Next Generation

Protecting the most precious and vulnerable members of our society

A Message from the U.S. Attorney

One of my top priorities as U.S. Attorney is ensuring the protection of our society's most precious and vulnerable population — the youth.

As the father of two children, I personally understand how important it is to shield our younger generation from harm, manipulation and the wrong crowds of individuals. The latest edition of On the Record highlights our office's efforts to combat child exploitation and hold accountable to the highest extent of the law those who attempt to commit and do commit sexual exploitative crimes against children. Through the Department of Justice-based initiative Project Safe Childhood (PSC), we dedicate a substantial amount of our efforts to protecting as many youth as possible from being exploited sexually via Internet and other means.

PSC is a tool at our office's disposal that has been extremely impactful. Since I became U.S. Attorney six years ago, the program has helped attorneys in our office prosecute dozens upon dozens of individuals who have exploited children. Hundreds of years in federal prison sentences and supervised release have been secured as a result of these aggressive prosecutions.

Prosecutions are not the only way we combat child sexual exploitation and spread awareness of issues like Internet safety. We do a host of training engagements, whether it's for Parent-Teacher Association (PTA) groups, religious organizations or grade schools and post-secondary institutions.

This aspect of our outreach efforts is spearheaded by Assistant U.S. Attorney Deb Ireland. In the past year alone, she has delivered more than 100 presentations to youth and parents on the various ways using the Internet can compromise a person's privacy and also place them in a danger of being exploited.

Quite frankly, I am scared straight every time I have the opportunity to attend one of her presentations. Learning how something as simple as downloading an app on your cellphone or visiting the Internet to log onto a social media account can potentially jeopardize your privacy makes me think twice about how I use technology.

It is worth noting and acknowledging the great work the U.S. Attorney's Office does as a whole to protect our children. Through our Civil Rights Unit — which has been nationally recognized for its prosecutions of sex traffickers — we have been very diligent and steadfast with protecting our most vulnerable citizens. Furthermore, speaking to the next generation of our community is near and dear to my heart. There is not a week that goes by that I am not out in the community talking to youth about the work we do at the U.S. Attorney's Office. But more than that, I share with them the consequences of indulging in a life of crime; the importance of watching the company you keep; and the benefits of having good character, commitment and compassion.

It is imperative for us, as adults, to educate, motivate, mentor and protect our next generation. And this is something the U.S. Attorney's Office for West Tennessee will continue to do.

DOJ updates community on Shelby County juvenile justice reform agreement

DOJ Civil Rights Attorney Winsome Gayle speaks to community residents about Shelby County's juvenile justice system.

Around 200 concerned residents, civic leaders, and clergy representatives packed a room at the National Civil Rights Museum to attend the Department of Justice's (DOJ) April community meeting.

The purpose of the meeting was for attorneys with the DOJ's Civil Rights Division — Special Litigation Section in Washington, D.C. to update the public on its efforts to administer juvenile justice reform endeavors locally.

The event was moderated by Terri Freeman, president of the National Civil Rights Museum.

DOJ Attorney Winsome Gayle provided fresh information on the agreement made between the Department and Shelby County Juvenile Court, which was established as a result of DOJ's nearly two-year evaluation of the entity.

In August 2009, the DOJ's Civil Rights Division began an investigation into the county's Juvenile Court System.

In April 2012, the Department released its findings, which revealed that black children were less likely to receive lenient options; more than twice as likely to be detained pre-trial; and significantly more likely to be recommended for transfers to adult criminal court than white children.

Subsequent to the findings, Shelby County and its Juvenile Court entered an agreement with DOJ. Since then, the collective goal has been to fix practices that have violated the civil rights of young people brought before the Court.

Juvenile Court made a commitment to provide fair court hearings; adequate defense counsel; and fair treatment of youth regardless of race and ethnicity.

Since signing the agreement, the Civil Rights Division, along with three monitors, has periodically assessed the County and Court's progress.

During the April meeting, Gayle highlighted the Court's progress and the challenges that remain.

