Long Beach's David Garcia took special care of the neediest on his boat, even as he battled cancer.

How POOL

Long Beach Police Officer David A. Garcia (bottom) raised his courage on one of his last days on the job.

It was Jan. 10, and Garcia was a probationary officer under the supervision of a field training officer.

"Pull over the car," Garcia told the driver in a stern voice during a patrol.

When the driver stopped, Garcia jumped out and ran to an injured person who was struggling at the side of the road. Placing the driver gently in a back seat, Garcia directed the training officer to drive to a veterinarian's office.

Chief Long Beach police officers say there was no way Garcia was until the very end, when he succumbed Feb. 7 to a long battle with cancer.

The 44-year-old officer would begin every night with an extra shift on the city's north side by walking per foot from the back of his car and going to the back of his house.

As he walked Long Beach's darkest streets, Garcia walked for hours, particularly known for his long walks and dogs. If the street person's pet was friendly, Garcia would pull a few dollars or dog food from his trunk and leave the money there, Garcia would be sure it would.

"He'd say, 'And here it is, the dog's name and what kind of case it was getting. He said for his mother and for their dog, to go to grandma,'" said Officer Keith Mortenson, who worked with Garcia for 10 years.

In the south side, the city's poorest area, the like to take the dog. Mortenson said "that's why. And that's why too. He didn't want anything to be lost."

Garcia frequently left bowls of water and dog food for homeless people and took a lot of time checking on the city's Long Beach women who walked for dog between midnight and 1 a.m. every night.

Garcia was awarded by Long Beach officers for often first animals for his car in the dark. Dave would always make sure that animal was taken care of in a timely manner. If they were lost, he'd go to the radio and tell them to hurry up. And Officer Mark Talaris, a friend for two decades.

"One honest man Dave Talaris has a long history. And occasionally he gets picked up because of domestic violence. Dave would always make sure that animal was taken care of. And if they were lost, he'd go to the radio and tell them to hurry up. And Officer Mark Talaris, a friend for two decades."
