last six months and 85% had seen a doctor in the last two years).

⁹ See, e.g., United States v. Sage, 92 F.3d 101, 105-06 (2d Cir. 1996) (rejecting claim that the Act exceeds the commerce power "because it concerns not the sending of money interstate but the failure to send money").

¹⁰ 42 U.S.C. § 4012a(a), (b), (e) (owners of property in flood hazard areas); 49 U.S.C. § 13906(a)(1) (interstate motor carriers); 6 U.S.C. § 443(a)(1) (sellers of anti-terrorism technology); 16 U.S.C. § 1441(c)(4) (entities operating in national marine sanctuary); 30 U.S.C. § 1257(f) (surface coal mining and reclamation operators); 42 U.S.C. § 2210(a) (Price-Anderson Act) (operators of nuclear power plants); 42 U.S.C. § 2243(d)(1) (uranium enrichment facility operators); 42 U.S.C. § 2458c(b)(2)(A) (aerospace vehicle developers); 45 U.S.C. § 358(a) (railroad unemployment insurance).

(whether or not they are engaged in commercial activity), to pay for environmental damages caused from the release of hazardous substances. The statute imposes a strict liability regime; a current property owner may be subject to a remediation order, without any showing that he caused the contamination. § 9607(a). The owner's characterization of his behavior as "active" or "passive" is irrelevant; otherwise, "an owner could insulate himself from liability by virtue of his passivity." Nurad, Inc. v. William E. Hooper & Sons Co., 966 F.2d 837, 845 (4th Cir. 1992). Congress's authority to enact the Superfund Act is well-established. See United States v. Olin Corp., 107 F.3d 1506, 1510-11 (11th Cir. 1997). It is also clear that Congress may use the power of eminent domain to compel the private transfer of land in aid of the regulation of interstate commerce. Luxton v. N. River Bridge Co., 153 U.S. 525, 529-30 (1894) (collecting cases) (upholding the use of eminent domain as a means to execute Congress's Commerce Clause authority).

These examples illustrate that the scope of the commerce power does not turn on whether a creative plaintiff can describe his own behavior as "active" or "passive." And for good reason; such a standard would be arbitrary and unworkable, as courts would have to determine when "passivity" ends and "activity" begins. Even under plaintiffs' theory, Congress could regulate how an individual pays for health care services at the time the individual appears at the doctor's office to seek care. But it would be unclear whether Congress could regulate the individual who schedules an appointment a week or a month in advance, or the individual who went to the doctor a week before the law became effective, or a year before. Would congressional authority lapse if an individual neither bought insurance nor used medical services in the last year? The last quarter? The last month? These are not the sorts of questions upon which congressional authority should turn, but they would flow inevitably from acceptance of plaintiffs' theory.

D. The minimum coverage provision is a valid exercise of Congress's independent power under the General Welfare Clause

The minimum coverage provision also falls within Congress's power under the General Welfare Clause, U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 1. Plaintiffs argue that Congress may not "use its taxing power to penalize those who do not conform to government regulations," Opp'n 30, and that "Congress' intent is not to generate revenue, but to take over the health care industry and regulate individual decision-making by 'taxing' those who depart from acceptable practices," id. But the Supreme Court long ago put to rest "distinctions between regulatory and revenue-raising taxes," Bob Jones Univ., 416 U.S. at 741 n.12, and despite plaintiffs' protestations, there is no basis to revive those distinctions here. Even if the earlier cases cited by plaintiffs had any lingering validity, Opp'n 29-30, they suggest at most that a court may invalidate only penalties that, unlike the minimum coverage provision, are punitive or coercive. See, e.g., Carter v. Carter Coal Co., 298 U.S. 238 (1936). Indeed, other cases leave no doubt that Congress may exercise its General Welfare Clause power even for a regulatory purpose, even if that regulatory purpose is beyond its Commerce Clause powers. See United States v. Sanchez, 340 U.S. 42, 44 (1950). So long as a statute is "productive of some revenue," the courts will not second-guess Congress's exercise of its General Welfare Clause powers, and "will not undertake, by collateral inquiry as to the measure of the regulatory effect of a tax, to ascribe to Congress an attempt, under the guise of taxation, to exercise another power denied by the Federal Constitution." Sonzinsky v. United States, 300 U.S. 506, 514 (1937); see also United States v. Jones, 976 F.2d 176, 183-84 (4th Cir. 1992); United States v. Aiken, 974 F.2d 446, 448-49 (4th Cir. 1992).