Following the open discussion, attendees had the opportunity to submit questions on note cards. Multiple questions about Juvenile Court, the Detention Center, and juvenile justice in Shelby County were selected.

Millington man sentenced to 25 years for trafficking minors

By Louis Goggans

The summer of 2013 changed the lives of four Millington teens forever. Juveniles at the time, the teens were trafficked for sex throughout the rural areas of Shelby County for low amounts of money. The culprit behind the criminal endeavor was 51-year-old Michael Lilley.

From May to September 2013, Lilley had the four female minors engage in commercial sex acts out of his Millington home, backhouse, and van. At the time, the victims were 15-, 16-, and 17-year-old high school students.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Debra Ireland, along with First Assistant U.S. Attorney Larry Laurenzi, prosecuted Lilley. He ultimately received a quarter-century in federal prison for his actions.

said. “Sometimes, the kids don’t realize until many years later how serious it was — somebody taking advantage of them and making money off of their body.”

Lilley used text messages and explicit photos of the four teens

In September 2015, a jury found Lilley guilty of four counts of sex trafficking of a minor; one count of conspiracy to commit sex trafficking; three counts of sexually exploiting a minor; one count of attempting to sexually exploit a minor; three counts of distributing visual depictions of a minor engaged in sexually explicit conduct; and one count of possessing at least one digital storage device containing visual depictions of minors engaged in sexually explicit conduct.

Lilley was sentenced in December 2015 to 25 years imprisonment and 20 years of supervised release.

The case was prosecuted under Project Safe Childhood (PSC), a Department of Justice (DOJ) initiative comprised of specially trained prosecutors that target sexual exploitation crimes committed against children.

Ireland speaks to different schools and parents regularly about PSC’s efforts to combat child exploitation.

“While holding somebody accountable is gratifying and necessary, it’s much better to prevent something from happening,” Ireland said. “If a kid thinks twice before they send or post something, or if you can get a parent to understand what risks there are if you’re not keeping an eye on your kids, that’s a really good day.”

Synthetic drug ring collectively sentenced to more than 20 years

By Louis Goggans

Synthetic drug use and distribution in West Tennessee has reduced significantly because of the eradication of a drug ring responsible for manufacturing and trafficking hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of synthetic cannabinoids and cathinones.

In January 2016, 14 members of a large synthetic drug ring were collectively sentenced to more than 290 months in federal prison. In excess of $1.4 million in assets were forfeited as a result of the investigation, including residences, local convenience stores, a grocery store, and more than $150,000 in bank deposits.

Between 2011 and 2013, and analogue powder chemicals with surfactants, acetone, and glue, and spraying damiana (a dried vegetable matter) for a product which can be smoked. Synthetic cathinones, better known as "bath salts," produce a high similar to methamphetamine or cocaine. Users can potentially experience chest pain, increased blood pressure, panic attacks, hallucinations, and even heart attacks and strokes. To manufacture bath salts, Schedule 1 drugs and Analogues are mixed and cut with adulterants, and packaged for snorting or ingesting.

"These substances are extremely dangerous and harmful, and have an impact on the communities," said Assistant U.S. Attorney Matt Alabama, North Carolina, Kentucky, Mississippi, and Florida.

Defendants manufactured, distributed or obtained units of drugs and/or wired currency and deposited proceeds into bank accounts to further the conspiracy. Some of the defendants worked as owners, managers, and retail clerks at Jackson area gas stations and convenience stores.

In 2013, "Project Synergy," an investigation spearheaded by the Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA), was launched to target synthetic drug distribution rings. Multiple federal, state and local law enforcement authorities assisted with the investigation. In West Tennessee alone, law enforcement seized thousands of pounds of synthetic drugs, more than $1 million, and numerous firearms and vehicles.

"We disrupted the flow of these dangerous drugs out in the community," Wilson said. "The take-down was in June 2013. Here we are in 2016, and it is still very hard for folks to find these synthetic drugs in the Jackson/Madison County area."

the defendants conspired to distribute large quantities of Schedule I and Analogue synthetic cannabinoids and cathinones throughout West Tennessee and other areas of the country.

