In 16 April 2006 correspondence, a representative of the Afghanistan Research and Evaluation Unit (AREU) - a donor-funded, Kabul-based research organization (AREU n.d.) - indicated that tazkiras [identity documents] are much more common than passports. The Representative stated that about 70 percent of Afghans have such documents (AREU 16 Apr. 2006). Similarly, the report of a Finnish fact-finding mission to Afghanistan states that the taskira (referred to in the report as Tashkera) is the most commonly used identity document in Afghanistan (Finland Sept. 2006, 36). The United States (US)-issued Reciprocity Schedule states that the taskera is "the most universal and accurate document in Afghanistan" (US n.d.). According to the AREU Representative, the identity cards "are required for transacting any business with the government, including the purchase or sale of immovable property, the preparation of official documents (including the passports), admission into school and so on" (AREU 16 Apr. 2006).

In 7 April 2006 correspondence, the Counsellor of the Embassy of Afghanistan in Ottawa informed the Research Directorate that there are two kinds of identity cards still in circulation in Afghanistan: tazkiras (identity cards) and tazkira certificates. According to the Counsellor, in 1990 or 1992 the Afghan government stopped issuing the tazkira, which is a 20-page identity document, and replaced it with a tazkira certificate, which is only one page that includes the minimum essential information: name of the person, father's name, grandfather's name, date of birth (according to the Hijri calendar) and birthplace (Afghanistan 7 Apr. 2006).

According to the Counsellor of the Embassy of Afghanistan, the description of the tazkira (20-page document) is as follows:

Procedures for applying for a tazkira

According to the Counsellor of the Embassy of Afghanistan in Ottawa, a tazkira can be obtained as soon as the birth of a child is registered at the population office but some people request their tazkira when they are adults - especially those who live in the countryside (Afghanistan 7 Apr. 2006). However, not every birth is necessarily registered in Afghanistan, especially if the birth took place at home - as is commonly the case - rather than in a hospital (Afghanistan 22 Nov. 2007). In the case of adults, the chief of the village, the imam of the mosque or the representative of the district must confirm the identity of the applicant (ibid.). According to the AREU Representative "[t]o obtain a tazkira, one applies to the Population and Statistics Office either at the Kabul or Provincial level. There is a specific form required, and witnesses need to testify to your origin in a particular place" (16 Apr. 2006).

The Finnish fact-finding mission states the following with respect to the process for obtaining a taskira:

The identity of the applicant is confirmed through the local register of population. Due to Afghanistan's violent past, many registers have been destroyed. Because of this, it is common, that village elders/ religious authorities, give a testimony in behalf of the applicant, stating that the applicant is from the family he claims be. If the applicant has living relatives, it is also enough if his father or uncle in person testify to the local district official that the applicant is a kin. Then it is enough that the name of the applicant's relative is in the local register of population. After the identity of the applicant has been verified, the matter is referred to the provincial police. It is common, that the provincial police headquarters has an small passport office. The applicant has to provide his photos of himself and file an official application for "tashkera" with the "petition letter". After filling the application, the application will need the signature of the provincial chief of police or his deputy. With his approval, the documents will be sent to the administrative capital of the region, where the Tashkera will be printed. The document will then be sent to the police station, where it can be collected by the person or his close relative. (Finland Sept. 2006, 36)

The information regarding the manner in which an individual's identity is established is corroborated by an official with the Embassy of the Republic of Afghanistan (22 Nov. 2007). The Official stated that an applicant's living relative(s) will testify to the person's identity (Afghanistan 22 Nov. 2007). If the relative appears in the local register, the applicant's identity is considered to be confirmed (ibid.).