Plaintiffs' contention that "there is no guarantee that any money will ever be collected" because non-exempted "[i]ndividuals . . . will pay the penalties only if they fail to obtain and maintain 'minimum essential coverage,'" Opp'n 30, is likewise misplaced. The Supreme Court has upheld such provisions even where, if fully successful in achieving the regulatory purpose, they would completely eliminate the activity that is taxed. See Sanchez, 340 U.S. at 44 ("It is beyond serious question that a tax does not cease to be valid merely because it regulates, discourages, or even definitely deters the activities taxed.") (emphasis added); see also United States v. Kahriger, 345 U.S. 22, 27-28 (1953).

E. The employer responsibility provision is a valid exercise of Congress's Commerce Clause authority and, independently, its General Welfare Clause power Plaintiffs do not dispute that regulation of the terms and conditions of employment in the national labor market falls within the commerce power, or that health care coverage, like wages, is a term of employment Congress may regulate under its commerce power. Nor do plaintiffs dispute that Congress's bases for passing the provision—among others, to address the "job-lock" concern—are rational. Plaintiffs nonetheless contend that the employer responsibility provision is invalid because requiring "employers [to] provide certain benefits to their employees" is somehow different from requiring them to "conform to wage and hour standards." Opp'n 25-26. But plaintiffs do not, and cannot, explain why this supposed distinction should make a difference for purposes of the Commerce Clause. Nothing in the Supreme Court's precedent supports the idea that Congress's power over the terms and conditions of employment excludes the power to require employers to provide their employees certain benefits. Quite the opposite. "Today, there should be universal agreement on the proposition that Congress has ample power to regulate the terms and conditions of employment,” and employee benefits are indisputably “conditions of employment.” See EEOC v. Wyoming, 460 U.S. 226, 248 (1983) (Stevens, J., concurring), superseded by statute and implicitly overruled on other grounds by Kimel v. Fla. Bd. of Regents, 528 U.S. 62, 79 (2000).

F. The ACA does not violate the Tenth Amendment

Defendants have shown that the ACA is a proper exercise of Congress’s commerce power and, independently, its authority under the General Welfare Clause. There accordingly can be no violation of the Tenth Amendment: “If a power is delegated to Congress in the Constitution, the Tenth Amendment expressly disclaims any reservation of that power to the States; if a power is an attribute of state sovereignty reserved by the Tenth Amendment, it is necessarily a power the Constitution has not conferred on Congress.” New York v. United States, 505 U.S. 144, 156 (1992).

Plaintiffs contend that “even if the Act were to be found to fall within Congress’s enumerated powers, then it would still violate the Tenth Amendment because it impermissibly intrudes on state sovereignty,” Opp’n 31, allegedly because the ACA “commandeer[s]” the states. Id. at 32 (internal citation omitted). But even if this claim had merit—which it does not—an individual plaintiff lacks standing to raise an anti-commandeering challenge; such claims may be advanced only by a State itself. See Tenn. Elec. Power Co. v. TVA, 306 U.S. 118 (1939) (private parties had “no standing to raise any question under the [Tenth A]mendment” “absent the states or their officers” as parties to the litigation).¹¹ In any event, contrary to plaintiffs’ assertion, the ACA does not “mandate[] that states establish ‘Health Benefit Exchanges.’” Opp’n 33. Rather, the ACA gives States the option to do so, and requires the federal government to establish the Exchange if a State does not. Pub. L. No. 111-148, §§ 1321(b), (c).

¹¹ See also United States v. Hacker, 565 F.3d 522, 524, 525-527 (8th Cir. 2009); Brooklyn Legal Servs. Corp. v. Legal Servs. Corp., 462 F.3d 219, 234-235 (2d Cir. 2006); Medeiros v. Vincent, 431 F.3d 25, 28-29, 33-36 (1st Cir. 2005); United States v. Parker, 362 F.3d 1279, 1284-1285 (10th Cir. 2004).