The West Tennessee drug ring was led by fugitive Hassan "Sam" Safa, considered one of the top manufacturers of synthetic cannabinoids at the time.

Safa ordered chemicals from China and manufactured them in Jackson. Safa reportedly wholesaled to individuals in

U.S. Attorney Stanton spreads awareness of sex trafficking in West TN

U.S. Attorney Stanton speaks with Bobbi Thompson from WLOK's "Let's Talk About It" radio show about resources available to sex trafficking victims.

Every year, nationwide efforts are made to address the scourge of modern day slavery during National Human Trafficking Prevention Month. The inhumane practice impacts millions of people globally. The federal government continues to dedicate resources to combating human trafficking, prosecuting perpetrators, and helping victims recover and rebuild their lives.

Human trafficking crimes are among the offenses prosecuted by the U.S. Attorney's Office's Civil Rights Unit. Dedicated to spreading awareness of this deplorable and illicit trade throughout the district, the office co-sponsors and participates in seminars, workshops, panels, and other community outreach engagements, enlightening the public of human trafficking and ways they can help combat it.

The office also has a Victims-Witness Assistance Program, which provides a variety of services to support victims and facilitate the availability of witnesses for criminal trials and hearings.

One in four women dies from heart disease, according to the National Heart, Lung, and Blood Institute (NHLBI). Coronary artery disease is the leading cause of death of men and women in the country. Other conditions that impact a person's heart include high blood pressure, cardiac arrest, congestive heart failure, and stroke.

The U.S. Attorney's Office participated in the 2016 National Wear Red Day, which was established in 2002 to spread awareness of the significant impact heart disease has on women and highlight ways to combat this problem. National Wear Red Day occurs annually on the first Friday of February.

In March 2011, Semrau was sentenced by Chief U.S. District Judge Jon Phipps McCalla to 18 months in federal prison and ordered to pay restitution in the full amount the programs were defrauded.

The U.S. Attorney's Office commended two members of the U.S. Marshals Service for their roles in the enforced collection of restitution owed by a psychologist who defrauded several health care benefit programs of more than $240,000.

Lorne Allen Semrau was responsible for executing a scheme that defrauded Medicare, Med-their efforts in the seizure, preservation, and sale of Semrau's property.

McCord and Grittman's work involved the service of over 30 writs for seizure of the defendant's property. The U.S. Marshals worked with an auctioneer to schedule and conduct both a live and online auction. The items auctioned included a John Deere Tractor, two vehicles, two draft horses, a barn with two acres, antiques, and artwork and plates by Pablo Picasso.

The proceeds from the auctions (after costs) were $45,214.64. In 2015, Semrau paid the balance of his restitution debt in full.

Operation Ice Breaker

Two major Dyersburg crystal meth distributors sentenced

Jackson, TN – In December 2015, two leaders of a methamphetamine distribution ring were collectively sentenced to more than 22 years in federal prison.

“The production, distribution and ingestion of meth remains an issue that is ravaging communities in West Tennessee and throughout the nation,” said U.S. Attorney Edward L. Stanton III. “Sentences like these two serve as strong reminders that law enforcement is committed to ridding our district of this insidious drug.”

Steven Isbell, Chief of Dyersburg Police Department, said: “This is an example of what good teamwork can do. This case was initiated by our patrol level response. Officers referred the beginning information to the Dyersburg Police Department Street Crimes Unit, who in turn got DEA and TBI involved in the investigation. The end result is that 15 people have now been indicted federally, and these two sentences alone have gotten two major ice distributors off our streets.”

Dyer County Sheriff Jeff Box stated, “I sincerely appreciate the U.S. Attorney’s Office working with all the agencies involved to insure these defendants received appropriate punishment for the crimes they committed. Our local officers worked with DEA and TBI on this investigation. Everybody’s hard work resulted in numerous federal indictments and has helped us eliminate a high purity ice distribution ring in the Dyer County area.”

