Vietnam: The nature of the relationship between the International Police Organization (INTERPOL) and the national/local police

Research Directorate, Immigration and Refugee Board, Ottawa

INTERPOL's mandate is to promote international police co-operation among its member countries in solving international crime (INTERPOL n.d.a). This is done through the exchange of criminal intelligence with its member states (ibid.). The mission of the Asia and South Pacific Sub-Directorate of INTERPOL is "to support ... crime fighting activities by providing quality operational and administrative services on a daily basis through a regionally based geopolitical structure" (ibid. n.d.b). The Sub-Directorate's Goals include the following:

- To address regional crime issues;
- To provide adequate support on regional and national levels;
- To make relevant regionally-based information available;
- To increase relevant information exchange with regions; [and]
- To increase the flow and exchange of information related to the specialized crime areas (ibid.).

Vietnam has been a member of the International Police Organization (INTERPOL) since November 1991 (Vietnam News Briefs 9 June 2003; Xinhua 9 June 2003; Viet Nam News 5 Nov. 2002). The co-operation and collaboration between Vietnam and INTERPOL since 1991 was described in late 2002 as "efficient and practical," involving the exchange of over 20,000 pieces of information "related to individual criminals and organised gangs involved in drugs, smuggling and other crimes" (ibid.).

Additional information on the nature of the relationship between INTERPOL and the national/local police in Vietnam could not be found among the sources consulted by the Research Directorate.