G. The ACA does not offend the Guarantee Clause

Plaintiffs insist that the Act violates the Guarantee Clause because it “give[s] government the absolute sovereignty over the people,” Opp’n 34, grants the government “censorial power over the people,” id., and “threatens the foundational principles of the Constitution,” id. at 35. According to plaintiffs, this violates the principle that “[t]he people, not the government, possess the absolute sovereignty.” Id. at 34 (boldface in original). This is long on rhetorical flourish but short on legal substance. Nothing in the Act grants the government a “censorial power” or an “absolute sovereignty over the people.” The uninsured’s ability to impose their costs on other participants in the health care market—which the ACA does threaten—is not a “foundational principle[]” of republican governance. The Guarantee Clause applies only “in highly limited circumstances,” Largess v. Supreme Judicial Court for State of Mass., 373 F.3d 219, 227 (1st Cir. 2004), which are not present here. The Republic is not in peril.

III. PLAINTIFFS’ FIRST AMENDMENT CLAIMS ARE MERITLESS

A. The ACA does not violate the Free Exercise Clause or the Religious Freedom Restoration Act

Plaintiffs do not dispute that the minimum coverage provision in no way requires them to abandon their opposition to abortion. Plaintiffs contend nevertheless that defendants have “misrepresent[ed]” the “true nature” of plaintiffs’ free exercise claims because, in addition to opposing abortion, plaintiffs believe in “making healthy lifestyle choices, paying only for health care procedures that are necessary and in keeping with their religious beliefs and paying for their health care services as they need them.” Opp’n 35, 36. But this clarification confirms defendants’ showing that there is no burden on plaintiffs’ religious exercise. The ACA does not prevent plaintiffs from “making healthy lifestyle choices.” Nor does it require plaintiffs to pay for unnecessary medical procedures or any health care service that conflicts with their religious beliefs. Rather, the Act may require non-exempted individual plaintiffs to have minimum essential coverage or pay a penalty, and this does not conflict with plaintiffs’ religious beliefs.

Even if the ACA burdened plaintiffs’ religious exercise, it is well-settled that “the right of free exercise does not relieve an individual of the obligation to comply with a valid and neutral law of general applicability on the ground that the law proscribes (or prescribes) conduct that his religion prescribes (or proscribes).” Emp’t Div. v. Smith, 494 U.S. 872, 879 (1990) (internal citation and quotation omitted). Plaintiffs argue that the minimum coverage provision is not a neutral law of general applicability because it contains certain exemptions. See Opp’n 36-38. But Congress may provide some limited exemptions from an otherwise uniformly applicable system without destroying the law’s “general applicability.” In United States v. Lee, an Amish plaintiff challenged the exemption from self-employment tax provided by 26 U.S.C. § 1402(g). 455 U.S. 252 (1982). In rejecting the challenge, the Court reasoned that “Congress has accommodated, to the extent compatible with a comprehensive national program, the practices of those who believe it a violation of their faith to participate in the social security system,” but that “every person cannot be shielded from all the burdens incident to exercising every aspect of the right to practice religious beliefs.” Id. at 260-61. According to the Court, “[t]he tax . . . must be uniformly applicable to all, except as Congress provides explicitly otherwise.” Id. at 261. And in Smith, the Court referred to the social security tax itself, which contains the § 1402(g) exemption, as “a neutral, generally applicable regulatory law that compelled activity forbidden by an individual's religion.” Smith, 494 U.S. at 880.¹² The minimum coverage provision, which specifically incorporates the § 1402(g) exemption, is no different.

Even if strict scrutiny somehow applies to plaintiffs’ free exercise and RFRA claims, the minimum coverage provision is justified by a compelling government interest, and is the least restrictive means to achieve that interest. Since the Supreme Court’s decision in Lee, courts have rejected Free Exercise challenges to the tax code by individuals who do not qualify for the exemption in section 1402(g), as it is “well settled that the collection of tax revenues for expenditures that offend the religious beliefs of individual taxpayers does not violate the Free Exercise Clause of the First Amendment.” Jenkins v. Comm’r, 483 F.3d 90, 92 (2d Cir. 2007) (citing Lee); see also United States v. Indianapolis Baptist Temple, 224 F.3d 627 (7th Cir. 2000); Adams v. Comm’r, 170 F.3d 173 (3d Cir. 1999); Browne v. United States, 176 F.3d 25 (2d Cir. 1999); Droz v. Comm’r, 48 F.3d 1120 (9th Cir. 1995). The rationale supporting this well-settled principle is that “mandatory participation” in the payment of taxes is “indispensable to the fiscal vitality” and operation of the tax system in general and the social security system in particular, thus satisfying the compelling interest and least restrictive means tests under the Free Exercise Clause. Lee, 455 U.S. at 258; see also Adams, 170 F.3d at 179.