According to information presented in court, Miracle Pounds, 37, and Robert Troy Anderson, 49, both of Dyersburg, TN, spearheaded a criminal organization responsible for distributing large quantities of meth and “ice.” Meth with greater than 80 percent purity classifies as ice and has stricter punishment levels under the U.S. Sentencing Guidelines.

Three packages of ice being shipped from Arkansas to Tennessee seized during investigation.

From January to December 2014, the two defendants, along with several co-conspirators, unlawfully distributed various quantities of highly pure meth throughout West Tennessee.

In January 2014, Operation Ice Breaker was initiated by the Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA) in collaboration with the Tennessee Bureau of Investigation (TBI), Dyersburg Police Department, and Dyer County

Sheriff’s Office. The operation targeted several major ice distributors in the Dyersburg area — Pounds and Anderson being two of the operation’s main targets.

Numerous controlled purchases were conducted where ice was sold by conspirators involved in the drug trafficking organization.

Pounds and Anderson sold ice to undercover operatives. They also had other individuals selling ice for them. The two defendants, as well as other co-conspirators, transported meth from Arkansas to West Tennessee on various occasions for unlawful distribution. The majority of the meth recovered during Operation Ice Breaker’s duration was greater than 95 percent pure.

Both Pounds and Anderson pled guilty to one count of conspiracy to distribute and possess with intent to distribute meth.

In November 2015, Chief Judge J. Daniel Breen sentenced Pounds to serve 121 months in prison.

In December 2015, Judge Breen sentenced Anderson to serve 151 months in prison.

This case was investigated by the DEA, TBI, Dyersburg Police Department, and Dyer County Sheriff’s Office.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Beth Boswell prosecuted this case on the government’s behalf.

Protecting Our Youth

Sexual exploitation of minors remains on the USAO's radar

By Louis Goggans

Over the last two calendar years alone, the U.S. Attorney's Office has secured more than 100 years in federal prison sentences for individuals who sexually exploited minors.

Many of the defendants produced, downloaded, received, or shared child pornography. Others trafficked minors sexually for monetary gain.

The Department of Justice (DOJ) has been dedicated to sternly prosecuting individuals who commit these types of crimes for decades.

To maximize its efforts to combat child exploitation, the DOJ established the Project Safe Childhood (PSC) initiative in 2006.

The program is comprised of specially trained prosecutors that target sexual exploitation crimes committed against children. Led by the U.S. Attorneys' Offices and the Criminal Division's Child Exploitation and Obscenity Section, PSC spearheads federal, state, and local resources to locate, apprehend, and prosecute individuals who sexually exploit children, and to identify and rescue victims.

The U.S. Attorney's Office for West Tennessee incessantly prosecutes cases involving the exploitation of minors physically and through the Internet.

Luke Cooke, a former youth minister, is among the individuals that have been recently prosecuted under the PSC initiative.

Cooke was sentenced to 138 months in federal prison for transporting an underage teen between the state of Tennessee and Mississippi with the intent to engage in criminal sexual activity. Additionally, Cooke was sentenced to 11 years in state court for sexually assaulting two male minors. Cooke's state sentence will run concurrent with his federal punishment.

"Any community gets stronger when everyone works to ensure children are safe," said AUSA Deb Ireland. "The U.S. Attorney's Office takes this responsibility seriously, and will continue to hold perpetrators accountable."

Other individuals who have been sentenced under PSC include former Memphis pastor Demarcus Smith, who received 85 months imprisonment for knowingly receiving sexual images of a minor.

Michael Lilley was sentenced to a quarter-century in federal prison for trafficking multiple underage teens for sex.

Furthermore, Lindell Luck received 78 months in federal prison for possessing and distributing child pornography.

In 2015, First Assistant U.S. Attorney Larry Laurenzi prosecuted a Memphis man who used the Internet to download and view sexual images of minors.

In September 2012, John Nesler visited an East Memphis Best Buy of the images with his cellphone.

After an employee noticed Nesler acting suspiciously, law enforcement was notified and Nesler was arrested. A forensic review of Nesler's phone revealed that he had taken approximately 114 images of female minors, which he had viewed on Best Buy tablets.

