Dear Tribal Leader:

As announced by Attorney General Eric Holder at the White House Tribal Nations Conference this fall, the Department of Justice will adopt a Statement of Principles to guide and inform all of the Department's interactions with federally recognized Indian tribes. Our Statement of Principles will memorialize the Department of Justice's determination to serve as your partner in fighting crime and enforcing the law in Indian country.

We are pleased to invite you to government-to-government consultations with the Department of Justice on our proposed Statement of Principles, a copy of which is attached to this letter. Following is the schedule for in-person and telephonic consultations:

Table with 2 columns: Time and Location/Link. Rows include: Thursday, March 13, 2014 In-person Consultation Session (1:00-3:00 p.m. Eastern, Ashlawn North Room at the Westin Washington City Center); Wednesday, March 19, 2014 Telephonic Consultation Session (3:30-5:00 p.m. Eastern, Link to register for the call and receive the call-in information: http://dpreister.com/10041229); Thursday, March 20, 2014 Telephonic Consultation Session (3:30-5:00 p.m. Eastern, Link to register for the call and receive the call-in information: http://dpreister.com/10041241).

In addition, we will accept written comments until the close of business on Friday, April 4, 2014. Please submit them via email to OTJ@usdoj.gov or (if necessary) via regular mail to:

Office of Tribal Justice

United States Department of Justice
Proposed Statement of Principles
For Working with Federally Recognized Indian Tribes
[* Subject to Consultation with Tribal Officials]
November 2013

- The Department of Justice honors and strives to act in accordance with the general trust relationship between the United States and tribes.
- The Department of Justice is committed to a government-to-government relationship with each tribe, which forms the heart of our federal Indian policy.
- The Department of Justice respects and supports tribes' exercise of inherent sovereign powers over both their members and their territory.
- The Department of Justice is committed to tribal self-determination and the long-term goal of maximizing tribal control over governmental institutions in Indian country, because tribal problems generally are best addressed by tribal solutions, including solutions informed by tribal traditions and custom.
- The Department of Justice recognizes that its commitment to tribal self-determination requires regular, meaningful consultation with tribal officials when developing new or amended policies, regulations, and legislative actions initiated by the Department that may affect tribes, as detailed in the Department's Policy Statement on Tribal Consultation.
- The Department of Justice recognizes that, in addition to formal consultation, there can be great benefit in timely, detailed, informal communications with tribal officials and other community leaders.
- The Department of Justice recognizes that each tribe's history and contemporary culture are unique, and that solutions that work for one tribe may not apply to others.
- The Department of Justice works to respectfully consider traditional tribal cultural practices and values, and is sensitive to the need for effective cross-cultural communication.
- The Department of Justice seeks to foster an internal Departmental culture, from top to bottom, that will encourage its officers and employees to be responsive to the needs of tribes routinely, not merely as an afterthought.

- The Department of Justice is committed to helping protect all Native Americans from violence, takes seriously its role in enforcing federal criminal laws that apply in Indian country, and recognizes that, absent the Department's action, some serious crimes may go unaddressed.
- The Department of Justice prioritizes helping protect Native American women and children from violence and exposure to violence, and works with tribes to hold perpetrators accountable, to protect victims, and to reduce the incidence of domestic violence, sexual assault, and child abuse and neglect in tribal communities.
- The Department of Justice is committed to protecting tribal treaty rights, tribal lands and natural resources, and tribal jurisdiction through litigation, where appropriate, and to handling litigation involving tribes in a manner that is mindful of the government-to-government relationship.
- The Department of Justice believes that stable funding at sufficient levels for essential tribal justice functions is critical to the long-term growth of tribal institutions.
- The Department of Justice seeks to increase tribes' flexibility to administer grant programs and thus design solutions appropriate to their communities, while ensuring strict accountability.
- The Department of Justice believes that pilot and demonstration projects that are available to state or local governments should be available to similarly situated tribal governments, and endeavors, where appropriate and practicable, to give serious consideration to locating projects in tribal communities.
- The Department of Justice is committed to fully implementing the Indian Civil Rights Act of 1968 (ICRA), the Tribal Law and Order Act of 2010 (TLOA), and the Violence Against Women Reauthorization Act of 2013 (VAWA), and believes that working with tribes to strengthen their justice systems, including indigent defense services, is critical to fulfilling the promise of these statutes.
- The Department of Justice supports tribes' efforts to build innovative approaches to law enforcement, public safety, and victim services, and, where appropriate, to evaluate those approaches by collecting empirical evidence and conducting scientific and statistical research.
- The Department of Justice safeguards the civil rights of Native Americans by prosecuting hate crimes, protecting the right to vote, protecting tribes and Indian families from unwarranted removal of their children, and otherwise helping ensure that Native Americans are free from illegal discrimination.

- The Department of Justice, when working with other federal agencies on issues involving tribes, advocates respecting tribal self-determination and the government-to-government relationship.
- The Department of Justice works to facilitate communication and build relationships among the federal agencies that have Indian responsibilities and to promote the pooling and sharing of federal resources and expertise.
- The Department of Justice works to facilitate communication and build relationships between tribes and state, local, and private partners in law enforcement, public safety, victim services, and civil rights, and to use dispute resolution techniques such as mediation to resolve community conflicts and tensions.
- The Department of Justice recognizes the link between healthy, prospering families and public safety, and the need to coordinate law-enforcement efforts with educational, housing, and public-health services.
- The Department of Justice will continue taking steps to institutionalize its commitment to tribal justice, so that progress in areas important to tribes continues regardless of changes in Department personnel.

These proposed Principles are intended to improve the internal management of the Department of Justice. They are not intended to and do not create any right or benefit, substantive or procedural, enforceable at law or in equity by any party in any matter, civil or criminal, against the United States, its departments, agencies, or entities, its officers, employees, or agents, or any other person, nor do these proposed Principles place any limitations on otherwise lawful litigative prerogatives of the Department of Justice. Please contact the Department's Office of Tribal Justice with any questions about these proposed Principles.