¹² Contrary to plaintiffs’ claim, Opp’n 48, Gonzales v. O Centro Espirita Beneficente Uniao do Vegetal, 546 U.S. 418 (2006) does not change this conclusion. There, a religious sect sought an exemption under the Controlled Substances Act for the use of hoasca, a hallucinogenic tea. The Court granted the exemption, reasoning that “the well-established peyote exception . . . fatally undermines the Government’s broader contention that the Controlled Substances Act establishes a closed regulatory system that admits of no exceptions under RFRA.” Id. at 434. The Court reasoned that “[e]verything the Government says about . . . hoasca . . . applies in equal measure to . . . peyote.” Id. at 433. But unlike the peyote exemption in Gonzales, the minimum coverage provision’s exemptions do not undermine the government’s stated purpose. The religious exemptions here apply only to those who belong to groups that already make provision for the health needs of the dependent members; those people already receive health care and do not impose the costs of uncompensated care on the rest of society. Indeed, the Gonzales Court specifically distinguished Lee, noting that the tax cases involved statutory programs in which granting exemptions would undermine the administration of the program. Id. at 437.

In light of this settled case law, the same principle applies to the national, mandatory application of a system of health insurance with religious accommodation provided by section 1402(g). Without question, the minimum coverage provision’s objectives—including promoting the public health—constitute a compelling government interest. See, e.g., Hodel v. Va. Surface Mining & Reclamation Ass’n, 452 U.S. 264, 300 (1981). And, as Congress found, the health insurance system is “national,” and the minimum coverage requirement, which achieves “near-universal coverage,” is “essential” to the implementation of the ACA’s broader insurance reforms. Pub. L. No. 111-148, § 1501(a)(2). Thus, as with Social Security, “the Government’s interest in assuring mandatory and continuous participation in and contribution to the [ACA] system” satisfies the Free Exercise Clause and RFRA. Lee, 455 U.S. at 258-59; see also Droz, 48 F.3d at 1123 (finding that individual who does not belong to a religious organization that provides for its dependent members, and thus was outside the exemption of section 1402(g), “would threaten Congress’s goal of ensuring that persons who opt out are provided for (and will not burden the public welfare system)”). In fact, the rationale of the tax cases has been extended to the context of a mandatory state requirement that individuals purchase health insurance. See Goehring v. Brophy, 94 F.3d 1294, 1298 (9th Cir. 1996), overruled on other grounds by City of Boerne v. Flores, 521 U.S. 507 (1997) (holding RFRA unconstitutional as applied to states).

B. The ACA does not violate plaintiffs' free speech or free association rights

Defendants have shown that plaintiffs' free speech claim is meritless, as the ACA contains multiple safeguards designed to prevent federal funds from being used to pay for abortions except with respect to the long-established exceptions that apply to other federal health programs in cases of rape or incest, or when the life of the woman is endangered. Opening Br. 46-48. Plaintiffs do not respond to this point. As for expressive association, the ACA does not prevent plaintiffs from expressing their views about anything, or require them to express a view with which they disagree. There is accordingly no violation of the right to expressive association here. In response, plaintiffs recycle the claim that this case is somehow different because of "Congress' unprecedented act of mandating that individuals and employers involuntarily participate in economic activity." Opp'n 39. But even if plaintiffs were correct (which they are not) to describe the economic decision to forgo insurance as "inactivity," that would not create a First Amendment question here. A right to avoid association exists only if compelled association "may impair the ability" of a group or an individual to express a message, Roberts v. U.S. Jaycees, 468 U.S. 609, 623 (1984); whether plaintiffs are engaged in "activity" or "inactivity" is irrelevant to that question. They remain free to express their views.