In May 2015, Nesler was sentenced to 10 years for downloading and viewing lewd images of minors.

"The Nesler case demonstrates the extent that people will go to get their hands on pornography," Laurenzi said. "Technology allows people to hide in places that they were never able to hide before. It has caused a proliferation of these types of crimes."

According to the Tennessee Internet Crimes Against Children (ICAC) Unit, between March 2015 and February 2016, over 870 child exploitation-related crimes were investigated by the state's ICAC Task Force. More than 140 of the investigated crimes were committed in West Tennessee.

"Protecting children — the most precious and vulnerable members of our society — remains one of this office's top priorities," said U.S. Attorney Edward L. Stanton III. "Working with our law enforcement partners, we will continue to vigorously pursue and prosecute anyone who seeks to sexually exploit, entice or export our youth."

Controlling Gun Crime

USAO continues to combat gun violence through PSN initiative

By Louis Goggans

Media headlines are full of stories about crimes committed with firearms. Unfortunately, stories about the aggressive investigation and prosecution of individuals who commit many of these gun-related offenses often fail to receive the same attention.

Nevertheless, for more than a decade, law enforcement agencies in the Memphis metropolitan area have, and continue to, utilize a broad crime prevention initiative to target gun crimes in our communities.

The Project Safe Neighborhoods (PSN) initiative was launched by the U.S. Department of Justice in 2002 to bolster the nation's previously-existing gun crime reduction efforts. Each federal district received funding, and U.S. Attorney's Offices designated PSN Coordinators to facilitate the implementation of the district's program. The U.S. Attorney's Office for the Western District of Tennessee, along with its partners in federal, state, and local law enforcement, has been using the PSN initiative for several years to identify, investigate and prosecute firearm offenders.

As part of the local PSN initiative, the U.S. Attorney's Office; the Shelby County District Attorney General's Office; the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives (ATF); the Memphis Police Department (MPD); and the Shelby County Sheriff's Office (SCSO) have joined together to address the prevalence of gun-related crimes in the Memphis area. The initiative facilitates the aggressive investigation and prosecution of firearm offenders by reviewing all arrests, misdemeanor citations, memorandums and weapon offense reports where law enforcement officers recover a firearm and/or ammunition.

The PSN Task Force, which is the investigative component of the local PSN initiative, is supervised by an MPD Lieutenant. The entity works under the direct authority of both the MPD Director and Shelby County Sheriff, at the solicitation of the U.S. Attorney and the Shelby County District Attorney General. The Task Force includes one MPD Sergeant; eight MPD Investigators; one SCSO Deputy Investigator; and one ATF Agent.

The PSN Task Force conducts investigations and executes arrests related to various firearm offenses. It also investigates individuals buying and selling firearms to or from convicted felons. Additionally, the Task Force engages in proactive and reactive investigations of convicted felons suspected of possessing firearms, as well as firearms suppliers who are conducting illegal transactions. If the decision is made to pursue a federal indictment, the PSN Investigator conducts witness meetings, serves subpoenas, and testifies during judicial proceedings as the government representative.

Despite funding for the program diminishing over the years, the PSN Task Force remains committed and dedicated to making communities safe.

The group has conducted numerous notable investigations and prosecutions over recent years, with tangible and meaningful results. For example, as part of the PSN initiative:

Christopher John Clark was sentenced to 76 years in prison for multiple firearm violations, carjackings and assaults; Joseph Banks and Lereginald Strong were both sentenced to more than 30 years for their roles in an armed carjacking; Christopher Criswell was sentenced to 20 years for felony possession of nine casings of ammunition following an apartment shooting; Kedrick White was sentenced to 20 years for robbing a gas station with a firearm; and Javalus Bullard was sentenced to more than 15 years for unlawfully possessing a handgun, which he used to shoot at his then-girlfriend after assaulting her.

The Task Force has reviewed more than 28,000 firearm- and ammunition-related incidents since its inception.