C. The ACA's religious exemptions are consistent with the Establishment Clause

Plaintiffs concede that they are not challenging the constitutionality of 26 U.S.C. § 1402(g)(1). Opp'n 42. This concession resolves the matter, as the challenged exemption from the minimum coverage provision specifically incorporates the 1402(g)(1) exemption. Plaintiffs nonetheless insist that defendants "miss the point" because they "ignore the language calling for government investigation and monitoring of the tenets of certain religious sects and sincerity of adherents' beliefs." Opp'n 41-42. This point is deservedly missed, as the ACA exemption contains nearly the same "monitoring" requirements as the § 1402(g)(1) exemption. Just as the ACA exempts only members of "recognized religious sect[s]," Pub. L. No. 111-148, § 1501(b) (adding 26 U.S.C. § 5000A(d)(2)(A)), § 1402(g)(1) exempts only "member[s] of a recognized religious sect." 26 U.S.C. § 1402(g)(1). The ACA requires that the exempted individual be "an adherent of established tenets or teachings of such sect or division," Pub. L. No. 111-148, § 1501(b) (adding 26 U.S.C. § 5000A(d)(2)(A)(ii)); § 1402(g)(1) likewise requires that the exempted individual be "an adherent of established tenets or teachings of such sect or division." 26 U.S.C. § 1402(g)(1). As defendants have shown, every court to consider the issue has upheld § 1402(g)(1) under the Establishment Clause, Opening Br. 49 n.21, and plaintiffs provide no basis to distinguish § 1402(g)(1) from the nearly identical section of the ACA.¹³

IV. PLAINTIFFS' EQUAL PROTECTION CLAUSE CLAIM SHOULD BE DISMISSED

Plaintiffs contend that the ACA's religious exemptions are irrational because they do not fully achieve their stated purpose; in other words, the exemptions are irrational because plaintiffs do not qualify for them. See Opp'n 46 ("If the exemption for religious sects is designed to exempt individuals who will very likely not incur uncompensated care and lead to cost-shifting, then it is not rationally advancing that goal by excluding Plaintiffs, particularly Plaintiffs Waddell and Merrill who take responsibility for their own health care."). Besides relying on the questionable assumption that Waddell and Merrill will forever be able to pay for their own health care needs, this argument misunderstands the rational basis test. That a statute is underinclusive does not show that it is irrational.¹⁴ “[T]he reform may take one step at a time, addressing itself to the phase of the problem which seems most acute to the legislative mind.” Williamson v. Lee Optical of Okla., 348 U.S. 483, 489 (1955). “The legislature may select one phase of one field and apply a remedy there, neglecting the others.” Id. Here, Congress rationally determined that members of groups that have historically made provision for their dependent members, or are members of health care sharing ministries, are unlikely to incur uncompensated care, and Congress was entitled to limit the exemptions to these groups.¹⁵

¹³ Nor does the exemption for members of health care sharing ministries, Pub. L. No. 111-148, § 1501(b) (adding 26 U.S.C. § 5000A(d)(2)(B)), foster excessive entanglement with religion. The inquiry required by that exemption—whether members "share a common set of ethical or religious beliefs and share medical expenses among members in accordance with those beliefs," id. § 5000A(d)(2)(B)(ii)(II)—is no more intrusive than the inquiry mandated by § 1402(g)(1) (described above).

V. THE ACA IS NOT A DIRECT TAX OR A CAPITATION TAX

Contrary to plaintiffs’ view, Opp’n 49-50, the penalty on non-exempted individuals for failing to obtain minimum coverage is not a flat tax assessed without regard to an individual’s circumstances, nor is it a direct tax subject to apportionment. Plaintiffs argue that the penalty is imposed “without regard to property, profession, or any other circumstance except for being legally present in the United States.” Id. at 50. This is incorrect; the provision does not impose a penalty on everyone, it imposes a penalty on the choice of one particular, often unsuccessful

¹⁴ Plaintiffs incorrectly suggest that under the rational basis test, defendants must cite evidence in support of Congress’s reasons for enacting the religious exemptions. Opp’n 44-45. The secular legislative purpose of the religious exemptions—to alleviate burdens on religious exercise for those who are unlikely to incur uncompensated care—is clear from the statutory text. In any event, it is well understood that a legislative choice reviewed for a rational basis “is not subject to courtroom fact-finding.” FCC v. Beach Comm’s, 508 U.S. 307, 315 (1993). Defendants accordingly have “no obligation to produce evidence to sustain the rationality of a statutory classification.” Heller v. Doe by Doe, 509 U.S. 312, 320 (1993). The analysis instead asks whether the legislature “rationally could have believed” that the conditions of the statute would promote its objective. W. & S. Life Ins. Co. v. State Bd. of Equalization of Cal., 451 U.S. 648, 671-72 (1981).

¹⁵ Plaintiffs also insist that Congress irrationally limited the exemption to health care sharing ministries that are at least ten years old. Opp’n 46. To the contrary, the ten-year limitation ensures that only health care ministries with established records of providing for their members qualify for the exemption. See Opening Br. 54.

method of financing future health care costs. The penalty imposed under the employer responsibility provision likewise is imposed only on certain large employers that refuse to offer adequate coverage to their full-time employees and have a full-time employee who receives a premium tax credit in a health insurance Exchange.¹⁶

Plaintiffs also suggest that indirect taxes must always be imposed on actions, never on “inactivity.” Id. at 49 (emphasis in original). In addition to having the problems of plaintiffs’ Commerce Clause inaction argument, this argument cannot distinguish Hylton v. United States, where the tax was on owning carriages, not on using them. 3 U.S. (3 Dall.) 171 (1796). Nor can it account for the penalty for the failure to file a return or to pay taxes when due, 26 U.S.C. § 6651, or the estate tax, id. § 2001. See Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U.S. 41, 81 (1900). Regardless, plaintiffs’ distinction between “action” and “inaction” is irrelevant. Only taxes on real property or (possibly) all of an individual’s personal property qualify as “direct.” See Union Elec. Co. v. United States, 363 F.3d 1292, 1300 (Fed. Cir. 2004). And capitation taxes are only those taxes imposed “without regard to property, profession, or any other circumstance.” Hylton, 3 U.S. (3 Dall.) at 175 (opinion of Chase, J.). The minimum coverage provision is neither type of tax.¹⁷

CONCLUSION

Defendants’ motion to dismiss should be granted.

¹⁶ Plaintiffs do not dispute that the limits that Article I, Section 9 imposes on Congress’s power to tax and spend for the general welfare have no relevance if the minimum coverage provision is sustained under the Commerce Clause. See also Rodgers v. United States, 138 F.2d 992, 995 (6th Cir. 1943).

¹⁷ As the penalty varies with the amount of an individual’s household income, plaintiffs are wrong to assert that the penalty does not implicate the Sixteenth Amendment.

DATED: September 22, 2010

Respectfully submitted,

TONY WEST
Assistant Attorney General

IAN HEATH GERSHENGORN
Deputy Assistant Attorney General

TIMOTHY J. HEAPHY
United States Attorney
Western District of Virginia

JENNIFER RICKETTS RIVERA
Director

SHEILA LIEBER
Deputy Director

s/ Ethan P. Davis
ETHAN P. DAVIS (N.Y. Bar)
KAREN P. SEIFERT (N.Y. Bar)
Attorneys for Defendants
United States Department of Justice
Civil Division, Federal Programs Branch
20 Massachusetts Ave. NW
Washington, DC 20530
Tel: (202) 514-9242
Fax: (202) 616-8470
Ethan.P.Davis@usdoj.gov

CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE

I hereby certify that on September 22, 2010, the foregoing was electronically filed with the Clerk of the Court using the CM/ECF system, and I hereby certify that the document was served using that system on the following CM/ECF participants:

Mary Elizabeth McAlister, William Edward McRorie, Anita L. Staver and Mathew D. Staver

s/ Ethan P. Davis
ETHAN P. DAVIS
Attorney for Defendants
United States Department of Justice
Civil Division, Federal Programs Branch
20 Massachusetts Ave. NW
Washington, DC 20530
Tel: (202) 514-9242
Fax: (202) 616-8470
Ethan.P.Davis@usdoj.gov